SĀTUSASA. A son of Dṛūtarāṣṭra. Bhīma killed him in the great war. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 9).

SĀTURATAPĀNA. An asura, the son of Kātyānaprājapati by his wife Danu. (Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 29).

SĀTVAḌANTA. A Yādava prince. This Satvadanta was one of the sons born to Vasudeva by his wife Bhadrā. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 96: 71).

SĀTVAṬA I. A King of the Yadu dynasty and son of Devakasatra. Sātavata had seven sons called Bhaja, Bhad, Divya, Vṛṣṇ, Devapatiha, Anaka and Mahābhājot. Sātavata was one of the Sātavatas and the men born in his dynasty are called Sātavatas. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 30).

SĀTVAṬA II. Another name of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

SĀTVIKA. A brahmin, who was turned into a Rākṣasa due to a curse after he had entered heaven. His story has been told by sage Śaunaka to Bharata, brother of Śrī Rāma.

Bharata, who led the yājñic horse towards the north in connection with the Avamadha vajra performed by Śrī Rāma after he was crowned King. The horse, which started on its journey from Ayodhyā reached, after six months, Hemakūta on the limits of India. As soon as it got into a beautiful garden it was rendered stationary as though paralyzed. All attempts to make the horse move failed. Sātruḥgna and some soldiers tried to lift the horse by its legs, to no purpose. Hanumān bound its legs with his tail and pulled, again to no purpose, and surprised at this failure of his he spoke to Sātruḥgna and others thus: "It was only just now that I pulled out with my tail the Droṇa mountain so very easily; but this small horse does not stir at all. May be, it is all fate." Following Hanumān's speech, Sātruḥgna asked Śaunaka to explain for this state of the matter, but the latter could not find one for it. Then it was decided to find out a mahārṣi and ask him for the explanation. The soldiers accompanied by Bharata went in search of a mahārṣi, reached Śaunaka's āśrama and submitted the case to him.

The mahārṣi remained in meditation for some time and the condition of the horse became vivid in his mind. Then he spoke as follows: "There was once a brahmin named Sātvika in Gauḍa (?) land on the banks of river Ārāvī. Once he began performing tāpas. He spent three days drinking only water the first day, consuming air the next day and fasting completely the third day. He continued his taps repeating the above course until one day he entered samādhi (existed). He got into a decorated plane sent from Devaka, went to the peak of mount Meru and thence came to river Jambe, which flowed from the great Jambe tree on the mountain. There in Jambe were many mahārṣis, who had acquired merit by bathing in the golden water of the river, enjoying all comforts in the company of aparā women. Sātvika, one day, haughty with the thought that he was the master of the mahārṣis, did not agree with other mahārṣis displeased the latter, and they cursed him. When he prayed for absolution from the curse they told him thus:
"When you parade the feet of Śrī Rāma's horse, you will happen to hear Rāma's story and then you will be redeemed from curse.'

On Śaunaka informing them thus that it was the brahmin transformed into a Rākṣasi, who had paralyzed the legs of the horse, Bharata returned to the horse and recited the story of Rāma and immediately an effulent person came there in a plane and said, "Oh, intelligent King! I have now heard the story of Rāma and so have become pure; so, please let me go to heaven." After saying this he returned. Bharata and others were pleased to see the story of the brahmin. The horse became free from its paralyzed condition. The party resumed its journey. (Padma Purāṇa, Paśupataśpana, Chapters 47 and 48).

SĀTYA I. A hermit. Mention is made about this hermit who abode in the court of Yuddhisthira, in Mahābhārata, Sātva Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 10.

SĀTYA II. An Agni (fire). This Agni Satya was the son of the Agni Nīkṣvāna. He was a worker of Kālādharma (The god of Death). He reduces the pain of living beings who are suffering. So this Agni Satya got the name Nīkṣṣ as also. This Agni brightens the SATYA III. A warrior who served in the army of the King of Kaliṅga. This warrior fought against the Pandavas in the battle of Bhārata. This warrior who stood as the wheel-guard of Srutāyus the King of Kaliṅga, was killed by Bhīmasena in the Bhārata-battle. (M.B. Bhāma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 77).

SATYA IV. A country of Vidarbha. This terriror who was a Brahmin was a believer in ahimsā also. Once he performed a sacrifice without any killing. His wife Purukarindhāni helped him in the sacrifice. Dharmadeva came there in the form of an antelope to test the non-killing principle of Satya. The animal came near Satya and said: "I am a deva (god) belonging to the Suka-clan. I dwell in this forest as an antelope, due to the curse of Dharmadeva. Kill me and complete this sacrifice."

Though Satya heard this, he did not wish to kill the animal. At last the antelope decided to go as he walked eight steps and then returned. Due to the delusive art of the antelope Satya saw there celestial maid and the aeroplanes of Garbhadvās. The antelope said that if he was killed he would write down the knowledge from the throne of Satya for killing and forthwith he lost all the attainments he got by penance. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 272).

SATYA V. Another name of Śri Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 75).

SATYA VI. The son of Vitāya, born in the dynasty of Ķriṣṇa. He lived in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana, Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 62, that this Satya had a son called Santa.

SATYĀ I. A wife of Śri Kṛṣṇa. Mention is made about this wife in Mahābhārata, Dāśāvatārī, Sādhab Parva, Chapter 38.

SATYĀ II. The wife of the Agni called Saṃyū. So beautiful a woman as Satyā was said to have not existed in the three worlds. Bhradbhāvā was the son born to Saṃyū by Satyā. Bhradbhāvā had three sisters. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 4).

SATYĀ III. A group of Devas (gods). This group of devas lived in the third Manvantara. The name of the then ādīna was Uttama and the King of the devas was the ādīna Sudānti. There were then five Devaganas (groups of Gods) each consisting of twelve, devas. These āganas were Sudhābhām, Satyas, Japanas, Pratīdheṭtis, and Vaśavastis. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aīrīta 3, Chapter 1).

SATYABHĀMĀ. The wife of Śri Kṛṣṇa.

1) Introduction. Once Śri Kṛṣṇa himself said about the previous birth of Satyabhāmā. There was an occasion for saying that.

Once Nārāda came from the world of the gods to Devakā. He had brought with him some flowers of the Kalpaka tree. Nārāda gave all those flowers to Śri Kṛṣṇa. Śri Kṛṣṇa divided them among his wives, but he had forgotten Satyabhāmā. Being unable to subdue her sorrows and anger she got into her bedroom and went to her bed and lay. The Śri Kṛṣṇa came to know of this. He took Satyabhāmā with him on the back of Garuda and went to the world of Gods. They reached there and asked Indra for some Kahlā flowers. Indra refused to give. Garuda got ready to uproot the tree. Then Indra wielded his thunderbolt. To honour the weapon thunderbolt, Garuda left a feather of his there and received the feather in the effect of the hitting of the thunderbolt, the peacock, mongoose and jungle fowl was born from Garuda. Śri Kṛṣṇa who won the war, returned with Satyabhāmā mounted on Garuda, to Devakā. The Kalpaka tree brought from the world of gods, was planted in the garden in front of the palace of Satyabhāmā. When Śri Kṛṣṇa and the Kalpaka tree in the balance and all the things placed in equal weight were given to Nārāda himself. Nārāda received the Satyabhāmā became overjoyed. She asked Śri Kṛṣṇa, what good deeds she had done to earn so much happiness. Śri Kṛṣṇa described the previous birth of Satyabhāmā. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 90).

2) Previous birth of Satyabhāmā. Towards the close of the Ķṛṣṇayuga, there was a Brahmin named Devasārāmā who was born of his son Śri Kṛṣṇa and the mother was a Brahmin named Devasārāmā was well-versed in the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas. In the old age a daughter named Gavaṇvati was born to him. He gave his daughter to his disciple Čandraśārāmā. Once Čandraśārāmā and Čandraśārāmā went to the forest to bring Darbha (poa) and Sāmi (bunca). While they were walking in the forest they met with a giant who was killed by the power of Čandraśārāmā. Čandraśārāmā then went to the world of Uśīri and took Čandraśārāmā was again. At last she sold the furniture and conducted the funeral rites of her father and husband. After that she lived by manual labour. She observed fast and the vow of Čṛtikā and Ėkāḍati. Gavaṇvati, who was weak and lean because of old age and fever once walked slowly to the river Ganges to bathe. When she got into the river she bade farewell to the cause of cold. Then an aerial chariot came down from the sky. The messengers of Viṣṇu took her in the chariot, to Viṣṇuṇā. The celestial maidens fanned her with the whisk of yak. After this Mahīśvānu incarnated as Śri Kṛṣṇa to destroy the wicked. Those who were the dependants of Viṣṇu in Viṣṇuṇā took him in Ďvārākā. Devasārāmā became a Āhūrā. Čandraśārāmā became Āhrūrā. Gavaṇvati became Satyabhāmā. Because of the goodness earned by the fast of Čṛtikā, she had become a beloved one of Viṣṇu. Because she made a grove of holy basil (tulasī) at the gate of Viṣṇu in the previous birth the Kalpaka tree came to her garden in this birth. Because she lighted lamps in Čārtikā month Mahābhāṣya became permanently in her house. Because she did fast and vow in Čārtikā imagining Viṣṇu as her husband, she became the wife of Śri Kṛṣṇa in this birth. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 91).
3) Family life. See under Kṛṣṇa, Para 16 and Namaka Para 4.

4) Other details。

(i) The sons Bhima and others were born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Satyabhāmā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 276).

(ii) Narakāsura stole the ear-rings of Aditi, the mother of the devas. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Satyabhāmā went to fight with Narakāsura. They killed him and recovered the ear-rings and gave them back to Aditi. At that time, Aditi blessed Satyabhāmā thus: “Till Śrī Kṛṣṇa forsakes his body you will not be affected by old age. Moreover you will always have a divine fragrance and good qualities.” (M.B. Śaṭāḷa Parva, Chapter 30).

(iii) Satyabhāmā had a beautiful white palace in Dwārakā. The steps of the palace were paved with jewels. To those who pass over its steps, hot season will appear to be cold. (M.B. Dākṣiṇāyana Pātha, Śaṭāḷa Parva, Chapter 38).

(iv) When the Pāṇḍavas were living in the Kāṃyaka forest at the time of their forest life, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Satyabhāmā paid them a visit. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 11).

(v) At this time Satyabhāmā asked Pāṇḍālī about the meaning of the text: “He does not bring the husband over to her side.” (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 238, Verse 4).

(vi) When Arjuna came to Dwārakā, after Śrī Kṛṣṇa had forsaken his body, Satyabhāmā lamented with the other queens for a long time. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 13).

(vii) After this Satyabhāmā went to the forest for penance. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 74).

SATYADEVA. A prominent warrior of the army of Kaliṅga. He took part in the Bhārata-battle and served as the guard of the wheel of Śrīkṛṣṇa riding Kaliṅga and was killed by Bhīma (Maṇḍūkya Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 74). SATYADEVI. The daughter of King Devaka. This Satyadevi was one of the seven wives of Vasudeva. (M.B. Purtkūṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 74).

SATYADR̥MĀ I. A King of the lunar dynasty. He was a helper of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 141, Verse 25).

SATYADR̥MĀ II. A brother of Sūdrāmā, the King of Trigarta. Arjuna killed him in the Bhārata-battle. (M.B. Śaṭāḷa Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 36).

SAṬYADR̥MĀ. A son of Śrīkṛṣṇa. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 279, that this Satyadrīthi had two children called Kṛṣṇa and Kṛṣṇā. SATYADHRITI II. A warrior who fought in chariot on the side of the Pāṇḍavas in the Battle of Bhārata. The following information is given about him in Mahābhārata.

(i) Bhīma considered Satyadrīthi as one of the prominent fighters in chariots. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 18).

(ii) This Satyadrīthi had been present at the Swayabhūnāman marriage of Draupadi. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 10).

(iii) This Satyadrīthi who was the son of Sucitra continued helping Ghatotkaca the son of Hīmbi, during the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 13).

(iv) Satyadrīthi was an expert in the wielding of all weapons, especially in archery. He was a scholar in the Vedas and Vedāṅgas. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 23).

(v) In the Bhārata-battle he was killed by Drona-āśva. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 34).

SATYADHRITI III. The son of the King Kiṃaka. In the Bhārata-battle he fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 56).

SATYAHITA. A King of the Pūru dynasty. He was son of Satibha and the father of Sudhanvā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SATYAJIT I. A King belonging to the dynasty of Yayāti. He was the son of Sūru and the father of Keṃa. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

SATYAJIT II. A brother of Drupada, the King of Pāṇḍava. He appears in the story of Mahābhārata for the first time at the death of Drupada. When the education of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas was over, Drūṇa asked his pupils to bring Drupada's dead body to teacher's gift. An attempt was made to bring Drupada before Drūṇa, and Arjuna confronted each other. In this fight it was Satyajit who stood as the right hand of his brother Drupada. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 42). Arjuna defeated this Satyajit. Immediately Satyajit ran away from the battle-field.

(v) After the marriage of Pāṇḍālī, Pāṇḍavas and Drupada became relatives. With this Satyajit also came to be on good relation with the Pāṇḍavas. In the battle of Bhārata this Satyajit was the bodyguard of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 17). In the battle which followed Drona killed Satyajit. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 4).

SATYAKA. A king of the Yādava clan. He was the father of Satyaki. Satyaka also took part in the festivals conducted on the Kauvāta-mountain by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the others. It is stated in the svatama Parva, Chapter 62, Verse 6, that Satyaka conducted offerings to the moon in respect of Abhijjāna.

SATYAKĀMA (SATYAKĀMA JĀBĀLA). A noble hermit. There is a story as given below, in the Chandogopaniṣad about the greatness of this hermit.

As his father died in his boyhood, Satyakāma was brought up by his mother Jābālī. When it was time to begin education, the boy told his mother, “Mother, I would like to be educated under a teacher, in the Vedas. But I don’t know what clan I belong to. What answer shall I give, when the teacher asks me about my clan?” His mother Jābālī replied, “I also do not know much about the clan of your father who married me when I was a girl. From that day onwards I was engaged in house-keeping. I did not ask your father about the clan. On the day of your birth to you. Shortly after that your father died. Tell your teacher that you are Satyakāma the son of Jābālī.”

Having heard this Satyakāma went in search of a teacher. At last he reached the hermitage of the sage Gautama and told him every thing. The hermit was attracted by his truthfulness and behaviour. Believing that Satyakāma was a Brahmīn boy, Gautama accepted him as a disciple. The hermit entrusted the boy with four hundred lean cows to look after. The boy accepted the work, and said to the hermit. “When this becomes a group of thousand fat cows, I will bring them back.”

He lived in the forest looking after the cows. The Devas sympathized with him. Vāyu (wind), the Sun, Agni (fire) and Prāṇa together gave him divine knowledge and wisdom. After this Satyakāma returned to the hermit Gautama with thousand fat cows. Seeing the boy whose face shone with the light of God, the hermit was amazed. “Who gave you divine knowledge?” asked the hermit. Satyakāma told the hermit all that took place. Fully satisfied with the boy, Gautama imparted to him knowledge about the universal Soul (Paramātmā) and Satyakāma became a noble hermit.

Satyakāma got several disciples of whom Upakosala was prominent. He approached Satyakāma as a student. For twelve years he served his teacher and kept up the fire in the firepit for burning offerings, without being exquisitely throughout the twelve years, and worshipped the fire god. Yet the teacher did not impart knowledge to him. The teacher's wife recommended to her husband that Upakosala should be given learning. But the teacher was silent. Upakosala took a vow and fast before the burning-offering fire pit. Agni Deva felt pity for him and informed him that God is all-pervading and that his teacher would show him the way to -od. When he came to the teacher, his face was seen shining. Satyakāma asked Upakosala for the reason. Upakosala told the teacher what the fire god had told him. Immediately Satyakāma taught his disciple the path of yoga (union) by knowledge of the Sāṅkhya.

SATYAKARMA I. A king of the family of Bharata. He was the son of Dhṛtarātra and the father of Anuratha. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

SATYAKRIGA. At the coronation of Sūrabrata the king of Trigarta, though he took a vow in the Bharata battle that he would kill Arjuna, what happened was that he was killed by Arjuna. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 17; Sāya Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 39).

SATYAKETU I. A king of the Solar dynasty. He was the son of Dharmaketu and the father of Dhṛṣṭaketu. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

SATYAKETU II. A king of Kacchāla. Mention is made in Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Slokā 73, of a Pāńčāla King Satyaketu who fought with Parasurāma.

SATYAKETU III. A king belonging to the Puru dynasty. This Satyaketu was the son of King Sukumāra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SATYA KI (YUYUHDHANA). A Yādava, who was a wałtor of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty and a friend of Sīrī Kṛṣṇa. 1. Genealogy. Descended from Vīping thus: Brahmā - Ṭri - Canda - Budha - Purūravas - Āyu - Nabhās - Ayāṭi - Yadu - Sahasrajit - Sārajit - Hehayya - Dharma - Kuni - Bhadrasena - Dhanaka - Kṛṣṇīrya - Kṛṣṇīrya - Vārūṇa - Madhu - Vṛṣṇi - Yudhājī - Śini - Satyaketa - Satyaki. Śini, the younger son of Yudhājī. Satyaki alias Yuyudhāna, a companion of Sīrī Kṛṣṇa and a great friend of the Pāṇḍavas, was Śini's grandson.

2. His relation to other prominent Yādvas. The dynasty of Aanaśtra, first son of Yudhājī, became famous through Prasena, Satrājī, Svaphalka and Airūra. Of the four sons of Andhakā, predecessor of Kṛṣṇa, Kukura and Bhagamā sine deserve special mention. Ahuka, in the dynasty of Andhakā, was named Devakā and Ugrasena. Devakā, daughter of Devakā, became wife of Vasudeva and mother of Kṛṣṇa. Kanūra was the son of Ugrasena. Śira, seventh in the line of Bhagamā, son of Andhakā had twelve children. His first son Vasudeva was Kṛṣṇa's father. Śrutakirti, Śrutakrava, Śrutadeva and Rājādhidevi the four daughters of Śira were married respectively by Dhṛṣṭaketu, the king of Kekaya, Damagāha, king of Cedi, Vṛdhaharman, king of Karkṣa and Javasena, king of Avantī. Dhṛṣṭaketu was a great ally of the Pāṇḍavas. Śīrupala was the son of Damagāha, and Dantavakra the son of Vṛdhaharman. Śīrupala and Dantavakra, the third human incarnation of Jaya and Vijaya were war-crazy and haughty persons. Vindu and Anuvinda, sons of Javasena, were great friends of the Pāṇḍavas. As Kunti, daughter of Śira became the adopted daughter of Ugrasena, she became also the niece of Vasudeva and Kṛṣṇa's father's sister. Kunti married Pāṇḍu and she delivered four sons, Karna, Yudhishṭhira, Bhīmasena and Arjuna.

3. Other information I. The following facts about Satyaki are extracted from the Mahābhārata.

(1) Satyaki was born from an aspect of the Maruddevatas. (Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 18).

(2) He was present at the wedding of Draupadī. (Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 18).

(3) He was in the company of the Yādavas, who went to Indraprastha with the dowry for Subhadra. (Adi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 31).

(4) A member in the court of Yudhishṭhira, Satyaki learned dhanurveda (science of archery) from Arjuna. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 34).

(5) He was one of the chieft Yādava warriors. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 57).

(6) He also was present at the wedding of Abhimanyu held at Upālāvāya city. (Vidūṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 15).

(7) He went to Yudhishṭhira with a big army to participate in the great war. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 1).

SATYATAPAS (UṬATHYA) I. A brahmin boy who was changed into a cobra by the curse of a saint called Godīla. The original name of this youth was Uṭathya. Later he came to be known as Satyasapās. The story of this Satyasapās is given in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 3, as follows:

In days of old, there was a Brahmin named Devadatta in Kosala. His wife was called Rohini. Though much time elapsed no child was born to them. At last Devadatta performed the sacrifice called Putrakāmeṣṭi, on the banks of the river Tamāśī. Several saintly persons took part in the sacrifice. Suhotta was detailed as Brahmin, Yajavallika as officiating priest, Bhraspati as sacrificer. Pāta to recite Vedas and Godīla to sing Sūman hymns. The singing of Godīla, an expert singer, caused hilarity to everybody in the sacrificial hall. But in the middle of singing he had to take breath, and there occurred a silence in his voice. Devadatta did not like it. He warned Godīla, who instantly became angry and said to Devadatta: "Since you called me Cobra, the son born to you will become a cobra."

Devadatta became miserable and begged Godīla by holding his feet to pardon him. He gave liberation from the curse that his son would be a cobra and said that he would become a sage. The wife of Devadatta became pregnant and gave birth to a son. He was named Uṭathya. In the eighth year, the ceremony of investiture with the Brāhma string was performed and the boy commenced education. The teacher began to teach the Vedas from that day onwards the boy became self-controlled. All the attempts made by the teacher to change his behaviour were futile. His father tried the four expedients in vain. Thus twelve years elapsed. The boy did not even learn the evening prayer. Everybody thought that he was a cobra. All scoffed at him. His own people disliked him; with this, self-renunciation took root in his boyish mind and he left his home and went away. He reached the banks of the Ganges and made a hut there and lived there observing rigorous celibacy, and vow of truth. Thus the boy-hermit began severe penance.

He had learned no rites or rituals according to the Vedas. He would rise early in the morning, and after cleaning the teeh he would take a bath in the waters, without any spells or actions and return to the hut. He would eat anything that came by. He would cause no harm to anybody, though he had no power to do good to anybody. Everybody in the neighbourhood began to realize that he was a boy who would on no account utter falsehood. So all began to call him Satyasapās. The Parāsara began to feel that the penance of this youth seemed to be a burden to him. He became thoughtful day and night. Thus he spent fourteen years there. People firmly believed in his truthfulness. So they named him Satyasapās. Once a forester came near his hut. He sent an arrow at a hog, which ran into the hermitage with the arrow sticking on its body. Blood was coming from its wound. The jungle-fowler also came into the hut following the hog. Seeing Satyasapās the man asked "Where is the hog that I had shot?" Satyasapās who knew that killing animals was a sin, kept silence to save the beast. Devī was pleased at the moral courage and truthfulness of Satyasapās. It is said that the moment the hog got into the hermitage, the Sāravas syllable ‘A’ arose from the tongue of Satyasapās. The moment he had pronounced the root sound of Saravatī, ‘A’, by the grace of Devī, he became a poet like Vālmiki. Looking at the forester Satyasapās said:

"Yaḥ, pāṣyati na sa brūte
Yo brūte sa na pāṣyati/
Aho i vyākhyā, svakāryārthīn
Kam prachāsī punah punah.[1]

"He who sees does not speak. He who speaks, does not see. Selfish hunter, whom do you ask again and again?"

When the forester heard these words of Satyasapās, the bow and arrow fell from his hands. With self-renunciation he went away from the hermitage. The fame of the great poet Satyasapās spread everywhere. His father also heard about this from others. He came to the bank of the Ganges and took his son home. Even today Brahmins sing about the fame of that hermit on the New moon days.

SATYATAPAS II. A hermit. Once he cursed a celestial maid who had tried to hinder his penance, to SATYAVAN III. One of the commanders of the army of the Kauravas. Mention is made about this commander in Mahabharata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 107, Verse 30.

SATYAVAK I. A son of Cakusana Manu. Ten sons including Satyavak were born to Cakusana Manu by his wife Nadvalla. (Agni Purana, Chapter 18).

SATYAVAK II. A Deva Gandharva. This Gandharva was the son born to Prjapati Kashaya by his wife Mani. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 43).

SATYAVARMA. A brother of Sukarni, the King of Trigarta. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 17).

SATYAVATI. The mother of Vyasa. 1) A short history. Satyavati was the daughter of the celestial maid Adrika. Because of a curse she lived as a fish in the river Ganges. Once the semen of King Uparasas happened to fall in the Ganges and this fish swallowed it in consequence of which it became pregnant. A fisherman caught this fish and cut it open. He got two human babies, male and female from the stomach of the fish. The fisherman gave the two infants to the King who took the male child. This child later became the Mayya King. The female child had the smell of fish. The King called her Matsya-gandhi. (She who has the smell of fish) and gave her back to the fisherman, who took the child to his hut and brought her up as his daughter. As the child was dark in complexion the fisherman called her Kal. Thus the girl was known by two names Kali and Matsyagandhi. Later she got the name Satyavati also.

The fisherman was engaged in the work of ferrying people across the river. Matsyagandhi helped her father in this work. She became a full-bloomed woman. One day the hermit Parashara came by that way and when he saw Matsyagandhi, he fell in love with her. She ferried the hermit across the river. In the middle of the river Parashara created an artificial fog inside which Parashara took Matsyagandhi as his wife from that moment Matsyagandhi became Kasturigandhi (she who has the smell of Kasturi (toum); Kali became pregnant and delivered instantly. Parashara left the place after having blessed her that she would not lose her virginity. The son born to Kali immediately grew up to be a youth. After promising his mother that he would come to her when she thought of him, the youth went to the forest for penance. The name of the son was Krishna. This Krishna later became famous by the name Vyasa. Satyavati again engaged herself in helping her father.

One day Santanu, a King of the lunar dynasty came to the forest for hunting. The fragrance of musk emanating from the body of Kasturigandhi spread throughout the whole forest. The King walked on through the forest tracing the origin of the smell of musk and reached the fisherman's hut. The King fell in love with Satyavati. The King had a son named Bhima by his first wife Gagga. Bhima made it easy for the King to marry Satyavati. Two sons Citardaga and Veetravira were born to Santanu by his wife Satyavati. Citardaga was killed in his boyhood. Veetravira became a youth and married Ambika and Ambikika the daughters of the King of Kasi. Veetravira met with untimely death before a child was born to them. When Satyavati saw that the family was about to become extinct, she thought of her son Vyasa, who instantly arrived at the palace. From Vyasa, Ambikika got the son Pandu and Ambikika, the son Dhrtarashtra. Both the sons Dhrtarashtra and Pandu got married. Pandu died. The death of her son struck heavily at the heart of Satyavati. She did not wish to live much longer after this. She mentioned about the fearful things yet to happen. Then taking her daughters-in-law Ambika and Ambikika with her, Satyavati went to the forest to do penance and finally attained heaven. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 12) (For further details see under Adrika, Vyasa and Santanu).

2) Name. Dasyru, Gandharalli, Gandharavati, Kali Satya, Vasavi, Yojanagancha and such other words are used in the Mahabharata as the synonyms of Satyavati.

SATYAVATI II. The sister of Visvamitra. (See under Visvamitra; Para 2).

SATYAVATI III. A princess of the country of Kekaya. She was the wife of Trianka and the mother of Hardendra. (Mahabharata, Dakshayayana, Sabha Parva, Chapter 12).

SATYAVATI IV. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 15, that one Satyavati was the wife of Narsa.

SATYAVRATA I. Another name of Trianka. (See under Trianka).

SATYAVRATA II. The Brahmin boy Satyasapta. (See under Satyasapta).

SATYAYUGA. Another name of Kasyayuga. (See under Kasyayuga).

SATYXYUS. One of the six sons born to Puruvasavas by Urvati. The six sons were Ayus, Sudayus, Satyayus, Raya, Vijaya and Jaya. (Jhagavastra, Skandha 9).

SATYESU I. Brother of Sukarni the King of Trigarta. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Drona Parva, Chapter 17, and Satya Parva, Chapter 27, that this Satyesu was killed by Arjuna in the battle of Bharata.

SATYESU II. A Rakshasa (giant). Mention is made about this giant who had ruled over the world in ancient days and had to go, leaving this world due to fate, in Mahabharata, Satya Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 51.

SATYEYU. A King born in the dynasty of King Parva. This Satyeuyu was one of the ten sons born to Kaudrya by the celestial maid Ghritaci. (Jhagavastra, Skandha 9).

According to the statement that occurs in Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 94, the father of Satyeuyu was Raudräve and mother, Mitraketa. The son Satyeve was born to Raudräve by the celestial maid Mitraketa.

SAUBALA. A Vaiṣya. It is mentioned in Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 2, that King Dhṛtarāṣṭra had two wives, one a Kauravya woman, named Gāndhārī, the daughter of the King of Gāndhāra and the other a Vaiṣya woman named Saubali, the daughter of Saubala.

SAUBALI. The aerial chariot or Vimāna of the King of Śāla. This was also called Saubhānagāra. When Śri Kṛṣṇa killed Śāla, this Vimāna was smashed by the power of his weapon, the Cakra (Discus). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 33).

SAUBHADRATIRIHA. A holy place on the coast of the southern sea. (For further details see under Padmatiritha and Vargā).

SAUBHĀGYAGAURI. A particular kind of image of Devī Pārvatī. When the image of this goddess Pārvatī is fixed and consecrated as having the posture with one of the left hands touching the head and shoulder and the other hand holding a mirror, one of the right hands holding fruit and the other being hold high, it is called Saubhāgyagaurī. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 59).

SAUBHĀGYASUNDARI. A feminine form of Nārada. (See under Tāladvajī 1).

SAUHAPATI. The King Śāla. As he had been in possession of an aerial chariot called Saubali, he is said to have got this name.

SAUBHARA. A fire. This agni (fire) was born from a portion of Varca. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 229, Verse 17).

SAUBHARAKI. A hermit who had performed penance, sitting on the banks of the river Kālindī. (For detailed story see under Garuda, para 11).

SAUBHARAKI. A hermit who had put up his hermitage on the Vindhyā. At the time of the horse-sacrifice of Yuddhishthīra, Arjuna called on this hermit Saubhāra. On that occasion the hermit told Arjuna about the previous history of Candī, who had been cursed by the hermit Uddālaka. It is mentioned in Jaiminiśa Āsvamedha Parva, Chapter 96, that Arjuna later redeemed Candī from the curse.

SAUBHARAKI. A hermit famous in the Purāṇas. A Purānic story about this hermit's marrying the fifty daughters of Māndhātā is given below.

Saubhāra saw two fishes engaged in coition, while he was doing penance on the banks of the Yamunā. This sight aroused matrimonial thoughts in the hermit's mind. He instantly approached Māndhātā and informed him of his desire to marry a princess.

Māndhātā did not like to give his daughter in marriage to this hermit. Concealing his thought, he told the hermit as follows:—“Out of my fifty daughters, she who wishes to be your wife, shall be given to you.”

Saubhāra, who had already read the thought of Māndhātā entered the harem in the shape of a handsome fine youth, and all the fifty damsels liked him. Thus Saubhāra married all of them, and begot hundred sons of each of them.

This matrimonial life lasted for some time. At last the hermit grew weary of this life. Discarding everything, Saubhāra went to the forest. His wives, who also had become disinterested in worldly enjoyment, followed him. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9; Viṣṇu Purāṇa, 4, 2, 3; Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa 262; Garuda Purāṇa, 1, 130).

SAUDASA. A King of the Ikṣvākū dynasty. He was known by the name Kalmāśapāda also. (For details see under Kalmāśapāda).

SAUGANHDIKA. A flower-garden of Kubera. It is assumed that Vāyu (the wind-god) carried fragrance from this garden and remained in the palace of Kubera, praising him. This garden was called of saugandhika or saugandhika-flower. (M.B. Saubhā Parva, Chapter 10).

SAUGANHDIKAVANA. A holy place. It is assumed, that the gods such as Brahmā and others, hermits, Siddhas, Cāranas, Gaudharvas, Kinnaras, Big Nagas, and so on dwell in this place. All the sins of a man are washed away, the moment he visits this holy place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 34, Sūnaka 4).

SAUMADATTI. Bhūrīśvaras is the son of Somadatta. (See under Bhūrīśvaras).

SAUMANASA I. One of the eight elephants supporting the Vāsudeva. (See under Asatīsaya).

SAUMANASA II. The peak of a mountain. It was on this golden peak, with a girdle of one yojana and an elevation of ten yojanas, that Bhaargava Viśvū place the first of his three steps during the incarnation as Viṃśāma, the second step being on the peak of Meru and the third on the head of Mahābali.

“Here is a golden girdle, with girdle of one yojana and a height of ten yojanas. It is said that in days of yore Mahāvīnu placed the first of his three steps on this peak the second being on the peak of Meru.”- Vājīmī Kṛṣṇyi, Kīśkindhā kīndu, Sarga 40.

SAUMYĀKSAADVIPA. An island famous in the Purāṇas (Mahābhārata, Dākinīśayapāṭha, Saubhā Parva, Chapter 31).

SAUJNĀKA I. 1) General. A renowned ācārya. He is believed to be the author of the famous works:—“Rgveda Anu-krāmamati”, “Āranyaka”, “Rtraprātiśākhyā”, etc.

The famous Āvālayāvānācārya was Saunaka's disciple. Ācārya like Kātyāyana, Pāṇātjali and Vyasas belonged to his class. Saunaka's real name was “Gṛsuna.” It was because he was the son of Saunaka that he got the name “Saunaka.”

2) Birth. Saunahotra, the son of the sage Saunahotra, once performed a yāga. Indra attended that yāga. At that time Saunahotra rescued Indra from an attack of the Aśuras. Indra who was pleased at this, blessed Saunahotra that he would be born in his next birth in the Bhṛgu family under the name “Saunaka.”

3) Genealogy. In Vāyu Purāṇa his genealogy is given in two forms:

i) Rucu (Pradāvar).—Saunaka—Saunaka—Ugrakrāivas

ii) Dharmavardhā—Saunahotra—Gṛṣumnā—Saunaka—Vāyu (Vāyu Purāṇa, 92, 26).

4) Important works. Saunaka is believed to be the author of numerous works. The most important of them are given below:—

1) Rtraprātiśākhyā (2) Rgvedachandānukramaṇi

2) Rgvedasyanukramaṇi (3) Rgvedasvāmānukramaṇi

3) Rgvedasākāntakramaṇi (4) Rgveda Anu-vākāntakramaṇi

5) Rgvedasākāntakramaṇi (6) Rgvedasākāntakramaṇi
SAUVIRA. An ancient country near the river Sindhu. It is stated in Mahâbhârata, Adi Parva, Chapter 133, that during the period of Mahâbhârata, the King of this country was killed by Arjuna.

SAUVIRI. The wife of King Manasvya, the son of Pravira and the grandson of emperor Pûru. (Mahâbhârata, Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 5).

SAVANA I.
1) General, Son of Priyavrata who was the son of Svayambhuva Manu, by his wife, Surûpâ. Surûpâ had ten sons including Savana. (Devi Bhagavata, Sāundhâ 8).
2) Birth of son. Savana married Sudevâ, daughter of Svâlbha; but he expired before children were born to him. According to the Vâmanâ Purâṇa, Chapter 72, seven children were born from the dead Savana. The story about it is as follows: Sudevâ, heart-broken by the death of Savana, did not permit the dead body to be burnt, herself holding it in embrace. Then a celestial voice said to her: "Cry not. If you are really chaste and true, enter the funeral pyre along with your husband." To this Sudevâ answered thus: "I cry because of grief that he died before making me the mother of a son. The celestial voice said to her: "Your wish shall be fulfilled. Your husband will have seven sons." Sudevâ now permitted her dead husband to be cremated and meditating upon her chastity she jumped into the funeral pyre. But within minutes Savana came alive out of the fire with his wife and rose to the sky with her. He stayed in the sky for another five days and on the sixth day had the sexual act again with her. His semen dropped on earth from the sky. The King then with his wife went to Brahmaloka. Samâdâ, Nalini, Pusyati, Citrâ, Viśâlâ, Harita and Aññathâ, all of them wives of muni saw the semen in the sky and when it fell into the water they thought it was urine, which conferred eternal youth, and with the permission of their husbands swallowed it. As soon as they swallowed it they became female. Sudevâ was dinnished and her husbands, therefore, abandoned them.

Those women delivered seven children, who cried fiercely and that sound filled the entire universe. Then Brahmâ appeared and asked the children not to cry and also told them that they would come to be called Maruta, Brahmâ himself called them Maruts. They were the Maruts of the first Svayambhuva Manu and were distinguished from all other Maruta by the possession of the five objects of the gods, and from all Maruta they were distinguished by possessing the five objects of Brahmâ. They were the Maruts of the first Svayambhuva Manu.

SAVANA II. One of the seven sons of Bhrgavâni, the other six being Vyâvapa, Vajrârîṇa, Śuci, Auvra, Sukra and Vibhû. They are called Varuṇas also. (Anuvâsana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 129).

SĀVANTA. A King born in the dynasty of emperor Pûru. He was the son of Yuvândâva and father of Sûryavâhana. (Devi Bhagavata, 7th Sîrdhâ).

SĀVÂRNA. Wife of the muni called Prâcinarbha. Savarnâ was the daughter of Sûndravâ (ocean). (Viśû Purâṇa, Part 1, Chapter 14). The couple had ten sons called the Pracettas, and they were very efficient in Dhanurveda. All of them engaged themselves in observing the same dharma (duty) and did tapas for 10,000 years under the sea. (For details see under Prâcinarbha).

SĀVÂRNA I. A hermit. This hermit shone in the council of Yudhisthîra. (Mahâbhârata, Sâbhâ Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15).
Sāvārṇa II (Sāvārṇa): A Manu. (For further details see under Maṇvantara).

Sāvārṇa I. The eighth Manu. (For further details see under Maṇvantara).

Sāvārṇa II. A hermit. This hermit shone in the council of Indra. (Mābhārata, Sañjha Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 10). This hermit Sāvārṇa did penance for six thousand years in Sutayuga. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 103).

Sāvārṇa. One of the twelve sons of Kasyapaprajāpati by his wife called Aditya. These sons are called Adityas. So, Sāvārṇa also is one of the Dvādāśadiivrta. Viṣṇu, Sakra, Aramā, Dharma, Tvaṣṭa, Puṣa, Vivavān, Sāvārṇa, Mitra, Varuna, Amīta and Bhaga are the Dvādāśadiivrta.

Prakśa, wife of Sāvārṇa, gave birth to three daughters called Sāvārṇi, Vāyūri and Traya and three sons called Agni, Pushama and Cāturānaya the great sacrifices. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 13).

Sāvārṇi I. One of the eleven Rudras. (M.B. Śánti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 20).

Sāvārṇi II. One of the eight Vasus. (Mābhārata, Aṣṭāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 16).

Sāvārṇi III. A lofty peak of the mountain Sumeru. Jyotisīka is another name of this peak, which is not approachable. It is adorned with precious stones and is glorified by all. Siva and Pārvati once sat on this peak and did penance. It was on this peak that Deval Gaṅga did penance to Śiva, assuming a divine figure. (M.B. Śánti Parva, Chapter 283, Verse 5).

Sāvārṇi I. General information. The daughter of the Sun. This Sāvārṇi is the elder sister of Tapati. Brahmā married these sisters. It is stated in some Purāṇas that Sāvārṇi, Gayatri, Sarasvatī all these are one and the same. But there is a story in Padma Purāṇa, Srṣṭīkanda, Chapter 17, stating that Brahmā once went to Gayatri in the absence of Sāvārṇi, who got angry at this and cursed all the Gods.

Once Brahmā went to Paśūkara to perform a sacrifice. Śiva, Viṣṇu and all the hermits came there. Everything was ready for the sacrifice according to convention. But Sāvārṇi, who had been engaged in household duties had not yet arrived. So a priest was sent to bring her. Sāvārṇi said to the priest, “I have not finished dressing. There are so many things to be done here. Moreover, I am, Bhavāni, Gaṅga, Śvāhā, Indra, celestial women, wives of Śivas (hermits), none of these have arrived yet. How can I enter the hall as the only woman?” The priest returned and reported that it was not convenient for Sāvārṇi to come just then, as she had so much work to do. Brahmā became angry and said to Indra. “Lord Indra, it is up to you to bring me a wife from wherever you like. But it must be done instantly.” Hearing the order of Brahmā, Indra selected Gayatri who was a good-natured daughter of a cowherd’s family, and brought her to the sacrificial dais. With the blessings of the hermits and gods, Brahmā held her hand and acknowledged her as his wife.

Sāvārṇi dressed well, adorned herself with ornaments and reached the sacrificial hall. She saw the marriage scene and became furious. Everybody in the hall held their breath, thinking of the approaching danger. Trembling with anger Sāvārṇi said “Lo; Brahmā, how is it that you have committed this sin? Have you not married me with fire as witness? I am your wife. Are you not ashamed of this?” The three godheads shivered with fear. Sāvārṇi cursed everybody. The curse given to Brahmā was that no body should worship him on any other day except the month of Kārttika in the year. She cursed Indra that enemies would enter the world of gods and would make Indra captive. Sāvārṇi cried out that Viṣṇu would take the birth of man by the curse of Bṛūghu. She cursed Śiva that he would lose his mar gracias. She also cursed Agni the curse that he would eat anything and everything without the discrimination of purity or impurity. She cursed the Brahmins that they would, in future perform sacrifice merely with a view to obtain gifts and that they would be wandering about from temple to temple and from utirtha to utirtha merely for gain.”

Utttering these words of curse, Sāvārṇi left the sacrificial hall. Lakṣaṇa and some other goddesses followed her a little while. Then they begged for permission to return. Sāvārṇi said to them, “Lakṣaṇa! You are leaving me. Is it not so? Right. Hereafter you shall be permanent nowhere. May you become the companion of the wicked, the waverer, the low-minded, the sinner, the cruel, the foolish etc. Indra also wants to return. Hear this: Indra will kill Vṛtra and put the sin of Brahma on him and at that time Nahus will capture heaven. Then Nahus will abuse you.”

Locking at the celestial women who were going to the sacrificial hall, Sāvārṇi said: Look, Ye celestial women. None of you will give birth to child and you will not enjoy the pleasure of nurturing a child. Saying these words Sāvārṇi left the sacrificial hall. Lakṣaṇa and some other goddesses followed her a little while. Instantly Gayatri rose up and looking at everybody said as a remission of curses: “I shall remit all curses. Those who worship Brahmā, will be blessed with the pleasure of wife and children and wealth and they will unite with Brahmā. Even if Indra is taken captive, he will be made free by his son and will become the king of heavens again. Viṣṇu will rescue his wife and will kill the enemy. The man who beholds him in all the worlds. As Brahmins are the gods on earth the gift you take, will be considered your dues. Lakṣaṇa! you need not worry. Everybody will worship you. He whom you favour will become a well-to-do person and he whom you forsake will become miserable. You Indra! Because of Nahus’s arrogance Agni will change him to a big python and he will fall to the earth. The celestial maid will have no desire for children. So childishness will not make you miserable.” By these words of blessings of Gayatri, everybody in the sacrificial hall was pacified.

2. Other details.

(i) Sāvārṇi shines in the palace of Brahmā. (M.B. Sāhā Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 34).

(ii) Sāvārṇi is the sovereign deity of the mantra Gayatri. This goddess Sāvārṇi rose up from the sacrificial fire of King Aśvakī and gave him a boon, and accordingly a daughter named Sāvārṇi was born to the King. This princess was Sāvārṇi the wife of Sutayūn. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 290).

(iii) Siva, on starting for Tripyramidhana (the burning of Tripura), placed Sāvārṇi as the bridles of his horses. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 75).

(iv) Once Jāpaka Brahaman worshipped Devī Sāvārṇi, who appeared before him and gave him boons. As the Brahamin was engaged in deep meditation and prayer, he did not see the Devi when she appeared. It was due to this piety that the Brahmin was given boons. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 199).

(v) Once Devī Śāvitrī appeared before Satya, a brahmā of Vīdārībhā. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 272, Verse 11).

(vi) Once Devī Śāvitrī praised the giving of rice as alms. (M.B. Amūdāśāna Pārya, Chapter 57, Verse 8).

ŚĀVITRĪ II. A hand-maid of Devī Umā. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 293, Verse 49).

ŚĀVITRĪ III. A Sāvitrī who was the wife of a king and a righteous woman is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 254, Verse 24. This Sāvitrī gave two ear-rings as alms and attained heaven.

ŚĀVITRĪ IV. The wife of Sātyavān.

1) Birth. In the country of Madra, famous in the Purāṇas, there was a king named Avatapa. His wife was Mālāśī. Though the couple grew old they were childless. At last they worshipped Devī Śāvitrī. After vows and austerities for eighteen years the Devī appeared before them, and giving them the boon that a daughter would be born to them, she disappeared. The couple returned to the palace and Mālāśī conceived and delivered a daughter whom they named Sāvitrī. (Sānkhā 9, Devī Bhāgavata, Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 293).

2) Marriage. Sāvitrī grew up as though Lakṣmī had taken an incarnation and bloomed into a beautiful damsel. But nobody came forward to marry her. On a New moon day she bathed and purified herself and getting the blessings of Brāhmaṇī, came and bowed before her father. The King felt sorry as nobody had offered to marry her though she was in the full bloom of youth. He advised her to travel in the outside world and to select a husband by herself. According to the order of her father she took the aged ministers of the King and travelled through the forests in which hermits lived.

Once Nārada came to the palace and while he was talking with King Avatapa, Śāvitrī and the aged ministers returned. She bowed before her father and Nārada. As soon as Nārada saw her, he asked with curiosity about her marriage. The father replied that he had sent her in search of a husband. Śāvitrī said: “I have accepted the Prince Sātyavān as my husband. He is the son of King Dyumatsena of Sāvīva. Dyumatsena became blind in his old age, and taking this opportunity his enemies captured his country. Dyumatsena with his wife and son went to the forest and lived there.” Nārada described the qualities of Sātyavān. “Sātyavān is as radiant as the sun, as intelligent as Brhaspati, as valiant as Indra and as patient as the Earth. Avatapa was immensely pleased at hearing about the good qualities of Sātyavān, and asked Nārada, if there was anything to say against him. Nārada said that he had nothing to say against Sātyavān except that he would die “within one year from this date.” (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 294).

The King felt miserable when he heard this. Śāvitrī said that she had accepted Sātyavān as her husband and that nothing could make her waver from her decision even if he is not going to live more than a year. The King agreed to the wish of his daughter and preparations for the marriage were begun. The King went with Sāvitrī to the forest and saw Dyumatsena who gladly consented to the marriage. Avatapa returned to the palace leaving Sāvitrī with Sātyavān and his parents. As soon as Avatapa had returned, Śāvitrī discarded her ornaments and assumed the dress suitable to life in the forest and lived with them.

3) The death of Sātyavān. It was nearly a year and the day of death of Sātyavān was fast approaching. There were only four days more. Śāvitrī had taken a vow lasting for three days. Dyumatsena dissuaded her from taking fast. She completed the fast. There was left only one night more. She kept awake for the whole night. Morning came. Though she ended her fast she had not taken any food. Dyumatsena wanted to know the reason. She humbly said that she would eat only after sunset. As usual Sātyavān took his axe and started for the wood. Sāvitrī also followed him.

Sātyavān: “You have never accompanied me before. Moreover you are very weak on account of the fast. Then how can you come with me?”

Śāvitrī: “I am not at all weak by the fast and vow. I want to come with you. I pray, don’t hinder me.”

At last Sātyavān consented after getting the permission of his parents. Both went to the forest to gather fruits and roots. They gathered fruits and roots. Then Sātyavān began to cut wood. By that exertion Sātyavān sweated all over. He was affected by headache. “Let me lie down!” He said. The axe fell from his hand. Sāvitrī caught her husband who was falling down and laid him on her lap. Sāvitrī saw a person clad in blood-coloured garments, with red eyes and a rope in hand, coming towards them. He came to the spot and stood there looking at the body of Sātyavān. Realising the person to be Kila (Deatbdg) Sāvitrī stood up instantly and bowed before him.

Sāvitrī: “Who are you Lord. What may be your object in coming here?”

Yama:—Hei, Sāvitrī. As you are a hermitess of chastity I may converse with you. I am Yama. I am come to take away the life of your husband.”

Sāvitrī:—“Lord, I have heard that your messengers come and take away the souls. How is it that you have come in person today?”

Yama:—“This Sātyavān is a righteous man who is an ocean of good qualities. Messengers are not sent, in the cases of persons like him.”

Saying thus Yama cast his rope and caught the soul of Sātyavān. Sāvitrī saw the body of her husband lying without life and soul. Sāvitrī followed Yama who had gone to the south with the soul of Sātyavān.

Yama:—Child, you go back and conduct his funerals. You have followed your husband as far as you can.

Sāvitrī:—I am coming to the place where my husband is being taken. That is the duty of a wife. What impediment is there on my way to follow you, when I have the merits of vow, fast, devotion to my elders, love and regard for my husband and the good will of yourself, my Lord.”

When Yama realized that it was difficult to send Śāvitrī back, he asked Śāvitrī to ask for any boon. Yama was prepared to give anything except the life of Sātyavān. She requested for the recovery of sight by Dyumatsena. Yama granted it. Still Sāvitrī did not turn back. Yama asked her to pray for one more boon. She requested for the recovery of the lost kingdom of Duryodhana. Yama sanctioned that request also. Still she followed Yama, who was ready to grant her a third boon. She requested: "My father may, please be given a hundred sons who would continue the family. Yama granted that too. But she did not turn back. Yama told her that she might ask for a fourth boon. She said: "I may be given a hundred sons born directly from Sasyavarn. Yama granted this fourth boon also. Then Savya asked Yama how the boon would be realized unless the life of Sasyavarn was given back to him. Yama was pleased with her at her love and devotion for her husband and returned the life of Sasyavarn. Yama blessed her that she and Sasyavarn would live for hundred years."

Yama disappeared. Savya returned and sat there taking the body of Sasyavarn on her lap. Sasyavarn came to life. Both of them rose up. Night came on. It was dark. They could not find the way. Sasyavarn wanted to reach their hermitage somehow. Savya took the axe and supporting her husband in the dim moon light, walked to the hermitage.

Duryodhana got sight. He started with his wife in search of his children and walked about in the forest. At last all of them met together. They reached home. Then Savya told them all that had happened. Everyone was delighted. Then some people from Saly came to the hermitage. They said that the minister had killed the King, that the people had expelled the minister, and that they had come to request Duryodhana to throw him out of the kingdom. Accordingly all of them returned to Salya. Duryodhana was anointed as the King of Salya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 393 to 399).

Savya. A son of Angiras, Savya is actually Indra himself. The story is that Angiras began worshipping the Devatas for a son equal to Indra and that Indra, thinking that there should not be another person equal to him, got himself born as the son of Angiras. That son is Savya. (Rigveda, Mandala 1, Anuvika 10, Sutra 51).

Savyasachi. Another name of Arjuna. (Virata Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 19).

Savyasiva. One of the sons of Vipracitti by Sinhibhika. This atara was killed by Parashurama. (Brahma Purana, 3.6. 16-20).

Savitrisvadeva. The sacrificial offering given by the wife with the food prepared in the evening without any spell or incantation, is called Savitrisvadeva. (Manusmriti, Chapter 3, 21).

Savya. A hermit who was an expounder of the Vedas. In course of time, due to the differences in languages and grammar, the Vedas became difficult to grasp. It was Vasuki and Savitri who saved the Indians from this difficulty. For the Vedas to be grasped easily, Vasuki made the Nukula (Etymology) and Savitri wrote the Book Vedashapakata.

Savya. A mahari. (Rigveda, Mandala 1, Anuvika 112, Sutra 16).

Sengka. A nagas (serpent) born in the family of Dhritarashtra. This serpent was burnt to death in the sacrificial fire of the serpent-sacrifice of Jaiminiyajaya. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 14).

Seduka. An ancient King in India. Once some brahmans approached this heroic King who was well-versed in the art of wielding weapons, for Daksha to their teacher. But Seduka directed them to King Vrishadambha. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 4).

Seka. An ancient country in India. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 9, that this country was conquered by Bhasharouva during his regional conquest of the south.

Sekhizar. Author of the Tamul song 'Puriyapunam' (See under Azrakmaddevi).

Sen. A son of King Purusha. It is mentioned in Bhagavata, Skandha 5 that this king had nineteen sons including Sena.

Sena. A warrior of Purusha who had taken part in the battle of Bharata. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 13).

Senabindu. A warrior of Purusha who had taken part in the battle of Bharata on the side of the Pandavas. Karuna killed him. (M.B. Karuna Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 19).

Senabindu II. A warrior of Purusha who had taken part in the battle of Bharata on the side of the Pandavas. (Bhadra Parva, Skandha 9).

Senajit I. A King who lived in the period of Mahabharata. It is stated in Mahabharata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 13 that the Pandavas had decided to send a letter of invitation to this king, for the battle of Bharata.

Senajit II. A King. He lived in tears because of the loss of his son. At last by the advice of a brahmah he got peace of mind. (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapters 25 and 79).

Senajit III. A King who was the son of King Vrada and the father of Rucirasva. Besides Rucirasva Senajit had three more sons named Drishthanaka, Kasya and Vatsa. (Bhadra Parva, Skandha 9).

This King is mentioned as the son of King Vivasvati in Visnu Purana and Vayu Purana and as the son of Avajit in Matsya Purana. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Santi Parva, Chapter 26, that this King had written a treatise on justice (duties of a King).

Senamukha. A division of an army. (See under Aksashila).

Senapati (Senapati). One of the hundred sons of Dhritarashtra. He was killed by Bhasharouva in the battle of Bharata. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 32).

Senodyogaparva. A sub-section of Udyoga Parva in Mahabharata. This sub-section comprises Chapters 1 to 19 of Udyoga Parva in Mahabharata.
SESA (ADISESA). Ananta. (q.v)

Additional information

(i) Ananta is the reposing bed of Viṣṇu. It is this Ananta who dislodged Mandara mountain at the time of Kaṭākhaṇḍī maṇiṇā (churning of the ocean of milk) (M.B. AŚ Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 8).

(x) The people of the country in earlier days were illiterate and ignorant. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 34).

SĪBI III. A King born in the dynasty of Uśīnara. He was present at the wedding of Draupadi. He fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas in the great war and was killed by Drona. (Dūrṇa Parva, Chapter 155 Verse 19). King Śibi had four sons, Bhadra, Suvarṇa, Keśaya and Vīrāḍartha. (Bhāgavata, Ninth Skanda).

SĪBI IV. An India. There were four sects of Devas called Supāras, Haris, Saityas and Sudhis in Tamas Manvantara, and there were twenty-seven Devas in each Sect. Śibi, who performed hundred yajñas then was Indra. (For details see under Manvantaram).

SĪBI V. An ancient Rājārshi.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus:—

Śibi was born to Uśīnara of Mādhava, daughter of Yāyāti.

2) Uṣṇa mātā to āśī way. King Suhotra of Kuru dynasty once on his return from a visit of mahārṣi saw King Śibi coming in the opposite direction in his chariot, and both the Kings saluted each other as their age-ordained. But, they did not give passage to each other as they thought themselves to be equal in merit. At that time Nārada came there and asked the kings why they stood there thus blocking the path. They answered: Nārada thus:—"He who is more noble or clever on account of former actions etc. is usually given way to by the other person. Both of us are equals and are equals."

Nārada then spoke as follows:—

"Oh! King of the Kuru dynasty! You are cruel to the gentle and gentle to the cruel. To the evil you are good; then why not be good to the good. Devas have ordered that he who does good will get it hundred-fold by return. King Uśīnara is more noble and gentle than you are. The other is well-served by liberality, the liar by truth, the cruel by patience and the evil person by good. But, both of you Kings are noble persons. Therefore, one of you should give way to the other."

Listening to Nārada's advice, Suhotra gave way to Śibi and proceeded on his way. (Vana Parva, Chapter 134).

SĪBI tested. Śibi's fame spread in the three worlds, and an idea was mooted among the Devas that it should be tested how much of the reputation of the King was genuine. Accordingly, Agni in the form of a dove and Indra in that of a kite hunting after the dove, rushed to King Śibi. The dove took refuge in the lap of the Kings sitting in 'śiva' posture, and the priests told the King that it was the latter's duty to protect the dove, which took refuge with him for its life. The dove also told the King thus: 'I am really a muni, who has entered the body of the dove. I take refuge in you for my life.'

By that time the kite too had flown up to the King. It asked the King to return the dove, which it had been chasing. The King was surprised to hear the kite talk and told the bird that it was not proper for him to give up the dove who had sought refuge under him, but that he would give the kite any other flesh in lieu of the dove. The kite replied as follows: ‘You must give me flesh cut from your right thigh equal in weight to that of the dove. If you do so, the dove will be saved and you will be praised by people’.

Accordingly, the King cut a piece of flesh from his right thigh and weighed it in the balance against the dove. But, the dove weighed more. The King cut more flesh from his thigh and weighed, but the dove still weighed more. Thus, by instalments the King cut his whole body and weighed the flesh against the dove, yet it weighed more. Then the King himself sat in the balance, seeing which the kite flew away. Then the dove assumed its original form and told the King that it was Agni and the kite, Indra. The Devas were greatly pleased with the firm sense of sacrifice of the King; they blessed him and told him that a son called Kaparomā will be born to him. (Vana Parva, Chapter 197).

4) Other information.

(i) When Yayāti fell down on earth from heaven, Sibi promised to transfer to him the merits acquired by him (Sibi). (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse...).

(ii) Sibi worshiped Yama in his court. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 8).

(iii) Sibi too was present in the company of Indra to witness the fight between Arjuna and Draupadi in the battle between King Virāṭa and Kauravas at the Virāṭa city in connection with the lifting of Virāṭa’s cow by the Kauravas. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 9).

(v) Sibi loved Indra very much. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 7).

(vi) People of the Yadu dynasty presented Sibi a sword. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 89).

(vii) He gifted away his son to the brahmins, and therefore he attained heaven. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 19).

(viii) He did not eat flesh. (Agniśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 61).

5) Conclusion. The story of two kings connected with the episode of the dove and the kite is mentioned in the Mahābhārata. One of the kings is Sibi and the other Uśīnara, father of Sibi. (See under Uśīnara).

SIDDHA I. A Deva Gandharva. This Gandharva was born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Prajāpāti. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 46).

SIF-DHĀ II (THE SIDDHĀ). A group of devas. The group of devas called Siddhas lived on the Himālayas near the hermitage of Kanva. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 70, Verse 15). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 29, that this group of Gods stay in the palace of Yama serving him.

SIDDHĀ. The Devi (goddess) consecrated in Rambhavana, wearing a water-vessel with a snout, rosary, boon, and fire, is called Siddhā. (See under Devi).

SIDDHAGRAHA. An evil spirit. Those who are cursed by the group of devas called Siddhas are afflicted by this spirit and they become maraṅgas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Verse 49).

SIDDHAPĀTRA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Mahābhārata Sāhya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 56).

SIDDHĀRTHA I. A King. This King was the rebirth of the asura Krođhavāt. (Bhīṣma, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 60).

SIDDHĀRTHA II. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Sāhya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 54).

SIDDHĀRTHA III. The name of Buddha in his childhood. (See under Buddha).

SIDDHĀRTHA IV. A minister of King Daśaratha. (Vaṁśikī Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhya Kānda, Sarga 36).

SIDDHĀRŚARAMA. A hermitage. The place at which Vāmana thrum Mahābali down to Pātāla. This place became a hermitage later. When Viśvāmitra took Śrī Rāma and Laṅkāvana to the forest for the protection of his sacrificial, he showed them this hermitage. (Vaṁśikī Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākānda, Sarga 29, Verse 22).

SIDDHA I. A daughter of Daśaratha. Thirteen daughters including Siddhi were married by Dharmadeva. (Viśṇu Purāṇa, Antāka 1, Chapter 7).

SIDDHI II. A godess. Kunti, the mother of the Pandavas was the human rebirth of this godess. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 129). This godess Siddhi had walked in front of the army of Subrahmanya, in the great battle between the Devas and the Asuras. To attain the object in any matter, the blessing of this godess is essential. (M.B. Sāhya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 64).

SIDDHI III. The son of an Agni (fire) named Vīra. Siddhi was born to this Vīraṅga, by his wife Sarayu. The story stating how this agni once screened the sun by his radiance, occurs in Mahābhārata, Sāhya Parva, Chapter 218.

SIGHKA. A King of the Solar dynasty. In Bhaṣagāvata, 9th Skandha, it is said that he was the son of Agnī and father of Muru.

SIGHGRAGA. One of the sons of Sāmpāti. (Matsya Purāṇa, 6, 35).

SIGRU. A particular caste of people. In the Dātaraja war they fought against Sūdras and got themselves defeated. (Egveda, 7-18-19).

SIKATA. An ancient hermit. When the Bhārata-battle was going on this hermit approached Draupadi and requested them to stop the battle forthwith. (M.B. Dropa Parva, Chapter 190, Verse 341).

SIKATĀKSA. A holy place. Once Yudhisṭhira visited this holy place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 125, Verse 12).

SIKHANDJAM. Things which were born from the blood of Vīrāṅga and which Brahmins, Kṣatriyas and Vaiśyas are forbidden from eating. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 282).

SIKHANDI [SIKHANDINĪ I]. Rebirth of Ambā, daughter of the king of Kāśi. Ambā ended her life with the vow that she would take revenge on Bhismā and was born in the next life as the daughter of king Drupada under the name Sikhandinī, and Sikhandinī helped Arjuna in the war at Kurukṣetra to kill Bhismā. (For the history of Ambā ending in two lives see under Ambā. Certain pieces of information not included under that head are given below).

1) Sikhandinī was present at the wedding of Abhimanyu in the city of Upāplavā. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 17).

2) Sikhandi learned archery at the feet of Droṇāchārya. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 192, Verse 67).

3) On the first day of the great war a duel was fought between Sikhandi and Aṭṭavācumā. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 46).

4) Sikhandi retreated from battle-field in fear of Droṇa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 69, Verse 31).
(5) A second duel was fought by him and Asvatthamā. (Bhāṣa Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 26).
(6) Śikhandī broke the arrow of Vaiśāya with his divine arrow (Bhāṣa Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 29).
(7) He tried to kill Vaiśāya. (Bhāṣa Parva, Chapter 108, Verse 45).
(8) Śikhandī attacked Bhūṣaṇa at the instance of Arjuna. (Bhāṣa Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 1).
(9) He followed that attack with many other attacks. (Bhāṣa Parva, Chapters 114, 118 and 119).
(10) Vaiśāya praised the prowess of Śikhandī to Dhruvāśva. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 45).
(11) Bhūṣaṇarā and Śikhandī fought with each other. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 43).
(12) Śikhandī and Karna fought with each other. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 7).
(13) Śikhandī and Bhīṣmaka fought with each other. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 7).
(14) In the battle that followed, Śikhandī was defeated by Kṛtarva. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 114, Verse 82).
(15) Kṛpācārya defeated Śikhandī. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 169, Verse 22).
(16) In the battle that followed with Kṛtarva, Śikhandī fainted. (Karna Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 26).
(17) Defeated by Kṛpācārya, Śikhandī had to run away for his life. (Karna Parva, Chapter 1).

(20) Śikhandī resisted the advance of Aśvatthāmā. (Śalāy Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 6).
(21) In the fierce battle that was fought after the fall of Bhīṣmaka, Aśvatthāmā killed Śikhandī. (Saúptika Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 65).
(22) Synonyms of Śikhandī used in Mahābhārata. (Bhīṣmāṇa, Śikhandī, Draupadī, Draupadāma, Pāṇcāla, Yajñasaṇi etc.)
ŚIKHĀVAN. A mahārāṣṭra, who lived in the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sāhāya Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 14).
ŚIKHĀVARTA. A Yaksha, who lives in the court of Kubera worshipping him. (Sāhāya Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 17).
ŚIKHTI. A nāga born in the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 12).
ŚIKHINVAJ. A king, who ruled over Mālava during the first stage of Aranyagamnayu in the seventh Mantavya. Cūḍāla, daughter of the king of Saurāṣṭra was Śikhindvajaya's wife. The Jñānavāsintham contains a story about how the royal couple renounced all attachments in life as the result of intense tapas.
Śikhindvajaya and Cūḍāla began practising jñānyaya (communion through knowledge). It was Cūḍāla, who got the Siddhi first. Though the king was pleased with the achievements of his wife he felt sorry about his failure or drawbacks. Cūḍāla had attained the Siddhi to travel even in air. Though she told her husband emphatically that he could practise jñānyaya living in the palace itself, he quitted the city for the forest and began performing tapas. Then on one day, she went to the presence of the king in the forest in the guise of a brahmin boy and stood there without touching the earth with his feet. The king treated the boy with honour and respect taking him for some Deva. Then she revealed her actual form, and the king agreed to return with her to the palace and practise jñānyaya there. At that juncture Cūḍāla created by her soul-power celestial women like Urvā and also Indra and lined them up before her husband. This was to test whether the king yielded to any of the temptations by the celestial women or by Indra and Cūḍāla returned with the king to the kingdom.
ŚIKSAKA. A warrior of Subhûtima. (Śalāy Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 76).
ŚILA. Daughter of Dharmaśri. She was wedded by Mārtci mahāraṣṭra. For some reason the mahāraṣṭra cursed her and she was transformed into a stone in the Gaya temple. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 108).
ŚILAVĀN. A divine sage. In Mahābhārata, Dākinīvāpyāpāja, Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 83, there is a reference to a conversation between this Mahāraṣṭra and Śrī Kṛṣṇa.
ŚILAVATI. A heroine reputed for her chastity and fidelity to her husband. Her husband, Ugra-ravas was cruel and violent. Yet Śilavati used to adore him. Once Ugra-ravas fell a victim to the disease of leprosy. From that time, Silavati used to go about begging in the houses of Brāhmaṇas to feed and support her husband. After some time by her constant nursing, his condition was slightly improved. After that she continued her begging from door to door, carrying him on her shoulders. Once they happened to arrive in front of a huge mansion. Water was flowing in front of the gate and so Silavati returned from there with her husband without stepping into the water. When they reached home, Ugra-ravas accused his wife why she returned without entering the mansion. She explained that it was the house of a prostitute and to touch the water coming out of that house was sin. On hearing it, Ugra-ravas felt an irresistible desire to visit that brothel. He expressed his desire to her. Quite obediently Silavati took up her husband on her shoulders and went to the prostitute's house. (For more details see under Aśi māndava, Anātyā and Atri).
ŚILAYCA. A Vedaist son of Viśvāmitra. (Anūtāsana Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 54).
ŚIL. A nāga born in the Takṣaka dynasty. It was burnt to death at the serpent yajña conducted by Janamejaya. (Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 9).
ŚIMANTINI. The wife of King Cukurāgada. The story of this Simantini is given in Somapārasavatara māhātmya in Vaiśana Purāṇa.
ŚIMHACANDRA. A king who had helped Yudhishthira. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 40).
ŚIMHAKETU. A warrior who took the side of the Pāṇḍavas and fought against the Kauravas. (Mahābhārata, Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 45.) This Simhaketa was killed in the battle of Bhārata by Karna.
ŚIMHALA. Modern Ceylon. In ancient days this place was called Simhala and the inhabitants were called Sinhalas. The following statements about Sinhala occur in the Mahābhārata.
(1) The low caste people of the Sinhala originated from the sides of Nandini, the cow of the Devas. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 174, Verse 37).
(2) The king of Sinhala had taken part in the sacrifice Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Mahābhārata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 12).
(3) The Kṣatriyas of Sinhala gave Yudhiṣṭhira, Chrysopeles, pearls and such other wealth of the sea as present. The people of Sinhala wore clothes studded with jewels. They were of dark complexion with eyes the ends of which were red. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 35).
(4) The Sinhala took the side of the Kauravas in the battle of Bhārata. In the Garuḍā vyūha formed by Drona, the Sinhala were stationed in the position of the neck. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 6).
SIMHAPURA: A city in Bhārata, famous in the Purāṇas. This city was situated in the mountainous region of North India. During the period of Mahābhārata, Citaūydhā was the king who ruled over this city. (Mahābhārata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 27 Verse 20). Arjuna during his regional conquest of the North, defeated this king.

SIMHASENA III: Another warrior of Pāṇcāla. Karna killed him in the battle of Bhārata. (Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 44).
SIMHAVAKRA: An asura. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kanda). This asura fought Subrahmanyā.
SIMHĪKĀ: A giantess. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amāśa 1, Chapter 15, and Agni Purāṇa Chapter 19). Two sons named Hiranīkṣipta and Hiranīyaksa and a daughter named Simhikā were born to Prajapati Kasyapa by his wife Indī. Simhikā was married to Viprāciti. Two sons named Kāhu and Keti were born to them because they were the sons of Simhikā, they came to be known by the name Sainūṭamaya.
(But it is stated in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 65 that Simhikā was the daughter of Prajapati Dakṣa and the wife of Kasyapa.)
A story occurs in Rāmāyana, that Simhikā caught hold of Hanumān by his shadow and swallowed him, while he was jumping to Lankā, and that Hanumān escaped from her. (See under Rāma, para 27).
SIMSUṆA: Daughter of a Gāndhāra King. She is also known as Suketi. She was married by Śrī Kaṭṭa (M.B. Southern text, Chapter 38).
SINDH. A river in India, very famous in the Purāṇas.
1) General information. It is assumed in the Purāṇas that this river is a branch of the heavenly Gāṅga. By the efforts of Bhagiratha, the heavenly Gāṅga fell on the earth in the Lake Bindu. After that it had six channels. Three channels flowed to the east and three to the west. The river which flowed to the East were Bhāraddhi, Pavan and Nalini. The three rivers Sukakma, Sīṭā and Sindhu flowed to the west. This seventh branch followed Bhagiratha and flowed to Pāṭāla to perform obeisances to the sons of Sāgara.
(2) Other details:
(i) Sadevarana, a King, who was defeated by his enemies, hid himself for a while in the natural arbours on the basin of Sindhu. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 40).
(ii) Sindhu remains in the palace of Varuṇa and glorifies him. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 19).
(iii) Once Mārkandeya happened to see the river Sindhu in the stomach of child Mukunda. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 103).
(iv) Sindhu is considered to be the origin of Agni (Fire). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 242, Verse 22).
(v) Sindhu is one of the seven channels of Gāṅga. (M.B. Bhārata Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 48).
(vi) By bathing in the river Sindhu, one could attain heaven. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25 Verse 6).
(vii) Once Pārvatī held a talk on the duties of women. All the rivers met to bear the talk. Sindhu was prominent among the rivers who were present. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 146, Verse 18).
(viii) This is one of the rivers which ought to be revered every morning and evening. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 15).
(ix) Mention about river Sindhu occurs throughout the Bhārata. Prominent rivers mentioned in Bhārata are Kūbbā, Sindhu, Suvāṣṭu, Vīśāṭa, Āśikol, Paruṣūṭ, Viṣpāṭa, Ṣatadru, Saravatt etc.
SINDHU II. A country very famous in the Purāṇas. Jayadratha the King of Sindhu was present at the Svayamvara marriage of Draupadi (Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 182, Verse 21).
SINDHVITAM: A king of the solar dynasty. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 4). This King was the son of Jahnva and the father of Bālkīṭava. This King did penance in the holy place called Pṛthivākarthaka and attained Brahmaṇhood. (M.B. Sāalya Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 37).
It is mentioned in Bālgāvata, Skanda 9, that Sindhu-dvipa was the son of Śrutānanda who was the son of Bhagiratha.
SINDHUPRABHAVABA. A holy place. The river Sindhu starts from this place. This is a place frequented by the Siddhās and the Gandharvas. He who bastes here for five days with fast can obtain heaps of Gold. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 94).

SINDHUJA. A holy place. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 79). This is one of the famous holy places in the world and that by bathing in this drīṇa one can obtain heaps of gold.
SIN. A King of the Yadava dynasty. He secured Devaki to be wedded to Vasudeva after defeating, single-handed in battle, all the kings. A fierce battle was fought between this Śiśi of Devamīgha family and Sonadatta. (Drona Parva, Chapter 114).
SINVĀK. A hermit. This hermit had shone in the council of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 14).
SINIVÄLI I

1) Birth. A daughter of Angiras. The wife of Angiras was Sīma. She gave birth to four daughters named Kuhū, Rākā, Anumati and Sīnivāla. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśā 7, Chapter 10).

(It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Sankhāra 6, that Sīnivāla was the third daughter of Angiras by his wife Sṛṣṭhā.)

2) Other details.
(i) Dṛḍyādīya is another name of Sīnivāla. Her body is small. Sometimes she can be seen and sometimes she cannot be seen. It is in this meaning that she gets the name Dṛḍyādīya (seen and unseen). Sīva bears her in his forhead. So she has another name Rudrasūti. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 216, Verse 5).
(ii) Sīva used Sīnivāla as the yoke of the horses of his chariot in the battle with Tripuras. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 32).
(iii) At the time of his birth Sīnivāla had come to see the child Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 19).
(iv) It is mentioned in Atharva Veda that Sīnivāla is a wife of Mahāviṣṇu.

SINIVÄLI II

1) A daughter born to Bhṛṣapati by his wife Subhā. It is stated in Vyāyu Purāṇa, Chapter 90, that though Sīnivāla was given in marriage to Prājapati Kārdama, she abandoned him and lived with Soma (Moon).

SĪPĀ. A river exotiled in Rgyeda. It is stated in Sēkta 104, Anuvāka 15, Maṇḍala 1 of the Rgyeda that the asura named Kuyave should be thrown into the depths of Sīpā as he stole money.

SĪRADHYĀJA. Janaka the father of Sīta. (For further details see under Janaka).

SĪRĪṢ. A Vedāntist son of Vīvāmitra. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 59).

SĪRĪKALI. A sacred place in South India. Brahmapura is another name for this place which is near Kumbhakonam in Tanjore District. The place was sanctified by the birth of Trijñānasambandhar. (For further details see under Trijñānasambandhar).

SĪSIRA. Son of Somas the Vasu, of his wife Maṇoharā. To the couple were born four sons called Varhas, Praṇa, Sāman and Śiśirā. (Adi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 28).

SĪSIRAPARVATA. A mountain near Mount Meru. (See under Mahāmeru).

SĪSTA. Dhruva's son by Dhanyā. Sīsta married Sūcchāyā, daughter of Agni. Four sons, Kṛpa, Rūjñājaya, Vṛtra and Vṛka were born to them. (Matsya Purāṇa, 4, 38).

SĪSTI. A son of Dhruva. Dhruva had two sons, Sīsti and Bhavya, by his wife Sambhu. Sīsti's wife, Succhāyā gave birth to five sons, namely, Kṛpa, Rūjñājaya, Vṛtra, Vṛka and Vṛkatejasa. The eldest of them Rūpa was the Father of the Mānu, Cāka. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṁśa 1, Chapter 13).

SĪSU. A son born to the Saptarṣiṇī due to the blessing of Subrahmanya. The eyes of the child were blood-red. It was called Viṣṇatūka as well. (Vana Parva, Chapter 228, Verse 11).

SĪSU.MĀRA I. A Rṣi. This Rṣi used to live in water in the form of a crocodile. There is a story about him in the Patavāla Brahmaṇa.

Once all the Rṣis joined together in praying Indra. Śiṣumāra alone remained silent without taking part in it. Seeing this, Devendra ordered Śiṣumāra to praise him. The sage answered proudly that he had no time for it and that he would praise Indra for as much time as was needed to throw the water upwards.

Accordingly he started praising Indra. The sage to whom Indra's praise was at first disagreeable, subsequently felt that he could not do it too much. By his austerity he acquired "Śāmavidyā". He even composed a "Śāma" (a hymn) in praise of Indra. In later times it became famous as "Śīrkarśasāma".

SĪSU.MĀRA II. A constellation so called because it is in the form of a Śiṣumāra (Crocodile). It is said to be the starry form of Viṣṇu. At the tail-end of it is Dhruna, which automatically rotates and also makes planets like the Sun and the moon to rotate. Stars follow the self-rotating Dhruna and rotate like a wheel. The Sun and the moon along with stars and planets are bound by the cord of atmosphere to Dhruna.

The basis and support of this constellation of Śiṣumāra is Mahāviṣṇu, who is the support of all light and effulgence. Dhruva, son of Uttanapāda came to be installed at the tail-end of Śiṣumāra as he had worshipped Viṣṇu. Śiṣumāra is dependent upon Viṣṇu, the Lord of all, and Dhruva is dependent upon Śiṣumāra. Śrīyā is dependent on Dhruva. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 9).

SĪSU.MĀRAMUKTĪ. A woman follower of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 22).

SĪSU.NĀGA. The first King of the Śiṣumāra dynasty. He founded the dynasty after defeating Nandivaradhana of Pradhyota family, King of Maṇḍala. Though he first belonged to Kaśi region, later on he settled down in Maṇḍala. Kākavarna was Śiṣumāra's son.

The following ten Kings of Śiṣumāra dynasty ruled the country for 360 years. (1) Kākavarna (2) Kṛṣṇāhāma (3) Kṛṣṇājya (4) Vīvāmitra (5) Aśṭāsātra (6) Vānasāka (7) Uddāl (8) Nandivaradhana (9) Mahāharid. (Matsya Purāṇa, 272, 6-17; Viṣṇu Purāṇa 99, 314-315).

SĪSU.PĀLA. King of Cedi. 1) Previous birth. Jaya and Viṣṇaja, gate-keepers at Vaikuntha were born thrice in asura womb as a result of the curse by muni like Sanaka. They were first born as Hiranyakṣa and Hiranyakayipa, next as Kāvanna and Kumbhakarna and the third time as Śiṣumāla and Dantavakra. (See under Jayaviṣṇaja).

2) Birth. Śiṣumāla was the son of King Damaghoṣa of Cedi by his wife, Sūtraśravas (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha). He was born with three eyes and four hands, and at the time of birth he brayed like an ass, so the parents decided to abandon the ugly and awkward child. Immediately a Jīn (ghost) appeared and told the father that the child would grow up to become very strong and powerful, and that only one person would be able to kill him and that person had already been born on earth. Further questioned by Śiṣumāla's mother, the Jīn said that as soon as the son saw the person born to kill him, he would lose his third eye, and that if he was seated on the lap of the person, two out of his four hands would be lost. After having said this the Jin disappeared.

News about this peculiar child spread far and wide and many kings visited him. Daamahosa placed the child on the lap of each of them. But, no physical change occurred to him. Then one day Sri Krishna and Balabhadra came to see the child, whose mother Srutavās was (she was also the sister of Kṛṣṇa’s father) placed him on Kṛṣṇa’s lap. Immediately two hands and the third eye of the child vanished, and with tears in her eyes the mother prayed Kṛṣṇa never to kill Śiṣṭūpālī, and Kṛṣṇa promised that he would forgive the crimes of Śiṣṭūpālī a hundred times. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45).

3) Other information.
(i) Śiṣṭūpālī was present at the wedding of Draupadi. In his attempt to draw the bow he fell down on his knees. (Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 23).
(ii) He was present at the wedding of the daughter of the King of Kālīga at the time. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 6).

(d) Following the above, he was killed in battle by Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 45, Verse 23, Sabha Parva).
(e) After death his essence got absorbed in Kṛṣṇa. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 26).

(x) Kṛṣṇa once told Arjuna that he killed Śiṣṭūpālī for his (Arjuna’s) sake, good. (Drona Parva, Chapter 181, Verse 21).

SĪṢṬĀPĀLAVADHAPARWA. A Sub-Parva of Sabhā Parva, Chapters 40-45.

SĪṢRTOSMA. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Taksaka. This nāga was burnt to death in Janamejaya’s Sarpaśatra. (Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 10).

SĪṬA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Mahābhārata, Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 69).

SĪṬA. Wife of Śrī Rāma.

1. Sri Mahākal is the incarnation of Mahākalakṣṇi. Lakṣmi took the birth of a woman because of the curse of Sarasvatī. Vedavatī, Śītā, Pāṇḍāli, all these women of chastity were the incarnations of Lakṣmi. The stories of Lakṣmi passing from birth to birth such as Vedavatī, Tulasī, Śītā, Pāṇḍāli and soon until at last she reached the world of Viṣṇu, occurring in various Purāṇas are collected and given here. Lakṣmī, Sarasvatī and Gaṅgā were the wives of Mahā Viṣṇu. One day Viṣṇu was sitting with his three wives and entertaining them with conversation when Devi Gaṅgā looked at Viṣṇu amorously. Instantly a quarrel arose among the three of them. When the row became uncontrollable, Sarasvatī cursed Lakṣmī to take birth in the earth as a plant. Gaṅgā cursed Sarasvatī and made her a river. Sarasvatī cursed Gaṅgā and made her a river. At the end of all these rows and curses Viṣṇu stood up and said to Lakṣmī. “Lakṣmī you will take birth as the daughter of Dharmaśāvajña on the earth with the name Tulasi. In order that the curse of Sarasvatī may come true, a plant called Tulasi (holy basil) will grow on the earth from a portion of you. While you are living as the daughter of Dharmaśāvajña, an asura named Śrīkharāṣṭra born from my portion will marry you.”

The curse was realized. Sarasvatī and Gaṅgā became rivers. Lakṣmī was about to be born as the daughter of Dharmaśāvajña. Who was Dharmaśāvajña? He was a man of righteous deeds and good qualities, born of the family of Dakṣasāvajña. Sarasvatī and Gaṅgā were born of Mahāviṣṇu. Brahmāsāvajña was born from Dakṣasāvajña. Dharmaśāvajña begot Rudrasāvajña, Indraśāvajña begot Viṣṇuśāvajña. Raśidhāvajña was the son of Viṣṇuśāvajña. Two sons named Dharmaśāvajña and Kuṣṭāhāvajña were born to Raśidhāvajña. Dharmaśāvajña and Kuṣṭāhāvajña were performing penance before Devi Śiva. They were to reign the wealth and prosperity lost by the curse of the Sun.

How did Dharmaśāvajña and Kuṣṭāhāvajña lose their prosperity? Their grandfather Viṣṇuśāvajña was a devotee of Śiva. He performed penance before Śiva for a long time. Śiva became pleased with Viṣṇuśāvajña and lived in his hermitage for the period of three Devayugas. This King Viṣṇuśāvajña made a proclamation that none other than Śiva should be worshiped. As all the other gods were despoiled, the Sun got angry and cursed Viṣṇuśāvajña. “Let the prosperity of yours and your posterity be destroyed.” Śiva did not like the action taken by the Sun against his favourite. Śiva took his trident and went against the Sun, who took refuge near his father Prajapati Kṣiyapa. Kṣiyapa complained to Brahmā. Brahmā ran to Viṣṇuśāvajña. Śiva also came there with his trident. Viṣṇu looked at them and said “You gods, hear this. What is the need of all this hurry? Within the short time you have taken to run up to this place so many years have elapsed in the world. It is a long time since Viṣṇuśāvajña died. His son Raśidhāvajña is also dead. Raśidhāvajña has two sons named Dharmaśāvajña and Kuṣṭāhāvajña. Both have become kings. But because of the curse of the Sun, they are devoid of any radiance. They are now worshipping Mahākal for radiance.” Hearing this talk of Mahākalīn all of them returned to their places. It has been mentioned that Dharmaśāvajña and Kuṣṭāhāvajña had been engaged in penance before Mahākalīn. Devi Mahākalīn appeared before them and granted them their wish. Devi promised them that she would take birth as the daughter of each of them, and she would recover for them all the wealth and prosperity they had lost. Accordingly Mahākalīn took birth by her portion as the daughter of Mahādevi, the wife of Dharmaśāvajña.
under the name Tulasi. (For the rest of the story of Tulasi see under Tulasi, Para 4.)

Mahāvīra was the wife of Kuśadāvāja. As Lakṣmi had promised to take birth as their daughter, both of them waited for the birth of the child uttering the Vedas. At this time a child was born from the mouth of Kuśadāvāja. This child was the incarnation of Lakṣmi. With the birth of the child, Kuśadāvāja regained all the wealth and prosperity he had lost. The child was named Vedavati (Devavati). She grew up and became a young woman. Her desire was to get Mahāvīra as her husband. Once an asura named Śambhu came to the hermitage of Kuśadāvāja. When he saw Vedavati he fell in love with her. He asked Kuśadāvāja for the hand of his daughter, but Kuśadāvāja did not give his consent.

Śambhu got angry. He came back in the night and killed Kuśadāvāja with his sword. Hearing the sound, Vedavati woke up and saw the dead body of her father lying in a pool of blood. She looked at Śambhu angrily. In that fury, look Śambhu was burnt to ashes.

Vedavati began to perform severe penance to get Viṣṇu as her husband. It was at this time that Rāvanas had begun his campaign of conquest. He defeated all kings and was proceeding victorious through the vicinity of the Himalaya. When he saw the beautiful damsel Vedavati sitting alone and performing penance. Seeing so beautiful a girl engaged in penance, he told her that he was the famous Rāvanas with ten heads and requested her to throw away the garment of bark of the tree and the nattied hair and to accept him as her husband. She rejected his request. The angry Rāvanas caught hold of her hand. She resisted using her teeth and finger-nails. She cried out that she wanted no more to retain the body made impure by the touch of a wicked person. She made a fire and jumped into it. Thus in the sight of Rāvanas, she burnt herself to death. Before death she vowed that in the next birth Mahāvīra would become her husband and would kill Rāvanas.

Rāvanas being in the fire of amour, was extremely sorry at the death of the beautiful girl. He took the ashes of her to Lākṣikā and put them in a golden box and kept the box in a solitary place. He used to visit the place daily. Since the arrival of the ashes, bad omens began to occur in Lākṣikā. One day Nārada came to Lākṣikā. Rāvanas asked Nārada for the reason of constant occurrence of such bad omens. Nārada replied that the cause of bad omens was the golden box he was keeping and that if it was kept in Lākṣikā any longer, it would cause destruction and that if it was destroyed, great disaster would follow. Nārada advised Rāvanas to remove the box without opening it to somewhere else outside Lākṣikā. Accordingly Rāvanas caused the golden box to be dropped in the sea. By and by it came with the waves to the shore of Bhārata (India). Robbers took it and went to the north and hid it in a forest. They were not able to take it away again. Thus the box came to be deposited on the basin of a river in Mithilā.

It was this river-basin that King Janaka selected as the place for sacrifice. Being kept in this holy place, the ashes of the body of Devavati in the box mingled with her spirit and was taking shape into a child. When the place was ploughed for preparing the spot of sacrifice, for Janaka, this golden box was discovered. The child which was inside the box, was taken home and brought up by the king who named her Sītā. It was the portion of this Sītā herself that took birth next as Pāunkyak (Devi Bhāgavata, Kamba Ramāyaṇa).

Another version.

(i) The King Padmākṣa performed penance before Mahāvīra with a view to get Mahālakṣmi as daughter. Mahāvīra gave the King a great Phallos to realize his wish. From that a beautiful girl was born. The King named her Padmā. When she attained marriageable age, the King made preparations for her Svayānvara (the bride herself choosing a husband). On the day fixed for the marriage Rāvanas came and destroyed all the preparations and killed King Padmākṣa. Because of her sorrow at this disaster Padmā jumped into the fire. The giants searched for Padmā every here, but they could not find her. They returned in disappointment.

One day, during this period, Rāvanas was travelling in his Aerial chariot. When he reached this place, he saw Padmā who had come out of the fire. Rāvanas was fascinated by the beauty of Padmā. So he turned towards her. Seeing this, Padmā again jumped into the pile of fire for safety. Without any delay Rāvanas made a search in the pile of fire. At last he got the body of Padmā (Sītā) in the form of five jewels. The disappointed Rāvanas placed the five jewels in a box and took it to Lākṣikā and gave it to his wife Māntodāri. One day Māntodāri opened that box and saw Padmā sitting in the form of a beautiful virgin. Thinking that it was not propitious to keep her who was the cause of destruction to Padmākṣa, his family and kingdom, Māntodāri exerted pressure on Rāvanas to cast the box out of Lākṣikā. Rāvanas with his men took the box from Lākṣikā and buried it in Mithilā. Before the box was closed Padmā cursed Rāvanas. "I will come to Lākṣikā again to kill you and your clan.

One day when a brahmin of Mithilā was ploughing his field he got this box. Thinking that it belonged to the King, the brahmin took the box to King Janaka. The King took the child in the box and brought it up. He named the child Sītā. (Ananda Rāmāyaṇa, 7-6).

(ii) In Adbhuta Rāmāyaṇa we see another story which is somewhat different from that we see in Ananda Rāmāyaṇa. It is given below —

Rāvanas who had become the harasse of the entire world began to harass the hermits and sages also. He used to shoot arrows at the hermits who were sitting in meditation in the forests, and taking their blood in the arrow-head, he stored it in a big pot. In the same forest a hermit named Grasamadra was engaged in penance to get a daughter who would be equal to Lakṣmi in everyway. He took milk with the head of Darbha grass and stored it daily in a pot. One day Rāvanas came to his hermitage and took the pot of milk stealthily. He poured the milk into the pot in which he had stored the blood and stirring it well gave it to his wife Māntodāri. Seeing the character of her husband becoming worse and worse every day, Māntodāri became miserable. One day she decided to commit suicide and drank the contents of the pot given by Rāvanas. The thing which was taken for suicide, made her pregnant. Māntodāri buried that foetus in Kurukṣetra. After a while a girl was born from it. That child was Sītā, the daughter of King Janaka.

(2) There is a story in Devī Bhāgavata stating how Sītā was born as the daughter of Rāvana. It is as follows:

Rāvana wished to marry Māndodari, the daughter of Maya. Then Maya said to Rāvana thus: "According to the horoscope of Māndodari, the first child born to her will be the destroyer of their clan. So it would be better to kill that child." Not heeding upon the advice of Maya, Rāvana put the first child in a box and buried it in the city of King Janaka. This child was Sītā, the wife of Śrī Rāma.

2) Marriage. Sītā grew up in the palace of King Janaka, Kusāchāla. The younger brother of Janaka had three daughters. They were named Māndavī, Ornālī and Sratākāritī. Sītā grew up along with these three sisters. The four of them grew up as sisters and friends. Sītā grew up to be a young woman. Several young men wished to marry her. Janaka refused everyone of them. One day the princesses met with their maid in the garden of the harem. Sītā sat on the dais in the center of the garden to make flower garlands. Her attempts to gather the jasmine flowers from the twigs of a jasmine tree in the garden ended in failure. Sītā instantly ran to the weapon house and took a bow and arrow, shot down the flowers. The flowers fell down on the cloth placed on the ground without being damaged. Janaka saw the shooting of Sītā, from the palace. He was amazed at the expertise of Sītā. The bow which Sītā took was the bow of Śrī Rāma, a gift of Śrī Śiva. This bow later became very famous, even in days of old, to destroy the sacrifice of Dakṣa. Śiva, who was pacified by the destruction of the sacrifice of Dakṣa and the victory over his enemies, gave this bow to his devotee, the King of Vidisha. That King kept the bow in his weapon-house and used to worship it. Śrī Sītā had taken that bow and shot with it.

The King who had been thinking about the marriage of Sītā thought that what he had owned was a good omen. So the King made a proclamation that only he who could take the bow of Śrīva, draw it, and shoot with it would become eligible to marry Sītā. Hearing this many adventurers came to the palace and tried to handle the Śrīva-bāha and retreated admitting defeat. It was at this time that Viśvāmitrā brought Śrīma and Lakṣmaṇa to the forest for the protection of sacrifice. Hearing about the Śrīvāmitrā of Śrītā, Viśvāmitrā took the princes to the palace of Janaka. The King was greatly pleased when he learned that the princes were the sons of Daśaratha, the solar Dynasty. Next morning, at the instruction of his elders and priests and teachers, Śrī Rāma, stood on the dais in the middle of the hall, where the Śrīvāmitrā was placed, ready to handle it. He lifted up the bow with his left hand, drew it easily and fastened the string tightly and the bow was broken. When the Kings who were present, heard the roaring sound of the breaking of the bow, they shivered with fear as serpents at the sound of thunder. Sītā jumped with joy like a peacock. A letter was sent to Daśaratha that evening for friends and relatives arrived. Under the guidance of the presiding priest Sañānanda, the marriage ceremony was conducted. Rāma married Sītā, Bharata married Māndavī, Lakṣmaṇa married Ornālī, and Sratākāritī married Śrīvāmitrā. The brides and bridgrooms went to Ayodhya with their parents and relatives. (Kamba Rāmāyana, Śrīlakṣmaṇa)

3) Anāśya's gift of cloth and ornaments. The wife of Viśvāmitrā, who had become old, wished to hand over the realm to Śrī Rāma. Since Kaśyapa stood as a hindrance, the kingdom fell into the hands of Bharata. Moreover Sītā had to live in the forest with Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa for fourteen years. In the early period of their forest-life they visited the hermitage of Atri. Seizing the devotion of Śrī Śiva's wife, Parvati, Anāśya, the wife of hermit Atri, blessed her and gave her a fine garland, clothes and ornaments and cosmetics. Anāśya blessed Sītā again and said that she would shine as Lakṣmi if she befriend her body with the divine cosmetics. (Viśvāmitra Rāmāyana, Ayodhya Kāṇḍa, Sargas 118-120).

4) Test by Pāraśurama. In the last year of forest-life Pārśurāma and Pārameśvara tested the firmness of the love of Sītā and Śrīma. (See under Śrīma, Para 14).

5) Phantom Śrīma. A few days before the abduction of Śrīma by Rāvana, Fire god took the guise of a Brahmin and approached Śrīma and said: "O, Śrīma! The Devas have sent me to tell you certain things which will take place in the near future. Your interval in the aim of killing Rāvana. Śrīma is meant to be a cause for the same. The death of Rāvana is imminent. He will come and carry Śrīma away. So entrust Sītā with me. I will keep her carefully. Make a phantom (Māyā) Śrīma and keep her here, instead of the real Śrīma. After the killing of Rāvana, when Śrīma enters a proof of her death, you tell Śrīma about the event of killing Rāvana. You can agree to it. Fire god by his power of contemplation, created a phantom Śrīma, exactly like the real Śrīma in shape and figure and nature and placing her beside Rāma, he disappeared with the real Śrīma. Even Lakṣmaṇa was not aware of this fact. The real Śrīma was under the care of Fire god till the moment of the test of chastity of Śrīma by fire, after the killing of Rāvana. During the time of entering the fire the illusionary Śrīma vanished in the fire and the real Śrīma came out. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

6) Sītā killed Saḥasramukha. See under Saḥasramukha Rāvana.

7) Abandonment of Sītā. See under Śrīma, Para 31.

8) Sītā in the hermitage of Viśvāmitra. Abandoned Sītā, who was pregnant, wandered about in the forest and at last reached the hermitage of Viśvāmitra, who gave her protection and shelter. The story of an occurrence at this time is given in Kathāsamhitāgāra, Aśaṅkāravatīlambaka, Tārāṅga 1.

The other hermits did not like Viśvāmitra's action of giving shelter to Sītā. They said Sītā is impure. Otherwise her husband would not have abandoned her. By her association we also would become sinners. As the hermit Viśvāmitra is kind, he will not cast her away especially when she is pregnant. So the best thing for all of us, is to go to another hermitage." This murmuring of the hermits reached the ears of Viśvāmitra. He said "She is pure and chaste. I know it with my inward eyes." But they did not believe it. Then Śrīma said, "Lord! You can test my chastity in whatever way you like, and if I am found to be impure you may cut off my head."

The hermits tested Sītā in the Śītimahasana (a divine lake near the hermitage of Viśvāmitra) and were convinced that she was chaste and pure. (See under Tīthibhānasī to know the greatness of this divine lake).

5) Once Siṭā was spending miserable days in the hermitage of Vālmiki. Her matrimonial life was a hell. Is there any special reason for misery? Yes. It is the curse of a bird. Once Seṣa told this story, of the curing of Siṭā by a bird, to the hermit Vatsiyānaya. That story is given below:

The event took place when Siṭā was a young girl in the palace of Janaka. One day while Siṭā was playing in the garden she saw two parrots, male and female, which talked well. The spouses were delightfully engaged in love-making. As soon as the couple saw Siṭā they flew up to a tree and sang thus: "A handsome king will take birth on the earth. His name will be Śrī Rāma. His wife's name will be Siṭā. Their wedded life will be happy.

Hearing the song, Siṭā thought that they were some divine persons, and asked her maid to catch them and give them food. The maids caught the parrots and brought them before Siṭā. She asked the birds, "Don't fear. Who are you? Where do you come from? Who is that Rāma? Who is Siṭā? How did you come to know of them? Tell me all. I will not hurt you!

The bird replied: "In the forest there is a hermit named Vālmiki. We live in his beautiful garden. The hermit has composed the story Rāmaṇya, which is yet to happen, and has taught it to his disciples. We have heard those songs. Having heard them over and over we also have learned them by heart. We will tell you who Rāma is and who Jānaki is and what would happen to her who lives happily with him. Hear it! Saying thus the parrots passed on to the story of Rāma. Due to the sacrifice of the hermit Ṛṣayāniga, Mahāvīra incarnerated as four persons, of whom Rāma the eldest, with his younger brother and Vīśvāmitra, would come to Mithilā. He would draw the bow and marry Siṭā... Siṭā was extremely pleased with the sweet song of the birds and asked them so many questions repeatedly with curiosity. Seeing the excitement of the queen the parrots understood that she was Siṭā herself. They asked her, "Beautiful girl! Who are you? Why are you so much interested in knowing about Rāma? What is your name?" Siṭā disclosed everything about her to the birds, and said "I am the same Siṭā, the daughter of Jānakan. Dating with you will let you go only on the day when that handsome prince Rāma comes and marries me. Your conversation has made me so curious. You can live comfortably in my house, eating sweetmeats."

The birds were in great fear when they heard this. They looked at each other and replied to Siṭā. "Good child! We birds fly about in the sky and perch on trees and bushes. Houses are not comfortable to us. Moreover I am pregnant. After my delivery in our own place I will come here. You need not have any doubt." The female parrot said thus. But Siṭā did not let them go. Then the male parrot prayed humbly with anxiety. "Siṭā, allow her to go. Why do you detain my beautiful wife? Allow us to have our own way in the forest. My wife is pregnant. After the confinement both of us will come back." Siṭā said "Let her live with you. You may go as you please."

The parrots were in great sorrow. If they had not made any noise on that tree this detention would not have occurred. These pitiable supplications had no effect on Siṭā. The male bird cried to Siṭā to let him take his mate along with him, and beat his head on the ground. Siṭā was adamant. The female bird, filled with misery and anger cursed Siṭā thus: "You have separated me from my husband. I am pregnant, otherwise you too be separated from your husband when you become pregnant". When she had finished saying, she fell on the ground and wriggled and died. An aerial chariot came down to the earth from heaven for the soul of that bird which had died exalting and glorifying Śrī Rāma. The soul of the bird got into the chariot and went up to heaven. The male bird, being unable to hear the death of his beloved wife, dipped himself in the Gaṅga. Before his death he cried out in anger. "I must be born in the city of Rāma. By my words, this Siṭā should be separated from her husband and fall into misery." He died in the Ganges in Krodha (anger) and fear. So he took rebirth with the name Krodhāna as a washerman by caste and profession. It was this washerman who spoke words of calumny about Siṭā. Due to the calumny of this washerman, Śrī Rāma abandoned Siṭā and she had to take shelter in the hermitage of Vālmiki.\n (Padma Purāṇa, Pāţāla Khaṇḍa, Chapter 57).

8) The end of Siṭā. (See under Rāma, Para 33).

Siṭā II. A river. Merūn is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 102, that Merūn is the hermit Mārkaṇḍeya saw this river also in the stomach of child Mukunda (Śrī Kṛṣṇa). This is one of the seven branches of the river Ganges. (See under Sīndhu).

Siṭāpātana. A ferocious she-devil. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Verse 28) This terrible monster causes horror in women.

Siṭāśī. A river flowing through Śaketvīpa and famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bīruṇ Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 32).

Siṭīkaṇṭha. A nāga which was in the company of the nāgas that came to lead the soul of Babāhradārāma to Pārāśa. (Musala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

Siṭīkṣā. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. (Sāya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 61).

Siṭā (RUDRA). One of the Trinity.

1) Birth. The seers or spiritual giants of India imagined three forms to God, dividing all the activities into three departments, i.e. creation, sustenance and destruction or annihilation. Brahma, for creation. Vīnu, for sustenance and Śiva, for annihilation - they are the Trinity.

Vīnu was born first. Brahma next and Śiva last. The essence of Indian spiritualistic thought is that these three visible forms of God will, at the close of the Kālpa cease to be and become one with the cosmic power, and that the Trinity will be born again at the commencement of the Kālpa and will take up their respective functions.

The dominant quality or attribute of Śiva is Tamas (darkness). Many stories, with slight variations, are told in the various Purāṇas about the birth of Śiva. Some of the more important stories are summarised below.

(i) At the beginning of the Kālpa, while Brahma was meditating upon the birth of a son like himself, a child deep blue in colour, appeared on his lap, and the child began running about crying aloud. Brahma asked the child why it was crying; then the child asked Brahma to give him a name. Though Brahma told him that his name was Rudra and asked him not to cry, he cried seven times more. Then Brahma gave him another seven names, and for the total eight names eight Mārtis (form) wives and children were allotted. Bhava, Śarva, Kāna, Paśupati, Bhima, Ugra and Mahādeva were the additional seven names, and Sun, Water, Earth, Wind, Fire, Sky, the Brahmā who has taken dīkṣā and Moon were the eight Mārtis and the presiding deities allotted to them. To these deities the following works were also allotted, i.e. Svācaraka, Uṣā, Vīkṣea, Śivā, Śvāha, Daśa, Dīkṣā and Rohini. The world is full with their progenies. Śanāi cara, Śukra, Lobitaśa, Mana-java, Skanda, Sarga, Santana and Rūdhra are the sons of the above eight wives. This Rudra married Sañj, daughter of Dākaprājajātā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 8).

(ii) Brahmā whose predominant quality or attribute is rajas was born from the navel of Mahāviṣṇu. From the Centre of the brow of Brahmā was born Rudra of Tānasei quality. Brahmā, by the power of his tapas, acquired the power of creation and created a red-coloured world by his attribute of rajas. The very same world is annihilated by Rudra at the close of the Kalpa period. (Devi Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

(iii) From the wrath of Brahmā was born rudra, from his lap Nārada, from his finger Dākṣa, from his mind Śiva, and from his head Āgna and from his finger a daughter called Vīrāṇi. (Devi Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

(iv) Four ‘mental sons’ of Brahmā Sanaika, Sanandana, Sanatana and Sanatkumāra showed disinclination to beget progeny, Brahmā got angry at this attitude of the four sons and from the centre of his brow was born a body blue and white in colour, and he, in tears, requested Brahmā for names and stations. Blessing him by saying ‘mā rudra’ (do not cry) Brahmā allotted him names and stations. He became famous by the name Rudra. He was also given eleven more names by Brahmā as follows: Manyu, Mu, Mahīni, Mahān, Śiva, Rūdhrvajā, Ugrayatas, Bhava, Kāme, Vāmandeva and Dhṛavrata. These names are otherwise famous as follows: Aja, Ecakapa, Abhirudhnya, Tvasa, Rudra, Hara, Sarman, Tryambaka, Aparajita, Jāna and Tābhuva. The eleven Rudras were also allotted the following eleven positions by Brahmā i.e. heart, the five organs of the body, vital force (Pṛīṇa) wind, fire, water, earth, sun and moon. Rudra has eleven wives, called Dhi, Vṛti, Uṣana, Umā, Niyuta, Sarpī, Īla, Ambikā, Āravati, Sudhā and Dīkṣā. Rudra, under the name Śiva, is considered to be the third of the trinity. The drūtine is that as long as time is real, deluge, or annihilation does not take place. Therefore, Rudraśāntā (annihilation by Rudra) may be taken to mean only as the beginning of new creation.

(v) At the commencement of Yuga (era) Brahmā was born from the navel of Viṣṇu. Two asuras called Madhu and Kaitabha rushed up to kill Brahmā, and from the brows of Viṣṇu, who got angry towards the asuras was born Śiva holding in his hands Śūla (the three-pronged trident). (Vana Purāṇa, Chapter 12).

2) Family life. Śiva has two wives, Gaṅga and Pārvatī. (See under Gaṅga and Pārvatī). He lodges Gaṅga on his head. Umā, Kartikeya, Gauri, Kālī, Haimavatī Īśvari, Śivā, Bhavāni, Rudrāni, Sarvāni, Sarvavangalā Apanā, Pārvatī, Durgā, Mātē, Īśānī, Ambikā, Arvā, Dākṣamāni, Girī, Manakāma, Kamdeo, Kārūma, Cānikā and Bhairavā—these are synonyms of Pārvatī. Śiva lives on the top of the Mahāmeru, where there are nine cities. At the centre is Brahmā's Manovati; exactly to the east of it is Indra's Amarāvatī; at the south-eastern corner is Agni's Tejovati; on the south is Yama's Samyamani; at the south-western corner is Kṛṣṇāmaṇi of Nīrītī, on the west is Varuṇa's Sraddhāvatī, at the north-western corner is Gandhavati of Vāyu, on the north is Kubera's Mahādāvā, at the north-eastern corner is Śiva’s Yatavati—this is the set of the nine cities.

Two sons called Subrahmanyu and Gaṇapati were born to Śiva of Pārvati, and they are his actual sons. Some other sons also were born to him in his assumed forms and by other women. Such have been Indrajit, Hanumān and others. For details see the respective words. (Devi Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha, 9th Skandha; Kāhāsārisagāra, Kāthāmukhalamba).

3) Internations, Śiva has taken several partial incarnations, the chief of which are given below.

(i) Durvāsas. (See under Durvāsas).

(ii) Viṣṇu (Monkey). Śiva, Pārvati and their attendants like Nandikēvara once transformed themselves into monkeys and played about on the Himalayas. Raṇava, who came there on the occasion ridiculed Nandikēvara, who, in great rage, cursed Raṇava that monkeys would destroy him. Being thus cursed Raṇava raised Kaliṣā from its foundations and played with her. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(iii) Śakti. Śiva incarnated himself as Śakti, son of Vaśiṣṭha and was bewitched by Kālmāśāpāda, who took the form of a Rākṣas. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

(iv) Varuṇa. Śiva once assumed the form of Varuṇa and conducted a yajñas which was attended by the Vedas in assumed forms. (M.B. Anuṭāsanas Parva, Chapter 85).

4) Jñāna granted by Śiva. The Purāṇas refer to various persons, who had earned boons from him and others who attained heaven on account of their devotion for him. The following are important among such persons.

(i) Simhasvakapā (Skanda Purāṇa, Aṣura Kāṇḍa).

(ii) Rukmi—(Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(iii) Śāna—(Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(iv) Budakṣita—(Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(v) Vīrāṇa—(Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(vi) Raṣṭevi—(Kāhāsārisagāra, Lāvaṇakālamba, Tarātīga).

(vii) Indrajit—(Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(x) Asṣī girl—(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 6).

(xi) Prabhāśāhitā—(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 214, Verse 20).

(xii) Śvetaki—(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 41).

(xiii) Jārāsandhi—(M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 64).

(xiv) Bāgāvāra—(M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Southern text).

(xv) Mahākāla—(Vana Purāṇa, Chapter 83, Verse 132).

(xvi) Sagara—(Vana Purāṇa, Chapter 106, Verse 15).
5) Assets of Siva. Siva possesses a mass of matted hair, red in colour. It is known as Kappara also, and hence he is called Kappard as well. Siva is also stated to be Agni. He has three eyes, the third one on the forehead being all fire. Siva is called Trinetra, Phalanetera, Aggasmi because of the more facts. It is only just and proper that Siva, who is the destroyer of all things should have relation to Agni. Siva, the all-destructor, carries the Sula in his hands always. Another weapon is named Pinaka, and therefore Siva is called Pinakaprapati (he who holds Pinaka in his hands.) Both Siva and his vehicle, the Bull, are white in colour. The white colour indicates the justice observed in the process of annihilation. Siva has been described as possessing two, four, eight and ten hands. Besides the Pinaka, he holds in his hands the club called Khadadaga, the bow called Ajaviga, a deer, beads, skull, damaru (a musical instrument) and many other sacred articles. Galiga and Candra (moon) dwell on his head, and he is, therefore, known as Galigadvaha and Candracidada also. A bunch of skulls adorn his neck. Siva wears the skin of the leopard for cloth and uses the skin of the elephant for blanket. All over his limbs snakes are worn as ornaments.

The Puranas contain stories as to how Siva earned most of the above assets. The wives of many Raja felt enmoured of Siva, who once appeared in the garb of a beggar. The Raja, who got enraged with Siva on account, decided to kill him. From the pit they dug on the ground, a tiger emerged. Siva killed it and wore its skin. A deer followed the tiger from the pit. Siva held it in his left hand. The next to emerge out of the pit was a red-hot iron rod. Siva took it in his hands as a weapon. Lastly snakes came out of the pit and Siva wore them on his body. On another occasion an asura called Gaya assumed the form of an elephant and chased the muni, who took refuge in a Siva temple. Siva appeared, killed the elephant and wore its skin on his body. Since Siva wore snakes as ear-rings he came to be known as Nagaakumada. Brahman ordered that Rudra should create people and accordingly he created people. But, his creations were very cruel beings. Brahman feared that they would create the other elements. Therefore, Brahman, who trembled with fear, asked Rudra to retire from the act of creation and to train himself to do creation in the proper manner as ordained. Accordingly, Rudra started practicing tapas.
Brahmā when he created the universe also laid down laws to keep living beings in the path of righteousness. But, the asuras did not conform to these laws. So, the mahārājas decided that there should be some other means to instruct the asuras. They conducted a Brahma-vajya at the Humilāyas. A terrible Jin (Evil Spirit) emerged from the sacrificial pit. At the emergence of the Jin the earth shook; the great sea grew wild with waves and eddies. Lightning and shooting stars appeared and branches of trees were torn asunder. A vicious whirlwind swept the ten regions. All living beings trembled at the sight of the Jin.

Brahmā appeared to the frightened mahārājas and told them that it was not a Jin, but only the sword for the destruction of the asura tribe. Siva took the sword in his hand, and, as soon as he touched it, he became possessed of four hands. “Siva, whose head touched the sun, who had the third eye and whose mouth flames of fire emerged, who changed himself to various colours like blue, white and red, who wore deer skin with golden spots, who had on his forehead an eye as effulgent as the Sun—such Siva took in his hands the sword and raised his shield he swirled the sword in various directions.”

When Siva, who thus became terrible, walked with the sword amidst the asura army the entire asura forces were annihilated and the Devas came out victorious.

7) Dying deeds of Sīva.

(i) Clash With Viṣṇu. Though there were differences of opinion between Siva and Viṣṇu on many occasions, on very few occasions did they become enemies. The Purāṇas refer to two such important clashes. One has reference to a direct fight Siva fought with Viṣṇu and the other is about Siva’s fight with Nārāyaṇa, an incarnation of Viṣṇu.

There was no reason for the direct fight between Siva and Viṣṇu. The Devas wanted to test who was the more powerful of the two. Siva or Viṣṇu, and they told Brahmā about the idea. By carrying tales to them, one against the other, Brahmā made Siva and Viṣṇu mutual enemies. The enmity led to a fight between the two. Viśvakarman made a bow for each of the contestants. In the fight between the two Siva got defeated, Siva, who got angry at his temporary defeat presented his bow and arrow to Devarāja, King of Vīdēha. It was then, bow which Śrī Rāma broke at the wedding of Sītā in a later period. As soon as the fight was over the Devas realised that Viṣṇu was greater than Siva. After the fight Viṣṇu gave his bow to Rekha, the Bhīravaguni. Jamadagni got it from Rekha, and he gave it to Pararājana. It had a bow that Pararājana confronted Śrī Rāma on his way back after wedding Sītā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Valakhāla, Canto 75).

The following story is related in the Amulāsana Parva of Mahābhārata; about the fight between Nārāyaṇa, incarnation of Viṣṇu and Siva. Siva, in great fury, threw his Śūla into the Yajña hall of Dakṣa, and the Śūla after reducing the Yajña, to ashes, hit the breast of Nārāyaṇa, who was doing asanas in Badarikāśrama. Nārāyaṇa raised the sound ‘Ham’ as a result of which the Śūla returned to Siva’s hands. Women, in great anger, rushed forward to Nārāyaṇa. Nārāyaṇa placed his hands on Siva’s throat with the result that it became dark in colour. Then the Siva came to be known as Stīkapūra or Nārāyaṇa plucked a blade of grass and recited some mantras. It became a paraṇa (axe). He threw it at Siva, who broke it into pieces, which acted as给他 the additional name of Karpūparanu. The fighting became fierce and the world began burning. Fire refused to receive offerings made; the skies could not contain the Vedas; Rajas and Tamas attacked Devas; the earth shook; places became unknown. Brahmā fell down from his seat; sky came down; oceans got dry; the Himalayas crumbled. On the continuous appearance of such ill omens Brahmā and all the Devas came to the battlefield. Saluting Rudra Brahmā told him: “Oh! Lord! Let good happen to the world. In the interests of the welfare of the world, you would please give up arms. We the Namānārāyaṇas are upholders of righteousness; they are the incarnations of the indestructible and supreme sages. I am born from their pleasure. You were born from their wrath.”

On hearing these words of Brahmā Siva cooled down.

(ii) Rāstrēt Rāmādēva bedless (limbless). See under Rāmādēva, Parva 4.

(iii) Bār Gaṅgā an lefthead. See under Gaṅgā.

(iv) Custared Kālakīṭa Owing to the curse of Durvīśas the Devas were subjected to symptoms of old age, and to produce amṛta (nectar) as remedy for this unfortunate development, the churning of Kālībhi (ocean of milk) was started. Vāsuki, the snake, was used as cord to rotate Mount Mandara which was used as the churning rod. When the churning became very intense, immense huge Kālakīṭa deriving out of Vāsuki’s mouth. (Another view is held that Kālakīṭa rose out of the milk-sea). On the emergence of the deadly poison the asuras ran off in great fear, the Devas got bewildered, Bāli and Sugīrva too got frightened; and without exhibiting his fright Viṣṇu covered his face; on the whole it appeared as though the entire world would be reduced to ashes.

At this critical moment, Siva, reputed for his reckless daring, put all the Kālakīṭa into his mouth. Frightened at it Pārvāti held Siva’s throat by her hands so that the poison did not enter his stomach. At the same time Mahāviṣṇu covered with his hands Siva’s mouth so that the poison was not spit out. Kālakīṭa thus prevented from going down into the stomach or being vomited from Siva’s throat got itself digested in the throat giving it a blue colour. Thus did Siva become Nilakatā (of the blue throat). Viṣṇu and Pārvāti who were affected by the flames of the poison became Nilavarna and Kāli respectively. (Kamba Rāmāyana, Yuddhākāṇḍa).

(v) Dāsyopet Dāka’s pujā. See under Dāka, Para 3.

(vi) Fought Sakhādāta. (See under Tulasi, Para 5).

(vii) Burned the Tripuras. (See under Tripura).

(viii) Fought Sūrya. Siva once plucked out Brahmā’s head (See under Kālīpī 1), and Brahmā cursed Siva that he should beg for food with that head (skull) in his hands. This fierce curse of Brahmā affected Siva so much that, in uncontrollable wrath, he beat whomever he met. Thousands of Devas and others were killed. Sūrya, who relied not these atrocities of Siva confronted him with out-stretched hands. Siva held on one hand of his, both the hands of Sūrya from the fingers of which blood began to flow. Siva turned Sūrya round and round by his hands with the result that the hands of Śūrya became short. When Śūrya became completely drenched in blood, Śiva, laughing, went on the other side when Śūrya, laughingly challenged him again to fight. Greatly enraged by the challenge, Śiva fasted him on the face with the result he lost all his teeth. Also he fell down unconscious. As Śūrya fell thus Bhaga looked with fierce eyes at Śiva, who then struck the former on his face, both the eyes of Bhaga fell down and the teeth returned. Then, the Adityas, under the leadership of Indra ran off to the ten regions along with the Maruts and Agni. Only prominent asuras like Prahlāda remained on the scene. They saluted Śiva. Śiva surveyed the yāga hall, the Devas and the asuras with his three eyes. All of them then ran away to different places. Śiva looked at the three Agnis with his three eyes and they were reduced to ashes.

When Śiva’s anger subsided Śūrya was installed in his former form. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 5).

(x) Made nine Indras Pāṇḍavas. The Pāṇḍavas, in their former life, were Indras. (Adi Purāṇa, Chapter 199).

The Devas once conducted at Nāla, Śvāmbara, a lengthy yāga. When Yama was the manager. In the absence of Yama there was no death on earth. Thus, human beings also, like the Devas, became Amartya (deathless). Alarmed at this the Devas submitted their grievance to Brahmā who pacified them by saying that Yama would return as soon as the yajña was over and then men will, as usual be subjected to the process of death. And the Devas returned to Indra. Through the scene of their yajña, when they saw a woman,hurstrous as fire, descending the step of Gaṅgā to carry water. She was robbing and each drop of tear that fell into the waters of the river transformed itself into a lotus flower. As deputed by the Devas Indra approached the woman to get facts from her. Indra asked her who she was and why she was weeping. The woman answered him not, but walked in silence, to the source of the Gaṅgā. Indra followed her. When they had thus walked some distance Śiva and Pārvatī were found in the forest at a game of dice, and Indra, afraid of Śiva, ran away. But, Śiva called him back and asked him to enter the cave there. When Indra did so after removing the mountain at the entrance of the cave he saw four Indras sitting there. They were called Viśvabhusā, Bhudevā, Sibī and Śaṇṭi. The woman whom Indra bad followed was Śīrdevī. Śiva blessed that the five Indras, in their next birth, would wed Śīrdevī. When the Indras saw Mahāviṃśa after this he also blessed them, and promised them that he would incarnate and help them when they were born as men in their next life. Then Viśvabhusā plucked a black and a white hair and put them on each. The black hair was born as Śrī Kṛṣṇa in Devakī’s womb and the white hair as Balabhadrārama in the womb of Rohpiṇī.

(xi) Kiṭṭaṇjñayā. Arjuna once did tapas to Śiva, who appeared to him in the garb of a hunter in the forest and presented to him the Pāṇḍavā arrow. (For details see under Arjuna.)

(xii) Fought with Mahāśiva. (See under Mahāśiva.)

(xiii) Fought with Viśvāsura. (See under Viśvāsura.)

(xiv) Burnt Himavat. Śiva once did tapas on the top of Himavat when Pārvatī came behind him and covered his eyes with her hands. At once darkness enveloped the whole world, and when people suffered in the absence of day-light, he opened his third eye. Himavat began getting burnt by the fire emitted by Śiva’s eye. Pārvatī got alarmed at this and woke Śiva up. He closed his third eye and Himavat resumed its former shape. (Anuśāsana Purāṇa, Chapter 104).

8) Worship of Śiva. Innumerable people in India worship Śiva and they follow different forms or systems of worship. There are various forms of worship which follow the Vedas and which do not as also forms which are śāstik and which are not. The form of worship called Parāṣāpadam (Pārāṣāpadam) is a very ancient one. It is believed that the parāṣāpadam once honoured and afterwards opposed the Vedas. The Śiva linga at the place called Gudamillam is supposed to be as old as the second century B.C.

One of the many symbols, which represent Śiva, Sivalīga is the most important. They are of two kinds, the movable and the immovable. The movable are those which appear by themselves or installed in temples. The immovable are those made of earth, stone, timber, gems etc. There are also temporary lingas, which are placed on stakes of various shapes. Lingas are made of he-stones and stools of silkworm cocoons. There are also various types of lingas, indicative of the different attributes of Śiva; for example Lingodbhava, Candrakavihara, Kandra, Umaśabita etc. Kāṃkṣakā, Gaṇjā, Kaḷaṅga, Vīṣṇu-adhāsā etc. represent the Lord in his fierce aspects. Śiva is also represented in poses of blessing Candra, Viṣṇu, Nārāyana, Viṣṇu-śalāsā and the like. He is also represented in various poses of dancing. Dakṣināmūrti is represented in four forms, i.e. Viśvākhāna Jñāna, Viṣṇu and Viṣṇudhīra. Bīkīsātra, Kapalādhāra, Gangādhāra, Archanādeva Viṣṇu-bāhavāhana and Viṣṇu-bāhavāsā are other forms of Śiva. Rarely is he depicted in the form of Sādāīva, Mahāśēva, Ekaśa-aruddha Viṣṇu-śalāsā and Mūrtyādhiyā. A large number of śāstras descriptive of these forms have been written. Gaṇapati occupies the most prominent place among Deva connected with Śiva. Gaṇapati came to be worshipped from 6-7 centuries B.C. His present idols might have been made after this period.

There are many temples dedicated to Gaṇapati in South India. Chief among the idols are Śrīpātrī (probable name Śrīpekā come to the left side and vyāmbalī come to the right side). Gaṇapati is a physical aspect of Śiva. Being the God who removes obstacles in the devotee’s path, Gaṇapati is called Vīghnendrā. The universe is contained in his big stomach.

Next to Gaṇapati in importance is Subrahmānya. He is worshipped in South India only. Kumbāra, Murukā, Kāruṇikēya, Skanda, Arunēka, Gubha, etc. are some of his popular synonyms. There are a number of Subrahmānya temples in Tamil Nadu, many of them on the tops of hills. In North India Subrahmānya temples are rare. But, books written during the Sangha period go to prove that Subrahmānya was worshipped in South India from very olden times. He is depicted in many postures, sitting, with six faces, with only one face, with two hands, with four hands, with wife, wearing the sacred thread etc. Now, about Śaktī idols. Śaktī is the Devi closest to Śiva. In South India there are special Śaktī temples called Śaktīśālmālayas. Durgā is the most important among the manifestations of Śakti. There are idols of Durgā as standing in the lotus flower and also as mounted on the lion. Āgamas refer to nine kinds or forms of Durgā i.e. Nilakāṇṭhā, Kṣemasākṣi, Haridasidhī, Kaudrā, Varā, Agni, Jayā, Vindhyavāsini, and Rupāsākṣi. Durgā’s most terrible form is as Mahāsūrya-mardini, found at Mahālakṣamalā, Ellora and other places. Durgā is also called Cāndikā and Kālayantā. Durgā is worshipped as Nandā, Amā, Rājamātrī etc.

9) Śiva’s life-period. Thousand Caturyugas constitute one day of Brahmā. According to the Purāṇas fourteen Indras fall dead from heaven during the life time of one Brahmā. Two such life times of Brahmā form one life time of Viśnu; at the end of the period he too will expire. Śiva’s life time is double that of Viśnu, according to Devi Bhāgavata, 5th Skanda. (For details see under Manvantaras.)

10) Śiva and creation of the universe. See under Creation.

11) Māyā Śiva. (See under Māyā Īsā.)

12) Saharānandā (thousand names) of Śiva. The thousand names of Śiva are mentioned mainly in Chhāt 285 of Śatī Parva and Chapter 17 of Anuśāsa Parva of Mahābhārata. There are substantial differences between the twain but some names are common.

13) Āśvathāmā and Śiva. (See under Āśvathāmā Para 6.)

14) Rudras. The Ekādśī Rudradras, viz. Mrgavādha, Sarpa, Nirṛti, Ājakāpat, Vibhūdhya, Pināki, Kīvra, Kapāli, Śrībhaga and Bhāgara are the sons of Śiva. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65.)

15) Bhairavā (Shhet worn by Śiva) The Purāṇas contain many references to the great power of Śiva-bhairavā. The following story about even Viśnu turning out to be a devotee of Śiva on account of the sanctity of Śiva-bhāma is related in Chapter 101, Pātālakappā of Padma Purāṇa.

In the beginning or during the Brahmapralaya (deluge) Mahāviṣṇu was lying in the great waters of the deluge. Out of both of Viṣṇu hundred universes each and on both sides of his feet and at the centre of his head twenty universes each remained attached. One universe flowed as a gem on Viṣṇu’s nose. Mahārāja like Lomasāda did tapas seated on his navel. Meanwhile Viṣṇu sat in deep meditation ready for creation. But, he did not find anything and began, therefore, abounding. Then appeared a extra mundane light at which he got frightened and closed his eyes. Śiva, relating in both his hands a garland each made of a crore of universes appeared before Viṣṇu. He then stood up and enquired of the visitor who he was. Śiva exhibited his form. Śiva told Viṣṇu that he had not attained sufficient wisdom for creation and also advised him to achieve enough knowledge by first taking the Varuṇa bath and then the Bhuma bath. To this Viṣṇu answered by saying that there was nowhere enough for him to bathe, and he was closely surrounded by universes, sat in water. But, it came only up to his thighs. Then Śiva said laughingly that there was enough water for Viṣṇu to bathe and cast a glance at him with his (Śiva) eye on the forehead and also his index finger at which he got frightened and closed his eyes. Then Śiva said as follows:-"Oh! Viṣṇu! There is deep water, you may bathe in it. But Viṣṇu could not get into the tremendous pool created on Śiva’s lap. So, he requested Śiva for a passage to get into the pool. Śiva "Oh! Viṣṇu! Before this even though you sit in water, one crore yojanas in depth, it came only up to your thighs. But, now though you are on your legs you say you cannot enter the water. Look here, the water comes only up to my thighs. You may descend into it, I shall see to it that you can step into the water. A Vedic saying I recite will serve as the step."

Viṣṇu — Nobody can step on sound. One may ascend on what is material, a solid form; but, how could one step on that which is formless?

Śiva—Why can you not get hold of that which is and ascend? You receive this great Veda. Viṣṇu received it; but it appeared that his hands were not strong enough to hold it. Śiva smiled at the inability of Viṣṇu and asked him to get down into water by the steps made of Veda and when Viṣṇu ascended the steps into the water, it came only up to his thighs. He had his bath and then asked Śiva what he should do next. Śiva—"What do you feel in your mind? Is it that you do not feel anything"

Viṣṇu—"I feel nothing.

Śiva—If you get sanctified by bhāma-bhāma you will receive the ultimate knowledge. I shall give you the bhrāma.

Śiva took a pinch of bhrāma from his breast and chanting the Gāyatrī and paṭeśakāra (Om nama śiśvā) mantras sprinkled it all over the body of Viṣṇu. He also said to Viṣṇu, "You live, you meditate, now what do you feel in your mind?" Viṣṇu meditated whereupon he saw a very bright light in his heart. When he told what a light was, he saw it by him the latter said that his knowledge was not mature enough and asked him to eat some bhrāma so that it might become perfect. Viṣṇu accordingly consumed the bhrāma, and lo! he, who was till then red-blue in colour became as white as pearl. He began to be called Sūklaśvārya (white in colour) from that day onwards. But, Viṣṇu felt happy and not having seen Śiva, who asked the former what it was he saw in his mind just then. Answering that he saw the blinding form of Śiva before Viṣṇu felt at the latter’s feet. To Śiva’s query as to what boon he desired to have, Viṣṇu replied that he wanted to become a devotee of Śiva and because of the greatness of the bhrāma Viṣṇu thenceforward became a devotee of Śiva.

16) Śivalīṅga (Phalas). Worship of Śivalīṅga is a popular practice in India. The Purāṇas contain a number of stories about the importance Sivalīṅga achieved so as to make it an object of worship. Three of the more important stories are given below:

(1) Śiva wandered about the world lamenting over the death of Śāileśvī at the Vaiśāva and followed him with his erotic arrows to exploit Śiva’s sorry predicament. During his wanderings Śiva once came to the Vindhyā mountain. Kāmadeva followed him there too and began attacking Śiva with his arrows and to escape from the fierce onslaught Śiva took refuge in the terrible Dāru forest. There Maharājas with their wives lived. Śiva saluted them and requested for alms. But, they only kept mum. They did not like their wives saluting Śiva. Śiva went about the āsās and all the women except Arundhati and Anāśyā, followed him overcome by lust for him. Enraged at this, muni like Bhārgava and Āṅgiras cursed Śiva that his phallus should drop to the ground. Immediately it fell down and Śiva disappeared. The phallus rent asunder the earth and rent to pieces the universe also. The whole universe shook at which Brahmā met Viṣṇu at Pātāla and enquired of him the reason for the universal upheaval. Viṣṇu answered him that the world shook because of the weight of Śiva's phallus, which the mahārajas had caused to be dropped. Then Brahmā, along with Viṣṇu, came to the spot where the phallus lay. At the sight of the limitless phallus Viṣṇu, in great wonder, descended to Pātāla mounted on Garuḍa. Brahmā, on his plane, toured above. Both Viṣṇu and Brahmā returned to earth, having failed in their attempt to find the end of the phallus. They then praised Śiva, who appeared to them. They requested him to take back his phallus from the earth. Śiva insisted that he would do so only if the Devas agreed to worship his phallus. Viṣṇu agreed to the suggestion. Brahmā took the phallus, golden brassy in colour. Thereafter Mahāviṣṇu created the four castes and various vātraic texts for each of the castes to worship the phallus. The four texts are known as Śalvan, Pārpata, Kādāmpanam and Kāpālikam. After making the above arrangements Brahmā and Viṣṇu returned. Śiva took back his phallus. (Vaimana Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

(ii) Eighty-eight thousand Bālākhyās were born from the mind of Brahmā. They emaciated their bodies by constant baths, fasting and worship of Śiva. Though they worshipped Śiva thus for one thousand divya years, he did not appear in front of them. After that, when Pārvatī was travelling by sky one day, the latter saw and took pity on the Bālākhyās and told Śiva thus: “These mahārajas are suffering like anything. For your sake, you should put an end to their sufferings. Has their evil fate no end? They are reduced to mere skin and bones, and yet they are denied realisation.” Smilingly Śiva told Pārvatī as follows: “You do not know the real cause of their suffering. These people do not understand righteousness; they are not free from ignorance and anger. They are mere fools.” At these words of Śiva, Pārvatī told him thus: “If things be as you have said please show me their nature, I feel interested. Then Śiva asked Pārvatī to remain where she was, telling her that he would go to the Bālākhyās and show her how they behaved. Accordingly Śiva went to them. Śiva approached the Bālākhyās in the guise of a handsome youth, wearing the Vamana fastivalgarl on his head, holding the alms bowl in his hand and completely in the nude and requested for alms. The Womenfolk of the Adivatins were much attracted by the handsome youth and came to him with a lot of fruits, roots etc. by way of alms. Śiva wished them good and Pārvatī expired her smiling lord from her seat. After giving him alms the women spoke to him as follows: “Oh ! anchorite, what penance are you practising? You have no clothes on you, but you wear Vamana. You are a handsome sannyāsa. If you have no objection, please tell us about you.” The sannyāsa (Śiva) answered them by saying that his was a special case of sannyāsa and cannot be imitated by others. Especially in the presence of so many others it could not be revealed. So, you may please go. But, the women said that they wished very much to hear the secret, and they caught hold of his hands saying ‘Come.’

The women were overcome by lust and one of them caught hold of his neck, another of his hands, another of his knees, another of his hair and yet another of his waist. Seeing the excitement of their wives the mahārajas cried, ‘Strike him’ and struck down his phallus with sticks and stones. As soon as the phallus was thus felled down, Śiva disappeared from the spot and returned to Kailāśa with Pārvatī.

When the phallus fell down the whole universe shook and the mahārajas were alarmed. A very intelligent mahāraja among them said:—‘We know not the facts about the great ascetic. Let us take refuge in Brahmā. He may know the facts.” Accordingly the mahārajas went to Brahmā, who found fault with their ignorance and indiscretion and asked them to shed their anger and please Śiva. Accordingly they went to Kailāśa and praised Śiva, who appeared to them and told them as follows:— ‘You may now return. The phallus will belong to you. I shall be pleased if you would duly install it. Nothing will be impossible to those who worship my phallus with devotion. Even sins consciously committed will be removed by the worship of my phallus. You install the phallus you struck down in the great pond of Sannīthī. That will achieve for you all your desires. Even the Lord will worship it under the name Śikāra. Being installed at Śikāvarā it will be known as Śikāvarā also. Constant meditation upon Śikāra will remove all sins. The sight of Śikāra will bring about salvation.”

After this the mahārajas, along with Brahmā, returned to Dāru forest to carry the phallus to Sannīthī. But, they could not move it even by an iota. They returned again to Kailāśa, but could not see Śiva there. When Brahmā sat in meditation for sometime to know where Śiva was, he saw in his mind Śiva, in the guise of an elephant, standing in the stream praised by munīs. Immediately Brahmā and others went there, but missed Śiva there. But Pārvatī directed them to find them amara (nector). When they had consumed the nector they saw Śiva standing in the stream, and they spoke about their difficulties to him.

Śiva, in the guise of the elephant, accompanied them to the Dāru forest where he, in sport, took the phallus by his proboscis and installed it on the banks of the stream. All those who witnessed the installation attained ultimate realisation. Upon the phallus thus installed Brahmā built another phallus with stone. After a period that phallus became one with the effulgence of the first phallus. Those who saw that also achieved ultimate realisation. Immediately Brahmā built, for the pleasure of the Devas, seven phalluses one upon the other, and each attained ultimate realisation by smearing their bodies with the dust of the phalluses. The spot where the phallus was installed became famous by the name Śīhāṇūtra. (Vaimana Purāṇa, Chapter 45).

(iii) In the beginning Brahmā entrusted Śiva with the duty of creation and to earn the power for creation he lived under water for many generations. Śiva having not returned though Brahmā waited for him long, the latter created the praśaṣṭi and got done by them all creations. Then it was that Śiva, having acquired all the more power, came out of water. Śiva who got angry that all creations were effected in his absence plucked his phallus and threw it into the earth. He said that, since matters of creation had been managed by Brahmā, he needed the phallus no further. The phallus thus thrown by Siva stuck to the earth and remained pointed upwards. Next, Siva performed a dance of annihilation among the Devas. Ultimately, on the request of the Devas Siva deposited his fire of wrath in water. It is said that fire which dries up water in seas, rivers etc. When Siva had shed his anger and become quiet the Devas worshipped the phallus, which had stuck to the earth, and thenceforth worship of Siva's phallus became popular. (M.B. Saupitka Parva, Chapter 17).

17 Śrīlalāś (Sports of Śiva). The Purāṇas refer to the following sixty-four llkas (sports) of Śiva. (1) Devendra redeemed from sin. (2) Airāvata redeemed from sin. (Hālāyamāhamyā, Chapter 5).

18 Bull of Śiva. Cows were born on earth from Surabhi. The foam of milk which flowed like sea from cows rose into waves and fell in Sivalihumā (Śiva land). Śiva did not like it. He opened his third eye and looked at the cows. The flames from the eye caused different colours to the cows. The cows took refuge with Candrā. But, the fire of Śiva’s eye followed the cows there also. At last the Trājatapāi puffed Śiva and presented him a bull for vehicle. From that day onwards Śiva came to be known as Vṛṣabhāvāhana and Vṛṣabhāṅka also (Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 77).

19 Other information. (i) The son Suka and Trayāsa were born to Vīṣṇu because of the blessing of Śiva. (Devī Bhāgavata, 1 Skandha).
(ii) During the period of emperor Pritha when the Devas made the earth a cow and milked resources, Śiva served as calf. (Drona Parva, Chapter 69, Verse 24).
(iii) Śiva occupied a seat in Kubera’s court. (Sahā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 21).
(iv) Śiva once presented an armour to Indra. (Drona Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 61).
(v) When the battle with the Tripuras reached its climax in intensity Śiva mounted the Bull and looked at the capital of the asuras. As a result of the Serī look the breasts of cows were cut and their hoods went into two. The hoods of cattle came to be cut from that day onwards. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 103).
(vi) Living beings are kept happy by the kindness of Śiva. (Saupitka Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 20).
(vii) It was Śiva, who organised the praduś code in the world. (Śaṭā Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 80).
(viii) Once in the war between the Devas and the Asuras Śiva gave refuge to Sukrācārya. (Śaṭā Parva, Chapter 399, Verse 36).
(ix) Śiva performed the thread wearing ceremony of Suka, the son of Vīṣṇu. (Śaṭā Parva, Chapter 248, Verse 19).
(x) On the occasion when Śiva burnt Tripuras and their city to ashes they saw him as a boy with five horns. (Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 160, Verse 32).
(xi) There is a story in Śaṭā Parva of Mahābhārata about Śiva’s bringing back to life the dead child of a brahmin. The story was told by Bhāgavata to Yudhishṭhira. The brahmin took his dead child to the burning ghat when a fox asked him to wait at least till dusk to see if the child would regain life. At the same time a vulture, which came there pointed out to the brahmin that the dead never came back to life and asked him to leave the dead body there and return home. As advised by the fox and the vulture the brahmin took to the burning ghat and took back from there the dead body of his child. Pārvati took pity on the brahmin and as requested by her Śiva brought the child back to life. The logic and reasoning advanced by the fox and the vulture for their selfish ends is famous under the name Grbhragamovamahishu. (xii) The following words are used in the Mahabhara

Śivaśarman had, due to Śiva’s blessing, achieved all kinds of siddhis (spiritual gifts). By the power of illusion he showed the sons their mother lying dead and all the sons wept uncontrollably. Then he asked his eldest son Vaiṣṇavaśarman, to cut the dead body of his mother into pieces and throw them off. After having done so he came and saluted his father.

After bidding adieu to Vaiṣṇavaśarman, who proved his devotion to his father as above, Śivaśarman called his second son Vedārman to him and told him thus: “I find it difficult to get on without a woman. Look, there is a beautiful woman there endowed with all qualifications. (And he created such a woman by illusion). You go and fetch her to me.” Vedārman, after saluting his father went to the woman and requested her to become the wife of his father. But, the woman did not want to become the wife of an old man, and she told Vedārman that she would love him, and not his father, to have as her husband. He shuddered to be told thus, and by the power of his tapas he got down Indra and other Devas on earth and showed them her. Then she told him in indifferent tone the following. “Yes, I have seen sons of your tapas. But, I have nothing to do with Devas. If you want me as wife for your father, please cut off your head with your own hands for my pleasure.” Vedārman drew his sword and very happily cut off his head and presented it to the woman. She came to Śivaśarman and requested him to accept his son’s head, which his son had voluntarily cut off for the sake of his father.

The other sons of Śivaśarman shuddered at the sight of their brother’s head. They told among themselves thus: “Our mother entered eternal Samādhi, but this brother of ours, whocourted death on behalf of father is really blessed.” Then Śivaśarman asked his third son Dharmarāmaśarman to receive his brother’s head. He received it and went out with it and prayed to Dharmadeva, who, on his appearance, was requested to give Śivaśarman the power of life. Dharmadeva did so, and the first question asked by Vedārman, who returned to life as though awakened from sleep, was about the woman, whom he had brought as his father’s wife. Then Vedārman and Dharmarāmaśarman returned to their father, and Dharmarāmaśarman told the father about his bringing back to life his dead brother. Though the father felt very happy about the great devotion of his son he did not answer him (son).

Śivaśarman fell into contemplation for sometime and then told his fourth son, Vīguśarman as follows: “You go immediately to Indraloka and bring amṛta (nectar) for me to drink along with this woman. Nectar removes diseases. Now, this woman has no interest in me. It is only natural that young, beautiful women will feel no love towards an old man and unless I regain my youth this woman of mine may sleep with others. You, my son, should act in such a manner that I can enjoy life with this woman in all the three worlds.

As soon as he heard his father, Vīguśarman, by the power of his tapas ascended to the sky and started for Indraloka. Being told about the object of his visit Indra detached Menākṣī to make him withdraw from the plan. Immediately Menākṣī put on her best clothes and singing sweet music occupied the hanging seat in Nandanaṇava, and Vīguśarman lost not a minute to divine the object of her presence. Without even casting a look upon her, he hurried forward. But, she jumped down from her seat, blocked his path and made enquiries about him. She also tried to make love to him. But, Vīguśarman turned down her overtures of love. At this stage Indra adopted many magical tricks to frighten away the unwelcome visitor. Angered by such attempts Vīguśarman got ready to destroy Devaloka along with Indra, who then begged pardon of him and handed over to him a pot full of nectar.

When Vīguśarman gave the nectar to his father the latter asked him to choose any boon he wanted, and according to his request the father brought back to life Gāgavati. Now Śivaśarman very much pleased with his sons sent the first four of them to Vīguśarman. He decided to live for sometime more on earth with his youngest son, and he told the latter that he was going on a pilgrimage and asked him to keep the pot of nectar with him. The son kept it very carefully for ten years. Now Śivaśarman with his wife returned from pilgrimage. By magic he had become a leper, and made his wife also a leper. Somāśarman, his youngest son felt pained that his parents had fallen victims to such a fell disease and saved them with a miraculous and apotiousious spell. He forewrote their wants and desires and satisfied them to the full. Yet, the father lost temper with the son and used even to hit him. But, the son did not lose his temper in any manner and to the least degree. He continued to serve his parents most cheerfully.

A century was over in this manner. The parents were greatly satisfied and pleased with their son, and ultimately the father cast one more illusion on this son. After stealing away by magic the nectar from the pot, he asked the son for it. When Somāśarman looked into the pot for nectar, to his horror it was missing. But, he took the pot to his father saying to himself, ‘Let there be nectar in it if I am truthful, if I have served my elders well and if I have observed pure tapas’, and lo! the pot was filled with nectar! Śivaśarman blessed his son, and by the power of his yoga ascended to Valkuntha in the company of his wife. After this Somāśarman began practising the most intense form of tapas. When the time for his death was near asuras approached him. Fear about asuras gripped him, who was in deep meditation, and as he breathed his last thinking about his son, the next life saw Prahlāda, son of Hiranyakṣi_BOOT got killed by Śiva in the war between Devas and Asuras. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmi Khaṇḍa).

ŚIVASVAMI. A great poet in Sanskrit in the court of king Avantivarman, who ruled Kashmir between 854 and 884 A.D. Only one poem by him, Kappiṇḥābhuyāyam, composed on the model of Kirtārjuniyāyam, has been unearthed yet.

ŚIVODEBHEDA. A sacred spot. One, who lives here taking the holy bath, will derive the benefit of making a gift of a thousand cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 82).

ŚIVALI. A Purāṇic place in Tanjore District in South India. Indra once fied to this place in fear of the asura called Śūрапadm and did tapas there. (Śakta Purāṇa).

ŚKANDA. Subrahmanyaya. (For further details see under Subrahmanyaya).

SKANDAกรaha. An evil spirit which afflict boys up to the age of sixteen. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Purāṇa, Chapter 230, Stanza 48, that this spirit SKANDÅPASMĀKA is also known by the name Mātrkāgraha or Paruṣa-graha.

SKANDÅPASMĀKA. A demon derived from the body of Subrahmanyā. This would enter the womb of a pregnant woman and afflict the child in the womb. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Verse 26).

SKANDHA. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Dhīrāṣṭra. This serpent was burnt to death in the sacrificial fire of the serpent sacrifice of Jānamejaya. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 18).

SKANDHAKṢA. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. (Mahābhārata, Salva Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 60).

ŚLEŚMAKA (M.). (ŚLEŚMATAKAM). A forest. It was when Vṛsāvas, the grandson of Brahmā and Kākṣi, the daughter of Sumāli were living in this forest, that Vṛsāva, Kumābhakṣa, Viṣvāsana and Śrīpāsaṇhā were born to them. (Kamba Rāmāyana, Prākṛta Kanda).

ŚLIŚṬI. Son of Dhrvāva. Dhrvāva had two children Śliśṭi and Sucechāya by his wife Sambhu. Śliśṭi married Sucechāya. Five sons, Riptu, Rupu, Rupana, Vṛkala and Vṛkatejās, were born to them. Riptu, the eldest of them, was the father of Cākūṣa Manu, according to Harivamā, Chapter 2.

ŚMĀRADI. The mother of Vṛṇḍā, the wife of Jalendhara. (Padma Purāṇa 3: 9).

ŚMṚTI. The sovereignty deity of remembrance. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Salva Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 64, that this goddess Śmṛti had walked in front of the army of Subrahmanyā. Smṛti was the wife of Anīgṛas. Four daughters, named Sīnavā, Kuṭṭua, Anāmati, were born to Anīgṛas by his wife Smṛṭidevi. (Vinoda Kūmbha, Amā 1, Chapter 10).

ŚNĀNA. Bathing. The Purāṇas have ordered six kinds of bathing. They are Nītya snāna (daily bath), Naimitīka snāna (incidental bath), Kāmīya snāna (Desirable), Kriyā snāna (ceremonial), Kriyāṅga snāna (bathing only the limbs used for rites) and Maṅkarṣaṇa snāna (Bathing to drag out excrement). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 15).

ŚOBBHANA. Son-in-law of Mucūkunda. (See Para 3 under Mucūkunda).

SODARYAVĀN. A chariot of Indra. The peculiarity of this chariot was that two chariot-fighters could sit and fight at the same time in it. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 12, that Indra, sitting in this chariot, killed ninety-nine asuras (demons). This chariot passed hands from Indra to Uparicāravasu; from him to Bhadratha; and from this King to Jarāsandha, on whose death Indra took possession of it again. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 48).

SODASAARAJAKA. The story of sixteen famous Kings related by Vyāsa to Yuddhikīra who, after the death of Abhimanyu in the war became averse to fighting. The Kings were (1) Marutī (2) Suhotra (3) Paurava (4) Śibi (5) Śrī Rāma (6) Bhagiratha (7) Dīlīpa (8) Māndhātā (9) Yāyati (10) Ambarīsa (11) Śāhābindu (12) Gaya (13) Raulīdeva (14) Bharata (15) Pṛithu (16) Pārśurāma. (Droṇa Parva, 16 Chapters from 15).

SOMA. A son born to fire Bhānu by his third wife Niśa, who had given birth to two sons Soma and Agni and a daughter named Rohiṇī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 15).

SOMA II. One of the eight Vasus. The eight Vasus are Āpa, Dhrvāva, Soma, Dharna, Anūla, Agni, Pratyāpa and Prabhāva. (Vigna Purāṇa, Amā 1. 13).

SOMA III. A son of Jarāsandha. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skanda 9, that Jarāsandha had four sons named Soma, Sahadeva, Turya and Śrutāru.

SOMA. A celestial maic. This celestial beauty performed a dance at the birth festival of Arjuna. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 61).

SOMA. Juice extracted from Soma creeper. It is believed that the devas accept Soma in sacrifices.

SOMADĀ. A Gandharva dancer. (For further details see under Čūli).

SOMADATTĀ II. A King of Pāñcāla. He was the great grandson of Sṛjāya and the grandson of Sahadeva. The father of Somadatta was Kṛṣṇa. (Vālmikī Rāmāyana, Sarga 47).

SOMADATTĀ III. A King of the Kurus dynasty.

1) General information. This King was the son of Bālīka and the grandson of King Pradipa. Three sons named Bhūrī, Bhūrārava and Sāla were born to Somadatta.

2) Other details.

(i) Somadatta and his sons were present at the Svayyāvāra marriage of Draupadi. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 189, Verse 14).

(ii) Somadatta had participated in the royal consecration sacrifice of Yudhīshthira. (M.B. Chapter 34, Verse 8).

(iii) This Somadatta was present at the Svayyāvāra of Devaki. At that time there occurred a hand to hand fight between Sini and Somadatta. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 114, Verse 14).

(iv) The defeat from Sini being unbearable, Somadatta did penance to get power to vanquish him and Śiva appeared before him. Somadatta made the following request: "O God! May I be granted a son who would be powerful enough to kick down the son of Sini in his palace." Śiva granted his wish. Bhūrī ravas was the son born in conformity with this boon. He grew up and defeated the son of Sini and kicked him in the palace of the King. This story occurs in Mahābhārata, Drona Parva, Chapter 144.

(v) Somadatta fought against Śāyaki and Bhīmasena in the battle of Bhārata and fell down unconscious. (Drona Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 10).

(vi) In the battle which followed this, Śāyaki killed Somadatta. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 152, Verse 33).

(vii) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adimāvasāya Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 17, that Dhīrāṣṭra performed the sacrifice of giving offerings to the spirit of Somadatta.

(viii) Somadatta was one of the spirits which appeared on the surface of the Ganges when invoked by Vyāsa. (M.B. Śrīmadvaṃśika Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 12).

SOMADHEYA. An ancient country in east Bhārata. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sahā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 10, that Bhāmaśena defeated the people of this country.

SOMAGIRI. A mountain. This mountain ought to be thought of every morning and evening. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 163, Verse 23).

SOMAKA I. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Aḍī Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 40, that all the Kṣatriyas of the Somaka dynasty are called Somakas.

SOMAKA II
1) General information. A King of Pāṇcāla. This generous King was the son of Sahadeva and the grandson of Subhāsa. In accordance with the advice of Brahmā, the King once sacrificed his son. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 128 that on completion of the sacrifice he got one hundred sons.
2) Other details.
(i) This King Somaka travelled with his precepts through the holy worlds and hell and returned. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 128, Verse 11).
(ii) King Somaka made offerings of cows as sams and asheaven. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 76, Verse 25).
(iii) Never had he eaten flesh in his life. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 63).
(iv) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sahā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 6, that this Somaka stays in the city of the Śravas, Vāsatī.

SOMAKIRTI. One of the hundred sons of Dīrtacātra. (M.B. Aḍī Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 99).

SOMAPA I. A warrior of Subhāmasya. (M.B. Śāla Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 70).

SOMAPA II. An eternal god of offerings to the manes. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 56).

SOMAPA (SOMAL). One of the seven Pāṇcāla. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sahā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 49, that this god dwells in the palace of Brahmr.

SOMAPADA. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 119, that those who bathe in the particular holy bath called Mahāvārapāda in this place will obtain the fruits of a holy sacrifice.

SOMAŚRMA I. A brahmin. (See under Guṇḍrīhaya). Somaśrma II. Son of the brahmin Sivaśrma. (See detailed story under Sivaśrma).

SOMAŚRMA. A holy place. He who visits this holy place will be praised by others. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 157).

SOMAŚRASVAS. A hermit. His father was Śrūtaśravas. Once King Janamejaya approached Śrūtaśravas and requested him to let him have Somasrvas as a sacrificial priest. (For further details see under Śrūtaśravas III).

SOMAŚRAYAYANA. An ancient holy place situated in the basin of the Gangā. The Pandavas visited this holy place while they were on their way to Pāṇcāla from Ekaśākira. It was in this place that Cīrāratha the Gandharva who had been defeated by Arjuna, had enjoyed bathing sports with girls. It was because of these two incidents that Somasravayana became a holy place. (M.B. Aḍī Parva, Chapter 169, Verse 9).

SOMATIRTHA I. An ancient holy place situated in Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 19, that one could attain the fruits of the sacrifice of royal consecration by bathing in this holy bath.

SOMATIRTHA II. Another ancient holy bath situated in Kurukṣetra. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 114, it is mentioned that by bathing in this holy place, one could attain the world of Candras. (Moon). (See under Prabhāśa Tiritha also).

SOMAVARCA. An eternal deity of the manes. (Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 33).

SOMAŚ NADI. A river famous in the Purāṇs. Some important facts about this river are given below:
(i) River Somā remains in Varuṇa’s assembly worshipping him. (M.B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 2).
(ii) Lord Śrīkṛṣṇa crossed this river on his way from Indraprastha to Rājagṛha. (M.B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 27).
(iii) There is a sacred place called ‘Vādāgulamā śrīthicā’ in river Somā. By bathing in it one gets the benefits of Āśvamedha Yāga. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 3).
(iv) River Somā is regarded as the source of Agni. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 25).
(v) Viśvāmitra, Rāma and Laksmana took rest for a night on the banks of river Somā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kanda, 31st Sarga).

SOMITAPURA. The capital city of Bāṇāsura. This city was protected by Śiva, Kārttikeya, Bhadrakāli, Agni and other deities. Between Śrī Śrīkṛṣṇa and Bāna, the former defeated all the sentries and entered the city through the northern gate. Within the fort, Bāna was defeated. Mahābhārata, Sahā Parva, Dākiṇītā Prātha, Chapter 38 mentions that Śrī Śrīkṛṣṇa released Aniruddha and Usā from their prison.

SOMITODA. A Yaka. He remains in Kuber’s assembly and worships him. (M.B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 17).

SOMADHĀ. A daughter born to Dākṣa Prajāpati by his wife Praśūti. Twenty-four daughters were born to them. Of them, thirteen were the wives of Dharmadeva including Śraddhā. Dharmadeva had a son named Kāma by Śraddhā. (Vīśau Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 7).

SOMADHĀ II. Śrīva’s daughter. She had several other names such as, Vaivasvati, Sāvitrī, Prasavāti etc. (For more details, see under Śāvitrī I).

SOMADHĀ III. Wife of Vaivasvata Manu. (See under Vaivasvata Manu).

SOMADHĀ IV. Daughter born to Kardama Prajāpati by Devahūti. She became the wife of Angiras. They had two sons, Utaṭhāya and Āśvapāti and four daughters, Sinivali, Kuhū, Rākka and Anumati. (Bāgavata, 3rd Skandha).

SOMADHĀ. The offering given to Pītra. According to the Purāṇs Śraddhā is a very important ceremony. Here, “Pītra” does not mean “the souls of the dead”. Pītra belong to a special class of gods.

SOMADHĀVARPA. A sub-division of Śrī Parva in Mahābhārata. It comprises Chapters 26 and 27 of Śrī Parva.

SOMADHAVATI. A city of Varuṇa. (See under Aṣṭadikpālakas).
SRAJA. An eternal god concerned with offering to the manes (Vidvadeva). (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 23).
SĀMA. Son of Āpa, one of the Astavārus. Āpa had four sons named Vaiśvūdṛa, Śrama, Sātava and Dvārana. (Vīṣṇu Purāṇa, Atha 1, Chapter 15).
SĀVĀ. Son of Sāpta, a Mahārṣi who belonged to Cīrṣumada's family. He was the father of Tamās. (Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 63).
SĀVA. Son of Yuvanānava, a King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was the father of the King Śrīvāsta. (Mahā Bhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 3).
SĀVĀNA I. A son of Murūsura. Murūsura had seven sons. They were: Tāmāra, Antariṣṭa, Sāvāna, Vasi, Viśāvāsa, Naborūsa and Aruna. They were all killed by Śri Kiron. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).
SĀVĀNA II. One of the twenty-seven stars (naksatras). Those who perform Śrīdha on the day of this star will attain heaven. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 11).
SĀVĀSA. See 3rd Para under Datarathā.
SĀVĀSA/ADVĀSAI. A holy day. Observation of a fast on this day after a bath at the confluence of two rivers is believed to bring Māja.
SĀVĀSAUA. Defilement attached to the flux due to abortion. It is ordered in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 258, how to observe this defilement. It is said that women should observe defilement for as many nights as the number of the months of pregnancy, till the flux. If the flux took place in the fourth month, defilement should be observed for three nights. If it was in the fifth month that the flux had occurred, pollution for ten days would have to be observed. This is meant for Brahmins. In the case of a Kṣatriya woman if the flux occurred in the fifth month, she has to observe defilement for four days; and five days for a Vaiṣya woman, and eight days for a Śūdra woman. It is said that the father will be purified by a bath.
SĀVĀSTA. Son of the King Śrīvāsta. (See under Śrāva).
SĀVĀSTI/PURA. Capital city of Śrāvās, King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. It was named "Sāvastipurā" or "Sāvāstipurā" because it was built by Śrāvās, according to Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 4.
SRENIMAN. A Rāja, Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 31 says that he was the rebirth of the fourth Kālakeya. The following pieces of information about this Rāja are gathered from Mahābhārata:
(i) Srenimāna was present at the Sivayambara of Pāṇcāli. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 11).
(ii) He ruled over Kumārāśā. Bhūmasena, in the triumpphant march of the eastern lands, defeated Srenimāna. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 1).
(iii) Sahadeva, in his conquest of Southern lands defeated him. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 5).
(iv) In the course of the Bhārata Yuddha, Srenimāna was killed by Drona. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 35).
ŚRGALA. A King of the "Śtri rājya". This king had attended the Sivayambara of the daughter of Citrāṅga, king of Kāliṅga. (Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 7).
ŚRGALAVŚUDEVA. See under Kṛṣṇa,Para 13, Sub Para 5.
ŚRHĀN. A son of Sāyāhāmā. She had ten sons including Śrīhān. (Bhāgavata 10th Skanda).
ŚRBHIMĀK. Father of Mrgāśikāvatī. (See under Śrīdatta)
ŚRĪDATTĀ. Son of Kālanemi a Brāhmaṇa of Mālava land. Kālanemi was a Brāhmaṇa named Vīhāravatī. After the death of their father they went to Pātañjala for education. The teacher gave his two daughters in marriage to them. By the blessing of goddess Lakṣmī, Kālanemi became rich in course of time and he was also blessed with a glorious son. Since he was given by the blessing of Lakṣmī (Śrī), he is known as Śrīdatta. Śrīdatta grew up and became an expert in archery. Kālanemi's younger brother, Vīg就像 blood left home and went on a pilgrimage after his wife's death by snake-bite. Kālanemi's king, Vallabhaśakti was pleased with Śrīdatta and invited him to live in the palace. In this way, he became the intimate friend of the king's son, Viśrāma Śakti. After that, Bhābālak and Vaiśravaṇa, the priests of Vaiśravaṇa became the friends of Śrīdatta. Mahābala, Vīgṣṭhitabhūta, Upeñdrabala and Nātheraka, who were the Minister's sons, also sought the protection of Śrīdatta. One day, Śrīdatta along with Viśrāma-śakti and other companions went tobathe at the banks of the Ganges. While they were there, the party of friends began to engage in some amusements. Śrīdatta assumed the role of a king and the others posed as his subjects. Viśrāma-śakti, the king's son, could not tolerate it. He challenged Śrīdatta for a fight. In the fight Viśrāma-śakti was defeated. But he secretly resolved to kill Śrīdatta by hook or by crook. Śrīdatta understood his secret plan. After leaving Viśrāma-śakti, Śrīdatta was walking with the others along the river-bank when he saw a woman struggling for life because she was caught in a whirlpool in the middle of the river. Śrīdatta at once left his companions and jumped into the river and swam up to her. When he was almost within reach of her hair the woman sank into the water. Śrīdatta also sank and followed her, but after some time, he found himself in a floating temple. He offered worship there and took rest in a park close by. The next morning a woman came to worship in the temple. When she returned after worship, Śrīdatta followed her. The woman who was alarmed, walked faster and at last reached a heavenly abode. She entered the house and took her seat on a cot inside. Śrīdatta also got in and sat near the cot. Many other women came and stood around her. Without any apparent reason she began to cry. Śrīdatta who was puzzled, asked her why she was crying. She replied to him in the following words: —

"I am the grand-daughter of the Aṣura king, Mahābali. I am the eldest of his one thousand grand-daughters. My name is Vidvandivarī. One day Vīṣṇu has captured and imprisoned our grandfather, Mahābali. He has also killed our father in battle. After that he has expelled us all from our Capital City. To prevent us from entering it again, he has posted a lion as sentry. at the palace gate. That lion is a Yaksha who was cursed by Kubera. If any one defeats him, he would be liberated from his curse. By defeating that lion, you will get a divine sword. With that you can defeat anyone.”

As soon as he heard this story, Srīdatta rushed towards the lion. In the fight that followed, the lion was defeated and it was suddenly transformed into the old Yaksha. Pleased with the hero who was instrumental in lifting its curse, he gave Srīdatta a sword called “Mrgānākās” and then disappeared. Vidūyuprabhā entered the palace, accompanied by her sisters and Srīdatta. She gave a ring to Srīdatta which had the power to destroy the effects of poison. She felt in love with him. She asked him to take a bath in the tank close by after giving the sword to her, and undertook to kill any crocodile which might attack him. Srīdatta, keeping the sword in his own hand, stepped into the water and sunk into it. But he rose up in the river Ganges into which he had jumped earlier. He reached the bank of the river and went in search of his companions. On the way, he met with Nīśhūrakā. In the course of Tīr talks, Nīśhūrakā informed Srīdatta that, Vallabhaśakūti passed away and Nīśhūrakā was then ruling over the country. The new king had killed Kāláūramūti and was on the look-out for murdering Srīdatta. Both of them resumed their journey and when they reached Ujjayini, they met with the rest of their friends. On their way, a woman joined their party. She had lost her way while going to the land of Mālaka. Srīdatta and Nīśhūrakā walked in the company of that woman and at last they arrived at a deserted city. They spent the night in that city. During the night when Srīdatta happened to wake up, he saw to his horror, that the woman had killed his friend Nīśhūrakā and was eating his flesh. Srīdatta at once drew his sword and caught hold of her hair and was about to cut off her head when she was transformed into a Rākṣasā woman. She prayed to him not to kill her and told him her story. She had become a Rākṣasā woman by curse. Long ago Viśvāmitra did tapas to obtain Kubera’s place. At that time Kubera sent her to break Viśvāmitra’s tapas. Since she failed in her attempts to attract him by her charms, she tried to subdue him by assuming the form of a terrible monster. The sage thereupon cursed her to become a Rākṣasā woman with that figure. He declared that the curse would be lifted when Srīdatta grasped her hair. She added that she had been killing and eating the inhabitants of that city for a long time and that explained why the city had become deserted. Now that she was liberated from the curse, she asked Srīdatta what boon he wished to have.

He replied that he only wanted his friend to be restored to life. After reviving Nīśhūrakā, she disappeared. Early next morning they reached Ujjayini. There, they met their old friends, Bāhuśāli and others. Srīdatta described to them his experiences after sinking in the Ganges.

Later, once when Srīdatta went to a festival, he happened to meet Mrgānākātī, daughter of a King named Srībhimbika, who fell in love with each other. When she left the place, Srīdatta fell very much depressed, Bāhuśāli and others also knew about it. They offered to take him to Mrghānākātī. But just then she fell down unconscious, bitten by a snake. Srīdatta soon restored her with the help of the magic ring which Vidūyuprabhā had given him earlier. After that he returned with his friends to Bāhuśāli’s house, leaving behind the ring with Mrgānākātī. The King who was deeply grateful for the curse of his daughter sent plenty of wealth and gold to Srīdatta. But Srīdatta gave all of them to Bāhuśāli’s father. He was always doing on Mrgānākātī and was much pleased at his separation from her. At this stage, the princess’s favourite maid came to him on the pretext of returning the magic ring and informed him that Mrgānākātī was also pining for him and was even prepared to die for his sake. Srīdatta sent her back with a secret message of love and cheer. After that in consultation with his friends he made a plan to take the princess secretly to Mathurāpurī. On the next day, Bāhuśāli with three of his friends left for Mathurā pretending to go there for trade. He made all arrangements on the way for the secret conveyance of the princess. That night, Srīdatta sent a woman and her daughter to the palace after making them senseless with heavy drink and arranged for their sleeping there. As directed by Srīdatta, Bāhuśāli set the palace on fire and slipped out of the building with the princess. Srīdatta sent them at once to Mathurāpurī. The woman and her daughter who were alive in the palace were supposed to be the maid and the princess. Srīdatta set out to Mathurā to meet Mrghānākātī. On the way he saw several evil omens. On arrival at Vindhyavāna, he saw his friends lying helpless, after having been severely beaten up by unknown enemies. They informed him that a stranger leading a powerful army overpowered them and galloped away on horseback, taking the princess with him. Srīdatta immediately started in pursuit of the unknown enemy. Shortly after, he caught sight of the army led by a Kṣatriya prince who was taking Mrgānākātī on horseback with him. After a fierce fight, Srīdatta rescued the princess from the youth, captured his horse and rode on it with her towards his friends. When they had gone a short distance, they came upon the army which had been wounded in the battle, fell dead on the way. At that time he went in search of water to quench their thirst, leaving Mrgānākātī at the spot. By the time he returned with water, the sun had set. So he lost his way and wondered about in the forest till day-break when he reached the place where he had left Mrgānākātī. But she was not seen anywhere there. To get a better view of the neighbourhood in the hope of finding her, he climbed to the top of a tree near by, after placing his sword on the ground. Just then a hunter named Sahāra came that way and took up Srīdatta’s sword. Srīdatta saw this, but he got down from the tree and instead of attacking him, merely asked him whether he knew about the whereabouts of Mrgānākātī. To this Sahāra said that he thought that she had reached his cottage and asked Srīdatta to accompany his followers to the cottage. He also offered to go with him and promised to return his sword after reaching there. Srīdatta reached the cottage with them. Being utterly exhausted, he fell into a deep slumber. When he woke up he found that his legs were chained together. While he was lying thus, a woman named Mocanikā approached him and said: “Why did you come here to court death? Sahāra has now gone out on some business. As soon as he returns he will offer you as a sacrifice to Bhadradikā. It is for that purpose that he has brought you here and put in chains. But there is yet one way of escape for you. This Saudara has a very beautiful daughter. She has fallen in love with you. If you marry her everything will turn out well!"

For his own safety, Sridatta married Saudara's daughter according to the Gandharva method. Shortly after, she became pregnant. Her maid Mucanika informed her mother all about it. That kind and affectionate mother came to Sridatta and said: "Saudara is a very cruel man. If he comes to know of this, he will never forgive you. Therefore you must leave the place at once, but you should never forget my daughter." With these words she took leave of him. Sridatta disclosed the story of that sword to her and started on his journey again, in search of Mrgakavati. From a hunter whom he happened to meet on the way, he came to know that she was living in a place called N disgusthala near Madhurad, under the protection of Visavadatta a Brahman. Sridatta at once went to Visavadatta's house and made enquires about his wife. Visavadatta informed him that he had entrusted her with a Brahman who was the minister and priest of King Surasena. He suggested that Sridatta should stay with him that day and they could go to Surasena's place the next morning. Sridatta accordingly stayed there and started for Madhurad at dawn the next day. On the way he took bath in a tank just outside the city. While bathing he happened to get a silk cloth and a necklace of beads from the bed of the tank. After his bath, he entered the city with the silk and necklace. Mistaking him for a thief, the police arrested him. Really the silk and necklace had been hidden in the tank by thieves. Sridatta was produced before the King with the stolen articles. The King condemned him to death. Mrgakavati who was staying in the custody of the minister happened to see Sridatta being taken to the place of execution. She immediately ran up to the minister and told him that Sridatta was her husband. When the King saw him, he ordered him to be brought back to the palace. As soon as Sridatta saw the minister, he felt certain doubts about his identity. The minister had a striking resemblance to his father's brother Vistabhaya who had left home years ago. His doubts were confirmed when the minister revealed his identity and the two embraced each other after their long separation. Sridatta narrated the whole story of his sufferings and misfortunes beginning from the murder of Kalameti up to that time. On hearing his tragic story, the minister burst into tears and told him that he had received a boon from a Yakṣi by which he had obtained 5000 horses and plenty of wealth. All this he gave to Sridatta and his wife.

The king of that country had a daughter. Sridatta's next plan was to marry her also. Vistabhaya gave him the necessary help. The minister took her with Sridatta and his friends on the pretext of offering worship at the temple in Avanti. They had to encounter a band of robbers on the Vindhya mountain. Sridatta was overpowered and the robbers plundered all their wealth. Vistabhaya and others were captured. Sridatta was taken to be sacrificed to Bhadrakāli. When he was about to be sacrificed, his wife, the daughter of Saudara arrived there with her son. It was within the territory of Sṛcand. She stopped the robbers from performing the sacrifice and returned to her own house with Sridatta. The Gandharva band took Vistabhaya and came to Sridatta and they were released. After the death of King Saudara, Sridatta became the King of that wood. He got back his sword Mrgakavati. He married the daughter of Sūrasena. Sridatta's friends also came there. All of them joined together and killed Vikramashikti in a battle. After that Sridatta was crowned king of the whole country up to the ocean. (Kathāsaritāgāra, Kathāmahākalihara, Tāranga 2).

ŚRIDEVA. Daughter of King Devaka. This princess was married by Vaideva. They had six sons including Nandaka. (Bhāgavata, Navana Skanda; Vīṣṇu Purāna, 1:18).

ŚRUKUNDAL. A holy place. If one worships Bhūma at this holy place famous in the three worlds, one would get the benefit of the gift of a thousand cows. (M.B. Vahe Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 81).

ŚRUKUNDALA. Son of the Vaiy Usnugamul. (See Para 2 under Yumun).

ŚRIKRISHNA. A Sarvāvati thirtha situated in Kuruksetra. By bathing in this thirtha, one gets the same reward as by performing an Agrasena yajña. (Mahābhārata, Vaiṣṇava Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 165).

ŚRAMADHAGAVADGITĀ PARVA. A sub-division of Bhāma Parva in Mahābhārata. Chapters 13 to 42 of Bhāma Parva, are included in it.

ŚRIMAN. Son of Nimi, who was the son of Dattātreya.

ŚRIMATA. An aspect of Devi who incarnated to kill the Rākṣasa named Kamata who used to abduct the wives of Mahāraja in the disguise of a Brahman. (Skanda Purāna, 3:2:16-18).

ŚRIMATI I. A Gandharva maid. In Kambha Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakandā there is a story associating this Gandharva maid with the churning of the ocean of milk:- A Gandharva maid named Srimati who had acquired incomparable proficiency in music used to sing hymns in praise of Kāmśīdevī. Devī appeared before her and presented a garland of Kalpaka flowers to Srimati. As she was returning with the garland, she met sage Durvāsas on the way. She offered the garland to him. Durvāsas who reached Devaloka with the garland gave it to Indra. Indra used it for adorning the tusk of Airāvata. Airāvata who was annoyed at it threw it away in a fury. Durvāsas took it as a personal insult to him and in his rage cursed all the gods to be subjected to the infirmities of old age. It is to save them from the effects of old age that the ocean of milk was churned to obtain Amṛta. (For more details see under Amṛta).

ŚRIMATI II. A woman follower of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Salva Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 5).

ŚRIPARVATA. A sacred mountain. Those who go to this mountain and offer worship to Śaktara after bathing in the forest rivers get the same reward as from an Alavamedhayāga. (M.B. Vahe Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 10).

SRĪṆṆṆĂR. A Mahā was founded here by Śaṅkaraśīyā. (See under Śaṅkaraśīyā.)

SRĪṆṆĂ. The young sage who cursed Parīkṣit. (See the Kāti para under Parīkṣit.)

SRĪṆĂVAYA. 1) Genealogy. See under Somadatta.

2) General information. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. His father was Śviti. This king Śviti was also called Śvitya King. On the death of his father Śrījāya became king.

The hermit Nārada and Parvata were friends of Śrījāya. Once both of them came and lived in the palace of the King as his guests. Śrījāya had a beautiful daughter named Śucīsimita. Both Nārada and Parvata loved her. One day Nārada directly asked śrījāya, for the hand of his daughter. Parvata got angry at this and cursed Nārada that he would not attain heaven. Nārada retorted with the same curse. Śrījāya pacified both.

Śrījāya had no sons. He informed the hermit of this sad state. Nārada blessed the king and said that a son named Suvaṃparāthi was born to him and that with his birth everything in the palace would become golden. Accordingly the son Suvaṃparāṭhi was born to Śrījāya and everything in the palace became golden. When the son became four years old, by the sorcery of Indra the child died. Nārada brought him to life again. (See under Suvāṃparāthi.)

The fact that gold was accumulating in the palace of Śrījāya due to the boon given to Suvāṃparāthi, reached the ears of robbers. One night they carried the child away, and killed him. Again the hermit did not understand that there was no gold inside him. Śrījāya cried aloud at the loss of his son. To pacify the King, Nārada and Parvata told him stories of sixteen kings. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 55.)

3) Other details.

(i) Śrījāya sits in the palace of Vana, praising him. (M.B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 15.)

(ii) When Nārada told the King the stories of sixteen Kings, his sorrow subsided. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 71, Stanza 4.)

(iii) By the power of Nārada Śrījāya’s son was brought to life again. (Drona Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 8.)

(iv) Śrī Kṛṣṇa told Dharmaputra the story of Śrījāya, with a view to pacify him. (M.B. Śārva Parva, Chapter 29.)

(v) Śrījāya had never eaten flesh in his life. (M.B. Anuvāana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 63.)

SRĪṆĀṆAYA II. A royal hermit. This royal hermit was the father of the mother of Amā, the princess of Kāti, and a friend of Parāṣurāma. At the request of Amā who had been forsaken by Śālla, Śrījāya first approached Parāṣurāma and then saw Bhīṣma and persuaded him to marry Amā. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 175, Stanza 15 to 27.)

SRĪṆṬI (CREATION). The Indian theory of creation is given below:

1) Trīṝghor (The three attributes). The base of the universe is the set of the three-attributes. They are Saṃtva (purity), Raṇḍa (passion) and Taṁs (inertia). Only things which could be seen, possess these three attributes. Things which could be seen are perishable. The indestructible could not be seen. Shape or form is an attribute. God has no form. So god is without attributes. The God devoid of attributes can be realised by knowledge, but not by the senses. The three attributes have a power each. Knowledge is the power of Sattva, activity, the power of Raṇḍa and reason the power of Taṁs.

2) The five elements. From the divine power of Taṁs, five senses came into being; such as sound, touch, form, taste and smell. Sound is the attribute of ether; touch, the attribute of air; form, the attribute of fire; taste, the attribute of water; and smell, the attribute of earth. These are the ultimate senses or essences. These five senses having the divine powers, joined together with the five minute essences, make up the attribute of Taṁs.
From the attribute of Sattva having the power of knowledge, the ten essences, such as air, the Sun, Fire (Agni), two Adi-gods, Candra (Moon), Brahmar, Rajas, Kāraṇa and Siva, came into being. From these essences the formation of five matters took place. They are the five elements. When vigour enters the quintupled elements, egoism is given a form. This vigour with perceptible body is called Ādi Nārāyaṇa (Primordial Nārāyaṇa). Anyhow, quintupled elements will be bright with firm attributes. Either has the attribute of sound only. Air has the attributes of sound and touch. Fire has the three attributes of sound, touch and form. Water has the four attributes of sound, touch, form and taste, and earth has the five attributes of sound, touch, form, taste and smell. The variegated expression of these five elements is called the universe. It is stated in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 5, that the number of species of living beings found in the universe is eight billion.

3) The embodied three (Trinity). It has been mentioned in the last section how the three attributes came into existence and how the five elements originated from the three attributes and how vigour or energy acted upon the five elements and Ādi Nārāyaṇa or Viṣṇu came into being. In this section the birth of the three divine figures is being dealt with in the universe.

In the known beginning, on the surface of the wide waters, covering the universe made of the five elements, Mahāvīnu lay on a banyan tree, as a child. "Who am I? How was I made, and what for? What have I to do?", and so on were the thoughts of the child. Instantly a voice from the ether fell into his ears saying, "I am everything. There is nothing eternal except me." Mahāvīnu lay contemplating on the voice he heard, when Mahādevi appeared before Mahāvīnu and said thus:—"Lo! Mahāvīnu! Whenever the universe required creation, preservation and destruction, by the potentiality of the Omnipotence or the Brahman with no attributes, you too had taken origin. Understand that the Omnipotence is beyond attributes. We all are within the purview of attributes. Your attribute mainly is Sattva. From your navel, will be born Brahmā with Rajas as his main attribute and from the forehead of that Brahmā, Siva with Tamas as his main attribute will be born. By the power of penance, Brahmā will acquire the power of creation and with the help of the attribute of rajas, he will create a world of the colour of blood. You, will be the protector and preserver of that world, and at the end of the Kalpa (world-age) Siva will destroy that world. I am that power of purity, which stands as help and assistance to you in creation." Accordingly, Brahmā was born from the navel of Viṣṇu and Siva was born from the forehead of Brahmā. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 1).

4) Creation Sprouts, Animal and Humanity. After the birth of the Trinity, while Brahmā was contemplating on creation, some creations of the attribute of Tamas originated from him unknowingly. It was Avidyā (Ignorance), having inertia, desire, great desire, darkness and great darkness as its five branches. That god continued his contemplation. Then five kinds of immovables are born, as the power of knowledge or brightness in and out alike, and with souls covered with darkness originated. As these immovables are said to be prominent, the creation of them is called prominent creation. These are called Sprouts (Udbhids). Seeing that this creation was not sufficient, the god again sat in contemplation. This time animals having horizontal back bones and organs of sense were created. They were called tiryakotrotsas, as they walked horizontally. They, such as cow etc. are having more of the attributes of darkness and less of knowledge. They traverse wrong paths due to lack of knowledge though they think otherwise. Egoism, pride and twentyeight kinds of incapacities are their qualities. Though they possess knowledge inwardly they do not know each other. Thinking that this creation also was not sufficient, Brahmā again engaged himself in contemplation, and there came out another creation. It was called Ārdhavakrotas (moving upwards). This third creation having the attribute mainly of Sattva moved in a lofty level. Those who were born in this creation, desired for comfort and pleasure and were with the light of knowledge inwardly and outwardly. When the third creation called Devaṣṭhiti (creation of gods) originated from Brahmā he grew happy and contented. Even after creating thus much, Brahmā did not feel satisfaction. So he made the creation of 'Arvākakrotas' (moving downwards). The creatures of this group were having the attributes of Sattva, Rajas and Tamas in an advanced degree. So they are miserable and full of activity. They are human beings. Thus having completed the creation of Udbhids (Sprouts), Tiryakas (animals) and Arvākak (human beings) Brahmā passed on to the creation of heavenly beings. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśa 1; Chapter 5).

5) Creation, Night, Day, Evening, Morning. After this Brahmā again sat in contemplation for water-creation which is the creation of Devas, Asuras, Pitta and Manuṣyas (Gods, Demons, the Menes and Man). As he was sitting in contemplation, the attribute of Tamas (inertia) advanced in him and the asuras (demons) were born from his loins. Then Brahmā discarded the figure of Tamas in him. That discarded figure of darkness became the night. The figure of Brahmā, the Deva (gods) were born. They were having the attribute of Sattva (purity). Brahmā discarded that figure of purity also. That figure became the bright day. So the asuras are powerful in the night and the Devas are powerful in the day. After this, the menes were born from Brahmā. They were also discarded. They became the evening between the day and night. Then Brahmā assumed the figure having the attribute of Rajas. From this, man, who was having more of the attribute of rajas was born. Brahmā discarded that figure also. It became a very shining thing which is called the Dawn. So men are powerful in the dawn and the menes are powerful in the evening. The four creations of Day, Night, Evening and the Dawn are considered to be the bodies of Brahmā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśa 1, Chapter 5).

6) Creation, Rākṣasas (Giants), Yājas (Demi-gods), Serpents, Devils, Gandharvas. Brahmā again assumed another figure having the attribute of Rajas. Due to this Brahmā felt hungry. Along with hunger desire also grew in him. Then the Vajra (Lord of Emanation) sat in the darkness and created some creatures which were very hungry. Uncouth with plenty of hair on the face, they ran towards Brahmā. Of them those who said, 'don't do so, save him' became Rākṣasas (giants). Those who said "We will eat him", became Yaksas (demi-gods). Because of Yaksanā (Bhakṣaṇa-Food), they got the name Yaks. Because of the dislike at seeing these creatures the hair had fallen from the head of Brahmā. They crept back again into his head. Because they did 'sarpasā' (creeping up) they were called sarpaśas (serpents) and as they were 'hina' (fell) they were called Ahis (serpents). After this the Lord of creation became very angry and created some creatures. Because of their colour which was a mingling of red and black, they were horrible and they became pīṭatānas (those who eat flesh). Then Brahmā began to sing and from his body the Gandharvas were born. Because they did "dhiyana" (Appreciate) of 'gō' (word) when they were born, they were called Gandharvas.

7) Creation. Birds, animals. After creating all these creatures, Brahmā created birds, from his 'vāyas' (strength), as free agents, according to their actions in the previous lives. Then Brahmā created sheep from his breast and goats from his face. From his stomach and flanks he created cows, and from his legs he created oxen and buffaloes, elephants, leopards, tigers, dogs, wild bulls, deer, camel, mule, antelope etc. He created plants bearing fruits and bulbs from his hairs. Though Brahmā had created vegetables and animals at the beginning of the Kalpa (world-age), they came to be properly used in sacrifices only from Tretāyuga (one of the four ages). The animals such as the cow, sheep, goat, horse, mule and donkey are called domestic animals and flesh-eaters such as the leopard, animals with forked head such as the wild bull, elephant, monkey, birds, and other animals and reptiles, are included in the word 'wild animals'.

8) Creation-The Vedic etc. After having completed creation of the things mentioned above, the Prajāpati created from his face looking to the east, the Vedic metre Gṛhyatri, Rgveda, Tīvṛtstoma, the sāma song called Kālamatra, and the saṃhitā called Agnustoma; from his face looking to the south, Yajurveda, the Vedic metre Taittirīya, Patapaddāsā stoma, Bṛhatāsā and the sacrifice Ukhta; from his face looking to the west, Sāmaaveda, the Vedic metre Jagati, Safaptastoma, Vārāṇsāma and the sacrifice Atriāra. Thus all the creatures lofty and lower originated from the body of Brahmā. After having created Devas, Anuras, the manes and men, Brahmā again at the beginning of the world-age, created Yaksas, Devis, Gandharvas, celestial maids, Naras, Kiniśras, Rakṣas, cows, birds, animals, serpents etc. as: as have long life and short life, movable and immovable, that we see in the world. Creatures which are created and again do perform functions which creatures of their kind had been doing previously. Habits of killing or not killing, kindness or cruelty, righteousness or evil, truth or falsehood are adopted by them as becoming to their kind in previous lives. It was Brahmā who had created the uses and differences seen in the sense organs, elements and bodies. Brahmā took from the Vedic voice the shape, form, name, activities etc. of various creatures such as the Devas etc. and allotted them a particular kind. So all the allotted names, work etc. to hermits as seen in the Vedas.

9) Creation of the four castes. See under Cāturṛvänya.

10) Creation of Prajāpati. When Brahmā saw that the subjects he had created, did not flourish, he created first the Sanaka brothers and the mental sons of Bṛg, Pulastya, Pulaha, Krau, Aṅgiras, Marici, Dakṣa, Atri and Vasiṣṭha, and gave these nine the name Prajāpati (Lords of Emotion). Then he created nine women named Khyati, Bhūti, Sambhuti, Kāmā, Pritī, Samata, Urjā, Anasūya, and Prasūti and gave in marriage Khyati to Bṛg, Bhūti to Pulastya, Sambhuti to Pulaha, Kāmā to Krau, Pritī to Aṅgiras, Samata to Marici, Urjā to Dakṣa, Anasūya to Atri and Prasūti to Vasiṣṭha. The great hermits such as Sanandana and the others created before the Prajāpatis, were not desirous of propagation as they were wise sages who had renounced all attachments and who had been indifferent. When Brahmā saw that they were not mindful about producing subjects he grew angry. (It was from the middle of the eye brows which were curved by his fury, that Śiva, one of the three divine figures was born). After this, Brahmā appointed Svāyambhuva, who originated from himself, and was of the same shape, as the first Manu for the protection of the subjects. This divine Manu Svāyambhuva took his sister Satarūpā as wife. Two sons named Priyavrata and Uttikāpāda and two daughters named Khyati and Prasūti were born to them from Svāyambhuva and Satarūpā. Of the two daughters Prasūti was given to Prajāpati Dakṣa and Khyati to Prajāpati Ruci. A son named Yajña and a daughter named Dukṣaṇa were born as twins to Prajāpati Ruci. Twelve sons were born to Yajña by Dakṣaṇa. They were devas named the Yaṃs of the Manvantara of Svāyambhuva. Dakṣa began twentyfour daughters of Prasūti. They were Svaddhā, Lakṣati, Dharī, Tusi, Medhī, Pusī, Kṣīṇa, Buddha, Lajja, Vaps, Sāti, Siddhi, Kṛtya, Satī, Sambhu, Śṛtī, Prīti, Kāmā, Santati, Anasūya, Urjā, Svāhā and Svadā. Of these the thirteen were given to Dharmadeva as wives. Of the remaining daughters, Khyati became the wife of Bṛg, Satī, the wife of Śiva, Sambhuti of Marici, Śṛtī, of Aṅgiras, Prīti of Pulastya, Khyati of Pulaha, Kāmā of Krau, Anasūya of Atri, Urjā of Vasiṣṭha, Svāhā of Atri, and Svadā of the manes. (Visu Purāṇa, Aṣṭa 1; Chapter 7).

11) The children of the Prajāpatis. To Prajāpati Bṛg, Lakṣāṇi who became the wife of Visv and two sons named Dhātā and Vidhātā were born by Khyati. These two married Ayati and Niyati the two daughters of Muru. To the two couples two sons named Prāṇa and Mṛkaṇḍu were born. From Mṛkaṇḍu, Mārkandeya was born, and from Mārkandeya, Vedāśiras was born. To Prajā a son named Dyutimān and to him a son named Rājāvan was born. From this Rājāvan the Bṛgu dynasty grew up.

Sambhuti the wife of Marici gave birth to a son named Paurāṇā. To Aṅgiras four daughters named Śrīvīvāla, Kabhū, Rākā and Anumati were born by Śṛtī. Three sinless sons named Candrā, Durvāvasa and Dattātreya were born to Atri by Anasūya. Of them Dattātreya was a hermit. A son named Dattoli was born to Pulastya by Prajīti (Priti). That Dattoli was the Agastiya of Svāyambhuva Manvantara. Kṣānī the wife of Pulaha gave birth to three sons named Kārunda, Urvanīśvā and Sahipu. Santati the wife of Krau, gave birth to sixty thousand hermits called Bālakhyina. Seven sons named Rājas, Gotra, Uṛdhabhābu, Savanā, Anagha, Sutapas and Sukra were born to Vasiṣṭha by his wife Urjā. These sons were the seven hermits of the third Manyantara. Three bright sons Pāvakā, Pavaṁāna and Śucī were born to goddess Agni (fire) by his wife Śvāhā. Forty-four sons were born to him. (Vigśu Purāṇa, Anīta I, Chapter 10).

12. Creation—Living things. Creations of Sprots, animals, Men, Devas, Dānavas and so on have been dealt with. But all these creations were pertaining to the world of gods only. Sprots and animals were born in the earth only from Prajāpati Kaśyapa, the son of Marici.

Prajāpati Kaśyapa married Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālika, Tamrā, Krodhaśvā, Manu and Aṇghā, the eight daughters of Dāka. From Aditi, the Devas, Adityas, Vasus and the Rudras were born. Dāityas were born from Diti and Dānavas from Danu. The asuras Naraka and Kāla were born to Kālika. Five daughters named Kraucī, Bhāśī, Śyenī, Dīrutarāṣṭri and Śuci were born to Tamrā. Owls were born to Kraucī. Bhāśī gave birth to the Bāhas. Hawks and Vultures were born from Śyenī; Svams, geese and waders were born from Dīrutarāṣṭri. Natā was born from Śuci and Vinātā was born from Natā. Ten daughters named Mrgī, Mrgmanḍā, Hari, Bhadramātī, Mātani, Sārdūlī Śvetā, Surahī, Suraśā and Kadrā were born to Krodhaśvā. Mrgī gave birth to animals. From Mrgmanḍā, bears, young deer and Bos grunniens were born. Lions and monkeys were the sons of Hari. A daughter named Iravā was born to Bhadramātī. Airāvata was the son of Iravā. Elephants were born from Mātani. Tigers were born from Sārdūlī. The eight elephants supporting the globe were born from Śvetā. Two daughters named Kohiṇi and Gandharvī were born to Surahī. Cattle were born from Kohiṇi, and horses were born from Gandharvī. Men were born from Manu. The trees were born from Anālī. Garuda and Aruna were born from Vinātā. Sampāli and Jāyā were the sons of Aruna. (Vāmanī Kāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kaṇḍa, Sarga 14).

(Facts about creation seen in various Purāṇas do not agree with each other. This essay is based on facts gathered from various Purāṇas. So disagreement may occur in it.)

SHRTA I. Son of Bhūmasena. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

SHRTA II. A king of the Solar dynasty. Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha refers to him as the son of Śubhāpāpa and father of Jaya.

SHRTA III. A king belonging to Bharata's dynasty. He was the son of Dhumrnittra and father of Dryhasena. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SHRTA IV. A son born to Śrī Kaṇṭha by Kālindī. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

SHRTADHVAJA. A brother of King Viraṇa. He was a supporter of the Pāṇḍavas. Viraṇa's brothers were Ruc Gajānāka, Śrutānāka, Virahadhāra, Sūdatra, Dvadhva, Bālināka, Jayānīka, Jayaprīva, Viyāva, labhahaka, Jayāvī, Rathavāhana, Candrodaya and Kamaratha. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, C. apert 158, Verse 41).

SHRTADEVA. A devotee of Śrī Kaṇṭha. In Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha it is stated that once he had described the story of Śrī Kaṇṭha.

SHRTADEVI. A sister of Vasudeva, father of Śrī Kaṇṭha. Vasudeva had five sisters who were:—Mānini, Fhitha, Śrutadevi, Śrutakārti and Śrutarāva. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SHRTAHA. A king who was on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by a vahāna at the Bhārata battle. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 82).

SHRTAHA. A son of Satrubhā, one of the Pāṇḍavas.

SHRTAKARMĀ I. Son of Satrubhā, one of the Pāṇḍavas.

SHRTAHA. A king who lived at the time of Agastya. Once the sage Agastya approached him for some wealth. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 99 there is a story of how the king solved the problem by presenting the accounts of his income and expenditure to Agastya and convincing him that he was unable to oblige the sage.

SRUTARVA (SRUTARVA) II. One of the hundred sons of Dhritarashtra. In the course of the Bharata battle he attacked Bhimaasena with twelve of his brothers and in the battle which followed Srutarva was killed by Bhimaasena. Among the Kauravas, Srutarva was one of the mighty archers. The terrible battle fought against Bhimaasena under his leadership alarmed the other warriors. (M.B. Satya Parva, Chapter 26).

SRUTAMA. A sage. In Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvaka 16, Suta 132, there is a passage which says that the Atvinidevas once turned a river into honey and pleased sage Vasishta and protected two sages Srutarva and Narva.

SRUTASENA I. A brother of King Janamejaya. In Mahabharata, there is a reference to an incident in which Srutaseena beat a dog which entered the place where Janamejaya was performing his Yaga. (For further details see under Srutarasvam III).

SRUTASENA II. Younger brother of the serpent Lakshaka. There is a reference to this Yaga in Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 141.

SRUTASENA III. Son of Sahadeva. He is also known as Srutakarna. (See under Srutakarna).

SRUTASENA IV. An asura. Garuda killed this asura. (See under Srutadhara).

SRUTASENA V. A warrior on the Kaurava side. He was killed by Arjuna. (M.B. Karu Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 10).

SRUTASRASVAS I. A sister of Sri Krsna’s father Vasudev. (See under Sruaddevi).

SRUTASRASVAS II. A king of Magadha. (Bhagavata, 9th Sthanaka).

SRUTASRASVAS III. A Maharshi. He had a son named Somaasrava. There is the following story in Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 3, about the way in which these two sages came to be associated with King Janamejaya.

Janamejaya, son of Pariksit, along with his brothers performed an elaborate Yaga at Kuruksetra. His three brothers were Srutaseena, Ugrasena and Bhimaasena. While they were performing the Yaga, a dog which was the son of Sarama, came there. Janamejaya’s brothers attacked the dog without any provocation. Sarama became angry and she cursed Janamejaya. The curse frigtened him. After the Yaga he reached Hastinapura and went out in search of a priest who would be able to liberate him from the curse.

Once, as he was returning from a hunt, he happened to come across an Araham within his country. A sage named Srutarvamas lived there. He had a son named Somaasrava. Janamejaya invited Somaasrava to be his priest. At that time Srutarvamas said to him, “This my son was born to a serpent-woman and he is endowed with the power of my austerity. He is capable of releasing you from all sins except “Mahadevarkrya”. If a Brahmana prays to him for anything, the prayer would be fulfilled. If you can set it right, you may take him with you.”

Janamejaya agreed and took Somaasrava with him to the palace. He made him priest and completed the Yaga. Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 58 states that Srutarvamas was also a member of Janamejaya’s Yaga. He was among the sages who attained Siddhi (superhuman powers) by performing tapas. (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 252, Verse 16).

SRUTASRASVAV IV. A Raja. He remains in Yama’s assembly, offering worship to Yama. (Mahabharata, Satya Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 9).

SRUTASRASVAV V. Wife of Damayanta, King of Cedi. She was the sister of Sri Krsna’s father and mother of Sri Pariksit. She requested Sri Krsna (who came to her place after Sri Pariksit’s birth) not to kill Sri Pariksit. Sri Krsna agreed to forgive Sri Pariksit’s wrongs a hundred times. (For further details, see under Sri Pariksit).

SRUTASRI. An asura. Garuda killed this asura. Once Garuda happened to go to Indraloka and he began to brag about his own greatness. He claimed that he had killed Srutaravi, Srutasena, Vipasayana, Rccanaamukha, Kalika, Ahar, Prasuta and other Asuras. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 105, Verse 12).

SRUTAVATI. Daughter of Bharadvaja, Muni. Once Bharadvaja happened to see the Apasrava woman Ghrutac and he had an involuntary emission of semen. Srutavati was born from that semen. She observed an austere tapas with the object of getting Indra as her husband. For more information see Paris 90 under Indra.

SRUTAYAJNA. A king who belonged to Bharata Vaisya. Bhagavata, 9th Sthanaka states that he was the son of Karmajit and grandson of Vivasvan.

SRUTAYUDHA. A king of the Kalinga land. He was the son of Varuna by Parashatra. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 23; Bhisma Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 34).

In Bharata battle he took his stand on the Kaurava side and at first clashed with Bhimaasena. Even at the beginning of the battle, Bhima killed Satya and Satyasdeva, two of the assistants of Srutayudha. (M.B. Bhisma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 69). In the end, he used his cudgel—which was given to him by Varuna —against Sri Krsna who did not take part in the battle at all. Srutayudha died by his own cudgel. (M.B. Droto Parva, Chapter 57, Verses 49-50). (See also under Srutayus II).

SRUTAYUS I. A son of Pururasva. (See under Pururasva).

SRUTAYUS II. (SRUTAYUDA.) A Kalinga king.

1) Birth. Srutayus was son of Varuna by Parashatra. (For more details see under Parashatra).

2) Other details.

(i) He was a member of Yudhisthira’s assembly. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 26).

(ii) Srutayus participated in Yudhisthira’s Rakshasa yaaga and presented precious stones to him. (M.B. Daksinayana Patha, Sabha Parva, Chapter 51).

(iii) He had attended Draupadi’s Svanakhara. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 13).

(iv) In Bharata Yuddha, he joined the Kaurava camp and assumed command of an Akshayatra (a division of the army). (M.B. Bhisma Parva, Chapter 76, Verse 16).

(v) A fierce fight took place between Srutayus and Bhismaasena in the field of Kuruksetra. (M.B. Bhisma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 67).

(vi) In the above battle, Satya and Satyasdeva who were the supporters of Srutayus, were slain by Bhismaasena. (M.B. Bhisma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 76).
(vii) Another battle was fought between Śrutāyus and Arjuna. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 36).

(viii) Śrutāyus was killed by his own cudgel. (Māhābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 54). (See also under Śrutāyusha).

Śrutāyus III. A Kṣatriya king. He was born from a portion of the Dāitya, Krodhavāsa. We get the following details about him from Mahābhārata:

(i) Śrutāyus was the re-birth of Krodhavāsa, the dāitya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 64).

(ii) Śrutāyus, who was a Mahārāṣṭra (a great warrior) was present at the Svavajñavāra of Draupādi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 21).

(iii) This Śrutāyus was a member of Yudhisṭhira's assembly. (M.B. Śabha Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 28).

(iv) On the first day of Bhārata battle, there was a clash between Śrutāyus and Irāvān. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 75).

(v) He was the King of Amśāśa country. In the Bhārata battle he encountered Arjuna. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 75).

(vi) It was this Śrutāyus who stood in the middle portion of the Kraujya Vihāra formed by Bhīma in the above battle. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 75).

(vii) Yudhisṭhira defeated Śrutāyus. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 1).

(viii) At Kurukṣetra, Arjuna killed Śrutāyus in the battle. Arjuna had to fight a fierce battle in order to kill Śrutāyus. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 98).

Śrutāyus IV. A warrior who fought on the Kaurava side. He was the brother of the hero Ayuṭāyus. In Bhārata battle, both these brothers joined the Kaurava army. Both were assigned the task of defending the southern wing of the Kaurava army. After a life-and-death struggle, Arjuna killed both of them. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 7).

Śruti. An ancient King in India. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 53).

Stambaṁitra. A bird. This bird was born to the hermit Mandaḍapāla by his bird-wife Jāritā. (For further details see under Mandaḍapāla).

Stambaḥ. One of the Saptarṣis (seven hermits) of the Manu-āge (Manvantara) of Śvārōcira. The seven ēṣa of Śvārōcira Manvantara are Urja, Stambaḥ, Pīcā, Vāka, Vyākhya, Niraya and Parīvān. (For further details see under Manvantara).

Stanakūṇḍa. A holy place. Those who bathe in this tirtha, which is one of the holy places of ancient Bhārata, would obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice Vājapeya. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 152).

Stanapoṣika. An ancient country of South India. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 68).

Stanavāla. An ancient place in South India. (Mahābhārata, Bīma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 63).

Steya. Theft. In the law of chastisement of ancient Bhārata, appropriation of the property of others unjustly, was counted as theft (steya). The punishment awarded for theft in ancient Bhārata, is mentioned in this chapter, Chapter 176, as follows: “All thefts are violation of justice. The third part of gold, will have to be death with a pledge. Then only his sin will be remitted. Or, he must live for twelve years, lying on the earth, wearing matted hair and eating only leaves, roots and fruits, once a day. The thief of pearl, coral, copper, silver, iron, bronze and stone, will have to eat millet rice (Kṛṣṇamīti) for twelve days. Those who steal food products, vehicle, bed, ornament, flowers, fruits, roots etc. will be made to eat Paṭḍagavya (Milk, curd, butter, urine and dung of cow). He who steals grass, firewood, tree, dried rice, saccharum, cloth, hide, meat etc. will have to be made to fast for three days.”

Sthāndileyū. A son born to Kauruṇḍa, the third son of King Paru. The celestial maid Mārākṣṭī was the mother of Sthāndileyū. This Sthāndileyū was a great archer. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 8).

Sthanu I. Śiva, the son of Brahmā. The eleven Rudras were born from Śīhāru. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65).

SUBĀHU XII. There is a reference in Verse 66, Chapter 115 of Anuśādana Parva, Mahābhārata, about a Subāhu, who never consumed flesh in life.

SUBĀHU XIII. Father of Sagaras of Solar dynasty. (For details see under Sagara).

SUBĀHU XIV. A Cola King. A great devotee of Viṣṇu, the King performed many yajñas. Though he lived according to the spiritual advice of his preceptor Jaimini he was denied the sight of Viṣṇu. Ultimately Subāhu and his queen attained heaven as they listened to Viṣṇula, their second son, reciting hymns addressed to Viṣṇudeva. (Padma Purāṇa, Bhāmi Kāṇṭha, Chapter 94).

Though Subāhu and his queen worshipped Viṣṇu for a long time in the Ananda forest, the lord did not appear to them. Ultimately they found their way to Subāhu’s house in the forest and after a very long walk came to the abode of Viṣṇu. The King questioned them as to why he failed to see Viṣṇu though he performed penance for a very long time. The King and queen were done up due to hunger and thirst and the monks asked them to return to Anandārama and eat the corpsep left there. While they were accordingly eating the corpse, Viṣṇula questioned Kuñjala a bird which lived nearby, why his parents were eating dead bodies. The bird answered that when the King and queen had recited the praises of Viṣṇudeva they would see Viṣṇu. It also taught Viṣṇula songs in praise of Viṣṇu. After having studied the songs, Viṣṇula went and sat on a tree at Anandārama and sang the songs. Subāhu and his queen repeated them and immediately Viṣṇu appeared before them and conducted them to heaven.

SUBALA I.

1) General. A King of Gándhārā. Subala was the father of Sakuni, uncle of the Kurus. Sakuni was the rebirth of Nāgūjī, disciple of Prahlāda. Sakuni inherited the name Saubala from his father Subala whose only daughter was Gándhārī, mother of Durvodhana. Both Sakuni and Gándhārī were economic experts. (Adi Parva, Chapter 83). At the time of the marriage proposal of Gándhārī the fact of the blindness of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the prospective bride-groom, worried Subala much, but he married his daughter to the blind King considering the great reputation of the royal family. (Adi Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 11).

2) Other information. (i) Subala, in the company of his sons Sakuni, Acala and Vyāsaka participated in the Rājasūya performed by Yudhīṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 6).

(ii) After the Rājasūya was over it was Nakula, one of the Pāṇḍavas, who led Subala and his sons beyond the boundaries of the Kingdom safely. (Sabhā Parva Chapter 45, Verse 49).

Once the King removed the priest from his job and appointed two priests, Kriṣṇa and Aukul in his stead, and after some time, the new priests, at the instance of the King, killed Subandhu. But, three brothers of his joined together and brought Subandhu back to life again by chanting hymns from the Vedas. (Rgveda 10, 57, 60, Bṛhaddevatā. 7, 33).

SUBELA. A mountain near Lankā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 21).

SUBHA. Dhruva’s mother. According to Harivamsa, Chapter 2, she was born from Aśvamedha.

SUBHA. Wife of Áriṣṭa and mother of seven sons like Bharatari. (Vana Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 1).

SUBHADATTĀ. A wood-cutter who lived in Pātallputra.

Subhadatta earned his living by cutting wood in the forest and selling it for fuel. One day, while cutting wood in the forest he saw four Yakṣas by chance. When he understood from their dress and bearing that they were divine beings, Subhadatta was frightened. The Yakṣas spoke to him and when they came to know that he was poor, they engaged him as their servant. Subhadatta served them with devotion. When it was time for their meal they pointed to him a pot and asked him to serve them food from it. But when Subhadatta saw the pot empty, he was confused. The Yakṣas, with an amused smile asked him to put his hand into the pot and assured him that he would get anything he wished to get from it.

Subhadatta accordingly took out all the things they wanted from it and served them. They took their food and were satisfied. A few days passed in this way and then Subhadatta began to think of his family. The Yakṣas understood that he was longing to return home. So they allowed him to go after getting whatever boon he wished to ask them. Subhadatta asked for that magic pot which would supply whatever he wanted. On hearing it the Yakṣas told him that he would not be able to keep that pot and that if it was broken everything would be lost. So they advised him to ask them something else. But Subhadatta was not prepared to accept their advice. At last they gave him the magic pot.

Subhadatta reached home happily with the pot. He told the whole story to his people at home. His neighbours grew suspicious when he stopped going to the forest to cut trees, after he returned with the pot. To their enquiries about it, he replied haughtily and informed them of his good luck. One day in his frantic joy, he danced, carrying the pot on his head and as ill-luck would have it, he slipped his foot and fell down. The pot crashed to the ground and was broken to pieces. So he was forced to become the wood-cutter again.

(Kathasanāgara, Saktiṣāgolambaka, Taradga).

SUBHĀDRA I. Sister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

1) Birth. Subhādra was the daughter of Vasudeva by his wife Devaki. She had two brothers, Krṣṇa and Śārāma and she was her father’s pet child. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 217, Verse 18).

2) Married to Arjuna. During his one-year pilgrimage Arjuna, after visiting various holy places, came at last to Prabhāśa-dīrgha in the plains of the western mountain. He met Gada there who described to him the unique beauty of Subhādra. The description evoked in him the desire to marry her for: which purpose he assumed the form of a Śaṁyāśa and sitting under a tree thought about Śrī Kṛṣṇa who understood the fact while lying on the bed with Sāryabhāmā and immediately he began laughing. Asked for the reason for his laughing thus, Śrī Kṛṣṇa told her about Arjuna thinking about him etc. Kṛṣṇ then went to Arjuna and questioned him about the reason for his pilgrimage and the latter explained the circumstances of it. They then went to the Rāvata mountain where Arjuna revealed to Kṛṣṇ his desire to marry Subhādra. Kṛṣṇ agreed and, after leaving Arjuna at the mountain, returned to Dvārakā.

Within a few days the Yādavas celebrated a festival at Rāvata attended by prominent leaders like Balabhadra, Ugrasena, Pradyumna, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and others. The sight of Subhādā among them evoked uncontrollable love in Arjuna who asked Śrī Kṛṣṇa secretly about the means for him to marry Subhādra. Kṛṣṇ answered him thus: ‘‘Śvamiyavara (marriage by self choice by a woman) is ordained for Kṣatriyas. But, how would we know whom Subhādā loves. Abduction also is ordained for Kṣatriyas. So you abduct Subhādā.”

Arjuna immediately sent word about the matter through emissaries to Indraprastha. After the festival at Rāvata was over, Subhādā returned to Dvārakā. As for Arjuna, he sat on a rock in the forest thinking about Subhādā when Yādava heroes like Bāha, Sāmbha, Śārāma, Pradyumna and Gada came that way by chance. They saluted the Śaṁyāśa (Arjuna) and after blessing them he made them sit on the rock around him and related to them various stories. Then Yādavas felt great respect for the Śaṁyāśa and invited him and took him to Dvārakā. Kṛṣṇa and others arranged for the stay of the Śaṁyāśa, who pretended to spend Cātturmāsavaya there. He was to be fed from Subhādā’s house and the Śaṁyāśa was overwhelmed with joy.

As days passed on thus, Arjuna grew more and more sick with love. Subhādā felt unbounded affection for him. He heard from him many stories about the valiant Pāṇḍava, Arjuna. When he was convinced that Subhādā cherished strong love for him, Arjuna revealed the truth about him. When he told her that he, the fake Śaṁyāśa, was really Arjuna who was living there without the knowledge of his mother and brothers, Subhādā bent down her head in shyness.

Subhādā’s wedding was decided to be held on the twelfth day from that date. Balabhadra and Udhāvav both of them short-tempered, were not informed about the decision. Śrī Kṛṣṇa took the lead in making preparations for the wedding and he saw Subhādā and gave her all good wishes.

Many of the Yādava chiefs wanted Subhādā to be wedded to Duryodhana, a disciple of Balabhadra and against this desire of theirs Subhādā and Arjuna together drove themselves away in a chariot through lines of people and this created a stir among the Yādavas. But, Kṛṣṇa pacified them all. (Ādi Parva, Chapters 212-228; Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

2) Other information.

(i) Later on, the wedding of Subhādā with Arjuna was duly consecrated. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 2-0, Verse 10).

(ii) Arjuna came to Indraprastha with Subhādā disguised as a Gopi. Many costly things, by way of Subhādā’s dowry, were duly sent from Dvārakā to Indraprastha.

(Ādi Parva, Chapter 220).

(iii) A son named Abhimanyu was born to the couple. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 65).

(iv) During the period of the ‘forest life’ of the Pāṇḍavas Subhādā and her son lived with Kṛṣṇa at Dvārakā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 3).

(v) Subhādā too was present at the wedding of Abhimanyu at Upalavayagarā. (Virata Parva, Chapter 72 Verse 22).

(vi) When Abhimanyu was killed in the great war, Subhādā went before Kṛṣṇa. (Drona Parva, Chapter 78, Verse 2).

(vii) Following the death of Abhimanyu Subhādā returned with Kṛṣṇa to Dvārakā. (Āvamedha Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 85).

(viii) Remembering about Abhimanyu’s death Subhādā swooned. (Āvamedha Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 4).

(ix) She went from Dvārakā to Haripura to attend the Āvamedha yajña performed by Yudhishthira. (Āvamedha Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 4).

(x) Subhādā joined her co-wives, Ulīṇī and Cīvitragadā and embraced them. (Āvamedha Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 3).

(xi) Following the death of Abhimanyu Subhādā spent her days in sad silence. (Mahāprachāshīna Parva, Chapter 13).

SUBHĀDRA II. A daughter of Surabhi. She lives in the western region. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 102 Verse 9).

SUBHĀDRA A banyan tree. Garuḍa went to Devaloka , to fetch amṛta after marking this tree as a sign-post. See under Garuḍa. (Aranyaka Pāda, Canto 35).

SUBHĀDRAHĀRAVAPARVA. A sub-parva of Mahābhārata. (Ādi Parva, Chapters 218 and 219).

SUBHĀGA. A brother of Śukuni. He was killed in the great war by Bhima. (Drona Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 26).

SUBHĀGA I. Daughter of Kaṭyāpaprajāpati by his wife Pradā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 46).

SUBHĀGA II. A term of address.

According to Manusumṛti (Chapter 2, 129) one should use this word when one addresses the wives of others and women who are not one’s relatives.

Parapātāra tu yā śrī dvārābāndhā na yeṣā ca yonītāḥ

Tām bruhāday bhavateīvavahū bhagātī ca //

SUBHĀNU. One of the ten sons of Sāryabhāmā, the other nine being Bhānu, Svabhānu, Prabhānu, Bhānumā, Candrabhānu, Bhadbhānu, Hariśānu, Śrībhānu and Prabhīhānu. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

SUBHĀRĀ (SUDĀRĀ). A daughter of Śvapalka, son of Prīti. She was Akṛūra’s sister. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).
SUBHĀNGA. A virgin born in the Dāsarha tribe. Kuru, King of the Lunar dynasty married them. They had a son named Vidūra. (M.B. Aidi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 39).

SUBHĀSANA. A king of Solar line son of Yuyudhūna and father of Sruṭa. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skanda).

SUBHĪMA. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 11).

SUBHĪMA. A son of Pāṇeṣajanyagnī called Tap. This Agni is one of the fifteen Agnis which cause hindrances in Yajñās. Subhīma, Atibhīma, Bhīma, Bhimabahu, Bala, Sukīrtra, Mitrapālin, Mitrajñā, Mitrāradhānā, Mitradharopun, Sarapāvīna, Vīra, Suvarcāsa, Vesa and Subrahāmā are the fifteen Agnis which cause hindrances in Yajñās. (Vāna Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 11).

SUBHĪRA. One of the two attendants given to Subrahmanyā by Sūrya, the other one being Bāhavara. (Sāya Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 31).

SUBHĪR. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā. (Sāya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 8).

SUBHĪMA. The only place of ancient days in the plains of river Sarasvatī where Aparājita used to come daily and bathe Deva-Gandhāvanas visit this place every month. Sri Kṣma bathed there once and distributed money to brahmāns. (Sāya Parva, Chapter 37).

SUBRAHMA. Son of Śiva.

1) Ṛ man for birth. A son named Vajrānga was born to Kāma Yajñāparī by his wife Damā and he married a girl called Varāngī. Vajrānga performed penance to Bṛhma so that he might shed his āsura aspect. When he came out of his penance, Varāngī was missing and he wandered about the forest in search of her. Finally he saw Varāngī crying under a tree. When he asked her the reason for her weeping, she told him about harassments by Bṛhma during the thousand years when Vajrānga was missing. Varāngī told him about the day when Bṛhma used by her in worship, appearing before her in the guise of a monkey; on another occasion he threatened her in the form of a lion and on a third occasion he came disguised as a snake and bit on her legs. Very much grieved over the story Vajrānga again took to penance with the grim determination to punish Indra and when Bṛhma appeared before him he prayed for the boon of a son who would surpass the Devas including Indra in prowess. Bṛhma granted him the boon. Varāngī delivered a son twelve months after the boon.

The child was christened Tārākāra.

Tārākāra, as a child, began practising penance and Bṛhma duly appeared before him and granted him the boon that if he were to die he would die life the hands of a child only seven days old. Haughty over the boon Tārākāra very soon conquered the three worlds. The devas found no means to suppress the asura. Children would not be born to them and there was a reason for it. Once Śiva and Pārvatī started the marital act and it did not come to a close even after a hundred divya-years, with the result that the world shook like anything. Frightened at this, the Devas requested Śiva to stop the act and he obliged them. Then he asked them who would bear the semen which had been discharged and they replied, "Let earth itself bear the semen." Accordingly it was discharged on the earth. It filled and over-flowed forests and mountains. What next was the problem. Ultimately the Devas asked Agni (fire) to come, that he be consumed and burnt it down absolutely, the ashes thereof formed into a white hill and it became a forest. Pārvatī did not at all relish the action of the devas and spoke to them thus: "You prevented my sexual intercourse entered into with the desire to have a son. Therefore, in future you will not have children by your mates. Pārvatī cursed the earth also as follows: "You will become one of various forms and also a wife to many people. You, who prevented me from having a son, will not enjoy happiness from children." (Vāmūki Ramayāna, Bālakanda, Canto 36).

Tārākāra could be killed only by a child not more than seven days old and the Devas realized that such a child could be begot only by Śiva. It was the occasion when Śiva was lamenting over the death of Satī and Pārvatī was doing penance to secure Śiva as husband. None could stir Śiva immersed in deep meditation and the Devas entrusted the responsibility for it to Kamadeva. Not only did Kāma not succeed in the endevour but also he got reduced to ashes by the fire from Śiva's eyes. When Pārvatī's penance reached its climax Śiva appeared before her and wedded her.

2) Birth of Subrahmanyā. Because of the power of Śiva's semen consumed by Agni, his glow began getting diminished. Agni complained of it to the Devas who sent him over to Bṛhma. On his way to Bṛhma Agni met Gaṅgādevī whom he told thus: "I can in no way bear this semen of Śiva and if I get rid of it, it will burn the entire world. So, you please take charge of it so that you will have a noble son. Gaṅgā's reply to this was simply to ask Agni to throw the semen into her waters and Agni did so. As the semen had remained with Agni for nearly 5000 years, his flesh, blood, hair, eye etc. had become golden in colour and hence Agni came to be called from that day onwards Hṛitanyācaras.

Time passed by and the semen of Śiva became a burden to Gaṅgā. She complained about that to Bṛhma. Bṛhma asked her from whom she had received the semen. Gaṅgā detailed her story to him and concluded by saying that though it was 5000 years since Śiva's semen was put into her, she did not deliver yet. Then Bṛhma told her as follows: "You go to the Udāya mountain (where the sun rises). There is a forest there, a forest hundred crores of yojanas in extent, where Sara, a particular variety of grass (Saccharum munja Roxb) grows. You deposit the semen there and a male child will be born after 10,000 years as directed by Bṛhma Gaṅgā went to the Udāya mountain and deposited the focus there through her mouth. By the power of Śiva's semen all the trees and animals and birds in the forest became golden in colour. When 10,000 years were completed a child, as effulgent as the rising sun, was born and Subrahmanyā was the child. The child cried in a thunderous voice and six divine Kṛttikās who came that way saw the child and taking pity on it vowed with one another to breast-feed it. Since the child looked at the six Kṛttikās one after the other it developed six faces and since it was breast-fed by Kṛttikās it came to be named Kārītikās as well.
Brahmā informed Agni about the birth of the child and the latter, in great happiness, hastened to it on a fast goat. Gaṅgā who met Agni on the way and asked him about his hurried trip was told about the birth of the child and between the two developed an argument about the ownership of the child. Mahāviśvā who came that way just then listened to the above argument and directed them to Siva for settlement of their claims.

Agni and Gaṅgā asked Siva to which of them the child belonged Siva then told Pārvati “Fortunate, fortunate.” Only after seeing the child could it be decided as to whose it was and so Siva, Pārvati, Agni and Gaṅgā proceeded together to the forest where they saw the child in the lap of the Kṛttikās. Siva then said “Let us see whom the child looks at before settling its parentage.” Understanding the ideas of the visitors the child, by its yogic power, assumed four bodies called Kumāra, Viśākha, Śākha and Naigameya. Kumāra looked at Siva, Viśākha at Pārvati, Śākha at Gaṅgā and Naigameya at Agni and all of them felt immensely happy. The Kṛttikās asked Śiv whether Śaņumukha (child with six faces) was his son to which Siva answered as follows “Let him be your son under the name Kumāra, Gaṅgā’s son under the name Kumāra, Pārvati’s son under the name Skanda; my son under the name Guha and Agni’s son with the name Mahiśena and under the name Sarvaṇa ‘Sarvaṇa’ (the forest where it was born) son. He is a great yogi and will be known by these various names. As he possesses six faces he will become famous as ‘Śaņumukha’.

After having spoken thus Siva thought of the Devas and under the leadership of Brahmā and Viṣṇu all the Devas appeared there. They looked at the child to their hearts’ content and then told Siva thus: “Oh I Lord! You made Agni serve the purpose of Devas. Let us immediately start for Ajjuṣa tirtha and crown Śaņumukha at Sarvaṇa in Kuruṇeketa. Let him flourish as army-chief of Devas, Gaṅgārvas and Kumāras and let him kill the terrible Mahiśa and Tārakāsura.

3) Coronation. Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Siva and others reached Kuruṇeketa with the child to crown him (Subrahmanya) as army-chief. Siva and Viṣṇu performed the consecration ceremony with holy water from the seven seas. Gaṅgārvas, Śris and others sang for joy and Aparāśi danced. Pārvati placed the child thus consecrated on her lap and kissed him repeatedly on the head.

4) Pratịṣṭa. After Guha’s consecration, the Devas presented the army-chief valorous armies. He was given by Siva four Pramathas, equal in prowess to Indra, called Gaṅgārvas, Lohitākṣa, Nandīśeṇa and Kumudāmālī. Brahmā and other Devas gave their own Pramathas to him. Brahmā gave him the Pramatha called Śākaṇḍa and Viṣṇu gave him three sets of Pramathas called Sañkāṇḍa, Viśrama and Parākrama. Indra gave him Utkīśa and Pañkaṣa; Sun (Sūrya) gave Dandaśiṇījala; Moon gave Manviṣeṣa; the Āvins gave Vatsāṇanda etc. In short, important Devas, Mātrī, Tirtha etc. gave Subrahmanya priceless presents too numerous to be named.

Seeing the rush of presents the great Garuda presented his own son, the fast-going Peacock to Subrahmanya. Aruṇa gave his own son, the cock. Agni gave the Vel (three-pronged weapon, trident), Bhṛṣpati the danda (club, stick) Gaṅgā, the Kāmanḍalā (water-pot of Sannyāsīs) Viṣṇu the garland, Pārvati clothes, Siva the locket and Indra the string of pearls.

5) Devata war. The consecration of Subrahmanya as Commander-in-Chief of the army kindled a new hope and enthusiasm in the Devas. They challenged the Asuras for war and they took it up. The asura army entered the battle-field under the leadership of unrivalled warriors like Tārakāsura, Mahiśa, Bāha, son of Mahāhai, Tāraka’s sons, Tārakāsura, Kamāiṣa, Vidyumāni etc. In the furious battle that ensued Subrahmanya killed Tārakāsura. The other asura chiefs too were killed.

6) Vat of colour. After the killing of Tārakāsura Subrahmanya became the object of too much of jesting by Pārvati with the result that his life became unbridled and wayward. His lust was everyday on the increase and he committed even rape on Deva women, who were ultimately forced to complain about him to Pārvati. Immediately she called Subrahmanya to her and showed her own image in all other women and he became so much repentant about his past actions that he took the vow before Pārvati that in future he would look upon all women in the world as equal to her, his mother. (Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Siva are the parents of Subrahmanya)

7) Marriage. See under Devasena.

Other information,

(i) On the occasion of the burning of the Khândava forest Subrahmanya went there carrying his weapon called ‘Sakti’ to fight Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna. (Aḍī Parva, Chapter 226, Verse 33).

(ii) Skanda was born from the semen of Siva which fell into Agni. So he got the name Skanda. (Skandafall, (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 223, Verse 18).

(iii) He once cut asunder the Krauṣṭa mountain.

(iv) Noticing the very great effulgence of Skanda, Indra feared loss of his place and immediately he clashed with the former. Indra’s Vajra (thunderbolt) hit Skanda on his right and from the wound emerged a person wearing golden armour, divine ear-rings and holding the Vel in his hands and he was named Viśākha. Frightened by his sight Indra sought refuge with Subrahmanya. (Vana Parva, Chapter 227).

(v) When he married Devasena his six mothers came and blessed him and his wife; he then told the mothers thus: “You live with my father, Siva. Until I become sixteen years of age I will be functioning as a spirit which kills children and the children killed by me will serve as your food.” As soon as he finished speaking, a terrible person just like Agni emerged from his body and it was called Raudragraha, which is known also by other names such as Skandāpanāra, Śāṅkungra, Pūtaliṅgra etc. This Graha is supposed to cause children’s death. (Vana Parva, Chapter 230).

(vi) Subrahmanya once in the company of Sudrādeva visited the holy place Bhoḍraṇa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 56).

(vii) Vāyuḥagavīn assumed responsibility for his protection. (Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 56).
(viii) He killed Mahishāaura. (Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 96).

SUCI IX. A Mahārṣi born in the family of Augra. By a curse of Vasiṣṭha, this Mahārṣi was born as a mortal, as the son of King Vījñāda. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

SUCI. The son of Suddha and the grandson of Aneša Trikalīpa was the son of Śuci. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

SUCI (NEEDLE). Iron needle is Purānicly important. There is a story connecting the iron needle of Bhārata and Viṣṇuśāna as follows:

Having killed Rāvana, Śrī Rāma anointed Viśvāmitra as the King of Lankā and returned to Ayodhyā. During the reign of Viśvāmitra, Lankā reached the highest stage of prosperity. Among the five metals, only gold was seen in Lankā. At this stage Viṣṇu got an iron needle from Bhārata. He kept it as a rare and valuable treasure in his palace.

Viṣṇu śāna who was an ardent devotee of Śrī Rāma used to cross the sea, come to Rāmakūṭa-temple and offer flower at the feet of Śrī Rāma, every day. Flower was brought in a big golden pot. Once Viṣṇu śāna placed the golden pot in the courtyard of the temple and went in with the flowers. After the worship, Viṣṇu śāna came out and taking the pot on his head returned to Lankā. Being inmersed in the thought of Śrī Rāma, Viṣṇu śāna did not look inside the pot. After reaching the palace he looked into the pot and saw a Brahmū sleeping in it. He was very pleased to see the Brahmū. So after welcoming him with hospitality, he brought the box in which he had kept the most precious treasure and placed it before the Brahmū who returned with the box to Bhārata. He eagerly opened the box and saw only an iron needle in it. The consternation of the Brahmū need only be imagined.

SUDAKŚATA I. The son of king Pauḍraka. Śrīkṛṣṇa killed Pauḍraka in battle and his head, cut off by Śrīkṛṣṇa, fell in the country of Kāṭi. Sudakśata who learned about the death of his father, went to Kāṭi and recognized the head by the ear-rings. Sudakśata made up his mind to kill Śrīkṛṣṇa somehow or other and began to do penance in Kāṭi before Śiva. Please with his penance Śiva appeared before him and advised him to create a wicked fairy from the fire of sorcery. Accordingly Sudakaśīna prepared a fire of sorcery, from which a wicked fairy came out and ran towards Śrīkṛṣṇa. Śrīkṛṣṇa sent his weapon the Disuṣ which cut off the head of the wicked fairy and from there the Disuṣ flew to Kāṭi and turned Sudakśita into ashes, and returned to Dvārakā. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10.)

SUDAKŚATA II. A king of Kāmboja (Kabuli). The following information is taken from Mahabhārata about this king.

(i) Sudakśata had been present at the Svayamvar marriage of Draupadi. (Adiv Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 15.)

(ii) He came with an ascendant army to help Durviodhana against the Pāṇḍavas in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 21.)

(iii) Sudakśita was a valiant fighter in the army of the Kauravas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 160, Verse 1.)

(iv) On the first day of the battle of Bhārata, there was a combat between Śrutakṛṣṇa and Sudakśita. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 66.)

(v) There was another combat between Abhimanyu and Sudakśita. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 66.)

(vi) Arjuna killed Sudakśita in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 61.)

(vii) The younger brother of Sudakśita confronted Arjuna to avenge the death of his brother and was killed by Arjuna. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 110.)

SUDAKŚITA III. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. Droṇāchārya shot him down from the chariot with an arrow. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 56.)

SUDARŚANA IV. A son of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. In the battle of Bhīrata, he attacked Bhīmasena and was killed by him. (M.B. Sāliya Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 31).

SUDARŚANA V. Son of Bhīravasundhī, king of Kosala. Manorāmā was the mother of Sudarśana. (For further details see under Bhīravasundhī).

SUDARŚANA VI. One of the five sons of Bhārata. Bhārata, the son of Drona, had married Bālī and the daughter of Viśvāscribe. Five sons named Summit, Rāṣṭabhrī, Sudarśana, Avaṇara and Dīhūṇakesu were born to Bhārata, who divided Bhārata among his five sons and went to Sālagrāma and did penance there and died. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 5).

SUDARŚANA VII. The son born to god Fire by his wife Sudarśanā. Sudarśanā was the daughter of Duryodhana (Nila) of the dynasty of Ikṣvāku. For the story of her marriage see under Sudarśanā. Sudarśana, the son of Fire, married Oghavatī the daughter of Oghavatī. That story is given below:

Oghavatī had two children, a daughter named Oghavatī and a son named Ogharata. Oghavatī gave her husband in marriage to Sudarśana who was wise and learned. That story is told in Kukkutā. Sudarśana lived to Oghavatī thus:—“You should honour guests in all ways. If it is the desire of a guest, you should not draw back from giving even your body. Whether I am present here or not a guest should not be insulted.” Oghavatī promised to obey the order of her husband to the letter. Sudarśana had been trying to become victorious over Mrītyu. (Death) until he reached Death and cut out some vulnerable point in Sudarśana’s life. While Sudarśana had gone to cut firewood, a Brahmin entered the hermitage and said to Oghavatī:—“If you do observe the duties of a householder show hospitality to me.” Hearing this, Oghavatī welcomed the Brahmin and performed the usual hospitality and asked him “What shall I do for you?” “Give yourself to me”, was the answer. Sudarśana was not contented with the usual hospitality and remembering the words of her husband, Oghavatī gave herself to the guest. Both of them entered the interior of the hermitage. At this moment Sudarśana returned with firewood, and looked for Oghavatī and called her aloud, several times. She got no reply. Then the Brahmin who was lying inside called out:—“Hi! Son of Fire! A guest has come. Your wife showed all kinds of hospitality. But I was not contented with them. Now she is offering herself to me.”

These words did not seem to make any change in Sudarśana. Dharmanvaa was much pleased, as Sudarśana had come out victorious in all these tests. He came out and appeared in his own form and blessed Sudarśana. Due to the blessing of Dharmanvaa, half of the body of Oghavatī flowed like the river Oghavatī and the other half was dissolved in the soul of her husband. Sudarśana thus earned victory over Mrītyu and obtained prosperity.

SUDARŚANA VIII. A Vidyādhara. Because of the curse of Aṅgirasa, this Vidyādhara was changed into a mountain snake. That story occurs as follows in Bhāgavata, Skanda 9.

While Sudarśana was playing about in the world of Gods with some Gandharva damsels, Angirasa and some other hermits came by that way. Sudarśana ridiculed them. Aṅgirasa became angry and changed him to a mountain snake by a curse. Sudarśana prayed for liberation from the curse. Angirasa said that in Devī’s service, Mahāvīra would incarnate as Śrī Krishna and when Krishna stood upon him, he would regain his original form.” Sudarśana became a big snake and began life in Ambādī. Once the people of Ambādī went to Devī’s forest and worshipped Mahāvīra. They spent the night on the banks of the river Kāmī. In the night the snake mentioned above, caught hold of the leg of Nandagopā. Seeing the snake moving, the people of Nandagopā flocked there and struck at the snake with burning faggots. But it was in vain. Finally Śrī Krishna came, and gave the snake a thrash. Instantly Sudarśana got his old form. He went to the world of gods.

SUDARŚANA IX. A brahmin son who lived in the Tṛṭyagya. The moment he touched the water in which Viṣṇu washed his feet, he founded on it the city of his aina and entered Vaikunṭha. This story which is given under, occurs in Padma Purāṇa, Brahma Khaṇḍa, Chapter 17.

There lived a brahmin son in Tṛṭyagya. He used to commit sins such as eating food on the eleventh lunar day, ridiculing conventional fast and vow, etc. When he died the men of Yama took his soul to the world of Yama. At his order Sudarśana was held in horrible excrescences for the period of hundred Mahāyugas. When he was released he was born on earth as a hog. Because he ate food on Hariśvantra (a fast day) he suffered hell for a long time. His next birth was that of a crow and lived on excreta. Once the crow drank the water which fell on the steps while washing the feet of Viṣṇu. The crow obtained remission of all his sins. On the same day it was caught in the net of a forestman and died. Then a divine chariot drawn by swans came and took the crow to the world of Viṣṇu.

SUDARŚANA X. The son of Dīghabhubu, who was born in the family of Manu. He conquered all the kingdoms and ruled as an emperor. The famous hermit Vasītha was his priest. Once Devī Mahākāli appeared to him in a dream and said to him “Very soon a flood will occur in the world. So go to the Himalayas with your wife and the priest Vasītha and stay there in a cave.” According to the instruction of Devi, Sudarśana took everybody with him and went to the Himalayas. The prophecy of Devī came true. The earth was filled with water. This deluge lasted for ten years. After that the earth resumed its original form and Sudarśana returned to Ayodhyā. (Bhāgavata Purāṇa, Pratisarga Parva, 1, 1).

It is mentioned in Kālīkā Purāṇa that Sudarśana had broken off a piece of a forest region of Himalaya and took it to his country and established it as the kingdom of Khandavagnāra and that after a short period king Vijaya of the Bhārata dynasty killed king Sudarśana and became the ruler of the city. (Kālīkā Purāṇa, 92).

SUDARŚANA XI. A wife of God Fire. This Sudarśana was the daughter of Duryodhana, the son of Durjaya of the Dvārakā dynasty. The mother of Sudarśana was Nāma. It is said that to beautiful a woman as Sudarśana had never been born. The God Fire was once fascinated by the beauty of Sudarśana who had been instructed to serve him, and wished to accept her as his wife. So he informed her of his desire. Being of a noble race, she said that a virgin ought to be given away by her parents. The God Fire approached the father of Sudarśana and informed him of every thing. When he knew that the person who made the request was the God Fire, the king gave his daughter Sudarśana as wife to the God Fire. (Durvāchana had another name ṛṣi). In the Purāṇas there is another statement also that Nila was the ruler of Mahīśmati. (See under Durvāchana and Nila Parva 6).

SUDARŚANA XII. An island. This is another name of Jambūdīvāpa. Once Śahjaya talked to Dhyāraṇī about this island. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 5).

SUDARŚANA XIII. A tree in the Jambū island. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Bhīma Parva, Chapter 7 that this tree was eleven thousand yojanas high.

SUDARŚANA XIV. (The Discus Sudarśana-weapon). 1) General information. The weapon of Mahīśvīnu. Two stories are seen about the origin of this weapon.

(i) The sun married Sambhū the daughter of Viśvākarmā. Sambhū complained to her father that she could not bear the radiance of the Sun. Viśvākarmā put the Sun in a turning machine and turned him and decreased the brilliance of him to what it was. The Sun produced by this process, Viśvākarmā made the discus-weapon, the aerial chariot Pārṣapaka, the Trident of Śiva, and the Ākṣi (lance) of Subrahmanya. Of these weapons the discus-weapon Sudarśana was given to Mahīśvīnu.

This is one story. (Viśṇu Purāṇa, Amīta 3, Chapter 2).

(ii) During the burning of the forest Khāṇḍavā, Indra clouded rain, and put out the fire. According to the second story, the God Fire gave the discus weapon Sudarśana to Śri Kṛṣṇa and the Gāndiva to Arjuna to fight against Indra. (See the word Khāṇḍavādhana).

Besides these two stories, several statements occur in various Purāṇas, about this weapon Sudarśana. As Sudarśana was in existence even before the incarnation of Śri Kṛṣṇa, the story that Viśvākarmā made it, ought to be given prominence. Very often Mahīśvīnu used to destroy enemies by this Sudarśana. Though Mahīśvīnu had taken several incarnations, only Śri Kṛṣṇa is mentioned in the Purāṇas as having used this weapon Sudarśana very often.

2) The power of Sudarśana. Sudarśana flies to the marks of the enemies, burning like fire. Once Mahīśvīnu sent the weapon Sudarśana towards the asuras. Then the havoc and destruction caused by this weapon, is described as follows:

The moment he thought of Sudarśana, to destroy the power of the enemy, it made its appearance like the Sun in the Solar region. It was a fearful sight. Emitting light and radiance from the blazing fire, the Sudarśana rested on the hand of Viśṇu; turning round with a tremendous speed, Viśṇu threw it at the enemies with his powerful hand like that of the trunk of an elephant, with a view to cleave the city of the enemies into pieces. That weapon which was burning in great flames like a great fire spreading radiance, flew into the midst of the enemy's army and instantly every one near it fell dead. Thus it flew about among the asuras and turned them to ashes. Then turning round and round in the air it drank the blood shed on the earth. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 19).

SUDARŚANA XV. Indra had a chariot named Sudarśana. (Mahābhārata, Viśṇu Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 3).

SUDASA I. A King of Kosala. This Sudāsa was a King who ought to be remembered every morning and evening. (Mahābhārata, Anuśasan Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 57).

SUDASA II. An Aryan King named Sudāsa is stated in Kṛyeda. It is mentioned in Kṛyeda Mahābhārata 1, Anuśa 11, Sūkta 53, that Viśvākarmā saved this King from a danger. (See under Durvāchana and Nila Parva 6).

SUDASA III. A King of Ayodhyā. He was the son of Sarvākṣa and the father of Kālmāśapāda. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9; Viśṇu Purāṇa, 4, 4, 30).

SUDATTA. One of the prominent wives of Śri Kṛṣṇa. The palace Ksetram in Dwārakā, was given to this wife. (Mahābhārata, Dańdaka Parva, Saññī Parva. Chapter 36).

SUDHDA. A King of the Bhṛgu dynasty. Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha mentions that he was the son of Anemas and Śuci's father.

SUKESHA I. The wife of Viśāla, the King of Matsya.

(i) General information. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Viśṇu Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 6, that this Sudeśa, the daughter of the King of Kekaya, had the name Cittā also. (See under Durvāchana and Nila Parva 6).

(ii) Other details.

(i) During the pseudonymity, Pāñcāli lived with Sudeśa in the guise of Sairandhri. (M.B. Viśṇu Parva, Chapter 9).

SUKESHA II. The wife of the King Bali. Five sons named Aniga, Varga, Kāla, Puṇḍra and Suha were born to the hermit Dirghatamas by this queen Sudeśa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 98: 30; Bhāgavata, Skandha 9; Harivānasha, 1, 39).

SUKESHA I. A son born to Śri Kṛṣṇa by Rukmiṇī. (See under Rukmiṇī).

SUKESHA II. A country in Indra, very famous, in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 4).

SUDEVA I. A brahmin who was a favourite of the King of Vidarbha. It was this brahmin who was sent by the King of Vidarbha to search for Damayanti. (See under Damayanti).

SUDEVA II. A captain of the army of King Ambaśīt. He was calm and fearless. Sudēva met with a heroic death in a battle and attained heaven. Indra gave him a suitable place. Later Ambaśīt died and came to heaven. There he saw his captain Sudeva and was amazed. He asked where he was that Sudēva was given a place in heaven. Indra replied that to fight fearlessly in the battle-field and meet with heroic death, was a yajña (sacrifice) and that due to this yajña Sudēva attained heaven. The King asked, when this took place. Indra continued: "Once Ambarita sent Sudeva to subdue the serpents and giants. Sudeva entered the battlefield and took up the spear of the enemy. Finding that it was impossible to defeat the army of giants, he sat down and meditated on Śiva, who appeared before him and encouraged him. A fierce battle followed in which Sudeva annihilated the army of the giants completely and he himself met with a heroic death. That is how he obtained heaven. (M.B. Daksinārāma, Sanjī Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 13.)

Sudeva III. The son of Harīyāna, the King of Kāśī. He was quite valiant and radiant. After the death of his father he was anointed as King of Kāśī. As soon as he became King, the son of King Vithāyāna attacked Sudeva and captured him. After this Divodasī became the King of Kāśī. (M.B. Anuśīha Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 12.)

Sudeva IV. A famous King, Nābhīga married Suprabhā, the daughter of the King Sudeva. The following is a story taken from Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa stating how this Sudeva who was a Kṣatriya by birth, became a Vaiśya by the curse of hermit Pramati. Once Nala, the friend of Sudeva, and the relative of Dhumrāraka, who was drinking a lot of liquor to rape the wife of the hermit Pramati. All this happened while King Sudeva was standing silently near Nala. Pramati requested King Sudeva repeatedly to save his wife. Sudeva replied: 'The Kṣatriya who could help the needy, could save your wife also. But I am a Vaiśya.' This arrogance of the King made the hermit angry. 'May you become a Vaiśya.' The hermit cursed King Sudeva and requested for liberation from the curse. 'When a Kṣatriya steals away your daughter-you will recover the lost feelings of Kṣatriya.' The hermit gave this liberation from the curse. Because of this curse Nābhīga stole away Suprabhā, the daughter of Sudeva and Sudeva got back the lost feelings of Kṣatriya.

Sudeva I. A daughter of the King of Agra named Anjana. The King Rṣaṇa was her son. (M.B. Atri Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 24.)

Sudeva II. A princess born in the dynasty of King Daśarha. Vikunṭha, a King of the Puru dynasty married Sudeva. The King Ajaratiya was their son. (M.B. Atri Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 36.)

Sudeva III. The wife of Ikṣvāku who was the son of Manu. This Sudeva was the daughter of Devārāta the King of Kāśī. Ikṣvāku and Sudeva are said to be the incarnations of Visūṣa and Devī Lakṣmī respectively. While the couple were walking in the forest, they saw a she-hog. That hog was the cursed form of a Brahmin woman named Sudeva. Sudeva, the wife of Ikṣvāku gave the merits she had earned in one year by her good deeds to Sudeva the she-hog and liberated her from her curse. This story occurs in Padma Purāṇa Bhūmikṣanda, Chapter 42. The story is given below:

Once King Ikṣvāku and his wife Sudeva were hunting on the banks of the Gaṅgā. Then a big hog came there with his wife and children. The hog was afraid of Ikṣvāku and his wife. "Look! Here comes Ikṣvāku the valiant, the son of Manu, come for hunting. I am going to fight with him," his wife said. "How did you get this bravery to fight with the king, you who always try to evade the forest-men?" "It is not bravery, my love. It is because I could go to heaven if I fight with the king valiantly and meet with heroic death!" replied the hog. The wife tried her utmost to dissuade her husband from his attempt. The children also tried to stop him. They could not change his mind. So all of them decided to help him as much as they could in his fight. They got ready for a fight against Ikṣvāku and his army.

The king's army saw the preparations of the hogs and their resolute stand. Struck with fear, they informed Ikṣvāku about it. The king ordered the noble hog to be caught. Ikṣvāku and his wife mounted on horse and followed the army. All the hounds ran towards the hogs barking. The army sent a volley of arrows at the hogs. The hog and his wife stopped the arrows. The army could not defeat the hogs. At last the king himself killed the hog with a club. While the king was looking on, that noble hog was changed to a noble Gandharva with four hands and divine clothes and ornaments. Leaving his old body of hog on the earth he rose up into the sky like the Sun and went to heaven. Seeing this sight Sudeva was struck with fear. She got down from the chariot and called the wife of the hog towards her. The wife of the hog, wounded all over, came to the queen Sudeva. Sudeva asked her about the previous history of her dead husband. The hog's wife said: "Lady! If you feel interested I shall tell you about the previous life of my dead husband and myself."

"My dear husband was a Gandharva named Raktakīvīyādhara, in the previous birth. Once he sat in the shade of a tree near the hermitage of Pulastya and began to sing with accompaniment. As the singing caused disturbance to his solitude the hermit Pulastya came and requested the Gandharva to shift to some other place. Raktkivīyādhara did not like to comply with the request of the hermit. At last Pulastya removed his hermitage to another place. Raktkivīyādhara then moved to Pulastya. Finally the Gandharva saw Pulastya. Seeing that he was alone, the Gandharva took the shape of a hog and entered the hermitage and began to wound with his tusk and to molest that radiant sage Pulastya. Thinking it to be a mere animal Pulastya suffered it for a long time. The hog continued its actions of molestation. It passed excrements in front of the sage, danced before him, played in front of him, fell down in the courtyard and rolled and did various other things. As it was an animal Pulastya forgave him. One day Raktkivīyādhara entered the hermitage as a hog, roared aloud, laughed aloud, cried aloud, sang aloud and in various other ways tried to change the mind of the hermit. Seeing all these, Pulastya began to think that it was not a hog. "A hog will not try to molest one continuously. I forgive him thinking him to be a mere animal. This must be that wicked Gandharva." Thus recognizing him Pulastya got angry and cursed him thus: "You tried to violate my penance in the shape of a hog. So you, great sinner; take the next birth as a hog." With grief the Gandharva ran to Indra and himself asked him of everything. Indra requested Pulastya to liberate the Gandharva from the curse. Accordingly Pulastya gave him remission that he would regain his original form when he was killed by the hands of the immensely good king Ikṣvāku." Sudevā was amazed on hearing this story of the dead hog, and asked her again, "You hog! You speak like a human being. How is it?"

The wife of the hog continued the story. "Lady! I also have taken rebirth as a hog. In my previous birth I was the daughter of a Brahmin named Vasudatta (Vasudevā) in the city of Saflura in Pâtaka. They named me Sudevā (Vasudevā). Because of the unlimited carelessness and foolishness of my father I grew up as an arrogant girl. In the meanwhile a Brahmin youth named Śrīkarmā, who was well-versed in all the branches of knowledge, and whose parents were dead, came to my house. My father gave me to that brahmin. I lived with him in my father's house. Being proud of the wealth and prosperity of my parents I did not care to render the services due to my husband. My husband who was a peaceful man bore everything.

At last because of my wickedness and immorality my husband left the country. My father hated me and expelled me from the house. My father feared that some calamity would happen to me as Kāthā was born to Padmāvatī, the wife of Ugrasena, by her illegal connection with persons other than her husband." Hearing about the birth of Kāthā, Sudevā asked the she-hog in this manner, "If you could have been born in Padmāvatī, the wife of Ugrasena, by her illegal connection with persons other than her husband, would he have left the country?"

Hearing the story of Kāthā, Sudevā asked the she-hog in this manner, "If you could have been born in Padmāvatī, the wife of Ugrasena, by her illegal connection with persons other than her husband, would he have left the country?"

"In days of old there was a king in Mathurā named Ugrasena, who married Padmāvatī the daughter of Satyaketa of Vaidabha. While the couple were living happily in Mathurā, Satyaketa wanted to see his daughter. He sent a messenger to Mathurā and brought Padmāvatī to Vaidabha. I walked along the vicinity of the palace in which she was born, enjoying the beauty of the scenery. She walked on and arrived on the mountain called Purpavīn, and sat on the bank of a lake. At that time a Gandharva named Godila (Dramila) came there. He fell in love with her. He took the shape of Ugrasena and came near her and talked with her. Thinking that her husband had come from Mathurā, to see her she embraced him. After a while she understood that the visitor was not her husband. She began to curse him. The visitor admitted that he was Godila an attendant of Vyāsavana. Godila went on his way. But she had become pregnant by that time. Her parents tried in various ways to destroy the child in her womb. One day the infant lying in her womb told her thus: "Mother! you do not know who I am. I am the rebirth of a powerful asura named Kāsinī. In ancient days Vyāsuna killed me in a battle between the gods and asuras. I have entered into your womb for revenge. Mother! you need not take the trouble to destroy me." Saying so, the infant stopped speaking. After ten years Padmāvatī gave birth to the mighty and strong Kāthā. He was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and he attained heaven."

Sudevā was struck with wonder at the story of Kāthā. She asked the she-hog to continue her own story. She continued her own story. "I have said that my father expelled me. Being shameless I walked away from there soon. Nobody helped me. Those who saw me scolded me. Days passed. Afflicted by a terrible disease, and trembling in this manner, I came to a big house. I entered the courtyard and begged for alms. It was the house of my husband Śrīkarmā. When I abandoned him he married another woman named Maṅgalā and was leading a prosperous life. Maṅgalā gave me food. Śrīkarmā asked me who I was. I told him my story. He remembered me, his former wife. Maṅgalā also felt compassion for me. They gave me gold ornaments and made me stay there. But my conscience pricked me. Thus burning internally I died.

My soul went to hell. After the suffering of a very long period, I took birth again as a Jackal. Then I became a dog, and then a snake. After that I passed through the births of a horse, a cat, and a rat. Then Brahmā had put me in the wombs of all kinds of animals. Now I have taken the birth of a she-hog. Lady! Your husband Ikṣvāku is the incarnation of Vyāsuna in portion and yourself, that of Lakṣmi in portion. If you would give me the merits you have earned for one day by your good deeds, I could leave off all these mean births and attain heaven."

The eyes of Sudevā were full when she heard the story of the hog. She gave to the she-hog, the merits she had earned by good deeds for one year. The hog was changed to a divine woman of youth and beauty. Immediately a divine chariot came down from heaven and took her to heaven, while everybody was looking on. Ikṣvāku and Sudevā returned to their palace much pleased at the redemption of the she-hog.

SUGRĪVĀ I. Bāli and Sugrīva were brothers. Their mother was Anūra who once put the guise of a woman. At that time he was called by the name Aruni. Bāli was the son born to Indra by Aruni and Sugrīva was the son born to the Sun by Aruni. Both of them were brought up in the hermitage of Gauthama. When the King of Kīṣkindha Rākasāra died, Bāli was appointed the king of Kīṣkindha. Sugrīva lived with Bāli, serving him. At this time Bāli engaged in a battle with the asura Dundubhi. Bāli chased Dundubhi into a cave. Placing Sugrīva at the mouth of the cave, Bāli went in. By the magic and sorcery of Dundubhi, it appeared to Sugrīva that Bāli was killed by Dundubhi. Sugrīva returned to Kīṣkindha. Bāli who came out, followed Sugrīva to kill him due to misunderstanding. Bāli chased Sugrīva all over the world. It is mentioned in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kīṣkindha Kanda, Sarga 46, that the knowledge of the lay-out of the various countries in the world was not got in this running, helped him later, in the search for Sitā. At last Sugrīva entered Rāmakacala. Bāli had been once cured that if he entered this mountain his head would be broken into pieces. Hanūmān became the minister of Sugrīva. It was during this period that Śri Rāma and Lakṣāman came by that way in search of Sitā. Sugrīva and Śri Rāma entered into a treaty. Bāli should be killed and Kīṣkindha should be given to Sugrīva in place of which Rāma should be helped to find out Sitā and get her back.

Śri Rāma killed Bāli and gave Kīṣkindha to Sugrīva, who sent monkey-armies in all directions to find out Sitā. Hanūmān found out Sitā and returned to Śri Rāma, who fought a great battle with Rāvana, in which battle Sugrīva took a prominent part. It was Kumbhakarṇa, who oppressed the monkey army much. When he caught Sugrīva, Kumbhakarṇa lost his ears and nose. Then he caught hold of the monkey warriors and Śri Rāma cut off his hands with arrows. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 1). After the war, when Rāma and others returned to Ayodhyā, Sugrīva also accompanied them. After that Sugrīva returned to Kīṣkindha. After a few years Candragupta, the second son of Sahasrāṅgāha Rāvana, carried away the daughter of Sugrīva. Hearing this, Śri Rāma confronted Sahasrāṅgāha Rāvana, who was killed by the arrow of Śitā.

Sugrīva participated in the horse-sacrifice performed by Śri Rāma. The control of the army was in the hands of Sugrīva, the financial affairs, with Vīshāzhana and cause, powers, with Lakṣāman. When the sacrifice was completed, Sugrīva returned to Kīṣkindha.

SUHVA. (SUHMA) A king of the Bharata dynasty. Suhva was the son of Bali and grandson of Surapā. Bali had no direct sons. Being miserable due to the absence of sons, Bali approached the hermit Dirghatamas, by whom the queen gave birth to six sons. They were Anga, Vanga, Kalina, Suha (or Suhva), Punḍra and Adrupa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SUJANU. A great saint. This hermit stopped Śrī Kṛṣṇa on his way to Hastinapura and conversed with him. (Mahabhārata, Dākṣināyapātha, Udvyoga Parva, Chapter 83).

SUJĀTA I. One of the hundred sons of Dhytarāśtra. He attacked Bhismasena in the battle of Bhāratā and Bhīmasena killed him. (M. B. Śaṅkay Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 8).

SUJĀTA II. A monkey King. Sujāta was one of the sons born to Pulasta by his wife Śvetā. (Brahmanda Purāṇa, 2. 7, 180-181).

SUJĀTĀ. The daughter of the hermit Uddālaka. (See under Khaḍgodara).

SUJYEŚTHA. A king who was the son of Agnimitra and the father of Vairuṇimitra. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 12).

SUKA I. (SUKADEVA). The son of Vyāsa.

1) Birth. The story of Vyāsa once wished to have a son. So he began to worship Śiva for the purpose. His desire was to have a son who would combine in him the essential qualities of fire, earth, water, air and ether. He did tapas for a hundred years. Because of the austerity of his tapas, his locks of hair began to blaze like flames of fire. At last Śiva appeared and blessed him to have a son according to his wish.

After receiving his boon, Vyāsa returned to his āśrama. Soon after his arrival there, an Apsaras named Chṛṣṇī came there in the form of a parrot. On seeing her beauty Vyāsa had an involuntary emission of semen. Suka’s birth was from this semen. (For further details see Parva 2, under Chṛṣṇī).

2) Suka’s Boyhood. It was Siva who performed the Upaṇayana (wearing the sacred thread) ceremony of Suka. Since he was born out of the semen which was the result of the fascination for a parrot, the boy was named “Suka”. He was a divine boy. Soon after his birth, he grew up into an exceptionally brilliant boy. He went to Bṛhadāpati and mastered all knowledge. After staying with Bṛhadāpati for some years, he returned to his father’s āśrama.

3) In Vyāsa’s hut. Vyāsa was very happy at the arrival of his son after completing his education. In due course he thought of getting his son married to a suitable girl and to prepare him for an ideal Gṛhaśāramā. But Suka did not fall in with his father’s proposal. All the efforts of Vyāsa to persuade him were in vain. At last he told Suka that he was pleased with his stern resolve and allowed him to pursue his life as a Samyāti, if he wished for it.

From that time Sukadeva and Śrīta, the disciple of Vyāsa began the study of Bhāgavata. But Suka did not find happiness in that study either. Vyāsa taught him spiritual philosophy. Even then Suka could not find mental satisfaction. Vyāsa brought him to Mithilā. At that time there was none who equaled Janaka, the then King of Mithilā. Before sending him away, Vyāsa made his son promise that he would return to his āśrama, immediately after leaving Mithilā.

4) Suka in Mithilā. Suka started his journey to Mithilā on foot. He passed through many cities and towns on his way. He visited places inhabited by different classes of people like yogins, sages, mendicants, Vaikhānasas, Śāktas, Pāṣupatas, Sauras, Śaivas, Vaśiṇivas, etc. After taking two years to cross Mahāmeu and one year for crossing Himālāya he reached Mithilā. At the very sight of the land of Mithilā with its inhabitants living in luxury and prosperity, Sukadeva was filled with wonder.

One of the sentries at the palace gate who saw the dignified bearing and majestic figure of Suka, standing at the entrance, greeted him with joined palms and conducted him into the royal palace. From there, a minister took him to the interior of the palace, where a passage led him to a beautiful park full of flowering trees and swimming pools. After giving him a seat in the park the minister left the place. There, he was attended by women who were like celestial beauties. But Suka was not happy even in their company or attentions. He spent the whole night in deep meditation. The next morning King Janaka visited Suka. After the exchange of customary greetings, Janaka enquired of him the object of his visit. Suka answered that he came there to learn from Janaka the way to salvation, as directed by his father.

On hearing this, Janaka said:—“After Upaṇayana, (investiture with the sacred thread) a Brahmāna should study the Vedas. He should discharge his duties to the Devas and to his Pits by tapas, worship of the guru and Brahmacarya. After the study of the Vedas, one should master the sciences. He should give Guru-dakṣina (fee to the teacher). Then the pupil may return home with the permission of the Guru (preceptor). After reaching home he should begin gṛhaśāramā. After the birth of children, he should follow Vana-prasthaśāramā. In that āśrama, a Brahmāna should kindle fire in his soul. He should then renounce the duḥṣaṅge, rise above all desire and remain in Brahmāśrama.” After receiving Janaka’s advice, Suka returned to his father.

5) Domestic Life. Sukadeva married the beautiful Pīrvā, daughter of the Pīrvs and thus began his gṛhaśāramā in Vyāsa’s āśrama. He had four sons named Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprabha, Śhūri and Devasrūṇa and a daughter named Kṛiti, by Pīrvā. Kṛiti was married to Aṇu, the son of King Vahṛāja. (Devī Bhāgavata, 1st Skandha).

6) Other details.

(i) Vyāsa composed Bhārata and taught it to Suka. (M. B. Chapter 1, Verse 104).

(ii) Sukadeva recited the Mahābhārata story containing 14 lakhs of stanzas to Gandharvas, Yaksas and Rākṣasas. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 106; Svargaśroha Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 55).

(iii) Sukadeva taught them the entire Vedas and the Mahābhārata story. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 89).

(i-v) Śuka attended Yudhisthira's assembly. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 11).

? The End. While Śukadeva was thus leading his family life, teaching the Vedas and reading the Purāṇas, Nārāda happened to pay a visit to him. His conversation with Nārāda drew Śukadeva nearer to the path of Mokṣa. He left his father, Veda Vyāsa and his own family, went to the peak of Kailāsa and stayed there doing tapas to Paramārtava. At last he became a perfect Siddha and rising up to the Heavens, stood there as a second sun. Devarāja began to praise Śukadeva.

His father Vyāsa was in deep grief at his disappearance and left his śārāmaṇa in search of Śuka. After wandering in many places he came to Kailāsa where Śuka had performed tapas and called him. Śiva who saw him utterly tired and weak took pity on him and comforted him in the following words: "Did you not pray to me for a son who would combine in himself the essences of the Pacchaśvē? As a result of the tapas you have done and by my blessing, such a glorious son was born to you. Śuka has attained the highest position which is inaccessible to those who have not conquered their senses and difficult to attain even by the gods. Why do you worry about Śuka? Th glories acquired by your eminent son will continue undiminished as long as the mountains and oceans exist. I give you my blessing that an image exactly like your son will always accompany you from today." Just then, an image which closely resembled his son appeared before Vyāsa who was filled with rapture.

It is believed that even today if any one calls Śiva at the place where Śiva spoked to Vyāsa in answer to his call, Śiva would respond to the call. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapters 392 and 399; Devi Bhāgavata, 1st Śrītandha).

ŚUKA II. A messenger of Rāvana. This Śuka had a friend named Śāruṇa. These two persons were expert spies who used to gather secret and important pieces of information from the strongholds of Rāvana's friends and enemies and passed them on to Rāvana.

Soon after Śrī Rāma entered Lankā, Rāvana sent Śuka and Śāruṇa to Śrī Rāma's camp. After taking a distant view of the surroundings, they entered the camp of Śrī Rāma in the form of monkeys. Taking care not to come within the observation of Vībhishana, they went about the military camps, gathering secret information. Just then they were met by Jámbavān and Hanumān. After closely observing them for a considerable time, they understood that they were enemy spies. The monkey-heroes promptly seized them and produced them before Sugriva. Confused and frightened under a shower of questions they sought the protection of Śrī Rāma. While Śrī Rāma was interrogating them, Vībhishana happened to come there. At his sight, Śuka and Śāruṇa were alarmed. Grabping the whole situation in an instant, Vībhishana kicked both of them when they assumed their former shapes as Rākṣasas. The monkey-leaders sprang at them. The Rākṣasas begged for pardon; and promised for Śrī Rāma's protection. Śrī Rāma forgave them and set them free. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa; Kambara Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

ŚUKA III. I. A king of the Lunar dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

ŚUKA IV. A king of the Śāryāti dynasty. He was the son of Pṛastā. He had conquered all countries in the world and after performing many yāgas, he renounced his kingdom and attained Mokṣa by doing tapas on Satatsūra mountain. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Daśakanya Paṭhā, Chapter 123).

ŚUKA V. Son of Rākṣas, king of Gāndhāra. He was slain by Irāvān in the course of the Bhārata Yuddha. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90, Verse 26).

ŚUKA VI. Son of the monkey Śarabha. Rīka was the son of Śuka by Vīyāghri. (Brahmaṇḍa Parāṇa, 3, 8, 289).

ŚUKA VII. A Mahārṣi who was the contemporary of Anuha of Dākṣa Paṭcāla and of king Brahmadatta. This sage lived before the time of the other Śuka who was the son of Vyāsa. This sage Śuka had six sons, namely Bhūrīravas, Śambhu, Prahubhi, Kaṇṭha, Saurā (Sauraprabha) and Daśarātmata by his two wives Pārvati and Ekaśrīrāt. (Brahmaṇḍa Parāṇa, 3-8-93 Vāyu Parāṇa, 70-84; Devī Bhāgavata, 1-14; Nārāyaṇa, 1-58).

ŚUKA VIII. A woman who loved and honored her husband. (Brahmaṇḍa Parāṇa, 3-8-93).

ŚUKA IX. A mountain. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śāruṇa Parva, Chapter 38, that this mountain, which is famous in the Purāṇas, stands on the western side of DVRĀKĀ.

ŚUKAMALĀ. A Yakṣa. This Yakṣa was the son born to Manuva by Daśarātmata. (Brahmaṇḍa Parāṇa, 3, 7, 129).

ŚUKABHĀJANA. A Rākṣasa on the side of Rāvana. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Sarga 9).

ŚUKANDAKA. A country in ancient India. (Mahābhārata Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 53).

ŚUKANYĀ I. The wife of the hermit Cyavana. See under Cyavana, Para 3.

ŚUKANYĀ II. The wife of the hermit Mātarīsvē. The hermit Mātkapāka was the son born to Mātarīsvē by Śukanyā. (See under Mātkapāka).

ŚUKARA. A country celebrated in the Purāṇas. Kṛti, King of Śukara had presented thousands of Elephants to Yudhīṣṭhira's Rājaśyāya. (M.B. Śabha Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 25).

ŚUKARA. A hell. (See under Kāla, the section 'Hell').

ŚUKARAMUKHA. A hell. (See under Kāla, the section 'Hell').

ŚUKARMĀ I. One of the two followers, given to Subrahmangya by Vībhishana. Subrāma was the other follower. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 42).

ŚUKARMĀ II. One of the teacher priests of Śāmadeva. This Śukarmā, the son of Sutva, divided the Śāmadeva into a thousand branches. (See under Gupparāmparkā).

ŚUKARMĀ III. A Brahmāna who had earned merits of good deeds by serving his parents. (For further details see under Pippalāda 1).

ŚUKASANGĪTĀ. A Gandharva. (For further details see under Pramohini).

SUKEŚA (SUKEŚI).

1) General information A rakṣasa (giant) who was the son of Vidyukṣa and Śālikatākā. When Brahmac asked the Subjects to look after his creation those who said 'Rakṣasmēhe' became Rakṣasas (giants) and those who said 'Yakṣamāhe', the Yakṣas (a clan of semi gods). Once two brothers named Hēti and Prathēti were born in the clan of Rākṣasa. Prahati remained unmarried and took the life of penance. He married Bhayā, the sister of Kala. A son named Vidyutiketa was born to the couple. Vidyutiketa married Sākākapāṇī, the daughter of Sandhyā. Sākākapāṇī delivered a son. But wishing to enjoy the company of her husband, she abandoned the son and lived with her husband. The child which was as bright as the rising Sun, putting its folded fist in its mouth, cried aloud. Paramaśiva and Pārvatī, who were travelling along the sky mounted on the bull, heard the cry of the infant and looked at the spot from which the cry arose. On seeing the infant, Pārvatī took pity on it. Siva blessed the child, which instantly grew as old as its mother. Siva gave the Rākṣasa prince immortality and a city which could travel through the sky. Paramaśiva and Pārvatī, who delivered the moment they became pregnant and that the child would grow equal to its mother in age, as soon as it was born. Sūkṣma was the son of Vidyutiketa and Sākākapāṇī. Sūkṣma was delighted at the boons he got, and travelled wherever he pleased, in his city.
Sūkṣma married Devavati, the daughter of Grūhālaka a Gaṇḍhāra. Sūkṣma and Devavati were the sons of this couple. (Uttara Rāmāyana).
2) The city of Sūkṣma fell on the ground. Sūkṣma pleased Siva by penance. Siva made him invincible and gave him a city which travelled through the sky. Because of these boons, the Rākṣasa became righteous and piety.
He lived in the city with other Rākṣasas. Once Sūkṣma went to the forest Magadha and visited the hermits there. He asked them about the means to attain prosperity in this world and the other worlds. The hermits gave him long exhortations. They told him about the various hells given to sinners. Thus Sūkṣma became righteous-minded and sainted. He returned to his city and called together all the Rākṣasas and spoke to them about what he had learned from the hermits.
Sūkṣma said, "The hermits taught me the means to attain heaven. They are Non-killing, Truth, not stealing, cleanliness, control of all outward gaya energies, liberality, kindness, forgiveness, abstenance, good usages etc. So it is my order that all of you observe these good things." The Rākṣasas were pleased at the words of Sūkṣma. They began to lead a righteous life.
In the city, a town sprang up with prosperity. The sun's radiance increased to such an extent that the Sun and the moon and the stars found it difficult to continue their travels.
Thus the city of the Rākṣasa shone as the sun in the day and as the moon in the night. The progress of the Sun in the day became indiscernible. Due to its brightness the Rākṣasa sun seemed to be the moon and thinking that it was night, the lotus flowers folded in the day and bloomed in the night. Cocoy was caused in the earth as well as in the world of the gods. The Sun became unpopular. So he tried to find out the cause. At last he found out the cause. He became angry. He looked with fury at the city of the Rākṣasa. Hit by the look, the city lost its merits and began to sink down to the earth.
When the city fell down Sūkṣma called Siva and cried aloud. Siva looked round to see what happened to his devotee. He understood that the sun was the culprit.
Siva looked at the sun with furious eyes. Instantly the sun was dropped from the Solar region to the air. The hermits saw the Sun coming slowly to the earth. They called out loudly, "If you want to be well in falling, go and fall in Hariketra. The sun called out, "What is Hariketra?" "Hariketra is Vārāṇasi from Yoga āyī to Kālavādasāna," the hermits replied. Hearing this they fell in Vārāṇasi. Then to lessen the heat the sun dipped and splashed in Aśi tirtha and Vārāṇasi tirtha.

Brahma knew this, and informed Siva of it. Siva came to Vārāṇasi and took the sun by his hands and gave him the title 'Lośa' and sent him back in the chariot. After this Brahma went to Sūkṣma and sent his city with the Rākṣasas in it, back to the sky, and the Sun was fixed in the sky as before. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 15).

SUKHA I (SUKESHA). See under Sukha a.

SUKHA II. The daughter of the king of Gândhāra.
This Sūkṣma was the wife of Srī Kṛṣṇa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 36 that Srī Kṛṣṇa gave her a palace, the doors of which shone as the gold of Ijāmbūrāda.

SUKHA III. A celestial maid of Alakāpuri. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anu āṭa Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 45, that she performed a dance in honour of the vast of Astāvāraka, in the palace of Kubera.

SUKHA IV. The daughter of Kuvārya the king of Magadha. She was married to Marutta (the third).
(Markandeya Purāṇa, 129).

SUKETANA. A king of the Bhūgu family. He was the son of Sumbha and the father of Dharmakṣeta. (Bhagavata, Sankha 9)

SUKETU. A king of the Solar dynasty. It is stated in Bhagavata, Sankha 9 that this king was the son of Nandivardhana and the father of Devarāta.

SUKETU II. A king of the Pūru dynasty. He became famous under the name Viraśā. He was one of the five sons of Bharata. The five sons were Suhrotra, Sukotā, Gaya, Garibha and Suketu. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 27).

SUKETU III. A king of ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 189, Verse 9, that this Suketu and his son Sunandha were present at the Śvayamvara marriage of Draupadi.

SUKETU IV. A son of Śucipida. He was killed in the battle of Bharata by Drona (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 33).

SUKETU V. A mighty king who stood on the side of the Pândavas and fought against the Kauravas in the Bharata battle. This king was the son of Citraketo, was killed by the arrow of the teacher Kṛpa. (M.B.
Karna Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 21).

SUKETU VI. The father of Tākākā. It is stated in Kamba Rāmāyana, Bālakanda, that this Sutkata was the son of the Gandharva King Surakṣaka. (See under Tākākā for further details).

SUKI. A daughter of Kaśyapa Prājāpati. Five daughters named Kṛūrīmi, Ḍhāsi, Śyeni, Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Suki were born to Kaśyapa by his wife Tāntra. Kṛūrīmi gave birth to Āyatā, Ḍhāsa were born to Ḍhāsi and eagles and kites were born to Śyeni. Dhṛtarāṣṭra gave birth to swans and Cakravākā. Suki gave birth to Nāth and Vinātā was the daughter of Nātā. (Vāmiki Rāmāyana, Aranyakānda, Sarga 14).

SUKLA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pándavas. He was a native of Pāṇḍula country.
Mahābhārata, Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 45, mentions that he was slain by Karna during the Bhārata battle.

SUKRA (SUKRAŚARYA) I. Preceptor of the Asuras.

1) Birth. Views differ as to whether Sukra was the son or grandson of Bhṛgu. The Purāṇas state that Pulomā was the wife of Bhṛgu. Sukra has another name, Kāya. Kāya means the son of Kavi. Some authorities say that Kavi was Bhṛgu’s son, while others think that Kavi was Bhṛgu himself. Sukra’s mother is referred to as “Kāyamātī” in many places. Sukra is referred to as the strongest of the seven sons born to Bhṛgu and Pulomā. In the light of these references it is reasonable to consider Sukra as the son of the sage Bhṛgu. “Kavi” must be supposed to be another name of Bhṛgu. Utanās was another name for Sukra.

2) Last story. Once the sage Bhṛgu lived in the valley of Mandara mountain, performing austere tapas. Sukra who was then a boy, used to attend on his father. One day when Bhṛgu was absorbed in “Nirvikalpasamādiḥ” (deep meditation) the lonely Sukra was appreciating the beauty of the sky above him. There was no one else by his side. At that time he happened to see an extremely beautiful aparā beauty passing all around in the sky. His heart was filled with delight at the sight. All his thoughts were centred on her and she sat absorbed in her bewitching charm. In his imagination he followed Indra and reached Indraloka. Indra greeted him with honour. After that Sukra, attended by the heavenly beings went about sight-seeing in Heaven. There he learnt that Kāyamātī, the wife of Bhṛgu, had he seen earlier, in the midst of several other women, they fell in love at first sight. To fulfill his desire Sukra enveloped the whole place in darkness. The other women left the place. The aparā beauty approached Sukra and both of them entered a hut formed by the thick foliage of creeper plants and indulged in sensual pleasures. Sukra spent a period of fifteen years in this company of female devatas. At the end of this period, Sukra returned to earth. Because of his close association with Munīśvara, that boy grew up like a sage and spent a period of one Manvantara, leading an austere life in the valley of the Meru mountain. At that time his aparā woman had been born as a female deer, as the result of a curse. By their connection in the previous birth, the Brahmāna fell in love with that female deer and begot a human child by his union with her. With that the austerities of his life were at an end. All his thoughts were now directed towards the future glory of his son and he ignored even his spiritual duties. Not long after, he died of snake bite. Later, he was born as the son of the king of Madra and ruled the country for many years. After that he took birth in many other wombs and at last was born as the son of a Maharāja living on the bank of the river Ganga. Sukra’s body which was by the side of Bhṛgu dropped to the earth after being exposed to the wind and sun for a long time. But owing to Bhṛgu’s power of tapas and the holiness of the aśrama, birds and animals did not eat the body. After 1,000 dīvyaśāsuras, sage Bhṛgu opened his eyes from his samādhi but he did not find his son near him. A famished and worn out body was lying before him. Within the wrinkles of the skin, small birds were nesting and frogs took refuge in the hollow of the stomach. Enraged at the premature death of his son, he was about to curse Yama, the god of Death. Coming to know of this, Brahmāna (Yama) appeared before him and said:—“We honour and adore you as a great tapasvi. You should not ruin your tapas. I have devoured numerous Brahmānās. I have already swallowed Rudras and Viṣṇudevas many times. All of you are my food. It is ordained by Fate. Even Brahmā is not indestructible at the end of a Kalpa. Knowing all these facts, why do you think of cursing me? Your son fell into this state because of his own act. While you were in a state of Samādhi your son’s mind left its body and went up to Heaven. There he spent many years indulge in sensual pleasures in the company of the celestial beauty Viśvācī. Then he was born as a Brahmāna in Daśakumāra country. In his next birth he became the King of Kosala. After that passing through many births in succession he is now performing tapas on the bank of the river Sīraṅgī as the son of a Brahmāṇa, under the name, Viṣṇudeva. Open your inner eye and see for yourself.”

After saying this Dharmanāra revived the body of Sukra who rose up and did obeisance to his father. (Jānaśvātya, Shiśupālakāram.)

3) Domestic Life. It is mentioned that Sukra had several wives and children. In Devi Bhāgavata there is a story of Jayaṇī, daughter of Indra who was Sukra’s wife for about ten years. (See under Jayaṇī II). Priyaprāya, the brother of Utanāpāda had a daughter named Cūrjāsvati by his wife Surūpā. In Devi Bhāgavata, 8th Skanda it is stated that Sukraśāra married Cūrjāsvati and he had a daughter Devprap_H in her. Māthārāna, Adi Parva, Chapter 65 mentions that Sukra was the akārya (preceptor) of the Asuras and his four sons were the priests of the Asuras. Sukra had a daughter named “Arā”. (See under Arā). Besides, Sukra had another wife named Sataparva.

But no child was born to Sataparva. Devi, wife of Varuṇa’s elder brother, was a daughter of Sukra. Cūrjāsvati was the most famous among Sukra’s wives.

4) Reunited his mother. See under Kāyamātī.

5) Jnāmadāni was restored to life. See the 8th para under Jnāmadāni.

6) Sukra cursed Daṇḍa. See under Arā.

7) Cursed Tāpōṣi. See the 4th Para under Devayānī.

8) How Sukra lost his eye. Sukra lost one of his eyes during the time of Mahābhārata, the Aśura King. Mahāvijaya incarnation as Vāmana and begged three feet of earth from Mahābhārat. Since Sukra tried to obstruct it, Viṣṇu put out one of Sukra’s eyes with the point of a darbha grass. (For more details see 3rd Para under Mahābhārata).

9) Siva swallowed Sukra. Once Sukra invaded Kubera and plundered all his wealth. The distressed Kubera informed Siva about it. Siva at once started up with his weapon, shouting “Where is he?” Sukra appeared on the top of Siva’s trident. Siva caught hold of him and swallowed him. Sukra who moved about in Siva’s stomach found the excessive heat there, unbearable and so he became exhausted. In his helpless state he began to worship Siva for his mercy. At last Siva permitted him to escape through his penis and Sukra thus came out. (M.B. Sánta Parva, Chapter 290).

10) Other details.

(i) Once Sukrācarya had adorned the office of Education Minister of Mahānāma. At that time Cikpurā was the War Minister, Tāmara was Finance Minister, Asōma was the Prime Minister, Viṣṇu was the Foreign Minister, Udāka was the Military Commander and Sukra was the Education Minister. (Devī Bhāgavata, Sub Sandha).

(ii) Agnī Puraṇa, Chapter 51 states that Sukra should be installed in temples with his Kamāṇḍala (a vessel for carrying water) and wearing his garland.

(iii) At the time of the war between Devas and Asuras, Sukra taught Surana a mantra to destroy everything. (Skanda Puraṇa, Asura Kanda).

(iv) Sukra was Prahlāda’s Guru (preceptor). (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

(v) Sukra worshipped Siva and received from him “Mṛtasañjñi Mantra” (Māntra having power to revive the dead). (Vāmanā Puraṇa, Chapter 62).

(vi) Sukra had prohibited drinking. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 76, Verse 57).

(vii) He had shone in Indra’s assembly. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 22, Sābhā Parva).

(viii) Sukra exists in Brahmā’s assembly in the form of a planet. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 29).

(ix) Sukra resides with other Asuras on the top of the Meru mountain. All precious stones are in the possession of Sukra. Even Kubera (the god of wealth) lives by borrowing one-fourth of Sukra’s wealth. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 22).

(x) Sukra was among those who visited Bālīṣa as he lay on the bed of arrows. (M.B. Sānta Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 8).

(xi) Once Sukrācarya was the priest of Emperor Pṛthu. (M.B. Sānta Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 110).

(xii) On another occasion Sukra sent Indra to Prahlāda to obtain prosperity. (M.B. Sānta Parva, Chapter 124, Verse 27).

(xiii) By his power of Yoga Sukra once grabbed all the wealth of Kubera. (M.B. Sānta Parva, Chapter 289, Verse 9).

(xiv) He got the name “Sukra” because he came out through “Śivalinga” (Siva’s penis) and thereby became a son of Pürvati. (M.B. Sānta Parva, Chapter 289, Verse 32).

(xv) Sukra learnt Siva’s Sabaaraṇāma (Thousand names) from the sage Tāndi and taught it to Gauara. (M.B. Anuśaṇa Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 177).

(xvi) Mahābhārata, Anuśaṇa Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 129, mentions that Bhīṣma had seven sons-Gavvana, Vajapeyula, Suci, Asura, Sukra, Savana and Vībhu.

(xvii) Once in answer to a question of Mahābhārata, Sukra referred to the importance of Puspadana (gift of flowers). (M.B. Anuśaṇa Parva, Chapter 98).

(xviii) In his old age Sukra observed Vānaprastha and attained Heaven. (M.B. Sānta Parva, Chapter 244, Verse 17).

(xix) In Mahābhārata, several other names like Bahrava, Bāhravādāyāda, Bhrigūṣreṣṭha, Bhrigūdvaha, Bhriguvidvaha, Kaviputra, Kāvya and Uṣanas are given for Sukra.

ŚUKRA II. A son of Vasiṣṭha. Seven sons were born to Vasiṣṭha by his wife Ėṛṣṭa; they were, Rajas, Gotra, Cridāvābāhu, Savana, Aṅgā, Sutapasa and Sukra. All these seven persons were the Saptarishis of the third Manvantaram (Vishnu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 10).

In Agni Puraṇa, Chapter 20 the names of the seven sons of Vasiṣṭha and Ėṛṣṭa are given as Rajas, Ėṛṣṭa, Cridāvābāhu, Savana, Aṅgā, Sukra and Sutapasa.

ŚUKRA III. A king who belonged to the dynasty of Emperor Pṛthu. Two sons, Anantarāma and Vādī were born to Pṛthu. Anantarāma had a son named Hā vibrāhā by wife Śikhandini. Hā vibrāhā married Dhiṣapā who was born in Agukula. Six sons were born to them. They were, Prācīnabharī, Sukra, Gayā, Kriṣṇa, Vrāja and Ājīva. (Vishnu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 14).

ŚUKRATU. A King in ancient India. When once Sahāyata talked in praise of the ancient Kings of fame in India, this King Sukrata was also mentioned. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 21).

ŚUKRSA. A liberal hermit. A story about this hermit occurs in Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa. Once Indra wanted to test Sukra. So he came in the guise of a bird and requested for human flesh. Then the hermit called his sons and asked them to give their flesh to the bird. They were not prepared to do so. Sukra got angry and cursed his sons that they would be born as birds. Accordingly the sons of the hermit took birth in the Garuda family under the names Dronaputra, Pingalaka, Vībhubheta, Sūpruta and Śūmukha. As a remission of the curse, the hermit said that even as birds they would be having wisdom and knowledge. After this, to keep his word, Sukra got ready to cut his own flesh for the bird. Then Indra appeared in his own form and blessed the hermit.

SUKUMĀRĀ IV. A Sāriputra poet. There is a story about the devotion of Sukumāra to his teacher. Though Sukumāra was a dutiful student, his teacher used to scold him always. Consequently Sukumāra harboured malice in his heart against his teacher. One night Sukumāra got on the upper attic of the house of the teacher with a big stone. His aim was to drop the stone on the head of the teacher. But that night the presence of the teacher and his wife was about Sukumāra. The wife asked the teacher why he was holding his disciple so often, when he was so dutiful and righteous. The teacher said that he loved him most and that the chastisement was meant to make him better and better. When Sukumāra heard this his heart was broken. With tears in his eyes, he got down with the stone and disappeared in darkness.

Next morning Sukumāra had no peace of mind. He approached the teacher. He asked the teacher “What is the punishment destined for him who had tried to kill his teacher?” The teacher replied that he should die a slow death in the fire made by the husk of paddy. Instantly Sukumāra made a pit and stood in it and filled the pit with husk up to his neck and set fire to the pile. When the teacher knew that the culprit was Sukumāra, he was filled with grief. He tried his best to dissuade his beloved disciple from his attempt. But it was in vain. While he was slowly burning in the fire he composed and sang the great poem ‘Śrī Karṇa Vīlāsa’. The poet was not able to complete the twelfth Sarga of Śrī Karṇa Vīlāsa. The sixty-sixth stanza was the last one he sang. Śrī Karṇa was showing Saṭyaabhāmā, the various countries and describing the prominence of each, when they had reached the earth after obtaining the Pārijāta flowers from the world of the gods. After having described the kingdoms of Pāṇḍya and Cela, the poet was beginning to describe the natural beauty of Saptakosha, (the seven Kośa countries). The story says that when he had sung the last line of that stanza his tongue was burnt and he could not proceed with the rest of the poem.

She detected Damayanti conversing with the brahmin named Subhā, who came to Čedi in search of the latter and reported about their meeting to the queen mother. The next day, the wife of Subhā and Subhā was Virabhā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 63, 68 and 69).

SUNARTAKA NAṬA. The name Śiva assumed when he appeared before Pārvati, in disguise. Pārvati was engaged in tapas then. (Śiva-Stotraṭaka, 34).

SUNASSAKHA. Indra. Once Indra disguised himself as a Samyakṣāla, traveled in the company of a dog. At that time, he made an attempt to steal lotus flower from Brahmasaras in Kauśikī ċīrha. Indra struck down at a single blow, Yātūdhāni, the woman-guard of the saras, who opposed him. From this time when Indra went about in the company of the dog, he got the name "Sunassakha". (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 94).

SUNASTIKESA (DEVARAKA). The story of a Brahmana youth who was to be offered as human sacrifice and who was saved by Viśvāmitra, is famous in the Purāṇas. The name of the Brahmana youth was Sunāsfeśa. But even in the Purāṇas there are two versions of this story. In one of them, Sunāsfeśa is referred to as the son of Rākjumuni. In the other, it was Harīcandra who performed the yāga and Sunāsfeśa who were brought for sacrifice. (For details of the two texts, see under Ambaraṭa and the 4th Pura under Viśvāmitra).

Sunāsfeśa later became a Mahārāṣṭra. He composed Rgveda, 1st Manḍala, 1st Asūka. Besides in Rgveda, 1st Manḍala, 8th and 9th Anuvāka, 30th Petaka it is said that Indra had given a golden chariot to Sunāsfeśa.

SUNAYA I. A King, son of the King of Prapīḷaya and father of Medhāvi. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha). Pramati was the high priest of Sunaya. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa, 114).

SUNAYA II. A region famous in the Purāṇas. (Bhālava Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 64).

SUNDA. An asura. He had a brother named Upasunda, and their father was Nisumbha alias Jarājana. Sunda and Upasunda were very cruel asuras. The two brothers performed tapas on the Vindhyā mountain with the object of conquering the three worlds. All attempts made by Devas to break up their perseverance failed. The mahārāṣṭra Brahmā appeared before them. They secured from Brahmā a boon to the effect that they would not be killed by anyone else but only mutually by them. Swollen-headed by the boon the brothers conquered the three worlds and none could kill them. Ultimately the Devas sent Titottama, the celestial damācāl to them and she made them quarrel with each other. Both of them fell in love with Titottama and fought with each other and got killed. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 19). For details see under Upasunda and Tāṭākājī.

SUNDARA I. A Gandharva, the son of Virabhā. Due to Vaśiṣṭha’s curse he was born as a Rākjasa whom Mahāvisvūpī later on raised from his fallen state. (Skanda Purāṇa).

SUNDARA II. An Āndīra monarch, son of Pulindasena and father of King Śātakarmi. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 4).

SUNDARI. A Rākjasa woman, the wife of Mālayāvān. The couple had seven sons called Vajramusti, Virūpākṣa, Durmukha, Supāpīṇa, Yaṇhakaḍa, Maitra and Unmaitra. (See under Mālayāvīṃ and Mālī).

SUNDARIKĀ. A sacred place. He who bathes at a particular spot here called Sundariākūla will become very handsome. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 56).

SUNDARIVALLI. A daughter of Mahāvisvūpī. Sundarivalli and Amṛtavalli, another daughter of Mahāvisvūpī once performed penance on the banks of Aṅkāgāṅgā for securing Subrahmaniya as husband. (Skanda Purāṇa, Śambhava Kānḍa).

SRPANAKHA. Râvana’s sister.

1) Vîrâvas, son of Brahma and Kaikasi, daughter of Sumâti lived in the forest called Śrângâkâ. Once Kaikasi had a sexual union with Vîrâvas at an unseasonable hour. As a result of this union, Kaikasi gave birth to four children at intervals of one Vîma each. These children were: Râvana, Kumbhrakarna, Vibhiṣâna and Śrîpanakkha. (Kamba Râmâyana, Bâla Kâباحث).

2) Domestic life. Śrîpanakkha was married to the Pârâsara, Vidyujjïha. The son who was born to the couple was named Sambhubhukama.

The Pâlakayyas were the brothers of Vidyujjïha. At the time of Râvana’s return after his triumphal march, a battle took place between him and the Pâlakayyas. The Pâlakayyas fell under the sword of Râvana. Enraged at the death of his brothers, Vidyujjïha encountered Râvana. In the battle that followed, Vidyujjïha was killed. On hearing about her husband’s death, Śrîpanakkha went to Râvana wailing and lamenting. Moved to pity at the sight of her tears, Râvana said:—“Dear Sister! You may travel through the three worlds and accept any man you like as your husband. Is there any one who would not wish to become my relative? Go and marry a husband suited to you. If any one turns down your proposal, just inform me. I shall come and make him your husband.”

Śrîpanakkha was pleased. She at once started going round the three worlds with Khara, Dûsana and Trishiras. (Uttara Râmâyana, Kambhârâya, Aranyâ Kândâ).

3) Before Lakshmana. Śrîpanakkha’s son, Sambhubhukama was performing tapas to Siva in Daṇḍâkârânya. It was at this time that Sri Rama and Lakshmana arrived in the forest, accompanied by Sita. They reached the place called Pañcavati in Daṇḍâkârânya. Sri Rama wished to set up his hermitage in the middle of the five “vâsa” trees in Pañcavatî.

At the very sight of Sita, Sambhubhukama fell in love with her. He stood there in the form of a tree. While building the hermitage, Lakshmana felled that tree and thus Sambhubukama was killed. (See under Sambhubukama).

The widowed Sûrpanakha, in her search for a suitable husband happened to reach and settle down at the southern border of Daṇḍâkârânya. She had failed in her search so far.

It was at this stage that she came to know of Sri Rama and his party. She disguised herself as Lalîtâ and entered Sri Rama’s ārâma. The sight of Sri Rama made her a victim to carnal passion. She submitted her desire to him, but he turned down her prayer. The disappointed Sûrpanakha left the ārâma at once. But she appeared again in front of Sita. Feeling that so long as Sita was alive, Sri Rama would not be prepared to court her, Sûrpanakha rushed furiously at Sita. Lakshmana who was watching the whole scene, suddenly rushed to the spot and pushed her out of the ārâma. He cut off her ears, nose and breasts.

Sûrpanakha, bleeding profusely from her mutilation, hastened to her brother Râvana to inform him of the calamity. In obedience to Râvana’s command, Khara, Dûsana and others who came and encountered Rama and Lakshmana, were also slain in the battle. (Kamba Râmâyana, Aranyâ Kândâ).

SCRâPAKA. Another name for Kerala. In Brahmâda Purâna, Chapter 95, we read that Paramârtha threw a “Sûra” winnowing basket from Gokarna southwards and the ocean up to the spot where the Sûra fell, became dry land. Since the land was formed by throwing the Sûra, it came to be called “SCRâPAKA”. References to SCRâPAKA in the Mahâbhârata, are given below:-

(i) In the course of his triumph of the southern lands, Shahadeva conquered SCRâPAKA. (M.B. Sâsâ Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 58).

(ii) There is a sacred bath here, known as SCRâPAKA tirtha. By bathing here, one would obtain golden râjas. (M.B. Vanâ Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 43).

(iii) In SCRâPAKA Ksetra, there is a sacred platform originally built by Jamadagni. Close by, there are two holy places called “Pañcâna tirtha” and “Chandra tirtha”. (M.B. Vanâ Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 12).

(iv) Yudhishtira once happened to visit this sacred place. (M.B. Vanâ Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 8).

(v) SCRâPAKA is the land formed by the withdrawal of the ocean. It is also called “Apâramâlakâni”. (Sánti Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 66).

(vi) Mahâbhârata, Aunâsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 50 states that by bathing in the water of SCRâPAKA Ksetra and observing a fast for a fortnight, one would be born as a prince in the next birth.

SURUCÂ. A son of Garuda. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 3).
SURUCI. A wife of Utánápáda. Svayambhuva Manu had two sons called Priyavarta and Utánápáda. Utánápáda married Surucí and Suvít. A son called Utama was born to Surucí and Suvít was born Dhrúva. (For details see under Dhrúva).

SURUTÁ. A daughter of Viśvakarman. Priyavarta, son of Svayambhuva Manu married Surutá and Bhrismin, the beautiful daughter of Viśvakarman. Surutá had ten sons. They had a younger sister called Īrjavana. (For details see under Bhrismin and Īrjavana.)

SURYA I. The God who gives light to the worlds.

1) Birth. It is said that the Sun was born to Kaśyapa by his wife Aditi. Mahávisnu begot Brahmá and Brahmá begot Maréti. Prajápati Kaśyapa was born from Maréti. Several sons were born to Kaśyapa by Aditi the daughter of Dvakta. They are known by the names Adityas, Varuṇa, Rudras and so on. Of these, Ādityas are twelve in number (Aditya means the son of Aditi). There is a difference of opinion as to whether these twelve Ādityas are. According to Agni Puráṇa, Chapter 51, the twelve Ādityas are Varuṇa, Sūrya (the Sun), Sahāsrahara, Dhiśa, Tapagā, Sāvitar, Gabhánta, Ravi, Parjanya, Västu, Mitra and Vásu. (See under Dwadasādityas.) But in Mahábhárata, Adi Parva, Chapter 104:15, it is said that these twelve Ādityas are Dhiśa, Arjuna, Mitra, Śukra, Varuna, Aśā, Bhaga, Vivasvān, Pāśa, Sāvitar, Tvaṣṭa and Viṣṇu.

Very often these names are used as synonyms of the Sun. So it is better to assume that there are several Ādityas and that it is the sun who gives light and heat to the worlds. Viśvamitra is famous because it is said that from this Vivasvān the Manu Vaivastava was born and from this Vaivastava, Iksvāku, the first king of the Solar dynasty, was born.

2) The chariot of the Sun. The Sun rises in the east and sets in the west, in consequence of which days and nights occur. The Puranic assumption is that the Sun travels in a very big chariot. The chariot of the Sun is made thousand thousand yojanas long. The length of each half of the yoke is proportionate to the length of the axle. The short axle of the chariot with the small half of the yoke is fixed on Dhrúva. The wheel fixed on the other axle rests on the mount Manasottara. Separate Ādityas, hermits Gandharvas, celestial maidens, Yakṣas, serpents and giants sit, in the chariot of the Sun every morning and evening. In the month of Čaitra, which is also calledMadhumasa, the seven officers of the month who travel daily in the chariot, are the Āditya Dhiśa, the celestial maiden Krittratā, the hermit Pulasta, the serpent Vāsuki, the Yakṣa Rathabhrī, the giant Hiti, and the Gandharva Tumburu. In the month of Vaśakha also called Madhava, the Āditya Aryanman, the hermit Pulaha, the Yakṣa Rathaaḥs, the celestial maiden Pushtakaha, the giant Praheṇ, the serpent Kakavira and the Gandharva Nāradā sit in the chariot. In the month of Jyesṭha, the Āditya Mitra, the hermit Atri, the serpent Takṣaka, giant Pauruseya, the celestial maiden Menakā, the Gandharva Hābh, and the Yakṣa Rathasvāna, sit in the chariot. In the month of Āṣāḥ, the Āditya Varuṇa, the hermit Vasistha, the serpent Nāga, the celestial maiden Sahajāyā, the Gandharva Hābh, the giant Ratha and the Yakṣa Citrārtha, travel in the chariot. In the month of Śrāvaṇa, the Āditya Indra, the Gandharva Viśvavāna, the Yakṣa Svaras, the serpent Elaputtra, the hermit Angiras, the celestial maid Prāmacī, and the giant Saras travel in the chariot. In the month of Pūjya, the Āditya Śaiva, the Gandharva Vasu, the giant Vāta, the hermit Gautama, the serpent Dhanañjaya, the Yakṣa Usena and the celestial maiden Ādityās sit in the chariot. In the month of Kārttika, the Gandharva is another Viśvavasu, the hermit Buaradvaja, Āditya Parjanya, the hermit Airavata, the celestial maid, Viśvācī, Yakṣa Senajit and the giant Apara, sit in the chariot. In the month of Mārgasīra, the Āditya Amśa, the hermit Kaśyapa, the Yakṣa Turvāya, the serpent Mahāpada, the celestial maid Urvā, the Gandharva Gajana, and the giant Yajñavalkya sit in the chariot. In the month of Paṇcu, the hermit Krita, the Āditya Bhaga, the Gandharva Drṇāyu, the giant Sphojña, the serpent Karotaka, the Yakṣa Aristanemi and the celestial maid Purvavatī travel in the chariot. In the month of Māgha, the Āditya TvasΓ, the hermit Jamadagni, the serpent Kamola, the celestial maiden Tiletāmā and the giant Yajñojata travel in the chariot. Seven persons live in the region of the Sun in their time. The hermits praise the Sun; the ganḍharvas sing; the celestial maids dance; the giants walk behind. The serpents prepare the horses to be yoked; the Yakṣas hold the bridle and the Bālakhyiyas stand round the Sun. These groups of seven in each month are responsible for heat, coldness, rain etc. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anśa 2, Chapter 6).

3) The Yedra figure of the Sun. Even though the sun is only one of the seven gods, he is above the others in prominence. The complete power of Viṣṇu is the three Vedas/Rg, Yajus and Sāma. The power in the form of the three Vedas flowers in the form of the Sun. That power destroys all the sins in the world. Viṣṇu stays inside the Sun in the form of Rg, Yajus and Sāma for the sustenance and protection of the world. As said before, the three Vedas are the parlakta, or the feminine supreme power of Viṣṇu. She is the three Vedas themselves. Every month she stays inside that particular Āditya of the month. In the morning the Rgveda praisns the Sun. At noon the Yajurveda praises the Sun and in the evening the Sāmans such as Brahad Rathantar and so on. The three Vedas/Rg, Yajus and Sāma are portions of Viṣṇu. This power of Vivasvān stays always. It stays not only in the Sun, but also in the three godsheads Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva. At the time of creation Brahmā was pervaded by Rg. At the time of sustenance, Viṣṇu is pervaded by Yajus. At the end Rudra will be perved by Sāman. So the sound of Sāman will be unpalatable. Thus this Vaśyāvātne power which is having the attribute of purity (Satvya) and Vedas, pervades the entire universe. Thus, the various names given on the seven groups also. Being the seat of this power, the Sun shines with his rays and destroys the darkness in all the worlds.

Such a Sun is praised by the hermits. The Gandharvas sing in front of the Sun. The celestial maidens dares before him. The giants guard him, the serpents prepare his chariot, the builder Brahma and the Jivas stand around him. Visnu who is having the figure of the Sun pervaded by the power of the Vedas, never rises or sets. The seven groups are separate from that Visnu. As the figures of those who approach, are reflected in a mirror fixed on a post, that post of Visnu, without separating itself from that chariot, pervades them who come every month in turn. (Visnu Purāṇa, Amā 2, Chapter 1)

4) The direction of the sun. The Sun starts from the east and goes to the western ocean. The directions east and west originate from this rising and setting. As a matter of fact when the sun rises in the east it is bright in places behind it. But it does not shine in the palace of Brahma the top of Mahāmeru. The rays of this sun which enter the palace are driven back by the radiance of the palace. The Mountain Meru is north to all islands and countries. So on one side of that mount it is always day and on the other side it is always night. When the Sun sets his light enters fire. So at night the light of fire goes far. In the same way, at day time, the light of fire enters the sun. So the sun shines more. Thus knowing the day and the night, the day and the night wax when the sun shines on the southern and northern hemispheres. The dark nights and bright days enter water gradually. The water seems a little red, in day time because darkness has entered it in the night. After sunset the water seems a little white because the day has entered the water.

Thus, when crossing through the middle of the island Purāṇa, the change of the Sun to one thirtieth portion of the earth is called 'Mābhīrkikātā' (covering the distance in a mūhārta - 48 minutes). The sun, like a fly sitting on the circumference of the wheel of a potter travels around the earth inclining a portion of a thirtieth of the earth, and making day and night. In the beginning of the transit to the Tropic of Cancer, the sun passes into the zodiac of Makara, and then to Kumbha and Mina. After having completed the three zodiacs, the sun makes the day and night equal and enters Visuvat. At the end of travelling in the Northern hemisphere the sun enters the zodiac of Karkatakā and transit to the south begins. (Visnu Purāṇa, Amā 2, Chapter 8).

5) The Sun in the chaitra of the giant. The Sun is being attacked daily by a kind of giants called the Mandebras.

6) Family life. The Sun married Saniyā, the daughter of Viśvākarma. Three children Manu, Yama and Yami were born to him by Saniyā. By Chāya, the maid of Saniyā, three children, Sanāśicara, Manu and Tapati were born to him by Sanāśi. (Visuvat and Revanta were born by Saniyā to the son who took the form of a horse under Saniyā's aspect). On several occasions other sons such as Sugriva, Kālindī, Karpa and so on were born to the Sun. (For details see under those entries).

7) The rising delayed. A story stating that the rising of the sun was delayed because of the curse of Śilavati, is stated in Mahābhārata. (See under Śilavati).

8) The Sun and the Moon. The King Satrajet did penance and got the jewel Symantaka from the Sun. (For detailed story see under Prasena).

9) The Sun and Rāhu. Once the Sun and the moon pointed out Rāhu who had come to participate of the Amṛta (Ambrosia) in stealth and Mahāvisnua cut off his head. (For detailed story see under Amṛta, Para 4).

10) The Hermes of the Sun and the Sun is the teacher of Hanūman. (See under Hanūman).

11) The Sun and Rāvana. Once Rāvana happened to reach the Solar region, while he was conducting regional conquest. That night he rested on Mahāmeru, and then got into his plane Puspaka, ready for fight in the morning. Seeing the Sun rising up, Rāvana called his master Praśasta and said to him, 'Minister, go and convey my words to the Sun. ‘Rāvana has come to fight. Either get down and fight or admit defeat.’ Praśasta walked towards the sun and told the words of the King to the two gatekeepers Puspati and Damū. The Sun was informed of this by Danjī. The Sun told Danjī thus: “Danjī, I don’t mind whether I defeat or I am defeated by Rāvana. The thing is, that I have no time.” Danjī informed Rāvana of this. Rāvana went away shouting that he had defeated the Sun.

12) Fight with Śiva. See under Śiva Para 7, Sub para 7.

13) The Sun lost his lustre. See under Sukeśa.

15) The Sun and Karṇa. See under Karṇa.

17) The names of the Sun. Once the hermit Dhaumya repeated to Dharmaputra the one hundred and eight names of the Sun. Those names are given in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 3.

18) Other details.

(i) Once Pāñchāli worshipped the Sun. The Sun created an unseemly giant for her protection. (M.B. Viśā Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 19).

(ii) Pāñchāli did penance before the Sun and procured the 'Aksayapātra' (the pot that never became empty). (See under Aksayapātra).

(iii) The Sun destroys the ungrateful asuras (demons). (M.B. Udvyoga Parva, Chapter 108, Verse 15).

(iv) There is a story connecting the Sun and the South. In days of old the Sun performed a sacrifice according to the Vedas, and to Kātyāya who was the ministerial priest, he gave the South as daksinā (offering). So the south got the name ‘Dakṣina’. (M.B. Udvyoga Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 1).

(v) The west is the place where the Sun pours his rays after the end of the day. (M.B. Udvyoga Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 2).

(vi) When Karṇa and Arjuna confronted each other in the battle of Bharata, the Sun boasted to Indra that Karṇa would come out victorious. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 57).

(vii) The Sun gave Subrahmanyā two attendants named Subhraja and Bhāvāra. (Śāyā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 31).

(viii) Once Śiva anointed the Sun as the King of all the planets. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 112, Stanza 31).
(ix) The Sun once gave Yajñavalkya the boon that he would get knowledge of the Vedas. (M.B. Sáti Parva, Chapter 318, Verse 6).

(x) The story of one who had attained the region of the Sun by Utchavytti (‘Living on the grains fallen on the sky’) is given in Mahábhárata, Sáti Parva, a few Chapters from 353, as follows:

There was a Brahmin in a place called Mahápadma on the banks of the Ganges. He wandered there and there for knowledge of Vedas. Once a hermit met him and directed him to search for Padmanábha. At last he found out his house. But there was the wife of Padmanábha only. She said that her husband would return within a few days. Accordingly he remained on the banks of the Ganges without any food. Padmanábha returned and met the hermit again. The hermit asked what the nága should do in order to get merged in God. The Nága replied that he could become one with God by Utchavytti. The Nágas continued: ‘The Sun is a god who had invoked himself a saint who had lived only by the fallen grains in the field. The activities of that Sun are wonderful. The hermits and saints attach themselves to the rays of the Sun as birds attach themselves to the branches of trees. The great storms arising from the Sun spread wide in the sky. I saw once a person sitting inside that Sun who was a wonder of wonders. When that person as shining the Sun came to him in the moon the Sun embraced him and seated him inside him. I asked him who he was. The Sun replied that he was a person who thought a Nága became Padmanábha. Hearing the advice given by the Nága, the Brahmin engaged in Utchavytti and attained heaven.

(xi) The Sun gave Subrahmanya shining beauty. (M.B. Anuádana Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 23).

(xii) The Sun gave the hermit Jamadagni an umbrella and sloppers. (See under Cérrupu).

(xiii) The Sun went in war between the Devas and the Asuras was drawing near. Ráhu wounded the Sun and the moon. Along with that the universe fell in darkness, and the asuras began to destroy the Devas. At this time according to the prayer of the gods the hermit Atri assumed the figure of the Moon and made the Sun as shining as of old. (M.B. Anuádana Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 25).

(xiv) The synonyms of the Sun according to the Amarakosá are given below:

SÚRYABHAṆU. A gate-keeper of Alakásu. A statement occurs in Utsara Rámya, that in the fight between Kubera and Rávana, this gate-keeper helped Kubera.

SÚRYADATTA. A brother of King Virája. It is stated in Mahábhárata, Virája Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 11, that this Súryadatta was known by the name Sátánika. Súryadatta also took part in the fight following the theft of the cow of Virája by Duryodhana and others. After killing the hundred warriors in the army of Trigarta, this Súryadatta entered into the midst of the enemies and was killed by Dropa in the battle of Bháratas. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 34).

SÚRYADHVAJÁ. A King in Ancient India. He was present in the Svyat트yāra marriage of Draupadi. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 10).

SÚRYAGRAHÁNA. The Sun to know in detail about the view of the Puráṇas regarding the solar eclipse, see under Candrá IV, Para 4.

SÚRYAKETÁ. A daitya (demon). Once this daitya conquered the world of the gods and expelled Indra. At that time Puráṇya was the king of Ayohyá, who was born in the solar dynasty. Indra requested for his help. Puráṇya desired to help Indra, on condition that Indra should stand as an ox and that he would sit on the hump of that ox and fight. Accordingly he sat on the ‘Kákud’ (hump) of the ox and fought in the battle, killed Súryaketá, and reinstated Indra in his former position. Because he sat on the ‘Kákud’, Puráṇya got the name Kákustha. The dynasty of the King came to be called by the name Kákustha. (Kamba Rámya, Vádábhá̄ká). SÚRYAKÁSA. A King in ancient India. It is stated in Mahábhárata, Adí Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 57, that this King was born from a portion of the King Kratha.

SÚRYAMÁSA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kárvras in the battle of Bhárata Abhimanyu killed him. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 15).

SÚRYANÉTRA. A bird born in the family of Garúja. Mention is made about this bird in Mahábhárata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 13.

SÚRYASÁVITRA. An eternal god of offerings to the manes. (M.B. Anuádana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 34).

SÚRYASI. An eternal god concerned with offerings to the manes. (M.B. Anuádana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 34).

SÚRYATÍRTHA. An ancient holy place situated in Kuruksetra. It is mentioned in Mahábhárata, Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Stanza 48, that by bathing here and worshipping the manes one may attain the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Agnijóma and go to the land of the Sun.

SÚRYAVAMŚA. An important dynasty of ancient Bhárata. It is stated in Devábhágavat, Skanda 7, as follows about the origin of this solar dynasty.

The Lord of creation Brahmá originated from the lotus in the navel of Viṣṇu. That Brahmá did penance for ten thousand years and pleased Parásakí, the great goddess of power, and started creation. First of all he created seven mental sons. Of them Marici became expert in creation. Prájapati Kátyápa the son of Marici became a greater expert. The Sun is the son of Kátyápa. Nine sons named Ikyáliká, Nábáha, Dhruva, Sáryá, Náliyána, Prájna, Nyára, Dáya, Karúka and Pratihara were born to the Sun. Of these Ikváku became King. This line of Kings born from the Sun is called Suryavarna (Solar dynasty). (See the Genealogy.)

SÜRYAVARCSA. A Deva Gandharva. It is stated in Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 55, that this Deva Gandharva born to Prajapati Kashyapa took part in the birth celebration of Arjuna.

SÜRYAVARMÁ. A King of the country of Trigarta. This King had a brother called Keutuvarna, Suryavarman and Keutuvarna fought with Arjuna when he was leading the sacrificial horse of Yudhishthira. Both the Trigartas were killed in that fight. (M.B Atmamedha Parva, Chapter 74).

SUSAMAN. A noble Brahmin born in Dhanabhaya. (Sahhá Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 53).

SUSANKULA. A famous urban area in North India. Arjuna once conquered this region. (Sahhá Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 11).

SUSANTI I. A King of the Bharata dynasty. He was Sándhi's son and father of Purusa. (Bhágavata, Skandha 9).

SUSANTI III. Indra during the third Manvantara. (See under Manvantaras).

SUSARMA. King of Trigarta desa. The following information about him is gathered from Mahabharata.
(i) Sutarmann, son of Yvádhaka, attended Draupadi's wedding. (Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 9).
(ii) Once he incited Duryodhana to attack Masya, the Viráta King. Accordingly Duryodhana attacked the Viráta city and Susarman aided him in the battle. (Viráta Parva, Chapter 30).
(iii) In the battle that followed the lifting of the cown of the Viráta King by the Kauravas, Susarman took the Viráta King as captive. (Viráta Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 7).
(iv) In the battle that followed the above incident Bhima caught Susarman as a prisoner. (Viráta Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 25).
(v) At the instance of Yudhishthira Bhima set Susarman free. (Viráta Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 56).
(vi) Susarman fought against the Pandavas and on the first day of the great war he fought a duel with Gektima. (Bhágavata Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 60).
(vii) Arjuna defeated Susarman. (Bhágavata Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 1).
(viii) He fought with Arjuna, Bhima and Dhrya-dyumna. (Bhágavata Parva, Chapter 114; Dropana Parva, Chapter 14).
(ix) He vowed that he would kill Arjuna. (Dropana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 1).
(x) When Droshaka was killed, he ran away from the battle-field. (Dropana Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 18).
(xi) Arjuna killed Susarman. (Sálaya Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 45).
(xii) Names like Prathulaladhipa, Rukmanarath, Traigarta and Trigarta are used as synonyms of Susarman.

SUSARMAN II. A Pandála warrior who fought on the Pádava side in the great war. He was harassed in various ways by Bhima and was ultimately killed by Karna. (Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 46).

SUSARMAN III. Last of the Kings in the Kanya dynasty. He was killed by his minister Béli. (Bhág-avata, Skandha 10).

SÜSENA I. A nága born in the Dhrtrárśa dynasty. The nága was burnt to death at the serpent yajña of Jánamedya. (Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 16).

SÜSENA II. One of the hundred sons of Dhrtrárśa. He was killed by Bhima in the great war. (Bhág-avata Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 34).

SÜSENA III. A King of the Páu dynasty. He was the grandson of Avisht and son of Pálik. (Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 52).

SÜSENA IV. A son of Sage Jamadagni. The Sage asked Susena to kill his mother, but he did not obey his father. Jamadagni, therefore, cursed him and Parávárama redeemed him from the curse. (Vana Parva, Chapter 116).

SÜSENA V. Father-in-law of Béli, the monkey king. Susena, father of Tat, was a deity and one thousand croce monkeys to search for Sitá. (Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Verse 2). Susena, an expert in the science of medicine and the art of warfare, was the son of the monkey called Dharna. (Vámkaki Ramayana).

In the Ráma-Rávana war Susena fought the Rákṣasa forces and killed Vidyurás, Lakanána swooned on being hit by the arrows of Rávana who fought with redoubled vigour following the death of Indrajit. Many monkeys also swooned. Then Susena, the medical expert, brought back to consciousness the swooned folk with the help of Váyakaraná, Sauravâyakaraná, Sájñvaná and other herbs.

Susena also attended the coronation ceremony of Sri Ráma. (Vámkaki Ramayana, Yuddha KáUSA, Chapters 101, 123, 134).

SÜSENA VI. A son of Karna. He fought with Nakula in the great war. Uttamájías killed him in battle. (Karna Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 13).

SÜSENA VII. Another son of Karna. Nakula killed him in the great war. (Sálaya Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 49).

SÜSENA VIII. A King of the Bharata dynasty. He was the son of Dhrta and father of Súnuñá. (Bhágavata, Skandha 9).

SÜSENA IX. A king, who married Rambhá. (See under Rambhá, Para 5).

SÜSILA I. A daughter of the Gandharva named Supála. (See under Pramohit). (Supála I). A Gandharva lady (See under Pramohit). by force. (See under Jamadagni, Para 8). (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 61).

ŚUŚKA A Mahārāja who lived in the Gokarna temple. When Bhūgolathā brought Gātigā from heaven to the earth, sea water began to rise and the temples situated near the sea were submerged. At that time Śuśka went along with other Mahārājas to visit Parāshurāma at the Mahāparāshu mountain. In response to Śuśka’s prayer, Parāshurāma raised the submerged temples including the Gokarna temple, above the water.

ŚUŚYA An asura. In Rgveda we find that once Indra bound the magician Śuśya in chains and put him in prison.

SUŚOBHANĀ A Maugli princess. King Pariksit of the Tevāku dynasty married her and three sons Śala, Dala and Bala, were born to the couple. (See under Pariksit II).

SUŚRAVĀS I A Vidarbha princess. King Jayatsena of the Parī dynasty married her and a son called Arvācāna was born to them. (Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 17).

SUŚRAVĀS II A king of the Rgvveda period. When enemies encircled him he prayed to Indra who helped him by driving away the 10000 enemy warriors. (Rgveda, Sāндala 1, Anuvāka 10, Sūktā 53).

SUŚRAVĀS III A spy of the Devas. He once informed Sarvāryata secretly about the presence of the Sage Katyāyanā. Sarvāryata appeared before the Sage and told him that he would get from Sage Sarvārvārya the knowledge he wanted. Accordingly Katyāyanā ended his penance and went to Sage Sarvārvārya.

SUŚUKHA displayed the subdued art of surgery. Suśukha was the grandson of King Gādhi and son of Vīśvamitra. (Anuśāsan Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 59).

(He is the author of Āsurastāsūkha, one of the famous texts on Ayurveda).

SUŚHIHALA A place of Purānic fame in ancient India. The people who lived here were called Suśhitas. (Sahā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 16).

SUŚTITI One of the four states or conditions of man. Jāgat, Svātuṣa, Sunśitu and Turiya are the four states of man. (For details see under Jāgat).

SUŚVARĀ A Gandharva woman. (See under Pramohini).

SUŚYĀMA An aparā woman. She was the wife of Rādhavaṇya, son of Arśipēna. The couple had a daughter called Yēdhā. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

SUTA I. General information. A hermit who recouunted the Purāṇas to other hermits at Naṁśīpa forest. He was a disciple of Vīśaṇa. Vīśaṇa composed the Purāṇas and taught them to his son, hermit Suka who was a man of abstinance and who was not born of womb. At this time Vīśaṇa had another disciple named Śuśita. It is stated in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, that this Śuśita who was a fellow-disciple of Suka, who had learned all the Purāṇas directly from the teacher Vīśaṇa, and who was capable saying stories so convincingly, was the son of the hermit Lomahāra.

2) As Naṁśīparāṇya Sūta who had learned the Purāṇas directly from Vīśaṇa, happened to reach Naṁśīparāṇya once. (See under Naṁśīparāṇya). Naṁśīparāṇya is the abode of hermits in the Kali-age. In days of old, hermits, who were miserable because of the evils of Kali-yuga, which was fast approaching, gathered here at the end of Dvāpara-yuga. They went to the world of Brahmā to consult about the means and ways of preventing the evils of Kali-yuga. Having heard their complaints Brahmā brought a wheel of the figure of mind and placed it before the hermits told them thus: “You follow this wheel. The place where this wheel falls down will be a place of purity, which will not be affected by the evils of Kali-age. There you can live in peace, without being affected by the evils of Kali-age till the coming of the Sātvatya.” Saying these words Brahmā set the wheel rolling in front of them. The hermits followed it. The wheel rolled on till it reached the earth, fell down and was crumbled to powder in a particular place. That place became famous later under the name Naimśīparāṇya. Śuśita came to this place.

As soon as they saw Śuśita, the hermits such as Taṇauka and others who were living there welcomed Śuśita with hospitality and told him thus. “Oh! hermit, you are the disciple of Vīśaṇa. You have learned the eighteen Purāṇas from Vīśaṇa. We are eager to hear them. So please recite to us the Purāṇas, the hearing of which will remit all sins and secure heaven.”

According to this request Śuśita recited the eighteen Purāṇas to the gathering of the hermits. It is in the form of the teaching of Śuśita to Taṇauka and the others, i.e. in the form of a dialogue between Śuśita and Taṇauka, that the people got the Purāṇas (Devī Bhāgavata, Sūkha 1).

3) Śuśita was beheaded. In Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, there occurs a story, stating how Balkhadrārāma cut off the head of Śuśita as the battle of Kuruksetra had started when Śuśita had been reciting the eighteen Purāṇas in Naimśīparāṇya and fixed it in place again and he was brought to life. (For further details see under Balkhadrārāma, Para 6).

4) Other details. Śuśita was one of the hermits who visited Bhūmaṇa on his bed of arrows during the battle of Bhārata. (MB. Śanśi Parva, Chapter 47 Verse 12).

SUTA II. One of Vīśvāmitra’s sons who were expounders of the Vedas. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 57).

SUTA III. A blend class of people. (See under Vārpa).

SUTALĀ. A part of Pāṭala (netherworld). (See under Pāṭala).

SUTANU I. The wife of Aṇvaṇa, the son of the King of Vajra. Sutanu was the daughter of Yuddhiṣṭhira. (Vīśu Purāṇa, 96, 250).

SUTANU II. The daughter of Aṅkuva otherwise called Ugrasena. (Mahābhārata, Sahā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 33) Śrī Kṛṣṇa made Aṅkuva marry this Sutanu.

SUTAPAS I. A King of the dynasty of Bhārata. He was the son of Homa and the father of Bala. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SVADHADEVI. - Wife of the Manasa. There is a story, as given below, in Devi Bhagavata, Skanda 9, about the birth of this goddess.

At the beginning of creation Brahm created seven groups of Manas of whom four were embodied and three were jussuluous ones. The deities called the Manas are the Agni-Agha, the Barahvatas, the Sonapras, Yama, Anila, Soma and Aryanma. The Manas (oblations offered to the manas) were stipulated as the food of these manas. It was ordered that the Brahman who does not make offerings to the manas, will be as mean and despiscible as the Brahman, who has not learned the Vedas, who has not eaten meals presented to an idol in temple, and who has not worshipped Devi (goddess), and such would be the case with him. Thus Brahm made Sraddha as food for the manas. But the portion of the rice balls offered by the Brahman stipulated as the food of the manas, seldom reached them. At last the manas complained to Brahm. Then Brahm created a woman of beauty, youth, knowledge and power to grant boons and recite Mantras, from the portion of pure nature. She was named Svadhia, and was given to the manas as wife. Then Brahmins were ordered to give offerings to the manas only with the spell (Mantra) of Svadhia. When the Brahmins began to do as they were ordered, the manas also began to get food, and they became contented.

Two daughters named Menia and Khuriani were born to their father Svadhia. It is mentioned in Visnu Purana, Amsa 1, Chapter 10, that both of the daughters were exponents of Vedas, full of knowledge and the seat of all good qualities.

SVASAHA. - A daughter of Bhoompati. This Svasa, who was always angry had a son named Kuma. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 52).

SVADHADEVI. -

1) General Information. - Wife of god Agni (fire). There is a story about the birth of this goddess, as given below, in Devi Bhagavata, Skanda 9.

In the beginning of creation sufficient arrangements had not been made for food to be supplied to the Deva (gods). They were in misery. At last the devas requested Brahmins to make some arrangements for their food. Brahm pacified them by saying that he would make available to them, the 'havis' offered by Brahmins as food. Then Brahm meditated on the Mala-Pakriti. A particle of Mala-Pakriti appeared before Brahm and asked him what boon he required. Brahm said thus:—Oh Goddess ! The gods are in distress because of lack of food. The 'havis' offered by Brahmins in the fire so as to convert them as food for the gods. The fire would become powerful to digest the 'havis' and the Brahmins requested Brahm to convert them as food for the gods. The fire would become powerful to digest the 'havis' only if your esteemed self would reside in fire as the power of digestion. Only the 'havis' offered with the mantra, (spell) ending with the holy name of your glorious self could be digested by fire and taken to the gods as food. and they could accept it as food. So it is my request that your gracious self would become the power that dwells in fire as the figure of wealth and prosperity, adored by men and gods.

But that goddess said that her desire was to get Sri Kuma as her husband. She did penance to Sri Kuma, who appeared and said:—Devi! you will take birth as the daughter of King Nagaspati in Varkha Kalpa (a period of ages) and then you will become my wife. Now you have to become the wife of Agni under the name Svadhevi and become the power of digestion, and part of the spell (Mantra) you and Agni will be worshipped together by all. From that day onwards Svadhevi became the wife of Fire. It is mentioned in Visnu Purana, Amsa 1, Chapter 10, that three sons Paravaka, Pavantana and Suci, were born to the couple. (See under Devi).

2) Other details.

(i) It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 42, that Svadhevi remains in the court of Brahma, glorifying him.

(ii) Once Svadhevi appeared among the wives of hermits. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 7).

(iii) When Subrahmanyas was assisted as captain of the army, Svadhevi also was present (Mahabharata, Salaya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 15).

SVANAYA. - Son of King Bhavayava. The daughter of this King, who is praised in the Agveda, was married by the hermit Kekhipah. (For further details see under Kekhipah I, Other details, Para 6).

SVAPHALKA. - Father of Akura. Vrṣi, a Yadava King had two sons Svaphalka and Cittaka. It was divinely ordained that there would not be epidemic and drought in the place where Svaphalka lived. Once there was no rain for a period of three years in the land of the King of Kuk. So the king of Kuk took Svaphalka with him to his country. With his arrival there was rainfall in the land and the King who was pleased at it gave his daughter Gandini in marriage to Svaphalka. There is a story about the birth of Gandini also. Gandini remained in her mother's womb for many years. At last the King of Kuk called to the child in the womb and said, "Take birth at once; why do you remain there so long?" The child replied, "I shall come out if you allow me to offer a cow as gift every day." The King allowed it and the child was born. She was named "Gandini." She used to offer the gift of cows to Brahmans daily. After she married Svaphalka, several sons included Akura were born to her. (Harivanda, Chapter 34, Bhagavata, 19th Skanda).

SVAYAMBHU. A teacher—priest. This teacher was the first one who had given precedence to the ceremonial rites of śraddha (offering to the manes). (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 191.)

SVAYAMBHUVA MANU. Son of Brāhma and the first of the Manu.

1) Brāhma. Svāyambhuva Manu was born as the mental son, and Śatarūpa as the mental daughter, of Brāhma. Svāyambhuva did pray and acquired boons for ruling over the subjects. He married Śatarūpa herself. Brāhma appointed him as the first Manu to rule over the subjects. Two sons named Priyavrata and Utānapāda and two daughters named Praśūti and Ākūti, were born to Svāyambhuva by his wife Śatarūpa. Of the two daughters Praśūti was given to Prajāpati Manu and Ākūti to Prajāpati Ruci as wives. A son named Yaśa and a daughter named Dakṣā were born to Ruci by Ākūti. The children were twins.

It is believed that Svāyambhuva and Śatarūpa are the first human beings. A story as given below, occurs in Mātya Purāṇa. Brāhma took birth as a man somewhere in Kāsñika. Brāhma who took birth as a man, created Śatarūpa from his own body, without any decrease in its radiance. Svāyambhuva (Brāhma) appreciated the beauty of Śatarūpa. He grew amorous. But Brāhma was ashamed of his feeling, as Śatarūpa being half of his body, was his daughter. Being subjected to love and shame at the same time Svāyambhuva took a stone and looking at Śatarūpa To avoid the look of Brāhma, Śatarūpa moved to one side. Brāhma had no courage to turn his face to that side. So another face sprang up on that side for him. Śatarūpa turned four sides and Brāhma thus got four faces. His amour subsided. When the desire subsided, a man originated from Brāhma. That man is Svāyambhuva. (For further details see under Manvantara.)

SVAYANJATA. A son born to a man by his own wife. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 119 Verse 33.)

SVAYAMPRABHA. A daughter of Maya, an asura. Two daughters named Svāyamprabha and Somaprābhā were born to Mayāsura. From birth Svāyamprabha became a celibate. Netāṣābha the son of Vaśvanarāja married Svāyamprabha. Svāyamprabha, the celibate, became the maid of Rambha. (For the rest of the story, see under Rāma Parva 25). [Kathāsāsāgara, Madhuvanakukalabakha, Tarangī 3.)

SVAYAMVARA I. A sub-section of Adi Parva in Mahābhārata. This sub-section comprises Chapters 183 to 191 of Adi Parva.

SVAYAMVARA II. A custom of princesses selecting their husbands themselves. There are three kinds of Svayamvara. These three kinds are stipulated for Kings only. The first type is Icchāsvayamvara, the second one is Savayasthiśavayamvara and the third is Śrurṣuśukvasavayamvara. No condition is attached to Icchāsvayamvara. Anybody may be chosen as husband according to the wish of the bride. Damayanti Svayamvara is an example of this. In the second it will be stipulated that the bridgroom will have to possess certain qualifications. In Śītāsvayamvara Śri Rāma drew the bow of Tryambaka, and married Śītā. This is an example of the second type of Svayamvara. The third type is meant for adventurous heroes. Arjuna’s marrying Subhadra is one of the third type of Svayamvara. (Devi Bhāgavata, Sandhi 3.)

SVEDAJA. An asura (demon). (See under Raktaja.)

SVETI. A King in ancient India. By his moral and spiritual power he was able to restore his dead son to life. He did not eat meat. Mahabhatak, Anuʃātana Parva, Chapter 151 mentions that he was one of the few Kings who deserve to be remembered with reverence at dawn and dusk. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 23S; Śatī Parva, Chapter 153, Verse 68; Anuʃātana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 69).

SVETÅ II A king, Mahabhārata, Sahā Parva, Dīkṣitānaya Pātha, Chapter 14 mentions that he was one of the prominent kings in India.

SVETÅ III I a son of the Virāṭa king, Śveta was the son of Kini Virāṭa by his chief wife Suṣratha, who was a princess of Kosalā. Śveta had attended Yudhiṣṭhira's Rājasīya. This distinguished warrior was killed by Bhīma in Bhāratā Ruddhā. (M.B. Dīkṣitānaya Pātha, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 16, Sahā Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 20, Bhārata Parva, Chapter 48).

SVETÅ IV I a warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Mahabhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 64).

SVETÅ V I son of the elder brother of King Sudeva. There is a story of how Śveta, who was a sinner, attained mokṣa (salvation) by a vision of Sañcī Agastya. Towards the end of his life, Śveta attained Mokṣa by performing austeritys. But since he failed to go on to heaven by giving food to the hungry, even in heaven, he was tormented by hunger and thirst. His hunger was so severe that he began eating his own flesh.

As last as suggested by Brāhmaṇa he was born again on earth and after a visit to Agastya re-entered heaven.

SVETÅ VI I a daughter of Daśika. Ten daughters were born to Daśika by his wife Krodhaśī, including Śveta. (Vidhmak Rājanyā, Aranyā Kārṣṇā, 14th Sarga).

SVETÅ VII I a mountain in Uttarā Khandā. In Mahabhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 139, Verse 1, we find that the Pāṇḍavas crossed the Śveta mountain during their life in the forest.

SVETÅ VIII I a country situated on the northern side of the Nela mountain. The region is known as "Hiryākarn" is situated in the north of this country. (M.B. Bhīrana Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 37).

SVETÅ-BHADRA I a Gūḍyaka (guardian of treasury). Mahabhārata, Sahā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 15 mentions that he serves Kubera in Kubera's assembly.

HE I the guardian of Kubera's treasury.

SVÅ ADVITYA I an island. It was on this island that Śveta performed his austeritys for obtaining Brahma Vidya. It is situated on the northern side of the ocean of milk. It is 32,000 miles above Meru mountain. The inhabitants of Śveta do not have the sense organs. They do not take food. They are rich in "jñāna" (knowledge). Their bodies give off perpetual fragrance. These senseless people are of white complexion. Their bodies and bones are as hard as Vajrayudha. Their heads are as broad and flat as umbrellas and their voice as loud as thunder. Each of them has four arms and sixty teeth. All of them worship Śiva. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Dīkṣitānaya Pātha, Chapter 335).

SVETÅKETU A Maharsi.

1) Birth. Śveta was born in the son of the sage Aruni or Uddālaka who was born in the Gātama clan. Śveta was a disciple of a teacher named Sūrākṣa. Therefore, Śveta was born under the name of Uddālaka's āśrama. (See under Āśvākra). 2) Pride period. Under his father's training Śvetaketu became a great scholar. With the increase in his scholarship, he became very proud. The father who understood this called him to his side and asked him: "By studying all about what you can see, hear and understand, have you learnt anything about what you cannot see, hear or understand?" Śvetaketu admitted that he did not know. Then Uddālaka explained to him the mystery of Paramāṇa (universal soul) which is without beginning or end. (Chāndogypaṇisād).

3) Śvetaketu in Pāñcāla. After completing his education under his father, Śvetaketu went to Pāñcāla. There, in the royal assembly Ālau, the Prāvāhaṇa king asked him the following questions: "Where do people go from this world? How do they return? Where do Devāṇa and Pāरyāṇa meet? From where do they diverge? Why is Pitṛlok imperfect? What is the fifth yajñabali?"

Śvetaketu answered that he did not know because his father had not taught him these things. Then he went to his father Aruni and told him about his failure to answer these questions. The father admitted that he too did not know them and suggested that they should ask Prāvaknha himself. Since Śvetaketu refused to go with him to see the king, Uddālaka himself went to Prāvaknha. The King enlightened him on the above topics and sent him back. (Chāndogypaṇisād 1.8).

4) Āśva of Yajñā Rules. In Kaftūkha Brahmāṇa, Śvetaketu is described as the Āśva of the rules of Yajñā. He has laid down definite rules and procedures for priests officiating in Yajñas. Besides, he has suggested the different customs and practices to be observed by Brahmāṇins and tapasvin. In the treatise dealing with Dharmaśāstra before his time, food of sweet taste was denied to Brahmāṇins. But Śvetaketu has pointed out that it was an entirely wrong doctrine. (Gopatīkha Brahmāṇa, 1.83; Sāmkhyāyana Brahmāṇa, 1.83).

Once an Āśva named Jagātavāya became the priest of the King of Kāṭi, Kosalā and Videha. Śvetaketu who was angry at this complained bitterly to his father. Then Uddālaka reminded his son that priests should yearn for wisdom instead of being attracted by worldly pleasures.

5) Author of Kāmaśūtra. It is more or less clear that it was Śvetaketu who abridged the original work on Kāmaśūtra by Nandi, into five chapters. This abridgement of Śvetaketu was again abridged after some years by Bābhṛavaya. It was after abridging it again and adding Āstakākṣyā's "Vāṣika" and Suvorpanśika's "Sāṃpravagika" etc., that Vātāṣvyaṇa composed his famous treatise "Kamaśūtra". Really speaking, the basis of Vātāṣvyaṇa's "Kamaśūtra" was the works of Bābhṛavaya and Śvetaketu on Kamaśūtra. It has been observed that the first person who raised his voice against the evils of drinking and adultery by the Brahmāṇa community was Śvetaketu. There is a story in the Mahābhārata about the fact which prompted him to bring marriage within the framework of law. Śvetaketu was Uddālaka's son, born to his wife by one of his disciples. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 22). Once his mother was abducted by a Brahmāṇa. This incident inspired him to make stringent laws insisting on monogamy for men and women.
ing Yajñas. Mahabhārata gives the following details about this yajña later:

(i) Śvetācārya performed numerous Yajñas. He was a king who was deeply absorbed in Yajñas. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 992).

(ii) Once the Yajña he performed was so prolonged that the Rtvik was utterly tired and left the Yajña in the middle. After that the King had to bring in other Rtvik to complete it. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 21).

(iii) He worshipped Śiva and propitiated him to get a blessing to enable him to perform many Yajñas. Śiva advised him that he should do Śhūta (homa or sacrifice) in Agni continuously for twelve years. Accepting this advice, the king invited Durvāsas to make arrangements for the Yajña. Appointing Durvāsas as Rtvik, Śvetācārya continued the Yajña for a hundred years. (For more information see under Khādajavāsī).

ŚVETĀCĀRYA. An elephant. A Gandharva happened to be born as an elephant in the Kurūga country, as a result of a curse. Śvetācārya is the name of that elephant. The King Rathaḍhipa mounted that elephant and did many exploits.

King Rathaḍhipa was the ruler of the island Rathaḍi-kaṭa. He was a prominent Vaiśāvya. He did tapas to Visnu with the object of conquering the whole earth and to get all princesces as his wives. Mahāvīra appeared before him and said:—"A Gandharva has been born in the land of Kallīgha by a curse as a white elephant. His name is Śvetācārya. As directed by me, he will come to you. You may ride him and he will take you through the air across the sky. All the kings against whom you fight, will be defeated and they will offer their daughters to you as tribute."

Next day, the Gandharva mounted Śvetācārya and descended before him through the air. As advised by Mahāvīra, Rathaḍhipa mounted the elephant and conquered the whole world and secured numerous princesses. One day as the King was riding the elephant and travelling through the air, an eagle came and pecked at the forehead of the elephant. Rathaḍhipa drove it away by a thrust with his spear. But the elephant fell down unconscious. Even after five days he did not rise. The King offered prayers to the "Lokapālaṇas". He was about to cut off his own head and offer it as sacrifice to them. Just then he heard a mysterious voice saying:—"Do not be rash; Śvetācārya will rise at the touch of a chaste woman."

The King at once went to the palace and brought his chief queen who was chaste and asked her to touch the elephant. Still the elephant did not rise. When he found that none of his 80,000 wives was a "chaste woman", the King was ashamed of himself. Then he brought every one of the women in his kingdom and made them touch the elephant. But it was all in vain. At this stage, when Rathaḍhipa was very much depressed, a merchant named Haragaṇṭa from Tamraliptī happened to come there. He was accompanied by his wife Śilavatī. She touched the elephant and immediately it stood up. Rathaḍhipa was very much pleased and married Śilavatī's sister Rājahatinī. After offering many rich presents to Śilavatī and Haragaṇṭa Rathaḍhipa took Rājahatinī on the back of Śvetācārya to a deserted island Cūtakalāḍīva and left her there under the protection of several women attendants. The King spent his nights at Cūtakalāḍīva and days in his own palace.

One day Rājahatinī was remaining alone in her residence. The attendants had gone out to attend to various duties. At this time a man happened to arrive there from somewhere. He was Bhavaṇasaṇa, the son of a Vaśya. He reached the island with the help of a piece of wood which was floating in the sea after a shipwreck. Rājahatinī who heard his story, was irresistibly attracted by him and she embraced him. Just then the King arrived on the scene. Consoling himself by thinking that this was also the will of Pātṛ, he left off the Vaśya youth.

The King returned to his palace and decided to spend the rest of his life by doing tapas in the forest, after giving away all his wealth and property to the poor. When he was about to mount Śvetācārya, the animal suddenly transformed itself into a maṇḍ of divine glory, dressed in gorgeous clothes and jeweled. He presented the King as follows:—"I am a Gandharva. My name is Somaprabha. There is my elder brother Devaprabha who lives on the Malaya mountain. My brother had a wife named Rājavatī. Once all the three of us went to worship in a Visnū temple at a place called Siddhāśīva. At that time my sister-in-law sang a devotional song. A Siddha who was enchanted by her song was looking fixedly at her. Enraged at it, my brother asked the Siddha why he was staring at his wife with lustful eyes. The innocent Siddha was naturally provoked by the question and pronounced a curse that my brother and his wife would be born in human wombs and in that birth, he would see his wife having sexual union with a stranger. When I heard my brother being cursed, I became very angry. I hurled a toy elephant which was in my hand at the time, at the Siddha. He then cursed me also to become a white elephant just like the toy which with which I hit him. I am that younger brother and you are my elder brother. This Rājahatinī, your queen was my sister-in-law Rājavatī. Our curse is now over." As soon as he concluded, all the three of them renounced their earthly bodies and were restored to their original forms. (Kathāsīrīrīgāra, Rata- prabhālambaka, Taranga 2).

ŚVETASIDDHA. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. (Sāla Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 89).

ŚVETĀTARAKA. He was the author of the famous Upāniṣad known as "Śvetātvara. Many spiritual and philosophical topics are discussed in this work divided into six chapters.

ŚVETAVĀHA. Another name for Arjuna. (See under Arjuna).

ŚVETAVĀKTRA. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 75).

SVIJÅTAK. Another name of Agni (Fire). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 219 Verse 22, that this Agni was the sixth son of Brhaspati.

SVIJÅTAK II. The Agni (fire) called Visvapati, who was the second son of Manu. Rohini the second daughter of Manu also is known by the name Svita.

It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 221, that the offering in fire, of the fat portions of the sacrificial animal, is carried out properly by the help of this fire.

SVITRAPUTRA. See under Svitra.

SVOThA. A King. (See under Saralomā).

SYAMA. One of the nine daughters of Meru, including Svanī. They are called Navakanyā. They were married by the sons of King Vikvanta. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skanda).

SYAMA. A mountain in Śikadvipa. It is as dark as clouds and very tall. (M.B. Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 19).

SYAMARELA. A heroine of great prosperity. (See under Bhadrārāvī).

SYAMA. A son of Śūra by Māriśā. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skanda).

SYAMANTAKA. A divine jewel. (For further details see under Prasena).

SYAMASRAMA. An ancient holy place. By bathing and living here for a fortnight one could obtain the power of "Antarchāna" according to Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 30.

SYAMASRAMA. One of the sons of Vīśvarūpa. (M.B. Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 55).

SYANDIKĀ. A river in Kosala. This is very famous in the Purāṇas. It is mentioned in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kanda, Sarga 49, Verse 12, that Śrī Rāma, who had started for forest-life, crossed the river "Syandika where peacocks and swans called."

SYAPARSA. A priestly community. They were the priests of the royal family. Once Vāsanta decided to perform a Somayāga. Without allowing Śyāparas to take part in that yāga, the King invited other priests for the purpose. At that time, Rāmaśāhagaveya, one of the Syāparas devised a new method concerning Somayāga and established his claim to priesthood. (Aitareya Brahmana, 7, 27).

SYAVASA. Son of the sage Arasanās. (See under Arasanās).

SYENA I. A class of birds. A daughter named "Syenī" was born to Kshaya Prājapati by his wife Tāmā. Syenas were the sons of Syenī. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 56).

SYENA II. An ancient sage. Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva Chapter 7, Verse 11, describes him as shining in India's assembly.

SYENACITRA. A King in ancient India. This King had never eaten meat. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 63).

SYENAGAMI. A military commander of Kharra the Kākṣa. In his battle with Śrī Rāma, Kharra had twelve military commanders including Syenagami. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kanda, Sarga 26).

SYENAJIT I. Son of Dala, a King of the Ikṣvākū dynasty. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 192, Verse 63 mentions that he was the most beloved son of his father.

SYENAJIT II. Uncle of Bhimasena. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 141, Verse 27).

SYEPI. Son of Syena.

SYUMARASHI. An ancient hermit. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śantī Parva, Chapter 238, that this hermit got into the stomach of a cow and sitting there, talked with the hermit Kapila about the ways of Karma and renunciation. This hermit Vyumaraśi is as ancient as the Rgveda. A statement as follows, occurs in Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 16, Śākti 112, "Ye Adivins who are the Leaders. Come here also with those protective weapons by which you gave protection to Atri, Śāṇi, and Manu, and the arrows by shooting which you saved Vyumaraśi."

TA I. This letter means a thief or the inner bow of a bird. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

TA II. This letter means the act of singing. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

TADITPRABHA. A female follower of Subrahmanyā (Verse 17, Chapter 46, Sālīya Parva).

TAJASA. A holy place. This is situated in Kurukṣetra. The importance of this place lies in the fact that it was at this place that all devas together crowned Subrahmanyā as their Commander-in-chief. (Sloka 16, Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

TAITIRI. A celebrated sage of the Taittirīya branch of sages. He attended the Yāga conducted by Upārivaravu. (Śānti Parva).

TAKSA. A son born to Illarata of his wife Manḍavī. This prince along with his brother Puskara conquered Gudhirādesa and created Taksalānāgarī there. (Uttarakūṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, and Vāyu Purāṇa).

TAKSĀKA I. A fierce serpent.

1) Genealogy and birth. Descending in order from Viṣṇu—Brahma—Marici Kaisthya—Taksaka. Kuśaṇapūruṣottama got of his wife Kadru's serpents and Taksaka was one of the serpent chiefs. (Sloka 6, Chapter 39, Ādi Parva). See also under Kadru.

2) Taksaka and Parīkṣit. In his boyhood Taksaka went out from the family. The reason was a curse by his mother. Once Kadru and Vināya, another wife of Kaisthya, entered into a controversy regarding the colour of the hair of the tail of the horse Ucāsāravas. Kadru said, it was black and Vināya said it was white. It was decided that she who lost the wager should become the servant of the other. That night Kadru called her children and asked them to go and hang on the tail of the horse so that it should appear black. Some of the righteous children opposed this deceitful attempt of their mother and refused to go. Kadru cursed them saying that they would be burnt to death at the Sarpaśītra of Janamejaya. Kadru sent those children out from home and Taksaka became their leader.

At that time Parīkṣit (King of Bharata) became the victim of a curse that he would die by the bite of Taksaka within seven days. (To know more details regarding this curse of the sage see under Āśtika). The worried King in consultation with his ministers decided to take protective measures. At first he moved to a seven-storeyed palace and stayed on the seventh storey. Physicians of fame and those well-versed in mantras were posted at the palace. Brahmins were put on duty for prayers. The entire palace and its precincts were guarded by huge elephants. Security arrangements were such that even wind found it impossible to enter the palace without permission. The King did all his daily routine activities in the palace itself.
At that time Kasyapa [there is a version that it was Dhanvantari who was thus sent back by Takṣaka]. 9th Sandhaha, Devi Brāhavata was the greatest of all physicians and mantra-s and greedy that he was, he started to the palace of Pariksit thinking that it would be the best opportunity to obtain some money from the King. Takṣaka also was going to the palace in the guise of a brāhman. On the way Takṣaka met Kasyapa and knowing well that the presence of the celebrated Kasyapa at the palace would be an obstacle to the achievement of his mission, he approached Kasyapa. They talked on the way and Kasyapa said he was going to the palace to save the King from the bite of Takṣaka. Then Takṣaka, revealing his identity, said that it was impossible to save anybody from the result of his bite. Both then decided to test their skill then and there. A huge banyan tree with many branches spreading wide was standing nearby and Takṣaka gave it a bite. Within seconds the huge tree was churned to destruction; Kasyapa then took some water and reciting a mantra poured the water over the ashes of the tree and then to the surprise of Takṣaka, the tree rose up and stood in its original form. On seeing that Takṣaka confessed that Kasyapa was superior to him. Takṣaka then cursed him to his side and giving him a huge amount as bribe made him return home.

Six days went by and on the seventh day Takṣaka reached the palace of Parikṣiṭ. He found the palace well-guarded and watched. There was no way to go in. Takṣaka then called all his relatives and had them disguised as brāhmins. He sent them in with fruits and roots, like people who had come to pay homage to the King. Takṣaka crept into one of the most attractive of the fruits as a tiny worm. The guards at the gate stopped them. The fake brāhmins then said that they had come a long way from a far off tepovana and should be allowed to see the King. The information was conveyed to the King. The King said he would see the brāhmins the next day but ordered their gifts to be brought to him. When the fruits and roots were brought to him, he gave a fruit each to the ministers, himself taking the most beautiful fruit of the lot. When he cut the fruit open he saw a worm with two black eyes and a red body sitting inside it and was a bit surprised. Then he addressed his ministers thus: “Oh, best of ministers, by your earnest and sincere endeavour nothing has happened to me till now. The Sun is going to set and the term of the curse is going to end. There is no need to be afraid of any poison now. But let not a curse of a sage go futile. Let this worm bite me and fulfill the curse.” So saying the King took the worm and placed it on his neck. The worm changed itself into the fierce Takṣaka and bit the King and the King fell down dead. (12th Sandhaha, Devi Brāhavata).

3) How Takṣaka became Indra’s friend. Once the son of a sage of great divine splendour named Uttakṣa was studying under a Guru named Veda. When his education was complete, the Guru asked him to bring as daksīṇa (gift) the tar-rings worn by the Kṣatriya wife of King Purvya. Indra made Takṣaka steal the ornaments and presented many obstacles on the way. (For details see under Uttakṣa). That incident made them mutual friends and gradually Takṣaka became an intimate friend of Indra.

From that day onwards Uttakṣa waited for an opportunity to take vengeance on Takṣaka. It was at that time that Janamejaya, son of Parikṣiṭ, became the king. Janamejaya was only eleven years old when he became king and he was not then aware of the details of the death of his father. Uttakṣa went to him and told him how Takṣaka killed his father, Janamejaya because furious and asked him how to wreak vengeance on him. Uttakṣa suggested the performance of a Sarpaṣṭara to which all the serpents should be attracted by mantras and burnt to death there. The young king agreed and Uttakṣa with other priests commenced the Sarpaṣṭara. On one day all the serpents came and fell into the sacrificial fire but Takṣaka was not to be found. Where is Takṣaka? This question was heard from many lips. Takṣaka was specially invoked by Uttakṣa. Takṣaka could not bear the power of Uttakṣa and he ran and prostrated before Indra. Indra not only did give relief but gave him half of his seat in the throne and Takṣaka sat on a fully confident of security. Uttakṣa was enraged, when he repeated calls by mantra, Takṣaka did not appear and so he sat in meditation for some time to know the cause. He then saw Takṣaka sitting on the throne of Indra and the sight threw him into fury and he invoked Takṣaka, Indra and the throne and all. Lo! In an instant Indra, Takṣaka, the throne and all started moving towards the sacrificial fire! Within seconds all would have been burnt to death but for the timely intervention of a brāhmin boy named Āstika, son of the sage Jatakṣa (See under Āstika, Takṣaka escaped death that time).

Takṣaka by instructions from Indra was living in the forest of Khāṇḍava and when that was burnt by Agni, it was Indra who saved Takṣaka from the fire. (See under Khāṇḍavādha).

4) Other details.

(i) A king called Candrāṇādha lived in the house of Takṣaka for some time. (See under Candrāṇādha).

(ii) Takṣaka in the guise of a brāhmin named Kṣapaṇa went to the sage Uttakṣa and stole the ornaments from him. (See under Uttakṣa).

(iii) Once the Earth was made into a cow and everybody milked from her what each wanted. The serpents milked poison from her and then used Takṣaka as the call. (See under Pṛtha).

(iv) During the burning of the forest of Khāṇḍava, Arjuna slew the wife of Takṣaka. (See under Khāṇḍavādha).

(v) When the soul of Balabhūdārākṣa, after his death, reached Pāñcāla, Takṣaka received it with respect. (Shloka 15, Chapter 4, Manuṣa Parva).

(vi) Takṣaka lives in the court of Varuna worshiping him. (Shloka 8, Chapter 9, Sahāsī Parva).

TAKṢAKA II The elder of the two sons of Lokaśman of his wife Utarmi. The other was Candraśāntu. Following the instructions of Śīrāma, Lokaśman went to the east sea coast, defeated the forest tribe there. He then constructed a city there named Arjuna and made Takṣaka the king there. He then went to the west sea coast and destroying the barbarous tribe there constructed a city there called Candramati and made Candraśāntu (or Candraśāntu) the king. (Uttara Khāṇḍavādha).

TAKṢASI. A place of Puranic celebrity situated in the north-west of Bhārata. Even from ancient times this was an educational and cultural centre. From the descriptions of the Chinese traveller Huen Tsang it is found that Nalanda and Takshasila were two great universities before Christ. The famous Sarvasara of Janamejaya was conducted at this place situated on the banks of the river Vitasa. The story of Mahabharata was first told at this place and at this end of the narration Brahmans were given gifts. (Chapters 3 and 5, Adi Parva).
TALA. A hell. There are many hells under water including Tala. (Chapter 6, Aniśa 2, Visnū Parāṇa) TALAGARA. A place of human habitation in ancient Bhārata. (Sloka 26, Chapter 140, Udvyoga Parva).
TALADHVAJA. The phantom husband of Nārada. Once Nārada became a woman and a king called Tālādhvaja married her (Devi Purāṇa). It was to show how the mind is covered with illusion that Mahāvīra made Nārada into a woman.

Once Nārada went to Mahāvīra and asked him about the secret of life. Mahāvīra said that there was nothing called life and life exists because of Māyā, the illusion of the mind. Nārada insisted that he should see Māyā (illusion) and so Visnū started from Vaiśampāya with Nārada on the back of Garuda.

Consisting of lakes, villages and mountains they reached Naṅgūkū. There they saw a beautiful lake. Garuda landed and Visnū and Nārada got down. They walked along the shore of the lake for some time and then they sat beneath a tree for some time. After some time Mahāvīra asked Nārada to take a bath in the lake. Pleased at this command Nārada went into the water and the surroundings there. Then a king called Tālādhvaja came on horse-back that way. He addressed the beautiful woman as Saubhāgayunda and started talking with her. Within hours they got married and Tālādhvaja took her to his palace and spent the honey-moon there happily. Twelve years went by and Saubhāgayundarī became pregnant. In due course she got a son named Nārada. After another two years the son of another son named Sudharmā. Thus she delivered a son every two years for twenty-four years becoming the mother of twelve sons. After some time the hare eight more sons also. When all the twenty sons came of age they were married according to the custom and in due course those sons also got sons. Thus Tālādhvaja and Saubhāgayundarī became the heads of a large family of children and grand-children and lived happily. One day a King from a far-off place with a great army suddenly came and surrounded Naṅgūkūba. In the fight that ensued most of the sons and grand-sons of Saubhāgayundarī were killed. The king fled from the battlefield and came to the palace. Saubhāgayundarī was in great distress and when the enemies left the battlefield she there to have a last look at her sons and grandchildren dying. The next morning. Her They lay there without heads, hands or legs, eyes protruded, stomach cut open, intestines lying out and blood oozing out from everywhere. She fell to the ground and wept bitterly. Then Mahāvīra came there disguised as an old brahmin and talked to her. He gave her instructions on some truths about life. Saubhāgay-sundarī then called Tālādhvaja and they both went to the old lake and as instructed by the old brahmin Saubhāgayundarī took a dip in the water. Lo! she became the old Nārada.

When Nārada got up from the lake Mahāvīra was still standing near his villa butspeechless with illus-} him how he had requested Visnū to show him Māyā and how he had taken a bath in that lake and how he had spent a long period of married life ending in misery and how Visnū had come to her in the form of an old brahmin when she had cried to him in agony and how the old brahmin had taken her and Tālādh-vaja to the lake again and how he had become his old self again. He stood there still pondering over these when Visnū called him and said “Come on Nārada, how slow you are finish your bath and come soon.

What are you thinking about?” Tālādhvaja, however, was unmoved by any of these. He was puzzled to find a bearded Sannātari rising up from the place where his beautiful wife had dipped herself for a bath. He went Nārada and asked “Oh best of sages, where is my wife who has just dipped herself in this same place?

From where do you come?” Even before waiting to hear a reply from him the King began to make a hue and cry about the loss of his wife. Then Mahāvīra went to him and said to him that in all the illustrations that “human tears are only ephemeral” and asked him to take a bath in the lake. Tālādhvaja after his bath became disgusted with life and after doing penance in the forest attained Mukta. (8th Skandha, Devi Bhāgavata).

TĀNSA. An ancient place of habitation of Bharata. (Sloka 64, Chapter 9, Bhrīṣa Paṟva).

TANTRIPĀLĪ. The name adopted by Sahadeva when he lived in anognito in the city of Viśā. (Sloka 9, Chapter 3, Viśā Paṟva).

TANTU. A Brahmāvīdī son of Viśvāmitra. (Chapter 4, Anuśaṇa Paṟva).

TANU. An ancient sage. This sage lived in the palace of King Virādhyumna for a long time. (Chapter 127 and 128, Sāntī Paṟva).

TAPI. A Deva of fire-like splendour, born of the power of penance of five sages named Kāṣyapa, Viśvāmitra, Prāṇaka, Gaya and Trivarca, this Deva has got a name Pāncajanya (born of five) also. He did severe penance (tapas) and got the name Tapi. His head is like fire, his hands like fire and eyes are of golden hue and his violence, (Sloka 4, Chapter 220, Vāna Paṟva).

TAPANA. A soldier of the country of Pāncala. He was killed by Karna in the Mahābharata battle. (Sloka 15, Chapter 48, Karna Paṟva).

TAPĀRANAYA. A sacred place crowded with sages. (Sloka 20, Chapter 37, Vāna Paṟva).

TAPASVI. A son born to Āikaṇa Manu of Nādayāla. (Chapter 13, Aīkaṇa 1, Viśu Purāṇa).

TAPATI. A daughter of Śūrya.

1) Genalogy. Descending in order from Viśṇu are Brāhma—Marti—Kāṣyapa—Śūrya—Tapati.

2) Birth. Śūrya married Sanjīthā daughter of Viśvāṃkara. He begot of Sanjīthā two children named Kāṇḍī and Yama. At that time Śūrya (Sun) was not of the form as seen now. Sanjīthā, unable to bear the splendour of Śūrya who was of the shape of an egg entrusted her maid Chāyā with the work of serving her husband and left for a temple in the guise of a maid to do penance. Chāyā disguised as Śannātha served Sūrya for a very long period. Sūrya begot of her two children, Sanaścara and Tapati. Besides these, Sūrya had another daughter named Śavitrī also. (Chapter 47, Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

3) Māraṇa. There was a mighty king in the Lunar race called Rāja in the beginning of Krतयुग. He had a son named Sanvarana. He was made king of his country by his father even while he was a boy. He was a proud and righteous man. Vastṛśa was his guru and he taught Sanvarana the Vedas along with the Aṅgas.

Once Sanvarana entrusting the administration of the state to Vastṛśa went to do penance in the forests. On his way he followed a deer for a long distance on horseback and reached a deep forest named Vaiśvhrāja alone. There he saw a lotus pond full of bloomed lotuses and Kuberā flowers. Celestial maidens were playing there without interruption. Among them he saw a very beautiful maiden. She was Tapati daugther of Sūrya. Even at first sight they became lovers. The king looking at her lost his balance and fell from the horse. At once great and charming Gandharvās approached the king and sprinkled water on his face brought him back from swoon. Tapati was also upset and the other nymphs took her to her father's house and consoled her.

Sanvarana returned on horse-back to his residence the city of Pratiśthī. But the king neither slept nor ate any food. The sage Vastṛśa knew that all the ailments of the king were due to his love for Tapati, daughter of Sūrya. So he flew up by his yogic powers and met Sūrya sitting in his chariot in all splendour. The sage described to Sūrya the love affair between Sanvarana and Tapati and pleaded on behalf of the king for giving Tapati to Sanvarana. Sūrya was pleased to hear that and sent Tapati along with Vastṛśa to Sanvarana. Before long the marriage of Tapati with Sanvarana was celebrated solemnly at Pratiśthānagara. The celebrated emperor Kuru was the son born to Tapati of Sanvarana. (Chapter 21, Vaiyū Purāṇa).

4) How she got that name. Because she was the daughter of Sūrya who makes the sky hot (tapā) by his brilliancy, she was called Tapati. (Sloka 6, Chapter 172, Adi Parva).

5) Tapati becomes river Narmāda. Sūrya, father of Tapati, blessed her and said she would thereafter flow west from the Viṇḍhya as a river named Narmāda. The present holy river Narmāda is but Tapati devi transformed. (Chapter 47, Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

TAPATYA. Kuru was born to king Sanvarana of his wife Tapati. All the descendants of Kuru were known as Kūravas and because they were of the generation of Tapati, they were known as Tapatya also. The young Gandharvās, Citravatī, who fought against Arjuna on the banks of the river, Gaṅgā, addressed Arjuna as Tapatya. (Sloka 79, Chapter 169, Adi Parva).

TAPOLOKA. The place of abode of Vairājī who could not be burnt by fire. This is above Dhruvapada by eleven crores of yojanas. (Chapter 7, Am'ma 2, Vīgum Purāṇa).

TAPATKUMBHA. A hell. There are twenty-eight hells according to Viṣṇu Purāṇa including Tapatkumbha.

TAPAMŚŪRTI. A hell. (See the section Naraka under Kāla).

TĀRA. A monkey who was a devotee of Śrī Rāma. This big monkey was the son of Bhrāspati. Bhrāspati made this monkey greater in size and intellect than all other monkeys. This Tāra was the minister of Bāli. (Sloka 10, Sargas 17, Bāli Kanda, Vaiṣṇāvī Kāmānga and Uttara Kāmaṇga). In the Rāma Kāvya battle this monkey fought against the demon Nābhaṭa. (Sloka 9, Chapter 285, Vana Parva).

TĀRA I. Wife of Bāli, best of Vānaras (monkeys).

There are two stories different from each other regarding the birth of Tāra. One version is that Tāra was born during the churning of the Milk Ocean. Airāvata, Ucchāravas, Kalpavṛkṣa, Guṇḍimāna, Kaustubha, Candra, Aparas, Mahālakṣmi Tāra and Rumā lore from the sea of Mārṣa (Yudhī Kanda, Kamba Rāmaṇga). The second version is that Tāra was the daughter of Susena. Bāli at the time of his death is said to have spoken thus of his wife Tāra “Tāra, daughter of Susena, is well learned and is capable of assessing a situation and suggesting the correct thing to be done at that time. If she says a thing is good, it is never otherwise.” (Chapter 22, Kaustubha Kanda, Vaiṣṇava Kāmānga). From this it can be understood that Tāra was the daughter of Susena and we get an idea of the character of Tāra also from this. (See under Bāli).

TĀRA II. Wife of Bhrāspati. She was extremely beautiful. Once she fell in love with Candra (Moon) and leaving her husband started living with him. Candra was the disciple of Bhrāspati. The devas were angry when they found the wife of their preceptor staying with a disciple of his. Bhrāspati sent word to her to return home but she did not heed. At last the Devas decided to fight against Candra. Then they came to a compromise and Tāra was sent back to Bhrāspati. In due course Tāra delivered a son. He was Buda, father of Puruśva. There arose then a dispute between Candra and Bhrāspati regarding the fatherhood of the child. Then the Devas called Tāra and asked her to name the child's father. Tāra said that the child was of Candra and so Buda was looked after at the house of Candra. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavatā).

TARADATTĀ. Wife of Kalingadatta, King of Takaśāla situated on the shores of the river Vitasī. Once a celestial maiden named Surabhīdārā came to be born as the daughter of Taradattā due to a curse of India. She was then called Kalingasena. (See under Dharmadatta).

TĀRAKA (TĀRAKASAURA) I. An auras chief (demon).

This demon even while he was very young did penance to propitiate Śiva and got a boon to the effect that none other than a son born to Śiva should be able to kill him. He became arrogant with the power of this boon and soon became a terror to the world. Then to kill Tārakāsura Subrahmanya was born as the son of Śiva. In the great battle between the devas and the asuras Tāraka was killed by Subrahmanya.

Tārakāsura was the father of Tāraka, Kamālīka and Vidyunmālīka. (See under Subrahmanya). (Sloka 5, Chapter 33, Kaṇḍa Parva).
TĀRAKA II. Siva Purāṇa mentions about a Tāraka, son of the minister of Bhadrasena, a king of Kashmir. This Tāraka was the rebirth of a he-fowl. Bhadrasena had a son named Sudharma. He was the rebirth of a monkey. There is a story regarding how this fowl and the monkey came to be born in Kashmir above.

Once in the village of Nanda there was a prostitute named Mahānandā. Though she was a great devotee of Siva, she was living the life of a prostitute for her livelihood. She was having a monkey and a he-fowl as pets. She would adorn the necks of her pets with the rudraksha necklace (rosary) made of berry beads favourite of Siva and when she sang songs in praise of Siva those pets danced to the tune.

One day a Vaiṣṇava came there. He had a diamond Siva linga with him. Mahānandā felt a great fancy for that and so promised the Vaiṣṇava that if he gave her the diamond linga she would remain a faithful wife to him for three days. The Vaiṣṇava agreed and the diamond linga was kept in a very secure place. That night when both the Vaiṣṇava and Mahānandā were sleeping tired after a hectic amorous sport, the house got fire and the diamond was burnt into pieces. The Vaiṣṇava greatly grumbled on the loss of the diamond jumped into the fire and committed suicide. Mahānandā faithful to the promise that she would remain his wife for three days started to jump into the fire and abandon her life. At once Siva appeared before her in person and said thus: "Oh, Mahānandā, do not commit suicide. I came to you disguised as a Vaiṣṇava to test your devotion. You can never becoume my wife if you commit suicide."

With tears of joy running down her cheeks she said she wanted to live with Siva. So Siva carried her soul to Kailāna. Not only that, Siva blessed the fowl and monkey and said they would be born as devotees of Siva in their next birth and attain moksa at the end of their life on earth. Accordingly the monkey and the fowl were born in Kashmir as Sudharma and Tāraka.

TARAKA (TARAKAKSHA). A member of the demon Tārakāsura. This demon was the lord of a golden city called Tripura. Siva killed him during Tripuraadaha (burning of the Tripuras). See under Tripuraadaha. (Chapters 33, 34, Karṇa Parva).

TARALA. A place of habitation of ancient Bhārata. This place was conquered by Karṇa. (Sloka 20, Chapter 18, Karṇa Parva).

TARANTUKA. A Yāga. This Yāga is installed on the boundary of Kurukṣetra. If one spends one night in this holy place one would get the benefit of giving away a thousand cows as gifts. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

TARŚKYA I. Garuda. See under Garuda.

TARŚKYA II. A sage. He was a member of the court of Indra. He was known as Aruṣṭacemi also. He had no fear of death. He once discussed with Saravativedi about the soul. (Chapter 184, Vana Parva).

TARŚKYA III. A Katriya youth of the country of Tārśka. He came to the Rājaśya of Yudhishthira and gave much wealth for the purpose. (Sloka 15, Chapter 51, Sahā Parva).

TARŚKYA IV. A synonym of Siva. (Sloka 98, Chapter 17, Anuṭāṇasa Parva).

TARUNAKA. A serpent born of the family of Dhrīraṭrāṇa. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasattra of Janamejaya. (Sloka 19, Chapter 57, Adi Parva).

TĀTAKA. A fierce demoness. It was because of a curse of the sage Agastyā that Tātakā became a demoness. There was once a great Yāka named Suketu, a son of Surakṣa. He did penance to propitiate Brahmā to get a child and by the blessing of Brahmā Suketu got a daughter named Tātakā. Brahmā gave her the strength of a thousand elephants. Tātakā was by nature interested in cruel and violent deeds and doing deeds of magic. She made Sunda, son of Jharjha, her husband. She got two sons named Marica and Subhikśa. They also became mighty ones in deeds by magic.

Once Sunda attacked the brahmas of Agastyā in a mood of intoxicated arrogance. Sunda was burnt to death in the fire of his fury. Tātakā coming to know of the death of her husband got very angry and severely cursed Agastyā with his sons. Agastyā cursed them and made them into demon. Tātakā and her sons who immediately turned themselves into fierce-looking demons went first to Patala with Sumati, father of the demon race and then went with Rāvanā, King of the demons, to Lāhika and stayed there. With the help of Rāvanā, Tātakā conquered the universe and came to stay there with her sons. None, devas, demons or men dared to step into that forest. Even the Sun or Clouds avoided passing above that forest.

It was at that time that Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmīna came to that forest with Viṣṇumātra. Tātakā attacked Śrī Rāma and Rāma killed her with one arrow. The heavy body of the demoness fell to the ground like a mountain. Her soul then rose up as a beautiful Gāndhīnī lady and Tātakā who was thus released from the curse praised Śrī Rāma and left the place. Chapters 24 to 26 of Bala Kāṇḍa, Vālmikī Rāmāyaṇa and Kamba Rāmāyaṇa).

TĀTAKĀYANA. A Brahmacārī, son of Viṣṇumātra. (Sloka 56, Chapter 4, Anuṭāṇasa Parva).

TATĀNA. The name of Śramaṇāvata, King of Sinhalas, in his previous birth. (See under Sramaṇāvata).

TEJASCANDA. A deva who adorns the god Nārya with a flower garland daily. The idol of Nārya ākṣara is also used to be installed in temples. The idol is figured as one with a huge face and holding a sword and a lotus in his hands. (Chapter 51, Agni Parva).

TEJASVATI I. A beautiful princess born in Kāthgiravatīgarha intended to show that all happenings either good or bad are but the workings of fate. Tejasvati was the daughter of king Vikramasena of Ujjayinī and was very beautiful. She never liked any male and so never wished to marry. One day while she was sitting upstairs in her palace, she happened to see a young man passing on a way and was attracted by him. She sent her companion to him and informed him of her liking for him. He did not like the idea first, but the clever persuasions of the maid made him agree to a clandestine meeting with the princess at a temple at night that day. Tejasvati anxiously waited for the night to come.

About that time a Rajput prince greatly grieved at the loss of his father and subsequent loss of his kingdom started on a tour to see an old friend of his father. That night, by sheer accident, he came and rested in the same temple where the rendezvous of the princess was fixed. When night fell the princess came to the temple and without the least suspicion went and embraced the solitary figure sitting in the temple. The prince did not show any surprise and responded fully. The princess then understood all details of her lover and took him to his father the next morning. Somadatta (that was the prince’s name) then told Vikramasena all his misgaps and Vikramasena got back all the lost kingdom of Somadatta and also gave his daughter in marriage to him. (Taranga 4, Madana Mahājālanībaka, Kathasaritsagāra).

TEJASVATI II. The queen of Ādityasena a king of Ujjayini.

TEJASVI. One of the five Indras. (See under Pañcāli).

TEJAYU. A prince born to Miśrakesi of Raudradava, son of Puru. (Śloka 11, Chapter 94, Ādi Parva).

TEJOVATTI. The capital city of Āgnī. This is situated on the south-east corner of Mahāmeru. In the centre is Manovati, capital city of Brahmā. To the east of it is Amaravati, capital city of Indra. In the south-east corner is Tejovati. In the south is Sarnhavati, city of Yama. In the south-west is Gṛśaṇjana of Nṛṛti. In the west is Śravasvati of Varuna. In the north west is Gadhavatī of Vāyu. In the north is Mahādevā of Kubera. The north-east corner is Yasovati of Śiva. (8th Sandha, Dev Bhāgavata).

THA (II). This letter means taking food. (Chapter 348, Agni Purāṇa).

THA (II). This letter means Gandaṃandagāla (moon-disc), emptiness and Siva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

THĪNHĀKĀRĀLA. A prodigal person who lived in King. He was so educated that he could not be defeated in the game of dice. With the money so received from defeated persons he would buy wheat and go to the burial ground and after making bread with it he would eat it dipped in ghee sitting before an oil light placed before an idol of Mahākāla (lord of the burial ground). He would then lie there himself and sleep.

One night he saw the idols in the Mahākāla temple twirling. He got up and challenged the idols for a game of dice. The idols stood mute and Thīnhākārāla took their silence to be consent according to the rules of gambling fixed a wager and played. He won and then he said addressing the idols “I have defeated you. Give me the money due to me.” The idols stood silent and he, therefore, wrestled with them. Still the idols stood dumb. Then Thīnhākārāla took his sword and struck the devas and forced them to give him the money due to him.

Early morning he went away from there and spent the money lavishly. At night he came back again and challenged the idols for gambling as before. This became a daily routine and the devas felt themselves harassed. They, therefore, approached the goddess Īśvaranājī and advised them to refrain from playing as there was no loss of honour if one refused to take a challenge to gamble.

That night also as usual Thīnhākārāla came and challenged the idols for a game of dice. Then the idols said “We are not prepared to play.” Then he challenged Mahākāla himself to play Mahākāla also refused to play. Then suddenly the mind of Thīnhākārāla changed. Thīnhākārāla did penance to please Mahākāla. Mahākāla was pleased with him, appeared before him and blessed him.

Once a nymph came to bathe in the Mahākāli pond and as per the instructions of Mahākāla, Thīnhākārāla took away their robes while they were bathing. He demanded a nymph named Kalavati in return for their robes and finding no other way they gave him Kalavati.

Kalavati thus became the wife of a Man due to a curse of Indra. Once she praised sexual enjoyment with men on earth and derided the same with Devas. Indra heard it and he cursed her “Then let her become the wife of a man on earth and enjoy the pleasures there.” All this story Thīnhākārāla learned from Kalavati. She added she wanted to go to Devaloka the next day for a dance with Rammā. Thīnhākārāla consented and he also went to Devaloka and saw the dance, sitting along with the Devas.

When Rammā’s dance was over, there was the dance of a goat. Seeing that Thīnhākārāla said to himself “Why, this is a goat I used to see daily in Ujjayini. How did it come here to dance?” When the dances were over and the people dispersed, Kalavati took Thīnhākārāla to the Mahākāla temple. Next day he met the same goat in Ujjayini and then he enquired “Hi, do that dance which you did yesterday before Indra in devaloka. Let me see.” The goat stood dumb thinking of how this man on earth knew her in the form of a dancer of Devaloka. Thīnhākārāla once again compelled the goat to show its dance but when the goat still refused to dance, he thrashed it with a stick on its head and the goat immediately went to Devaloka and informed Indra about the incident. Indra felt sad when he saw blood oozing from the wound on its head. Indra by his divine powers then transformed it into the form of a bull. He paused all of this trouble and cursed her to remain as a doll on a pillar in the temple belonging to King Narasimha of Nāgarapura. Alaṃbūṣa, mother of Kalavati, who heard the curse begged for relief and Indra said she would get freed from the curse when the king himself demolished the temple and razed the place to the ground.

True to the curse, Kalavati after giving all her ornaments to Thīnhākārāla hid him goodbye and went and remained as a doll on the temple-pillar at Nāgarapura. Deeply distressed at this mishap of his wife, Thīnhākārāla dressed himself as an ascetic and went to Nāgarapura. There he purchased five earthen pots and filled them with the ornaments of Kalavati. He buried four of the pots in the forests and the fifth in the bazaar near the temple. Then he built a hermitage on the shores of a near-by river and started living there. News soon spread that a great yogī had come to the city and the King went to see him. They talked for a while on religious and spiritual matters and the King was about to leave when they heard the howl of a jackal. The yogī smiled and the King asked him why he smiled. He refused to answer but the King insisted and then the yogī said “Oh King, the jackal says that in a forest to the east of the city under a silver plant is a treasure.” The King immediately ordered his men to go and dig at the place and when they dug they got the treasure. The King offered the treasure to the yogi but he refused to accept it. Thīnhākārāla then on three different occasions pointed out to the King the three other pots in the forests and the King got great confidence in the powers of the yogi. One day he went to the temple with the King and while they were walking around a crow cawed and the yogi smiled. The King again asked him the reason and the yogi said that there was a treasure pot in the bazaar near-by. When they searched at the spot directed by the yogi the treasure was found.

On another day the King and the yogi went to the temple and as they walked about they saw the doll on one of the pillars crying. The King asked the yogi the reason for the doll crying thus. The yogi replied "Oh, King this temple is not located in a proper place. Further the deity here was not installed at an auspicious time. If this continues the King will come to ruin. That was why the doll cried." On hearing this the King ordered the temple to be completely demolished and the place made a plain ground. The order was carried out and Kalavati got release from the curse. She went to heaven and told Indra all that had happened. Indra immediately sent Kalavati to fetch Thulākārāda to heaven and then both of them lived happily together. (Parānga 2, Vināśālakāmsa, Kāthāśārīrāgāra).

TILABHĀRA. A place situated in the north-east part of Bhārata. (Śloka 53, Chapter 9, Bhīmṣa Parva).

TILOTTAMA. A prominent celestial maiden.

1) Bhīr. Tilottamā was born to Pradhā, wife of Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahmā and son of Marici. Abhimūla, Marakara, Aruna, Rudra, Rambhā, Manotama, Subhīka, Kurkata, Supriyā and Supriyā were all sisters of Tilottamā. (Chapter 65, Adi Parva).

There is a story about the birth of Tilottamā. Two demons named Sunda and Upasunda obtained invincible powers by doing penance. To make these two brothers quarrel with each other, by directions from Brahmā, Viśvakarma created Tilottamā. Viśvakarma collected from all inanimate and animate objects parts of objects beautiful to look at and created the enchanting Tilottamā. Tilottamā was then made to come to the world through the womb of Kaśyapa's wife. Because she was made by the tilānā (small particle) of all the best (uttama) articles of the world she got the name of tilottamā. (Chapter 215, Adi Parva). The good girl named Tilottamā was formerly created by Brahmā from small particles of diamonds. (Śloka 1, Chapter 141, Anuśāsana Parva).

2) How Śrīva got four heads and Indra a thousand eyes.

When the two demon brothers Sundopasundas were creating great havoc in the world by their cruel and immoral deeds, it was Tilottamā who was deputed by Brahmā to create a split between the brothers. On the eve of her departure to the world she went to Deva-bhūta to bid adieu. Brahmadeva stood facing south and Śrīva stood facing north and Tilottamā stood in the centre surrounded by the Devas. Tilottamā circled round the devas worshipping them. Śrīva was enamoured of her beauty and wanted to see her always and so a face on all the four sides of his head sprang up so that he could see her always as she circled round him. Indra was also enamoured of her and he found his two eyes insufficient to enjoy her beauty. So instantly a thousand eyes sprang up in the face of Indra. (Chapter 215, Adi Parva).

3) How Tilottamā cursed Sakaśāriṇika. (See under Sakaśāriṇika).

4) Tilottamā and Sundopasundas. See under Sunda.

5) Other details Tilottamā partook in the Janmotsava (birthday festival) of Arjuna. (Śloka 62, Chapter 122, Mahābhārata).

TIMĪDīV莫斯. A demon who was ruling in the state of Vaṭjyanapura. He was called Ṣambara also. This demon once attacked Devaloka. Indra was not able to kill him. So he sought the help of Daśaratha. Daśaratha went and fought against the demons. Daśaratha was made to faint in the battlefield by the magic of Timīdīva and Kaikēyī who was there. then, took him away and gave him all first aid. Pleased at this Daśaratha promised two boons for her and it was these boons that Kaikēyī demanded of Daśaratha on the advice of Manthāra at the time of the coronation of Śrī Rāma. (Sarga 9, Ayudhāya Kīyāṇa, Vālmīki Rāmāyana).

TIMĪGENīLA. A King. Sahadēva defeated this King during his victory campaign in the south. (Śloka 69, Chapter 31, Sahā Parva).

TIKROGAHA. An ancient place situated on the north-east part of Bhārata. (Śloka 32, Chapter 9, Bhīmṣa Parva).

TILOTTAMĀ. A form of unrefined drama current in Kērāla. This ancient art originally came into being to propagate some gods. There are others of this kind like Mūtīyeṣuṭu ‘Tiyāṭu’ and ‘Ayuyānam Pāṭu’ which all belong to a class of Ritualistic plays. This folk drama is a communal pageant devoted to gods. Its artistic value is worth noting. This is known by different names like ‘Tīra’, ‘Teyva’ and ‘Kaliyeṭu’. ‘Tīra’ in ancient language means ‘tāruṣaṇḍa’ (sight of gods) ‘Teyva’ is the corrupt form of ‘deva’ Tīravāṭu is a visible amusement where actors appear dressed as gods. Because the actors dance in the dresses of gods, this is called devavāṭu also. Teyvāṭu is the disintegrated form of devavāṭu. Because this is both a Kali (play) and an āṭu (dance) this is called Kaliyeṭu also. This is held in different parts of Malabar during the period of January to April. It is a programme of three days. The first programme is to exhibit an Akālakālm. This is done on the night of the first day. The second programme is to exhibit the vellāṭukolam which will be done on the second day evening. An indication of this is given on the first night itself. The programme of the second day begins with a dance called Veḷākkali. On that day there will be worshipping of gods at intervals. The Vellāṭukolam begins by fire in the evening. The chief actor will present himself before the public in the colourful robes of a god and will begin to dance to the accompaniment of drums and music. As the dance and music continues even though without drestes would start dancing. Gradually sounds of pop-pguns and instrumental music will swell the air. The chief dancer after dancing for some time would place a stool before the temple and spread a white cloth on it. Then the dancer would sit in meditation and do the ceremony called ‘calling the gods’. He would then pray to the gods to bless the function and appear at the zodiacal sign of Virgin. The dance and music start again. Then the people assembled would throw rice and flowers into the cloth on the stool. The dangerous of the gods a weapon in his hand and changes it often making huge uproars. Then after finishing the ceremonies like Kāvēṭu and Arulppāṭu, the Vellāṭukkārān retires. Then another actor in the dress of another god appears as Vellāṭukkāran and repeats the programme of his predecessor.

After the veḷḷiṭam before midnight, Tirāvajāna begins.

The dresses of the tīvras differ slightly from each other. Some tīvras wear jackals and shirts while some wear flower garlands made of Tulasī leaves (basil plant) and eucalyptus. All the tīvras rush to the temple in great spirit and they are followed by lamp-holders and torch-bearers in the accompaniment of loud sounds of musical instruments and upsurges from the spectators.

When the first round of dances is over, the 'Treya' stands dancing, pouring blessings to the people and decending ways of atonement for the sins done. Then food is offered to the gods and the function ends with a 'Vela' circling the temple.

TIRUṆĀNASAMBANDHA (R). He was one of the four Dakṣaṇāyaṇa Vaṁavaṃchars. He was living during the early part of the seventh century. The book on Dakṣaṇāyaṇa Vaṁavaṃchara is called TiruvanāṆāṆaṁchara. There are twelve songs in that book. They were composed by Anandavardhana. The first seven of these are devotional songs called Tevaras. They were composed jointly by Tīruttanāasambandhar, TiruvanāṆaṆaṆaṁchara and Sundaramurti. The first three tevaras are of Tiruttanāasambandhar. The twelfth tevaras is called Pēnyaapurāṇa. Its author was Ananṭaṅga. He was called Sundarmurti also. He was the chief minister of Anantyacala who ruled during the period 1063 to 1112 A.D. The theme of Pēnyaapurāṇa is the life history of sixtythree Sāivasuddhas who were renowned as Nāyaṅgas and Aṭṭāvās. It is in the sixth chapter of the second part of this book that they discuss Tiruttanāasambandhar.

He was born in the village of Sirkāli (Brahmapura) near Kumbakonam in the district of Tanjūr. His father was Sivapārārāya and mother Bhagavatī. Once when Sivapārārāya went to bathe in the temple tank called Brahmatirtha he took along with him his son Sambandhar also. Keeping his son on the steps of the tank Sivapārārāya plunged himself into the waters. Siva and Pārvati who came that way saw the child sitting alone and Pārvati went and fed him with her breast-milk. From that moment onwards the child started singing songs in praise of Siva and Pārvati. When he grew up, he did many wonderful deeds visiting many Siva temples of Pāṇḍrījāya. His father fixed up a marriage for him and the bride's party assembled even before time at the Cidambara temple. Tiruvāṇaṇasambandhar came there in time and standing before the temple deity sang a song in praise of Siva. The song was greatly appealing and at the end of the song before all those assembled there Sambandhar to the astonishment of all merged with the deity.

TIRUNṆAVUKKARAṆA (R). He was a Saivism like Tiruvāṇaṇasambandhar (Refer above) and a disciple also of the latter. He was born in the village of Tiruvāṇaṇ in South Arcot district. His father was Puṣpānār and mother Madinīyā both of whom were Velāḷayas. They got a daughter named Thikavatī and a son named Marutukkavar. He is also famous as TiruvāṇaṇavakaraṆa. This siddha who acquired divine knowledge has composed 4900 songs in praise of Śiva of which only 312 are in use now.

TIRTHA. A holy place. Even from very ancient times people of Śiṅbāṇa believed in the sacredness of holy places and they considered it a pilgrimage to holy places as a part and parcel of their life. Almost all the Purāṇa have praised the greatness of holy places.

TIRTHA. A holy place. Even from very ancient times people of Śiṅbāṇa believed in the sacredness of holy places and they considered it a pilgrimage to holy places as a part and parcel of their life. Almost all the Purāṇa have praised the greatness of holy places.

It is not true that all those who visit holy places and bathe in the sacred ponds there would get salvation. In Chapter 11 of Purāṇa it is stated thus: He would get salvation whose limbs, mind, knowledge, austerity and fame are under his own control. He who lives clean in body, without egoism, contented and never accepting gifts for services done would get salvation by visiting holy places. He who would fast if he did not get food, whose organs of sense are all under control would get salvation if he visits holy places. He who is righteous, free from anger, treats all animate objects like himself would get salvation if he visits holy places.

TIRTHANAŚEṢERI. A female attendant of Subrahmanya. (Sloka. 1, Chapter 45. Sāyā Parva).

TIRTHAṆAYAPAṆAṆA. A sub-divisional Parva of Vana Parva. This comprises Chapters 50 to 156 of Vana Parva.

TIRTHAKOOTI. A holy place. He who visits this place would attain Vayuuloka after obtaining the benefit of doing a Puṇḍrīka yajna. (Sloka 121, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

TIRTHANEMI. A female attendant of Subrahmanya. (Sloka 7, Chapter 45. Sāyā Parva).

TIRTHAYAPAṆAṆA. A sub-divisional Parva of Vana Parva. This comprises Chapters 50 to 156 of Vana Parva.

TIRTHAKSA. One of the sixteen daughters born to Dakṣa of his wife Prasūti. Of these thirteen were married to Bhrumadeva. Tīṭhī was one of them. The others were Śrīdha, Mātra etc. (4th Skanda Bhāgavata).

TIRTHAṆU. A King born of the family of Tītṛkā. He was the son of Ṛṣiṇgah and father of Rūṣṭirātra. (Chapter 277, Agni Parāṇa).

TIRTHBHAḤ. An asura. This demon shines in the court of Varuṇa. (Sloka 15, Chapter 9, Śabha Parva).

TIRTHBHASARAS. A sacred pond near the āśrama of Vālmiki. There is a story about this pond. Once a water-fowl lived there with his mate. One day the male fowl went out for food and as he was returning home he found a few other water-fowls going that way and the male fowl suspected the chastity of his wife. The male fowl decided to abandon his mate and the innocent she-fowl prayed to the Aṣṭādikpālasas for help. The Aṣṭādikpālasas instantly appeared there and made a pond and said that if the she-fowl could reach from one shore to the other without getting herself drowned she must be treated as chaste. The she-fowl was accordingly put into the waters and asked to swim to the other shore which she did without any accident. From that day onwards the pond was called Tīṭhībhāṣaras. (Tīṭhī = water-fowl, Saras = pond).

When Śiṅk came to the āśrama of Vālmiki after being abandoned by Śri Rāma, Vālmiki wanted to test her chastity. So the sages asked Śiṅk to enter the pond and reach the other shore. 'Oh goddess of Earth, if even in my dreams no other person than my husband has entered my thoughts, let me reach the other shore safe."
So saying Sita entered the water, and the goddess of Earth placed her in her lap and took her to the other shore. Sita did not get even wet. All the sages called her 'Mahāsādvyā' meaning supremely chaste woman. (Taratārī 1, Alakīravatālacakira, Kathāsarasāgara).

TRITARA. A place of habitation in ancient Bharata. (Slioka 5, Chapter 33, Adî Parva).

TRITARI I. A place of habitation in ancient Bharata. (Slioka 5, Chapter 33, Adî Parva).

TRITARI II. A celebrated serpent town to the sage Kaśyapa of Kadrâ, his wife. (Slioka 16, Chapter 33, Adî Parva).

TRITARI III. A sage who was a member of the council of Yudhishthira. (Slioka 12, Chapter 4, Sabhâ Parva).

TRITARI IV. A special breed of Fosse. Arjuna got this breed from Gandharvanagara during his victory campaign. (Slioka 6, Chapter 28, Sabhâ Parva).

TOLA. A great satirical poet of the Malayalam Literature. A great humorist, Sanskrit scholar and actor, he was minister to Bhāshārāvai Varmā who was ruler of Keralā during the period from 976 to 1027 A.D. According to Kundalāgar Kaṭūgar Tampurān, a great Sanskrit scholar and poet, Tola was born in Kondalâgarâ in the village of Avirikkanulâ near Adi in Cchin in a Nambudrī family. His original name was Nilkanthânu. When he was a young man, he was estranged from his community for having had illicit connections with a low-caste servant-named named Gakkâ. He was wearing a dress like a deer skin belt (181) on his body as the usual mark of Brahmācârī (bachelors) and he threw it away of his own accord carrying for him the name Tola. There is another version that Tola is the decayed form of 'Atulâ' meaning matchless. He was much interested in writing funny verses. There are many such poems now available believed to be those of Tola.

TOMARA. A place of habitation situated on the northeaster part of Bhārata. (Slioka 69, Chapter 9, Bhishma Parva).

TORASIFHIKAI. Duryodhana decided to make the Pândavas beggar by defeating them in a false game of dice. Bhīrāna Parva stood as an accomplice to that. To play the game Dyañcakrā constructed a palace and that palace was called Torasiphikai.

That diamond-studded palace had a thousand pillars and a hundred entrances. It had crystal fortresses and golden thrones in all the chambers. This palace was called Dyañcakrâvâna also. (Chapter 56, Sabhâ Parva).

TRAIŚANI. A King of the family of Turvasu. He was the father of Kârana. (See under Vamsāvalī).

TRAIVALI (TRAIVALI). A sage. He shone as a member in the court of Yudhishthira. (Slioka 13, Chapter 4, Sabhâ Parva).

TRAIVARNAKA (S). Brahmins, Kaśtriyas and Vaiśyas are the three classes of people called Traivarikas.

TRASADASYU. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He accepted sannyasa (ascetic life) and became a Râjârs. 1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Visnu-Brahmā-Matari-Kātyāpa-Vavavān-Vaivāsava-Manu-Ikṣvāku-Vikukši-Sa-Iśa-Purañjaya (Kakataha)-Anena-Pruñjaya-Prañjaya-Pravasvīva-Manu. (See under Ikṣvāku).

2) Other details.
(i) Because he made dasyus (evil people) 'tras' (to tremble with fear) he got the name of Trasadasyu. (7th Skanda, Devādhāvata).
(ii) The Āśvindevas once saved him from defeat in a fight (Sūkta 19, Mandāka 1, Rgveda).
(iii) Once Agarsiya, Sṛutasūri and Brahmānasa, three eminent sages, came to the country of Trasadasyu. On hearing that the sages were coming, Trasadasyu abandoned all his work and went to receive the sages at the state boundary. He asked them the purpose of their visit and they said they wanted some money. The King then showed them his accounts and convinced them that he was poor. (Slioka 11, Chapter 98, Vana Parva).

(iv) Trasadasyu was among those whose name should be remembered early in the morning. (Slioka 55, Chapter 165, Vaishūmanā Parva).

TRASKARê. An ancient measure of weight of metals. Jālamārâgâte lhanânu Yat śukkam diśitaya rajah,
Pratihitam tat pramaitiśitah
Trasyutam Prasaktu. (Slioka 132, Chapter 8, Manusmriti).

Eighty tassareus make one Tri. Three tris make one Maṇiṅkutuk. Three maṇiṅkutuk make one Venkutuk. Six venkutuk make one Madhyastiyavas. Three madhyastiyavas make one kunukkun. Five kunukkuns make one Māha. Sixteen Māhas make one Suvarga. This is the weight of two and a half vārṣikas. Four vārṣikas make one Pāla. Ten palas make one Dhanu.

TRAYI. Veda. Formerly only three Vedas, Rgveda, Yajurveda and Sāmaveda were recognised and so Trayi meaning group of three was used to denote the Vedas. (See under Veda).

TRAYÂṆURĀ. A King of the Solar dynasty. He was the son of Trithâv and father of Trisâk. (Chapter 57, Brahmanda Purâṇa).

TRAYÂṆURĀN. A sage of the line of disciples of Vyās. (See under Gurupurâṇa).

TREṬÂṆYUGA. Second of the four yugas. Kṛtayuga, Treta'yuga, Dvaparayuga, and Kaliyuga are the four yugas. There are three thousand deva-yugas (divine years) in Treta'yuga.

Śrī Râma was born at the end of Treta'yuga. Treta'yuga came to an end in B.C. 867103. Śrī Râma ruled the country for eleven thousand years.

Ḍaṇa-varṣa-sahākâri
Daṇa-varṣa-dâtkhi ca
Râma râjyamupasthitâ
Brahmâlokaṃ pravâhyayai. (Valmiki Râma'yana).

(After serving his land for ten thousand years and another ten hundred years (ten thousand plus thousand years) Śrī Râma will go to Brahmaloka. When Râma took over the reins of administration he was only forty years old. See under Manvantara and yuga.

(Asiatic Sanskrit Literature).

TRIBHÂNAU. A King born of the family of Yayâti. (9th Skanda, Bhāgavata).

TRIDASYU. The son born to Agastya of Lopamudrâ. (See under Lphemāvāhā).
TRIDHÂMĀ. The tenth incarnation of Siva. At this time Bhrigu Maharaśa was Vyāsa. (Siva Purâṇa, Satarmaṇḍana-purāṇa.)

TRIDHANVĀ. A King of the Solar dynasty who was the grandfather of Trisânu. (7th Skanda, Devi Bhâgavata.)

TRIDIVA. A river of Bhārata. (Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva.)

TRIGÂNGA. A holy place. (Śloka 29, Chapter 84, Vana Parva.)

TRIGARTÃ. A powerful kingdom of ancient Bhārata.

TRIGARTÃ. There are several references in the Mahābharata to the Kings of Trigarta. The following are a few of them worth noticing:—

(i) The Pandyas passed through the country of Trigarta while they were wandering in the forests after the fire accident at the warpalace. (Śloka 2, Chapter 135, Ādi Parva.)

(ii) Arjuna during his victory march to the north defeated the King of Trigarta. (Śloka 18, Chapter 27, Sabhā Parva.)

(iii) Nakula once conquered the country of Trigarta. (Śloka 7, Chapter 32, Sabhā Parva.)

(iv) The Kings of Trigarta united to pay tribute to Dharmaṇaputra. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 52, Śloka 14.)

(v) A King of Trigarta once killed the horses tied to the chariot of Dharmaṇaputra and then committed suicide. (Śloka 12, Chapter 271, Vana Parva.)

(vi) A King of Trigarta named Suvarṇa was slain by Nakula. (Śloka 18, Chapter 271, Vana Parva.)

(vii) Suvarṇa, King of Trigarta, was killed by the army of Bhīṣma during his stay inmargot at the palace of the King of Virāṭa killed many Trigartas. (Chapter 32, Virāṭa Parva.)

(viii) Suvarṇa, King of Trigarta, took the King of Virāṭa as a captive and enraged at this Bhūmaśena was about to kill Suvarṇa when Arjuna intervened and stopped him from that. (Chapter 25, Virāṭa Parva.)

(ix) Suvarṇa, King of Trigarta, had four brothers and the Pândavas fought against all the five. (Śloka 9, Chapter 166, Udyoga Parva.)

(x) In the Garuda-vyāha constructed by Bhīṣma (battle array in the shape of a vulture) five Trigarta princes stood at the head of the formation. (Chapter 56, Bhīṣma Parva.)

(xi) Arjuna used the Vāyuvyāha against the Trigartas in the great battle. (Chapter 102, Bhīṣma Parva.)

(xii) Śrī Kaṭa once defeated the Trigartas. (Chapter 11, Droṇa Parva.)

(xiii) Once Parasurāma killed many Trigartas. (Chapter 70, Droṇa Parva.)

(xiv) There was a fight between Śatyaśi and the Trigartas once. (Chapter 181, Droṇa Parva.)

(xv) Arjuna who led the sacrificial horse of the Aśvamedha-yajña of Dharmaṇaputra created great havoc to the Trigartas. (Chapter 74, Aśvamedha Parva.)

(xvi) The Kings of Trigarta live in the court of Yama. (Śloka 20, Chapter 8, Sabhā Parva.)

TRIJAṬÃ (GARΓÂ). A sage. Though he was a sage he lived by farming. He had a wife and children and his earnings from farm work were insufficient to make both ends meet. They were living in poverty and it was at that time that Rāma started for his life in exile in the forests. Before he commenced his journey to the forests he gave immense wealth to all the people who had assembled around him. At that time Trijaṭa never knew about it and when it came to the ears of Trijaṭa's wife she ran to the fields and persuaded Trijaṭa to go and see Śrī Rāma. When Trijaṭa came to the scene, Rāma had almost finished his distribution, but Trijaṭa took courage and pushing forward through the crowd approached Rāma and said: "Oh, King, I am a poor man with many children. Give something for this poor man who lives by farming." Hearing this, Śrī Rāma giving him a small stick asked him to throw the stick into the midst of the cattle grazing nearby. The Brahmin tightening his clothes and getting ready threw the stick with all his might to the south. The stick fell beyond a huge cattle grazing there. Śrī Rāma gave him all the cattle which stood inside the area covered by the stick. (Chapter 32, Aśvolyānā Kāṇḍa Vaiṣṇoī Rāmiyāyaṇa.)

Trijaṭt was the son of Viṇḍivimāitra. (Śloka 55, Chapter 4, Anuśāsaṇa Parva.)

TRIJAṬÃ. A servant demon of the palace of Rāvaṇa. Trijaṭa was one among the demonesses who were sent by Rāvaṇa to entice Śītā, stealing dejected under the Ashoka tree, to the side of Rāvaṇa. All the demonesses slept around Śītā. Trijaṭa had a dream one night which is described in Chapter 27 of Sundara Kāṇḍa thus: "Śrī Rāma dressed in pure white robes and accompanied by Laksmaṇa dropped to the place from air in a chariot built with ivory and drawn by a thousand swans. After that he arrived at Aravāṇa. Śrī Rāma took Śītā in his lap and rose up into the air. They went high to reach the Sun and Śītā was seen putting on the Sun and the moon. Then Arvāṇa which was carrying Rāma, Śītā and Laksmaṇa came to the top of Lailā. Then they came to this place in chariot. Then they travelled to the north in a Puspaka vimāna. Rāvaṇa fell to look on his body and looking all red was lying on the ground. His head was clean shaven. He was drinking oil from a pot and was shouting loudly. Then Rāvaṇa went to the south on the back of a donkey. When he had travelled a short distance he fell from the donkey head downwards. Rising from there he was muttering many vulgar words. Then he was transformed into a foul-smelling dung-mire. A black woman wearing a red saras and mud smeared all over her body came near him and dragged him to the south. Kumbhakārpa also was subjected to her torture. All the members of Rāvaṇa's family were seen smeared with oil. After that they all travelled south again. At that time Rāvaṇa was seen on the back of a dog, Kumbhakārpa on the back of a camel and Indrajit on the back of a crocodile. Vibhīṣana alone was seen standing near the Puspaka vimāna on the back of a four-tusked elephant wearing white robes and white garlands and sweet-smelling pastes smeared all over his body and holding a white umbrella with the four ministers by his side and the royal band playing. At that stage the beings of Lailā fell into the ocean. Then a monkey messenger of Śrī Rāma burnt the city of Lailā. All the women demonesses and Kumbhakārpa were seen lying in a cow-dung pit wearing red dress."
When Trijatī repeated her dream to her companions all were frightened to death. After the Rāma-Kāvaṇa, battle, it is stated in Vīmākī Rāmāyaṇa, that Śrí Rāma gave presents to Trijatī. (Śiśko 41, Chapter 291, Vana Parva).

TRIKAUKUBHAMĀ. A synonym of Mahāvīṣṇu. (Śiśko 20, Chapter 140, Amuṣāśana Parva).

TRIΚUṬA. A mountain. There are twenty mountains on the four sides of Mahāmeru including Trikūṭa. Purāṇas say that the city of Lankā, the abode of Kāvana, was at the top of Trikūṭa. Mahāmeru is at the north of Bhūrata. Lankā is in the south of Bhūrata.

Then how is it possible for Lankā to be on the top of Trikūṭa?

There is a story to substantiate this belief. Once there arose a quarrel between Vāsuki and Vāyudbhagavān and they decided to find out who between the two was more powerful. Vāsuki went and lay wound round Mahāmeru so tightly that even Vāyu (air) could not enter it. Vāyu got enraged and broke into a cyclone shattering the whole world. Even Mahāmeru began to shake but Vāsuki lay unaffected. The Cyclone began to increase in vigour and the devas were frightened and they went to Mahāvīṣṇu accompanied by Śiva and Brahmā. After hearing their story Vīṣṇu called Vāsuki and Vāyu to his side and commanded them to stop the quarrel. Vāsuki then unwound a part of his winding and that was from Trikūṭa. At once Vāyu entered there and separating Trikūṭa from other parts carried it away and dropped it in the southern sea. It fell to the south of the southern end of Bhūrata. Lankā is the city built on it by the celebrated architect, Vāvakraman.

TRILOKITILAKA. A Yogesvari mantra. If one mutters this mantra (a sacred prayer addressed to a deity) one hundred and one times daily, one will become omniscient. Not only that, he would be able to move about to any place he wants. The mantra is this: “Hrīm Gauri, Kṛdramayi te yogeśvari hum phat Svāhā!” (6th Skandha, Devi Bhāgavata).

TRINETRA. A minister of Mahākūkāra. The cabinet of Mahākūkāra was extremely strong and brilliant. Cīkūra, virile and an expert in military science, was the Defence minister. The great economist, Tāma, was the minister for finance. Udara was the Commander-in-Chief and the three advisory members were Bāṣkala, Trinetra and Kālandha. Sūraśārya was the minister for education. (5th Skandha, Devi Bhāgavata).

TRIPĀDA. A demon. In the battle between the demons and the devas Subrahmaniya slew this demon. (Śiśko 73, Chapter 46, Sāya Parva).

TRIPURA. A phantom city built by Maya.

1) Origin. Kaṭyāpa Mahārāja son of Marici and grand-son of Brahmā had many wives. Of them Aditi got the first place and Diti the second place. Both of them were daughters of Dakṣa. Devas were born of Aditi and the asuras were born of Diti. Armies of asuras under the leadership of Śūra-pātra, Śimbavaktra, Tārakāṣṭu, Gomukha, Hiraṇyakaśipu, and Hiraṇyakaśipu gave immense trouble to the devas. The devas joined together under the leadership of Indra and fought the asuras. The nectar received from the ocean of Milk always made the devas the conquerors. When Subrahmaniya slew Tārakāṣṭu the asuras became very weak.

At this stage Kamalākāra, Tārakāṣṭu and Vīḍyumālī, sons of Tārakāṣṭu, did severe penance and made Brahmā appear before them. They demanded a boon that they would never be killed by anybody. Any of the three worlds. Brahmā told them to ask any boon other than that. Then they said: “Great Lord, we must live in three cities and then roam about freely in the three worlds by your grace. Every thousand years all the three of us should join together at a place with our cities. After that meeting, we should separate and roam about freely for another thousand years. If at a duration three is death for us, it should occur only when we three are together and that also by one arrow.” Brahmā granted the boon and disappeared.

The asuras then approached Maya and asked him to construct three separate cities for them. Maya built three wonderful cities. One was with gold, another with silver and the third with iron. Tārakāṣṭu took the golden one. Kamalākāra took the silver one and Vīḍyumālī took the iron one. The asuras started living in these cities. The three purots were respectively in Svarga, Akāśa and the Earth. But each city had the power to travel to any other place at will. The power of controlling these cities was given to Bāna. Hiraya-kāra’s son was Prabhūkūrā and Prabhūkūrā’s son was Vīḍyumālī. Mahābali was Vīrocanas’s son and Bāna was Mahābali’s son. (Chapter 14, Padma Purāṇa). All these three cities together were named Tripura.

2) Mṛtasaṁjñamā Yajña. (The life giving yajña). Even with the existence of Tripura the asuras began to die in numbers and the Tripuras thought of a way to escape from this calamity. Hari, son of Tārakāṣṭu, did penance and made Brahmā appear before him in person.

According to a request from Hari Brahmā made Maya build a tank wonderful in nature. Brahmā filled the tank with nectar. If any asura died, it was enough if he was dipped in the tank and the dead asura would soon come to life with added strength and vigour. Asuras became immortal since this and the Tripuras started testing the devas and gods and found them fit. (See also Brahmā’s son in Kāśī.)

3) Consultation with Siva. The aggrieved devas approached Brahmā and finding him incapable of helping took him to Siva. Siva heard everything and assured them that he would kill them when they next met together at the end of a thousand years.

4) Sīva makes preparations. As a first step to the slaughter of the Tripuras, Siva sent Nārāyaṇa to Tripura. Nārāyana by his unusual spiritual powers made the asura women feel more and more attached to the devas. Siva at that time thinking about the convenience for a fight with the Tripuras came and settled down on the shores of the river Narmāṇa. That was how Narmāṇa became a holy river. (Chapter 13, Padma Purāṇa).

Sīva had to make grand preparations for a fight with the Tripuras. He invoked half the strength of the devas to himself to make Sīvāsakti (Javelin of Sīva) greater than Asurasakti. The devas made Vāvakraman construct a special chariot for Sīva. On the banks of the river Narmāṇa at a place which became renowned as Mahēśvara Sīva stayed for a thousand years thinking about the fight with the Tripuras and in the meantime the mountain of Mandara his bow, Vāsuki, the string and Vīṣṇu his arrow. He installed Agni at the tip and Vāyu at the bottom of the arrow. Four devas stood as horses to his chariot. The earth itself was the chariot and all the animate and inanimate objects of the devakula arrayed at different ports of the chariot. On the wheels stood the Avvā√ieva and Cakrapāṇi stood on the axle. Gandharvas took places on the spokes. Indra stood on the bow and Vaiśparvan on the arrow. Yama took his place on the right hand and the dreadful Kāla on the left hand. Brahman acted as the charioteer.

Equipped thus, Siva stayed in the godly chariot for a thousand years. When the Puruṣas joined totge in the sky Siva split the cities by his three forked spike. Then he sent an arrow to the cities. Bad omens began to appear in Tripura. People became lifeless in the cities. Soon an arrow from Siva burnt the cities and the Tripuras were burnt to death. (7th Skandha, Bhāgavata; Chapters 31 to 34, Padma Purāṇa; Chapters 33 and 34, Karṇa Purāṇa.)

TRIPURI. An ancient country of South India. Sahadeva during his victory march conquered this country. (Skotka 60, Chapter 31, Sabhā Purāṇa.)

TRIRATHIKÀ (8). (Three charioteers). Aśvatthāmā, Kṛpa and Sāyukyā, the three eminent bow-men who took part in the Bhāratas battle were called Trirathikās meaning three great charioteers. (See under Aśvatthāmā.)

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Brahman—Māri—Kaciyā—Vivāvan—Vaiśvāvata Muni—Kṛṣṇa—Pura—the citadins joined totge in the sky Siva split the cities by his three forked spike. Then he sent an arrow to the cities. Bad omens began to appear in Tripura. People became lifeless in the cities. Soon an arrow from Siva burnt the cities and the Tripuras were burnt to death. (7th Skandha, Bhāgavata; Chapters 31 to 34, Padma Purāṇa; Chapters 33 and 34, Karṇa Purāṇa.)

2) The discards him. When Satyavrata grew up he became a lewd, lustful, imprudent man. One day while he was leading such a contemptuous life, a marriage was being celebrated in a Brahmin house. Guests had assembled. The bridegroom had come and the ceremony was about to start when Satyavrata entered the marriage hall and carried away by force the bride to the back of all those present there. Some of the Brahmin guests immediately went to Trayyāru and told him that a shameful crime his son had committed. The enraged father at once sent Satyavrata out from the palace. Satyavrata left the country altogether and went and stayed in a colony of harijānas. Though he lived with these low-caste people he did not adopt their mode of living. He went out daily to the forests with his bow and arrow and made his food. He never felt any enmity towards his father who had thus sent him out from his country. He thought thus: "Of course, my father got terribly angry when he heard the complaints of the Brahmins and in that mood punished me thus, though the punishment was a bit too much. But our family preceptor Vasiṣṭha, who knows everything, who is a moralist and a righteous man, who has the knowledge and authority to prescribe atonement for all sins, did severe punishment. That was very hard." As he thought more about it in this vein, he felt a great hatred towards Vasiṣṭha.

3) Satyavrata and Vasiṣṭha’s family. When his only son Satyavrata was turned out from the family, King Trayyāru was greatly distressed. He went to the forests to do penance to get another son. At that time the country did not have rains for twelve successive years as a punishment for the King for sending out his son. The people suffered much. Among the people who were suffering were the wife and children of Vaiṣvāmitra. Vaiṣvāmitra at that time had gone to the shores of river Kauśikī for doing penance. Vaiṣvāmitra’s family consisting of his wife and three sons during that famine lived in hunger. At last the mother decided to sell the middle son and buy food with the money received by the sale. She put a rope made of darbha grass round the neck of the boy and took him to the market. On the way Satyavrata saw them and on hearing their sad story told them not to sell the child. He assured them that he would take care of them till the return of Vaiṣvāmitra. He removed the darbha rope from the child’s neck and the child got the name of Vaiṣvāmitra. The heir-apparent Satyavrata lived in the hut of a cāndjāla. Every minute Satyavrata’s hatred towards Vasiṣṭha increased in strength. One day Satyavrata did not get any game even after a day’s hunting and at dusk he happened to reach the ārama of Vasiṣṭha where he saw Nandini, the beloved cow of the sage, grazing by the side of the ārama. Anger, desire and hunger made him imprudent and without thinking of the consequences Satyavrata killed Nandini and after eating enough to appease his hunger took the rest to feed the family of Vaiṣvāmitra. The wife of Vaiṣvāmitra little knowing that it was cow’s flesh cooked it and ate it.

That night when Vasiṣṭha came to the ārama he found Nandini missing and he went in search of it. After some time the sage knew that Satyavrata had killed and eaten it. The enraged sage called Satyavrata to his side and cursed him thus: "You will from today become a āndjāla. Three āndjālas (sins) namely wrath of a father, abduction of another man’s wife and consumption of cow’s flesh will give you life-long trouble and thus you will earn a name, Trisānkū (Three āndjālas). Instantly Satyavrata became a āndjāla and started roaming about in the streets.

5) Trisānkū becomes king. Trisānkū, distressed at heart by a father’s wrath and a āndjāla for two days walked about aimlessly in the forests. He expressed his desire to the āndjāla and Brahmin to do a yāga and get himself absolved of all his sins. But nobody was willing to help a wretched man cursed and abandoned by both his father and his Guru. Feeling desperate, he decided to commit suicide. He made a great fire-pit and prepared himself to jump into it. Before doing that he prayed to the goddess and when the goddess knew that his devotee would jump into the fire and become ashes, she appeared before him in person and said thus: “Son, why do you try to jump into the fire? Your father has become old and day after tomorrow he will crown you as King.
and then go to the forest to do penance. Look, there comes your father’s minister to take you to the palace.” When the goddess disappeared Satyavrata returned to his ashram in a pensive mood. Naraoda went and informed the king of everything that happened in the forest and the king immediately sent his ministers to fetch Satyavrata to the palace. When Satyavrata came the king crowned him as king and then went to the forests for penance.

6) Satyavrata became Gandāla again, Satyavrata ruled the country for a long time. He was a pious ruler, devoted to god and soon he developed a desire to go to heaven with his mortal body. He approached Vasishtha first for this purpose. But the family preceptor told him there was nothing in the śāstras about any yāga which could help one to go bodily to heaven. Disappointed he approached the sons of Vasishtha who ridiculed him when he told them of his queer desire. Triśānu ku got angry at them and said “Let us see whether a person can go to heaven.” Those arrogant words annoyed Vasishtha and his sons and they cursed him and made him a caṇḍāla again. Triśānu ku thereafter did not return to the palace, but went to the forests to live there. He knew if he returned to the palace as a caṇḍāla he would not be recognized by his wife and children.

Hariścandra, son of Triśānu ku, heard about the curse on his father and sent the ministers to fetch his father to the palace. But Triśānu ku did not come back and so the ministers made Hariścandra the king of Ayodhyā.

7) Vīśvāmitra meets Triśānu ku. When Hariścandra became king, Triśānu ku was living in Ambāvana (forest of Ambā) as a great devotee of the goddess. It was at that time that Vīśvāmitra returned home after his penance. Vīśvāmitra enquired of his wife how they managed to live during the great famine. Then Satyavrati, wife of Vīśvāmitra, told him the whole story of how Satyavrata helped them, why he killed Nandini, Vasiṣṭha’s cow, and how they ate cow’s flesh, how Satyavrata was cursed to be a caṇḍāla, how he was called back as king and how he was able to live in Ambāvana. The eyes of Vīśvāmitra became wet when he heard the sorrowful story and he decided to end the caṇḍālavaṃśa (state of being a caṇḍāla) of Satyavrata. He went straight to Ambāvana and met Triśānu ku there.

8) Triśānu ku Sarga (Religion of Triśānu ku). Vīśvāmitra promised Triśānu ku that he would send him to heaven bodily and made preparations for a yāga. No other sage partook in the yāga because of instructions from Vasiṣṭha. But unsatisfied, Vīśvāmitra conducted the yāga alone and, as the power of his performances increased, Triśānu ku started rising bodily from earth slowly and soon rose up to heaven. When the devas found a caṇḍāla standing with his physical body before the gates of heaven they told him. Indra was angry and pushed him out from heaven and Triśānu ku came falling down with his head turned downwards to the earth. Triśānu ku cried loudly calling Vīśvāmitra by name. When Vīśvāmitra, hearing the noise, looked up he saw poor Triśānu ku descending fast from heaven with his head turned upside down. Vīśvāmitra’s anger knew no bounds. He said aloud. “Let Triśānu ku stay where he is now.” Triśānu ku stopped in mid-air. Indra did not allow Triśānu ku to come up and Vīśvāmitra did not allow him to come down. Indra then made a separate heaven for Triśānu ku below the original heaven. Then Vīśvāmitra started to create another Indra and devas for the new heaven. The devas were frightened and Indra then approached Vīśvāmitra and requested him to desist from his attempt to make duplicate devas promising him that he would give Triśānu ku a seat in his heaven itself. Vīśvāmitra agreed to it. At once Indra brought a golden Vimāna and took him bodily to heaven. (Sargas 57 to 59, Rājaśāhī, Vālmiki Rāmāyana 7th Skanda, Devi Bhāgavata; 9th Skanda, Bhāgavata; Chapter 13, Harivamsa; Sundara Kanda, Kamba Rāmāyana; Chapter 71, Aśvamedha; Chapter 12, Sāmbhava Parva).

TRIŚĀNU KU II. A philosopher. He is mentioned in several places in Taittiriya-panisad.

TRIŚAVANĀ. A sage. When he went to Hastinapura as a messenger of peace, he met Śri Kṛṣṇa on the way. (Chapter 83, Udyoga Parva).

TRIŚIRAS I. A demon who was a friend of Rāvana. The Khara-Dūṣana-Triśiras combination led the attack on Śri Rāma in the forest of Dundaka when Lakṣmaṇa cut off the nose and breasts of the demoness Sāparañaka. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa killed all the Triśiras, and Rāma was later joined by a powerful fighter and Śri Rāma’s forehead was wounded by an arrow from Triśiras. The latter came and fought in a chariot drawn by four horses. He was killed by an arrow from Rāma. (Sarga 26, Aranyaka Kanda, Vālmiki Rāmāyana).

TRIŚIRAS II (VISVARUPE). Once there was a celebrated Prajapati of name Tvasṭī. Though he was of a pious nature interested in the welfare of brahmins, he hated Indra. He thought of destroying Indra somehow. With that purpose in view he produced by his wife Reemā, a powerful son and named him Viśvarūpe. The boy had three heads and so he was called Triśiras (Triḥ = Three, Sūraḥ = Head). He could use his three heads for three different purposes at a time. He would drink wine with one head and water with another head and see the world by the third. Even from boyhood he disliked worldly pleasures and, abandoning even food, started to do penance. During the hot season he would sit amid fire and during the cold season he would sit in water to do penance. He would stand with his head down and do penance. The presence of Triśiras was so terrifying that birds and beasts would not even get frightened. He sent celestial maidens to stop the penance but all the attempts proved futile before that great ascetic. Then Indra himself riding on Airāvata went and killed the sage by his Viśvarūpe. Indra feared whether Triśiras would come to life again and wreak vengeance on him. So he ordered a carpenter standing nearby to bring to him three heads separated from the body. The carpenter cut off the heads from the body and as each head fell to the ground several kinds of birds were found escaping from it. From the head which used to mutter Vedic mantras rose the Kapīṭha birds; from the head used for drinking wine rose Kalapiga birds and from the third rose the Triśiri birds. When the birds thus rose to the air Indra was convinced that Triśira was dead and he went away. See under Viśvarūpe. (6th Skanda, Devi Bhāgavata).

TRIŚOKA. A sage who was the son of Kāvya. The Atitvī-devas once redeemed the cows belonging to this sage. (Sūktā 112, Anuvāka 16, Manḍalā 1, Rgyeva).
TRIŠRĪGA. A mountain. This stands to the north of Mahāmeru. Mahāmeru spreads over an area of eighteen thousand square miles and is two thousand miles high. It is surrounded by eighty other small mountains two on each side. To the east is Jāthara and Devakūṭa. Pavamāna and Parīyātra stand to the west while to the south are Kallāna and Karavīra. On the north are Tri ṛga and Makagarī. (8th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

TRIŠROTASĪ. A sacred river. This river lives in the court of Varuṇa worshipping him. (Śloka 23, Chapter 9, Sābhā Parva).

TRIŠTHĀNA. A holy place. If one lives and fasts here for one month, one would be able to see God. (Śloka 15, Chapter 23, Anuśāsana Parva).

TRIŚṬUP. One of the seven horns tied to the chariot of Śūrya. The seven horns are: Čaṇtri, Brhati, Usnik, Jagati, Triṣṭup, Anuṣṭup and Pankti. (Chapter 8, Anuṛ 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

TRIŚULĀ. A weapon of Śiva with the Vaiṣṇava tejas (brilliance of Viṣṇu) obtained by churn ing Śūrya. Viṣṇukarmā made the following: Ĉaṇtra-yuddha (Discus weapon) of Viṣṇu, Triśūlā (three-forked spike) of Śiva, Pupaka Viṁśā (Aerial chariot) of Kubera and the weapon Śākti of Subrahmanya. (Chapter 3, Anuṛ 3, Viṣṇu Purāṇa). (See under Viṣṇukarmā for more details).

TRIṢŪLAKHĀṬA. A sacred place. If a man bathes at this place and worships the devas and the māres, he would attain a place equal to that of Gaṇapati. (Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

TRIT. 1) General information. A son of the sage Gautama. He had two brothers called Ekata and Dvīta. (See under Ekata).

2) Other details. (i) Ekata, Dvīta and Trita were born to clean the hands of the devas when they become smeared with the sacrificial blood during the yāgas. Of these Trita once fell into a well while drawing water and the asuras closed the well. But Trita escaped opening the top. (Śūkta 2, Anuvaṅka 10, Māndala 1, Rgveda).

(ii) Once Ekata, Dvīta and Trita were stranded in a desert and desperately needed water to quench an increasing thirst. At last they found a well and Trita after getting down and quenching his thirst brought water to his brothers. The cruel brothers, after drinking the water pushed Trita into the well and covered the well with the wheel of a bullock-cart. Trita prayed to the Atvindevas for help and they appeared before him and rescued him from the well. (Śūkta 105, Māndala 1, Rgveda).

TRIVARCAS (TRIVARÇAKA). A sage who was the son of Angirasa. He joined with four other sages and did penance and produced a son named Pāñcakajanya equal to the god Agni in splendour. The other four sages were Kāśyapa, Pratāpa, Cīvavāna and Agni. (Ślokas 1 to 5, Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

TRIVAKRĀ. A hunchback of a woman who was engaged in the work of making scented cosmetics for Kṛṣṇa. This woman saw Śrī Kṛṣṇa on his way to the palace of his uncle Kaṁśa in Mathurā. Even at the first sight she felt a great respect and devotion towards Kṛṣṇa and she gave him the scented cosmetics she was carrying to Kaṁśa. Kṛṣṇa placed a foot of his on hers and holding her chin by both the hands raised it up and lo! she stood straight without her broken. She requested Kṛṣṇa to stay with her and she would find his seat this day which he did the next day itself. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

TRIVIKRĀMA. Another name for Viṣṇa.

TRIVIKRAMASENA. A mighty king.

TRĪVĪṢṬAPĀ. A sacred place inside Kuru-keśa. If one bathes in the holy well there and worships Śiva one would go to heaven. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

TRNĀBINDI I. A lake in the forest of Kāmathya. The Pandavas once during their exile went to Ṭrṇābindusāra from Dvaitavana. (Śūkta 3, Chapter 238, Vana Parva).

TRNĀBINDI II. A sage. This sage sat and did penance at a place called Ṛṣṭhirā. (Chapter 20, Padma Purāṇa).

1) Grandfather of Viśvāsra. Viśvāsra, father of Rāvana was the son of Mānini, daughter of Ṭrṇābindu. There is a story about him in Uttara Rāmāyana.

Once the sage Pulastya was doing penance in a secluded place in the Himalayas. When a few Devas Chandras were not interested in helping his penance by their dances and songs, Pulastya moved to a new place to see how he could take revenge on them. There he came across a sage who was weaving and sang aCX curse to that place saying that anyone coming to that place would become pregnant. Mānini, daughter of Ṭrṇābindu went to that place unaware of the curse and got pregnant. She came weeping to her father and Ṭrṇābindu immediately took his daughter to Pulastya and asked him to marry Mānini. Pulastya married Mānini and Vārāṇi was born to them.

2) How he cast Ṭhānūjīta. Once Ṭhānūjīta was out hunting. While hunting a lion and elephant were killed in the forest of Ṭrṇābindu. When the sage stepped out from the hermitage, he was for a moment frightened by the sight of these animals on the sides of his ṛāma and knew by his divine powers that the perpetrator of that deed was Ṭhānūjīta and so he cursed him, saying that he would lose all his divine powers forthwith. Ṭhānūjīta begged for relief and the sage said that he would regain his powers at the time of his going in search of Śītā when another member of his species would remind him of his lost divine powers. Ṭhānūjīta remained oblivious of his powers till the time when the monkeys were trying to leap to the Mahendragiri mountain on the shores of Bhārata. Jhambāvan, a mighty monkey chief called Ṭhānūjīta to his side and made him understand the great power latent in him. From that moment onwards Ṭhānūjīta regained his lost powers and became his old self. (See under Ṭhānūjīta).

TRNĀKA. A sainly King. He sat in the court of Yama and worshipped him. (Śloka 17, Chapter 8, Sābhā Parva).

TRNAPA. A Deva Gandharva. He partook in the Jāmaṣṭaṇī of Arjuna. (Śloka 56, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

TRNASOMĀRGIRAS. A sage who lived in the south of Bhārata. (Śloka 34, Chapter 150, Anuśāsana Parva).

TRPĀVARTA. A demon who was the son of Tārakṣura. This demon was living serving Kaṁśa. Kaṁśa once sent Trpāvarta to kill Kṛṣṇa growing up in the forest. Trpāvarta, in magic disguise went to the house of Nandagopa. Even when he entered the place bad omens were visible. Yasodā was breast-feeding her child when he carrying the baby in her lap. Soon Yasodā felt the baby gaining weight and very soon she felt the weight unbearable and rose up to place the child on a mat on the ground. But even before that Yasodā was fixed to the ground by the weight of the baby. But somehow she placed the baby on a mat on the ground and went out to wash her hands and face. When she came back she could not find the baby on the mat. Trāvārī came in the form of whirlwind and had already carried away the child. But after some time the weight of the baby increased so much that Trāvārī, unable to carry the weight, wanted to drop the child to the ground. But the child stuck on to his neck and breast tightly and Trāvārī finding no escape from the tight hold which suffocated him, fell to the ground dead. Yasodā had imagined that Bhagavatī had carried away her child. (Sūktam 21, Chapter 9, Siddhā Parva).

TRUṬI I. Thirty alpaklas make one Truṭi. (See under Kālamāṇa).

TRUṬI II. A female attendant of Subrahmanya. (Sūktam 17, Chapter 46, Sāśi Parva).

TRYAMBAKA. An ancient place of habitation. When the King of this place went to see Dharmapurī with gifts the gate-keepers did not allow him to enter the palace premises. (Sūktam 17, Chapter 51, Siddhā Parva).

TRYAMBAKA. One of the Ekāḍāsā Rudras (eleven Rudras). See under Ekāḍāstrudra.

TUGRA. A King extolled in the Rgveda. This King sent his son Bhṛujya with a large army by sea to conquer his enemies in dvīpāpatrā. When they were a long distance away from the shore the boats carrying them capsized in a storm and the prince and army were drowned in the sea. The prince then prayed to the A vivindas and they saved him and his army from the sea and sent them back to the palace. Those boats could travel both in the sea and in the air. (Sūktam 116, Manusmṛti).

TUṬA. Rudra Amavaya. (See under Anuvaha).

TUṬA. A soldier of Subrahmanya. (Chapter 45, Sāśi Parva).

TUṬUṆḌĀ. A demon. This demon was born to Kṣaṇuka of his wife Dāru. (Chapter 65, Ādi Parva). Even accompanied by Tārakaṭūra this demon once attacked Subrahmanya. Tuṭuṇḍa threw an iron mace against Gaṇapati who blocked his chariot. By a single stone of Gaṇapati, the diamond-studded mace of the demon broke into six pieces. When he found his mace gone the demon caught hold of Gaṇapati and beat him with a spiked club on his forehead. Gaṇapati cut him with his weapon (Axe) ‘Vennmacha’. The demon fell to the ground in two pieces but still his hold on Gaṇapati was not relaxed. Gaṇapati killed the demon but could not loosen the hold. Then Kṣujadona, a leader of the attendants of Gaṇapati smashed the hands of Tuṭuṇḍa with an iron mace. Tuṭuṇḍa was killed thus. (Chapter 65, Vīśṇu Purāṇa).

This Tuṭuṇḍa was born in his next life in the world as a King called Senabindu. (Sūktam 19, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

TULĀḌHĀRA. A charitable and righteous Vaiśya who lived in Kāṭa. He gave the sage Jājāi dharmapadēsa and both of them entered heaven. (See under Jājāi).

TULAPURUṢADĀṆA. See under Merudāṇa.

TULASI. (Holy Basil plant).

1) General information. Tulasi is a plant held most sacred by the Hindus. There is a Purānic background for Tulasi attaining this spiritualistic importance. In fact it is Mahālakṣmī, wife of Viṣṇu, who had herself taken the form of Tulasi. There is a story about it in Devi Bhāgavatī.

2) The curse of Sarasvatī. Sarasvatī, Gaṅgā and Lakṣmī were all, in the beginning, wives of Mahāviṣṇu. The Lord loved all the three equally. One day all the four were sitting together when Gaṅgā sent lustful glances at Viṣṇu which was immediately noticed by both Sarasvatī and Lakṣmī. Sarasvatī got angry and rising up caught hold of the hair of Gaṅgā and dragged her to the ground Lakṣmī then caught hold of Sarasvatī to prevent further assault but Sarasvatī then poured all her rage on Lakṣmī and cursed her to be born as a plant on earth Gangādevī could not bear this and she cursed Sarasvatī to be born as a river on earth. Sarasvatī retorted with a curse that Gaṅgā also would be born as a river. When the whole turmoil was over Viṣṇu called Lakṣmī to his side and said—“Oh Devi, do not worry. Things have happened as predestined. You go and be born as the daughter of Dharma dvajā and grow up there. From there by divine grace you will be transformed into a plant sacred enough to make all the three worlds pure. That plant will be named Tulasi. When you will be thus living as Tulasi, a demon named Saṅhāraka with part of my virile strength will be born and he will marry you. Then you can come back to me. The holy river Tadāmati will also be another form of your sport.”

3) The story of Dharma dvajā. Who was this Dharma dvajā to whom was born Mahālakṣmī as a daughter? In times of old there was a Manu called Dakṣasavarnā who was extremely virtuous and a part of Viṣṇu. Descending from Dakṣasavarnā, were Brahmadevapuruṣa-Dharma dvajā-Rudra-Devasvārā-Yājñaveda-Vṛṣadhvajā. This last named was a great devotee of Śiva and because of his great affection for this devotee Śiva lived a whole period of a divyayuga in the Ātrama of Vṛṣadhvajā. King Vṛṣadhvajā by an edict prohibited the worship of any other deity than Śiva in his country. Even the worship of Mahālakṣmī ordained by the Vedas during the month of Bhādra (September) became extinct. All Vāgīsa and worship of Viṣṇu came to a stop. Śūrya (Sun-god) got angry at this belittling of other gods than Śiva and cursed the King Vṛṣadhvajā that he would cease to be prosperous. Śiva did not like it and he went to punish Śūrya holding his trident in his hand. Śūrya was frightened and he approached his father Kṣiṇuka. Kṣiṇuka and Śūrya went to Viṣṇu and acquitted him with all details. Brahmadeva also was helpless in the matter and so all the three of them went to Mahāviṣṇu. They prostrated before Viṣṇu and told him all. At that time Śiva also came there. Addressing all of them Viṣṇu said “Oh, Devas, within this half an hour twenty yugas have passed by on the earth. He whom you have to save is already dead and gone. Even his son Ratadvāja is dead. The latter has two sons named Dharma dvajā and Kuṣadhvajā. They are dull and splendorless now because of the curse of Śūrya and are now worshipping Lakṣmī.” Saying thus Viṣṇu disappeared.
4) Birth of Tulasi. Dharmadhvaja and Kuśadhvaja did penance to propitiate Mahālakṣmi. Kulaḥdva had a wife named Mālāvati. She bore a daughter named Vedavati. Sītā, wife of Śrī Rāma, was a re-birth of this Vedavati.

King Dharmadhvaja had a wife named Mādāvī. Mahālakṣmi entered her womb as an embryo and after a hundred years Mādāvī gave birth to a daughter. Even at the time of birth the child looked like a matured girl and was extremely pretty. She was therefore, called Tulasi, meaning matchless. (Tula = match). This Tulasi abandoning all worldly pleasures went to Bādarikāśrama and started doing penance there with the prayer that Mahāvīra should become her husband. She did penance for twenty-four thousand years sitting amidst fire in the hot season and sitting in water in the cold season and taking only fruits and water as food. Then she did penance for another thirty thousand years eating leaves only, another forty thousand years taking air only as food and another ten thousand years without any food. At this stage Brahmā appeared and asked her the object of her penance. She replied she wanted Mahāvīra to be her husband. Hearing this Brahmā said thus: "Devī, you know the cowboys, the devś of the darkness of the path. Devī, you know the cowboys. It is like a part of Tulasi twigs. The brilliant cowboy has now been born on earth, due to a curse of Rādhā, as a demon named Saṅkhacīḍā. He is matchlessly eminent and has once fallen in love with you seeing you at Goloka. You will become his wife and later you can become the wife of Nārāyana. At that time a part of your divine body will remain on earth as a plant named Tulasi. Tulasi will become the most sacred of all plants, dear to Viṣṇu, and all worship without using Tulasi leaves would be ineffective."

5) Marriage of Tulasi. Due to a curse of Rādhā, Sudāmā, the cowboy, was born on earth as a demon named Saṅkhacīḍā. He did penance sitting at Bādarikāśrama and obtained Viṣṇukavaca. Another object of his was to marry Tulasi. He obtained a boon from Brahmā that his death would occur only when the Viṣṇu Kavaca was removed from his body and the chastity of his wife was lost. At that time Saṅkhacīḍā and Tulasi met each other in the forests and were married. Saṅkhacīḍā, brilliant and majestic, went about with Tulasi in amorous sports creating jealousy even among the devas. His arrogance gave innumerable troubles to the devas and they along with Brahmā and Śiva approached Mahāvīra for a remedy. Viṣṇu then sent Śiva with his spike to kill Saṅkhacīḍā and he himself started to molest the chastity of his wife Tulasi. Saṅkhacīḍā took leave of Tulasi to go and fight with Śiva. When Tulasi was thus left alone, Mahāvīra in the form of Saṅkhacīḍā approached Tulasi and after some preliminary talks entered into sexual acts. Tulasi found some difference in the usual sexual methods and suspecting foul play jumped up to curse the impostor. At once Mahāvīra appeared in his true form and said "You have been doing penance for a long time to get me as your husband. Your husband Saṅkhacīḍā was the chief of my Pārdhas, Sudāmā. It is time for him to go back to Goloka getting himself released from the curse. By this time Śiva would have killed him and he would have gone to Goloka as Sudāmā. You can now abandon your body and come with me to Viṣṇu to enjoy life as my wife. Your body will decay and become a holy river named Gāndakī; your hair will become Tulasi plant the leaves of which will be held sacred in all the three worlds." Tulasi then changed herself into the form of Lakṣmi and went to Viṣṇu with Mahāvīra. (5th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

6) The greatness of Tulasi. Everything of the Tulasi plant, leaves, flowers, fruits, roots, twigs, skin and even the soil around is holy. The soul of a dead one whose dead body is cremated using Tulasi twigs for firewood would attain a permanent place in Viṣṇuloka. Even great sinners would be absolved of their sins if their dead bodies are cremated with Tulasi twigs. If at the time of death one thinks of God and mumbles His name and if his dead body is later cremated with Tulasi twigs, he would have no rebirths. Even he who has done a crore of sins would attain mokṣa if at the time of cremating his dead body a piece of Tulasi twig is placed at the bottom of the funeral pyre. Just as all waters become pure by the union with Gangā water, all firewood is made pure by the addition of a small piece of Tulasi twig. If the dead body of one is cremated using Tulasi twigs alone, one's sins for a crore of Kalpa years would be washed away. Yamadhātus would keep away from one whose dead body is cremated with Tulasi twigs and servants of Viṣṇu would come near. If a light is burnt for Viṣṇu with a Tulasi stick it would be equal to burning several lakhs of lights for Viṣṇu. If one makes the Tulasi leaves into a paste and smears it on one's body and then worships Viṣṇu for one day, one would be getting the benefit of a hundred ordinary worships and also the benefit of doing a hundred godānas. (gifts of cows). (Chapter 24, Padma Purāṇa).

TUMBURU I. A Devas Gandharva. He was the best musician among the Gandharva. Yuddhiṣṭhira and the Pandavas were living incognito in the village of Viṣṇu. They had got a few days to leave for Devaloka at the invitation of Indra. (Yuddhiṣṭhira, Chapter 43, Verse 14).

(i) Tumburu attended the Jannotsava of Arjuna. (Sloka 54, Chapter 122, Adi Parva).

(ii) Once this Gandharva gave Yuddhiṣṭhira a hundred horses. (Sloka 24, Chapter 52, Saṁhitā Parva).

(iii) Tumburu welcomed Arjuna when the latter went to Devaloka at the invitation of Indra. (Yuddhiṣṭhira, Chapter 43, Verse 14).

(iv) Once when the Pandavas were living incognito in the country of Viṣṇu the Kauravas carried away the cattle of the King. Arjuna in disguise then fought against the Kauravas and Tumburu watched the fight with interest. (Sloka 12, Chapter 138, Viṣṇu Parva).

(v) Tumburu was present at the crowning ceremony of Yuddhiṣṭhira. (Sloka 59, Chapter 88, Avadhāna Parva).

(vi) How Tumburu was born as Viṣṇu. When Rāma and Lakṣmanā were in the forests in exile a demon named Virādha attacked them. That demon was none other than Tumburu. Once when Tumburu was living in the city of Kubera he contracted a disease and Kubera cured him and made him into a demon. Kubera had then told him that he would get relief from the curse when he was slain by Rāma, son of Dasiartha, Śri Rāma killed Virādha and the latter regaining the form of Tumburu left for Gandharvaloka. (See under Virādha).

4) How he cursed Pururavas. It is found in Kathāsārasāga that, the temporary separation which Pururavas had from Urvāsi was due to a curse by the Gandharva Tumburu.

After marrying Urvāsi Pururavas once went to Deva-loka at the invitation of Indra. He was invited to help Indra in his fight against the asuras. Indra celebrated the day on which one of the best of the demons, Mayadhara was killed. Rambha was dancing before śaciyā Tumburu on the occasion and Pururavas finding fault with her dance mocked at her. Rambha felt insulted and asked the King thus: “Fool of a King, what do you know of the divine dance of Deva-loka?” Pururavas retorted that he had learnt more of dancing from Urvāsi than what her preceptor Tumburu knew. Tumburu got angry and cursed Pururavas that he would live separated from Urvāsi till he did penance to please Mahāviṣṇu. The Gandharvas then carried away Urvāsi from Pururavas. (See under Pururavas).

5) Other details.
(i) Tumburu was a member of the court of Indra. (Sloka 14, Chapter 7, Śahī Parva).
(ii) Tumburu was a member of the court of Kubera. (Sloka 25, Chapter 10, Śahī Parva).
(iii) The songs of Tumburu who was a worshipper of Kubera used to be heard from the mountain of Gandhamadana on the full-moon day. (Sloka 29, Chapter 139, Vana Parva).

TUMBURU II. A sage.

Some details.
(i) This sage was one among the many sages who came from the north to visit Śri Rāma on his return to Ayodhya after the exile. Those who came from the north were—Kṛṣṇa, Vasīṣṭha, Ṭri, Viśvāmitra, Gautama, Jamadagni, Bharadvaja, Sānakidās, Sarabhadra, Durvasā, Matsya, Viśnteśa, and Tumburu. (Uterā Rāmāyana).
(ii) Tumburu was one among the rāis who visited Bhima lying on his bed of arrows. (Chapter 47, Śakti Parva).

TUṢḌA I. A King. The Pândavas invited this King to take part in the great Mahābhārata battle. (Sloka 21, Chapter 4, Udyoga Parva).

TUḌNA I. A demon. This demon who was one among the army of Rāvana fought against the monkey leader, Nala, in the Rāma-Rāvana battle. (Sloka 9, Chapter 283, Vana Parva).

TUṆḌIKEṆA. An ancient place of Bhārata. The people of this place took part in the great Mahābhārata battle. (Sloka 20, Chapter 17, Drona Parva).

TUṆḌAKARĀṆṆA. A holy place. The sage Śravasva did Devatādhiyāyaṇa on behalf of other sages at this place. (Sloka 46, Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

TUṆḌAVEṆA. An ancient holy river of Bhārata. People of Bhārata came pure by drinking the water of this river. (Sloka 27, Chapter 6, Bhīma Parva).

TUṆḌYA. A state of existence of Man. (See under Jāgrat).

TUṆḌVAṢA. A King exalted in the Rgveda. Narva, Tuṇḍvaṣ and Tuṇḍvi were contemporaries. (Śukta 34, Manḍala 1, Rgveda).

TUṆḌVASU. A son born to Yaśō in his devis. Yaśō had two wives Sarmisṭhā and Devasvī. Of Sarmisṭhā, Yaśō had three sons named Druhyu, Anurđhu and Puru and of Devasvī, two sons named Yudh and Tuṇḍvaṣ. Once Yaśō called all his five sons to his side and asked them if any one of them would be willing to exchange his youth with his father’s old age. All the four refused but Puru agreed to accede to his father’s request. Yaśō then cursed Twusvāsa and all the other three. (See under Yaśō).

TUṆḌYAṆA. A King exalted in the Rgveda. (Manḍala 1, Rgveda).

TUṆḌVITI I. A King exalted in the Rgveda.

TUṆḌVITI II. A King but since in some places he is mentioned as a sage, it must be presumed that he must have been a King who had become a sannyāsin during the latter part of his life. Once this sage was crowned and Indra came in time and rescued him. (Śukta 61, Manḍala 1, Rgveda).

TUṆḌĀ. A place of habitation of ancient Bhārata. Scholars are of opinion that the present Tukhārīstan was the ancient Tuṇḍā. The people of this place used to be called Tuṇḍās and their King Tuṇḍa. The King of Tuṇḍa was the store-keeper during the Raṣṭavāyaṇa of Yudhisṭhira. (Chapter 51, Vana Parva). The Pândavas during their exile cremated this country of Tuṇḍa on their way to Dvaitavana from the mountain of Gandhamadana. During the great battle, the Tuṇḍās arrayed themselves on the right side of the Kaurava Vyūha (an army formation in the shape of a stork) constructed by Bhīma. (Sloka 21, Chapter 75, Bhīma Parva). There is a statement in Chapter 65 of Śant Parva that a barbarous tribe called Tuṇḍās lived in the country of Mandsāra.

TUṆḌITAS. There were twelve good devas called Tuṇḍitas in the Cākṣasa Manvantara. When the Cākṣasa Manvantara ended and the Valvasva Manvantara commenced all the twelve were born as sons of Kṛṣṇa of his wife Aditi. Because they were born of Aditi they were called Duṣṭa-deva Ṭitasya. They were twins etc. Thus the Tuṇḍitas of the Cākṣasa Manvantara were the Duṣṭa-devaḥyāṇa of Vairavasva Manvantara. (Viśṇu Purāṇa, Anūṣā, Chapter 15).

TUṆḌTI. A daughter of Daksa. She became the wife of Dharmadeva. Dharmadeva accepted as wives the thirteen daughters of Daksa including Tuṇḍti. Their younger sister Kṛṣṇī etc. were married to Marici etc. (Chapter 7, Anūṣā, Viśṇu Purāṇa).

TUṆḌMĀṆA. A King of the Yāṣṭī dynasty. (9th Skandha, Ḫīḍavāṇa).

TVĀṢṬA I. A Prajāpati. This Prajāpati was an asura also. (Śukta 34, Anuvāka 14, Manḍala 1, Rgveda).

1) Bhr. There are contradictory statements in the Purāṇas regarding the birth of Tvāṣṭa.
(a) Viśvākarmā got four sons named Abhirudhaya, Tvāṣṭa Ājaipātā and Rusha. The great ascetic Viśvārupa was the son of Tvāṣṭa. (Chapter 15, Anūṣā 1, Viśṇu Purāṇa).
(b) Kaśyapa got as his sons the Ekādaśarudras of his wife Surabhi. Surabhi who became pure by penance got by the grace of Mahādeva five other sons named Aja, Ekapāt, Ahirbudhāna, Tvaṣṭā and Rudra. The noble and famous Viśvarūpa was the son of Tvaṣṭā. (Chapter 18, Agni Purāṇa).

(c) Kaśyapa Mahārāja got a son named Tvaṣṭā of his wife Adivi. (Skōla 34, Chapter 226, Ādi Parva).

Because of such varied statements it is not possible to say whose son Tvaṣṭā was.

2) Indra’s enemy. Even from the beginning, Tvaṣṭā hated Indra. Tvaṣṭā beget of his wife Recana a son named Viśvarūpa to kill Indra. Viśvarūpa was called Trītrīṣas also. (See under Trītrīṣas). While Viśvarūpa was doing penance Indra killed him by his Vajra-vudhā. Enraged at this Tvaṣṭā produced another asura named Vṛtra to kill Indra. (See under Ṛtra). Indra killed Vṛtra also. At last greatly disappointed Tvaṣṭā cursed Indra that he would suffer from Putradūkha (loss of son) and then went to the moon Meru to do penance.

3) Other details.

(i) Tvaṣṭā also treated as a Rudra. (Chapter 15, Am a 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

(ii) When the forest of Khāndava was burnt, he stood on the side of Indra and fought against Krṣṇa and Arjuna. He separated huge portions from the mountain and threw them against Arjuna and Krṣṇa. (Skōla 34, Chapter 226, Ādi Parva).

(iii) Tvaṣṭā shined in the court of Indra. (Chapter 14, Ādi Parva, Chapter 7, Śaṭṭha Parva).

(iv) Kuṭeru, daughter of Tvaṣṭā was once abducted by Narakāśura. (Chapter 38, Dākṣipātya Pāṇiha, Śaṭṭha Parva).

(v) Viśvakarmā also used to be called Tvaṣṭā. (Skōla 24, Chapter 100, Vana Parva).

(vi) The monkey called Nala was the son of Tvaṣṭā. (Skōla 41, Chapter 283; Vana Parva).

(vii) Tvaṣṭā presented Subrahmanya with two Pārānas named Cakra and Anucakra. (Skōla 40, Chapter 43, Śaṭṭha Parva).

TVAṢṬĀ II. A King of the family of Bharata. This Tvaṣṭā is the son of Bhuvana and father of Viṣṇu.

(5th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

TVAṢṬĀDHARA. One of the two sons of Sukrācārya who were deputed to do heroic acts of worship by Sukra. The other was Atri. (Skōla 37, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva).

U U (3). The letter ‘u’ means Śiva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 349).

U (3). This letter means ‘protection’. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 349).

UCAKA. A King of the Solar dynasty (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

UCATHYA. A muni in the line of the disciples of Vyāsa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 12).

UCCHIKHA. A serpent born in the family of Tāmaka. It was burnt to death at Janamejaya’s serpent yajña. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 93).

UCCHRAṢGA. One of the two attendants given to Skanda by Viṣṇu. The other was named Aśtṛṅga. (M.B. Śaṭṭha Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 49).

UDĀNAVĀYU. One of the five life-breaths. The five life-breaths are Prāṇa, Apāṇa, Samāna, Udāna andVyāna.

UDAPĀNA TIRTHA. A holy bath on the bank of the river Saravati. It is said that Balabhadra Raṇa, while going on a pilgrimage, had visited this holy bath. There is a story showing how this place became a holy bath. Long ago there was a hermit named Gauamar, who had three sons called Ekata, Dvita and Trīta. The father was much pleased at the dutiful and devotional character of his sons. One day he performed a sacrifice and went to heaven. Then the kings and the priests who were present for the sacrifice began to honour and respect Trīta. Ekata and Dvita did not like this. The three brothers performed sacrifices and acquired a large number of cows. With these cows they started for the east. Trīta walked before. Ekata and Dvita who were behind, made a confession and drove the cows another way. Trīta walked on in front. On the bank of the Saravati he saw a wolf and getting terrified, he fell into a well in which there was no water. Standing in the well, he imagined a creeper that was hanging to the well as 'Soma' (a herb used as oblation in sacrifice) and performed sacrifice, chanting the Vedas. His children were born to him with Bhraspati and other gods came to him and asked him what soon he desired. Trita told them that he only wanted to be saved from the well. Immediately the river Sarasvatī flowed into the well and the waves began to swell. Standing on the waves he praised and glorified the gods. Then he returned home and cursed Ekata and transmuted them into wolves. Trita said that their children would become monkeys and cattle. It happened so. The place where the Gods appeared before Trita, became famous and got the name Udadānitrītha. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 36).
UDĀPEŚI. A son of Vīśvāmitra. He was a Vedanitin.
(M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 59)
UDARĀKSA. A warrior of Skanda Deva. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 63).
UDARĀSANIDILYA. A hermit of the Durbar of Indra.
(M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 31).
UDARKA. A minister of Mahīśāsura. The ministry of Mahīśāsura was very powerful and efficient. The brave and haughty Cikūra was the war minister. Udārika was in general the army. (See under Mahīśāsura).
UDAYAGIRI I. The mountain of the rising Sun. It is supposed by poets that the Sun and the Moon rise from this mountain.
UDAYAGIRI II. An ancient place of pilgrimage. It is mentioned in Mahībhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 93, that by conducting evening prayer and devotion at this place once, one could obtain the fruits of all morning prayer and meditation for twelve years continuously.
UDAYANA. A renowned king of the Candravamsa (Lunar dynasty).
1) Genealogy. Descended from Viśvānu in the following order: Brahmi-Ātri-Candra-Buddha - Pururavas - Ayus-Nahuta - Yasyā - Piru-Janamejaya-Pracīva-Pratir-Kumara-Vitabhya-Suṣūd-Bahuvaha-Samvati - Raho-vā - Ṛdrāya - Mahārāja - Mahārāja - Chausūva -

Bhāvakuh-Cakrodhata-Devārthi - Bhima - Pratip-Śatanna-Śyāsā-Panda - Arjuna - Abhimanyu - Pariksit Janamejaya-Saṁbhata-Saṁbhata-Udayana.
2) Birth. There was a city called Kausāmbi situated in the middle of the famous kingdom known as Vatsa, in North India. The palace of king Saṁbhata, born of the family of Arjuna, was in Kausāmbi. Vipunamati was the queen of Saṁbhata. She was childless. One day while Saṁbhata was hunting in the forest, he met with the hermit Šukūlīya, by whose blessings Vipunamati conceived and gave birth to a son. That son was Saṁbhata. When he came of age, Saṁbhata left the country with his son and went to the heaven to help the gods in their battle with the Asuras, and he died there.
Saṁbhata became a might emperor. Once he got an invitation from Indra to a heaven and helped the gods in their fight. After having defeated the Asuras, one day, he was walking with Indra in the Nandana Park, when he saw the lock playing with their wives in the park. Immediately the unmarried king became thoughtful and Indra read correctly, the reason for the sudden change in the king and said to the king. "Oh King! Don't be worried. A girl becoming you in every aspect, is born in the world. Her name is Mrgāvati."
Saṁbhata was greatly pleased at this and he returned to the earth. In the chariot there were Tilitattāma and the charioteer, with the king. The king who was deeply immersed in thinking about Mrgāvati, did not attend to the conversation of Tilitattāma, who got angry cursed him thus:-"May you be separated for fourteen years from the person whose thought has prevented you from attending to what I have been telling you."
The king married Mrgāvati. She became pregnant.
One day she told the king about her desire to dip in a pond of blood. The king got a pond ready, filled with the juice of Lakṣā (a kind of wax, the boiled water of which will look like blood); and such other things. Mrgāvatī began to dip and splash in the pond of blood.
When she was dipping under the juice, taking her to be a large piece of flesh, an eagle took her from the pond and flew away. The king was overwhelmed with grief and fell down. Then the charioteer came down from heaven and informed the king of the curse of Tilitattāma, and then he returned.
The eagle left Mrgāvati in the mount of the Rising Sun and flew away. She cried aloud. A huge snake neared her to swallow her. Then a divine snake came there and saved her from the snake and vanished. Then a hermit-boy came there and asked the lonely woman, clad in only one garment, about her story and took her to the hermitage of the hermit Jamadagni who blessed her.
After some days she gave birth to a son. At that time an unknown voice was heard saying -"This boy would become the most renowned king Udāyan and his son would become the supreme Lord of the Viśyādharas." Because he was born in the Udāyantrī (the mount of the Rising Sun) he got the name Udāyan. The boy Udāyan grew up in the hermitage.
3) Udāyan to his father. The hermit Jamadagni who knew the past, present and the future performed all the rituals, necessary for a boy of Kṣatriya caste (kingly race) such as Cula-Udāyanaya etc., and gave him education in every branch of knowledge. Because of her love and regard for her son, Mrgāvati put on his arm a bangle with the name Saṁbhata inscribed in it, which she had been wearing so long. One day, while Udāyan was walking through the forest, he saw a snake-charmer catching a snake. He felt sorry for the snake. So he gave the bangle to the snake-charmer and let the snake free. When the snake charmer was gone, the snake told Udāyan its story. That serpent was Vasūni, the elder brother of Viśvūk. Out of gratitude the serpent gave Udāyan the famous Lute Ghojavatā and betels and taught him the art of making garlands and marks on the forehead which would never fade.
The snake-charmer took the bangle to the capital for sale. Seeing the name of the king inscribed on it, the king's men took him before the king. He told the king everything. The king who had been suffering for the last four years form the pangs of separation, started for the mount of the Rising Sun, without any loss of time. The hermit Jamadagni gave him his son Mrgāvati and son Udāyan. They all returned to Kauśāmbi.
4) The crown of Udāyan. Saṁbhata enshrined his son Udāyan as the heir to his throne, and appointed Yaugandharāyaṇa, Rumanvān and Vasanvak, the son, of three ministers, as ministers of Udayana. At the time of the announcement there was a shower of flowers from the sky and an unknown voice said "With the help of these ministers Udayana would bring the whole of the earth under his control." After a time Sahasrāntika went to the Himalayas with his wife for penance.

3) Vivasvatāda became Udayana's wife. A daughter was born to the king of Ujjayini. Her name was Vivasvatāda. Her father Candamahāsaena decided to give her in marriage to Udayana the king of Vatsa. How to bring this to pass? Candamahāsaena and Udayana had been enemies. Finally he found out a way. It was to entrust Vivasvatāda to Udayana (who was a great teacher of music) for teaching her music. Ultimately he would fall in love with her and thus Udayana would become his son-in-law. This was the plan.

King Candamahāsaena sent a messenger to Kauśambi. The messenger was sent back with a reply that, if his daughter was sent to Kauśambi, he would teach her music. Candamahāsaena did not like this. So he decided to take Udayana a prisoner somehow or other. The king had an elephant called Naḍāgiri. He ordered for an artificial elephant to be made equal in size to Naḍāgiri, and placed some soldiers inside it and sent it to the great forest in the Vindhyaa mountain and placed there. The men of Udayana saw this elephant and reported it to the king. Udayana decided to see the huge elephant which had appeared in the Vindhyā. Udayana went to the forest and saw the huge elephant standing at a distance. The king found out a plan to catch it. Playing mild notes on his lute, the king alone neared the elephant. As the night was drawing and as he was immersed in music, he did not understand that it was an artificial elephant. As the king was nearing the elephant it went on retreating, and thus got the king away from his men. Then the soldiers got out of the elephant, surrounded the king and took him a prisoner. Thus Udayana began to live in the palace of Candamahāsaena. His work was to teach Vivasvatāda music.

The news reached Kauśambi. Yaugandharāyaṇa entrusted the affairs of the government to Rumanāvā and started for Ujjayini with Vasantaaka. At Ujjayini they got Yogavāra, a Brahmarākṣaka as a friend. According to his advice Yaugandharāyaṇa took the guise of a mad old man. Vasantaaka adopted the guise of a sick man, suffering from pain in the stomach in an uncouth figure to look at. They entered the city. The madness of Yaugandharāyaṇa was an entertainment to the people. The ladies of the court liked him much. Vivasvatāda invited the madman to the harem. Udayana instantly recognized the mad man. Vasantaaka also got admittance to the palace. He told Vivasvatāda the story of Loha-jaṅgha in an interesting way. (See under Lohajāṅgha.) Vivasvatāda began to be drawn more and more towards Udayana. She seemed to have forgotten even about the fact that her father was an enemy of Udayana, who had been thinking seriously of means of escape from the palace. Vivasvatāda agreed to accompany him. Atithaka Tod Bhadrāvati, the elephant of Vivasvatāda, ready for the flight. In the night Udayana and his retinue got on the elephant Bhadrāvati and fled from the palace. Kāṭcanaṃḷi the maid of Vivasvatāda also accompanied her mistress. When they had passed the Vindhyā mountain the elephant Bhadrāvati fell dead. When they all were standing around the dead elephant sadly, they heard an ethereal voice saying, "Oh King I am a Vicyāṭhara woman called Māyāvati. I had been an elephant for so long. The son you are going to get, will also be helped by me. Your wife Vivasvatāda also, is a goddess, born as a woman purposely." Next day, all reached the palace of Udayana and the marriage of Udayana and Vivasvatāda took place shortly. Candamahāsaena recognized that marriage.

6) Udayana's marriage with Padmāvatī. Udayana spent his days with Vivasvatāda in the harem. The ministers Yaugancharāyaṇa, Rumanāvā, Vasantaaka and others thought that the behaviour of the King was detrimental to the well-being of the country. They wanted to remove the King from the palace for a little while and to form an alliance with the powerful King of Magadha. By a marriage alliance all these could be achieved. The King of Magadha had a beautiful daughter called Padmāvatī. The ministers began to work with this end in view.

Once Yaugancharāyaṇa took Udayana to the forest of Lāvājaka and stayed there. It was reported to the King of Magadha that the King of Vatsa was drawing near to his kingdom. Fearing an attack from Udayana, the King of Magadha began to think of concluding a treaty with Vatsa. The King of Vatsa used to go for hunting everyday. One day he went to a distant place for hunting, and the minister went to the house of Vivasvatāda and informed her of their plans. Though it was not at all palatable to her, she gave her consent and agreed to help them as it was meant for the well-being of the King and the country. Accordingly, Yaugancharāyaṇa took the guise of an old Brahmin, Vivasvatāda that of a young Brahmin lady and Vasantaaka that of a Brahmin celibate with only one eye. They went to the kingdom of Magadha. Rumanāvā set fire to the house of Vivasvatāda and spread the rumour that Vivasvatāda and Vasantaaka had been burnt to death. Yaugancharāyaṇa, Vyāraṇa and Vasantaaka reached Magadha. They got into the capital and saw Padmāvatī sitting in the garden. The old Brahmin conversed with the princess for a while. She enquired about the young woman who was with him. The old Brahmin replied thus: "She is my daughter Avantikā. Her husband has left the country. I request you to keep her with you till I find him out and bring him here. She may not like to be separated from her people. So let her brother, the celibate, also be here with her."

Padmāvatī took them with gladness and Yaugancharāyaṇa, bidding farewell, returned to the forest Lāvājaka. Avantikā and the Celibate lived in the palace with Padmāvatī. Vivasvatāda who had learned from Udayana the art of making garnitures and marks on the forehead which would not fade, had prepared them for Padmāvatī. The King of Vatsa returned to the forest Lāvājaka and found the house of his wife burnt down to ashes. He fell unconscious when he heard that Vivasvatāda and Vasantaaka had been burnt to death. The spies of the King of Magadha who were in the forest of Lāvājaka, reported the rumour about the death of Vāsavadattā and Vasantaka to their King in Magadha, who wished to give his daughter Padmāvatī in marriage to her brother. Her marriage proposal was accepted by Udayana and wearing garlands and marks that would not fade Padmāvatī entered the wedding dais. Udayana married Padmāvatī. Yaugandharayāna made the King of Magadha take an oath that he would go for no more aggression. Udayana and his people reached Kauśāmbi. On the way the King happened to see the mark on the forehead and the garland on the neck of Padmāvatī and asked her who had made them. Padmāvatī told the King the story of Avantikā. Udayana was definite that Avantikā was Vāsavadattā herself. Avantikā was brought before the King. Padmāvatī congratulated Vāsavadattā. Both of them loved each other and lived together as the loving wives of the King. (Kathāsaritāgāra, Lāvānakalambara 7) Udayana gets a new throne. Once Udayana was sitting in the court hall, when a Brahmin came there and made a complaint to the King that some cow-herds had broken the legs of his son. The Brahmin said that a boy named Devaena sat on a stone in the forest and instantly he got kingly power. The leg of the Brahmin boy was broken by the friends of Devaena because he did not know how to live. The instance of the boy filled the Brahmin with rage. Avantikā told the King that the Brahmin called Paisāthi had two sons. The elder son was called Paisāthi and the younger was called Pingala. Pingala was grown up and his father was called Kṛṣṇa and that of his mother was called Raṅgadeva. Paisāthi said that Sāstrī had another name called Iruṇgundā. He had a very good education. After having completed his education, he travelled through Andhra, Kāraṇṭaka, Kalinga, Cura, Kera and many other countries and finally came to Koshikode and visited the King. He had made the King a present of a gold crown. At the instance of the king he composed the drama called Malikānārata. Besides this we have obtained only the 'Kokilasandera' and some other single poems of Sāstrī. It is said that there is a thesis on dramas also. Sāstrī was not in the habit of respecting those who did not pay respect to him, however superior they might be. So some say that he was arrogant. A Malayāla Brahmin called Bhaṭṭāchāriya of Kākāṭā is an opponent of Sāstrī in Keraḷa.

UDDĀLAKA I

6) The son of Udayana. Vāsavadattā became pregnant and gave birth to a child. He was named Naravāhanadatta. Nārada granted him a boon that Naravāhanadatta would become the emperor of the Vidyādhāra. (See under Naravāhanadatta.)

The princess of Takṣaḷa named Kāliṅgāsenā fell in love with Udayana and she came to Kauśāmbi. But no marriage took place. (See under Kāliṅgāsenā.) Naravāhanadatta, the son of Udayana, married Madanamahishākula who was the incarnation of Rati (the wife of Madana). Udayana entrusted the country to his son and led a life of retirement with his wife. (Kathāsaritāgāra.)

UDDĀLAKA II

A disciple called Āruṇī of the teacher Ayodhdhaumya. To know how Āruṇī got the name Uddālaka, see under Ayodhdhaumya.

It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sāḍhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 12 that this hermit Uddālaka was a prominent figure in the Durbar of Indra. Uddālaka had a son called Svētaketu and a daughter called Sūjātā. He gave his daughter Sūjātā in marriage to his favourite disciple Kādokata. The hermit Arūnī was their son. See under Arūnī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 192.) Once Uddālaka caused the river Sarasvati to appear at the place of sacrifice. From that day onwards Sarasvati got the name 'Manoramā' because when the thought came to his mind (manas) the river made its appearance. (M.B. Sālīya Parva, Chapter 39.) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 10, that Uddālaka expelled his son Svētaketu from the house because the son was a hater of Brahmins.

UDDĀLAKA III

The story of another hermit of the name Uddālaka is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 71. This hermit is known as Uddālakī also. Once this hermit happened to forget that he had left flowers, food and his waterpot on the bank of the river and reached the place. Hermit Nāčiketa to fetch them from the bank of the river. When Nāčiketa reached the bank of the river, those things had been washed down by the current. The son returned and reported the matter to his father. The father got angry and cursed his son to death. Seeing the son lying dead on the river (mattress made of rushes grass) the hermit cried aloud. In that flow of tears life returned to the body and the son woke up as if from sleep. The father asked the son about the news of the realm of Yama (the end of death) and the son told the hermit the news about the world of the dead.

UDDANDAŚASTRI

One of the eighteen and a half famous poets of Keraḷa. He was a Sanskrit poet. His native place was Lājapura on the bank of river Pālar in Tondamāṭṭa. His family name was Kṛṣṇa. His father was called Kṛṣṇa and that of his mother was called Raṅgadeva. Poet Ulloor says that Sāstrī had another name called Iruṇgundā. He had a very good education. After having completed his education, he travelled through Andhra, Kāraṇṭaka, Kalinga, Cura, Kera and many other countries and finally came to Koshikode and visited the King. He made a present of a gold crown. At the instance of the king he composed the drama called Malikānārata. Besides this we have obtained only the 'Kokilasandera' and some other single poems of Sāstrī. It is said that there is a thesis on dramas also. Sāstrī was not in the habit of respecting those who did not pay respect to him, however superior they might be. So some say that he was arrogant. A Malayāla Brahmin called Bhaṭṭāchāriya of Kākāṭā is an opponent of Sāstrī in Keraḷa.

UDDHAVA

(1 General information. A Yādava. He was a friend and minister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 18, mention is made that Uddhava was present on the occasion of the Svayamvara (marriage) of Draupadi. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 11, that at a famous celebration held in the mountain of Ratnā, Uddhava was present. (See under Subhadra.)

Uddhava was a disciple of Bhṛṣpati, and a man of great intelligence. It was this Uddhava who brought the dowry of Subhadra to Indraprastha, when Arjuna married her. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 30.) Once a king named Śalā besieged the city of Dvārakā. At that time Uddhava saved Dvārakā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 15, Stanza 9.)

2) The message carried by Uddhava. Karna sent Akṛta to Ambādī, and brought Śrī Kṛṣṇa to Mathurā. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Kaṁsa and made Ugraśena king, and stayed in the city of the Ashmānī at a time. As the son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa sent Uddhava to Ambādī to know about the well-being of the people there. The moment Uddhava entered Ambādī, the Gopas and gopa women, (cow-herds) Yudrā and Nandagopa, all surrounded him to hear about Śrī Kṛṣṇa. They felt much pleased at knowing that Śrī Kṛṣṇa was getting on well. They sent through him many presents to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. He got all those presents into his chariot and took them to Śrī Kṛṣṇa in Mathurā. (Bhāgavata, 10th Book, Chapter 10.)

3) The end. Śrī Kṛṣṇa informed Uddhava beforehand the fact that the Yādava dynasty was going to end. Uddhava felt grief and requested Śrī Kṛṣṇa to take him also to Vaiśvānara (the abode of Mahāvīra). Śrī Kṛṣṇa taught Uddhava the doctrine that the body of man and such other things seen in the whole universe were nothing but mere delusion. At that time Uddhava asked Śrī Kṛṣṇa twenty-one questions about Bandha and Moksa (Bondage and deliverance). To all these questions Śrī Kṛṣṇa gave him satisfactory answers (Bhāgavata Skanda 11).

Before the destruction of Vṛtra of the Yadus left the city. They went to Prabhāśastra, a place on the sea coast and lived there. Uddhava who knew that the destruction was imminent, bade farewell to them and walked away alone. He was filled with a brightness. Śrī Kṛṣṇa did not stop him. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 3).

It is stated in the Bhāgavata, Skanda 11, Chapter 29, that Uddhava went to the hermitage of Badarikā and engaged himself in penance. UDHIPA. See under Pañcatantra.

UDIGYA. One of the disciples of Vyāsa. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 12).

UDRAFRĀKA. A serpent born in the family of Bhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent fell in the sacrificial fire of Jamanejana and was burnt to death. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 17).

UDVĀHA I. A Kaśtriya king born from the family of Krodhavāsa, an asura. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 64).

UDVĀHA II. A part of air. It is believed that air or wind is the breath of Mahāvīra. In the Purāṇas mention is made of the four basic elements. Seven breaths are important among them. They are: (1) Pravaha (2) Avaha (3) Udvaha (4) Samvaha (5) Vivaha (6) Parivaha and (7) Parvaha. About Udvaha mention is made in Bhāsa Bhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 329 thus: “Which is the wind that takes water from the four oceans and gives it to the clouds? That ever-blowing great wind is Udvaha.”

UDYOJAGAPARVA. A sub-section of Mahabhārata. (See under Bhārata).

UGRA I. A military captain of Sūrpadmāśura, Chief of asuras. In the Viramahendra Kāṇḍa of Skanda Purāṇa, two warriors, Ugra and Mayūra are recorded to have attacked Indrapuri.

UGRA II. One of the sons of Bhṛtarāṣṭra. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 103). Bhismāna killed him (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 64, Verses 34, 35).

UGRA III. A Yadava prince. The Pāṇḍavas sent to him also an invitation letter to help them in the war. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12).

UGRA IV. A synonym of Lord Śiva. (M. B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 100).

UGRA V. Son of Kavi, the Prajāpati. (M. B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 139).

UGRA VI. See under Vārṇa.

UGRAḌAMIŚṬRĪ. A daughter of Mahāmeru. Merudevi had nine daughters, Meru, Pratiṣṭhā, Ugraḍamīśṭrī, Indrā, Ramōja, Śauriṇa, Nārī, Bṛhadā and Devavīrā. They were wedded by the sons of a king named Agni-dhara. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skanda).

UGRAKA. A serpent. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 7).

UGRAKARMA I. King of Śāvala. Bhismāna killed him. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 41).

UGRAKARMA II. Military Chief of the Kekaya prince, Viśāka. Karna killed him. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 4, 5).

UGRARAVAS. A muni. He killed one Duspaya (Setumāhātya). Duspaya was the last son of a merchant in Patañjālīpurī. He killed many children for sport and his father sent him away. He went to the forest and there drowned himself in a muni called Ugraravas, who was engaged in tapas. Ugraravas cursed him to death by drowning and his soul to wander about as a devil. The curse came true. (Setumāhātya).

2) Ugrasena became king. Ugrasena became king of Mathurāpurī. His Kingship was not a hereditary acquisition. There is a story behind it. In olden days, in the place of Kālindī there was a famous place called Madhuvana. The place was called so because it was the abode of an asura named Madhu. Madhu had a son, Lavanā. Sauptoghna killed him as he was a very troublesome fellow and a thorn on the side of the Devas. Sagrughana then established a beautiful kingdom there and ruled it. He named it Mathurā. After the death of Sagrughana his two sons ruled Mathurā. Then, when the Solar dynasty came to its end, Mathurā came under the Yādavas. A Yādava king called Sūrāsenā ruled over the kingdom. Vasudeva, father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa was the son of Sūrāsenā. After the death of his father Vasudeva took up the profession of herding cows, and therefore Ugrasena, another king of the Yādava dynasty had to become king of Mathurā. (Devī Bhāgavata, 4th Skanda).

3) Ugrasena and Kamsa. There is a common belief that Kamsa was the son of Ugrasena. But, the Bhāgavata relates the following to the effect that Kamsa was born to a Gandharva called Draumila of Ugrasena’s wife. When once Ugrasena’s wife was in her monthly periods, she walked in the forest with her companions. A Gandharva called Draumila saw her then, felt attracted by her and made her pregnant. Angered at this, she cursed Draumila thus: “Since you have procreated a son in me, while I am in my periods this son will be killed by a boy born in my husband’s family.” Kamsa was the son born to her in the above manner. Kamsa ascended the throne after putting Ugrasena in prison. According to the curse of Ugrasena’s wife, Śrī Kṛṣṇa was born in Ugrasena’s family and he killed Kamsa. Nārāda had informed Kamsa of the Draumila interlude. Kamsa told this story secretly to Akṛūra when the latter was deputed by him to invite Kṛṣṇa to the dhanur yajña. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skanda).

Ahaṅka. Genealogy states that Ugrasena was the son of Ahuka. But, in certain contexts Ugrasena is called Ahuka also. “Afterwards we made Ahuka-Ugrasena King......” (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 128, Verse 39).
5) Ugrasena imprisoned. Vasudeva, father of Sri Krishna was Ugrasena's minister, Karasa, when he attained majority imprisoned Ugrasena and became himself king. (M.B. Sahas Parva, Chapter 22).

6) Ugrasena regained kingdom. Sri Krishna killed Karasa with the permission of Ugrasena and made him king again. During the reign of Ugrasena, Jaradandha and Sthala attacked Mathurapurish. (See under ‘Krsha’).

7) Ugrasena and his son on the. While Ugrasena was ruling the kingdom, the sages Vuviyamitra, Nanada and Kaela once came to Dwarka. To insult the sages, the Yadavas brought before them, Samba dressed as a pregnant woman. The Yadavas told the sages that she was Balabura's wife, and wanted to be told whether the child she delivered would be male or female. The sages understood their evil mentality, and prophesied that Samba would deliver an iron rod fierce enough to annihilate the whole Yadava race. According to the prophecy the next day Samba delivered an iron rod. The Yadavas imparted the news to Ugrasena, who got the iron rod reduced to powder and deposited the powder in the sea. He also enforced prohibition of liquor in the country. (To know how the powder of the rod ruined the Yadava dynasty see under ‘Krushna’). (M. B. Mathura Parva, Chapter 1).

8) After death. After his death, Ugrasena joined the Virvadevatias. Bhurishravas, Sula, Bhur, Karasar, Ugrasena, Vasudeva, Uttara with his brother Santhaka—these kings (after death) joined the company of Virvadevatias. (M. B. Bhurishravas Parva, Chapter 3, Verses 18, 17).

UGRASENA II. A brother of King Janamasth. He, along with his two brothers thrust the son of Sarami. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 3, Verses 1 and 2).

UGRASENA III. Son of Katyaupa by his wife Munis. (M. B. Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 42). He was present at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (M. B. Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 32). He was also present to witness the fight between Arjuna and Kripiyaya at the Virasha city. (M. B. Virasha Parva, Chapter 56, Verses 11 and 12).

UGRASENA IV. A king who was Svarbhana, the asura, reborn. (M. B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verses 12 and 13).

UGRASENA V. A son of Dhrutarashta. He is also called Citrasena. (M. B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 100). This Ugrasena was killed by Bhima. (M. B. Droga Parva, Chapter 137).

UGRASENA VI. Son of Parikshit, king of the Lunar dynasty. (M. B. Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 52-54).

UGRASRAVAS I. Son of Muni Lomahara. He is the Suta who told Paracite stories to the munis at Naimisharany. (M. B. Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 1).

UGRASRAVAS II. A son of Dhrutarashta. Bhumasena killed him in the battle of Kurukshetra. (M. B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 100, and Droga Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 19).

UGRASRAVAS III. Husband of Sitalati. (See under Atri, Para 7).

UGRATAPAS. Son of Sutilas, a muni of the Bhrigu dynasty. Once he concentrated his mind and thoughts on Sri Krishna immersed in love of the Gopis with the result that he was born as daughter of Sunandhi, the Gopi in Ambadi, and served Krishna. (Padma Parva).

UGRATEJAS I. A synonym of Lord Siva. (M. B. Anusasana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 5).

UGRATEJAS II. A serpent. It welcomed Balabhadra-rana once. (M. B. Anusasana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15).

UGRATIRTHA. A Katriya king, who was Krodhavas's, the asura, reborn. (M. B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 65).

UGRAYUDHA I. A son of Dhrutarashta. (M. B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 99). He was present at the wedding of Pachali. (M. B. Adi Parva, Chapter 185).

UGRAYUDHA II. A Pachali king and partisan of the Pandavas. Karna wounded him in war. (Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 44).

UGRAYUDHA III. A powerful person, who fought on the Kaurava side. (M. B. Salya Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 37).

UGRAYUDHA IV. An emperor killed by Bhima. (M. B. Santi Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 10).

UGRODHRA. A king of the lunar dynasty. (Bhagavata, 9th Skandh).

UJJAYA. One of the sons of Vrkavimitra. They were Bramhavadins. (M. B. Anusasana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58).

UJJAPALAKA. The Asrama of Arisrtyanabharana was situated near Mount Gandharbanada in front of Minasa lake. Ujjanaka was a lake near the Asrama. A dip in the waters of the lake, it was believed, would wash off all sins. (M. B. Anusasana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 33).

UJJAPALAKA. A desert near the Asrama of Utenaka muni. Dhumuhi, offspring of the asuras, Madhu and Kairabha, lived in this desert. (See under Dhumuhi).

UJJAYANITAPARVATA. A mountain near the Pindaraka temple in Saurashtra. It is believed to possess wonderful siddhis. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 98, Verse 21).

UJJAYINI. One of the seven very sacred places in ancient India. Its ancient name was Avanti. The seven sacred cities are: Ayodhya, Mathur, Mays, Kali, Kaci, Avantika, and Dwarka. The famous Mahakala temple described by Kaliyana was on the banks of the river Sipra flowing through Ujjayini. Jyotirlingas of Siva is the presiding deity in the temple. There is also a holy bathing ghat called Kajitirtha here. A bath in it is believed to be as beneficial as an Advamedha yajna. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82).

UKTHA. Agni, the father of Parvati. This agni is anatoned with three kinds of Ukthu hymns. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 25).

UKTHA (M). A particular portion of Saimaveda.

ULUKA I. The son of Sakuni. (M. B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 251). It is situated in Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 182, Stanza 22, that Uluka was present at the Swayatavara (the bride choosing a husband) of Draupadi. In the Bharrata Battle Ulika was sent as a messenger to the camp of the Pindavas by Durvodhana. (M. B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 161). After that he returned to Durvodhana with the message of the Pindavas. (M. B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 163). He combated with the King of Gedi on the first day of the battle. (M. B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 45). After that Sahladvipa attacked Uluka. (M. B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 72, Stanza 5). Arjuna defeated Uluka. (M. B. Droga Parva, Chapter 171, Stanza 49). After the death of the teacher Droga, Uluka fled from the battle-field. (M. B. Droga Parva, Chapter 193, Stanza 14). It is mentioned
ULÔKA

MAHHABHARATA, KARMA PARVA, Chapter 25. Stanzas: 9 to 11, that Ulûka defeated Yuyutsu. Next fight was between Sahadeva and Ulûka in which Sahadeva killed Ulûka. (M.B. Sâlîta Parva, Chapter 28, Stanzas 32 and 33). The following are the synonyms of Ulûka, given in the MAHHABHARATA:—Sûkuni, Kaitaka, Saubalyasuta and Kaitavya.

ULÔKA II. A Yaka, (a demi-god). It is stated in MAHHABHARATA, ADI PARVA, Chapter 32, that Gaurûda and this Yaka fought with each other.

ULÔKA III. A son of Vâsîvatita. He became a hermit. (M.B. ANUSASANA PARVA, Chapter 4, Stanza 51). It is mentioned in the MAHHABHARATA, SANTI PARVA, Chapter 47, Stanza 11, that this Ulûka visited Bhîshma on his Bed of arrows.

ULÇAKADATAGAMANAPARVA. A sub-section of a Parva in the MAHHABHARATA. (See under Bhîshama).

ULÇAKÂRA. A holy place. (M.B. UDYOGA PARVA, Chapter 186, Stanza 26).

ULÔPI. Wife of Arjuna

1) How she became the wife of Arjuna. Once Arjuna happened to enter the palace in which Gîrâmaputra was living with Pâchali. As a result, Arjuna had to go on a pilgrimage for a year. (See under Yâti). Arjuna reached Gaurîvâra. When he got down into the river Gaurî, he saw Ulûpi the daughter of Nâgaraja, (King of the serpents). He asked her a few questions. She told him thus:—"I am the daughter of the serpent Kauravya of the family of Airavata. I came to bathe in the river and when I saw you I grew amorous." Arjuna argued with Arjuna and convinced him that it was not right to marry in the meantime. Ulûpi argued with Arjuna and convinced him that it was not right to marry her. Arjuna married her. A son named Irâvân was born to her.

2) How Ulûpi caused Arjuna to be killed and how he was brought to life again. (See paras 28 and 29 under Arjuna).

3) The end of Ulûpi. After having brought Arjuna back to life, Ulûpi reached Hastinapura with Bhûruvashana and Citrângadâ. (M.B. AÎVAMEDHA PARVA, Chapter 87). As soon as she reached there she greeted Kunti, Draupadi and Subhardhâ. She gave them various kinds of presents. It is mentioned in MAHHABHARATA, ASRAMAVATIKA PARVA, Chapter 1, Stanza 23 that Ulûpi served Gandhâlī at one time. In MAHHABHARATA, ASRAMAVATIKA PARVA, Chapter 10, Stanza 46 it is mentioned that Ulûpi was greatly loved by the subjects. When the Pandavas began the great departure (MAHHAPRAATHÂNA) Ulûpi entered the River Ganges. Citrângadâ went to Mahâbharata.

"Ulûpi, the daughter of the serpent Kauravya, jumped into the Ganges and to Mahâbharata, went Citrângadâ." (BHÅSHÂ BHÅRATI, MAHHAPRAARTHâNA PARVA, Chapter 1, Stanza 27).

4) The other name of Ulûpi: Bhujagatmaja, Bhujagendramayaka, Bhujagotanâ, Kauravya, Citrângadhi, Kauravya, Kauravyakatamandini, Panâgamanandini, Panâgavasû, Panâgatmaja, Panâgagranâlagarûti, Panâgât, Uragatmaja. These are the synonyms used in the MAHHABHARATA for Ulûpi.

ULÔYÂ. A country in ancient India. (M.B. BHÅSHÂ PARVA, Chapter 9, Stanza 54).

UMA. Pârvati. (For details see under Pârvati).

UMLOCA. A celestial woman. Umloca with other celestial women participated in the birth celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. ADI PARVA, Chapter 122, Stanza 65).

UNCHAVRTITI. A brahmin. His story is told as follows in JAIMINI ÂSVAMEDHA PARVA.

This poor brahmin who lived by begging got one day some food grain powder. After offering a portion of it to Agni and Brahma, he divided the balance equally between the children. Then he sat down to take his own food when Dharma'deva, disguised as a brahmin, appeared and demanded food. Uncha'vrtit gave all his food to the guest. Since that did not satisfy the guest, the sons also gave their shares of the food to him. Greatly pleased at the noble act of Uncha'vrtit, Dharma'deva took the brahmin family with him to Svargasaloka. One day a few particles of the food-grain powder which remained with the brahmin on the earth. A mongoose came and played on that ground. That part of his body which got smeared with the food-grain powder became golden in colour. Though the mongoose went to the yajna ground of Dharma'deva and repeated the above process there, the remaining portion of its body did not become golden.

UNDIRA (M) (UTRÂM). A place in South India. Sahadeva subjugated this place. (M.B. SÂBHÂ PARVA, Chapter 31, Verse 71). People of Utrâm were present at the Kâjñâna of Yudhisthira with presents. (M.B. VANA PARVA, Chapter 51, Verse 22).

UNMAÇÄ. A celestial woman.

1) Became a woman by the curse of Uruvaśi. Harîśa, the King of Gandharvas (semi-gods) had a general of the army called Durmada. He was a dacoit. He had an eye on Uruvaśi. She was the wife of Purūravas a famous King. On several occasions Durmada followed Uruvaśi, with lustful desire. He had expressed his amour for her on several occasions. But Uruvaśi did not pay any heed to his words.

One day Purūravas and Uruvaśi were present in the durbar of Indra. Purūravas and Uruvaśi had signalled a rendezvous for that night at the corner of the Nanda Park. Durmada understood this. He called a celestial woman named Unmaçâ to his side. They made a plan and accordingly Unmaçâ disguised herself as Uruvaśi and Durmada took the guise of Purūravas and both of them entered Nandana park. Purūravas went to Unmaçâ and conjugated with her. In the same way Uruvaśi received Durmada, mistaking him for Purūravas. After the conjugation Durmada laughed loud as if he had played a trick on Uruvaśi. Uruvaśi understood everything. Purūravas also arrived there. Uruvaśi cursed Durmada to take birth in the earth as a Râkṣasa and cursed Unmaçâ to be born in the earth as the daughter of a King and she said that at that time she would become one man and become the wife of another man. The aggrieved Durmada and Unmaçâ prayed for liberation from the curse. Uruvaśi gave them liberation thus:—"This Durmada will be born as the son of Unmaçâ. Seeing the death of her husband and son, she would jump into fire. And after that she will enter heaven. Durmada will be killed by the sword of an enemy and will obtain heaven." According to this curse Durmada was born as the son of Dîrghajñâghiva, the emperor of Hirâyapura, under the name Pingâka and Unmaçâ was born as the daughter of the King of Videha. Her name was Harijī (Brāhmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 3).

2) The marriage and death of Harijī. Harijī grew up to be a young woman. Once Pingakṣa growing lustful took Harijī and went through the sky. She cried aloud for a long time. Pingakṣa, the asura, left her in a wild forest. At that time King named Vaumansana came by that way hunting. He killed Pingakṣa and then heard the story of Harijī got her on the horse called Jumāṭa and sent her to Videha (Mithilā). Her father was much pleased at getting her back. He wanted to give her in marriage to Vauumansana. The date of the marriage was fixed. Invitations were sent to many kings. Among them there was a king named Bhadratreyana, who took her by force and went away. There was a fierce battle between the two kings, Bhadratreyana and Vauumansana and Vauumansana was defeated. Seeing this Divodāsa, the King of Kāśi, attacked Bhadratreyana. Though Divodāsa defeated Bhadratreyana, he did not like to harm the beaten King. So he returned to his kingdom. Bhadratreyana took Harijī to his palace and married her. A son was born to her and he was named Durmāda. This was the same Durmāda who had asked for Harijī as Paśa brahmān and who had been born again as the son of Harijī. This Durmāda took by force the daughter of his uncle called Citrāṅgī and a child was born to them. Bhadratreyana again engaged in a battle with Divodāsa, the King of Kāśi, and was defeated. Then his son Durmāda got into the battlefield and he also was defeated.

When all this news reached Vauumansana, the King of Ayodhya, he became jealous of Bhadratreyana. A battle was fought between them in which Vauumansana was defeated. But a fierce battle was fought again in which Bhadratreyana and his son Durmāda were killed. Durmāda obtained heaven. Stricken with grief at the death of her husband and son, Harijī got into fire and went to heaven. (Brāhmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 3).

UNMĀTHA I. A beautiful woman. She was the daughter of Vasiṣṭha in the city of Śravasti. He went to the King Devavastya and requested him to marry his daughter. Because of the interference of his favourites, the King did not marry her. The King’s general married her. Once the King happened to see her by chance. When he saw how beautiful she was, he felt sorry that he did not marry her. Then he went towards the King and asked for permission. Thus the story of Harijī was the death of the general. Harijī was married to the King Divodasa. (Kathasaritsagāra, Lāvānkalamba; Tarangā 1).

UNMĀTHA II. An attendant presented to Skandadeva by Pravatī. (M.B. Śāya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 51).
To know how Upamanyu was put to test by the teacher see under Ayodhadaumya.

UPAMANYU II. In the Kritayuga, there lived a hermit named Vyāghrapāda who had two sons. They were called Upamanyu and Dhaumya. Some learned men are of opinion that Upamanyu was the son of Vyāghrapāda and Upamanyu the disciple of Ayodhadaumya, were one and the same. Once Upamanyu visited another hermitage along with his father. He happened to drink the milk of the cow there. After that they returned to their own hermitage, Upamanyu went to his mother and asked her to make milk pudding for him. But the mother felt very sorry because there was no milk. At last she mixed flour in water and made pudding and gave it to him. Upamanyu did not accept it. His mother told him that there was no way to get milk and that men could get wealth, crops etc. only by the grace of Siva. Upamanyu who was of a wilful nature did penance with meditation and contemplation on Siva. Finally Siva appeared before him in the shape of Indra and told him to ask for his boon. Upamanyu boldly replied that he wanted no boon from anybody else except Siva. Siva made his appearance in his own form and made Upamanyu a deva (God).

Upamanyu said all these things when he talked with Sri Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14).

In the Book “Our hermits”, written by Rāmāvāmi Sāstri in Tamil, it is mentioned that Upamanyu had written a book “Siva bhaktavilasā” in which biographies of devotees of Siva of great attainments are given.

UPAMANYU III. In the Brahmāyaṇa Purāṇa we come across another Upamanyu as the son of a hermit named Sutapās. Upamanyu reached the hermitage of Kṣayapa, with the idea of marrying Sumati, the daughter of Kṣayapa and the elder sister of Garuda. Nobody liked the idea of giving Sumati in marriage to that old man. The hermit got angry at this and cursed Kṣayapa that if he gave his daughter in marriage to any Brāhmaṇa his beard would break into a hundred pieces. (Brahmāyaṇa Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

UPANANDA II. A serpent. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 12).

UPANANDA III. A warrior of Skanda. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 64).

UPANISAD. The four Vedas are Rk, Yajus, Sāma and Atharva. Each of these four has a Brāhmaṇa (a treatise relating to prayer and sacrificial ceremony). Next come the Āraṇyakas (forest texts — writings meant for the forest-going hermits) as appendices to the Brāhmaṇas. Then come the Upaniṣads as appendices to the Āraṇyakas. These four classes of literary works (the Vedas, the Brāhmaṇas, the Āraṇyakas and the Upaniṣads) constitute the Vedic literature proper. The Āraṇyakas and the Upaniṣads are inseparably connected with each other. The Upaniṣads are called Vedāṇa (the end of the Vedas). The bulk of these Vedāṇas belong to different periods of the Later Vedic Period. The students begin the study of Upaniṣads only after having completed the study of the Mantras (Vedic hymns) and the Brāhmaṇas (the ritual).

The meaning of the word ‘Upaniṣad’ is that which is most near. Upa — near, ni — most, ad — exist (or sit). The Upaniṣads can be called the Jñānakānda of the Vedas. They describe the nature of Brahman. The figure of the supreme Spirit (Brahman) exists in the Upaniṣads. Apparently the Upaniṣads are explanations of the mantras, but they are concerned more with the allegorical significations and the mystic meanings of the tāttvas or essence, of the origin of life, the world, the soul, God etc. The Upaniṣads are the basis of the Śādārṣas, the six systems of philosophy. There are a large number of Upaniṣads. The most important among them are 108 in number.

UPAPATĀKA (UPAPĀPA) (Minor sins). In accordance with the Rājstrāmāṇās (political philosophy) of Ancient India, crimes were divided into two types. They were called Upapātakas (minor crimes) and Pātakas (major crimes). To know about major crimes (Pātakas) see under Pāpa (sin). Upapātakas are given below:—Cow-slaughter; sacrificing by one who is unworthy to perform it; seducing another man’s wife; forseeing one’s father, mother and teacher; forseeing self-study, agnī (fire) and son; becoming Parivṛtta (one who gets married before one’s elder brother is married.) Younger brother finishing education before the elder; giving an unmarried girl to Parivṛti or Parivṛtta; performing sacrifice by a parivṛti or a parivṛtta; slandering an unmarried girl; Living on the interest of money that is lent; violating one’s vow; selling pond, garden, wife or son; becoming an outcaste; forseeing relatives; Teaching the Vedas after receiving remuneration; selling things which should not be sold; working in mines; working with big machinery; destroying medicinal herbs; living by women; to impede rites; cutting down trees (not dried) for firewood; kidnapping women; mingling with slanderers of women; selfish activities, eating forbidden rice; not keeping sacrificial fire; theft; not repaying loan; learning forbidden sciences; doing things which are bad and will cause grief to others; stealing of bare metals, grains and cow; contact with drunken women; killing women, Śūdras, Vaiśyas and Kautiyas and becoming an infidel are all Upapātakas.

Causing grief to a Brahmin: inhaling the smell of liquor and other prohibited things; resorting to tricks or deceit and engaging in pedantry are sins which would make one an outcaste.

Slaughter of dog, donkey, camel, lion, sheep, junglegoat, fish, serpent and mongoose are sins of a mixed character.

Receiving money from the despicable; buying and selling; serving a śūdra; telling a lie; acting so as to render oneself unworthy; killing worms and birds; eating food along with liquor; stealing fruits, flowers and butes; and becoming a coward are also sins.

UPAPLAYYA. A minor city in the country of Vīrāṇa. This minor city stood near the capital city of Vīrāṇa Kingdom. After their incoherent life, the Pāṇḍavas are said to have lived in the city of Upaplaya. (M.B. Vīrāṇa Parva, Chapter 72, Stanza 14).

UPAPURĀNAS. See under Purāṇa.

UPARICARAVASU. Genealogy. Descended from Vīrāṇa in the following order: Atri—Candra—Buddha—Pururavas—Ayus—Nahusa
—Yayati—Puru—Janamejaya—Prācinvān—Pravīna
Namasyu—Vitāhaya—Sudhu—Bahuvīda—Sahyābī

Uparicaravasu.
2) How he got the name Uparicaravasu. Once Vasu built a bhimtāla and began to offer prayer in accordance with the advice of Indra. When the penance became too severe Indra appeared and gave him an aerial chariot. Since then Vasu used to travel through the air in the chariot. So he got the name ‘Uparicaravasu’ (Vasu, who travels above). (Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 63).
3) Vasu and Indra festival. Indra gave Vasu a garland (Vaiṣajyanāmālā) which would never fade, and gave a boon that, so long as he wore that garland, he would not receive any wound. He was given a bamboo stick (Vepudanda) and was instructed to fix that rod on the capital of Indra and celebrate the celebration of Indra. Vasu celebrated the festival of Indra and from that day on wards the celebration of Indra came to be celebrated in the world. (See also Indra festival).
4) The sons of Vasu. Five sons named Brāhadra, Kuśāmba (Manivāhana), MERVala, Yudro and Rājyāpa to him.
5) Kicking and splitting Kolihala. The river Śukmitai flowed through the capital city of Vasu. Once the Great Kolihala grew amorous of Śukmti and an tempest in the river grew. As Vasu saw the Kolihala and kicked the mountain the river was split into two and Śukmitai flowed out of the gap. Still two children were born to the great hill by Śukmti. The river was pleased at the freedom accorded by the king and placed the two children at the feet of the king. They grew up. The son became general of the army and the daughter Giriṅkā became the wife of the king. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 63).
6) Vasu goes hunting. One day the king decided to go out. On the same day his wife had her monthly course. Still without changing his programme he started for the forest. Even after entering the forest the thought of his wife lingered in his mind. The forest was in full bloom as it was Spring. Seeing this the king grew amorous and sat under a tree. A mild breeze was blowing.
Instantly the king had seminal flow. He collected the semen in the leaf of a tree and sent it to the queen through an eagle. Thinking that to be some food, another eagle got near and a quarrel arose. The semen fell in the river Yamunā. A fish named Adrikā drowned it. (See under Adrikā). A fisherman caught that fish. He got a male child and a female child from the stomach of the fish. That girl is the famous Sāyavati Matyasugandha who became the queen of Śantakum. (See under Sāyavati). The fisherman gave the boy he got from the fish to king Uparicaravasu. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 62).
7) Other information.
(i) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 20, that Uparicaravasu was famous as a member of the council of Yama.
He was a friend of Indra, a devotee of Viṣṇu and a righteous and diligent man who loved and esteemed his father. Because of the grace of Śrī Narāyana, he secured an empire. He consecrated everything before god. Once Indra gave him half of his seat. (M.B. Śanim Parva, Chapter 235). Because of the grace of Bhagavān (Lord), Garuda made him a traveller of the sky. (M.B. Śani Parva, Chapter 337, Stanza 37).
(iii) In Mahābhārata, Śani Parva, Chapter 337, Stanza 38, it is mentioned that finally Uparicaravasu entered the world of Brahma.
(iv) Once a controversy arose between Indra and the hermits, whether cow-slaughter during sacrifices, was desirable. At this time Uparicaravasu happened to come there. As he was a man of truth, he was asked to make a decision. Uparicaravasu stood on the side of Indra and gave his opinion in favour of slaughter.
The hermits who were against cow-slaughter got angry and cursed Uparicaravasū to go down to the world of Pārala (etherworld). (Matsya Purāna, Chapter 152).
This story is seen with slight difference in Mahābhārata Śani Parva, Chapters 322-324.
UPĀSLOKA. A son born to Śri Kṛṣṇa by Saivanāthī.
He learned all sciences and Philosophies and finally became a follower of the Śāṅkhyā-Yoga cult. (Bhāgavata, Chapter 10).
UPĀSRUTI. The patron-goddess of Uttarāyana. (The sun’s progress towards North in the former half of the year). In Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 166 mention is made of how this goddess made it possible for Indrāni to see Indra through the holes of a stalk of lotus. It was by the help of Upāsruti that Saiva and Indra met together. (M.B. Udya Parva, Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 12 and 13).
UPATYAKA. A country in Bhārata. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 55).
UPAVARASA. The younger brother of the Teacher Vārṣa.
He also was a teacher. For further information see under Vāruci.
UPAVASA. Upavāsa means going back from sin and leading a good life. (Upa = go back and Vāsa = A life). All actions which are not good, must be relinquished. Those who observe Upavasā should abstain from using flesh, Maśāra (pulor), canaka (a kind of gram), Varakut (a kind of grain), green leaves prepared, honey, rice etc. and from contact with women. He should not wear flowers, ornaments, or fashionable dress. Should not inhale fragrant smoke, and of any sort. Cleaning the teeth and using collyrium also are prohibited. Instead of cleaning the teeth in the morning Paścabhyāsa (Milk, curd, ghee, urine and dung of cow) should be taken in. Drink water several times, using betel leaves, sleeping in the day and sexual act also should be avoided. (Agni Purāna, Chapter 175).
UPAVENĀ. A river. This river is considered to be the mother of Agni (fire). Some are of opinion that this river is Kṛṣṇaṇā a tributary of the great river Kṛṣṇā (R.Kistum) of South India. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Stanza 14).
UPAVITA. The sacred string or Utriyasa. The twice-born (the three upper castes) wear this. When it is worn over the left shoulder and under the right arm, it is called Upavita, when it is worn over the right shoulder and under the left arm it is called Prācinvāta and if it is worn around the neck as a garland it is called Nivita. (Manumārti, Chapter 2 Stanza 63).
UPĀVṛTTA (M). A country in Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 64).

UPĀYA (Sv.). See under Cauṇḍapāya.

UPĀYA. Brother of the hermit Yāja. Both of them lived on the banks of the Gāṅga. Dhṛṣṭarāṣṭra and Pāñcāla were born to the King Drupada of Pāñcāla as the fruit of the sacrifices performed by those hermits. The story is given below:

The famous teacher Droṇa was the son of the hermit Bhāradaśa, who was a friend of the King Pratāpa of Pāñcāla. So King Pratāpa sent his son Drupada to the hermitage of Bhāradaśa for education. Thus Droṇa and Drupada were fellow students.

After completing his education Drupada became King of Pāñcāla. At that time the teacher Droṇa once visited the palace of the King. But Drupada did not duly receive his former classmate. Droṇa got angry at this and went to Hastinapura and became the teacher of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas. As a remuneration for teaching them Droṇa demanded that Arjuna should bind Drupada and bring him before him. Arjuna did so. Drupada gave Droṇa a portion of his kingdom and got his liberty. From that day onward Droṇa wished for a son who would take revenge on Drupada, and requested the hermit Upāyāja to perform a sacrifice for getting a son. At first the hermit refused. The King served the hermit for a year. The hermit was pleased and asked the King to invite Yāja for the sacrifice. The King did as he was told and Yāja and Upāyāja came to Pāñcāla and performed the sacrifice for getting a son. From the sacrificial dais Hṛṣīkindumna and Pāñcāla were born. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 166 and Sabhā Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 49).

UPENDER. A synonym of Vīśnu. Mahāviśnu once took birth by Aditi the wife of Kaśyapa, the sage. In that birth Mahāviśnu had the name Upender. He was known as Vāmana too. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

UPENDRA. A river. (Mahābhārata, Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 27).

UPENDRABLA. Son of a minister of the King named Śrī Datta. (See under Śrī Datta).

UKAGA. A class of serpents. Ten daughters were born to Krodhavāsī wife of Kaśyapa. The Uragas were born from the daughter Kadrā and the nāgas were born from the daughter Surāsi. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Arāśa Kāśi, Sarga 14).

ORDHVABHÜ. The son of Vatsīja. His mother was Ārījā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 150, that this Ordhvbhūdāma done penance in South India.

ORDHVABHAK. A fire. This Agni (fire) was the fifth son of Bhṛguspati. (M.B) Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 28).

ORDHVAPUNDRA. A mark worn on the forehead by yellow ochre. This mark should be made by earth or ochre, which should be taken from the top of a mountain peak, banks of rivers, seashore,SVāseau temple serpent-hill or from under a holy basil. The fruits of wearing the mark will vary according to the colour of the ochre. Black ochre will afford peace, red soil will provide plenty, yellow soil will get prosperity, and white ochre will give duty or righteousness. As the fruits vary according to the colour, so also it will vary according to the finger used to put the sign. If the mark is made with the thumb the man will become stout. If it is done with the middle finger he will have long life. If it is done with the fourth finger (saṁhīka), he will get food and if it is made with the index finger (tarṣa) he will get salvation. The form of the mark also could be changed. The mark may be made in the form of a flame, the leaf of bamboo reed, a lotus-bud, a fish, a turtle or a conch. If the mark is as large as ten finger-breadths it is superior. If of nine finger-breadths it is medium, if it is eight and a half finger-breadths it is medium superfine; and if it is eight and a half finger-breadths, it is inferior superfine. In the same way if the finger-breadth of the mark is seven, six or five they will be medium, medium medium and lower medium. If it is four, three and two they will be of the low, medium low and lowest.

It is also ordered that when one wears the Ārīvadhāra in a particular spot of the body one will have to think of a particular name of Vīśnu.

ORDHVAVENDHARA. An attendant of Skandadeva. (M.B. Saiva Parva, Chapter 46, Stanzas 18).

ORJIA I. A wife of Vasiṣṭha. Seven sons named Rajas, Goira, Odhavabhu, Sāvana, Anagha, Surapās and Sukā, were born to Vasiṣṭha by his wife Orjia. These seven men were the seven hermits (Śrīsvaras) in the third Manvantara. (Visnū Purāṇa, Aśva 1, Chapter 11).

ORJIA II. One of the seven hermits of the Śvāraci Manvantara. The seven hermits of the Śvāraci Manvantara were Orjia, Śambha, Prāja, Vāśa, Prśātha, Nīrāya and Parīvā. (Visnū Purāṇa, Aśva 3, Chapter 1).

ORJIA III. A King of the Hehaya dynasty. He was the grandfather of the famous Jāraśāndha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

ORJIAKETU. A King of the dynasty of King Janaka. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

ORJIAKTI. A daughter of the Sun. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūtra 19).

ORJIVASVATI. A daughter born to Priyavarta, the son of Manu Śvāmyabhava, by Surūpā the daughter of Vāsiskṛma. Orjivasvatī had ten brothers. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8). Priyavarta gave Orjivavati to the teacher-priest Sukra. Devayāni, the wife of Yāyati, was the daughter born to Sukra by Īrjivastati. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

ORJIVONY. One of Viśmātra's sons who were expounders of Vedas. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 59).

ORMIĻĀ. Laksmana married Ormiļā, the daughter of King Janaka and the sister of Śita. When Laksmana went to the forest with Śita Rāma and Śita, Ormiļā remained in Ayodhya. After the forest life Laksmana and Laksmana returned with Śita. When Śita Rāma was ruling over the country, two sons were born to Lakṣmana by Ormiļā. The elder son was named Takṣaka and the second was given the name Chatraheavy rain, forest-fire etc. to terrify them. The efforts of Indra were futile. The assembled Indra sent for Kāmadeva (Cupid) and consulted him, as a result of which Kāmadeva and her wife Rati/dièv with many celestial maids came to the hermitage in the mountain of Gandhamādana with the intention of hindering the penance of Naranārāyaṇas. The season of spring was created in the forest. The celestial women such as Rambhā and others came before the hermits and began to sing and dance. The hearts of the hermits began to swell with passion. When they opened their eyes what they saw was a beautiful sight. The famous celestial women, Menakā, Rambhā, Tilottamā, Suṣeṇḍri, Maṇomāṇi, Mahīśvarī, Puppaṇṇadhī, Pranāvadhī, Ghrīśā, Candraprabhā, Somā, Vidyānānā, Ambujakṣi, Kāṃca-puṣpal, and others with their ten thousand and eighty hand-maidens stood before them. Hermit Nārāyaṇa who got terribly angry struck on his thighs with his hand and instantly there arose a woman of extreme beauty. Because she had originated from the Uru (thigh) of Nārāyaṇa, that woman, who was the most beautiful in the three worlds, got the name Urvaśī. All the others were struck with wonder at the sight of this new creation. After that many other beautiful women who were created. The hermit Nārāyaṇa gave all of them to Indra. With shame Indra accepted them and returned to heaven along with them. Thus Urvaśī arrived at the realm of the devas (gods). (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 4).

2) Position of Urvaśī. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata that Urvaśī had the eleventh place among the singers. The expert dancers were Agnīpriya, Adrika, Sumakhī, Muśū, Alambha, Marici, Sucika, Vidyāgriha, Tilottamā, Ambikā, Kesā, Rambhī, Subhūti, Aśvita, Supriyā, Pundarkī, Suvandhili, Suradā, Pramāthinī, Kāṃṭhā and Saradadhā. Urvaśī got the first place among the celestial maids in beauty. (M.B. Aśi Parva, Chapter 123).

3) Urvaśī and Pururavas. Pururavas was the son of Budha born of Īśā. He grew up and became a king of great renown. His fame reached even the realm of the gods. One day during that period Brahmā cursed Urvaśī: “Go and be born on the earth.” (It is stated in the Devī Bhāgavata that it was Brahmā who cursed Urvaśī and in the Bhāgavata that it was the Mitra who cursed Urvaśī. Urvaśī had lost the fame of Pururavas and had felt tender love for him. The celestial maid reached the earth. She went to the palace of Pururavas and saw him. Because of the perfection of their figures, both loved mutually. The king asked her to become his wife. She agreed. But she laid down three conditions: (i) I have with me two lambs which I bring up as my sons. You must take care of them. No harm should befal them; (ii) I take in only ghee. On no account should you compel me to eat any other food; (iii) Don’t come near me in nudity except at the time of coition. The king agreed to all these conditions. From that day onwards Urvaśī lived in the palace of the king as his wife. They lived happily for a long while without separating from each other. Urvaśī became conspicuous by her absence in the realm of the gods. She was the most expert actress in heaven.
Indra missed her. So a search was made and they found out that she was in the palace of Pururavas. Indra asked the Gandharvas to bring that celestial woman to heaven somehow. Visvakarman and some others of the Gandharvas reached the palace of king Pururavas and waited for an opportunity. One midnight they stole the lambs and took them away through the sky. At that time the king was with Urvashi in the harem. Urvashi heard the cry of the lambs and she was startled. She asserted the king who was not capable of taking care of two lambs. Hearing her harsh words the king took his bow and arrow and following the cry of the lambs he was about to chase the thieves. Taking this opportunity the Gandharvas caused a lightning to flash in the king’s harem. In the light of the lightning Urvashi saw the king standing nude. The Gandharvas having achieved their task had left the lambs and departed before the king had got out of the room. The king caught hold of the lambs and returned to the harem, within a short while. But Urvashi had gone out of the palace and was on her way.

The king was full of grief. He wandered all over the country in search of Urvashi. At last he reached Kuruksetra and Urvashi was there. He bowed bow before her and implored her to return to the palace. But Urvashi replied thus:—

"Women are like wolves. Don’t have alliance with them. Oh King! Kims should not put faith in women and thieves."

Saying thus, Urvashi vanished. (Devi Bhagavata, Skandha 14)

5) The reason why Pururavas had to remain separate from Urvashi. Pururavas had once gone to heaven, in accordance with the invitation of Indra to help the Gods in the battle with the asuras. Indra had killed Māyādhara, a noble Asura, in that battle and had celebrated a festival. In that festival Rambhā was dancing before Tumburu, the sages-priest, and detecting some flaw in her dance Pururavas sat on her lap and placed her on the stage. King Pururavas was informed of what he knew about dance, and the king replied that he had learned from Urvashi more than Tumburu the teacher of Rambhā. Tumburu got angry at this, and cursed the king Pururavas to suffer from the pains of separation from Urvashi. Stricken with grief, Pururavas returned to his palace. It was after this that the Gandharvas took away Urvashi. Pururavas went to Badariśrama and performed penance, meditating on God Viṣṇu for the nullification of the curse. Urvashi, aggrieved by separation from her husband, sat motionless as a picture, in the custody of the Gandharvas. Lord Viṣṇu was pleased with the penance of Pururavas. The Gandharvas brought her back to the King. Thus it became possible for the king to meet Urvashi at least once a year. (Kulīnāradasa, Līvānākalambaka, Tāranga 1).

6) The son born to Pururavas by Urvashi. The king became very sad when Urvatī was about to depart from him at Kuruksetra. Seeing his grief Urvashi told him: “Oh King, if you want so much to live with me, you have to worship the Gandharvas. They will be pleased and will give me to you. Don’t be sorry. Now I am pregnant. Come to this place at the end of a year. We can spend that night together. Then we will get another son also that night.” Pleased at what Urvashi had said, the king returned to his palace. On completion of a year Pururavas went to Kuruksetra and spent a night with Urvashi. Urvashi gave Pururavas a very beautiful child and then she vanished. The king sat there and praised the Gandharvas, who gave the king an Agnishāla (a fire pot). Because of his derangement, thinking it to be Urvashi the king took the sthāla (pot) and wandered about in the forest. At last placing the pot in the forest, the king returned to his palace. On that day Tretāyuga (one of the four ages of the world) commenced, and the Vedas dawained in his mind at three in number. He died when Urvashi came. He was killed by a stray arrow shot out of a banyan tree and placed his body between them and made fire. That fire is called Jātaveda. Thus Jātaveda became the son of Pururavas.

Pururavas generated three fire from Jātavedas. The first of them is Prapāya. The second is called Nārāyaṇa and the third Agniwarṇa. (Śrīmad Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

To Pururavas six sons were born from the womb of Urvashi. They were Ayus, Sruṣṭyus, Satyāyus, Rayas, Vijaya and Jayas. (A little difference is observed in these names in the Mahābhāraṭa, Adi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanzas 24 and 25).

6) To know how a Gandharva named Durmadana and a Vedādhari named Ummadā played a trick on Pururavas and Urvashi, see under Ummadā.

7) How Agastyā and Vasistha were born to Mitrāvarūṇas because of Urvashi. In days of old there was a renowned king named Nimi in the family of Ikscukū. He decided to perform a sacrifice of great importance. He engaged famous hermits such as Bhṛgu, Angirasa, Vāmadeva, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kesi and others. Finally he invited Vasistha. At that time Indra had begun another sacrifice in heaven. So Vasistha went to heaven for that sacrifice, telling Nimi that he would conduct the sacrifice on his return. The emperor Nimi did not like it. Recognizing the merit of Vasistha as the main priest, he began performing the sacrifice. The sacrifice of Indra lasted for 500 years. When Vasistha returned after that, the sacrifice of Nimi was over. Vasistha cursed Nimi. "You will become devoid of body," Nimi cursed back. "Let Vasistha also become thus."

The aggrieved Vasistha went to his father Brahmā and complained about the curse. Brahmā told Vasistha: "You penetrate the brightness of Mitrāvarūṇas and stay there. In due course you will get a birth which is not of a womb." Hearing these words, Vasistha reached the hermitage of Mitrāvarūṇas. He left his body there and fused himself into their effulgence. During this period Urvashi came to that hermitage. Seeing her, Mitrāvarūṇas had seminal flow. The semens fell in a pot. From the pot two bright and handsome sons were born. The first of them was Agastyā and the second Vasistha. (Devi Bhagavata, Skandha 8).

8) Indra curing Urvashi. Once Agastyā went to the durbar of Indra. On the occasion Indra asked Urvashi to dance. In the midst of the dance she saw Jayanta, the son of Indra, and became amorous and her steps went wrong. Nārada who was playing his famous lute called Mahatī could not play well. Agastyā got angry and cursed Jayanta to become a bud. He cursed Nārada also. So his lute became the lute of the world... was born on the earth under the name Mādhavi due to the curse.
9) Urvāṣī churning Arjuna into a swash. (See under Arjuna.)
10) Other information.
(i) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sahā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 11, that Urvāṣī had been in love with Kūthera once.
(ii) Urvāṣī was dismayed when Sukadeva attained Supreme Bliss. (See under Sukadeva).
U RVĀṢĪ II. Another name is Gangā. At the sat on the ĉru (thigh) of Bhūrīratha, Gangā got the name Urvāṣī. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 60, Stanza 6).
U RVĀṢĪTĪRTHA A holy place and Bath. Those who bathe in this holy bath will be honoured by the nāga. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 157).
UŚĀ I. The daughter of Bāṇaśira and the wife of Anrūḍda.
2) Marriage of Uśā. See under Anrūḍda.
UŚĀ II. The daughter of a hermit. The king of Sālvāsa once attacked Sāvyata, the king of Vidarbha, and killed him. The daughters of the king of Vidarbha went to the forest. One of them was pregnant and gave birth to a child on the bank of a river. When the child went into the river to drink water, a crocodile swallowed her. Then the hermit's daughter named Uśā brought up the child. (Śiva Purāṇa).
UŚĀ III. The night is called Uśā and the day, Ghuṣṭi. The time between Uśā and Ghuṣṭi is called Sandhyā. (Śiva Purāṇa, Am 2, Chapter 8).
UŚAKGU I. A hermit who lived in the western country. (M.B. Śaṅkī Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 30).
UŚAŅGU I. A synonym of Śiva. (M.B. Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 109).
UŚAŅGU III. A king of the Yadu family. His father was Vyujitvāna and his son was called Chīrāraha. (M.B. Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 147, Stanza 29).
UŚAŅGAVA A member of the durbar of the king Yama (god of death). (M.B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 26).
UŚAŅGU (RUSAŅGU). A hermit. Seeing that old age was coming on him this hermit foresaw his body in the Pṛthudāka tirtha and went to the realm of Visuṣu. Arjuna, Vīvāmbara, Śiśuṣvāpa, Devāpi and such others got Brahmānya (the state of being Brahmīn) by doing penance in the hermitage of this hermit. (M.B. Śaṅkī Parva, Chapter 38, Stanzas 35–39).
UŚAŅAS The teacher Śuka, the son of the hermit Bhṛgu. (See under Śuka).
UŚIK I. A hermit about whom mention is made in the Agnaṇa.
UŚIK II. One Uśik as the wife of the hermit Dīrgahastamas is mentioned in the Rgveda Mandala 1, Anuvāka 16, Śūkta 112. This Uśik was the maid of the queen of the old King of Kalinga. The king requested Dīrgahastamas to beget children by his queen. The queen did not like this. She sent her maid Uśik to Dīrgahastamas. The hermit Kaṇkavān was the son born to Dīrgahastamas by Uśik. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 18, Śūkta 125).
UŚAŅARA I. A famous king of the Candra vāṁśa (Lunar dynasty).
1) Genealogy. Descended from Vīṣṇu in the following order:─Brahma—Atri—Candra—Buddha—Pururāvas—Ayus-Nahua—Yāyati—Anudrūpyu—Sahīśana—Kālanara—Śrījaya. Uśaṇara was the father of Śibi and Vena.
2) The reason for the curse of the right hand. Once the Aśvāvas (Vasus eight in number) came to the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha, with their wives. The wife of Dyau, one of the Aśvāvas, saw the cow ‘Nandini’ in the hermitage. She and the daughter of Uśaṇara were intimate friends. She wanted to get Nandini, so that she might give it as a present to the daughter of Uṣaṇara. According to her wish the Aśvāvas caught hold of the cow and took her home. At that time Vasiṣṭha had been away. When he returned, he knew about the theft of the cow and cursed the Aśvāvas to take birth in the wombs of women on earth. It was according to this curse that the Aśvāvas took birth in Gangadevi the wife of Santanu. See under Bhūṣmā. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 2).
3) Indra torturing Uśaṇara. Uṣṇara was a just and liberal-minded King. Indra decided to test the King regarding his liberality. He got Agnideva (fire-god) for his help: Indra took the form of a Kīti and Agni that of a dove. Both flew down to Uṣṇara as if the Kīti was chasing the dove. Uṣṇara agreed to protect the dove. The Kīti argued that the dove was true and right on his part to rob him of his lawful food. The King agreed to give any other kind of flesh to the Kīti. But the Kīti would have none of them. Finally the Kīti agreed to accept the flesh of the King instead, equal to the weight of the dove. The King cut more and more flesh from his body, but it could not weigh equal to the dove. At last the King himself got into the balance. Then the gods had pity on the King and the Kīti and the dove appeared in their real form and blessed the King and then they returned to heaven. (M.B. Aranya Parva, Chapter 131). In Mahābhārata a story like this occurs about King Śibi also.
4) Other information.
(i) Uṣṇara gave Gālava two hundred horses as dowry and married Yaśāti’s damsel Mādhavi. (See under Gālava).
(ii) The King Śunaka gave Uṣṇara a sword. (M.B. Śaṅkī Parva, Chapter 166, Stanza 79).
(iii) Uṣṇara performed a sacrifice on the bank of the river Vīṣṇu and became equal to Indra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 120, Verses 20–21).
(iv) Uṣṇara attained heaven by giving cows as gifts. (M.B. Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 76, Stanza 25).
UŚAŅARA II. A king of the Yadavas. In the Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 20, it is mentioned that this King was present on the occasion of the Svaṭāvāra (the bride choosing a husband) of Draupadī.
UŚAŅARA III. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 32, that Vṛṣāvarbhī was another name of Uṣṇara and that he had once ruled over the kingdom of Kāśī.
UŚAŅARA IV. A country. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Karna Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 47, that Arjuna had killed the warriors of this country. In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 22 and 23, mention is made that due to the curse of Brahmins the Kṣatriyas (the ruling class) had become Śūdras (servile class).
UŚĪRAṆA I. A mountain in North India. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 139, Stanza 1).

UŚĪRAṆA II. A place on the northern side of the Himalayas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 111, Stanza 23, that the King Marutta, once fought a battle here.

ŪŚIMA. The son of the Agni (Fire) named Pātcajanyā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Stanza 4).

ŪŚIṆA. A group of Pisū (the Maues). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sahā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 30, that these Pisū (the Maues) live in the palace of Yama.

USYADESA. An ancient place in Kraukcadvipa (the island of Kraukc). Kraukcavatvā (the mountain Kraukcī) stands near this place (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 21).

UŚYIṢGANGA. An ancient holy place in Bhārata. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 135, Stanza 7).

UŚIṆA. One of the seven horses of the Sun. The seven horses of the Sun are, Gāyatri, Bhṛati, Umik, Jagati, Tri-cūp, Anumust, and Pankti. (Visūva Purāṇa, Artha 2, Chapter 4).

UŚIṆIṆĀṬA. A Vīkādeva (a class of gods). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāśana Parva, Chapter 97, Stanza 44).

UṢTRAKARNIKĀ. An ancient place in South India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sahā Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 71, that this place was brought under control by Sahadeva.

2) Utātha drank up the sea dry. Varuna deva had an eye on Sona's daughter Bhadrā when Utāthya married her. Incensed at the marriage, Varuna cast Bhadrā off to the sea one day when Utāthya was not present. Narada informed Utāthya that it was Varuna who stole his wife. Though Narada, at the request of Utāthya, asked Varuna to return Bhadrā to the former he did not oblige. Enraged at this Utāthya drank up the sea dry. Yet, Varuna did not come round. Then Utāthya rendered all the lakes of Varuna dry. Trembling at this Varuna returned Bhadrā to Utāthya and prostrated at his feet. He pardoned Varuna and gave back the sea to him. (M.B. Anuśāśana Parva, Chapter 154).

UTĀTHIYA 2. The muti Satiyatapāc. (See under Satiyata-pac.)

UTKALA I. A place in India where people lived in safety. Karna conquered this place. (Drona Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 8). Utkula is believed to be modern Oressa.

UTKALA II. Son of Vaivatsa Manu. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 31).

UTKOCHE. (M.B. A holy place. Dhaumya, the younger brother of Dvāraka lived in Utkocatirtha. The Pāndavas went there and made Dhaumya a priest. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 182).

UTKOCHE (M.B. An ancient holy place. Dhaumya did tapas there, and it was here that the Pāndavas took Dhaumya as their priest. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 152, Verse 2-6).

UTKRĀTHINI. A female attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 16).

UTKRSTHA. One of the two attendants Indra gave to Skanda; the other was called Paṭcata. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 35).

UTPALAYANA. A holy bath in the Punjab. At this place Viśvāmitra performed a sacrifice. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 15).

UTPALINI. A river flowing near the forest known as Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 214, Stanza 6).

UTPĀTAKA. A holy bath. Those who bathe in this tirtha (bath) will get the merits of a fast. (M.B. Anuśāśana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 41).

UTSABA. Celebrations conducted in temples from olden days. There are Sāstraic (scriptural) injunctions as regards conducting utasavs. Utsava is an indispensable celebration when once the deity ( idol ) is installed in the temple. Utsava should be celebrated for one day, three days or seven days in the very same month in which the deity was installed, because non-celebration of Utsava will render the installation ineffective. Utsava should be conducted either during Utasavya (movement of the sun from south to north) or Vīśu (when the Sun is near the centre) or at a time suitable to the temple authorities who conduct the utsava in Sayana, Upavana or Gība. It should commence with auspicious ceremonies like the sowing of seeds of nine varieties of food grains, and with dance, song, instrumental music etc.

UTRASANKARA. A place in the South Bṛārata.

UTTAMA. A King born in the dynasty of Śvāyambhuva Manu. He was the son of A-gras who married Sāru-pā and Barīsmat, two daughters of Viśvāravo. Priyavrata begot three children, Uttama Tāmasa and Raivata by his wife Barīsmat. These three sons attained exceptional prowess and became lords of the ages of Manu (Manvantara-dhipati). Priyavrata, with his children, ruled the country in all happiness and prosperity for ten centuries of years. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skanda). Utanapāda, the second son of Śvāyambhuva Manu begot one son, Utsama by his wife Sūra and another son Druva by his wife Sūmi. (See under Druva). (Visūva Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 11).

UTTAMĀŚVA. A particular place in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 41).

UTTAMĀṽJAYAS. A warrior who fought in the great war on the Pāndava side. He belonged to the Pāṇḍula country.

It was Uttamaivas who guarded the right wheel of A-gra's chariot. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 19). He fought fiercely with Angada. (Drona Parva, Chapter 28, Verses 38-39). He fought Krtavarma also. (Drona Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 27-32). He was defeated in a fight with Duryodhanā. (Drona Parva, Chapter 130, Verses 30-43). Krtavarma also defeated him. He killed Susena, son of Karna. (Karna Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 13). This valiant warrior was killed by Aśvatthāma. (Saipūika Parva, Chapter 8, Verses 35-36). His cremation is described in Verse 34, Chapter 26 of Sīrī Parva.

UTTANABHARHIS. The son of Saryātī, a King of the family of Vaivatsa Manu. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).
UTTANAPĀDA. A King. He was the son of Svāyambhuva Manu, the son of Brahmā. Svāyambhuva Manu had two sons Pravrata and Uttanapāda. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 8). A son named Uttama was born to Uttanapāda by his wife Suruci. Uttanapāda had no other wife called Sunīti. (Visnu Purāṇa, Anuśastra 1, Chapter 11). See under Dhruva.

UTTANAKA (UTTANAKA). An ideal disciple of Veda, who was the disciple of Āpodadhauamya.

1) Uttanka and the Guru’s wife. After entrusting management of the ārama to Uttanka, Veda once went out on a tour of the country, and Uttanka stayed in the ārama carrying out the instructions of the Guru. Then came the menstrual period of Veda’s wife, and his other wives requested Uttanka to do the needful so that the fertile period of their co-wife was not wasted. Uttanka’s reply to them was as follows:— “Asked by women, I shall not do this improper act; and the preceptor has not asked me to do such a thing though it might be improper.”

His Guru, Āpodadhauamya returned to the ārama some time after this, and was very pleased to hear about the above incident. He blessed Uttanka. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 3).

2) His tuition fees. His education being over, it was now time for Uttanka to give due offerings—tuition fee to his guru, and Uttanka enquired of the guru as to what he would have by way of daksīna. The guru asked Uttanka to get his wife’s instruction in the matter and act accordingly. Because of the aforestated incident (Uttanka not acting on the guru’s wife during her menstrual period) she had a grudge against him, and therefore, asked him to bring as his tuition fee the earrings worn by the Kṣatriya wife of King Pāṇa.

Uttanka set out to procure the earrings. On the way he saw an ox, and on its back a big man, who called out to Uttanka to eat the excretion of the ox. When Uttanka hesitated to do so, the man on the ox asked him again to eat it, pointing out that his guru, Veda, had done it. Then did Uttanka consume both the excretion and urine of the ox, and did his oblations, in his perplexed mood, standing. Uttanka arrived at the palace of King Pāṇa and told him about the object of his visit. The King agreed to it. But, when Uttanka entered the Zenana Pāṇa’s Kṣatriya wife could not be seen. When Uttanka told the King about this, he remained thoughtful for some time and told the former that he might surely have become impure due to performance of oblations in the wrong manner, and that his wife would not be visible due to her chastity, to the eyes of such impure folk. Uttanka admitted to having, on his way, performed oblations not in the proper manner, and then he sat down facing the east after washing his hands, feet etc. and performed oblation in the correct manner. Then did the wife of King Pāṇa become visible to him, and she, pleased at his humility, handed over her earring to him. She also advised him to be very careful about the earrings as they had once been coveted by Takṣaka, King of the serpents. Bidding adieu to the queen, Uttanka saw the King and they sat together to take food. Not only was the rice cold; but a hair was also found in it. Uttanka cursed the King and rendered him blind, and the King, in turn, cursed Uttanka not to have children. But, both of them became calm quite soon and withdrew their curses.

On his way back to the ārama with the ear-rings, he had only just stepped into a pool for a wash, when a naked būddha samyāsaṇa, who was following him, snatched and ran off with the ear-rings. It was really Takṣaka disguised as the samyāśaṇa who thus snatched the ear-rings. Uttanka chided him and caught him when he assumed his original form of the serpent King and disappeared into a cave. Uttanka waited at the mouth of the cave suppurated, when Indra deputed his Vajrāyudha to help Uttanka. The Vajrāyudha cut a tunnel-like route to Pāṇiśa from the earth and through the cave into the ārama by this route and found out the palace of Takṣaka.

Though Uttanka praised and cajoled the Nāgaś (serpents) their King Takṣaka did not make his appearance. Uttanka saw there two women, who had been weaving clothes, and on one machine there were black and white threads. The machine had one wheel with twelve spokes and was turned by six boys. Also there was a horse, and a man. When Uttanka saw the horse, the horse and the man approached him. The man advised Uttanka to blow through the anus of the horse so that the snakes could be brought round. Uttanka did so, when lo! all the pores on the body of the horse, flames of fire began spouting out. When the Nāgaśa (country of serpents) got thus filled with fire and flames, Takṣaka lost his nerves and gave up the stolen ear-rings, which Uttanka received back. But that was the last day on which the rings had been promised to be given to his guru’s wife by Uttanka, who remained there gloomy and sorrow-stricken at the thought that he would not be able to travel all the distance before sunset and give the ear-rings to the guru’s wife. Then the horseman gave the horse to Uttanka, who reached the ārama just in time when the guru’s wife was about to curse Uttanka for not returning with the rings though it was nearly dusk time. Now the guru and his wife blessed Uttanka, who detailed to them his experiences since leaving the ārama in quest of the ear-rings. Then the guru spoke thus to Uttanka—“The two women whom you found engaged in weaving were Dhārīka and Vindhāka, the white and black strips, day and night, and the six boys who turned the wheel with twelve spokes were the six seasons. The ox seen by you on the way was Airavan (Indra’s elephant), the horse seen in Pāṇiśa was Agniṃava, and the horseman, Indra. The excretion you ate on your way was near and that was the reason why you did not die in the Nāgaśa. Indra who is my friend blessed you because of mercy towards you, my disciple. You could bring back the ear-rings also because of Indra’s blessings.”

Then the guru blessed Uttanka and the latter took leave of them. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 3).

3) Uttanka and Janamejaya’s serpent yajñas. Uttanka, determined on taking vengeance on Takṣaka, went away directly from the ārama to Hājināpura, where he met Janamejaya and told him the fact that it was Takṣaka, who had beaten to death Parīṣṭra, his (Janamejaya) father. It was thus prompted by Uttanka to take revenge upon Takṣaka that Janamejaya performed the serpent yajña. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 3).
4) Uttanka and Dhubhdamora. See under Dhubhdamora.

5) Uttanka attained salvation. Uttanka was put up at a place called Ujijālíka. When he became old, he went about visiting many temples. During this tour one day Uttanka saw a hunter in the forest called Gūlīka attempting to steal the golden plate on the dome of the Vīṣṇu temple in Saivātu. Gūlīka raised his sword to kill Uttanka, when he told the former that he would have to suffer the results of sin during many births if he committed a sin. This admonition of Uttanka so touched the heart of the hunter that he fell dead on the spot with a repentant heart. Uttanka sprinkled Gangā water on the corpse of the hunter, who attained Vaiśākha (abode of Vīṣṇu). On the advice of Vīṣṇu, Uttanka went to Badari where he did tapas and also attained Vaikuntha. (Nārāyaṇa Purāṇa).

In Chapter 33-58 of Āśvamedha Parva of Mahābhārata is related the story of one Uttanka munī, under the caption ‘Uttakopākhyāna’. In Mahābhārata (original) he is referred to as Uttanka; but in its Malayālam rendering he is called Uttanka. There are no substantial differences between the story of Uttanka and that of Uttanka, Veda’s disciple. But, since, there are differences, in certain aspects some information about the Uttanka of the ‘Uttakopākhyāna’ is given below—

1) General. Uttanka was a disciple of Gauṭama, the husband of Ahaṇā. The guru had more love for Uttanka than for his other disciples, and therefore did not permit the latter to leave the Āśrama even after the other disciples were sent away. Uttanka became old; wrinkles attacked his body and greyness his head. Then one day Uttanka returned from the woods with firewood, in a very tired condition. The daughter of the guru shed tears at the sight. Gauṭama called Uttanka to him and asked him about the cause of his grief and sorrow. Uttanka replied that the hairs on his head turned grey on account of sorrow that he was not permitted to leave the Āśrama although it was hundreds of years since he had gone there first as disciple. Then Gauṭama permitted Uttanka to quit the Āśrama. Uttanka asked Gauṭama what he should offer as tuition fee. Gauṭama consulted his wife on the topic and she suggested as tuition fee the two ear-rings of gems worn by the wife of King Sauḍāsa, who used to eat the flesh of men. Immediately Uttanka set out to fetch the ear-rings and on his way met Sauḍāsa in his forest, and told the latter about his mission. Sauḍāsa tried to eat Uttanka, who told him that he was in duty bound to obtain the ear-rings for his guru’s wife and that, after fulfilling the mission, he would return to Sauḍāsa to be eaten up by him. Sauḍāsa agreed to the proposition. He directed Uttanka to his wife Madayānti, who spoke to him thus—“Devas and Mahārsis covet these ear-rings. If I place them on the ground, serpents will steal them; if handed over to Ucchiṣṭa, Yakṣas will steal them, and if the watchman sleeps, Devas will snatch them off. Therefore, you should bring some token for me to believe that you are deputed by my husband.” Accordingly Uttanka went back, and returned with his wife with a token from him, and Madayānti handed over her ear-rings to Uttanka. Being told by Sauḍāsa that Uttanka need not return again to him, Uttanka started for Gauṭama’s Āśrama with the ear-rings. Feeling hungry on the way, Uttanka tied to the branch of a vilva tree the ear-rings; he tied the ear-rings together for safety and ate the fruits. Just then the bundle of deer skin got untied and the ear-rings kept in it fell on the ground. A serpent carried off the rings between its teeth and concealed itself in a mole-hill. Highly grieved and upset by the sight, Uttanka fell down from the tree. For 35 days Uttanka dug the mole-hill. Then Indra felt great sympathy for him, appeared on the spot, and pulled out the ear-rings from the mole-hill. Then the earth burst open and Uttanka entered Paṭāla through the opening, and a horse, its tail white and the rest of the body black in colour presented itself to him. It asked Uttanka to blow through its anus. Uttanka did so and the Nāgāpāla was filled with flames of fire. (The horse was Agnideva).

Then did the serpents return the ear-rings to Uttanka, who returned with it to Gauṭama and presented it to him (Gauṭama) as tuition fee.

2) Uttanka about to curse Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Uttanka once went to Dvārakā, and during their talk was about to curse Kṛṣṇa for not attempting to bring about a compromise between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas. At once Kṛṣṇa exhibited his Vāivṛtṛpa (himself as containing the whole universe) and asked Kṛṣṇa to demand from Uttanka, who asked him to request for any boon. He prayed for the boon that water might be made available in any desert he visited. Kṛṣṇa told him that whenever he required water he might successfully think of him.

3) Indra tested Uttanka. Some time afterwards, while roaming about quite thirsty and tired in a desert, Uttanka thought about what boon he could ask for; there appeared before him a naked Āśrama, his body covered with mud. Dogs encircled him. Uttanka hesitated to drink the water given to him by this Āśrama, who had some water with him. The Āśrama again insisted on Uttanka drinking the water, but he again refused the offer. The Āśrama then disappeared with the dogs. Within a few minutes a person with disc, conch, club and banner about him appeared, and Uttanka recognised him as Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Uttanka told Kṛṣṇa that it was not proper to give water to a brāhmaṇa through a āśrama. Kṛṣṇa’s reply to this was as follows:—“I asked Indra to give you nectar instead of water, and he argued that it was not proper that men should be given nectar. I pleaded for you again. Indra replied to this that he himself would, in the guise of a Āśrama given water to you, and he should not be found guilty if you refused the nectar. I accepted that proposition of his. But, you did not accept nectar thus offered to you. So, you cannot be given nectar now. But, there will appear water-laden clouds in deserts which you traverse, which would be known as ‘Uttanka clouds’ and they would give you sweet water.”

Uttanka was pleased, and it is the Uttanka clouds, which form as per the above orders of Kṛṣṇa that cause rain to fall, though rarely, in deserts even today.

UTTARA 1. The son of King Vīraḍā of Mānya. Mention is made in the Mahābhārata, Vīraḍā Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 9 that Bhūmīpāla was another name of Uttara. Uttara also accompanied his father Vīraḍā, when he went to take part in the Suvasīvanara (choice of a husband) of Draupadī. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 183, Stanza 3).

2) Uttara and Arjuna. See the paragraph Ajhātāvāsā under Arjuna.
3) The end of Uttara. Uttara had taken part in the battle between the Pândavas and the Kauravas. It is mentioned in the Mahâbhârata, Bhitama Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 77 that a combat took place on the first day of the battle between Uttara and Virâlâhu. Uttara attacked Sâlîya who killed Uttara. (M.B. Bhitama Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 36 to 39). Uttara who met with a glorious death in the battle, got a place in heaven with the gods. (M.B. Svârgarohana Parva, Chapter 5, Stanzas 17 and 18).

Uttara. A King who had gone down because of his contemptuous behaviour towards his superiors.

Uttara. A fire. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Stanzas 29 and Sâbâha Parva, Chapter 22).

1) General information. Daughter of Virâta, the King of Matsya. Her brother was called Uttara.
2) Up to marriage. The Pândavas led their incognito life in the capital of the Matsya Kingdom. Arjuna adopted the name Bhrâhmanâla and was employed as the tutor of princess Uttara in music and dancing. At the end of the life, King Virâta gave his daughter Uttara in marriage to Abhimanyu the son of Arjuna. (See the paragraph Adbhavâsika (incognito-life) under Arjuna).
3) Son. The son born to Abhimanyu and Uttara was Parâkshâ, who became a very famous King later. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanzas 83 and 84). See the seventh paragraph under Adbhavâsika.
4) The death of her husband. Abhimanyu was killed in the battle between the Pândavas and the Kauravas. It is mentioned in the Mahâbhârata, Droop Parva, Chapter 78, Stanzas 37 to 39. Uttara fell unconscious when she heard of the death of her husband. Sûrya consoled Uttara. In the Mahâbhârata, Sîri Parva, Chapter 20, Stanzas 4 to 28 the lamentation of Uttara over the death of Abhimanyu is mentioned.
5) To the forest. Uttara was seen among the women who accompanied Dronâstra, to a little distance when he went to the forest after the battle. (M.B. Adbhavâsika Parva, Chapter 15, Stanzas 10)

Uttararâdhâ. See under Gâlava.

Uttarajovitâ. An ancient city which stood in the western part of Bharata. It is said in the Mahâbhârata that Nakula conquered this city. (Sâbha Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 3).

Uttarâkosâla. An ancient country in Bharata. It is mentioned in the Mahâbhârata, Sâbha Parva, Chapter 30, Stanzas 3 that Bhitamena conquered Uttara Kosala.

Uttarakuru. It is a part of the Jambudvîpa (Island of Jambhû). Mention is made in the Mahâbhârata that during his conquest Arjuna had gone up to this place and carried away from there plenty of wealth. It is believed by common people that this place is inaccessible to human beings. (M.B. Sâbha Parva, Chapter 26, Stanzas 7 to 20). The southern end of this place is the Nilagirî and the Northern end Mount Meru. The inhabitants are gifted people, with trees bearing flowers and fruits, the flowers fragrant and the fruits sweet. A particular type of tree known as Kûśî (milky) grows in the forest. There are also trees which will give you whatever you ask. It was the belief of ancient people that with the fruits of Kûśî, you could make garments and ornaments. The soil of this place contains gems and in the sand there is gold. Those who fall down from heaven live in this region. The average age of the inhabitants of this place is said to have been eleven thousand years. There is a kind of bird in this place called Bhûrâjû. These birds drag dead bodies away to caves. (M.B. Bhitama Parva, Chapter 8, Stanzas 2 to 13).

Uttarmânasâ. A holy place of pilgrimage. It is stated in the Mahâbhârata, Atushâsana Parva, Chapter 23, Stanzas 68, that those who visit this holy place will get atonement from the sin of bhûrajasû (causing emasculation).

Uttarapântika. An ancient country in Bharata. Drupada became the King of this country on the death of King Prûta. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 129, Stanzas 43). In course of time Uttarapântika came under the control of the Mûsârâstra. (See under Mûsârâstra in the Mahâbhârata, Adi Parva, Chapter 127, Stanzas 70 to 76). It is mentioned that this country was on the north bank of the Ganges.

Uttarapârîyâtra. A mountain. (Bhûjâ Bharata, Vana Parva, Chapter 313, Stanzas 8).

Uttarapâthâ. North Bharata. (M.B. Sûnti Parva, Chapter 207, Stanzas 43).

Uttara Râmaânya. The second part of the Râmâyana. Uttara Râmaânya comprises the story from Sîr Râmâyâna's return from the exile in the forest and assuming the ruling of the country onwards.

Uttara Uloka. The country of Ulaka in North India. It is mentioned in the Mahâbhârata, Sâbha Parva, Chapter 27, Stanzas 11 that Arjuna conquered this country.

Uttejini. A follower of Skandadeva. (M.B. Sâlîya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 6).

VA (व). This letter means Varuna and letter 'Vi' means separation (of lovers). (Agni Purâna, Chapter 348).

Vâhravayaâni (Vâhravayaâni). One of Vîvânâ's sons, who were all Brahmavâdins. (M.B. Atushâsana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanzas 57).

Vâdânya. An ancient hermit. (For further details see under Āstâvâkra).

Vadhâ. Son of Vûudhâna, a giant. It is mentioned in Brahmavâdina Purâna that this giant had two sons Vûgma and Sûma.

Vadhâ. A country in ancient India. (Mahâbhârata, Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanzas 58).

Vadhâmitâ. A princess, praised in Rgveda. This beautiful princess got a hermaphrodite as her husband. She shed a good deal of tears and prayed to the Ātûva (Chariteers of Indra, celebrated as Gods of light and helpers) in consequence of which she got a son named Hiranyaksha. (Rgveda, Manûsha 1, Sukta 116).

Vadhûsara. A river which flowed through the vicinity of the hermitage of Cyavana. This river took its origin from the team of Pulûmahâ, the wife of hermit Bhrûga. (For further details see under Cyavana). Because of a bath taken in this river, the body of Parâsûrama shone with radiance. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 99, Stanzas 68).

Vadhysva. A king in ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahâbhârata, Sâbha Parva, Chapter 5, Stanzas 12, that the spirit of this king stays in the palace of Yums, praising him.

Vâdî. A son of emperor Pûthu. Pûthu had two righteous sons called Anurâdhâna and Vâdî. A son named Hâvidhâna was born to Anurâdhâna by Sûkhandhâ. Dhisanâ born in the dynasty of Agni became the wife of Havirdhana. Six sons named Pronmaharshita, Sukra, Gaya, Krsna, Vraja and Ajina were born to the couple.
(Vism Purana, Anua 1, Chapter 14).

VAGBHATA. A Sanskrit scholar who lived in the 12th century A.D. He is the author of the two medical books 'Aṣṭāṅga-sāngrahā' and 'Aṣṭāṅghaṃdṛaya'. Another work called 'Neminīvēṇa' is also written by Vāghbhaṭa.
This work deals with the story of Neminātha, a Jain hermit.

Not much is known about Vāghbhaṭa. He was a scholar in theoretical science. There are certain stories about his writing the medical books. It was a period when the muslims had beaten down the Brahmins. They had taken away the medical science also from them. The Brahmins considered this to be a disgrace to them. They decided to select an intelligent boy and send him to a Muslim physician. They selected Vāghbhaṭa. The Brahmins disguised Vāghbhaṭa as a Muslim boy and sent him to the Muslim Physician on the other side of the river. 'The boy went to the physician and told him that he was born in Varanasi and had had the training of learning medical science. The teacher put certain questions and understood that the boy possessed extraordinary intelligence. He began to teach the boy the science of medicine. Seeing the interest of the boy the teacher asked the boy to eat food from his house and to learn day and night. The Brahmin boy did not like to eat the food of Muslims. The boy said that he had a relative on the other side of the river and that he would go there and have his supper and return for the night. The teacher agreed and thenceforward Vāghbhaṭa began to learn day and night. Within a short time he completed learning.

One day the teacher was sleeping on the seventh storey of the building and his disciple Vāghbhaṭa was massaging his legs. The boy solicited that he had destined him to massage the legs of a Muslim. Instantly he called the boy and the teacher asked the student that the boy was not a Muslim, and tried to cut his head. The boy thought: 'The four Vedas and the six Śrāstras say that there is a god. If it is true no harm will come to me.' Then he jumped out of the window.
In consequence of this jump, he became a little lame and no other harm befell him. He swam across the river and reached the other side and told the Brahmins everything. The Brahmins asked him what he imagined when he jumped from the seventh storey. He replied
'I jumped with this imagination. The four Vedas and the six Śrāstras say that there is a god. If it is true no harm will come to me.' As soon as the boy had finished the Brahmins became angry and they all got up.
They said 'You went wrong in using the doubt of Aṣṭāṅga, instead of the affirmative Aṣṭāṅga. The Brahmins joined together and expelled him from the society. The boy thought of going away somewhere. 'But there won't be another chance for somebody else to go and learn medical science from the Muslim physicians. So before going away from here I must make the fruits of my efforts available to these people.' Thinking so he lived there for a little longer. He lived there without mingling with the Brahmins, cooking his food. It is believed that Vāghbhaṭa wrote 'Aṣṭāṅga-sāngrahā' and 'Aṣṭāṅga-hṛdaya', during this period.

VAGDUSTA. One of the seven sons of hermit Kauśika (Matsya Purāṇa, 20: 3). The famous Pārvatī was the youngest brother of Vagdustā.

VAGINDRA. Son of the king Prākūraka born in the family of Gṛṣamada. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 65 that he was the father of King Pramiti.

VAGMI. A son born to Manasuya, the grandson of emperor Puru, by his wife Sauvīrī. This son had two brothers Sārka and Samanavan. (M.B. Aśi Parva, Chapter 24, Stanza 45).

VAHANA (CONVEYANCE). To know about the conveyances of Rudra, Yama and so on, see under Jaradhi.

VAHI. A devil living in the river Vipāsā. The devil had a friend called Hita. Their sons are called the Vāhikas.
The Vāhikas are not considered to be the creation of the Prajāpati. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 44, Stanza 41).

VAHIKA. A Brahmin who was well-versed in the Vedas.
This Brahmin earned his bread by selling salt. In his life, he had committed sins. At last he was killed by a lion. The flesh of his dead body fell in the Gaṅgā in consequence of which he got remission of his sins.
(Skanda Purāṇa 2: 4: 1-28).

VAHINARA. A king who lived in the palace of Yama.
(Mahābhārata, Śaṁbh Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 15).

VAHINI. A division of army. (See under Aṁśuhaṁi).

VAHINI. Wife of Kuru, a king of the Lunar dynasty.
Five sons such as Aśvatām and others were born to Kuru by his wife Vāhini. (M.B. Aśi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 30).

VAHINI. An ascara. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śanta Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 52 that this ascara had been a lokāpāla (Indra, Agni, Yama and Varuṇa were called lokāpālas) in olden days.

VAHINI. Son of the king Tvaruvas. Vahini had a son named Bharga who became very famous.
(Bhāgavata, Skandha 9; Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 84: 1).

VAHINI. One of the sons born to Kriṣṇa by Mura-vindā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VAHINIVĀLAM. A hell. (See the portion Naraka under Kula).

VAHYAKA. The two daughters of King Śrījaya. They were married by Bhajumana, a Yadava king. Three sons named Nimi, Kṛṣṇa and Vṛṣṇi were born to them.
(Matsya Purāṇa, 44: 49-50).

VAIBHRĀJAKA. A garden. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skandha 5, that this garden is situated on the top of the mountain Supārśva which stands as a prop to Mahā-meru.

VAIDARBHI I. A wife of King Sagara. This king born of the Solar dynasty, had two wives named Vaidarbhi and Saiby. Vaidarbhi was also called Sumati and Saiby had another name Keśini. Of these two, Vaidarbhi gave birth to sixty thousand sons and Saiby was one son named Amaśajjasa. (See under Sagara).

VAIDARBHI II. Wife of the King Kuta. Four sons named Kṛṣṇa, Keśi, Asūtarmajā and Vasi were born to Kuta by Vaidarbhi. (Vāmiki Rāmacchaya, Bili Kanda, Sarga 32).

VAIDARBHI III. A king. This king gave his daughter Lopamudrā in marriage to Agastya. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137: Verse 11).
VAIDEHA I. The King of Videha.
VAIDEHA II. See under Varga.
VAIDEHA III. Another name of the country of Videha. It has the meaning, which is in Videha. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 57).
VAIDURYAPARVATA. A mountain which stands near Gokarna (holi place) in the country of Sarparka (Keralas). Agastya once built a hermitage on this mountain. If one bathes in the river Narmada, after having visited this Videha mountain one could attain the holy worlds. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 13).
VAIDYA. One of the sons born to Varuna by his wife Sunadevi. His sons Ghriti and Muni fought with each other and died. (Vayu: 84: 6-9).
VAISHAYASA. A caviar or a sacred pit (kunda) situated near the hermitage of Narakasuraprakaas (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 3).
VAJAYANTAYA I. The capital city of an asura named Timidhavaya, otherwise called Samburum. (See under Timidhavaya).
VAJAYANTAYA II. Name of the flag of Indra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 42, Stanza 6).
VAJAYANTAYA III. A mountain standing in the middle of the sea of Milk. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Santi Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 9, that Brahmadeva comes to this mountain daily for devotion and meditation.
VAJAYANTI. Two bells of Airavata Indra presented these two bells to Subrahmanya, who, in his turn, gave one of them to Visvakarma (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 13).
VAIKRAT. Another name of Karura.
VAIKHANASA. A philosopher. He had written a book known as VAIKHANASACHANDRAPRATI. Matters concerning the duties of a forest-house-holder, occupation suitable for children born of wedlocks which are in accordance with natural law as well as contrary to the natural order, etc. are dealt with in detail, in this book. A large number of quotations from VAIKHANASADHARMAPRATI occur in Manusmriti.
VAIKHANASAS. A group of hermits of the Vedesa age. There were hundred hermits in this group (Rgveda, 9: 66). They were born from the finger nail of Brahmadeva (Taittiriya, 1: 23).
VAIKUSTHA I. The dwelling place of Mahavishnu.
VAIKUSTHA II. Another name of Mahavishnu. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Santi Parva, Chapter 342, Stanza 90, that when Visvakarma made creation with the five elements, his powers did not have any hindrance (Kumkhita) and so he got the name Vaikuntha.
VAIKUSTHA III. A Brahmin saint who lived in the Tretayuga. The living things got deliverance from sin, the moment they came into contact with him. This power of Vaikuntham to give living things deliverance, is mentioned in Padma Purana, Brahma khaanda, Chapter 5, as follows: Vaikuntha once lighted a ghee-lamp in the presence of Vishnu in Kairuksa and returned home. At that time a rat came there and began to drink the ghee. Then the lamp blazed into a flame. The rat was terrified at this, and ran away. But by the grace of Vishnu the rat got deliverance from all his sins. That rat was killed by snake-bite. The men of Yama came with ropes. Instantly the messengers of Vishnu also came on Garuda. Yama’s men got afraid of Vishnu’s messengers and humbly asked them: “For what goodness of him are you taking this great animal to Vaikuntha?” They replied: “He had lit a lamp before the presence of Vishnu. That act has earned for him a place in Vaikuntham. The goddesses calm by lighting a lamp with devotion and love in Kairuka, could be described only by Mukunda.” After that the rat was taken to Vaikuntha.
VAIMANIKHA. A holy place. Mention is made in Mahabharata, Anu Anasara Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 23, that those who bathe in this holy place could freely walk about in the world of the celestial maidens.
VAIMITRA. One of the Saptamatri (seven mothers). They are Vasumitra, Kaki, Hallidhi, Malini, Bhada, Arya and Palasli (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 226, Stanza 10).
VAIMITRYA I. One of the prominent sons of Garuda. (M.B. Udvega Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 10).
VAIMITRYA II. Son of Vainayi. (Garuda).
VAINAYA. Another name of emperor Prithu. (See under Prithu).
VAIRAJA One of the Saptapittas (Seven Sires). The Saptapittas are, Varuna, Agneya, Surapati, Cakupta, Ekardha, Caturveda, and Kala. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 40).
VAIRAMAS. A caste of people in ancient India. The people of this caste gave Dharmaputra, various kinds of jewels and other costly things as presents and then attended the Rajasuya of the Pandavas. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 12).
VAIRATA. One of the hundred sons of Dushasana. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Bhishma Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 26, that this Vairata was killed in the battle of Bharata by Bhimaesha.
VAISHAKHA. A month. This month comes after the month of Chitra and before the month of Jyestha. It is stated in Mahabharata, Anushasana Parva, Chapter 106, that by observing the fast of taking food only once, daily in this month, one could acquire prominence among kingsmen and people of one’s own caste.
VAISHAKHARA. See under Dusasana.
VAISALA. A city. This city was founded by King Visala, who belonged to the dynasty of Dvata. Because Nabhiya, the son of Dhvata had married a woman from Vaisala caste, he also is also known as Vaisala. The writings of Vana, the son of Bhudunas of this family, are included in the Rgveda. The differentiation of Dhvatas was not so strict in those days as today. It is not known in what country Dvata and his people Anagha lived. The Kings Karandhama, his son Aviṣṭa and his son Maruta of this dynasty were great and valiant. Marutha had performed both horse sacrifice (avamahdas) and imperial consecration (Rajasuya). To Trihairi, who was in the tenth generation from Maruta, a son was born named Visala. This Visala founded a city and lived there. That city is called Vaisala. Many of the scholars are of opinion that this city Vaishala is the same as Ujjaivini. It is stated in Mahabharata that Sumadatta of the seventh generation from Visala had performed ten avamahdas (horse-sacrifices).
VAISALAKSHA. The Law of conduct of Brahman. Since Siva, who is Vaishalaksha (fire-sighted) had collected and abridged them, it came to be called Vaishalaksha. (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 59, Stanza 82).
VAISÁLINI. The daughter of King Viskiša. She was married by Aviṣṭ, the son of Karandama. The famous Marutis was the son born to this couple. (Mārakandeya Purāṇa, Chapters 119-120).

VAISÁMPAYĀNA.

1) General information. A prominent disciple of Vyāsā. It is mentioned in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 1, that the main disciples of Vyāsā were Asita, Devala, Vaśampayana, Sumanu, Jaimini, Paila and some others. (See under Bhārata).

2) Other details.
   (i) Vaśampayana who told the story of Bhārata composed by Vyāsā, to King Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 20).
   (ii) Vaśampayana told Janamejaya the story of Bhārata at the instruction of Vyāsā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 22).
   (iii) Vaśampayana praised Mahābhārata and spoke of its greatness. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 12).
   (iv) Once Vaśampayana was overpowered by ignorance, and he killed a Brahmin. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 36, that in spite of it he attained heaven.

VAISĀVAČAṆA. The bow of Vyāsā. (For further details see under Vyāsā, part 1, see-section 7).

VAIRĀVANA. Kubera. (See under Kubera).

VAŚVADEVA (M). A sacrifice. It is mentioned in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 11, that a brahmin should perform this sacrifice to protect himself from hurt caused by oven, thrusting stone, axe, cutting knife, and other weapons. This sacrifice could be performed in a cavity for kindling fire on the floor smeared with cowdung and mud. It should not be done in an ordinary oven meant for cooking, in iron oven, in earthenware or on ordinary floor. As all the deities are having faces of fire, the sacrificial fire should not be kindled by fanning the flame with hand, winnow, hide, etc. If fanning the flame with cloth, the sacrificer will contract disease; by winnowing he would sustain loss of wealth; and death, by fanning with hand. Plums, fruits, roots, curd, ghee etc. could be used as burnt offerings. When these are not available, firewood, roots of herbs, grass etc. could be used instead. Things to be offered as burnt-offerings should be burnt itself, first by sprinkling ghee on them. In the absence of ghee, milk, curd and water may be used. Using things which are unfit as burnt-offerings will invite bad results.

In Vaśvadeva-sacrifice, half-burnt firewood used in cooking, should not be used. So also suits of any kind. After finishing Vaśvadeva, Gopaṇa (giving rice to cow) also should be done.

VAŚVĀNARA I. A hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sābbha Parva, Chapter 7 Verse 18, that this hermit stays in the palace of Indra. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 11, Sūtra 59).

VAŚVĀNARA II. The first son of Agni called Bhanu. In Caturmukhya-sacrifice, this fire Vaisānara also is worshipped along with the fire Pañjaya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Stanza 16).

VAŚVĀNARA III. One of the sons born to Kaśyapa by his wife Manu. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

VAIVĀHIKA PARVA I. A sub-section of Ādi Parva in Mahābhārata. This comprises chapters 192 to 198 of that Parva.

VAIVĀHIKA PARVA II. A sub-section of Virāṭa Parva. This comprises Chapters 70 to 72 of Virāṭa Parva.

VAIVĀSVATA MANU. The seventh Manu. There is a description of Manu Vaivasvata under Manavānara.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Vṛiṇi in the following order:—Brahma-Mārici-Kaśyapa-Vivasvān-Vaivasvata Manu.

2) The incarnation of Matsya and Vaivasvata Manu. See under Avatāra, Section "Matsya."

3) Wife and children. The wife of Vaivasvata Manu was Śraddhā. Many sons were born to the couple. Prominent among them were, Yama, Yami, Avinnākumāra, Revana, Sudāvāna, Iktvākā, Niga, Saryati, Dītu, Dīrgha, Karuṇa, Nāriyākṣa, Nākagha, śraddhā and Kavyā.

VAIVĀSVATA TIRTHA. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 39, that he who bathes in this holy bath would become himself a holy Tirtha.

VAITŚYA. One of the four castes. (For further details see under Varuṣa and Ānurājya).

VAITŚYĀ. A warrior of Subrahmāanya. (M.B. Śaiva Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 67).

VAITŚANDA. Son of Āpa, one of the eight Vṛisṇis. Āpa had four sons named, Vaītśanda, Śrama, Śanta and Dvāni. (Vṛisṇi Purāṇa, Athā 1, Chapter 15).

VAITŚARANI I. A hell. (See under Kāla, the Section Naraka).

VAITŚARANI II. The name of river Ganges when it flows through the world of the Manu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Stanza 22).

VAITŚARANI III. A river. The prominence of this river is given below:
   (i) This river stays in the court of Varuṇa and glories him. (Mahābhārata, Sābbha Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 20).
   (ii) This river gives remission of sins. There is a spot called Viratākṣira, in this river. He who bathes in this holy place would shine like the moon. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 6).

VAJSA. A son of Sudhavāva, whose father was Aligār. It is mentioned in Rgveda, Mandala 1, Aṣṭaka 1, Sūtra 111, that Sudhavāva had three sons named Rishi, Viśvāsan and Vajsa.

VAJAPÉYA. A sacrifice.

VAJASANEYA. A religion or religious book (scripture). At the end of Kaliyuga, people will become thieves and lose all good qualities, and moreover fifteen branches of the Veda Vājasyaneya alone will be accepted as Regulations of life. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 16).

VAJASANEY (VĀJASENYAS). A group of Priests. Priest Yajñavalkya was one of the disciples of Yajur Veda-group of Vṛiṇi. Of the line of disciples, Yajñavalkya had fifteen disciples. They were called Vājaneyins or Vājasyaneya.

The Vṛiṇi—collection received from the god Sun were divided into fifteen groups by Yajñavalkya and given to each of his disciples. From that day onwards, his disciples became famous by the name Vājasyaneya. (Br. U 7.5-7).
VAJRAVUDHA (Thunderbolt). The famous weapon of Indra.

1) The making of this weapon. In olden days a fierce asura named Viśva was born. The Kālakeyas and many other asuras became his followers. They began to create havoc in the world, and cause harm to the Devas. At last under the leadership of Indra the Devas went to Brahmā and informed him of their grievances and requested for advice as to the way of killing Viśva. Brahmā told them that only with a weapon made of the bone of the hermit Daśasūra, could Viśvāraṇa be killed. The Devas went to the bank of the river Sarasvati and saw the hermit Daśaśāla, who was the foremost of the munificent men, doing penance there. Indra told him the wish of their visit. He told the Devas to take his bone, if it was useful to them. Saying this he forsook his body. The Devas took the bone of the hermit and gave them to Viśvakarma who made a powerful weapon with them and gave that to Indra. They named the weapon the 'thunderbolt'. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 160).

2) The face of Subrahmanyā. When Subrahmanyā was defeated by Narakātśa, he went to the Himalayas and hid himself there. Unable to see their King Indra, the devas went to Subrahmanyā. When Indra knew this, he thought that Subrahmanyā had taken possession of the world of the gods. So he came and fought with Subrahmanyā. The thunderbolt of Indra touched the face of Subrahmanyā and wounded him. From the blood which flowed from the face of Subrahmanyā two noble men appeared who eventually became warriors of Subrahmanyā. (Kathāsaritsāgara, Lāvānakalambaka, Taranga 6).
3) Daily thunderbolt. In Vana Purāṇa, Añka 1, Chapter 3, and Añka 2, Chapter 4, a process by which thunderbolt is made daily in the evening from the water particles thrown by Brahmins when they recite the spell Gāyatrī is described.

In the evening, the fierce giants called the Mandhás wish to eat the Sun. Yajñapati had given them a curse that though their bodies would not perish they would daily meet with death. So there is a line between these giants and the sun daily in the evening. At that time the Brahmins recite the spell Gāyatrī with the Brahma-pervading syllable ‘OM,’ and throw up water. This water becomes the Vajra weapon, and burns the giant.

4) The thunderbolt becomes a tiger. The hermits Nārada and Parāvata once went to the palace of the King Sīrpa. The King worshipped them and served them for a long time, as a result of which a son was born to him. Indra decided to lessen the superior power of these hermits. Once the son of the King, who was a mere boy, was playing in the forest. At the instruction of Indra, the thunderbolt took the form of a tiger and went to the forest and killed the boy. Sṛṣṭi was very sad. Nārada and Parāvata brought the boy to life again and gave him to the King. (M.B. Sant Parva, Chapter 40)

VAJR I. The weapon that wields the weapon VAJR (q.v)

VAJR II. An eternal god concerned in offering to the manes (Mahābhārata, Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 33).

VAKA (BAKA) See under Baka.

VĀKA The daughter of the giant Mahīvan, Vāravas married her. Three sons Trisūra, Dūsana and Vidyūsajña and a daughter Anuśāna were born to the couple (Bṛhaṇādha Purāṇa, 3: 35-40, Vāya Purāṇa, 70: 34-50). But in Mahā Bhārata, mention is made only about three wives of Vāravas, named Puppotakā, Rākṣa and Mahīni.

VAKA DĀLBHYA (BAKA DĀLBHYA) A hermit of Ancient India. The information obtained from Mahābhārata about this hermit is given below.

(i) He was a member of the council of Yuddhāshrama. (M.B. Savī Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 82).

(ii) Once Vaka Dālbhya lectured to Yuddhāshrama about the greatness of Brahmans. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 6).

(iii) On another occasion he described the welfare of eternal beings to Indra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 195).

(iv) Once he stopped Śri Kṛṣṇa, who was going to Hārīmārapura, and conversed with him on the way. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 4).

(v) The hermit Baka Dālbhya once talked about how the kingdom of Dhartīstra would be made burnt offering to fire. (M.B. Śalya-Parva, Chapter 41, Stanza 5).

VAKANAKHA (BAKANAKHA) One of Vāsivāntrā's sons who were exponents of the Vedas. (Mahā Bhārata Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 58).

VAKPĀRUSVA (Using harsh words). One of the wrongs brought under the rule of chastisement in Ancient India. Without seeing for the truth or falsity, a man praising another with a view to tease or offend him, is Vākpārûvya. The teasing may be aimed at some body with disabled members of the body or disabled organs of sense. Besides, using heart rending words also comes under this crime. In olden days kings issued orders to fine anybody guilty of this crime. Ordinarily the fine was 25 Panas. If the crime was committed against one who was below the level of the culprit, the fine to be paid was only half. If harsh words were used against other women or people of a higher level the fine was double. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 258).

VAKRA A King in Ancient India. He is known by the name Dānavikātra. (For further details see under Dhana-vikātra).

VĀSOGRITVA Vāsivāntrā's son, who was an exponent of Vedas. (M.B. Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 55).

VALA (BALA). An asura. It is stated in Padma Purāṇa, Bhūrmihika, how Indra killed this asura. One day Vala went to the sea for his evening worship. Devendra saw the asura, shining with the radiance of celibacy and the divine rod and deer-hide, praying on the sea-shore. Instantly Indra cut him into two with his weapon, the thunderbolt. Vala fell down motionless. Mention is made about this asura in Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuśāna 4. (For further details see under Bala).

VALĀKA (BALĀKA). A forester. (For further details see under Balāka).

VALĀKṢA See under Balākṣa.

VALĀKHILYAS See under Balākhyāsa.

VALALA See under Balala.

VALGUJĀNGHA A son of Vāsivāntrā. He was a Brahmants. (See under Vāsivāntrā).

VALIMUKHA A famous monkey in the army of Śri Kṛṣṇa. (Vāsīsa Rāma, Yuddha Kānda, Sarga 2, Vers 32).

VALISIKHA See under Bālikhika.

VALKALA See under Valala.

VALLABHA I. The husband of Hemaprabā, an unchaste woman. (See under Hemaprabā).

VALLABHA II. Son of Balākṣa. He was a righteous King. Vala had a son named Kuśika. (M.B. Anuśāna Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 58).

VĀLMIKI I. A hermit who was the first among poets and the author of Rāmāyana.

1) General Informatiotn. Knowledge about this hermit who was the first among the poets of Bharata is scanty. So we have to depend mainly on some hearsay for the life history of this sage.

It is said that Valmiki was the tenth son of Varuṇa. But in his younger age he fell into the hands of wicked people and became a wicked man, like his friends. Then his name was not Valmiki. Being a father, he had to support his family. For this purpose he used to plunder travellers. Once he happened to catch the Saptarṣis (the seven hermits) who passed by that way. The hermits asked him whether his wife and children would share the sins he had incurred by plundering. The plunderer could not answer that unexpected question. He ran home and asked his wife and children if they would share the sins incurred by him. They were not prepared to do so. In a moment his life underwent a thorough change. He ran to the Saptarṣis and knelt before them. They imparted to the forester, knowledge of the Vedas. The forester set under a tree and began to sing ‘Rāma Rāma’. Days and months and years passed, unknown to him. He did not know that white anila had built a shelter above him. After several years the Saptarṣis returned by that way. They broke the ant-hill and took the hermit out. Because he came out of Vālmika or white-ant-hill he came to be known as Vālmiki, the name of his hermitage, on the bank of the river Tamasā and lived there with his disciples. It was at this place that he composed the famous poem Rāmāyaṇa. (For further details see under Rāmāyaṇa).

2) Other details.
(i) Vālmiki shined in the palace of Indra. (M.B. Sāthi Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 16).
(ii) He was made an Maharājharat, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 27, that Vālmiki met Śrī Kṛma who was going to Hastināparva as a messenger of the Pandavas.
(iii) Śrīyaki recited a poem composed by Vālmiki, after having killed Bhūtrastas in the Bhūtastabha. (M.B. Droto Parva, Chapter 143, Stanza 37).
(iv) Vālmiki told Yudhiṣṭhira the benefits of his discourse to Sīva. (M.B. Anuvāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 8).

VĀLMIKI II. One of the prominent sons of Gorudā. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 10), Stanza 11).

VĀMĀ. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 12).

VĀMĀDEVA. An ancient hermit.
1) Vāmādeva and Ṣāla. Three sons named Ṣāla, Dala and Bala were born to King Parīkṣit by his wife Sūbhāṇā, a princess of Mandūka. In due course, King Parīkṣit anointed his eldest son Ṣāla as King and went to the forest for penance. Once Ṣāla went to the forest to hunt. While chasing a deer, a tiger attacked him. Vāmādeva, his disciple to the court of the King to take the horses back. But the King sent him back empty-handed. Vāmādeva got angry. He came in person and demanded his horses. The King replied that Brahmīns did not require such horses. While these two were quarrelling with each other, some fierce giants came there and pierced Ṣāla with a trident and killed him. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 192).

2) Other information.
(i) He was a friend of Vasiṣṭha and a priest of Daśaratha. (Vālmiśa Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sarga 7, Stanza 3).
(ii) Mandala 4 of Rgyvda was composed by Vāmādeva.
(iii) Vāmādeva was a hermit who had praised the Aṣṭāṅga when he was in his mother's womb. (Rgyvda, Mandala 1, Sūkta 119).
(iv) Once Vāmādeva tried to eat the flesh of a dog because of hunger, with a view to save Brahmīns. (Manasmiti, Chapter 10, Stanza 106).
(v) He was a prominent member in the assembly of Indra. (M.B. Sāthi Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 17).
(vi) Vāmādeva gave advice about righteousness to King Vatsumāna. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 92).

VĀMĀDEVA II. A king. Arjuna defeated this king during his regional conquest of the North. (M.B. Sāthi Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 11).

VĀMĀDEVA III. One of the seven sons born to Manu by his wife Satarūpa. It is stated in Matya Purāṇa, Chapter 4, that the Brahmiṇs were born from the feet of Mahākāśyapa from the hand of Vāmādeva, who was an incarnation of Śiva. The Vāmādeva who had five faces and a trident in his hand, fought with Ānanda, when Tārā the wife of Bhīṣmapati was carried away by Ānanda. (Matya Purāṇa, 3-19).

VĀMANA I. An incarnation of Mahāvīra.
1) General information. There are ten main incarnations of Mahāvīra. Of these, the incarnation of Vāmana is the fifth.
2) Two Vāmanas. Two different stories occur in the Purāṇas about the incarnation of Vāmana. One story is about how Mahāvīra took the incarnation of Vāmana and thrust Mahāśeṅh an asura, down to the netherworld. This story is widely known. The other story the place of Mahāśeṅh is given to the asura called Dhumelu. This is the main difference. For a comparative study, both stories are given below.

a) The first story of the incarnation of Vāmanā. The devas (gods)such as Indra and the others were born to Prajñapati Kāśyapa by his wife Āḍiti and the asuras (demons) such as Mahāsēṅh and others, by his wife Dāsī. Kāśyapa (asuras) began to harm and harass the Devas to a great extent. Once Āḍiti, the mother of the Devas, complained to Kāśyapa about this. He advised her to take the fast called 'Ṭayovata' fixing the image of Mahāvīra in her heart and that he will take birth through her as Vāmanā and destroy Mahāsēṅh. According to the advice of her husband, Āḍiti began to take Ṭayovata, at the end of which Mahāvīra appeared before her and asked her what her wish was. She told Vinsi, of her grievances and Vinsi consulted her and said "You have invoked me by your prayer and fast for the safety of your sons. So I will enter your womb through the penance of Kāśyapa and take birth as your son and rescue your sons." Mahāvīra dispelled the son of Āḍiti with devotion. By contemplation Kāśyapa knew everything. He infused the energy he had acquired by penance into Āḍiti, who gave birth to a son. The birth took place on the twelfth day of the month of Bhādrapada, in the bright lunar fortnight at the auspicious moment called Abhijit, in the star of Śrāvana. The infant had four hands. While Kāśyapa and Āḍiti were looking on, the infant changed its form and became a dwarf Brahmin boy. The Devas brought presents to the child. The Sun taught him the spell called Sāvitrīmantra. Bhīṣmapati gave the Brahmāstrī. Kāśyapa gave the string worn round the waist. The earth gave the hide of a black antelope. Soma the Vasāntipati gave a rod. Āḍiti gave the cloths and the vessels. The sun, the moon, an umbrella, the seven hermits gave Kuśa-grass. Brahmā gave a waterpot, Sarvasvati gave a rosary and Kubera gave a pot.

At that time, the powerful Mahāśeṅh had brought the three worlds of heaven, earth and Pātāla (the netherworld) under his control. That Asura King performed a horse-sacrifice with the bow of a Bhāgavata Brahmin. Hearing about it Vāmanā started for the place of sacrifice. Mahāśeṅh was performing the sacrifice at a place called Bhṛgukeechaka on the North bank of river Narmadā. The priests who were performing the rites and ceremonies of the sacrifice saw Vāmana coming slowly to the sacrificial hall. They wondered whether it was the Sun, Śanatkumāra or Agni (Fire) coming to see the sacrifice. While they were standing thus, Vāmana with his umbrella, rod and water pot filled with water entered the sacrificial hall. Mahābālī welcomed Vāmana and asked him the purpose of his visit. Vāmana said:

"Oh King! Your words are sweet. Noble Aśura I give me three feet of ground on which I measure with my feet. That is all what I want."

Mahābālī agreed. The teacher-priest Sukra felt some doubts regarding the identity of Vāmana. So he secretly told Mahābālī that the boy Vāmana was none other than Mahāvīruṣu and as such, he should not give any promise. But Mahābālī had already given the promise. He refused to go back upon his words. The priest Sukra got angry at this and cursed Mahābālī thus:

"You boast that you are wise and learned. But you are disobedient, slow-witted and unwise. So all your prophecies will be destroyed."

Though he was cursed, he did not deviate from the path of truth. He gave the promised ground to Vāmana by pouring water on the ground, and then Vāmana was born. The tale of Atanā and Koṭarā also is used in the Purāṇas for Vindhyāvalī the wife of Mahābālī. She came out for the purpose wearing golden ornaments. Mahābālī himself washed the feet of Vāmana, who instantly began to grow and became large beyond imagination. Everybody on the spot was amazed at the unimaginable growth of the Vāmana. He saw the priest, the performances of sacrificial rites, the sacrificial hall, the universe, the elements, the quiescence of the senses, the mind, the individual spirits, and at the feet of the figure the world Rāṣṭrāṇa. He saw the earth on its feet, mountains below the knees, birds on its knees, the Marutūs on his thighs, evening on its clothes, the Prajāpatis on his privates, the noble and mighty asuras on its loins, the sky on its breast, Dharma (duty) in its heart, righteousness and truth on its breast, Mahālakṣaṇa holding lotus on its chest, songs of Śrīman and all other voices in its neck, all the gods beginning with Indra on its hands, the points (directions) on its ears, the other on its head, the clouds on its hair, breaths in its nose, the sun in its eyes, fire on its face, the Vedas in its words, Varaṇa in its tongue, the sea in its teeth, the sky in its eyes, the moon on its breast, the earth in its hand, the underworld at its feet. Thus the figure was seen by Mahābālī. Vāmana had trodden on the whole of the earth, which was completely under the control of Mahābālī, with one foot, filled the whole of the sky with his large body and the four points were filled with his hands. The second step was put on Mahārloka, Jana-loka and Tapo-loka (three worlds). No spot was left in the universe for a third step.

Vāmana said: "You have seen me three feet of ground. I have measured two feet of ground. Show me the place to measure the third step. I have measured the earth with one step and the heaven with the second step. You have seen it. If you cannot keep your promise you had better go down to Pātāla." Bali requested him to place the third step on his head. Vāmana placed his foot on the head of Mahābālī and thrust him down to Pātāla.

Vāmana brought Indra to the spot and anointed him as the ruler of heaven, in the presence of all the gods and hermits. Indra sent Vāmana with the Lokapalas (Indra, Agni, Yama and Varuṇa) in a divine Vāmana to the world of Viṣṇu. (Khagavā Śaṅkara 8).

b) The second story of the incarnation of Vāmana. Dhundhu, an aśura boy, was born to Kaśyapa by his wife Danu. That aśura did penance and pleased Brahmā. He made a request that he should not be killed by Indra and the other gods or anybody else. Brahmā, who was pleased at his penance, gave him the boon he asked. The boy Dhundhu, at the beginning of the fourth Kaliyug, during the period of Hiranyakāśipu, went to heaven and defeating Indra and the other Devas, established his rule there as Indra. The mighty Hiranyakāśipu was travelling on the mountain Mandara as an official under Dhundhu.

The defeated and grief-stricken Devas went to the world of Brahmā and lived there. Dhundhu, who knew the desire of the Devas, entered the Kāliyug and began to rule there. He requested Sukra, the priest and teacher of aśuras, to tell him the means of doing it. Sukra said: "Devidra was enabled to enter the presence of Brahmā, because he had performed one hundred horse-sacrifices. "Hearing this, Dhundhu, with the permission of the teacher Sukra, began to perform sacrifice in the world of Viṣṇu. (Khagavā Śaṅkara 8).

Hearing that Dhundhu had begun the horse-sacrifice, Indra and the Devas trembled with fear and, leaving the world of Brahmā, went to the world of Viṣṇu and prayed for protection. Bhagavān came to know of everything and consorted them and sent them back. After this Mahāvīruṣu took the form of a Vāmana and jumped into the Devakāla and lay asleep like a picture of dry wood. Dhundhu and the hermits saw by chance, Vāmana sinking and coming up in the water. They took the Vāmana-Brahmin out of water and asked him how he had fallen in water. Vāmana replied with shiver: "In the family of Varuṇa there was a Brahmā named Prabhāśa, who was a scholar. I am Gaṇa, the younger of his two sons. After the death of father, I requested my brother to divide the property of our father. My brother quoted several rules and said that I was not entitled to get any portion of my father's wealth. I spoke against him and getting angry he caught me by my hair and threw me into the river. It is a year since I, being not able to swim, began to sink and come up in this river. Thus you have seen me here."
shape of Trivikrama to measure each of the three worlds with a foot. In two steps he measured all the worlds. Vāmana whose body was bigger than Mahāmeru became angry when he did not see place to measure the third step, and fell on Dhundhubi. By this heavy fall there appeared a great cavity thirty thousand yojanas deep. Bhagavān Viśnu took the asura Dhundhubi and threw him into that deep pit with a mighty force, and by a shower of dust he filled the cavity.

India with the Devas occupied the world of Gods. Leaving the asura King in the sea of dust, Bhagavān jumped into the river Kāndri and disappeared. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 78)

VĀMANA II. One of the eight elephants supporting the universe. This elephant was one of the four sons of Tīrwa. Airavata, Suprateekha and Ajaina were the other three. (Brahmaṇda Purāṇa, 3:7:292.) This Vāmana was the conveyance of a famous giant in the array of Ghatotkaca during the battle of Bharatā. (M.B. Bhāgavat Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 56.)

VĀMANA III. A holy place situated on the borders of Kuruksetra. By bathing in the particular spot called Vīmapidā, in this holy place and worshipping Vāmana, one could enter the world of Viṣṇu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 86, Stanza 103.)

VĀMANA IV. A holy place. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 13, that those who worship Hari (Viṣṇu) in this place will never become miserable.

VĀMANA V. A mountain in the Kuruñcaka Island. (Mahābhārata, Bhūṣma Parva, Chapter 12.)

VĀMANAHAṬṬABĀGA. A great Sanskrit poet. It is believed that he lived in the 13th century. He has written several poems and plays. His poetic works are 'Nālābhuvadaya' and 'Raghunāthasaratī'. The former consists of eight Kāṇḍas and the latter, thirty Kāṇḍas. It is stated that Vāmanabhāṭṭabāga was the teacher of Vidyārānya. Besides these two major works, he had written several poems and dramas. Immitating the poem 'Mṛgasāndhā' of Kālidāsa, he had written a poetic work of the same type called 'Mṛgasāndhā'. A minor Drama called Sirgārarābhāsana was written by this Vāmana. It is said that this drama was acted at Vījayanagara. The two plays, named—Pāvpatirāṇaya and 'Kanakarekhā' were also written by the same poet.

VĀMANAPURĀNA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. (See under Purāṇa.)

VĀMANIKAI. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Sālaya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 23.)

VĀMKSU. A river which is famous in the Purāṇas. The low-caste people who lived on the basin of this river, came to the Rājasya (imperial consecration) of Yudhigūra. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 17.)

VĀMŚA. A daughter born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Pradhā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 45.)

VĀMŚAGULMA. A holy bath. The rivers Sona and Narmadā start from this bath. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 9, it is stated that by visiting this holy bath one could obtain the fruits of performing a horse-sacrifice.

VĀMŚAMOLĀKA. A holy place situated on the boundary of Kuruksetra. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 41, that if a bath is taken in this holy place one could bring about the uplift of one's race.

VĀMŚAVALI. (GENEALOGY). The genealogy of the characters in the Purāṇas is given separately at the end of this book.

VĀMYA. Name of the horse of the hermit Vāmadeva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 41.)

VĀNAPARVA. An important Parva in Mahābhārata.

VĀNAPRASHA (Honi). (Householder in the forest). One of the four stages of life. (See under Ārama.)

VĀNARA (MONKEY). Monkeys are given a prominent place in the Purāṇas. Considering them as born in the family of Hanūman, an ardent devotee of Śī Rāma, some worship monkeys. It is mentioned in Vālmiki Ramayana that the monkeys got a prominent place first among the gods and spirits. It is stated in Vālmiki Ramayana, Kāśikādī Kānda, Sarga 34, that the leaders of the monkeys were Bilī, Sugrīva, Arīgada, Mainda, Gāvīya, Dvīdha, Gāvīka, Gāja, Sārabha, Sūryaśka, Hanūman, Vidyumālī, Vīrādha, Sihaśva, Nala, Kumuda, Jambavān, Tatā, Surajāda, Sunetra, Niḥa and Dallīnākṣtra.

The social life of the monkeys, is described as follows in Vālmiki Ramayana, Kāśikādī Kānda, Sarga 33, "Mahāndra mountain, the Himālayas, the Vindhyā mountains, the peaks of Kālīnā and Śveta mountain, Mandara mountain etc are the places mostly inhabited by monkeys. On the mountains shining like the rising sun, on the east of the western ocean also monkeys live. The Monkeys which inhabit black soil are blue in colour. Monkeys with white skin are yellow. Monkeys with black skin are black. Those which live in Mahā Meru and Dhiśma (smoky) mountain have the colour of the rising sun and are drunkards."

VĀNASPATI I. Those trees which produce fruits without flowering are called Vānaspati according to Manusmṛti Chapter 1, Stanza 47. Atī (āl tro) is an example. (Apsāpa phalavaato ye vaśatīyayaya samyakā.)

VĀNASPATI II. One of the seven sons of the King Ghṛtaprastha. (Bhāgavata, Śrīmad-Bhāgavatāmā.)

VĀNAVA. A country famous in the Purāṇas. (Bṛhma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 54)

VĀNAVĀSIKAI. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 58.)

VĀNAYU I. A son born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa of his wife Daśu. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva Chapter 65, Stanza 25, that he was the most prominent of the ten sons of Daśu.

VĀNAYU II. A son born to Urvāsi from Purūravas. The sons of Urvāsi were Ayu, Ḫiṃūr, Anāvaśu, Drūhiśvā Śarau and Vānaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 25.)

VĀNAYU III. A country in ancient India. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 56.

VĀNCULA. A bird. The cry of this bird, is believed to forebode victory. (Vālmiki Ramayana, Aranyān Kānda Sarga 69, Stanza 22.)

VĀNDANA. A hermit mentioned in Rigveda. Once this hermit was pushed into a well by Ayuvas. But he was saved by the Aśvins. (Rigveda, Manjula 1, Anuvāka 1, Śūkta 116.)

VĀNDANA. A river famous in the Purāṇas. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 18.)
VANDI (BANDI, VÅNDINA). A scholar and scientist in the palace of King Janaka. He defeated the hermit Kakasha in an argument and dipped him in water. (For further details see under Aśvāka.)

VARĀHA III

VANDI. See under Vandi.

VANEYU. A King who was the grandson of emperor Puru and the son of Rudrāvya. Vaneyu was born to Rudrāvya by a celestial woman named Mitrakeshī. Ten sons named Vaneyu, Reeyu, Kṣeyu, Kṛṣṇeyu, Śatkiṣeyu, Jaleyu, Tejeyu, Satyeuyu, Dharmeyu and Śyaṭalova were born to this celestial woman. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 8.)

VÅNGA. An important state in ancient India. The present name of this country is Bengal. Several states occur in the Purāṇas about Vånga.

The following are the statements about Vånga given in the Mahābhārata:

(i) Arjuna visited the country during his pilgrimage. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 214, Stanza 9.)
(ii) Bhima sena attacked Vånga. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 23.)
(iii) The Kings of Vånga visited Yudhīṣthira with presents. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 18.)
(iv) Karṇa conquered this country during his regional conquest. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Stanza 6.)
(v) In the Bhārata war the King of Vånga confronted Ghatotkaca and was defeated. (M.B. Bhāma Parva, Chapter 92, Stanza 6.)
(vi) Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa conquered the country of Vånga. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 15.)
(vii) Parāśurāma exterminated the Kaatriyas of Vånga. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 12.)
(viii) The last cast of the sacrificial horse led by Arjuna killed every one of them. (M.B. Álvanecha Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 29.)

VÅṆJULA. See under Vidura II.

VAPUS I. A daughter of Dakṣa. Dharmadeva married her. (Vijaya Puråga, Ādīa, Chapter 7.)

VAPUS II. A celestial maid. She made a futile attempt to hinder the penance of the hermit Durvāsas, and by the curse of the hermit she had to take birth as the daughter of Kundhara by Menakā in the next birth. (Mårkandeya Puråga, 1, 49, 56; 2, 41.)

VAPUSMÅN. Son of Sākrandana, the King of Vidarbha. Dama, a famous King of Dīsta dynasty carried away by stealth Sumanā, the daughter of Cārvamā, the King of Daśārha, in consequence of which Vapumån and Dama became enemies.

Vapumån waited for an opportunity to take revenge and when a convenient moment came, he killed Nārṣyaṇa the father of Dama. Indrācena the mother of Dama told him of his father’s murder and then jumping into the funeral pyre of her husband, she died. Because of grief at the loss of his parents and anger Kṛṣṇa came across him and engaged Vapumån in a fierce battle. He killed Vapumån in the battle and with his blood he made offerings to the spirits of his parents. (Mårkandeya Puråga, 133.)

VAPUSMATI. Daughter of the King of Sindhu. She became the wife of Måruttaka. (Mårkandeya Puråga, 114.)

VAPUŚTAMA. The prominent queen of King Janamejaya. She was the daughter of Śūravamāra, the King of Kāśī. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 2.) Vapumån had two sons, Satāmuka and Sāṃkukaṇā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 86.)

VARADA. A warrior of Subrahmanya (Mahābhārata, Sāya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 64.)

VARADÅNA. A holy place near Dwārakā. It was here that Durvāsas gave Bhagavān Śrī Kṛṣṇa boons (Våra). From that day this became a holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, that those who take bath in this holy place would obtain the fruits of giving thousands of cows as alms.

VARADÅSAKÅMA. A holy place. Those who take bath in this holy place would obtain the fruits of giving a thousand cows as alms. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 35.)

VARĀHA. An ancient hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sāya Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 17, that this hermit stayed in the palace of Yudhīṣthira.

VARĀHĀ II. A holy place in the middle of Kuruksetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 63, Stanza 80, that Mahāviṣṇu stayed in this place for a while in the shape of Varāha (Boar) and that those who bathe in this holy bath would obtain the fruits of performing the sacrificial Agniṣṭoma.

VARĀHĀ III. (Boar). One of the ten incarnations of Mahāviṣṇu. 1) Need for this incarnation. Jaya and Vijaya, two doorkeepers of Mahāviṣṇu showed disrespect towards the famous hermits Sanaika and others who went to visit Mahāviṣṇu. The angry hermits cursed them to take birth as asuras. Accordingly Jaya and Vijaya took birth as the two asuras Hīrānyaka and Hīrānyakaśipu and were born from Prājapati Kaśyapa by his wife Diti. Even their birth itself was inauspicious. Once, while Kaśyapa was carrying on evening worship, his wife was filled with libido. She embraced Kaśyapa. Because she got pregnancy in an inauspicious moment, two asura sons were born. At the time of their birth darkness spread over the whole of the world, and some ill omens were seen. The Devas (gods) trembled.

The older son was called Hīrānyaka and the second son was called Hīrānyakaśipu. As Hīrānyaka grew up he began to quarrel with the Devas. When the fight grew fierce, he picked up the earth in his hands as a ball and went under water. There was left only water. The Devas went to Mahāviṣṇu and prayed to him in order to get the earth back.

At this time Manu Śvāyambhūva, the son of Brahma, was living with his father, looking after his welfare. The father, who was pleased with the services of his son said, “My dear son, you should worship Devi, who will be pleased with your devotion and will bless you. If she is pleased with you, you will become a famous Prājapati.” Hearing the words of Brahma, Śvāyambhūva worshipped Devi with ardent devotion, deep meditation and sacrifice. At that time Jagadambā was pleased. She appeared before him and asked him what boon he wanted. Manu requested that he should be permitted to carry on creation without any obstruction. Devi gave him permission. Manu returned to his father Brahmā and said, "Father, point out to me a solitary place. I will sit there and create subjects by the blessings of Devī." Only when he heard the request of his son, did Brahmā begin to think about the exigency of providing his son with such a place. For, the earth was completely under water. For a long time even Brahmā was being subjected to much inconvenience to carry on creation. Only Bhagavān Adi Nātha and Adi Śiva (Brahma) could do anything in this matter. So Brahmā with the Manus, hermits and others began to meditate on Mahāvisuṣṭa.

2) Incarnation. Instantly the young one of a Boar jumped out of the nose of Brahmā through his breath. That divine figure of Boar stood in the air and began to grow. Within a few moments, it became a colossal being. It grew up as big as an elephant. Soon it became as large as a mountain. Seeing this, Brahmā and the others stood in amazement. The Boar made a grunt in a loud roaring sound. The people of Janaloka, Satyaloka etc. understood that it was the sound of Mahāvisuṣṭa. They raised glory and praise to Bhagavān, who heard all these praises, but without condescending to tell anything, looked at all of them with grace and love, and with Mahāvisuṣṭa's force jumped out of the sea. It was immediately troubled by the names of God Almighty. Varuṇa prayed to him to save him from them. Bhagavān folded his mane and went down to the deep water and made a search for the earth. The Boar walked snuffling and snorting and found out the earth. He slowly lifted it on his tusks and started from there. On the way, the Boar, earth and the water were placed in the surface of water with the earth. He set the earth firm over the water. Thus Brahmā gave Manu a place in the earth which floated on the water like a lotus-leaf, and empowered him to perform creation.

3) Incarnation of Boar again. The goddess Earth, the deity of earth, was pitied by the Boar and fell in love with Mahāvisuṣṭa and embraced him. He embraced her in return. Those mutual embraces continued for one complete Deva-varsa (year of God) and consequently the goddess Earth became tired and weak and unconscious. So the earth slid down a little under water. Bhagavān took the form of a Boar again and lifted the earth to its original place and returned to Varuṇa. (Bhagavāna, Skanda 3; Devī Bhagavata Skanda 5; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 5; Padma Purāṇa, Bhūnikhanda, Chapter 91).

VARĀḤA IV. A mountain near Girivraj, the capital city of Magadha. (Mahābhārata, Sa bhā Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 2).

VARĀḤACA. A serpent born in the family of Dhruvac. This serpent was burned in the sacrificial fire of Janamejaya. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 18).

VARĀḤAKARṆA. A Yakṣa (tiem god). This Yakṣa remains in the palace of Kubera. (Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 13, Stanza 16).

VARĀḤAMBĀ. An asura. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva. Chapter 227, Stanza 92.

VARĀḤA PURĀṆA. See under Purāṇa.

VARĀṆAṆI. A beetle made of jewel. Brahmā had given a boon that only he who fought with this jewel-beetle in his mouth could kill Paśūla Rāvaṇa. This secret was known only to the giants, such as Rāvaṇa, and others. This Varāṇaṇi was kept in an underground cell of a harem near the Kāli temple in the Pātaśāla. The battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa was going on. Hanumān made a fort coiling his tail like a spring and Rāma and Lakṣmana stayed inside this fort. While they were sleeping, Pātaśāla Rāvaṇa made a tunnel under the earth and carried away Rāma and Lakṣmana. Vibhiṣana knew this, only next day morning. Instantly he sent Hanumān to Pātaśāla. In accordance with the advice of Vibhiṣana, Hanumān went directly to the cell in the harem, took Varāṇaṇi and put it in his mouth. Then he fought with Pātaśāla Rāvaṇa and defeated him. Thus with the help of the Varāṇaṇi Hanumān rescued Rāma and Lakṣmana. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kiṇḍa).

VARĀṆAṆI. A river famous in the Purāṇas. It is mentioned in Vāmāna Purāṇa that the river Varāṇa which flowed from the right leg and the river Asī, which started from the left leg of Bhagavān, who lies in contemplation at Prayaśī, are two holy rivers. (See under Varāṇaṇi).

VARĀṆAṆI. A country in ancient Bhārata. It is mentioned Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 51, that the army of the Kauravas had surrounded this country.

VARĀṆAṆI (VARĀṆAṆI). Kāśī. (Before reading the information given here refer to the details given about Kāśī under Kāśī and Divodāsa).

1) The name Vāraṇaṇi. Formerly this place was known as Prayaśī. Later it got the name Vāraṇaṇi and then Kāśī. The name Vāraṇaṇi is originated from two rivers. Bhagavāna Yogāśi, who stays in Prayaśī was born from a portion of Mahāvisuṣṭa. From the right leg of Yogāśi the river Varāṇa started and from his left leg the river Asī started. These two rivers are praised and worshipped all over the world. The temple of Yogāśi is situated in the place between these two rivers. As the place is situated between Vāraṇaṇi and Asī it is called Vāraṇaṇi. (Vāmāna Purāṇa, Chapter 3).

2) Other informations.

(i) Bhima went to Kāśī and took Ambā, Ambikā and Ambalikā, the daughters of the King of Kāśī, to his kingdom by force. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 102, Stanza 3).

(ii) Vāraṇaṇi is a holy place of pilgrimage. By bathing in Kapilkhanda, a holy bath there, and worshipping Śaṅkara, one could obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice Kājasūya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 78).

(iii) The middle part of Vāraṇaṇi is called Avimuktaka. Those who forsake their lives Avimuktaka will obtain heaven. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 79).

(iv) Once Śrī Kaśṇa made Vāraṇaṇi a prey to fire. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 48, Stanza 76).

(v) A very great scholar named Tulādhāra Vaiśāya once lived in Vāraṇaṇi. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 261, Stanza 41).

(vi) Once, in ancient days, Śiva imported to the hermit Jaijiṣu at this place, the eight miraculous attainments such as aśīmā, garīma etc. (M.B. Anvāsuṣāna Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 37).

(vii) Vāraṇaṇi is equal to the capital city of India
VARANAVATA. (Amarāvati). (M.B. Anusāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 16).

(viii) In ancient days a hermit named Samvartta used to come here daily to worship Śiva. It was at this place that the emperor Marutta accepted the hermit Samvartta as his priest. (M.B. Advaśedha Parva, Chapters 6 and 7).

VARANAVATA. The place where Duryodhana built the worship-hall for the Pándavas. It is believed that the modern village Varanavā is the place where this Purānic Varanavata stood. Information about Varanavata found in Mahābhārata, is given below:

(i) Once the ministers of Dhrtrāśra made a consultation about the festival in this city. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 3).

(ii) Varanavata was one of the five villages requested for by the Pándavas, on their return after their life in the forest. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 19).

(iii) Yuyutu, the son of Dhrtrāśra, carried on a battle here for six months. (M.B. Dron Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 30).

VARANGI I. The wife of Vajrāṅga, an asura. (For more details see under Parvatī, Parva 2).

VARANGI II. Wife of Samvartti, a king of the Lunar dynasty. The father of this Varangi was Dravān. A son named Abhiyati was born to Varangi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 14).

VARARUCI. An ancient Indian scholar in astronomy and astrology. (Some details regarding Vararuci are given under Varari).

1) Birth. It is stated in Kaṭhāparivarta, Kaṭhāpariva, that Vararuci was the rebirth of a Gana (spirit of Śiva) named Puspadanta. Once Śiva happened to tell Pārvati some previous stories of the Vidvādharas. Puspadanta eavesdropped and heard everything. Pārvati understood this and caused him to become a man. Accordingly Puspadanta was born in the city of Kaṭhāmbī under the name Vararuci or Katiyāyana. (For details about the curse see under Gunaḍala).

2) Of sharp intelligence. Vararuci was born as the son of the Brahmin Somadatta at Kaṭhāmbī. Agniśika was another name of Somadatta. Vasudattā was the mother of Vararuci. In the previous birth, Vasudatī was a hermit maid. Due to a curse she lost her hermithood and took birth as a woman under the name Vasudatī and became the wife of Somadatta.

As his father died in his childhood, Vararuci was brought up by his mother. She was in great penury after the death of her husband. One day two travellers came to her house. While they were sitting on the veranda, the sound of a conch was heard. Then the mother called Vararuci and said to him, “Son, the dance of Nanda, the friend of your father, is about to begin.” Vararuci requested his mother to let him go to the temple and see the dance so that he might learn it. Hearing this, the guests were amazed. How can one learn dance by seeing only once? That was the doubt in the minds of the travellers. “Vararuci could learn anything by hearing only once”, his mother said. As a test, they taught him a portion from the Vedas. Vararuci repeated the portion to them without any mistake. After this the guests took the boy and showed him the dance and brought him back. The boy performed every item of the dance he saw, before the guests. They were immensely pleased.

3) Getting a teacher. The guests had actually been searching for a boy who could understand anything at the first hearing. There was reason for it. In the great city of Nandarāja, there was a great Brahmin named Sankaravāmī. He had two sons named Varas and Upavas. He had built separate houses. By and by Varas became cruel and wicked and poor. Upavas became learned and wealthy. The rainy season approached. In those days it was a custom for women to make a sweet food of rice flour with sugar and give it to cruel Brahmins. It was to prevent the extreme cold in the winter and the extreme heat in the summer from affecting them severely. The wife of Upavas made this sweet food and gave it to Varas. When he brought it home, his wife scolded him. Varas felt very sorry because of his foolishness. He gave up all his desires and began to worship Kumārasvāmī. Kumārasvāmī was pleased with him and blessed him with all kinds of knowledge. Kumārasvāmī had ordered him to teach all of this knowledge to one who could learn it first hearing. Soon that day onwards Varas had been waiting for a disciple who could learn at first hearing.

During this period there lived two Brahmins named Devavāmī and Kānvaṇḍha in the city of Vetaśpura. They were friends. A son was born to each of them. The son of Devavāmī was named Vyāli. The name of the son of Kānvaṇḍha was Varasi. Vyāli had lost his childhood, his father died. Seeing their grief the father of Indradatta left the country. Both the boys, having nobody to look after them, went to perform penance before Subrahmanyaṭvaṃī. Subrahmanya ordered them in their sleep to go to Varas in Patalbī, the city of King Nanda, and to learn every thing from him. The boys immediately went to the city of King Nanda and enquired about the teacher Varas. The people told them that Varas was a fool. They were sorry to hear it. Still they did not turn back. They reached the house of Varas, and entered the house which was the abode of rats and bats, the walls of which were crumbling due to rain, it had not been thatched for a long time. The courtyard was full of Cassia plants. Inside the house, here and there on the floor, Cypresus-grass was growing. The wife of Varas who was in utter penury stood up and welcome them. She told them about her husband. “He is waiting for a disciple who would learn everything at first hearing,” Vyāli and Indradatta agreed to bring such a disciple and they started on a journey in search of such a boy. They were the two travellers who came to the house of Vararuci.

Vyāli said all about these things to the mother of Vararuci. She was very glad and said, “Everything fits well. At the birth of my son, an ethereal voice said: ‘At first hearing he will learn everything. He will learn everything from the teacher Varas. He will publish works in grammar and astronomy.’ If he has interest in good things he will get the name Vararuci. So I had been thinking how and where to find this teacher Varas.”

Next morning, with the permission of his mother, Vararuci started for the house of Varas, with Vyāli and Indradatta. They reached the house of Varsa. Next morning they smeared and purified the floor and the three sincere and simple disciples sat facing the east. The teacher Varsa recited to them the diviné spell 'Om', and instantly all the Vedas and the ancillaries of Vedas made their appearance. The teacher commenced teaching. The three disciples learned, Vararuci hearing only once, Vyali hearing twice and Indradatta hearing thrice. Hearing these divine recitations and repetitions which were not to be heard anywhere else, Brahmins crowded to the place. King Nanda of Pataliputra praised the teacher Varsa and sent him plenty of wealth and conferred on him ranks and privileges.

4) Marriage. Vararuci learned everything from the teacher Varsa. He went with his friends once to see the Indrana Reswara. There he met Upakṣa, the daughter of Upavarsa and fell in love with her. That night he did not sleep. At last he slowly closed his eyes. A divine woman clad in white garments appeared before him. It seemed to him that the woman said to him, "You need not worry in this matter. Upakṣa is your wife in the present birth. She will surely come to you. She will be bidden to come by your body." Vararuci woke up. Next day the elders came to know of this, and gave her in marriage to Vararuci.

5) Vararuci becoming a Minister. Education was finished. It was time for Vyali and Indradatta to give presents to the teacher Varsa. The teacher demanded a crore of Vilkas (a Venetian ducat used for neck-ornament). They were not having so much wealth. They went with Vararuci to Nanda, the King of Ayodhya, and the Brother-in-law of Vararuci. When they reached Ayodhya, they heard that the King had just died. Indradatta said, "By the practice of contemplation I shall enter the body of the King. Vararuci should come and beg money of me. Till my return Vyali must keep my body." The spirit of Indradatta immediately entered the King's body. The dead King rose up. People were struck with wonder. They celebrated a festival. Vyali kept the body of Indradatta within a temple. Vararuci went to the presence of the King and begged for a crore of Vilkas. The King called his minister Sakatāla and told him to give Vararuci a crore of Vilkas. Sakatāla went to Vararuci and said, "Your friend has entered the body of the dead King. He is telling me to give you a crore of Vilkas. The King is out of his senses. Don't obey the words of the King. You should obey the words of your friend." Vararuci said, "My son, all of us cannot live with so little food. The most intelligent one among us should live by eating the whole food, to take revenge on the Yoda Nanda. Who will do so?"

Sons:—We don't think that we are powerful to do that. So you must live, father!

So Sakatāla ate the whole food and lived while his son, one by one, died of hunger before his eyes. Sakatāla sat in the middle of the Skeletons with the sole purpose of taking revenge. Vyali gave the present to the teacher and went home.

Vararuci and Vararuci lived as king and minister.

b) Loss of ministership. By and by Indradatta had fallen into bad ways. The subjects were beset with famine. The people hated the king and the minister. They made a cry to bring Sakatāla back. They obtained the permission of the king and brought Sakatāla out of the dungeon Sakatāla knew that so long as Vararuci is alive, he could do nothing to the King Yoga Nanda. So he decided to wait for another opportunity, and accepted an office under Vararuci. One day Yoga Nanda went out for a walk. He saw in the Ganges the palm of a hand with five fingers. He called Vararuci and asked him what the sight was. Vararuci showed two fingers to that direction. Immediately the palm of the hand disappeared. The King was agitated at this and asked him for its meaning. He said, "The meaning of showing fingers was that if five men unite together, they could accomplish anything I showed two fingers, to mean that if two men unite together they also could achieve anything." At this reply the king was much pleased and Sakatāla felt miserable at the intelligence of Vararuci.

On another occasion the King saw his wife looking at a Brahmin guest through the window. He got angry and ordered that Brahmin to be killed. When that Brahmin was being taken to the scaffold, a dead fish, placed for sale, laughed loud. The king asked Vararuci for its reason. Saying that he had to consider about it before giving a reply, he went out and meditated upon Sara-vati Devi appeared and told him, "If you climb up to the top of this palm tree and sit there to night you will understand why the dead fish laughed." Vararuci did as he was told. A fierce giantess came there with her young ones. The children began to ask her for food. The giantess told them that they would get the flesh of a Brahmin next day, and that he was not killed that day because the dead fish had laughed. Then she asked her why the dead fish laughed. The giantess said, "The wives of the kings are not chaste. In all harems men live in the guise of women. Without stopping this the king was going to kill an innocent Brahmin. That is why the dead fish laughed." Vararuci, who heard this conversation, got down when the giantess was gone. He went to the king and told him why the fish laughed. The king made a sudden search in the harems. He found out some men in the dress of women. The king honoured Vararuci and released the Brahmin. One day an artist who drew portraits, came to the palace. He drew a portrait of the king and the queen and placed it before the king. The picture was life-like. The king gave the artist several presents. On the next day he died. The artist died in the bed-room of the king. He saw the picture on the wall. The picture was beautiful. Still, considering the appearance of each part of her body the queen ought to have a mole on her loin. Vararuci put that mole in the picture. When Vararuci had gone the king entered room and saw the mole in the picture. The king asked his servant, who that person was who had put that mole in the picture. He replied that it was Vararuci. The king thought that Vararuci had nocturnal connections with the queen. Perhaps it was in this way that Vararuci found out men in the dress of women. The king called Sakaṭāla to him and told him to kill Vararuci secretly. Sakaṭāla felt pity on Vararuci and hid him in a place. Vararuci told Sakaṭāla, "No body can kill me. My friend is a giant. He will come to me the moment he think of him. If I tell him he will swallow the whole world." When he heard this, Sakaṭāla desired to see the giant. Vararuci thought of him and the giant appeared. Sakaṭāla was terribly afraid of the giant. Vararuci made him disappear. Sakaṭāla asked him how he got the friendship of the giant. Vararuci replied, "While you were in the dungeon, a city chief was disappearing daily from this city. The king asked me to find out the reason. One night, while I was walking through the city, I saw this giant. I asked him, "Who is the most beautiful woman in this city?" He replied, "Whoever falls in love with a woman, to him, that woman is the most beautiful. You who do not know this principle, are a fool." The giant had not found a woman who could defeat him. I am glad of it. The moment you think of me I will come and help you." Saying this the giant disappeared. Thereafter we became friends.

Sakaṭāla felt great respect for Vararuci. Hiranyagupta, the son of Yoga Nanda, went for hunting. His horse ran fast and he was separated from his army and got into a steep forest far away. He ate some fruits and plums and got on a tree to rest for the night. At that time a lion charged a bear, which climbed on the same tree. The prince trembled with fear. The bear said, "Do not fear. I am your friend." Both talked for a while and became fast friends. Shortly, the prince began to sleep. The lion asked the bear to push that man down. The bear said that he would not deceive his friend. The disappointed lion sat under the tree. Then the bear jumped and Hiranyagupta sat awake. The lion asked the prince to push the bear down. Thinking that he could save his life by complying with the request of the lion, he pushed the bear down. Fortunately the hold of the bear was firm and so it did not fall. The bear cursed Hiranyagupta. "May you become mad." The king was very sorry when his son returned a mad man. The king repented that he had killed Vararuci. For this was the time when the king needed him most. Sakaṭāla went to the presence of the king and said that Vararuci was still alive. In accordance with the order of the king, Sakaṭāla brought Vararuci. The king showed him his mad son. By the blessing of Sarasvatī, Vararuci understood that the prince had deceived his friend, and informed the king of what had happened. Immediately the prince was cured of his madness. Yoga Nanda asked Vararuci, how he knew the cause of the madness of the prince. He replied, "A man of intelligence can understand anything by symptoms and inference." He also said that in this way he knew about the mole of the queen. When the king heard this he took down his head.

After this Vararuci left the palace. He did not stop to accept the favours of the king. Nor did he pay any heed to the compulsion of the king to stay. He reached his house. Everybody who saw Vararuci began to cry. Not knowing the reason, he stood dumfounded. Upakotā got into a fire and his mother died of broken heart. The grief-stricken Vararuci went to the forest for penance.

After the Sakaṭāla waited for an opportunity to bring Indradatta (Yoga Nanda) down. Once he had been walking out side the city when he saw a Brahmin digging a pit. Sakaṭāla asked him why he was digging the pit. He replied, "I stumbled on this Darbha grass. So I am rooting it out." Sakaṭāla resolved to make use of this Brahmin to achieve his purpose. His name was Cānapya. Sakaṭāla took Čānapya to the palace. A ceremony of offerings to the manes was being conducted in the Palace. Another Brahmin named Subandhu also came there. The king ordered Čānapya (first meal) to be given to Subandhu. Čānapya trembled with fury. At that time his lock of hair was loosened. He took a vow that only after purifying his anger by killing Yoga Nanda within seven days, would he tie up his lock. Čānapya began practising sorcery against the king. The king caught burning fever and died on the seventeenth day. Sakaṭāla inquired about Hiranyagupta. After Sakaṭāla made Candragupta, the son of the real Nanda who died earlier, the king. Making Čānapya his minister, Sakaṭāla went for penance.

7) Suras. See under Pakkanār.

8) The end. Vararuci began to perform penance in the Vindhyā mountain. At that time a brahmin came to the hermitage of Vararuci. He informed Vararuci of the death of Yoga Nanda. Thinking about the pleasures of the world, he began to walk through the Vindhyā mountain when he saw the devil called Kānabhitī. Telling everything to the devil, Kānabhitī, Vararuci started for Badarayānīa to discard his body. On the way he saw a hermit who lived on water alone. In the meanwhile his hunger was cut with the tip of Bāmbha grass and blood oozed from the wound. Vararuci, by his attainments, changed this blood into the juice of a pot-herb. The hermit cried out "Oh, I have become a man of attainments." With a laugh Vararuci said "You have not yet overcome your egoism. I did so to test you. First of all you must overcome your egoism and become wise." After saying this Vararuci went to Badarayānīa and reached there. He did penance there and Devi appeared. According to her advice he made a fire by consumption and burned his body in it. Then Vararuci became the old Pu-padanta and went to the presence of Śiva.

VARASTRI. A sister of Bhāspati. The Vasu named Prabhās married Varasti. This woman was an expounder of the Vedas, pervaded all the creations by the power of harmony with the Supreme Spirit. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 60, Stanza 96: Vāyu Purāṇa, 84, 15).

VARATANTU. The preceptor of a hermit called Kautis. (See under Kautis).

VARATANU. A king of the Kuru. Because of his sinful deeds in the previous birth he was denied the happiness of getting children in the next birth. In the rebirth his name was Śrīdhara. He lived with his wife Prabhāvati for a long time, but did not get children. When the hermit Vyasa came to his palace once, the King asked him for the reason of his remaining childless. Vyaśa replied, "Oh King, hear why you have only one wife and why you do not get children. In the previous birth you had been a brahmin named Varat-tanu. Your wife was called Saśkari. When both of you were going somewhere once, you happened to see a low-caste child falling into water. Without paying any heed to it, you went on your way. The child was drowned.
Though both of you were taken in royal families due to the several good deeds of yours, you have become childless because of that one sinfull act."
According to the instruction of Vyaśa, he gave Brahmins alms of gold, clothes, oxen, pumpkin etc. and performed Bāla vrata, the rite for the sake of children.
Thus he got remission of his sin. Within a year he got a son loved and respected by everyone. That handsome prince became an emperor who came to be the founder of a dynasty. (Padma Purāṇa, Brahma Khaṇḍa, Chapter 6).

VARATRI. One of the four sons of Śuka. The other three were, Pṛthuśri, Bhradāngras and Rājata.
Devedendra killed them because they were against sacrifice. It is stated in Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa that after a while from the severed heads of these sons date palm trees grew up.

wife Mitraśūla. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

VARAṆYA. One of the seven sons of Bhigu. The seven sons of Bhigu were Ceyavan, Suci, Auruva, Sinra Vajrāśrama, Savaṇa, and Varaṇya. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 126).

VARGĀ. A celestial maid. There is a story in Mahābhārata, Adī Parva, Chapter 220, describing how Vargā and her friends were changed into crocodiles and had to live in water for a long time.
Once there lived an 'aparaś' (celestial maid) named Vargā in Devāranya. She had four friends called Saurabha, Śantī, Bhrigū and Lāañśa. Once they were going to the house of Kuheera their patron. On the way they saw a hermit. They saw the whole forest shining with the radiance of the power of penance of the hermit. They decided to entice the hermit somewhere. With this intention they entered his hermitage. Seeing their dalliance and co-quetry, the hermit got angry and cursed them to become crocodiles for a hundred years. They implored him with tears, for liberation from the curse. The hermit told them that in due course a noble man would come and get them out of water and that then they would obtain their original form. They walked towards a lake.

On the way they saw Nārada. They told him everything. He told them, "On the coast of the southern ocean there are five tīrthas (holy baths) known as Agniya, Sahubhādra, Pañcoma, Kārṇandama and Suprassana. You may go to these lakes and live there as crocodiles one in each. In due course Arjuna, the son of Pādu will come and redeem you." According to the words of Nārada the five celestial maids walked to the south and reached the Paścataṇtra (the five holy baths) and each of them entered a lake as a crocodile. After this nobody dared to live near these holy baths. After some time Arjuna started on his pilgrimage. He passed through many places and reached the Paścataṇtra. He enquired why the place was forsaken by people. The herdsmen told him that there was a crocodile in each of the five baths and that they would eat anybody who got into the bath. Arjuna got into a lake. Immediately a crocodile came and caught hold of him. With great difficulty he dragged it out of the lake. Instantly the crocodile changed into a beautiful damsel. The celestial maid Vargā told the amazed Arjuna her story and she added that her four friends were lying in the neighbouring four lakes. Arjuna reedeemed every one of them. After this, Vargā and her friends went to Devāranya and Arjuna to Maṇḍāla. From that day onwards the five tīrthas came to be known as Nārāśīthas.

VARUṆA I. One of the eight guardians of the quarters.

1) Birth. Varuṇa was the son of Prajapati, Kātyāya born of Aditi. He was one of the twelve sons of Aditi. So he is considered to be one of the twelve Ādiyās (Sons of Aditi). The twelve Ādiyās are Bhātā, Aryanā, Mitra, Śākta, Varuṇa, Amā, Bhaga, Vivasvān, Parā, Savitā, Tva-ta and Visūnu. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 15).

These twelve Ādiyās were the twelve Devas (gods) known as Tūṣisthis in the Manusmṛti of Manu Cākṣuma. A statement occurs in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amā 1, Chapter 15, that when Viṣṇu Vaiṣṇava Manuvarata was about to begin after the end of Cākṣuma Manuvarata, the famous Tūṣisthis united together and took birth as the sons of Kātyāya.

2) Kingship of the waters. In Kṛta yuga the Devsa approached Varuṇa and said to him. You must be the lord of all the waters, as Indra is our protector. You can live in the heart of the ocean. All the rivers in the world, and the ocean which is their husband will obey you. You will wax and wane along with Candra (Moon). Varuṇa agreed to comply with their request. All of them anointed Varuṇa as the King of the waters. (M.B. Śatā Parva, Chapter 47).

3) The Guardian of the quarters. Brahmā appointed Varuṇa as the guardian of the western zone. Viṣṇu anointed Varuṇa once did penance before Brahmā, and when Brahmā appeared before him, he made a request that he should be appointed as one of the guardians of the quarters. Brahmā replied, "I have already selected Indra, Varuṇa and Yama as guardians of the points. I was thinking who, the fourth, should be, when you came. So from this day onwards, Indra shall be the guardian of the East, Yama that of the South, Varuṇa, that of the West and you Viṣṇu shall be the guardian of the North." After saying this, Brahmā disappeared. Thus Varuṇa became the guardian of the West. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

4) Family. Varuṇa had several wives and children. Prominent among them were Gauri and Varuṇini. Mention is made about the sons Suvra, Vandi and Vaśiṣṭha and daughter Varunī. Čāṇāni was another wife of Varuṇa. Prajapati Bhūru, who died in the sacrifice of Dakṣa took birth as the son of Varuṇa and Čāṇāni. Devī Jyestha, the daughter of Priest Sukra was another wife of Varuṇa. The children of Jyestha were Bala, Surā the Sunandini and Adharmaka the destroyer of the elements. The semen of Varuṇa fell on Vāsūkika (White-ant-hill) from which the great hermit Vāsūkika was born. Besides them, Dakṣasavarnī, the ninth Manu was the son of Varuṇa. Puṣkara was another son of Varuṇa. The handsome Puṣkara was received as husband by the daughter of Soma (Candra). Vandi, who was defeated by the hermit Āstivakra at the palace of Janaka was the son of Varuṇa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Stanza 9; Adi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 32; Adi Parva, Chapter 99, Stanza 3; Vana Parva, Chapter 134, Stanza 24; Vāmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakānta Sarga 17, Stanza 13; Vāmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakānta, Sarga 46, Stanza 36).

5) Carrying away Utāthya's wife. Utāthya, the daughter of Soma (Moon) was extremely beautiful. Soma gave her in marriage to the hermit Utāthya. Varuṇa carried her away. Utāthya got angry and drank up the ocean dry Varuṇa returned Bhadrā to Utāthya. (For further details see under Utāthya).

6) Theft of Varuṇa's cow by Kātyāya. Kātyāya once decided to perform a sacrifice. He made all preparations. But he did not get the required cow at the stipulated time. So he got the Hāmodhena of Varuṇa by theft and began to perform the yagā (sacrifice). Varuṇa knew this. Instantly he went to Kātyāya and demanded his cow. But Kātyāya refused to return the cow. Varuṇa complained to Brahmā, who sent for Kātyāya and asked him about the cow and both Brahmā and Varuṇa cursed Kātyāya that he who had taken the cow by stealth would take birth as a cowherd in Ambādi. (For further details see under Kātyāya and Nandagopa).

VASĪṢṬHA. A hermit who was the son of Brahmā.

1) The three births of Vasiṣṭha. Vasiṣṭha with the radiance of Brahmā, is very famous in the Purāṇas. He had three births.

2) First birth.

a) Birth. Vasiṣṭha is one of the mental sons of Brahmā. This is the first birth of Vasiṣṭha.

"Nārada was born from the lap, Dakṣa was born from the right thumb, Vasiṣṭha from the breath (prāṇa) Bhṛgu from the chin, Kratu from the hand of Brahmā." - this birth, Arundhati was the wife of Vasiṣṭha. Arundhati was known by the name Urjā also. There is a Purānic story behind the marriage of Vasiṣṭha and Arundhati.

In her previous birth the name of Arundhati was Sandhyā. She was born from the passion of Brahmā. As soon as she was born she grew up. Seeing her exquisite beauty the Prajāpatis were filled with excitement. Even Brahmā, her father, was excited at her sight. Śiva, who understood this, tried to seduce Sandhyā. Sandhyā was ashamed. Even after Śiva, Brahmā, Prajāpatis and the others had gone their ways, she remained there blaming her birth. She said to herself: "The moment I was born, I grew up to be a young woman. My father and my brothers looked at me with desire. I also looked at them excitedly. As an atonement for this sin, I will burn my body in fire. I do not want to be a body desired by my father and brothers. With this decision she went to the mountain Candrabhāgā, which is the source of the river Candrabhāgā, and began to perform penance. Brahmā who came to know of this, was filled with pity and sent Vasiṣṭha to her. He went there in the form of a Brahmin boy and taught her how to perform penance. After the return of Vasiṣṭha she continued the severe penance to Viśnu. Her penance became the subject of talk and wonder everywhere. After a short while Viśnu appeared before her sitting on his conveyance Garuḍa. She praised Viṣṇu. Viṣṇu was pleased with her and asked what her desire was. She said: "Lord, creatures should not be sexually excited at their birth. They should have sexual desire only when they are grown up. The three worlds must know that I am chaste. In all my births I should not look at anybody except my husband with sexual desire. The man who looks at me with sexual desire should lose his manliness and become a hermaphrodite." Mahāvīru agreed to her request. It was from that day onwards that sexual desire appeared in creatures in their grown-up stage only, after they have passed the stages of infancy and childhood. Mahāvīru told her: "It is preordained that this body of yours will be burnt in fire. Medhātithi, (Medhātithi), the son of Priyavrata is performing the great sacrifice called Yajōṣisūna which is to be completed in twelve years. It is coming to a close. There is no doubt that Barīkā will come to the fire. That great hermit’s sacrifice is being performed in the basin of this river Candrabhāgā. Unseen by the hermits, you should go there and get into the fire. Because of my blessing you will be born from that fire as the daughter of Medhātithi. You should go into the fire thinking of him whom you want to be your husband in this birth."

Mahāvīru touched Sandhyā with the tip of his finger. Sandhyā walked to the sacrificial hall. Seen by none, she got down into the fire. She was burnt in the blazing fire. By the order of Viṣṇu, the God fire placed Sandhyā who was burnt in the sacrificial fire, in the Solar region. The sun divided that body into two and placed them in his chariot. The upper portion became the Pārāśananda (dārā) between the middle of the night and the lower portion became the Sāyantana Sandhyā (the evening midnight). At the end of the sacrifice, from the centre of the sacrificial fire a girl, like the flame of fire rose up. Medhātithi took that child in his hands and called her Arundhati. The child became famous throughout the three worlds, as the name stood for the principle that on no reason whatsoever righteousness be obstructed. (Rohita means obstruction. So Arundhati is one who cannot be obstructed). In some other Purāṇas Arundhati is given as the daughter of Prajāpati Kardama and Devahūti.

b) Marriage. Arundhati grew up in the hermitage of Medhātithi. Candrabhāgā holy bath which was the playfield of Arundhati, is even today, known as Arundhatīthī. Arundhati became five years of age. Brahmā saw her when she was playing on the ground after having taken her bath. At the instruction of Brahmā, Arundhati was entrusted to Sāvitrī and Bahulā for education. Sāvitrī is the wife of the Sun. Arundhati lived in Mānasī lake with Sāvitrī, Gāyatrī, Bahulā, Sarasvatī, Durgā and such other celestial women and completed her education. One day Arundhati happened to see Vasiṣṭha who was shining with radiance. They fell in love with each other. Parents and relatives and the elders came to know of this. Sāvitrī persuading Arundhati blessed her to become the wife of Vasiṣṭha. The marriage of Arundhati with Vasiṣṭha was conducted in the presence of the Gods.

c) Sons. Seven sons, named Cīrāketa, Purucis, Viraca, Mitra, Ullhana, Vastubhrīdhāna and Dyumati were born to Vasiṣṭha by Arundhati. All seven of them were Brahmās.

d) The meaning of the name Vasiṣṭha and Arundhati. The meaning of the name Vasiṣṭha is given by Vasiṣṭha himself as follows:

I am known as Vasiṣṭha for two reasons. I am Vasaṃnā. The Sautrīs say that Air, Earth etc. are Vasa. I have become Vasiṣṭha because I have brought under control the Vasaus beginning with Anīma (the power of reducing the body to an atom). See what Arundhati herself says, about the meaning of the name Arundhati.

“I consider mountains, earth and heaven as elements in which I live, only after considering my husband as the element in which I live. My husband is the first and foremost element in my life. Moreover, I conform (anuṛdocha) with the mind of my husband. So know me as Arundhati.”

e) Cauṣalya’s fidelity to Arundhati. The saptasātras (the seven hermits) once left Arundhati alone in a forest and went to the Mountain Himalayas to gather fruits and roots. In those days, due to severe summer, the earth became a wilderness. So the hermits lived in the Himalayas. Arundhati all alone did penance in the forest. On one day Śiva took the form of a Brahmin and going near Arundhati requested her for alms. She replied: “There are only Zīrīphus fruits here, and nothing else to eat.” The Brahmin asked her to boil them. She placed the pot of Zīrīphus fruits on the oven and sat there hearing the good stories told by the Brahmin. Thus without thinking about her hunger or thirst she sat there for twelve years hearing the stories narrated by the Brahmin. When the hermits returned from Himalayas, Śiva assumed his original form and said, “Hermit! This woman, sitting in the hermitage, has acquired more penance than you have acquired in the Himalayas. Good woman! What boon do you want?” She requested that that place should be known as the holy place called Padaarpanavā (cooking of Zīrīphus fruits). Śiva allowed it. Even today that place is considered a holy place.

f) Death. When so many devas were dead at the sacrifice of Dakṣa, Vasiṣṭha also died along with them. Arundhati followed her husband. After death both of them entered the firmament and became two stars.

g) Sṛng Arundhati. In India there is a custom of choosing the women, the star Arundhati. Arundhati is the first of the women who took only one husband in her life. The meaning of this custom is this that this mentality of Arundhati should be acquired by the married women of India. Moreover, if the star stands in front of the star Vasiṣṭha, it is considered to forebode calamities in the world. (Kālīkā Purāṇa).

ii) Second birth.

General information. Vasiṣṭha who died at the sacrifice of Dakṣa took birth again from the sacrificial fire of Bṛhadā. Akrāmālī was the rebirth of Arundhati. So, in some Purāṇas, both are shown as one. This birth of Vasiṣṭha was terminated by the curse of emperor Nimi of the Ilaśāku dynasty. (For details see under Nimi).

(iii) Third birth. In the third birth Vasiṣṭha was born from a pot as the son of the Brahmin Brahmā. Akrāmālī was the birth of Arundhati. The two births were the brother of Agastya. (For detailed story see under Agastya, para 2). In this birth the wife of Vasiṣṭha was an Arundhati, who was the sister of Narada. Thus according to the Purāṇas, it took three births for Vasiṣṭha to complete his life. It is difficult to ascertain, in which particular birth, a particular story, stated in the Purāṇas, took place. It is probable that a large number of episodes might have taken place in the second and third births.

Stories connected with the life of Vasiṣṭha are given below:

2) Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra. Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra were two hermits who quarreled with each other throughout their lives. The quarrel between Vasiṣṭha a Brahmin hermit and Viśvāmitra a royal hermit, is given below:

(i) Reason for the enmity. Viśvāmitra was a King who cared much for the welfare of his subjects. Once he went with his army to hunt. He became tired by the hunt and reached the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha who welcomed them with hospitality. He told them that food would be ready when they returned. The King and his men bathed quickly and when they returned, a grand feast was ready for so many thousands. The King was in great perplexity. After the meal Viśvāmitra approached the hermit Vasiṣṭha and asked him how he got such a grand feast ready. He replied that the cow Kāmadhenu in his hermitage was capable of granting any wish. The King desired to have the cow. He asked the hermit to exchange the cow for a score of ordinary cows. Vasiṣṭha did not agree to this. Viśvāmitra said that the noble and superior things of the country belonged to the King. The hermit did not agree to that also. Finally Viśvāmitra was about to take away the cow by force. Thus the quarrel began. Understanding the wish of Vasiṣṭha Kāmadhenu held her horns and raised up and stood as a fierce and cruel figure. From the various limbs of the cow so many thousands of warriors jumped out and a fierce battle ensued in which the hundred sons and the huge army of Viśvāmitra met with defeat. At last Viśvāmitra tried to launch a direct attack against Vasiṣṭha. But the arrow of Viśvāmitra was charmed by Vasiṣṭha and when they touched the body of Vasiṣṭha, at last the King admitted that the power of the penance of a Brahmin hermit was the real power and he admitted defeat from Vasiṣṭha. From that day onwards a deep-seated hatred against Vasiṣṭha arose in the heart of Viśvāmitra. He left the administration of his Kingdom in the hands of his relatives and went to the south where he erected a hermitage and began to do severe penance. He acquired great powers of penance and became a royal hermit of immense attainments and the quarrel between the two great hermits Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra began. (Vaṃśika Rāmāyana, Bāla Kāṇḍa, 5 sargas from 51).

(ii) Second confrontation. The next conflict between the two hermits was due to the king Tvaṣṭru of the Solar dynasty. Tvaṣṭru wanted both to remain after a battle Vasiṣṭha tried to discourage the king. Viśvāmitra took up the matter. He began to perform a sacrifice to lift up the king bodily to heaven, and Tvaṣṭru began to rise higher and higher. But Indra did not allow him to enter bodily into the heaven. At last Vāśyāmitra, by the power of his penance, created an artificial heaven midway between the heaven and the earth and placed Trānakū in that heaven. With this the gap between the two hermits widened. (For more details see under Trānakū).

(iii) Third confrontation. By the blessing of Varuna, a son named Lohita was born to Harisundara. He had promised Varuna to sacrifice his son Lohita. But Lohita came to know of this and left the palace. Harīsundara was in a difficult situation. Vasiṣṭha advised him to buy a son and to sacrifice him. Accordingly a Brahman boy named Sūnaṭepha was bought. Vasiṣṭha decided to sacrifice him. Vāśyāmitra said that he could not be sacrificed. Harisundara was loved by Vasiṣṭha. So Vāśyāmitra tried to harm him as far as possible. Harisundara fell in the trap of Vāśyāmitra and lost his country, city, wife, everything and had to live in funeral places. (For detailed story see under Harīsundara.)

(iv) Fourth confrontation. Vasiṣṭha did not like the deception practiced by Vāśyāmitra, on Harisundara. Once Vāśyāmitra and Vasiṣṭha met in the forest by chance. Vasiṣṭha snatched Vāśyāmitra, who had only a child with him, threw him "in the air and said, 'Why do you put the truthful Harisundara into such misery? You are deceiving him as the stork sits in meditation and deceives the fish. So you will become a stork.'"

Vāśyāmitra looked at the hermit Vasiṣṭha who had cursed him and said, "So long as I am a stork you shall be a kingfisher. Thus they cursed each other, each of them become birds and be in place of Mānasa lake and each building a nest on the top of the trees began to live there. There was nothing but quarrel between the two birds daily. Both pecked and scratched each other to such an extent that they were covered with bleeding wounds. They looked like an erythrina tree filled with flowers. Everybody who saw them was filled with sadness. Thus they lived there for a long time. Once the kind-hearted Brahma, the father of Vasiṣṭha, saw their sorry plight. Having pity on them he came there with the other gods and delivered them both from the curse. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

(v) Fifth confrontation. Vāśyāmitra called the river Sarasvatī and asked her to bring Vasiṣṭha along with her current. Sarasvatī did not like the idea. Still, hearing the curse of Vāśyāmitra she agreed to do so. The river-basin where Vasiṣṭha had been performing penance was pulled down by the current of the river, and taking Vasiṣṭha in the current carried him down. Sarasvatī did not wish to leave Vasiṣṭha at the mercy of Vāśyāmitra. So when they reached the door of the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha, she carried him further down in a swift current. Vāśyāmitra got angry and cursed Sarasvatī. "Let blood flow through the river." With that the water of Sarasvatī changed to blood-colour. The gods were perplexed at this. They all gathered on the banks of the river. In the presence of the gods, both the hermits came to a compromise. Thenceforth that place became a holy tributary under the name Vasiṣṭhāpavāśā. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 92).

3) Other details

(i) Vasiṣṭha changed his a woman, into a man. (For details see under IIA 1).

(ii) Wives and children. Seven sons Raja, Qotra, Oṛḍhvaśāhā, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Sukra, were born to Vasiṣṭha by his wife Urja. These seven pure and just persons were the Saptarṣis (seven hermits) in the first Manvantara. (Vaiṣṇav Purāṇa, Amrīta 2, Chapter 10).

(Raja, Gātra, Oṛḍhvaśāhā Savana, Aśagu, Śukra (and Sutapas are the name given in Agnī Purāṇa, Chapter 20, of the sons of Vasiṣṭha born by his wife Urja).

(iii) Vasiṣṭha and emperor Nimi. (See under Nimi)

(iv) The Kṛṣṇa of Vasiṣṭha. There are ten Manḍalas in Kṛṣṇa, of which the seven Manḍalas was composed by the sages of Vasiṣṭha's hermitage.

(v) Cursing Rāvana. Once Rāvana asked Vasiṣṭha to come as his teacher and teach him the Vedas and the other scriptures. Vasiṣṭha did not comply with his request. The angry Rāvana got Vasiṣṭha a captive. But the King Kusuvalayāvā of the Solar dynasty, liberated Vasiṣṭha from captivity. The rescued Vasiṣṭha cursed Rāvana. You and your family will be exterminated by those born of the Solar dynasty." (Kambha Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

(vi) Vasiṣṭha jumped into the river. See under Adṛṣṭya.

(vii) In uniting Tapati and Sāvanārāṇa Vasiṣṭha played a very prominent part. (See under Tapati).

(viii) It was Vasiṣṭha who put a stop to the sacrifice for the extermination of the Rākjása (giants) performed by Parāśara. (See under Parāśara).

(ix) Vasiṣṭha and Mucukunda. See under Mucukunda.

(xii) The cow of Vasiṣṭha was stolen by the eight Vasus. See under Aṣṭavāna.

(xiii) Vasiṣṭha was the teacher of Bhīṣma. (Mahābhārata Aḍi Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 45).

(xiv) Vasiṣṭha participated in the Birth festival of Arjuna. (M.B. Aḍi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 51).

(xv) Vasiṣṭha tried to commit suicide. (See under Adṛṣṭya).

(xvi) Vasiṣṭha shone in the assembly of Brahma. (M.B. Sāhā Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 19).

(xvii) in the Bhārata-battle an effort was made by Vasiṣṭha to dissuade Drona from the battle. But it was in vain. (M.B. Dṛṣṭa Parva, Chapter 190, Stanza 35).

(xviii) Vasiṣṭha was one of the hermits who came to visit Bhīṣma on his bed of arrows. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 7).

(xix) Once rain failed in the world and creatures became miserable. At that time Vasiṣṭha fed the creatures. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137).

(xx) Once Indra lost the Devaloka (the world of the Devas) and he became gloomy and miserable. Vasiṣṭha went to him and consoled him. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 291, Stanza 91).

(xxi) Vasiṣṭha was one of the hermits who were Brahmin tribal workers. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 295, Stanza 7).

VASIŚṬHA (xvi) Vasiṣṭha was one of the twentyone Prajāpatis. (M.B. Śānle Parva, Chapter 394, Stanza 36).

(xxiv) Vasiṣṭha is considered to be one of the Citraśikhandaś (Saptarishi—seven hermits) (See under Citraśikhandaś).

(xxv) Once Vasiṣṭha talked about Purusārtha (the objects of life) to Brahmā. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 6).

(xxv) Vasiṣṭha talked to Sandasa about giving cows as alms. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 78, Stanza 5).

(xxvi) On another occasion Vasiṣṭha gave advice to Pańcarāma and talked about the origin of gold. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 64, Stanza 41).

(xxvii) Vasiṣṭha once told Arundhutī how weakness was caused. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 93, Stanza 31).

(xxviii) Vasiṣṭha avowed that he was not one of those who had sinned the lotus flowers of Agastya. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 114).

(xxix) Apava, Arundhathā, Brahmarā, Devarā, Hairanyagarbhā, Maitrīvānī, Varūṇī, and such other words are used as synonyms of Vasiṣṭha, in the Mahābhārata.

VASIŚṬHA. An Agni (fire). (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 4).

VASIŚṬHA (M). Vasiṣṭha, the hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata Vana Parva, Chapter 84 that he who bathes in this tirtha would become a brahman.

VASIŚṬHA PARVATA. A mountain famous in the Purāṇas. It is mentioned in Ādi Parva, Chapter 214, Stanza 2, that Arjuna came and sat on this mountain during his pilgrimage.

VASIŚṬHA PĀVAVĀ. An ancient holy bath on the banks of the river Sarasvati. (See under Vastupura, fifth confrontation).

VASIŚṬHĀŚRAMA. A holy place near Nārāyaṇasāgara. This holy bath is famous throughout the three worlds. Those who bathe in this place will enjoy the fruits of performing Vajapeya yajna (Drinking sacrifice). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 140).

VASORDHĀRĀ. Wife of the Vasiṣṭha named Agni (Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).

VASTRAPA. A group of Kṣatriyās. The priests belonging to this group brought presents to Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Śaṅkha Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 15).

VASTUPURUṢA. In days of yore a ghost of immense size, who was feared by all other ghosts came into existence. This ghost was buried inside the earth by the Devas. This ghost is called Vastupuruṣa. He is the deity of whatever we build on the earth. The offering made to this Vastupuruṣa on completion of a house is called “Paravastubali.” (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 49).

VASU I. A King named Uparicaravasu. For further details see under Uparicaravasu.

VASU II. Astavasu. (The right Vasu). (For further details see under Ashvatasu).

VASU III. A son born to Kuśa, King of Kanyakubha by his wife Vaidarbhi. Kuśa had four sons, Kuśāmba, Kuśāmba, Asvārāja, and Vasu. Of them Kuśāmba built the city of Kuśāmbi, Kuśāmbi the city of Mahodayapura, Asvārāja the city of Dharmanāranya and Vasu the city of Girivṛaja which is erected in the middle of five hills. The river Māgadhī flows around this city.

(Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākṛṣṇa Sūrya 22).

VASU IV. A Vasu is mentioned in Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa Chapter 58, as the brother of Paraskarmā. Vasu, Rūmāṁya, Sūṣṇa, Viśvāvasu and Parasārum were the five sons born to Jamadagnī by his wife Remukā.

VASU V. A son of Muraśu. The sons of Muraśu were, Tāma, Antariṅka, Śravuṇa, Vasu, Viśvāvasu, Nabhāśvaṇa and Aruna. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

VASU VI. A mighty King, 12 of the Ikṣvākūs dynasty. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 13).

VASU VII. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 17, that the King Iīma had five sons, Dvīyanta, Śrīr, Bhīma, Pravasu and Vasu by his wife Kauṭhatari.

VASU VIII. A scholarly Brahmin-hermit. The hermit Pāda was the son of the Vasu (M.B. Śaṅkha Parva Chapter 33, Stanza 33).

VASU IX. Vasu is used as a synonym of Siva in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 140.

VASU X. A name of Mahāviśnu. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Stanza 25).

VASU XI. A King. He was born to Uttānapāda by Susūrī. A controversy arose among hermits once, about cow-sacrifice and for a solution of the problem the hermits approached this King Vasu, who told them his perception that the sacrifice of cow was, strictly speaking, a matter of slaughter and as such it was to be forbidden. As the hermits could not agree with the King, they cursed him “Let the King go to Pārīqī (underworld). Vasu then did very severe penance and attained heaven. (Matsya Purāṇa, Chapter 17).

VASUCANDRA. A King who was the supporter and helper of Yudhiṣṭhīra. He was as mighty as the powerful Indra. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 40).

VASUDĀMĀ. An attendant of Subrahmaniya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 5).

VASUDĀNA I. A Kṣatriya King. This King who was a member of the council of Yudhishthira was the ruler of Pūru. It is stated in Mahābhārata that this King presented Yudhishthira with twenty-six elephants and two thousand horses (Sāthaka Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 27). In the Bhārata battle this King was the support of Yudhishthira and Dhrisiradummatī. But he was killed by the arrow of Drona. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapters 151 and 171; Drona Parva, Chapters 25 and 198; Karna Parva, Chapter 6).

VASUDĀNA II. A prince of Pāñcāla, who fought on the side of the Pāñcāvas. He was killed by Dronaśāma (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 54).

VASUDĀNAŚIRUKA. A King who had taken the side of the Kauravas and fought against the Pāñcāvas. He killed Abhirūdhā, the son of King of Kāśi (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 74).

VASUDATTĀ I. Mother of Varuṇu (See under Varuṇu).

VASUDATTĀ II. (VASUDEVA). Father of Sudeva, a woman who had taken rebirth as a hog. (See under Sudovi III).

VASUDEVĀ I. Being the son of Vasudeva, Śrī Kṛṣṇa was called Vasudeva.

VASUDEVĀ II. See under Paunārakavāsudeva.

VASUDEVĀ. Father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.
1) Genealogy. See under Kvnsa.
2) Prasasti birth and current birth. Vasudeva was the rebirth of Prajapati Kaśyapa. Durva and Surāśā, the wives of Kaśyapa, took birth as Devas and Kṛṣṇa, respectively. (For details see under Kaśyapa).
3) Marriage and Family. Kṛṣṇa, the wife of Vasudeva, gave birth to Kaśyapa, the elder brother of Kaśyapa, Durva, Dharmara, and Mahābhārata. Of Devas who was also called Māya and Amavāsi, the younger son of Kṛṣṇa and his beautiful sister Subhadra were born. Vaiṣṇava, Ruciṣamana, Vardamanā and Devas were sons born by Upadeva. The two sons Agāvaha and Mandaṅga, otherwise called Angada were born of Vṛkdevi. Revanta, who could not be defeated in battle, was born from Saptāmidevi. The first son of Vasudeva was Kaṅkṣika, whose birth was from a Vaiṣṇava woman called Śraddhā Devī when Vasudeva was travelling in the forest Kaṁśa, a mighty son was born by the queen Śrutandharā. Subhadra, head of the archers and Ambava were born by his wife Jānī. (Padiana Pārni, P. 1314).
4) Other details.
(i) Vasudeva was the son of Śrāvaṇa, and the husband of Devas, the father of Kaśyapa, the brother of Kaśyapa and the minister of Ugraśena. It was Vasudeva who sent the priest Kaśyapa to Śatārīga to perform the purification ceremonies such as naming etc. of the Pāṇḍava. (M.B. Ādi Pārva, Chapter 123, Dākṣinātāyapātha).
(ii) After the Bhārata-battle, Vasudeva asked Śrī Kṛṣṇa and learned from him the detailed news about the battle. (Āvāmedha Pārva, Chapter 90).
(iii) Vasudeva fell into a swoon when he heard that Subhadra had become unconscious. (M.B. Āvāmedha Pārva, Chapter 61, Stanza 5).
(iv) The ceremony of offering to the manes (Śraddha) of Abhimanyu was performed by Vasudeva. (M.B. Āvāmedha Pārva, Chapter 62, Stanza 1).
(v) Vasudeva, while the Yādava fought among themselves, after drinking liquor, Śrī Krūga went to Dwārakā and visited Vasudeva, and requested him to protect his wife who were awaiting Arjuna. Then after killing the feet of Vasudeva, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Subhadra Kamsa went to doance. (M.B. Mausala Pārva, Chapter 1, Stanza 8).
(vi) When the dynasty of Vṛṣṇi was completely destroyed, Vasudeva thinking about the Supreme soul in his heart forsook his body. (M.B. Mausala Pārva, Chapter 7, Stanza 15).
(vii) Arjuna performed the funeral rites of Vasudeva and asked his four wives to enter the funeral pyre. (M.B. Mausala Pārva, Chapter 7, Stanza 19).
(viii) Vasudeva entered heaven and took his place among Vāsudevas (gods concerned with offering to the manes). (M.B. Śvargaśāpaka Pārva, Chapter 5, Stanza 17).
(ix) The synonyms of Vasudeva used in Mahābhārata are Amarkundubhi, Saru, Saraputi, Sarasūna, Yadubāhā and so on.
VĀSUDĒVAHĀṬṬATIŘI. A Sanskrit poet of Keralā. Vāsudevaḥāṭṭatīrhi was a poet who used alliteration abundantly. His important works are Yuddhiṣṭhīra-vijayi, Trapuvadiha, Śrīkaṇḍa, Vāsudeva Vijayā, Gṛndamokṣa, Nāyikā etc.
VĀSUDHĀ. Daughter of Nārāyaṇa, a Gandharva woman. Nārāyaṇa had three daughters Sundari, Ketu-rati and Vāsudhā. (For more details see under Purpo-kāṭa).
VĀSUDHĀRA. A holy place. Those who visit this place could enjoy the fruits of performing horse-sacrifice. If one gives offering to the manes after getting oneself purified by bathing in this holy tirtha (bath) one will attain the world of Viṣṇu. There is a lake of the Aśvāvas (eight Vāsudevas) in this place. By bathing there, one could become the subject of love and regard of the eight Vāsudevas. (M.B. Vana Pārva, Chapter 82, Stanza 53).
VĀSUHOMA. A King of the country of Aṅga. Once he gave advice to Mahāśāhu on righteousness. (M.B. Sānti Pārva, Chapter 122, Stanza 1).
VĀSUJYESTHĀ. A King. This King was the son of Puṣvamitra. (Maitya Pārṇa, 274, 28).
VĀŚUKI. One of the famous Nāgas (serpents).
(i) Birth. The urages and Nāgas (serpents) were born to Prajapati Kaśyapa by his wife Kādrī. Vāsuki, the eldest son of Kādrī spent his childhood with his parents.
(ii) Differences of opinion. Vīnātā and Kādrī stationed on the hill of the tail of Ucaśīravāhu. (A horse obtained at the burning of the sea of milk. To win the stake, Kādrī asked his sons to hang on the tail of Ucaśīravāhu as black hair, but the truthful Vāsuki was not prepared to do so. Kādrī cursed Vāsuki and the others who sided with him. From that day onwards Vāsuki and those who were cursed, separated from their mother and formed into a serpent group. (M.B. Ādi Pārva, Chapters 37 and 46).
3) The length of Vāsuki. The Devas and the asuras decided to get Amṛta (Ambroisie—the celestial honey of immortality) by burning the sea of milk. The Devas went to bring Mandara-mountain, to be used as the burning rod. Their attempt was futile. The asuras made a trial with the same result. The Bhūtīnāgas (Guardians) of Siva also made a vain attempt. On the instruction of Siva, Garuḍa went and brought the mountain in就是一个 eagle takes away a frog. Now Vāsuki should be brought. The Devas and Gandharvas failed in that attempt also. Garuḍa who was haughty of his strength and speed, went to the city of the Nāgas (serpents) and requested Vāsuki to come to the sea of Milk. Vāsuki replied that if the matter was so urgent he had no objection for being carried to that place. He took the middle part of Vāsuki in his beak and flew up higher and higher and reached beyond the horizon. Still the lower half of Vāsuki was living in ground. So he took Vāsuki in his beak as folded in two. Still the result was the same. Garuḍa became aware of the impossibility of carrying Vāsuki and returned, ashamed and disappointed. Vānita rebuked him for his arrogance. After this, Siva stretched his hand to Pātāla. Vāsuki became a small bangle on that hand. Thus Vāsuki was brought to the shore of the sea of Milk. (Kamba Ramāyana, Yuddha Kandā).
in large numbers, he sent his nephew Adi to find out a way to rescue the prevailing nāgas. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 20).

VĀYASAVIYĀ. The art of making the crow tell the past and foretell the future. (For further details see under Kalākavekṣa).

VĀYU I. One of the eight guardians of the world. (Dīkṣālakās).

1) General information. Vāyu was born from the breath of Viṣṇu (Rgveda 10.90). Vāyu was the son-in-law of Vāyu. The eight dīkṣālakās are Indra, VānDeśi (Vērī), Yama, Nīrūtī, Varuna, Vāyu, Kubera and Śiva.

2) Confrontation with Vāyu. Once Vāyu and VānDeśi tried to find out who of the two was mightier, in consequence of which, Trikūtaparvata, a peak of Mount
VÄYU I

Himālaya, was broken from its bed and thrown into the southern ocean near Lanka. Later, the city of Lanka was built on this mountain. (For details see under Trīkūṭa).

3) Children. Bhimaśena and Hanumān are said to be the prominent sons of Bhagavān Vāyu. It is mentioned in Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 7, Sūkta 112, that Agni was the son of Vāyu. To make fire from wood by ascription, the hardies obtain strength by the help of the life breath called Vāyu (a breath or vāyu). It is from this, that the idea that fire is the son of Vāyu, came into existence. To know how Vāyu obtained the patronity of Bhima and Hanumān see under Bhima and Hanumān. *It is stated in Bṛha Purāṇa that a group of celestial maids called 'Muda' owes its origin to Vāyu."

4) Loss of Vāyu. Once Bhagavān Vāyu happened to see the six beautiful daughters of Kuśānābhā, a king, and he was excited sexually. At the princesses refused to satisfy his desire, Vāyu changed the damsels into bunch-backs, by a curse. (For detailed story see under Kuśānābha).

5) The Vāyus (breath) in the body. (See under Nāḍikāpras).

6) Curbing the arrogance of Silk-cotton tree. Long ago a silk-cotton tree grew up on the top of the Himālayas. It grew up to be gigantic spreading its branches in all directions. Birds built their nests on the branches of that big tree and hermits and animals found shelter under its shade. The silk-cotton tree became arrogant. Once Nārada came there and praised the tree—"How gigantic, this silk-cotton tree is! Even in a great storm its branches do not move."

"The praise of Nārada made the storm that was angering the tree, etc. to be its servants. Nārada told Vāyu, what the silk-cotton tree had said. Vāyu got angry and coming to the tree, said thus: "You, wicked silk-cotton tree, in days of yore, when Brahmā was carrying on creation he took rest on you for a while. That is why I keep motionless when I come to you. It is not because I am afraid of you. I knew that you belittled me before Nārada. If you are bold enough, come and fight with me."

The silk-cotton tree accepted the challenge. Next day Bhagavān Vāyu changed into a storm and blew against the tree. The tree lost leaves, flowers and fruits and stood bare. Thus within a very short time the arrogance of the tree was curbed.

This story was told to Yudhiṣṭhira by Bhīma, to show that rendering help to a foe, will only make him haughty. (M.B. Sānti Parva, 3 Chapters from 154).

Other details.

(i) When Indra cut off the wings of the mountains, Bhagavān Vāyu saved the mountain Maṅkā from this danger, by hiding it in the ocean. (Vālmīki Rāmāyana, Sundara Kāya, Sarga 1, Stanza 126).

(ii) The image of Bhagavān Vāyu should be consecrated as sitting on the back of a deer, holding a flag. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

(iii) Indra sent Vāyu also along with Menakā to hide the penance of Viśvakāmā. While Menakā was dancing in front of Viśvakāmā, Vāyu displaced her cloth. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 72, Stanza 1).

(iv) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 22, that Vāyu is the messenger of the gods.

(vi) Once Pradyumna tried to kill Śāvaka. At that time Vāyu went to Pradyumna as the messenger of God. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 22).

(vii) Vāyu proved that Damayanti was chaste. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 76, Stanza 36).

(viii) Vāyu declared that Svāti was chaste. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 291, Stanza 27).

(ix) In Tripurāraṇa (the burning of Tripura) Vāyu acted as the arrow of the bow of Śiva. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 202, Stanza 76).

(x) Vāyu gave Subrahmaṇya two attendants called Bala and Aśīrvaṇa. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 44).

(xi) Once Vāyu advised Purūravas about the need of a priest. (M.B. Śancti Parva, Chapter 72, Stanza 25).

(xii) Once Bhagavān Vāyu talked elaborately on the secrets of goodness and badness. (M.B. Amāśā Parva, Chapter 128).

(xiii) Bhagavān Vāyu once talked about the greatness of Brahmā to Kārttavyārjuna. (M.B. Amāśā Parva, Chapter 132).

VĀYU II. An ancient hermit of India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śancti Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 9, that this hermit visited Bhṛīṣṭa on his bed of arrows. VĀYUBALĀ. See under Vāyucakra.

VĀYUBHAKSA. An ancient hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 13, that this hermit had been a prominent figure in the palace of Yudhiṣṭhira.

VĀYUCAKRA. A hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śaśy Parva, Chapter 36, Stanza 32, that this Vāyucakra was born from the semen kept in a pot by the hermit called Maṅkānavaka. From this same pot some other hermits such as Vāyuvala, Vāyuvala and others were born. (See under Maṅkānavaka, Para 2).

VĀYUHĀ. A son of the hermit Maṅkānavaka. (See para 3, under Maṅkānavaka).

VĀYUVĀLĀ. See under Vāyucakra.

VĀYUMANDALA. A son of the hermit Maṅkānavaka. See para 3, under Maṅkānavaka.

VĀYUPURĀNA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. (See under Purāṇa).

VĀYURETIAS. A son of the hermit Maṅkānavaka. (See para 3, under Maṅkānavaka).

VĀYUVEGA I. Kārttiryā King in ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 63 that this King was born from a portion of the asura named Krodhavāla.

VĀYUVEGA II. A son of the hermit Maṅkānavaka. (See para 3, under Maṅkānavaka).

VĀYUVEGA III. One of the sons of Bhṛarātra. He was present at the Svayamīvara (marriage) of Draupadī (M.B. Aranyās: Chapter 177, Verse 2).

VĀYYA. A royal hermit of the period of Rgveda. Mention is made about the royal hermit such as Vāyu, Karkandhu and others in Rgveda, Mandala 1, Sūkta 112.

VEDA. The sun of the hermit Ayuddhāhuṇya. (For further details see under Ayuddhāhuṇya).

VEDA (S). 1) Introduction. The root 'Vid' in Sanskrit means 'to know'. The books composed of the knowledge of the
In the Sānhitās there are lyrics in praise of different gods. All these are spells and incantations (mantras) in the form of songs. The under-currents of all these spells are Vedas and stories from the Vedas. Generally speaking the Brāhmaṇas contain prose texts giving practical observations on sacrifice which are mentioned in the songs of praise. Here and there stories from Purāṇas and epics occur. The Aranyakas (forest-texts) got that name, because they are books of instruction to be given in the forest or writings meant for wood-dwelling hermits. As they contained esoteric spells and incantations which might cause injury even to those who were not concerned with them in instruction in them was not given in towns or villages. The contents of the Aranyakas are the allegorical signification of the rites and sacrifices and the mystic meaning of the Vedas.

It has been mentioned that the Upaniṣads are appendices of the Aranyakas. Still there is no much difference between the two and hence they cannot be separated from one another so easily. The Upaniṣads are called Vedāntas, (the aim and completion of the Vedas), because they are the end of the Vedas. The Vedāntas belong to the later period of the Vedic age. Instruction in Vedānta was given only after completing the study of the mantras (Vedas) and the Brāhmaṇas. The Upaniṣads contain philosophical speculations about the conception of Brahma and the Vedas. The word Veda includes the Vedāṅgas also. Vedāṅgas (Ancillaries of the Vedas) are Śikṣā (phonetics), Vyākaraṇa (grammar), Chandas (metrics), Nirukta (etymology), Jyotiṣa (astronomy), and Kalpa (ritual). At first instruction is given in the study of Brahma and the study of Vedas. When more discussions and expositions on them are needed, the study of Brāhmaṇas and Aranyakas are resorted to. In course of time the Brāhmaṇas and Aranyakas, which contain discussions and expositions of the Vedas became independent branches of study under these names. That is why they contain mainly prose texts.

There are one lakh of mantras or spells and incantations in all the four Vedas taken together. They are for blessing everybody and to make the four objects of life easily attainable. Śatākhyāvāna and Āśāvāyana sorted and grouped the mantras. Accordingly there are two thousand one hundred and ten mantras known as Brāhmaṇas. Draupāyaṇa and other hermits have stated the number of gramhas (verses) in Veda. It is said that there are one thousand nine hundred and ninety nine mantras in Yajurveda. There are one thousand eightysix branches also. The branches in Yajus are known by the names Kānyā, Madhyandini, Kajāti, Madhyakāti, Maitrāyanī, Taittirīya, Vākasāpyānitā and so on.

In Śāma Veda there are branches such as Kauthumī, Acharavānyāvīti and so on and songs such as Aranyakams, Uktam, Āham and so on. The number of Śāma vedic verses are nine thousand four hundred and twenty-five.

Sumantra, Jñājali, Ślokāyāni, Saunakā, Pippalās, Mūtjakas and such others were responsible for the sorting and grouping of the mantras in the Atharva Veda. Altogether there are one thousand six hundred Upaniṣads. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 271).

4) Branches of the Vedas. It has already been mentioned that the Vedas are four in number called Rg, Yajus, Śāma and Atharva. Each of these Vedas has branches called Sāhanās (collections) and Brāhmaṇas (treatises relating to prayer and sacrificial ceremony). Aranyakas are appendices to the Brāhmaṇas. Upānīsads (secret or esoteric doctrines) are appendices of the Aranyakas. Thus each of the Vedas has Sāhanās, Brāhmaṇas, Aranyakas and Upānīsads. All these are, in a way, expositions of the Vedas. In all these expositions there are numberless Sūtras. All these taken together are called Vedic literature.

5) Expositions of the Vedas. The religion of the Aryans became an established one when Vṛṣa had created the VEDA(S)

VEDASAMHITAS. The aim of Vyāsa was to bring about uniformity in the religious observances by performing rituals and rituals, religious ceremonies such as sacrifices etc., without any flaw. Following this, a very wide Vedic literature grew up. The study of the Vedas, critical review of meaning, the connection between mantras and tantras (chants and rituals), Grammar, etymology, all these became inevitable. As the Vedas could be looked at from different points of view, from very early days, various types of expiations of the Vedas came out. Seven types of commentaries, Nairuttika, Vajjika, Vaijyakantha Jyautisā, Sāṃpradāyika Adhyatmika, Adhikāsika (pertaining to etymology, sacrifice, grammar astronomy, customs of a tribe, Brahma or Spiritual legends and ancient lore) were the prominent among them. When the westerner began research work in the Vedas, another branch of literature also took form, known as the Agamikas (the historical). Even in the time of Vyāsa, who was an authority on Nirukta (etymology) the Vedas were expounded on the basis of legends and ancient lore. Hence to this effect are seen in Vyāsa's works. Mention is made about other types of expiations also in them. The last book of importance in the Śāṃpradāyika type of expiation, was Vedarthaprakāśaka, of Śāṇya. But the commentary of Śāṇyakāmi, the books Rgvedadīpti and Udghātālīśyaḥ of Madhavacārya etc. have spread the śāṃpradāyika type of speculations in India. There is another cult in India which believes that everything seen in the Vedas is spiritual and that the spells and incantations are esoteric.

6) The gods of the Vedas. All the gods known today are not found in the Vedas. Even those who are found do not have the prominence that is given to them now. For example, the deity Viṣṇu, worshipped as one of the three godshead today, is not as omnipotent as the Indra of the Vedas. Though Viṣṇu is praised in five spells in Rigveda, when compared with other deities, he was not of much prominence. In the Vedas the incarnation of Varuna is not given much importance. Even though Rudra is a recognized deity and mention occurs about Kapardin, in the Vedas, there is not a song of praise of Siva in the Rigveda. There is no mention at all, about the worship of the Plathus, Devi and so on in the Vedas. The Vedas celebrate the Omniscience of Varuna, Indra, Agni, Mitra, the Maruts and so on. The lustre of Indra was gradually dimmed with the efflux of time and he became a mere libertine in the Purāṇas. The importance of many deities such as Varuna, Agni, Mitra, Asvin and so on was greatly diminished in the Purāṇas. Thirty-three deities pertaining to Earth, Ether and Sky are praised in the Vedas.

7) The rites concerning instruction in Vedas. Manu has given certain instructions as to how the teaching of Vedas should be conducted.

8) The teachers of Veda. See under Guruparamparā.

9) The period of the Vedas. The Indians believe that the spells and incantations and the Brahmanas are not made, but are revelations by God. So they are considered to be beginningless and endless. The hermits are considered to be seers of the spells. It is mentioned “Mantradraṣṭārāna tu Kartarāhay”. (They are seers of Mantra, not makers). In the opinion of one party, according to this maxim, it is not necessary to search for the creators or the period of creation, of mantras. They hold that only the Sūtras (thread, clue, guide, rule, aphorism) are made by man.

The westerners and the modern thinkers of India do not agree completely with this view. They believe that the early Aryans who entered India, first settled down in the Punjab and that the local civilization which they had assumed, broke out as songs of praise. In course of time, these songs of praise took the form of Rgveda mantras (saying, song, formula). In the beginning there was only one Veda. Many believe that this state continued up to B.C. 1500. It is a fact universally acknowledged, that this Vedic literature is the most ancient literature of the world. There is difference of opinion as to the period of origin of this Vedic literature. Prof. Macdonell and Prof. Jacob are foremost among those who have made their opinions. In the opinion of Prof. Macdonell, the Vedic literature originated in the period between B.C. 1500 and 1200. But Jacob's opinion is that all the Vedas were made before B.C. 4000.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Visnu in the following order: Brahman - Svayambhuva, Manu - Uttanapada - Dhruta-Siiti-Ripu-Cakusa, Manu-Kuru-Anga-Vena.

2) Birth. Ten sons including Kuru, were born to Manu Cakusa by his wife Nagvala. Agneyi, the wife of Kuru gave birth to six sons Anga and others. Anga married Sunitha. The son Vena was born by Sunitha.

It is mentioned in Visnu Purana, Amda 1, Chapter 13, that Sunitha, the mother of Vena was the eldest daughter of Yama, and in Vamana Purana Chapter 47, that this Sunitha was the daughter born to Kala and Mtivy, Vena who was born as the son of the daughter of Yama was born a wicked man because of the badness of his grandfather.

Vena grew up as a great sinner. A story occurs in Padma Purana about an incident which caused Vena to become a great sinner.

The story says that Sunitha was the mother of Vena. In her play she used to imitate her father's job which was hurting others. One day when she went to the forest for play with her maids she saw Sunitha the son of a Gandharva named Sutarkoshala. That youth who was handsome in every part of his body, was doing penance meditating on the Goddess Sarasvati for the attainment of the art of music. Sunitha began to annoy him daily. Suratanka bore this annoyance patiently. He said only this "Go away, go away." But she did not pay heed to his appeals. Once she became angry and struck him. Getting angry at this, Suratanka called out, "You wicked girl! Why do you annoy me? You have beaten me, who am engaged in penance, for no cause." That righteous Gandharva youth cursed her anger considering that she was a woman.

She told him "My father will beat everybody in the three worlds. He will harm the wicked, and will not do any harm to the good. So he rules the country righteously." Sunitha told all about the story to her father. Though Yama, the incarnation of righteousness, heard all that his daughter said he did not give any reply.

She again went to the forest and struck him with a whip. Suratanka rose up, shivering with pain and cursed her thus: "You wicked girl! When you become a house-holder and join your husband you will get a son who will be a scoffer of Devas and Brahmanas and an all-round sinner." Thus cursing her he continued his penance. Vena was born according to this curse.

3) The wicked rule of Vena. The hermits anointed Vena as the King. He became lord of the whole earth. He made a proclamation thus:—"Sacrifice is prohibited. Giving alms, is prohibited. Offerings of no kind should be made. Who else, other than I, can be the Yajrapurusa? (the deity who eats the food of sacrifice)? I am the only lord and consumer of sacrifices!"

Hearing this proclamation, the hermits approached him and told him that the Vedas were the basis of righteousness, that sacrifices were ordained in them, and that if no sacrifice was performed the Devas would not be pleased and so on. But this did not make any change in his behaviour.

The hermits became angry. They all gathered together and recited spells and struck him with (police) grass and killed him. As there was no King the world fell into darkness. Because of the troubles caused by plunderers, people gathered round the hermits. Hermits joined together and churned the left hand of Vena, from which a man of short stature came out, to whom the hermits said, "Nisada? (sit). Because the hermits said Nisada, Nisada came into existence from that dwarf born of the hand of Vena. Then the hermits churned the right hand of Vena. At this churning a person as big as a mountain with divine signs came out. He had bow and arrows and in his palm there were marks of a wheel and flag. Seeing this the Devas

A daughter named Sūpyānukha also was born to them. Kumbhārkāna and Vibhīsana went to do penance under the leadership of their eldest brother Rāvana. They did severe penance and obtained various boons. The boon given to Vibhīsana was to live as a righteous man. After that they came back and defeated Kubera, the ruler of Lanka and brought Lanka under their control. Rāvana became the ruler of Lanka. Kumabhākarna and Vibhīsana lived with their brother in Lanka. Rāvana married Mandodari. Kumabhākarna took Vajrav lParama the daughter of Mahāballi and Vibhīsana took Saralīa, the daughter of Sañjīḷa a Gandharva as their wives, according to Utarā Rāmaśāna. Rāvana conquered the three worlds and was ruling as the emperor of the whole world, when Śri Rāma and Lakṣaṇa went to the forest, with Sītā. Rāvana carried Sītā away to Lanka. Rāma and Lakṣaṇa, with the help of the monkey-army entered Lanka. At this time Rāvana called together his ministers to consider the details about the battle with Śri Rāma. Every one present except Vibhīsana voted for the battle. Vibhīsana advised Rāvana to return Sītā, the stolen property and be Śri Rāma for pardon. Rāvana got angry and expelled Vibhīsana from Lanka. Vibhīsana joined the side of Śri Rāma and informed him of all the military secrets of Rāvana. In the battle which ensued Rāvana was killed and Vibhīsana was made the king of Lanka by Śri Rāma. It is stated in Kamburāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kanda that according to the instruction of Śri Rāma and at the instance of Indra, Vāsakarna came to Lanka and renovated the city of Lanka.

Śri Rāma returned to Ayodhya and became the king. One day Candragupta, the second son of Sahasramukha Rāvana (Rāvana with thousand heads) stole away the daughter of Sugriva and the daughter-in-law of Vibhīsana. Vibhīsana informed Śri Rāma of this. Śri Rāma, with Lakṣaṇa, Vibhīsana, Sugriva, Hanumān and the monkey-army went to the city of Sahasramukha Rāvana in the middle of Milk-sea. A fierce battle ensued which lasted for three days. All the Rākṣasas were killed. (See under Sahasramukhaśāvana).

It is mentioned in Kamburāmāyaṇa that in the horse sacrifice performed by Śri Rāma, the control of the army was in the hands of Sugriva and financial control was vested in the hands of Vibhīsana.

VIBHISANA II. Mention is made in Mahābhārata as given below, about another Vibhīsana who had ruled over Lanka.

(v) Rukmini, the wife of Sri Krishna, was the daughter of a king of Vidarbadha. Bhagavata Sri Krishna carried Rukmini away by force. (M B Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 13).

VIDEGHA MATHAVA. A king born of the dynasty of Mathu. There is an interesting story about this king in the Satapatha Brahmana. It is as follows.

Videgha put Agni in his mouth and lived without talking, fearing that Agni might jump out. His priest Rahujaña tried to put it out, but he could not extinguish the fire from the mouth of the king.

Once by chance the word Guhu got out of the mouth of Rahujaña. Instantly the fire in the mouth of the king blazed into a big flame and burst out of the mouth.

That fire gradually increased and began to consume the world. Rivers became dry. It seemed that even Videgha and his priest would be burnt to ashes in that blazing fire. At last Videgha got into the river Sadasvara, which flowed through the boundary of his own kingdom, with the intention of not becoming a prey to the ever-increasing fire. With this the fire abated.

VIDEHALLA. Another name of emperor Nimi. (See under Janaka).

VIDEHA II. The kingdom of Mathura. This country which lies on the North East part of India was ruled by the Kṣatriya kings of the dynasty of Vedeha. It is stated in Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 29, that Bhimaesa had during his eastern regional conquest, conquered this country. About this kingdom which is the native country of St Büyük, the following information is available in Mahabharata,

(i) The hermitage of Parasarāma was on the North of Vedeha. (M B Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Stanza 13).

(ii) The army of Vedeha attacked Arjuna in the battle of Bharata. (M B Bhima Parva, Chapter 117, Stanza 32).

(iii) Karna defeated the Kṣatriya princes of the country of Janaka (M B Droga Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 6).

(iv) Parasarāma cut the Kṣatriyas of this country into pieces with his sharp arrows. (M B Droga Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 11).

(v) This country had been giving tribute to Karna. (M B Karnā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 33).

VIDHIHĀ. A son born to Birgu. By his wife Khyāti two sons Dhitā and Vidhithā and a daughter named Lakṣmā were born to Birgu. Lakṣmā was given in marriage to Vidura. The daughter of Meru, Ayātī, was married by Dhitā and Nīvatī by Vidhithā. The son Mrākṣa was born to Vidhitā by Nīvatī. This Mrākṣa was the father of Mārkaṇḍeya. (Vaiṣṇa Purāṇa, Amśa 1, Chapter 10).

The following statements occur about Dhitā and Vidhithā in Mahābhārata.

(i) At Nākaloka (heaven) Dhitā and Vidhithā took the form of women and allowed hermit Uttamaka to see them. (M B Adi Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 166).

(ii) Dhitā and Vidhithā stood above the city of Virata to see the battle between Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa. (M B Virata Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 11).

(iii) Dhitā and Vidhithā lived with Manu. (M B Adi Parva, Chapter 63, Stanza 42).

(iv) Dhitā and Vidhithā gave to Subrahmanya two followers named Suvrata and Sukarna. (M B Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 42).

VIDHAVĀ. A woman whose husband is dead. In ancient India, it was ordained how a widow should live. It was allowed for a widow to get a son by her younger brother-in-law to continue the family line in case the death of her husband occurred before the couple had children. The procedure about this is given in Manusmriti, Chapter 9.

"He who goes to accept the widow with the permission of great people, should besmear his body with ghee and go to her bed in the night in a dark room. She should have only one son in this manner. After she has become pregnant, they should behave to each other as a teacher and a younger brother-in-law." VIDHRITI. Son of Khaṇḍana and the daughter of Hiranyaksha. He was a king (Bṛāvastha, Sandhaka 9).

VIDISĀ. A river. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 12, that this river stays in the palace of Varuna serving him.

VIDRUTA. A king born in the family of Yayāti. He was the son of Rucaka. (Bṛāvastha, Sandhaka 9).

VIDULĀ. A heroic Kṣatriya woman of India. In Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, there is a story, how this Vidulā sent her son, who had fled from the battle-field because of fear, to the battlefield again.

The Pāṇḍavas, who had completed forest-life and Pseudoonymy successfully and returned to Hastinapura were again deceived and put to shame. Sri Krishna's argument as a mediator was not successful, in the palace of the Kauravas. Sri Kṛṣṇa came away from the palace of Duryodhana and entered the house of Vidura and visited Kunti. Sri Kṛṣṇa asked her opinion on the idea of waging a war against the Kauravas. It is not meet and right on the part of a heroic mother to welcome a son who comes home being defeated in battle. To substantiate this point, she told Śrī Kṛṣṇa the story of Vidulā, as given below.

Vidulā was a brave woman, who lived in ancient India. Her son Saśījaya fought with the King of Sindhu and was defeated. When he came home Vidulā did not receive him. She emboldened him by saying that she would be more proud of a son, who had sacrificed his life in the battlefield than one who returned home defeated. All his arguments which were enemies for his cowardice, were rebuffed by his mother. At last Saśījaya engaged again in a battle with the King of Sindhu. On hearing this story told by Kunti Śrī Kṛṣṇa became immensely pleased. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, 3 Chapters from 134).

VIDURA 1.

1) General information. Vidura was a superhuman being, very famous in the story of Mahābhārata, as a brother of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, as a man of colossal intellect, one who had been closely watching the goings and comings of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas, as the adviser of Dhṛtarāṣṭra, and as a man of immense learning and wisdom.

2) Incarnation of Dharmadeva. There is a story in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 107, which describes Vidura as born from a portion of Dharmadeva. The story is given below.

Long ago there was a hermit called Māṇḍavya in India. As he was standing in deep meditation near his hermitage, the men of the king chased some thieves and came to the place where the hermit stood. The robbers placed the stolen property near the hermit and ran away. The king’s men caught the hermit, and the thieves. The king ordered them to be placed on a treadmill. The thieves died on the treadmill. But Māṇḍavya was not dead. The king saw the treadmill and got Māṇḍavya down. The hermit went to Dharmadeva and asked him what his blame was for suffering the punishment of the treadmill. Dharmadeva replied that the punishment was inflicted for a cruel deed he had done in his childhood. He had caught some flies and made a bunch of them by piercing them with the rib of a coconut-palm leaf. But Māṇḍavya argued that Dharmadeva was not right in punishing him because the Sāstras and rules of righteousness said that mistakes committed by boys below the age of twelve could not be considered to be sins. Further he cursed Dharmadeva that he would take birth on the earth from the womb of a Śrīra. Accordingly Dharmadeva took birth from the womb of the wife of Ambikā and Ambalikā.

3) Bīrī. Vidura was born as the brother of Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu. (For detailed story see under Dhṛtarāṣṭra 1, para 2).

4) Up to marriage. Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Pāṇḍu and Vidura spent their younger days in Hastinapuram as inseparable brothers. Their teacher was Bhīṣma. Vidura learned the Vedas, Sāstras, Purāṇas, Upanishads etc. also, along with the education given to a prince such as archery, club-fight, sword-fight, wrestling, controlling elephants etc. He understood that to be righteous was far better than fighting. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 108, that Vidura got the sense of righteousness, and education in fighting, at the same time.

Childhood ended. As Vidura was born to a Śrīrad woman he had no right to become King. When he grew up, the duty to find a wife for him fell on Bhīṣma. At that time a damsel born to a Śrīrad woman was being brought up in the palace of King Devaka. With the permission of Devaka, Bhīṣma brought the girl and gave her in marriage to Vidura. It is stated in Mahābhārata, A di Parva, Chapter 114, that sons and daughters were born to the couple.

5) Partiality towards the Pāṇḍavas. Vidura was the most intelligent and wisest man of his time, and he always favoured righteousness. Though he viewed the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas with equal favour, in his heart he felt some partiality towards the Pāṇḍavas, because they were virtuous, whereas the Kauravas were becoming more and more wicked. As this partiality arose from his sense of righteousness, nobody could blame Vidura for this. His aim was the prosperity of the Lunar dynasty of Kings.

Many omens were seen at the time of the birth of Duryodhana. Vidura understood that if that infant grew up he would be a comet to the Lunar dynasty. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, A di Parva, Chapter 115, that Vidura advised Dhṛtarāṣṭra that it would be better for him to throw away that infant.

The death of Pāṇḍu drew Vidura closer to the Pāṇḍavas. Vidura took the lead in performing the funeral rites and other ceremonies which followed. The Pāṇḍavas were very sad and miserable at the death of their father. It was at this time that Duryodhana poisoned Bhīṣma, tied him with a rope and threw him into the river Ganges. Bhīṣma was carried to the world of nāga (serpents). Kunti felt grieved at the loss of her son Bhīṣma, but Vidura consoled her.

It was due to the wisdom of Vidura that the Pāṇḍavas escaped from the disaster in the lac-house. As soon as Duryodhana had completed the lac-house, Vidura understood the deception lying hidden under it and he informed the Pāṇḍavas of everything about it. Moreover he sent a man named Khaṇaka and made an underground passage from the lac-house. When the lac-house was burnt down, the Pāṇḍavas escaped by the underground passage and reached the banks of the Ganges. Vidura had sent a ferryman secretly to take them to the other side of the Ganges. When Bhīṣma got the news that the Pāṇḍavas had been burnt to death in the lac-house he became very sad. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, A di Parva, Chapter 149, that Vidura informed Bhīṣma secretly that the Pāṇḍavas were not dead.

After this event the Pāṇḍavas come into the scene only at the Svaayamvara (marriage) of Pāṇḍu, Bhīṣma and Droṇa proposed that the Pāṇḍavas should be brought back and be given half of the kingdom. Vidura, by his arguments convinced Dhṛtarāṣṭra that the proposal of Bhīṣma and Droṇa was correct. Dhṛtarāṣṭra asked Vidura to bring the Pāṇḍavas back. Vidura went to the city of Droṇapada and brought the Pāṇḍavas back and consold their mother Kunti. After this Yudhishṭhīra performed Rājasāvyā (sacrifice of royal consecration). Vidura took part in it and took the charge of financial part of the sacrifice. It was after this that Durudhana challenged Yudhishthira for a game of dice. Vidura saw beforehand that this move on the part of Durudhana was dangerous. So he talked forcibly against this, and gave warning to all concerned. As Durudhana did not agree with Vidura, he was scolded. But Durudhana was firm and the game was conducted.

3) Pilgrimage. When Vidura failed in his attempt to ward off a pitched battle between the Kauravas and the Pandavas he felt extremely miserable. Without taking part in the battle, he started on a pilgrimage. Getting the news at Prabhāsketra about the end of the battle, he went to the beach of river Yamuna. On the way he heard the news of the passing away of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, from Uddhava. Before death Śrī Kṛṣṇa had revealed that Vidura had heard Uddhava's gait from Maityāya. This book which is in the form of a conversion between Vidura and Maityāya contains the talk between Kapila and Devahūti. Description of the line of Manus, sacrifice of Dakṣa, story of Druva, story of Prithu, story of Purāṇa etc. were the subjects of the talk. (Bhāgavata, 3–4).

9) End. The Bhārata-battle came to an end. The Kauravas were exterminated. Ekeṭra were begun to establish law and order. In all these efforts Vidura was a help to the Pandavas. Still he spent most of his time with the old Dharmaśīra. Yudhishthira came to Dhvatrāstra and both embraced each other. Seeing this Vidura cried aloud. Vidura advised Yudhishthīra how to carry on the administration of the new government. After this he decided to go to the forest to spend his last days. Dhvatrāstra, Gāndhāra, Kuntī, Vidura and Sakuni went to the forest. The Pandavas tried in vain to prevent them from going. When Dhvatrāstra, Gāndhāra, Kuntī, Vidura, Sakuni and others started for the forest, even Bhūmaṇa cried aloud. Pandavas and the people of the city went along with them up to the river Ganges. On the bank of the Ganges near the hermitage of Satyājīta, a hermitage was erected and Vidura and the others lived there.

They lived there for nearly six years. The Pandavas became unable to bear the separation from their elders. Once Dharmaṭupa dreamt about his mother. Next day the Pandavas went to the banks of the Ganges. Pāñcāla, Subhadra, Uttarā and many people of the city followed them. They went to the Satyājīta-hermitage and saw Dhvatrāstra and the others. But the great Vidura was not there. When asked about it he got the reply that having become abominous and having no more desires he was wandering about. Yudhishthīra was greatly troubled.

Next day at dawn when Yudhishthīra went to bathe in the Ganges, on the way he saw Vidura sitting in contemplation with a stone in his mouth. Yudhishthīra stood with joined palms before the lean and weak form of that sage and said “Look, Dharmaṭupa bows before you.” He repeated this several times. But there was no change in Vidura. Yudhishthīra’s disappointment did not last long. For, in a short while Dharmaṭupa saw that a divine radiance emanated from the body of Vidura and passed on to his body and that the body of Vidura fell lifeless on the ground. This union took place because both Vidura and Yudhishthīra were portions of Dharmaṭupa. After this Dharmaṭupa made preparations to burn the body of Vidura. Then an ethereal voice said “Vidura is abominous. His body should not be burned.” Dharmaṭupa went to the hermitage and informed all, about the death of Vidura. (M.B. Aṭamāśīva Parva, Chapters 26 to 28).

Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Svaragārohana Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 22, that Vidura entered Svarga (heaven) and stays there in the form of Dharmaṭupa.
Vidura went to every house saying, "Look, here am I, a slave of Bhishma. Please, give alms to the drunkard and killer of a Brahmin." Saying this he walked from house to house and took alms. But he did not get remission of Brahmanahat (killing of a Brahmin).

Filled with grief and sorrow and mental worry the sinner Vidura sat in the shade of a tree. At that time Candrasaṃsā, a Brahmin of Magadha came there. He was a wicked man who had killed his teacher because of indiscriminate lust in consequence of which he had been forsaken by his own people. Vidura asked Candrasaṃsā who were no sign of a Brahmana, what he was. Candrasaṃsā told his story to Vidura who in return told him his sinful acts.

At this time another Brahmin named Vedāsāṃsā came there. He also was a sinner. The three of them told each other about their sinful acts. At this time Vaiśāya came there. He was a drunkard who had killed cows. These four desperate sinners travelled together and visited several temples (holy baths). But they did not get remission of their sins. At last they started for Kālañjara. While these desperate sinners were living in Kālañjara a Brady came there. He asked them why they were so sad. They told him everything. When he heard their stories he felt pity for them. The old Brahmin said "You sinners should go to Prayaṅga, Puṣkara, Sarvatīthā and Vārānasī and bathe in the Ganga on New Moon days and you will become free from sin." They obeyed the old Brahmin and went to the holy places told by him. Thus Vidura and his friends became sinless.

Vidura. A king of the Kuru dynasty. He was the son born to the great king Kuru by Subhāṅgi, a damsel of Dāśārha family. Vidura married Sāmpyā, a princess of Madhu royal family. A son named Anaśā was born to her. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 39-40).

Vidūrāgamanarājyalabhaparva. A sub-section of Ādi Parva, comprising chapters 199 to 217, in Mahābhārata.

Vidūrathā. 1. A king of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. Information got from Mahābhārata about this king is given below.

(i) Vidūrathā also was present at the Svayamvara marriage of Draupadi. (M. B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Kanda 19).

(ii) In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Stanza 10, mention is made that the brightness of this king increased after his participation in the festival conducted on mount Kaivala.

(iii) Vidūrathā was one of the seven famous and mighty kings of the Yadu dynasty. (M.B. Sābha Parva, Chapter 61, Stanzas 6-14).

(iv) Vidūrathā was a close friend of Śūpyālā, Śīla, Jārasandha and so on. Jārasandha employed this Vidūrathā as the guardian of the Eastern entrance of the city of Māthur. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed his brother Dantavakra, Śīla, Śūpyālā and others, Vidūrathā ran to take revenge on Kṛṣṇa. But he was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, Sūkha 10).

(v) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Svaragopanār Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 18, that after death he joined the Viśvadevas.

Vidūrathā II. A king of the Pūrū dynasty. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 75, that Kṛṣṇa hid the son of this king in a mountain and saved him from the Kāatriya extermination of Parāśurāma and at that time spotted leopards brought up this child.

Vidūrathā III. A king who was the friend of the hermit Bhālanda. This king had two sons named Sunīti and Sumati and a daughter named Mudāvati. One day while Vidūrathā was hunting in the forest, he saw a cleavage on the earth caused by the yawning of Kujñambhāsūra. The king stood there for a while looking at the cleavage. Then the hermit Sunīti whom he had been standing close by approached the king and said, "This aura Kujñamba has a divine peste with him. Because of the possession of this peste he has become invisible and is a threat to the whole world." Vidūrathā, who knew everything from Sunīti, lived cautiously. One day his daughter was carried away by this Kujñambhāsūra. Sunīti and Sumati confronted the asura to rescue their sister but were made captives. Finally Vatsapī, the son of the hermit Bhālanda killed the Kujñamba (giant) and liberated princess Mudāvati. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa, Chapter 113).

Vidūrathā I. A king born in the family of Bharata, the son of Dusyanta. The father of this king was Sūrvata and his son was Sāvabhau. (Bhāgavata, Sūkha 10).

Vidūrathā II. Brother of Dantavakra. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa had defeated Dantavakra, his brother Vidūrathā came to fight with Śrī Kṛṣṇa and was killed in the fight. (Bhāgavata, Sūkha 10).

Vidūrathā. A king of the Arga dynasty. Gṛhastha the father of king Vidūrathā and Pracetas was his son. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

Vidyā I. A maid of Devī Umā. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 23), Stanza 48).

Vidyā II. A deity. This deity is worshipped as the deity of these three Vedas which are the most important of the religious or Vedic literature. Mention is made about this deity in the preface of Rgvedahāsya by Śāyaṇa, as follows.

Once Vidyā approached a Brahmin and said, "I am your wealth. Your duty is to impart me to disciples who are pure, celibate, law-abiding and active, and who protect the treasure. I hate disciples who are jealous."

Vidyādhara (S). A group of semi-gods. Vidyādharas, Apsarasas (celestial maids), Yaksas, Raksasas, Gandharvas, Kinmaras and so on are semi-gods. Of these Kinmaras are lut-players, and Vidyādharas wear garlands, and all these groups live in the sky. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 8, that when attracted by spells and incantations, Indra went to the Sarpasattra (serpent sacrifice) of Janamejaya, the Vidyādhara walked behind him (Indra).

Vidyānātha (Agastya). A Sanskrit writer on rhetoric. He was also called Agastya. He is the author of Prātipadudayam. The real name of Prātipadudrayam is Prātipadudrayasyabhāṣyam.

He was a member of the court of King Pratipaduraśvadhāva who ruled over the Kingdom of Waṅgali from 1295 to 1323 A.D. He has written a drama of five acts, under the name "Prātipadudraya Kalyāṇa." Prātipadudrayam is a book on rhetorical figures.
They are portraits, half-portraits and corrupted portraits. The whole of the figure will be made in (portraits) citras. In half-citas only the front view will be completed. Corrupted Citras are images done on the wall or rock.

3) Main images. Main images are mostly Saivite or Vaishnavite. There will be one or two other images. Worship of Devi (Goddess) is one of them. The Saivite will worship Pārvati also after Siva and the Vaishnavites Mahākālyani also after Visu. In South India the worshippers are Saivites and Vaishnavites.

4) Saivite. In India a large number of people worship Siva. There is not much difference in the mode of worship of these various people. There are worship which are in accordance with the Vedas and which are not. Forms of worship which are Sāsttvika (of goodness) and which are not, could be seen. The Saiva worship called Parasupada is very ancient. The phallas at Gadamball is considered to be as old as B.C. 2nd century. From this it could be inferred how old, the Saivite worship is in India.

5) The Śātvita images. Of the emblems denoting Śiva, the most important is the Phallas, which is of two kinds, movable and immovable. Risen by itself and/or erected and set firm and consecrated inside temples are immovable; that which is made of earth, metal, jewel, wood or stone is movable. There are Phalluses made for the time being. They are fixed on platforms or pedestals. They are of different sizes and shapes. The Phallas is of made of male stone and the pedestal of female stone.

6) The portions of Śiva. There are various kinds of images meant to reveal various attributes of Siva. Lingodhāvā (originated from Phallas), Candraskhara, Raudra, Umsanahita (with Umā) etc. are some of them. Kāmāntaka (killing Kāma or Cupid), Gajjar (enemy of Gaja), Kālī (Enemy of Yama) and Tripurādāhaka (burning Tripura) are figures of extermination. Siva has these figures when destroying Candras, Viṣṇu, Nāndikāvāra, Vīgheśa and Arjuna also. There are a large number of images in various dancing poses.

There are four other figures of Daksināmūrti, such as the explanation knowledge, yoga (or meditation, contemplation) and other ways of union with the Universal Soul, and Viṣṇādahara (carrying a lute). A few other for us are Bhikṣtapaka (begging alms), Kapāladhāra (wearing skulls), Gaṅgadāhara (wearing Gaṅga), Ardhmādāvāra (God half of whom is a woman), Viṣahvāhana (brayed on a bull), Viṣahabhakṣaka (eating poison) etc. The figures of Śadāśiva, Mahēsa, Ekādāśa (eleven Rudras), Vīdyeśvara and Murtiṣṭaka are seen occasionally here and there. There are scripture describing these figures.

7) The Deva (god) connected with Śiva. Among the gods connected with Siva, first place is given to Gaṇapati. Worship of Gaṇapati was in vogue from 6th or 7th century B.C. Perhaps the images that we see today were made after this period.

In South India temples dedicated to Gaṇapati are not scarce. The position of Gaṇapati is at the entrance of temples, at the foot of banyan trees, at the entrance of temples and at the south-west corner of Saivite temples.

There are images of Gaṇapati in the postures of standing and dancing. Main images are those with the trunk turned to the right and to the left. The trunk is turned to the right in some and to the left in others.

8) Subrahmanya. Subrahmanya is worshipped only in South India. Subrahmanya is known by various names such as Kumāra, Muruka, Kārttikeya, Skanda, Arumukha, Guha, and so on. Temples dedicated to Subrahmanya are seen in plenty in Tamil Nadu. They are all situated on the tops of hills. There is sufficient proof in the poetic works of the Sangha period, to the fact that Subrahmanya-worship was prevalent in South India. On excavation at the place Nagārjunakōṇḍa in the District of Guntor, images of Subrahmanya were found under the earth. They were as old as 3rd century B.C.

Images of Subrahmanya are seen in various postures and shapes such as sitting, with six faces, with one face, with two hands, with four hands, sometain with the state of having finished investiture with the Brahma-string etc. There are images sitting on the peacock also.

9) Other images. Images of Śakti, Lakṣmi, Earth-goddess, Sarasvati, Saptamātrī (Seven Mothers), Jeyāthā, Visu, the ten incarnations, the planets such as the sun etc. the deities of the weapons, the great god Śukti (lance), Nandikēvara, Gajdevi, Sātā, Keṭramālā, Brahmat, Guardians of the zones, Aśvinīdevas, half gods, etc. are also dedicated and worshipped in temples.

VIHANGA. A serpent (nāga) born in the race of the Naga Airāvata. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 12, that this serpent fell in the sacrificial fire of the serpent-sacrifice performed by Janamejaya and was burnt to death.

VIHANGAMA. A soldier of the giant Khara. This Khara who confronted Rāma and Lakṣmana in Daṇḍakāranya (forest Dandaka) had twelve army captains under him, including Vihaṅgama. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Aranya Kaṇḍa, Sarga 26).

VIHAYA. The son of Varca who was born in the family of Gritamad. Vīśaya was the son of this Vīshaya. (M.B. Amūṣāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 61).

VIHUNDA. An asura. This asura was the son of the mighty and great Asura Hunda. At the time of the fierce battle between the devas and the asuras, this mighty asura Hunda and Nahuṣa confronted each other and Hunda was killed. After this, Vihamunda, the son of Hunda fought with Nahuṣa. In the earlier part of the battle Vihamunda and his army suffered defeat. Vihamunda began to do penance in order to defeat the Devas who got terrified at this and went to Mahāviṇuśu and prayed for protection. Viṇu promised them saying that he would take necessary steps. When the Devas were gone, Viṇu took the form of a beautiful lotus and went to Vihunda. They met each other in the garden Nandana. Vihamunda fell in love with her. He wanted to marry her.

She said, "Oh, Handsome Vihamunda, I have no objection to be your wife. But there's a condition, you must gather seven crops of Kāmadha flowers and offer them as oblation to Śiva, and then make a garland of Kāmada flowers and put it on my neck. From that day onwards I am yours.

"Vihunda agreed to it. He went for the flowers. He wandered over forests and mountains. Nobody had any idea of such a tree or flower. Thinking that this condition, laid by the damsel, was a deceit played upon him, he stood perplexed when the hermit Sukra saw him. He told the hermit everything. Then Sukra told him, "Kāmodā is my mother. She is called the flower who came up from the sea of Milk at the time of the churning. She dwells at Gaṅgādārā. When she laughs, pure white fragrant flowers fall from her lips, on the water of Gaṅgā, every moment. When she is sad, the flowers that fall from her lips will red." Vihunḍa started for Gaṅgādārā. Narada knew this. He came to Vihunḍa. It is difficult to reach Gaṅgādārā and please Kāmodā, and obtain the flower. So the easiest way is to gather the flowers that come down through the water of Gaṅgā." Vihunḍa agreed. He took his seat on the bank of Gaṅgā and waited for the flowers to come.

Narada decided to cause harm to Vihunḍa. So he went to Kāmodā and by way of telling her news, he informed her that the hermit Bṛগuḍ had cursed Māhāyupāt and changed him into a man. On hearing this Kāmodā began to cry. Red flowers fell from her lips. They were carried down in cluster by the water of Gaṅgā. Vihunḍa gathered them and went to the dwelling place of Sīva. Sīva and Pārvatī saw this by their inward eyes. Pārvatī did not like the idea of offering red flowers at the feet of her beloved husband. She was frightened for him. She advised Pārvatī to offer pure white flowers at his feet standing as a boy. Vihunḍa came with red flowers. Pārvatī appeared in the form of a boy. Both began to vie with each other in offering flowers at the feet of Sīva. Gradually it changed to a fight between the boy and Vihunḍa. In the fight Vihunḍa was killed. (Padma Purāṇa, some chapters from 19).

VIJAYA I. A minister of Dāsāratha. (Vīmaṇī Ramayāna, Bālaśakāṇḍa, Sarga 7, Stanza 3).

VIJAYA II. A gate-keeper of Vaikuṇṭha. (See under Jaya).

VIJAYA III. A Son of Purāṇas. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Siṣṭha 9, that Aśyū, Śrutāyus, Satiyāyus, Raṇa, Viśvajaya and Jaya were the sons born to Purāṇa.

VIJAYA IV. A King of Kosalā. It is stated in Brāhmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 73, that this King Viśvajaya of Kosalā confronted Parā urāma and was defeated.

VIJAYA V. This was the secret name given to Arjunā by Dharmaśutra during the time of their pseudonymity. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 33).

VIJAYA VI. One of the hundred sons of Dīvārrāstra. He joined with Jaya and Durjaya, two Kauravas and fought with Nila, Kāśyapa and Jayatsena. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 45).

VIJAYA VII. The name Viśvajaya is used as a synonym of Sīva in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 31.

VIJAYA VIII. The name Viśvajaya is used as a synonym of Viśnu in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 146, Stanza 21.

VIJAYA IX. A King who ruled over the city of Vārapā. Viśvajaya destroyed the city of Kālaḍavī and the forest Kālaḍavī rāte there. Later he gave the forest to Indra. The most powerful King of this dynasty was Uparāṣṭra (Kālaḍavī Purāṇa, Chapter 92).

VIJAYA X. A country of ancient India famous in the Purāṇa. (Mahābhārata, Bālaśma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 45).

VIJAYA XI. The trident of Sīva. During the journey to Bhadravatī, of Subrahmanya, this trident Viśvajaya of Sīva went behind Kīmba. This trident had three prongs. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 251, Stanza 37).

VIJAYA XII. A bow of Indra. This is as bright as Gāndiva and as strong as the bow Sāṃghadharus of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The bows of the Deva, considered to be most divine, are Viśvajaya, Gāndiva and Śrīra. Viśvajaya belongs to Indra, Gāndiva to Varuṇa and Śrīra to Viṣṇu. Once Drumā, a Kimpūrivā (demigod) who lived in the mountain Gaṅgābhumīḍaṇa got Viśvajaya from Indra. After that Bṛguṇa, his disciple got this bow from Drumā. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 5).

VIJAYA XIII. The divine bow of Karnā. It is said that this bow was the most divine of all weapons. This bow which was made by Rūvaśkarmā, originally belonged to Indra. At that time Indra had defeated many asuras with the help of this bow. Indra gave this bow to his loved disciple Parāsura. Karnā got it from Parāsura. It is said that this bow was superior to Gāndiva. It was with the help of this bow that Parāsura conquered the Kṣatriyas twentyone times. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 42).

VIJAYA I. The daughter of King Dāsittha. The emperor Bhāmaṇḍa married her. A son named Subhra was born to them. (M.B. Subhra Parva, Chapter 14).

VIJAYA II. Daughter of Duryūtīṇ, the King of Madra-deśa. This Viśvajaya was the wife of Subhra the son of Gandu. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 80, that a son named Subhra was born to Subhra by Viśvajaya.

VIJAYA III. A synonym of Devi Durgā. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 10).

VIJAYADASAM. A festival of Indra. As this festival is celebrated for nine nights from the last to the 9th in the bright lunar fortnight of the month of Kāma (SeptemberOctober) it is known as Navaṭīti (Nine nights) and as it continues up to Dāsami (the tenth night) it is called Dāsara. The Hindus believe that the Viṣvajaya dasam (the victorious tenth) was the day on which Devi Durgā killed Mahiśāsura. Since this day is considered to be a suitable moment to begin the learning of all the arts which would enable one to carry on a successful life. Sarasvati is considered the transfiguration of Durgā. As people became less superstitious, they began to consider the story of killing Mahiśāsura as a metaphorical saying, to mean the killing of ignorance. So the day of victory of Devi Durgā (the same as Sarasvati) is considered to be the auspicious moment for the beginning of learning. The warrior places his weapons, the man of literature his books and pen, the musician his musical instruments, at the feet of Devi and with devotion and worship receives them back from Devi on the Viṣvajyadan day at an auspicious moment.

VIJAYALAKŚMI. One of the eight Laksminis. The duty of Vijayalakṣmi was keeping the treasury of Brāhma. Once she showed carelessness in her duty. So Brāhma cursed her to go and guard the gate tower of Rāvana. Accordingly, Viṣṇu guarded the gate of Lanka under the name Laṅkāḷakaṇṭhi. When she was hit by Hanumān she obtained her original form and returned to the world of Devas. (See under Laṅkāḷakaṇṭhi).

VIJITĀŚVA. One of the five sons of emperor Pṛhu. Viṣṇuāśva decided to perform one hundred horse-sacrifices and completed ninety-nine. Seeing this Indra feared that he might be defeated. So he stealthily took away the sacrificial horse of Viṣṇuāśva. There was a fierce battle between Indra and Viṣṇuāśva in which Indra was defeated, and Viṣṇuāśva recovered the stolen horse from Indra. It was from that day onwards that this son of Pṛhu got the name Viṣṇuāśva. Being pleased with the King at this expert fighting, Devendra taught him the art of vanishing. (Bhāgavata. Skanda 4).

VIJVALA. Son of the bird Kuṭjala who was a famous scholar. (For further details see under Subāhu. XIV).

VIKRAṂADĪṬIYA. Vikramadīṭiya, who is believed to be one of the mighty emperors of Bhārata, was an extraordinarily wise, righteous and valiant ruler. There are several stories in all the languages of India, prevalent everywhere. They are generally called Viṃśchatāvatī stories. Vikramadīṭiya was the son of Mahendrāditya, King of Ujjayini. Mahendrāditya and his wife Sūryaṇa were in great distress as they were childless. Sumati, the Prime Minister, Vaijayudha, the army commander, and Mahīdhara, the priest, were as distressed as the royal couple. The King and the queen engaged themselves in fast and prayer.

In the meanwhile, the Devas found life extremely difficult due to the wicked deeds of the barbarians, and they went to Kālīśvara and told Rudradēva of their grievances. They said, "Oh! Lord! All the asuras exterminated by yourself and Mahāvīra, are born on the earth as Barāvānas. They commit great sins such as killing the Brahmins, obstructing sacrifices, carrying away hermit damsels etc. The sacrificial offerings in the sacred fire with Vedic Mantras by Brahmins, is the food of Devas. Because of the troubles caused by the Barbarians in the earth, the sacrifices are hindered and the Devas are in trouble due to lack of food. So a being, mighty and strong enough to exterminate all the Barbarians on the earth, should take incarnation." Sīva agreed and sent the Devas back to their world. Then he called Mālyāvaṇ and told him to take birth as the son of Mahendrāditya in the city of Ujjayini.

VINAŚAYAKACATURTHI. One of the important festivals of the Hindus. This is called the day of worship of Gaṇeṣṭha. The Caturthi (4th day) of the bright lunar fortnight in the month of Sinha is the birth day of Gaṇapati. It is a famous festival in North India. They make the images of Gaṇapati, every year, and make offerings to them on this particular day. It is believed, that he who sees the moon on Vināṣaya Caturthi, will be subjected to dishonour and derision. This belief is based on the following story. Gaṇapati is very fond of sweetmeats especially Kesukkattai (globular solid sweetmeat, called Modaka). It is the custom in North India to worship Gaṇapati by offering these sweetmeats, even today, with all kinds of festivities. On one birthday Gaṇapati went from house to house and ate bellyful of modakas and returned home on his conveyance, the rat. On the way the rat saw a snake and began to tremble with fear. Due to the shivering of its legs Gaṇapati fell down. The belly of Gaṇapati was broken due to the fall and a large quantity of modakas came out. Gaṇapati gathered everything that fell out of his belly and stuffed them again in the stomach and joining the cut edges entwined the snake tightly round the stomach. Candira who was standing in the sky seeing all these things laughed with contempt. At this, Gaṇapati got wild and plucked his tusk and throwing it at the moon cursed him. “Let nobody look at you on the Gagapati festival day." (Brhadnavavarta Purana). This story is slightly different according to Gagapati Purana. That story is, that Sri Paramesvara gave a plum to his elder son Subrahmanya without the knowledge of his younger son Ganapati, on the 4th day of a bright lunar fortnight and the moon who smiled at it, was cursed.

(xviii) Virāṭa fought with Jayadratha. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 45.)

(xix) Virāṭa fought with Vīndu and Anuvinda. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 20.)

(xx) In the fight with Śalya, Virāṭa fell down unconscious. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Stanza 34.)

(xxi) In the battle which followed, Droṇācārya killed Virāṭa. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 6.)

(xxii) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sīt Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 33, that the funeral ceremony of Virāṭa was conducted in a befitting manner and in Mahābhārata, Sūnī Parva, Chapter 42, Stanza 4, that Yudhishthira performed offering to the Manes for him. (xxiii) After death, Virāṭa entered heaven and joined the Marudganas. (M.B. Vargāroṣa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 15.)

(xxiv) The synonyms used in Mahābhārata for Virāṭa are, Matsya, Matsyapati, Matsyāra, Matsyarāja etc.

VIROGANA I. The country called Matsya. King Virāṭa was the ruler of this country. (See under Virāṭa.)

VIROGANA III. The Capital of Matsya. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 20, that once the Kauravas and the Trigartas attacked this country.

VIROGANA II. A prominent Parva (section) in Mahābhārata.

VIROGANA I. A horse. The two horses yoked to the chariot given to Agastya by the giant Ivala, were called Virāva and Surava. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 99, Stanza 17.)

VIROGANA I. A child born to King Tāladvayā by Nārada, when he assumed the form of an illusory woman of beauty. (For further details see under Tāladvayā I.)

VIROGANA II. A King who ruled over the city of Sāketa. His chief queen was Māhī, who was the daughter of a Yaksī. Virovārānma stopped the sacrificial horse of the Pāndavas when Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna got ready to fight with Virovārānma to recover the horse, Virovārānma, with the help of Yama fought with them. At last Kṛṣṇa entered into a treaty with Virovārānma and got the horse back.

Virovārānma had five sons named Subhālāka, Subhāla, Lolā, Kauvala and Sureka. (Jain, Aval. 47-49.)

VIROGANA I. A King born in the family of Bhārata. To Virovārata who was the son of Madhu, two sons named Manthu and Amanthu were born. (īlahavātā, Fifth Sandukha.)

VIROGANA II. See under Virogana.

VIROGANA III. See under Virogana.

1) General information. An asura was the son of Prahlāda and the father of Mahābhāri. Three sons Virocana, Kumbha and Nikumbha were born to Prahlāda by his wife Dhrī. Virocana, though an asura, performed rites and rituals carefully. He was kind towards Brahmins. His son Bālī became famous and got the name Mahābach. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 5.)

2) Other details.

(i) Once there was a controversy between Virocana and Sudhanvā. (See under Sudhanvā II.)

(ii) During the time of emperor Pṛthu, when the asuras milked the earth Virocana stood as the calf. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 63, Stanza 20).

(iii) Virocana is also called a king of the ancient Kings of prominence. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 50).

(iv) There is a story about the quest for knowledge about universal and individual souls, by Indra and Virocana, in Chāndogyopanisād, as given below.

Once the Devas and the asuras approached Prajāpati to learn about Brahman, the impersonal God. Prajāpati told them: "Ātman (soul) is the first satrva (essential being) which is subtle, eternal, desireless and unimaginable in the earth. Having heard this philosophy about the soul, the Devas selected Indra, and the asuras selected Virocana and to know the details, they sent them to Prajāpati as his disciples. Indra and Virocana stayed with Prajāpati for several years to know more about Ātman. But Prajāpati did not reveal to them the secret about Brahman. At last to test them Prajāpati said "Your reflection that you see in water or mirror is the Ātman (soul)."

Virocana, who mistook what the Prajāpati said as truth immediately took his bath, put on costly dress and ornaments and stood near water and saw his reflection in water. After that, taking the reflection for soul, he spread this doctrine among his people. With this the asuras accepted body as soul. But the Devas did not recognize this philosophy. They accepted the doctrine that Ātman is that essence of Nature which is alien to body and mind which is pure.

(v) There are two different statements about the death of Virocana in the Purāṇa.

(1) In the battle with Tārakāśura, Virocana was killed by Devendra. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 99. Brahmāṇḍa 1.20.55; Matya: 10: 11; Padma Purāṇa, Śrīstī Khaṇḍa 16).

(2) The Sun God was pleased with Virocana and had given him a crown. The sun told him that death would come only if that crown was removed from the head by someone. Because of this boon Virocana became arrogant. So Mahāviṇu took the form of a beautiful woman and entered Virocana towards him and taking away the crown killed him. (Ganapā Purāṇa 2, 22).

According to Nārada Purāṇa, Mahāviṇu took the form of a Brahmin and reached the palace of Virocana. There changing the righteous wife of Virocana into a mad woman he killed Virocana.

(vi) Virocana had two wives called Viśālakṣi and Devi. Two children, Bajra and Ya odharā were born by them. The wife of the famous Tvaṣṭā was this Ya oda rā. (Brahmāṇḍa: 3: 1: 85; Nārada Purāṇa 2: 32: Bhāgavata, Śrīkanda 9).

(vii) Virocana had five brothers named Kumbha, Nikumbha, Ayusman, Sibi and Bāškali and a sister named Virocana. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa 84: 19).

VIROCANA II. A son of Śhitarāstra. He was also called Durvirocana. This Virocana was present at the Suyāvan marriage of Draupadī. (M.B. Ādī Parva, Chapter 124, Stanza 14).

VIROCANA I. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śāliya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 30).

VIROCANA II. Daughter of Prahlāda the asura king. Tvaṣṭā married her. A son named Virāja was born to this couple. (Bhāgavata, Śrīkanda 5). In Vāyu Purāṇa, it is stated that the hermit Trisūra also was born to Tvaṣṭā by Virocana.

VIRODHĀ. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Taksāka. This serpent was burnt to death in the sacrificial fire of Janēvasāya. (M.B. Ādī Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 9).

VIRODHĀ. One of the three daughters of Surāsa, the mother of the nāgas (serpents). The two other daughters were Anāla and Uru. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādī Parva, Dāsāṇīpāta, Chapter 66, that from this daughter Virodhā, the Virosas, such as Lāla, Gula, Vālī etc were born.

VIROPA. A son of Ambartīra, a king of the solar dynasty. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Śrīkanda 9, that Ambartīra had three sons called Kauśuma, Sambhu and Viropā.

VIROPA II. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śrīkanda, Parva, Chapter 199, Stanza 88, that once Krodha (anger) changed its form and assumed the name Viropā and conversed with Iksvaku.

VIROPA III. An asura (demon) Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed this asura. (M.B. Śañkha Parva, Dāsāṇīpāta, Chapter 38).

VIROPA IV. One of the eight sons of Aṅgiras. The seven sons of Aṅgiras were Śrī Puruṣa, Karta, Utkatā, Paṣaṇa, Śrī, Gura, Samvarī and Sūdhavya. These sons are called the Viśūnas or the Aṅgayas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 130-131).

VIROPAKA. An asura. In days of old this asura had ruled over the world. (Mahābhārata, Śrīkanda Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 51).

VIROPAKA I. One of the elephants which hold up the earth from Pātāla (underworld). It is said that earthquakes occur when this elephant shakes its head. (For details see under Asudigaja).

VIROPAKA II. A Rākṣasa (giant) who fought on the side of Rāvaṇa against Śrī Rama and Lakṣmaṇa. It is mentioned in Uttara Rāmāyaṇa that this giant was born to Mālavān by a Garudha damsel called Sundari. Seven sons named Vajramuni, Viropāka, Durmukha, Sopadga, Yajakoṣa, Maṭṭa and Unmattā and a daughter named Naḷa were born to Mālavān by Sundari. All these sons held prominent places in the army of Rāvaṇa. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12, that in the battle between Kāma and Rāvaṇa, when Kumbhakarna was killed, the army was commanded by Kumbha, Nikumbha, Mahārīṣa, Ama, Mahārājā, Mahārīṣa, Maṭṭa, Unmattā, Praghasa, Bhāsakarna, Viropāka, Devāntaka, Nārāntaka, Trisūra and Atīkāya. When Sugriva devastated the army of Rāvaṇa and caused havoc among the giants, Viropāka, who was an archer got on an elephant and entered the battlefield. He confronted Sugriva first. He thwarts the stone flung at him by Sugriva, and struck him. For a time Sugriva found it difficult to withstand him. But in the battle which followed, Sugriva struck Viropāka down and killed him. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kanda, Sarga 97).

VIROPAKA III. One of the thirtythree notorious Dāmavāra (demons) born to Prajāpati Kālipa by his wife Dānu. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādī Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 22, that it was this asura called Viropāka, who had, later, taken rebirth as King Citravarmā.
VIRÜPAKŠA IV. An asura who was the follower of Naradiṣāra. This Virūpaṅka was killed on the bank of the river Ganges (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Dākṣipāryapātra, Chapter 38).

VIRÜPAKŠA V. A Rāksasa who was the friend of Ghaṭotkaca. (Mahābhārata, Droupā Parva, Chapter 175, Stanza 15).

VIRÜPAKŠA VI. This giant named Virūpaṅka was the friend of a stork called Rājaḍharmā. (Mahābhārata Śānti Parva, Chapter 170, Stanza 15). (See under Gautama V).

VIRUPAŠA VII. One of the eleven Rudras.

VIRUPAŚVA. A King. This King had never eaten flesh in his life. (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 156, Stanza 15).

VIRUT. See under Virudhā.

VIRYASULIKA. In ancient days the Kings wanted to give their daughters in marriage to the most valiant youths. The custom of showing their valour before the people, before getting the damsel became more prevalent, than giving money to get the girl. Thus marrying a girl by showing his valour is called Marriage by giving Viryasūlika. (Sūlika means Nuptial gift). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 5).

VIRYAVĀN. An eternal Viśādeva. (god concerned with offerings to the Maṇḍa). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 31).

VIŠAČIKITSĀ. (Treatment for poison). See under Sarpa.

VIṢA. A King who was the son of Jayadratha and father of King Senajit. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

VIṢAČA. One of the three brothers of Skandadeva. The other two were Śākha and Naigameya. There is a story regarding them in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, as follows:—

Skandadeva approached his father Śiva. At that time Śiva, Pārvati, Agni and Gāṅga, all wished in their minds that Skanda should come to him or her. Understanding the desire of each, by Yogahāra (the power obtained by union with the Universal Soul) Skanda divided himself into four persons, Skanda, Viśākha, Śākha and Naigameya and went to each of them respectively and fulfilled their desire. (For further details see under Subrahmanyas).

VIṢAČAKHA. A hermit. Mention is made in M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 19, that this hermit stays in the palace of Indra, glorifying him.

VIṢAČAKHA. A Sanskrit playwright. It is believed that his period was between the centuries five and nine A.D. His prominent play is “Mudrā Rāksasa”. He is known by the name Viṣaṅkhađeva also. He was the son of King Bhāskaradatta and the grandson of Vriji vardatore. Of his works, only Mudrārāksaśa has been found till now.

VIṢAČAHA. A holy place of pilgrimage. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 90, Stanza 15, that this spot became a holy place because Indra, Varuna and other gods did penance here.

VIṢA. A son of Iśāyāka. Mention is made in Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bādhakāṇḍ, Chapter 27, that a son named Viṣa was born to Iśāyāka, by the celestial maid Ālabūsā and that Viṣāla built a city named Viṣāla.

This Viṣāla had a son named Hemacandra. It was near the city Viṣāla, that Ālayav, the wife of Gautama, stood as stone, because of a curse. (See under Viṣṇapūri).

VIṢAĻĀ I. The queen of Ajaśūrī, a King of the Lunar dynasty. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 55, Stanza 37).

VIṢAĻĀ II. The King Gaya once performed a sacrifice in the country called Gaya. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śāla Parva, Chapter 38, Stanza 20, that Sarasvatī attended this sacrifice assuming the name Viṣāla.

VIṢAĻĀ III. Wife of King Bhima the son of Mahāvīrya. Three sons, Trayaṇuni, Puṣkari and Kapi were born to Bhima by his wife Viṣāla. (Vāyu: 37: 158). In Matsya Purāṇa, Viṣāla is mentioned as the wife of King Urukṣaṇa.

VIṢAĻĀKI I. A Yakṣa (semi-god). Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 10, that this Yakṣa stays in the palace of Kubera, glorifying him.

VIṢAĻĀKI II. A King. Vasudeva married this King’s daughter Bhadra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 42, that after the marriage Bhadra was kidnapped by Śiva當您在.

VIṢAĻĀKṢA I. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śāla Parva, Chapter 88, Stanza 13, that this Viṣalākṣa was killed by Bhīmasena in the battle of Bhārata.

VIṢAĻĀKṢA II. Younger brother of King Viṣṭāta. He had another name Madīrākṣa. (M.B. Viṣṭāta Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 19).

VIṢAĻĀKṢA III. A son of Garuda. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 9).

VIṢAĻĀKṢA IV. A King of Mithilā. He was present at the sacrifice of Rājasūya (Imperial consecration) of Yudhīśhṭhira. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

VIṢAĻĀKṢI. An attendant of Subrahmanyas. (M.B. Sāla Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 3).

VIṢAĻĀPFURI. A holy place on the basin of the Ganges. This place is in the forest Badda. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 90, that the hermitage of Naranārāyaṇas, stood in this place. This city was built by the King Viṣāla. (See under Viṣāla).

VIṢAĻĀY. A river famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 20, that this river stays in the Palace of Varuṇa glorifying him. This is a holy river. One could obtain the fruits of Agniṣṭoma Yajña (a sacrifice) by taking a bath in this river.

VIṢAĻĀY. A medicine. This medicine is used to excrast the arrow-heads that might have stuck on the body. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 289, Stanza 6).

VIṢAĻĀYAKAṆAM. See under Mṛtaśaṅkīvīna.

VIṢAṬHA. A son born to Bālaśana by Revatī. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 31: 6).

VIṢIKA. A King of the birds. It is stated in Bṛhaṇḍāraṇa Purāṇa, that Viṣāla was one of the sons born to Garuḍa by Śukī.

VIṢṆAPŪ. A hermit who was the son of hermit Viṣṭāka. This Viṣṇapū was once lost and was found again by the help of the Aśvin. This story is given in Rgveda, Manḍala 1, Anuśāsena 17, Sūkta 118.)
VIŚNU

1) General information. Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Maheśvara are the Lords of creation, sustenance and extermination of this perishable universe. These trimūrtis (three figures) also are perishable. It is said, that one day of Brahmā will constitute thousand four-fold (catur) yugas and that during the life of Brahmā, fourteen Indras will fall down from heaven and die. This is a Brahmā age. The ages of two Brahmās constitute the age of one Viṣṇu. At the end of the age Viṣṇu also will perish. The age of Viṣṇu is double the age of Viṣṇu. Siva also will perish at the end of his age. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 5).

When everything perishes there comes the deluge (the great flood). After that, for one hundred and twenty Brahmās vāras the universe will be desolate and void. In that deep eternal silence, Viṣṇu will be seen sleeping on a banyan leaf on the surface of water. That is the beginning of the next great age. In this stage, Bālamukunda is the name of Mahāviṣṇu. As he remains on Nāra or water he will be called Nāriyāga also.

The name Viṣṇu means he who possesses the habit of Vyāpana (To pervade). While Viṣṇu, who has the power to pervade over everything, is in whatever condition, lies on the banyan-leaf. From his navel, a lotus-stalk grows up, and on the top of the stalk, in the lotus flower, Brahmā comes into being. Brahmā does penance before Viṣṇu and extols him. Mahāviṣṇu confers on Brahmā the power of creation of the subjects. That Brahmā perishes along with the deluge and in his place another Brahmā is born. Thus in the life-time of Viṣṇu two Brahmās come into being and perish.

2) Beginning. In days of yore, when Viṣṇu was lying on the banyan leaf as Bāla Mukunda, he began to think: “Who am I? Who created me? Why? What: have I to perform?” - and soon an ethereal voice was heard, “I am everything. Except me, there is nothing eternal.” From behind the voice Mahādevi appeared, and said: “Look Viṣṇu. What is that to wonder at? Whenever the universe is subject to creation, sustenance and extermination, you have taken origin by the glory of the Almighty. The Almighty or the omnipotence is beyond attributes. But we are all subjected to attributes. Your foremost attribute is Sattva (goodness - purity). Brahmā whose main attribute is the attribute of rajas (activity - passion), will originate from your navel. From the middle of the brows of that; Brahmā, Siva will be born, whose main attribute is Tamas (mermaid darkness). Brahmā, by the power of Tapas (penance) will acquire the power of creation and build the world. You will be the sustainer of that world. Siva will destroy the same world. I am Devī Māyā (Illusion personified as the wife of Brahmā), the great power depending on you for the purpose of creation.” After hearing these words of Devī, Viṣṇu went into meditation and deep sleep of contemplation.

3) Avatāras (Incarnations). When injustice and lawlessness abound in the universe, Viṣṇu will incarnate in the world in various forms and shapes, and will drive away injustice and will reestablish righteousness. The basis and the indispensable source of all the incarnations, is this spirit of the universe. All Devas, all human beings, and all animals are created from a portion of this soul of the universe, which in itself is a portion. Brahmā, first incarnated as Sanatkumāra and lived the life of a Brahmān student of chaste abstinence. The second incarnation was connected with the creation of the earth. It was the incarnation as a hog to redeem the earth which was immersed in the world of Raṣṭāla. The third incarnation was taken to create the sages and hermits. The Supreme God incarnated as the deva-hermit, Nārada and taught Pāñcarātra, the Vaiṣṇava-sāstra explaining the ways of observing Kārmas.

Fourthly, Viṣṇu took the incarnation of Nara-Nārīya-ga (two hermits) and performed tapas (penance). It is difficult to do. The fifth incarnation was that of Kapila who taught his disciple Āravi, a Brahmān, Sanākhyā (one of the six systems of Indian philosophy dealing with evolution). The next incarnation was taken, according to the request of Āravi, as his son under the name Dattātreya. Seventhly he took incarnation as Yajña, the son born to Prajāpāti Ruci, by his wife Aditi with the groups of devas (gods) such as Vāmanas and others to sustain the Manvantara (age of Manu) of Svāyambhuva. The eighth incarnation was as the son of Bhagavān Nābhi by his wife Meru, and the ninth was, as the inner soul of Pūru, according to the request of the sages and hermits, with a view to change the earth to such a state that medicinal herbs may grow in plenty everywhere. The ninth incarnation was that of Kṛṣṇa (Fishe) Cākṣusā Manvantara deluge; the eleventh, as turtle, to lift up the mountain Mandara; the twelfth as Dhanvantari, and the thirteenth was as Mohini (Charming woman). The fourteenth was that of Man-lion, the fifteenth was that of Vāmanas, the sixteenth that of Parasurāma, the seventeenth, that of Viṣṇa, the eighteen, that of Śrī, the nineteenth that of Rāma and the twentieth that of Kṛṣṇa in the dynasty of Viṣṇu. The twenty-first was as Buddha in the beginning of the age of Kali.

The twenty-second incarnation was in the name of Kalki as the son of the Brahmin Viṣṇu-yaśas. Each incarnation is explained in places where that word occurs. See under Avatāras.

The avatāras of Mahāviṣṇu are numerous. Thousands and thousands of incarnations originate from Mahāviṣṇu as streams flow from a lake which overflows at all times. Hermits, Manus, Devas, Sons of Manus, Prajāpati, all these are marks and portions of Mahāviṣṇu. (Vālmikī Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kanda, Sarga 15; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 5; Vālmikī Rāmāyaṇa, Kiskindha Kanda, Sarga 40; Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 89; Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 1; M.B. Śrītī Parva, Chapter 121; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12; Bhāgavata, Skanda 10; Bhāgavata, Skanda 5; Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 272; Vana Parva, Chapter 149; Śrītī Parva, Chapter 339).

4) Family life. Vaiśnavas is the dwelling place of Mahāviṣṇu. Mahālakṣmi is the prominent wife. It is seen in Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 9, that besides Laksmanedvi, Gaṅgā Devi and Sarasvatī also were the wives of Viṣṇu. Laksminādevi has taken several incarnations. Once she took birth from Khyātī, the wife of hermit Bhrigu. At this birth Dātā and Viḍhātā were her brothers. On another occasion, she arose from a lotus-flower which grew up from the sea of Milk. (To know more about the wives Laksmin, Gaṅgā and Sarasvatī, see under Gaṅgā).

There is none to be mentioned as the legitimate son of Mahāviṣṇu. But Brahmā is the first that could be imagined as the son of Viṣṇu. Besides, Mahāviṣṇu once created a bright son, by his mind. That son was named Virajas. Sârî is another son of Mahâvîṣṇu. Sîva became amorous with Mohini (fascinating woman)—the form which Mahâvîṣṇu took at the time of the churning of the Sea of Milk. They led a short family life as a result of which the son Sârî was born. (See under Sârî).

(vi) Virâpas. Curse. Mahâvîṣṇu had cursed and had been cursed on many an occasion. The most important of them are given below:

(i) The curse of Mahâkalakshmi. Once Mahâvîṣṇu looked into the face of Mahâkalakshmi and laughed for no reason. Thinking that Mahâvîṣṇu had been making fun of her, she cursed him saying “Let your head be severed from the body.”

At this period an Asura named Hayagrîva had done penance for a thousand years and obtained several boons. One boon was that he should be killed only by a man with the head of a horse. Hayagrîva attacked the devas (gods). Though the gods fought with Hayagrîva for many thousands of years they could not kill him. Even Vîṣṇu, although he is the greatest of all, admitted defeat. Using the bow as a prop to his chin he stood thinking for years. In the meanwhile a white bull began to eat the string of the bow. When the string was broken, the bow straightened with a sudden jerk and the head of Mahâvîṣṇu was severed from the trunk and was thrown away. Vîshvakûrma cut off the head of a horse and joined it to the trunk of Vîṣṇu, who instantly rose up and killed Hayagrîva. Thus satisfying the need of the gods and making the curse of Lakamî come true, Vîṣṇu regained his original form and returned to Vaikuntha. (Devī Bhâgavata, Skanda 1).

(ii) The curse of Bhīm. The Asuras who were defeated in the war with Devas, approached Pulomâ, the mother of their teacher-priest Sukra, and sought protection. Pulomâ, who was the wife of hermit Bhīrû, began to do penance for the destruction of devas. Knowing this Vîṣṇu aimed his weapon, the Dâruca, at her and killed her. Bhīrû got angry and cursed Vîṣṇu to take birth as a man and suffer the same fate at the hands of his wife for many years. This curse was the first cause of the incarnation of Sri Râma. (For details see under Bhîrû, Para 4).

(iii) The curse of Vîṣṇu. Once the handsome King Revanta, mounted on the horse Ucchisârasava and came to Vaikuntha. Looking at the handsome youth, Lakamî stood up and while enchanted by Revanta and his horse. Mahâvîṣṇu was displeased with this, and cursed him to take birth on the earth as a man. Accordingly she was born as a man and when the duration of the curse was over returned to Vaikuntha. (For details see under Ekavîra).

(iv) The curse of Vîndî. See under Mâyâśiva.

6) Conquests and wars. Wars are very few in the Purânas in which Vîṣṇu had not participated directly or indirectly. As almost all of them have been dealt with in various places in this book, they are not given here. Only a few of the prominent among them are mentioned here.

(i) Madhukâlavahâs. Madhû and Kaitabha are two asuras born from the ear-wax of Mahâvîṣṇu. They tried to attack Brahmâ and Vîṣṇu killed them. (See under Kaitabha).

(ii) Killing of Anâdaka. Anâdaka was a notorious asura. He was the minister of Mahâsârû. When war broke out between asuras and Devas, Anâdaka caused havoc among the devas. At last in the fight with Vîṣṇu Anâdaka was killed. (Devī Bhâgavata, Skanda 5).

(iii) Killing of Gîtvâsura. See under Vîtrûra.

(iv) Râhu. For the story of how Vîṣṇu cut into two the asura Râhu, see under Anûtrama.

(v) Contest with Brahmâ. The story of Vîṣṇu and Brahmâ making a competitive journey to find out the crest and foot of Sîva, is given with slight variations in most of the Purânas. (For detailed story see under Brahmâ, Para 5).

(vi) For the story of how Vîṣṇu confronted the asuras Nemi, Sundali and Mâyâman see under each of those words.

7) The weapons and ornaments of Vîṣṇu. The following are the prominent ornaments and weapons of Vîṣṇu.

(i) Sûtrasa. This is a mark on the chest. It is said that this is the mark imprinted by the angry Bhîrû who kicked on the chest of Mahâvîṣṇu. (See under Bhîrû).

(ii) Vîrâcana. This is a white conch. Even by the touch of this conch man becomes wise. (For further details see under Pârashu 3).

(iii) The Dispute Sundarâvâna. Vajranâbhâ is another name of this weapon. Vîṣṇu uses this weapon to deal with fierce enemies. This is a wheel with a hole in the centre and thousand arms going out from the centre. The outer edge is sharp. This Sudarâvâna can be operated by putting it on the right finger and turning it round, and releasing it at the enemy. Though it is terrible for the wicked and unjust, it forebodes good to good people and so it is Sudarâvâna (good to look at).

(iv) Kauîmadakh. This is the club. The syllable “Ku” means the earth. Kauîmadak means he who delight the earth. He who makes the earth delightful is Vîṣṇu. As the club is the property of Kauîmadaka (Vîṣṇu) it is called Kauîmadakh.

(v) Kastubha. This is the jewel of Mahâvîṣṇu. (Ku = the earth. Stûbhâ = Pervades (spreads). Kustubha = ocean. Kustubha—obtained from the sea. This jewel obtained from the sea of milk at the time of its churning, is worn by Mahâvîṣṇu on his neck. This is a red jewel.

(vi) Nandaka. This is the sword of Vîṣṇu. It is stated in Mahabhârata, Sânti Parva, Chapter 166, that this sword was obtained from Indra.

(vii) Sârî. This is the name of the bow of Vîṣṇu. This is called Vaiśnavacâpa (the bow of Vîṣṇu) also. A description is given in Valmiki Râmâyana, Bala-kanda, Sarga 25, as to how this bow was obtained. It is as follows:

Once the Devas made Vîṣṇu and Sîva quarrel with each other, to test their might. The fight between the two began. Vîshvakûrma gave each of them a bow. The bow of Vîṣṇu was called Vaiśnavacâpa; the bow of Sîva was called Saivâcâpa. This Vaiśnavacâpa is Sârî. Due to the power of Sârî, Sîva was defeated in the fight. Getting angry Siva gave his bow to the King Devarâ of Videha. It was this bow that Sri Râma broke at the time of the Sâvayânavaram marriage of Sîta. After the fight, Vîṣṇu gave his bow to Rûka. That bow changed hands from Rûka to Jannadagni and from him to Pârashûrama, who presented this bow to Sri Râma on his return after the marriage with Sîta.

(viii) Vaijâya. This is the necklace of Vîṣṇu. This necklace, made of five jewels stuck together, is known by the name Vamanâla also. Vîṣṇu has a charioter named Dûrûkâ and four horses named Sûrîva, Sûyâva, Meghapatraka and Valakhaka. Garuda is the conveyance of Vishnu. He holds conch, discus, club and lotus in each of his four hands. It is said that the discus was made by Vishvakarna with the dust of the Sun. In Vishnu Purana particular mention is made about the ornaments of Vishnu.

9) The names of Vishnu. The names of Vishnu given in Amarakosa and their meanings are given below.

1) Vishnu. He who is spread everywhere.
2) Narayan. (1) He who lies on water. (nāram = water). (ii) He who had adopted Nāra (human body) in incarnations. (iii) He who enters the human society (Nāra) as Jīvātmā (individual soul).
3) Kṛṣṇa. (1) of dark complexion, (2) He who does Karṣuṇa (pulling or dragging; on the agna (sin) of jagat (world).
4) Vaikunṭha. (1) The son of Viṣṇu. There is an incarnation as such. (2) At the time of creation twenty-three Tattvas (essences-elements) did not join with one another. So Vishnu joined earth to water, either to air and air to fire; Thus their individual existence was made Viṣṇu-putra-prevented. By achieving this he became Vaikuntha. (3) Viṣṇu means wisdom (knowledge).
5) Vaikuntha is he who has acquired knowledge. (4) Vaikuntha means holy basil (a herb). So Vaikuntha is he who wears rosary of holy basil. (5) Kuṭṭha means Māya—illusion. So Vaikunthha is Māya Maya or he who is blinded with illusion. (the female creative energy).
3) Viṣṇu-raTRA—. (1) Viṣṇu—tree—banyan tree. He who is universally known as banyan tree. (2) Viṣṇu—bangle of darba grass. (Poa grass). He whose earlobe is like this. (3) Viṣṇu = spread—he whose fame is spread everywhere.

8) Keśava (Ka-Brahmā, Ica-Siva), (1) The Lord of Brahman and Siva. (2) He who has killed Keśi. (3) He who has three Keśas—heads; i.e. Brahman-Viṣṇu-Iṣa.
5) Madhava. (1) Dhava-husband of Mā-Laksmi. (2) He who is born of the dynasty of Madhu. (3) He who has killed Madhu.
10) Svabhū. He who comes into existence by himself. (1) Dātārī the enemy of Dātānas (the asuras, demons).
12) Pundarkīkā. (1) With aksis—(eyes) like punda-
15) Pitāmbara. He who wears yellow silk.
16) Acyuta. He whose position has no displacement.
17) Śārīrī. He who has the bow called śārīrī.
18) Viṣvaksena. He whose arms spread.
19) Janārada. (1) He who destroys Janana-birth (birth and death); (2) He who has destroyed the asuras called Janas.
20) Upendra. He who had become the younger brother of Indra by taking birth as Vāmana.
21) Indraśarva. Younger brother of Indra.
22) Cakrāpāni. He who has cakra—the weapon Discus—in his hand.
23) Gaurītuja. He who has four hands.
24) Padmanābhī. He who has lotus in his navel.
26) Viṣṇudeva. (1) The son of Vasudeva. (2) He who dwells in all living beings as individual soul.
27) Trivikrama. He who has measured the three worlds in three steps. (In his avatāra as Vāmana).
28) Devakinandana. The son of Devaki.
29) Sauri. Born in the dynasty of Suraṇa.
30) Ārjuna. The husband of Lakṣmī.
31) Puruṣottama. The noblest of men.
32) Vanamālī. He who wears the necklace which reaches up to the leg and is called Vanamālī.
33) Balīdhrami. He who had killed the asura called Balī.
34) Kaumārāśi. The aśatī—(enemy) of Kaumārā.
35) Adhokṣaja. He who is not discernible to the organs of senses.
36) Viṣvamīhara. He who rules over the Viṣṇu (world).
37) Kaitabha. He who became victorious over Knajabha.
38) Vidū. Expert in all things.
39) Śrīvaṭālaścchana. He who has the mark or scar of Śrīvala on his chest.
40) Puruṣāparā. The earliest man.
41) Yajñapūrṣa. He who is remembered in yāgas—sacrifices.
42) Narakāntaka. He who had killed Narakā.
43) Jalaśāyī. He who lies in water.
44) Viṣvāru. One who has the cosmic form.
45) Mūkunda. He who gives salvation.
46) Murāmadhana. He who had depressed Mura.
10) Sākara Nāmañ. (Thousand names of Viṣṇu). The list of thousand names of Viṣṇu is present in Padma Purana, Uttarākhaṇḍa, Chapter 72. In Mahābhārata, Amuśāna Parva, Chapter 140, also all the thousand names are given. Variations are seen in these two lists.
11) Other details (i) Mention about Mahāviṣṇu occurs in several places in Rgveda. But more prominence is given to Indra. Though Viṣṇu is exalted in five Rgveda mantras (incantations), when compared with other gods, Viṣṇu is only a lesser god. The story of Trivikrama is hinted in Rgveda. But there is no mention about the incarnation of Viṣṇu or MahāViṣṇu. Rgveda gives Mahāviṣṇu only the position of a younger brother of Indra. That is why the author of Amurakosa has given Viṣṇu synonyms such as Upendra, Indrāvaraja etc.

(ii) Mahāviṣṇu was one of those who came to see Śivaḷīḍa (Phallus) when it was detached and fell down at the curse of hermit Bhrigu. (For details see under Śiva).

(iii) Mahāviṣṇu gave Subrahmanyas as attendants two Vidyādhara named Vardhana and Nandana. (M.B. Śaiva Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 57).

(iv) Mahāviṣṇu gave Subrahmanyas the necklace Vaiva-

(v) It is stated in Mahābhārata, Saṁv Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 25, that Mahāviṣṇu stays in the assembly of Brahmā.
VIŚNUCITTA. A noble Vaishnavite devotee, who lived in Tamil Nadu. He lived in Villuppuram. It is said that he was for a time the son of Aditil. From that day onwards he got the name Aditya also. (For details see under Aditil). For further details regarding Mahāviṣṇu, see under Virāṇa Puruṣa, Prakṛti, Puruṣa, Brahma, Ātma, Amara, Garuda, Lakṣmi, Gaugā etc.

VIŚNUDĀSA. A Vaishnavite devotee who lived in ancient times. The story of this devotee who defeated his king Cola in devotion to Viṣṇu, is given in Padma Purāṇa, Utara Khāda, Chapter 110. The story is as follows. In days of old there was a king named Cola in Kailāspāla. He was a great worshipper of Viṣṇu and the name Cola. He had performed several sacrifices. On the banks of the river Tāmaraparṇi, stood his golden Yūpas (pegs on which sacrificial animals were tied) that the place looked like Caturānisha. Once the king went to the temple and worshipped Viṣṇu by offering flowers of gold and jewels such as chalices and prostrated before Viṣṇu and rose up. At that time a Brahmin named Viṣṇudāsa from his own city came there to worship, with holy basin and water as offerings. He worshipped with the leaves and flower-bunches of holy basil. Because of his worship by holy basil, the king’s worship by jewels, was dimmed. The emperor got angry and said, “Viṣṇudāsa, you are a poor man who does not know how to worship Viṣṇu. What merit has your worship of holy basil after mine of jewels?” Both began to contest on this point. At last the king said “Let us see who between us will get oneness with Viṣṇu first, you or I?” After saying this the king went to his palace. He appointed Mūdgalas the high priest and began to perform a sacrifice to Viṣṇu. The sacrifice was going on with great pomp and festivities. Viṣṇudāsa also was immersed in devotion to Viṣṇu to the best of his abilities. Once Viṣṇudāsa, after his usual prayer and meditation prepared rice-food. But somebody took away the cooked rice unseen by Viṣṇudāsa. Fearing that he would miss the time for his evening prayer, he did not think of cooking food again. Next day also he cooked food and was for a time proved wrong; that food was stolen. This continued. One day after cooking the food, Viṣṇudāsa waited close by in a hidden corner. He saw a low-caste man who was a mere skeleton because of famine, stealing the cooked rice and feeling pity on him he said, “Stop, stop. How can you eat it without any oily thing? See, take this ghos also.” Saying so he gave him the ghos. The out-caste was affected at this and ran away. On the way he stumbled and fell. Viṣṇudāsa ran to the spot and fanned him with his cloth. When he rose up the figure in the place of the low-caste was that of the real Śrī Nārāyaṇa with conch, discus and club held in his hands. Because of devotion Viṣṇudāsa stood benumbed. While the King Cola and the people were looking for him, Viṣṇudāsa got into the divine Viṣṇu and went to the world of Viṣṇu. VIŚNUDATTĀ. Son of the Brahmin named Vasudatta. The story of Vasudatta is quoted to prove that good omens at the beginning of a journey is a warning that the journey would not be fruitful and that it would be rather dangerous.

Viṣṇudattā became sixteen years old he decided to go to the city of Valabhi for his education. Seven Brahmin boys of his age gathered together and joined him. Deciding not to separate from each other, they started for Valabhi, without the knowledge of their parents. When they proceeded a little further they saw a bad omen. Viṣṇudatta stood undecided, but the others pressed him on and they continued their journey. After a while they reached a village of forest tribes. After walking through the village they reached the house of a woman. They got her permission to stay there for the night. They all lay in a corner. Immediately all slept. Viṣṇudatta alone lay awake. When the night advanced a man entered the house. The woman and the man talked for a while and carried on sexual sports, and then they lay together. In the morning Viṣṇudatta went out of the room. Viṣṇudatta saw everything through the cleavage of the shutters, and thought, “I am sorry that we have come to this house. He is not her husband. Sure I ate a harlot.” As he was thinking thus, footsteps were heard in the courtyard. A young man fixed his servants in their places. Then he entered the house and saw Viṣṇudatta. He was an Aditya in the name of Aditya. He was also a forest-man. He had a sword in his hand. He was the owner of the house. Viṣṇudatta said that they were travellers. When he heard it, without saying anything he got inside and saw his wife sleeping with her lover. With the sword in his hand, he cut off the head of the lover. He did not kill the woman, who did not know that her lover was killed. The forestier laid the sword down and lay in the same bed and slept. The light was burning. After a while the woman woke up, and saw her husband who had cut her lover into two. She stood up quickly and took the trunk of her lover and placed it on her shoulder and taking the head in one hand, went out and hid them in the pile of ashes. Then she returned and laid down. Viṣṇudatta had followed her stealthily and seen what she had done. He also returned and sat in the midst of his friends. She rose up and took the sword of her husband and killed him with it. Then coming out she cried aloud. “Oh dear! There travellers have killed my husband.” The servants woke up and came to the house and saw their master lying dead. They tried to spoil the body. Viṣṇudatta and his friends told them everything that he had seen, and showed them the head and the trunk of her lover, hidden in the ashes. When they saw this they understood everything. They tried the woman. At last she admitted the crime. They expelled her and drove her away. After this the travellers returned to the cave. (Kахаартит-сагара, Мадананатукуламбака, Танарага 8).

VIṢṆUDHĀRMĀ. A child of Garuḍa. (МахаТхрака, Удьога Парва, Chapter 101, Stanza 13).

VIṢṆUṆVARA. A great disease used by people to defeat their enemies. The antidote for Viṣṇuvāra is Śivavana. In ancient days, in the fight between Śrī Krṣṇa and Rāma, Viṣṇuvāra was sent against Śrī Krṣṇa by Bāṣa and to prevent it Śrī Krṣṇa sent Viṣṇuvāra against Bāṣa. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

VIṢṆULOKA. Vaikunṭha. It is mentioned in Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 7, that this world is situated on the top of Mahā Meru along with the worlds of Indra, Agni, Yama, Śiva, Brahmā etc.

VIṢṆUMATI. The queen of the king named Sañjana. Sañjana was the son born to Viṣṇumati and Sañjāna. (Kathaśāstraśāgara, Kathāmukhahalambaka, Taraṅga 1).

VIṢṆUPADA. A place at the source of the river Gaṅgā
See under Gaṅgā.

VIṢṆUPADITTHA. A holy place. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, that by bating in this place and worshipping Viṣṇu, one could attain the world of Viṣṇu. This place is on the bank of the river Viṣṇu. It is mentioned in Droha Parva, Chapter 0, that Arjuna, in his dream, had travelled with Śrī Krṣṇa to the world of Śiva and had, on the way, visited this holy place.

VIṢṆUPARJARA. A mantra (spell) taught to Devi Kītyāyani by Śiva. (See under Pārvatī).

VIṢṆUPUṬJA. (Form of worshipping Viṣṇu). There are conventions regarding the form of worshipping Viṣṇu and his satellite gods. The general form of that worship is given below:
Lakṣṇi, Gaṅgā, Dāhāti, Vidhyātā, Yamanā, Navamidhiśa
(nine treasures), Viṣṇupuruṣa, Sakti, Kaṃśa (turtle)
Arka, Pura, Adi (Beginning), Ardha (Earth), Bhūtvā (Earth) are the satellites of Viṣṇu. First you must bow before Ācyuta, (Viṣṇu) with all his satellites. Then worship Dharma (Virtue) Wisdom, self-renunciation, Supernatural power and Lawlessness, Ignorance, Want of Self-renunciation and want of supernatural powers, and then, Bulb, Stalk, Lūṣa, Filament and pericarp of the lotus and the, four Yugas (ages) and the three attributes, Saiva (purity) Rajas (passion) and Tamas (darkness). After this the three Madayas (regions) of Arka (the Sun) Soma (the Moon) and Vahini (fire). After this the nine powers should be worshipped. Vimala, Utkarṣiṇa, Jāna, Krṣṇā, Yuga, Prāvya, Saiva, Kaṃśa and Īṣā are the nine powers. In the same way, Durga, Sarasvati, Gaṅgapatī Yama also should be worshipped. As the next step heart, head, lock of hair, armour, eyes and the weapons should be worshipped. Then worship the conch, the Discus the club, the lotus, the mark Śrīvatsa, The Kaustubha, the Yamala, the Earth, Guru and Garuḍa. With prayer and oblations offered to Indra, Agni, Yama, Nṛṣṭi, Varuṇa, Vāyu, Kubera, Īṣā, Ananta and Brahmā, who are the guardians of the ten directions and the weapons and conveyance and Kumuda and the others (the four mountains standing near the Mahā Meru) and Viṣṇukṣemā (Viṣṇu) Viṣṇupūṭja will be finished. By performing this worship of Viṣṇu and his satellites, one could attain all one’s wish-(Mahi Purāṇa, Chapter 21).

VIṢṆUPURĀNA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. Viṣṇu
Purāṇa is the description of the activities in Varāha Kalpa (the age of Varāha—Boar). There are twenty-three thousand granthis in this Purāṇa. It is stated in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 272, that if this book Viṣṇu Purāṇa is given as a gift along with cow and water on the full moon day of the month of Aṣṭāśa, the giver would attain the city of Viṣṇu. (For further details see under Purāṇa).

VIṢṆURĀTA. Another name of Parīkṣit.

VIṢṆUSĀRMA. See under Viṣṇusārma.

VIṢṆUVRATA. A Vrata (fast or vow) taken thinking of Viṣṇu in mind. By taking this vow, one could get what one desires for.

Viṣṇu Purāṇa, after bathing him, image on the first day of the vrat of four days, beginning with the second day of the bright lunar fortnight in the month of Pauṣa, with mustard; on the next day with gingly seeds; on the third day with Orissa root and on the fourth day with all the medicinal herbs. ‘All the medicinal herbs’, means medicine such as Maṅdol, Orissa root, Costus, Bhūmik (stone juice), Saffron, Curcuma, bulb of Kaṅgūri, Flower of Meshul Champa and bulb of Cyperus grass. After bathing the image as given above, Viṣṇu must be exalted on the first day by the name Krṣṇa, on the second day by the name Acyuta, on the third day, by the name Ācyuta and on the fourth day, by the name Priyākṣa. The worship should be performed by offering flower, on the feet on the first day, on the head on the second day, on the eyes on the third day and on the head on the fourth day, and Candra should be given oblations and exalted by names such as Saṁī on the first day, Candra on the second day, Saṅākā on the third day and Indra on the fourth day. It is ordained in Chapter 177, of Agni Purāṇa, that the worship of Viṣṇuvrata should be conducted in this way. This is a form of worship observed by Kings, women and Devatas.

VIṢṆUVRDDHĀ. A King. He was the son of Tamasdāyuḥ. It is mentioned in Brahmanda Purāṇa that Viṣṇu-vyḍha who was a Kauriyā by birth, became a Brahmin by penance.

VIṢṆUYĀŚAS. Another name of Kalkī. (For further details see under Kalkī).

VIṢOKA I. The charioteer of Bhimasaṇa. In the Bhārata-battle Bhagadatta struck him and he fell unconscious.
(M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 76).

VIṢOKA II. A prince of Kekaya. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droha Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 3, that this prince was killed by Kaṃśa in the battle of Bhārata.

VIṢOKA III. A Vāsdeva prince born to Krṣṇa by Triśukrā. This prince who was the disciple of Nārada had written the book, “Sātvatatantra”. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

VIṢOKA I. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Saṁhyā, Parva, Dākṣiṇātyapātha, Chapter 39, that Śrī Krṣṇa had a wife called Viṣokī.

VIṢOKA II. An attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B.
Parva, Chapter 101, Stanza 5).

VIṢRAVAS. Father of Rāvana.

1) General Information. Viṣravas was the son born to Pulastya the son of Brahmā, by his wife Havirbhuva.
The son Viṣravasa was born to him by his wife
VIŚRĀVṢĀRAMA

Ilaṅkā (Ilaṅkā) and Rāvana and his brothers by his wife Kālikā in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 274, there is a song during the birth of Viśrāvṣāna (Kubera) as son to Viśravā. The son Viśrāvṣāna was born to Pulastya. Viśrāvṣāna rejected his father Pulastya and served his grandfather Brahmā. Pulastya did not like this. He generated another son Viśravā from half of his body. Viśravā tried to wreak vengeance on Viśrāvṣāna, who took refuge near Brahmā, who was much pleased at Viśrāvṣāna and granted him immortality, the state of being the owner of wealth, the position of 'Lokapāla', connection with Śiva, a son named Nalakābara, the city of Lankā, the Puspaka Vimāna, the kirdhip of the Yakṣas and the title Rājarāja (King of Kings).

2) Family Life. Kubera engaged three beautiful Rākṣasas (demonesses) Puspokā, Rākṣa and Māili to attend on Viśravā. Puspokā had the name Kālikā also. Kālikā gave birth to Rāvana and Kumbhakarna. Khara and Sūpānaṅka were born to Rākṣa and Māili gave birth to Viśhikaṇa. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 275, Verse 7).

VIŚRĀVṢĀRAMA. A holy site situated on the boundary of the country Anarta. Kubera was born in this place. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 89, Stanza 5).

VIŚUŚIKĀ. See under Brahmā, Parva 12).

VIṢUŚID. A nāga (serpent) born in the family of Kaikyapa. (Mahābhārata, Udyssey Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 16).

VIṢUVAT. The time, when night and day are equal, is called Viṣuvat. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Ādi 2, Chapter 8).

VIṢVA. A Kṣatriya King. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ṵide Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 36, that this King was born from a portion of Mayūra, an asura.

VIṢVĀ. A daughter of Prajapati Dakṣa. (Mahābhārata, Ṵide Parva, Chapter 63, Stanza 12).

VIṢVAṬI. A story about the birth of five Indras, on earth, in the form of Pándavas, is given in Mahābhārata, Ṵide Parva, Chapter 196, Stanza 29. Viṣvabhūk is one of them. The remaining four were, Bhūtadhāma, Sibi, Śanti and Tejauṣ.

VIṢVAṬIHKII. The fourth son of Brhaspati. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 17, that it is this Viṣvabhūk, who sits in the stomach of all living things and digests food. This Agni (fire) is particularly worshipped in sacrifices. The Purāṇas say that the river Gomati is the wife of this Agni (fire).

VIṢVĀC. An asura. Mention is made in Rgveda, Manḍala 1, Anuvāka 17, Sūkta 173 that the race of the Viṣvāc was destroyed by the Advindevas.

VIṢVĀCII. A celestial maid. She is one of the prominent celestial maidens such as Urvāti and others. Once King Yayāti played with Viṣvāc. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ṵide Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 65, that Viṣvāc had attended the birth festival of Arjuna and sang some songs. Her duty is to stay in the palace of Kubera and serve him. (M.B. Sābhi Parva, Chapter 52).

VIṢVADEVAS. A group of Devas. Dharma deva married ten daughters of Dakṣa, Viṣṇu was one of them. Viśvadeva are the sons of Viṣṇu. The Sādhyas were born from Sādhyā, the Marutvas from Marutvari, the Vasus from Vasu, the Bhuvas from Bhuvaṛṇī and the Devas who boast about Muhūrta (auspicious moment) were born from Muhūrtā. Lambi gave birth to Gṛoṣa and Yami to Nāgavīṣṇu. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Ādi 1, Chapter 15).

VIṢVAGASVA I. An ancient King in India. He was the son of emperor Prajapati, he had lived in the world of Iksvāku and the father of the King Adi. By giving alms of cows, he became famous. Viṣvagāsva was a pure vegetarian (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 20, Stanza 3; Anuvāsa Parva, Chapter 76, Stanza 25; Anuvāsa Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 58).

VIṢVAGASVA II. A King born in the dynasty of Pūru. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 14, that this King was defeated by Arjuna during his Northern Regional conquest. Viṣvajīt I. A King of the Aṅgā dynasty. He was the son of Jayadāratha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

VIṢVAJITII. A King descended from Yayāti. This King was the son of Suvratā and the father of Rippuḥaṇa (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

VIṢVAJIT III. The third son of Brhaspati. He has the intelligence of all the living beings in all the worlds. That is why he was given the name Viṣvajīt. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 18).

VIṢVAJITIV. An asura. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 53, that in days of yore, this asura had been ruling over the world because that is what the Brahmās decided.

VIṢVAKA. A herald of the period of Rgveda. Once Viṣṇušāp the son of this herald was lost. The father praised the Advindevas, who showed him his son as one shows a lost cow. (Rgveda, Manḍala 1, Anuvāka 8, Sūkta 116).

VIṢVAKARMĀ. The architect of the Devas.

1) Dhanvat. Viṣvakarmā is the son of Prabhāṣa, the eighth of the Eight Vasus. Vararuci, the sister of Brhaspati, a celibate woman who had attained Yoga-siddhi (union with the Universal Soul) and travelled all over the world was the wife of Prabhāṣa. Prajapati Viṣvakarmā was born to Prabhāṣa by Vararuci. This Viṣvakarmā was the inventor of innumerable kinds of handicrafts, the architect of all the gods, the gods of all the gods, and the most famous sculptor. He was the maker of all the serial chariots of the Devas. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Ādi 1, Chapter 15).

2) Children. Though mention is made about many children of Viṣvakarmā in various Purāṇas, five sons and four daughters are mostly spoken of. When Mahāviṣṇu took the incarnation of Śrī Rāma for a stipulated purpose, the devas took birth as monkeys in forests, to help Mahāviṣṇu. Mention is made in Vālmikī Rāmāyana, Bāla Kāṃpa, Sarga 18, that Nala a very big monkey was begotten by Viṣvakarmā. The other four sons of Viṣvakarmā are mentioned in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Ādi 1, Chapter 13. Four sons named Anjukāpāti, Aḥirbudhā, Tvāṣa and Rudra were born to Viṣvavāna. The third son is Rudra and sage Viṣvavāna was the son of Tvāṣa. Hara, Bahuṛṇa, Tryambaka, Aparajita, Viṣṇukapī, Śambhu, Kapārdī, Raiva, Māgvyādha, Savar, and Kapāli are the eleven Rudras. They are the Ivaras (gods) of the three worlds. It is said that in this way there are one hundred Rudras with shining radianc. The daughters of Viśvakarma. — The four prominent daughters are Santjá, Citrāṅgādā, Surūpā and Barhīmati. The Sun married Santjá. Sun got three children, Manu, Yama and Yamat by Santjá. (Vin 3, Chapter 2). Priyavrata, the brother of Ucçānapāda, married Surūpā and Barhīmati. Of these the first wife gave birth to ten sons named Agnideha, Idhaṇjāvī, Vajrābhīnā, Mahāvīra, Rukmaśeṭa, Ghraptapriṣṭha, Savana, Medhātithi, Vittihotra and Kavi and last of all a daughter named Orjajavat. Of these Kavi, Savana and Mahāvīra became abstemious and well-versed in Brahmavidyā (theosophy). By the other wife three other sons Utama, Tāmasa and Kalvata were born to Priyavrata. These grew up to be famous and gradually became lords of Manvantaras. This Priyavrata lived with his sons and ruled over the country for eleven Arbuda ages (Arbuda = ten crores). In spite of his old age, his faculties or his body did not become weak. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 4).

Citrāṅgādā was the fourth daughter of Viśvakarma. Gurjāci was her mother. The young and beautiful Citrāṅgādā went to bath in the river in the Nālimā forest. When she got into the water the prince Suratha, the son of King Sudeva came there. Their eyes met. Both fell in love with each other. In spite of the advice of her maid she succumbed to the desire of the King. Knowing this her angry father Viśvakarma came to her and said, "Since you have deviated from the path of righteousness and abandoned your soul to a libertine, you will not have marriage, and hence you will not enjoy the pleasures of having a husband or child." As soon as she was cursed, the river Sarasvatī carried the prince Suratha thirteen yoganas down along with her current. Because the King was washed away by the current Citrāṅgādā fell down unconscious. The maids sprinkled the water from the river Sarasvatī on her face. Still she lay there uncared. Thinking that she was dead her maids went in different ways to fetch firewood and fire. When the maids were gone, she came to herself and looked on all sides. Seeing none of her maids in the vicinity, she felt miserable and jumped into the river Sarasvatī, and the current carried her down and pushed her into the great river Gomati. Being aware of her future, the great river Gomati pushed her down and placed her in a big forest where lions, leopards, tigers etc. lived in plenty.

A Guhyaika (a section of Yakṣa) who was going through the sky, saw Citrāṅgādā in the forest, and in reply to his enquiry she told her story to him. Guhyaika blessed her and advised her to go to the temple close by and to worship Śrīkaṇṭhesvara, so that every thing might end well. Accordingly Citrāṅgādā reached Śrīkaṇṭhesvara on the south of Kālindī, bathed in the Yamunā at noon and went to the temple and bowed before Śrīkaṇṭha Mahēśvara.

At that time the hermit Rśṭadvja, well-versed in Sāmaca came there to bathe. The hermit called Citrāṅgādā and enquired about her. She told the hermit all that happened to her. Hearing her story, the hermit became angry and cursed Viśvakarma. "Let that Viśvakarma who has behaved so cruelly towards his own daughter become a monkey." Then he called Citrāṅgādā and said to her. "Good girl, go to the holy place called Saptagodāvara and worship Hātakaśvara Mahādeva. Devavati, the daughter of the sura Kandāramśāl the hermit woman Damayanti, the daughter of Aśjana, a Guhyaika, and Vedavati the daughter of Parjanya would come there. At the time when these three young women meet together at Hātakaśvara, you will unite with your husband." Being overjoyed at the words of the hermit, Citrāṅgādā went to Saptagodāvara, lived there and worshipped Śiva. Rśṭadvja went on his way. Viśvakarma, transformed into a huge monkey, was causing havoc and devastation in the forest. Once the five-year-old son of Rśṭadvja, called Jābāli had gone to bathe in the river. The Viśvakarma monkey chased this boy and caught him and taking him to the top of a banyan tree, placed him close to the branches and tied him fast with creepers. After this the monkey went to Mahāmeru. As the second adventure, the monkey separated Damayanti from her father Aśjana, a Guhyaika. Damayanti was born to Aśjana by the celestial maid Pranācā. Hermit Mudgala had once prophesied that this Damayanti would become the prominent wife of a King. The delighted Damayanti went once about the bank of the river Gomati to see the lake. At that time Hiranvati, with her maids when the Viśvakarma monkey ran to the spot and the terrified Damayanti jumped into the river and was carried down by the current. She floated down and got into a forest. It was in this forest that Jābāli was tied to the banyan branches. Damayanti saw Jābāli. Each said to the other about the cruel deeds of the monkey. After that according to the advice of Jābāli, Damayanti went to the temple of Śrīkaṇṭhaśvara on the basin of the river Yamunā. After worshipping Śrīkaṇṭhaśvara, she wrote on the wall of the temple, a poem about the misfortunes of herself and Jābāli and stayed in that place engaged in worshipping god.

The next confrontation of the monkey was with Vedavati the daughter of Parjanya. Vedavati was born to Parjanya by a celestial woman Gūrjāci. Once while Vedavati was playing in the forest, the monkey saw her. He addressed her Devavati, intentionally mispronouncing her name. She replied, "You monkey, I am not Devavati, I am Vedavati." Instantly the monkey ran to her. Vedavati quickly climbed on a hibiscus tree. The monkey kicked at the tree and broke it. Vedavati held fast to a strong branch of the tree. The monkey took the branch and threw it on to the sea. Every movable and immovable thing in the world thought a tree was falling down from the sky. Seeing Vedavati falling down, a Gandharva said, "Oh dear, Brahmā himself had said once that this damsel would become the chief wife of Indradyumna, the famous hero, the son of Manu the great King who has completed thousand yugas (sacrifices)."

Hearing the words of the Gandharva, Indradyumna the son of Manu, broke that branch into thousand pieces by his arrows. Though the branch was destroyed, Indradyumna could not find where Vedavati had fallen. She floated into a part of the forest. All alone she walked in and on and reached the temple of Śrīkaṇṭhaśvara, on the bank of Yamunā. Damayanti who had reached the temple earlier and Vedavati met each other and talked about their experiences. Thus due to the wickedness of the Viśvakarma monkey Jābāli the son of Rśṭadvja came to be tied, on to the banyan tree and Damyantí and Vedavati to be staying helpless in the temple of Sříkanthēvara.

At this time the hermit Gālava reached the temple of Sříkanthēvara. He saw Damayantī and Vedavatī and felt pity on them. Next day Gālava started for Saptagalīvara to take a bath in Kārttika. Damayantī and Vedavatī followed the hermit. They reached Saptagalīvara and dipped in Puskarā bath. Under water they saw several fish, gathered round a whale begging their food. The whale was saying harsh words to them rejecting their request. The fish virgins again told the whale. "Don’t you see the hermit Gālava going about with two beautiful damsels. If this righteous hermit does not fear slander, why should you, who live under water fear it?" The whale replied. "Gālava doesn’t fear people because he is a virtuous and blind with love." Hearing these words of the fishes, Gālava became ashamed of himself. So without coming up he stayed under water. The two girls finished bath and got on the bank, and waited for Gālava. Viśvakārmā’s daughter Citrāṅgadā, who had reached the place earlier, met the two girls. They told each other their stories. "As Rādhēva had prophesied, Damayantī and Vedavatī were married to that beautiful king Parjanya’s daughter have arrived," Thought Citrāṅgadā. "If Devavatī the daughter of the asura Kandāramalī, also is come, I could unite with my husband Suratha." Citrāṅgadā became glad. At this time Devavatī, the daughter of Kandāramalī, ran to the spot, being chased by the Viśvakārmā’s monkey.

The reader might remember that Damayantī had written a poem about the temple of Sříkanthēvara when she had gone there at the instruction of Jābāli who had been tied on to a branch of a tree. At noon on that day Rādhēva had gone to the temple at Sříkanthēvara and happened to see the poem. Then only did he understand that his son Jābāli had been tied to a tree by a monkey. By then five hundred years had elapsed. Rādhēva was aware of the fact that the only person capable of liberating Jābāli, was Sakunī, the son of Devavatī. Jābāli reached Ayodhyā instantly and told Kaśyā. "Oh, mighty King! hear me, please! A monkey has made my virtuous and learned son Jābāli, a captive and bound him on a tree, within the boundary of your kingdom. Nobody in the world except your son Sakunī will be capable of rescuing him." Sakunī accompanied Rādhēva to the forest. They saw the tall huge banyan tree with bulky roots hanging on all sides and on the top of the tree, on a lofty place, the son of Rādhēva entangled and entwined by creepers. Seeing the network of creepers around the body of the hermit’s son, Sakunī began to send arrows one after another and cut off all the creeper’s knots. Rādhēva climbed up the tree. Seeing his father, Jābāli bowed his head to his father. Rādhēva was not capable of extricating his son. The prince put down his bow and arrow and tried to untie the knots of the creepers that held his body to the branch. Though a sturdy man he could not do it. At last they cut the branch close to his body and got Jābāli down. A piece of the branch was stuck to his back. Then Sakunī son Jābāli bearing a piece of lumber on his back and Sakunī bearing bow and arrows, Rādhēva came to Kālindī.

Rādhēva, Sakunī and Jābāli wandered about for years in search of Damayantī and the others. After nearly a hundred years, with despair Jābāli bearing the lumber on his back, went with his father to Kosala. The king of that country was Indradyūnna, the son of Mānu. He welcomed the hermit with hospitality. Rādhēva talked about Damayantī. Indradyūnna claimed that he had once saved a young woman by his arrows from the branch of a tree. They all started in search of the girl. They reached Bārāyāra, where they saw a young hermit. From the conversation of this young hermit was Suratha. When he learned everything he stopped penance and accompanied them. Under the leadership of Rādhēva, they reached Saptagalīvara and saw Citrāṅgadā.

In the meanwhile Gṛūtāci, sad and miserable, was wandering over the mountain of the rising sun, searching for her lost daughter Citrāṅgadā. She met the cursed monkey form of Viśvakārmā and asked it, "Oh! I monkey, have you seen a girl?" The monkey told her every thing that took place. Gṛūtāci also reached Saptagalīvara. The monkey followed close behind her. As soon as Jābāli saw the monkey, he got angry and jumped forward to wreak vengeance. Rādhēva checked his son and told him the history of Viśvakārmā. The monkey sepultated the piece of lumber and went behind the back of Jābāli, who had been bearing it on his back for the last thousand years. Rādhēva was immensely pleased at this and asked the monkey what boon he wanted. The monkey said, "Brahman, if you wish to give me a boon, please recall your curse. Great hermit! I am Viśvakārmā the father of Citrāṅgadā. I became a monkey because of your curse. Let all the sins I was committed be remitted for the mischief of a monkey, be remitted."

Hearing this Rādhēva said, "Your curse will end when you get a strong and sturdy son by Gṛūtāci."

Hearing this Gṛūtāci rose up in the sky. The monkey also jumped up and followed her. The monkey was attracted by the beauty of Gṛūtāci. Later, on the mountain named Kolāhala, the monkey enticed Gṛūtāci and wooed her. She was so enchanted and thus, for a long time. Then they went to the Vindhyā mountain. On the bank of the Godavāri, a sturdy son was born to them. This son was the strong sturdy huge monkey Nāla, who helped Śrī Rāma.

On the birth of a son Viśvakārmā regained his former form. He returned to Saptagalīvara with Gṛūtāci. Gālava also came there together with the hermit Gālava at the head, the priests made burn offerings and began the performance of the marriage ceremony. The Gandharvas sang and the celestial maidies danced. The first marriage was between Devavatī the daughter of Kandāramalī and Jābāli. Then Indradyūnna married Vedavatī. Next, Sakunī married Damayantī, the daughter of Aṭjana, and lastly Suratha married Citrāṅgadā. (Vāma Purāṇa, Chapters 63 and 64).

VĪŚVAKRT. An eternal god (Vīśvadeva) concerned with offerings to the Manes. (M.B. Amuśāsana Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 36).

VĪŚVAKSENĀ 1. An ancient hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva Tīkṣṇātāpaṇītha, Chapter 7, that he shines in the palace of Indra.

VĪŚVAKSENĀ 2. A synonym of Vīśu.

2) Birth. Six beautiful daughters were born to Kuṣannātha the son of King Kuśa. The hermit Brahmādatta married them. After this a son named Gādhi was born to Kuṣannātha. Two children named Satyavati and Vīśvāmira were born to Gādhi. Satyavati was married to Rāka; As he was born in the family of the famous king Kuśa, Vīśvāmira got the name Kaṭākṣa also. His kingdom was Kāṇkakūṭa. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kīrtī, Sarga 49).

3) Becoming a hermit. Vīśvāmira and Vasiṣṭha were two hermits who were hostile to each other throughout their lives. A quarrel with Vasiṣṭha, persuaded Vīśvāmira to become a hermit. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kīrtī, Sarga 51).

The hermit Vasiṣṭha erected his hermitage and did penance in the country of Vīśvāmira. Once, while engaged in hunting Vīśvāmira saw Nandī in the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha, and wanted to have him. In the battle which ensued between Vasiṣṭha and Vīśvāmira, the hermit Vasiṣṭha came out victorious. The ashamed Vīśvāmira gave up his kingdom and went to forest to do penance. Vīśvāmira became a royal hermit of great attainments. There were constant confrontations between the Rājarṣi and the Brahmarṣi (King-hermit and Brahmin-hermit). (For the detailed story of the quarrels between Vīśvāmira and Vasiṣṭha see under Vasiṣṭha, para 2).

4) Vīśvāmira and Harīcandra. The histories of Vīśvāmira, Vasiṣṭha and Harīcandra are intertwined as a triple string. Vīśvāmira made Harīcandra, the most renowned of the men of veracity, go begging. Harīcandra and Vīśvāmira. Their history begins from King Triśūkha of the Solar dynasty. Formerly the name of Triśūkha was Satyavrat. Aruṇa was the father of Satyavrat. When Aruṇa was reigning the prince Satyavrat was leading a wicked life. He once entered the wedding hall of a Brahmin and carried away the bride by force. When the king knew this, he expelled the prince from the palace. Vasiṣṭha, as the family priest, brought the girl and the boy on the palm of his hand. On the way Satyavrat met them and learned the whole story. He told her not to sell the child. He agreed to give them food till the arrival of Vīśvāmira. The agreement was that he would tie the meat, obtained by hunting, to a tree outside the hermitage, every day. Satyavrat carried out the promise. One day he did not get anything from hunting. Vasiṣṭha held the cow which had been grazing in the forest and killed it and gave its flesh to the family of Vīśvāmira. On coming to know this Vasiṣṭha cursed him and changed his form into that of a cāndula (low-caste). Moreover, as he had incurred three sins such as stealing of a bride, anger of father and cow-slaughter, he was to be called Triśūkha from that day onwards. Weighed down by these sins, he tried to commit suicide. Devi appeared before him and gave him back his original form and his kingdom.

After the death of Aruṇa, Triśūkha assumed the reign. Harīcandra was his son. After giving the country to his son, Triśūkha requested Vasiṣṭha to perform the sacrifice to send him to heaven bodily. Vasiṣṭha said that it was impossible for him. Vasiṣṭha's enemy Vīśvāmira took up the task. He lifted Triśūkha bodily, up to heaven. But he was denied admittance in heaven and to Vīśvāmira created an artificial heaven between the earth and heaven and made Triśūkha stay there. Vīśvāmira was keeping up hostile attitude towards the kings of the Solar dynasty. In reality it was not the hostility towards the Solar dynasty, but it was his enmity towards Vāraṇa, who was keen to harm Vaiśāṅva. But Śrī Śukadeva did not like the Vaiśāṅva's being the family-priest of the kings of the Solar dynasty. So Viśvāmitra kept up an attitude of antipathy towards them. This is the background of the quarrel between Harīcandra and Viśvāmitra.

Harīcandra took Candramati, the daughter of Śibi, as his first wife. Besides her, he had ninety-nine wives. But they had no children. At last according to the advice of Vaiśāṅva he went to the Ganges and did penance before Vaiśāṅva. Viśvāmitra did not like this. Vaiśāṅva appeared and said that Harīcandra would get a son. The king had promised that he would give his son as a sacrificial animal to Vaiśāṅva.

Candramati became pregnant and delivered a son. He was named Rohitrāva. Even after the lapse of a month, the king did not give his son to Vaiśāṅva. On several occasions, Vaiśāṅva demanded the child; and Harīcandra would give some excuses. Finally the king agreed to hand him over to Vaiśāṅva at the age of eleven after his Upasanyā (renunciation with the Brahma string). The boy completed his tenth year. Preparations were being made in the palace, for Upasanyā, when Vaiśāṅva arrived. The prince, who was aware of the fact that his father would sacrifice him after his Upasanyā, ran away from the palace at night. Vaiśāṅva asked the king to hand over the boy to him. The king was in great perplexity. Vaiśāṅva cursed the king that he would catch the disease called Jalodara (dropsy). Thus the king became a sick man. Rohitrāva heard from travellers that the prince had escaped. He went to find him. On many occasions he wanted to return to the palace. But Indra appeared before him in the form of a Brahmin and dissuaded him from going to the palace.

Harīcandra called Vaiśāṅva and asked him to suggest a remedy for this woe and misery. Vaiśāṅva advised him to fulfill somehow or other, the promise made to Vaiśāṅva. The horrid continued. "Bons are of ten types. A son not given is included in this. It is enough if a son is bought for price and is sacrificed. Some Brahmin may be found, who will be willing to sell his son. If you please Vaiśāṅva thus, you will be cured." The king was delighted to hear this. He instructed his minister to find out any Brahmin who was willing to sell his son. A greedy Brahmin was found out. His name was Atigarta. He had three sons. He was prepared to sell the second son, Śrī Śukadeva. The minister agreed to give him hundred cows in return.

Up to this time Viśvāmitra had been waging only a shadow war against the Kings of the Solar dynasty. From this moment he entered the scene of war. The minister bought Śrī Śukadeva and brought him to the palace also an hundred cows in return. He sympathised with Śrī Śukadeva who was crying pitifully. He asked the King to release the boy, and gave a warning that if the boy was not set free, the sacrifice would be obstructed. The King said that he was doing so to get recovery from illness, that he would give Viśvāmitra a good deal of wealth, and requested him not to cause any hindrance to the sacrifice. These words and the misery of the boy kindled the anger of Viśvāmitra. He called Śrī Śukadeva and taught him Vaiśāṅvamendra (spell) and told him to repeat the mantra when he was lying on the slaughter-stone and that he would escape death. Śrī Śukadeva did as he was told. Vaiśāṅva became pleased with him and appearing before the King said, "Leave Śrī Śukadeva and perform the sacrifice. You will get recovery." Saying so Vaiśāṅva disappeared. Immediately the King was cured of his disease. At the order of the King Śrī Śukadeva was set free. The sound "Jaya Jaya" (victory) reverberated in the sacrificial hall. Śrī Śukadeva got up and asked, "Oh great men. Who is my father now?" Some said that it was Atigarta. Some others argued that it was Harīcandra. Some said that it was Vaiśāṅva." At this time Vaiśāṅva stood up and said, "Oh, great men. Please stop arguing. I shall give reply in accordance with the convention of Vedas. When he bargained on the price of his son and received the cost Atigarta lost his paternity. Therefore Harīcandra who bought the boy became his father. From the moment he had issued orders to bind the boy and place him on the slaughter-stone, he also had lost his paternity. The claim of Vaiśāṅva to his paternity, because the boy had been saved from death by him, does not hold good. Any god will be pleased, when praised and glorified with great laudatory mantras and will confer upon the supplicant wealth, life, cow, land, salvation etc. There is nothing unusual in this. But it was only Vaiśāṅva taught him the Vaiśāṅva-spell in his pitiable and dangerous situation, so Viśvāmitra alone has claim to the boy's paternity."

Those who were present, accepted this decision. Immediately Viśvāmitra took Śrī Śukadeva with him and went to his hermitage. Hearing about the recovery of the King, Rohitrāva returned to the palace from the forest. Harīcandra received him with tears of joy. The King, with his wife and son, led a happy life and ruled over his subjects with justice and truth. At this time, Harīcandra (of Kakusāna's family) accepting Vaiśāṅva as the main priest performed the famous sacrifice of Rājaśīla (Royal) consecration with ceremonies and festivities. With this the name of Harīcandra spread far and wide.

At this point begins the next stage of confrontation between Viśvāmitra and Harīcandra. Vaiśāṅva once reached heaven. Viśvāmitra also reached there at the same time. The devas greeted both honourably. But Viśvāmitra saw that Vaiśāṅva was shown some partiality. This was unpalatable to Viśvāmitra, who asked Vaiśāṅva, "What excellence have you, more than I?" Vaiśāṅva replied, "Have you not heard about Harīcandra, the King of the Solar dynasty? He is the noblest dynasty in the world. The family-priesthood of this dynasty also is laudable. My disciple Harīcandra of that royal family has recently performed the sacrifice of Rājaśīla. I was the Supreme priest of the function. This is a covetable position not attainable to many. Moreover, there is none in the world, more truthful, firm of character, more charitable and more liberal than Harīcandra. This is a fact."

Viśvāmitra got up angrily and argued that Harīcandra was not truthful. He staked all the fruits of his penance to prove this. From that day onwards Viśvāmitra began to make moves to instigate Harīcandra to demolish the house of Harīcandra. Once Harīcandra, while he was hunting, met a lonely woman in the forest. She was moaning. The King asked why she was lamenting. She replied, "Oh King, I am Siddhīrūpī (a goddess who helps people to attain anything). Viśvāmitra is doing penance to possess me. I request you to protect me," the King promised her to see that she was not subjected to the molestation of Viśvāmitra any longer. After that Hariścandra went to the hermitage of Viśvāmitra and made an enquiry. He then asked the hermit to stop penance, as his severe, intense, penance was harmful to many people in the country. The King returned to the palace. Viśvāmitra got angry and stood up. Up to this time only a cold war existed between them. Hostility became open now. Viśvāmitra began to make moves against Hariścandra quickly. He changed a fierce asura into a hog and sent it to the garden of Hariścandra. The hog destroyed the garden. All the attempts made by the guards to drive the hog away ended in failure. They informed the King. The King mounted on a horse and with weapons started for the garden. Without paying any heed to the arrows of the King, the hog ran away. The King began to chase it. The hog seemed to be near. Then it was away, then in front of the King and suddenly it appeared behind him. Then it would disappear instantly. In this manner the hog played around the King. After a while, the King was separated from his attendants and was alone, in a thick forest. He did not find any way out. He lost his way in the forest. As he was thus walking slowly, he saw a stream of pure water in front of him. Both the King and the horse drank from the stream. As he was standing thus without knowing the way to return home, Viśvāmitra went to him in the guise of an old Brahmin.

The King honored the old man, and told him that he was Hariścandra, the King of Ayodhya, and that by chasing a hog which destroyed his garden, he had reached the forest. He continued telling the old Brahmin who had helped him. "You might have heard that Hariścandra, the King of Ayodhya, had performed the sacrifice Rājasya. I am that same King. It is my vow to give anybody what he asks for. If you want money or anything for sacrifice or for any other purpose, just come to me and I will give you whatever you want." The old man was pleased. He told the King that the jungle-stream flowed through a holy place and that it would be better to offer the gift after taking a bath in the river. The King purified himself by bathing in the river and then said. "Sir, I am ready to offer gifts. State your needs. It is my vow to give what is requested. At the time of the Rājasya I acted so towards all of you and took a vow that I would do so in future also. I am glad because I have met you on the bank of this holy stream. So tell me quickly what you want." Brahmin: "Oh King, I have heard about your fame. Moreover there is nobody in the world equal to Hariścandra, born of the Solar dynasty, the son of Trikāṇaku in liberality. Such is the opinion of hermits Vāśishta. There is nothing more to know about you, oh, King, who is such a man of liberality. I have only one desire. The marriage of my son is being conducted. I do not possess enough money for the marriage. I want only a help for the same." The King thought it to be a very simple request, and promised to give the required amount. Viśvāmitra by his customery to Gandharvas created a young man and a young woman, and showed them to the King saying that they were his son and daughter. Then the Brahmin who was delighted by the promise, showed the King the way to the palace.

After making all arrangements for the marriage, Viśvāmitra approached King Hariścandra. The King asked him what amount he required. "Give me your kingdom with all the elephants, horses, chariots, jewels and wealth in it," said Viśvāmitra. The King who had been led to this deception by Viśvāmitra, having no go, agreed. Thus Viśvāmitra obtained the kingdom and everything that Hariścandra possessed. It is conventional that whenever a gift is given to Brahmans, a daksinā (monetary gift) also should be given along with it. Otherwise the gift will be futile. The King asked the Brahmin what he wanted as daksinā. He demanded two and a half Bhūtas of gold as daksinā. The King agreed to give that also. But where to get this amount from, since he had lost his kingdom and everything? Having sunk deep in misery due to the deceit of Viśvāmitra, the King sat on the soil, cursing his fate. Seeing this, the queen ran to him and cried. While he was telling his wife every thing, Viśvāmitra came there and said:

Viśvāmitra:--"Hariścandra! According to the gift hand over your country and everything instantly, I must have the daksinā of two and a half Bhūtas of gold about now.

Hariścandra:--"Sir! According to my promise receive everything now. We are leaving the country instantly. But since I have given you everything that I had, how can I give you daksinā? Everything, I had, has become yours. The amount for daksinā has yet to be procured. So receive the gift now. The daksinā shall be given as early as possible." After giving everything to the hermit, the King left the country with only the cloth he had been wearing. His wife and child followed him. The hermit also followed the King compelling him to give him the daksinā. The King told him that only after paying this debt would he eat any food, and that he would pay the amount within a month Viśvāmitra, unwillingly agreed to this.

With his wife Candramati and his young son, Hariścandra reached Kaśi. After a month Viśvāmitra came to Kaśi for the amount of daksinā. Finding no go, Candramati said to her husband, "My Lord! Sell me to some one and clear off this debt." The King with tears agreed to this proposal. Because of their woe and misery, both fell on the ground and fainted. The child sat near them hungry and crying. Viśvāmitra stood near them compelling them to pay the amount. When Hariścandra came to himself, he said his beloved wife to a Brahmin in the village close by. The Brahmin who bought Candramati was Viśvāmitra. Hariścandra was not aware of this. After counting out a crore of gold pieces in a cloth and placing it on the ground Viśvāmitra caught hold of Candramati by her hair and dragged her away. He bought the crying child also paying its price. The Brahmin led the mother and the child, beating and dragging them along, like animals. They disappeared from the sight of the King.

Viśvāmitra again came before Hariścandra and asked for the money. Hariścandra gave Viśvāmitra, all the money he got. The hermit was satisfied and showed Viśvāmitra that the money given, was not an adequate amount as daksinā when the importance of the great sacrifice Rājasya was considered and that if he was to get the full benefit of the sacrifice he had to satisfy him by giving him the requisite amount. The King accepted everything the hermit said without any objection. Viśvāmitra compelled him for payment. The King requested for time. Viśvāmitra allowed time till sunset that day.

As soon as Viśvāmitra had gone Hariścandra walked on with bent head, calling out. "Does anybody want me? Will anybody buy me for price?" Instantly Yamadhārīna came there as an outcaste and bought Hariścandra. The name of the outcaste was Praśīka. He bought Hariścandra to guard the funeral ground and to collect tax on dead bodies. Viśvāmitra quickly ran to the place. The outcaste gave Viśvāmitra ten yojanas of land which yielded jewels, in the region of Prayāga and severed his connection. Viśvāmitra went on his way. The outcaste King took Hariścandra to the funeral ground. Day and night Hariścandra had to guard the entrance of the funeral ground.

At this point Hariścandra's son died of snake bite, while he was playing with other children on the bank of the Ganges. His mother Candramati fainted and fell down, the moment she heard about it. As soon as she recovered, she lamented over the death of her son, for a long time. Then she requested her master for permission to go and see the dead body of her son. But she was not good at the art of mummy making. She repeatedly pleaded with the Brahmin for permission to go and see the dead body of her son. Then the Brahmin, her master, got angry and said, "You slave! If your son is dead, let him be dead. Is it any loss to you? It is my money that is lost. You go and do your work. I not I will operate this whip well on you. Remember that You know the biting pain of this whip. Step wailing and lamenting." Candramati persisted in her request to allow her to go and see the dead body of her son. Not only did he refuse to allow her to see the dead body of her son, but also beat her. With tears she turned to her duties. It was night. The Brahmin took his meals and lay down to sleep. Candramati was sitting at his feet massaging his legs. When it was nearly midnight that stone-hearted old Brahmin made up. "Come and perform the funeral and return before dawn. Your usual work in the morning should not be left undone. If so, you know the consequences."

Hearing these words, Candramati ran to the place where the dead body of her son lay. The son lay on the grass dead and stiff, with the face and body turned blue due to poison. She saw that face in the flash of a lightning. She cried aloud. Hearing the cry people of the neighboring houses ran to the spot. Candramati did not give any reply to their questions. Some thought her to be a ghost. Some wanted to kill her. Some caught her by the hair. Some struck her. At last they tied her with a rope and dragged her to the funeral place. The Brahmin said, "If the demon is present here, let her be cut into pieces by you." Hariścandra agreed to it. Crying all the way Hariścandra went to the bank of the Ganges and threw the dead body in the Ganges river in place. Seeing her pitiable condition Hariścandra went close to the dead body and removing the shroud looked at the corpse. Because of poison the body of the child was blue and ugly and as Hariścandra and Candramati had undergone so thorough a change they did not recognize each other. But from her lamentation and talk, he understood that the woman was his wife Candramati. He also cried aloud. Candramati recognized her husband. Still Hariścandra said that if the child was cremated without collecting the usual fee, it would be deceiving his master. At last both of them decided to commit suicide before the night ended.

Without loss of time Hariścandra gathered half-burned firewood, and built a pile big enough to burn the child's body and for them to jump into it. He laid the child on it and set fire to it. Hariścandra and Candramati stood with closed eyes ready to jump into the burning fire. Then Brahmin appeared there and prevented them from jumping into the fire. Indra and the Devas showered Agni (Ambrosia). The child came to life and got out of the fire. The King and the queen regained their shining bodies and royal garments and ornaments. The outcaste who was the master of Hariścandra was really, Dharmadeva. All the Devas blessed Hariścandra and Viśvāmitra returned the kingdom to the truthful Hariścandra. Their subjects were overjoyed at the return of their King and queen. After that Rohita was anointed as the King of Ayodhya and the Devas went with understanding that the woman was his wife Candramati. (Devi Bhagavata, Skanda 7).

6) Viśvāmitra and the brothers Rāma and Lakṣmana. See under Rāma, Paras 5, 6, 7 and 8.

7) Weapon Training. Viśvāmitra had proficiency in wielding all types of weapons. He taught Rāma and Lakṣmana all that he knew about weapons. See under Agra.

8) Garing Rambhā. Once Viśvāmitra did very severe penance. Indra feared him. So wishing to hinder the penance of Viśvāmitra somehow Indra called Rambhā to him and said to her. "Rambhā, you dress well and dance before Viśvāmitra. Somehow he his penance must be hindered. I shall take the form of a cuckoo, and help you by singing.” Indra and Rambhā reached the forest of penance. The cuckoo began to sing and there was the atmosphere of spring season. Rambhā danced before Viśvāmitra. The concentration of the hermit was broken. The hermit got angry and cursed Rambhā and changed her into a rock. She entreated for redemption from the curse. The hermit told her that after ten thousand years a Brahmin named Bāhīrījī would much the rock, by which touch she would get her original form. (Viśvāmitra Rāma-bhāṣya, Bāhīrījī, Sarga 64).

9) Viśvāmitra and Trīśākṣa. See under Trīśākṣa.

10) Viśvāmitra and Mekhā. See under Saṅkunīta and Kudaligārghā.

11) Cursing Viśdūprabhā. Once Viśvāmitra did penance to obtain the position of Kubera, who employed the celestial maid Viśdūprabhā in Viśvāmitra. She came to the forest in which Viśvāmitra was doing penance and tried to entice the hermit by her beauty. But when she saw that her beauty did not attract the hermit, she assumed a fearful form. Seeing this form, the hermit cursed her. "You shall retain this fearful form and live like a giantess." She requested for restorative rite. The herb con that grew on Sridatta, the son of Kālanemi, touched her hair she would be redeemed from the curse.

After many years Kālanemi was born in the country of Mālava as the son of a brahmin named Vaiśāsena. A son named Sridatta was born to this Kālanemi. Once Sridatta happened to see this giantess in a forest and caught hold of her by the hair. Instantly she got her original form. (Kathāsaritsagara, Kathāmahākālambara, Taranga 2).

12) Stealing the flesh of a dog. Once, at the end of Tretā Yuga and the beginning of Dvāpara Yuga, there was no rain for twelve years. Famine prevailed everywhere. The people were in utter want and misery. Hermits left their hermitages and wandered about. In a crowd Vīśvāmitra lost his wife and children and entered a forest and travelled all alone. He entered the hut of a low-caste (Paraya) and begged for food. But none of them even talked to him. He again requested for something to eat. Nobody cared for him. The hermit fell on the veranda due to weakness. Vīśvāmitra saw in the hut some decayed flesh and intestine of a dog placed in a corner of the kitchen. He decided to steal some of it to appease his hunger. The Candaśas slept when the night advanced. But the lord of the house lay pretending to sleep. Vīśvāmitra slowly entered the kitchen, and opened the pot in which the intestine of the dog was kept. The owner of the house asked, "Who is that?" Vīśvāmitra replied that he had stolen because of his hunger. The eyes of the Candaśas were filled with tears because of pity. He said:

"Dog is lower than jackal, That is what men say, Of all the parts of its body, the lowest is its posterior." Though he said so, he felt glad since he had given Vīśvāmitra food. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 141).

13) Curtaining the river Sarasvati. See under Vaiśāṣa, para 2, sub-para 5.

14) Sons. Vīśvāmitra had many sons. Their names are given in Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva.

15) Vīśvāmitra and Ērgeda. Rgveda, Mandala 5, was composed by the Vīśvāmitra-family. Variations are observed in the two versions of statements about Vīśvāmitra, occurring in Rgveda and the Purāṇas. The confrontations between Vaiśāṣa and Vīśvāmitra occur in Rgveda also. The last four sections of Śūktaka 15 of Rgveda, Mandala 3, Anuvāku 3, are meant to scold Vaiśāṣa. Here Vīśvāmitra curses Vaiśāṣa's family in various ways. In the 'Annotations of Sāyana', mention is made that the disciples of Vaiśāṣa freed Vīśvāmitra from the vow of silence, and that instantly these mantras (chants) dawned in his mind. Though the enmity between Vasishtha and Vīśvāmitra is seen in Rgveda, such elaborate stories as seen in the Purāṇas do not occur in Rgveda. But Vīśvāmitra procured a prominent place in Rgveda because this hermit rescued Sudāra from danger and forced him across rivers, and took Sunāstī as his son. Of these two incidents the first is not given much importance in the Purāṇas. Though the second one occurs in the Purāṇas, the version is different from that of Ṛgveda. From this it is presumed that the stories taken from Ṛgveda underwent a thorough change before they appeared in the Purāṇas.

(16) Other details.

(i) The famous hermit Ērgeda was the son and disciple of Vīśvāmitra. (For further details see under Gālava).

(ii) It was Vīśvāmitra who lighted the torch for Kālmāšapāḍa in his quarrel with Vaiśāṣa. (See under Kālmāšapāḍa).

(iii) Vīśvāmitra earned Brahmānhood by tapas (penance). (M.B. Sārya Parva, Chapter 60, Stanza 12).

(iv) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 51, that Vīśvāmitra was present at the birth festival of Arjuna.

(v) Kālmāšapāḍa killed all the sons of Vaiśāṣa because of the persuasion of Vīśvāmitra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 175, Stanza 41).

(vi) It was at a place on the bank of the river Kaūśika that Vīśvāmitra got Brahmānhood. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 13).

(xv) Vīśvāmitra was one of the hermits who cursed Sāṃśa to give birth to an iron pestle, when the end of the Viṣṇu dynasty drew near. (M.B. Māusala Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 15).

VĪŚVĀMITRA (M). A holy place situated on the boundary of Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 131, that those who bathe in this holy place will get the status of a Brähmaṇa.

VĪŚVĀMITRĀRĀMA. A holy place on the banks of the river Kaūśika. The hermitage of Vīśvāmitra stood in this place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 12).

VĪŚVĀNARA. A King. For a time this King was miserable as he was childless. But by the blessing of Śiva, Vīśvānara got a son named Grhaṇati by his wife Sucīni. Grhaṇati was destined to have life only up to three years. But it is mentioned in Skanda Purāṇa that within this short period Grhapatī learned the whole of Śākagāvda and obtained long life from Śiva.

VīṣṇuNātha. A Sanskrit literary critic who lived in India in the 4th A.D. Śālikādaṇḍa is the most important work of this poet of Oriya. This work on criticism in ten chapters, deals with all the aspects of a literary work.

Kuvalayāśvacarita, Ṛgguhvīlaṇa, Prabhāvati, Candrakāla, Narasimhāravajyai, etc. are the other works of this author. Most of these are not yet found. Kuvalayāśvacarita is a poetic work in Prākṛta and Raghuvīlaṇa is a great poetic work. Prabhāvati and Candrakāla are dramas. Narasimhāravajyai is a historic work.

VīṣṇaPati. The second son of the Agni (fire) called Maunu. It is mentioned in the Vedas that this fire is the King of all the worlds. (M.B. Vama Parva, Chapter 221, Stanza 17).

VīṣṇaRāndhi. The son of Prthu, a King of the Solar dynasty. He was the father of the King Candra and grandfather of Yuvanāśva. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 7).

VīṣṇuRuci. A Gandharva King. At the time of emperor Prthu, when the Gandharvas made the earth a cow and milked her for various things, it was the Gandharva VīṣṇuRuci who did the milking. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69, Stanza 23).

VīṣṇuRuci (giant). Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sābha Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 14, that this giant sits in the palace of Varuṇa glorifying him.

VīṣṇuRūpa 11. The son of Vyaṣṭi, the son of VīṣṇuKumāra. This VīṣṇuRūpa is also known as Trīśiras. (For further details see under Indra, Parva 7).

VīṣṇuRūpa. The wife of Sage Dharma. It is stated in Vāyu Purāṇa that from sage Dharma, a daughter named Dharmaśottara was born to VīṣṇuRūpa.

VīṣṇuSāmbhu. A fire. Ṛgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 2, Sūkta 24, states that this fire exists in water.

VīṣṇuVASU 1. A brother of Parasurāma, who had four brothers named Rumināyān, Suhotra, Vasu and VīṣṇuRūpa. (Bhāgavata Purāṇa, Chapter 50).

VīṣṇuVASU 11. A Gandharva King. The following information about this King is taken from the Purāṇas.

(i) The father of this Devagandharva was Prajapati Kūṇāya and his mother was Pradhā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 47).

(ii) Frameveda was born to Vīṣṇuvasu by the celestial maid Menakā. (See under Pramadava).

(iii) It is mentioned that at the Birth-festival of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 22).

(iv) This Vīṣṇuvasu learned from Somā, Gātajīvīdī (the art of seeing all) and taught Citraratha, a Gandharva the same art. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Stanza 43).

(v) He was present at the Svayamvara (marriage) of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 166, Stanza 7).

(vi) Vīṣṇuvasu stays in the palace of Indra glorifying him. (M.B. Sābha Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 22).

(vii) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sābha Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 25, that he stays in the palace of Kubera praising him.

(viii) This Gandharva recited a poem at the sacrifice performed by Jamadagni. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 90, Stanza 18).

(ix) Kabandha, the asura, who stopped Ṛkma and Laksmana, was the changed form of Vīṣṇuvasu by a curse (See under Kabandha).

(x) It was this Vīṣṇuvasu who played the lute in the sacrifice performed by emperor Dilipa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 7).

(xi) Once Vīṣṇuvasu asked hermit Yajñavalkya twenty-four questions. When he got satisfactory answers, the Gandharvas returned to heaven. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 316, Stanza 25).

(xii) It was Vīṣṇuvasu and some other Gandharvas who took away Durvāsi from Pūrūravas. (See under Pūrūravas).

(xiii) At the time of emperor Prthu, when the earth was milked, the thing the Gandharvas got were those beefing them. In the course of the milking Vīṣṇuvasu stood as the calf. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 4).

VīṣṇuVedi. A minister of King Sauri. This minister wanted the King to be just. Sauri and his four brothers Kānitra, Uḍāvatasu, Suhotra and Mahārāta were the sons of Prajapati. The main ruler of the kingdom was Kānitra. The others were Governors of the East, West North and South divisions of the kingdom. The four brothers had a priest each named Suhotra, KuṣaVarta, Pramati and Vapiṣṭha respectively.

Vīṣṇuvedi gathered together and created four wicked fairies and sent them against Kānitra the King. The fierce fairies attacked Kānitra. But because of his purity and cleanliness the fairies had to admit defeat. The fairies came back and attacked their creators, the four priests and Vīṣṇuvedi who had planned the programme, and killed all the five of them. (Markandeya Purāṇa, Chapter 314).

VīṣṇuVyu. An eternal VīṣṇuVyu (gods concerned with offering to the Manes). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 34).

Vīța. A ball made of wood. The Kaurava boys played with this ball and by accident the Vīța fell in a well. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 139, Stanza 17, that the teacher Droṇa recovered it from the well by shooting a number of arrows, one upon the tail of another.

Vīτabhaya. A king of the Puru dynasty. He was the son of the king Manasi and father of King Ādi. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

Vīτabhuta. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sābha Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 63, that this asura stays in the palace of Varuṇa praising and worshipping him.

VīτadvaJaya. A king of the dynasty of Janaka. He was the son of DharmaDvaja and the brother of Kṛtadvaja. VīτadvaJaya had a son named Khāḍyāya. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

Vīτadru. A Yādava. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sābha Parva, Chapter 14, that Vīτadru was one of the seven Kings of the Yādava dynasty.

Vīṭahavya. Another name of King Ekaśī, otherwise known as Haihaya. (For further details see under Ekaśī).

VītaLa. A part of Pātala (underworld). (For details see under Pātala).

Vīτandvāda. When arguments, which do not serve, either to establish one's own points or to cut the points of the opponent, are employed in a debate, it is called Vīτandvāda. (M.B. Sābha Parva, Chapter 36, Stanza 4).
VITARKA. A son of Dhrishtadhavas of the Kuru dynasty. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 98).

VITASTA. A river famous in the Puranas. Mention is made about this river in Rvveda. Important rivers mentioned in Rvveda are, Kubha, Sindhu, Suvatru, Vitasta, Asinini, Parushti, Satadru, Saraswat and Yamuna. These rivers were more important than the Ganges in those days. Mention is made about the Ganges only once in Rvveda. Perhaps the Aryans were not acquainted with the Gangetic basin in those days. The region from the rivers Kubha to Yamuna was Aryavarta (the country of the Aryans). The information about this river Vitasta given in Mahabharata is given below:

(i) The river Vitasta is the same river as Jhelum in Kashmir. The deity (goddess) of this river stays in the palace of Varuna and praises him. (M.B. Sahya Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 19).

(ii) By worshiping the Devatas and the Manes after taking bath in this river, one could obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice Vajapeya. In Kashmir, Takapaka the King of the Nagas has a famous palace known as Vitasta. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 39).

(iii) Once four hundred horses with black hair, owned by Brahmins were caught in the current of this river and carried away. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 119, Stanza 8).

(iv) If anybody bathes in the waves of the river Vitasta, with vow and fast, for seven days he would become as pure as a hermit. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 7).

(v) Once Pārvati made a speech before Śiva on the duties of women, after receiving advice from the rivers. The river Vitasta was one of the rivers which advised Pārvati. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 146, Stanza 18).

VATAVHA. Another name of hermit Dirghatamas. This Vatavha was the father of Bharata. (For further details see under Bharata and Dirghatamas).

VITASYA. Son of Vihavya, who belonged to the dynasty of Gruvamada. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 62, that Vitasya was the father of King Śaiva.

VITI. A fire. It is ordained that the offering (Purodha) prepared for oblation, should be put in the fire formed by the blending of the fires Garhapatiya and Āhavaninya with Dakṣinaagri (a fire). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 235, Stanza 25).

VITIHOTRA I. A King in ancient India. Viṭihotra was one of the ten sons born to Priyavrata by his wife Barhishati, the daughter of Viṭakrāma. Agrindriya, Indrajañjiva, Yajñabahu, Mahāvira, Hiranyakarasa, Ghatpāṣṭha, Savana, Medhāśīthi and Kavi were the brothers of Viṭihotra. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 5).

VITIHOTRA II. The husband of Śabari in her previous life. (See under Śabari).

VITIHOTRA III. The eldest of the hundred sons of Takṣaṅgaha. When Takṣaṅgaha was defeated by Paracuśa, he and his men went to the Himalayas under the leadership of Viṭihotra and hid themselves there. They returned when Paracuśa had gone to Mahendragiri for penance. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 89).

VITIHOTRA IV. A Kingdom of ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 12, that all the Kṣatriyas of this country were exterminated by Paracuśa.

VITTADA. An attendant of Subhrabharmiyasya. (M.B. Sahya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 28).

VIVAHĀ. An air (wind) which blows very speedily. This wind will be transformed into a fierce storm which will cause havoc everywhere. At the time of the great flood this Vivaha will blow away the cloud called Valahaka in consequence of which destruction and devastation will become rampant on earth. (M.B. Śauti Parva, Chapter 32).

VIVAHĀ (MARRIAGE).

1) General information. In ancient India marriage was considered to be a sacrifice performed in accordance with social customs. Marriage was allowed to those who had completed education at the age of sixteen. (Samvatsara). Father or teacher teaches the pupil the Vedas and Vedātāgas. When the education is completed the teacher or father makes him sit on a seat decorated with flowers, sandalwood etc. and do Godāvratā. Then he is offered Pānchamita (milk, curd, butter, honey and water). This is called Samvatsara. With this his brahmacharya ends, and he is allowed to marry and lead the life of a house-holder.

Marriage is a ceremony with four secondary rites viz, Kanyādāna, Sacīyāga, Vivēka, Karmātikarana. If the husband is dead, or lost, or has renounced the world, or has become a cūra or is expelled from society, the woman is allowed to take another husband. If the husband dies, the wife should be given to the brother of the husband. If there is no brother she could accept anybody whom she likes.

2) Eight kinds of marriage. The woman and man should not be of the same Gotra (family). One could marry a girl who is above seven generations on the paternal line and above five generations on the maternal line. Eight types of marriages allowed in Manusmriti, Chapter 3, are given below:

(i) Brahma. A man of good qualities and good family is asked to come and receive the damsel. This is Brāhma. The radiance of this marriage will give the man prosperity.

(ii) Arsa. After getting a couple of cows from the bridegroom the bride is given to him.

(iii) Priyāśāstra. The virgin is given to the man, who had requested for her hand as a duty.

(iv) Daiśa. The virgin is offered to the master who is engaged in performing a sacrifice.

(v) Gāndharāstra. Marriage between a man and a woman with equal love on either part.

(vi) Asura. Giving money in return for the damsel and marrying her. This type is mean.

(vii) Rākṣasa. Carrying the damsel away by fight or force.

(viii) Paśiṣṭa. Marrying a damsel when she is sleeping or lying unconscious.

VIVARDHANA. A King in ancient India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Subhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 21, that this King was a prominent member of the assembly of Yudhiṣṭhīra.
VIVAVŚAṆ

VIVAVŚAṆ I. The Sun,

1) General information. Sūrya (Sun) has a large number of synonyms. But prominence is given to two of them, Mārtanda and Vivasvān in the Purāṇa. Twelve devas were born to Prajāpati Kaśyapa by his wife Aditi. As these twelve were the sons of Aditi they were called Adityas. The Dwādasha Adityas (the twelve Adityas) are Viśeṣa, Saṅkara, Arvaman, Dvātā, Tvaṣṭa, Pramāna, Vivasvān, Sūrya, Mitrā, Varuna, Āmī and Bhaga. These twelve Adityas were, in the previous Manvantara (Age of Manu) of Manu Ākṣara, twelve devas called the Tusiṣas. When the Ākṣara Manvantara came to an end and the Vaiśvāmata Manvantara was about to begin, the twelve Tusiṣas met together and after a consultation, they took birth as the sons of Aditi. In this birth they were known by the name Dwādasha Adityas. (Vī Parama, Anuśāsana, Chapter 15).

2) The name Mārtanda. As Aditi was pregnant, Candira went to the hermitage asking for alms. Due to her difficulties of pregnancy Aditi was not in a position to rise up instantly and greet the visitor. Candira thought that it was due to disrespect. So he cursed her. Let the child in your womb die. At this Aditi became miserable. Kaśyapa saw her crying insensately and asked the cause. Aditi told him all that had happened. Kaśyapa blessed her and said that the infant would not die. Thus the child which was lying dead in the womb came to life again. As the āhāra (egg-embryo) of Vivasvān went myā (died) by the curse of Candira, he came to be called Mārtanda (he who has myā which has become myā). When the child was born he was given the name Vivasvān.

3) Family life. Vivasvān married Sāṃjñā, the daughter of Viśvākarma. The first child born to Vivasvān by Sāṃjñā was Vaiśvāmata Manu. The Sūrya (Solar) dynasty begins from this Vaiśvāmata Manu. Sāṃjñā again gave birth to two children, Yama and Yamā. Then finding it difficult to bear the fierce brightness of the sun Sāṃjñā sent her court slave, Ādamī, to marry Ādamī otherwise called Sāvarṇa, and went to the house of her father. Viśvākarma did not like this action on the part of his daughter. So Sāṃjñā took the form of a mare and went to the pastures of North Kuru. Thinking Ādamī to be his wife Sāṃjñā, Vivasvāṇa went to bed with her. She conceived and gave birth to two sons and a daughter. The sons were named Sāvarṇa and Sāmi and the daughter was named Tapā. Sāṃjñā loved her own children more. The children of Sāṃjñā were grieved at this Yama once lifted his leg to kick her. “Let that leg be broken,” Ādamī cursed him. The miserable Yama ran to his father and said. “Father, this mother hates us and loves Sāvarṇa and Sāmi more. It is true that I lifted up my leg. But my leg did not touch mother’s head. Father, I request you to pardon the wrong I have done because of my ignorance. Have pity on me and tell me how to save my leg from breaking.” Vivasvān said to Yama that his leg would not be broken, but because of the curse worms would bite his leg. Vivasvān understood that Ādamī was not the real mother. He went to Viśvākarmā. Viśvākarmā put Vivasvān on his turning machine and let him go round. Vivasvān became handsome by turning. Found out his wife Sāṃjñā and approached her. But thinking him to be somebody else she moved away from him. In the meanwhile two male persons were born from the nostrils of Sāṃjñā. There is another story that these two persons were the Āsūvinīkarsaṇa, Vivasvān and Sāṃjñā came home. As a retribution for the wrong he had done, Yama ruled over his subjects justly and earned the name Dharmārjita. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 21; Bhaisajy Purāṇa, Chapter 47; Mahābhārata, Adī Parva, Chapter 171).

4) Some details about Vivasvān. (i) In Mahābhārata, Yama Parva, Chapter 3, the 108 names of Vivasvān are given.

(ii) Vivasvān lived in this world and defeated all his enemies. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 19).

(iii) Vivasvān performed sacrifice in strict accordance with the instructions given in the Vedas and gave as Dakṣaṇā (gift) to the priest, Prajāpati Kaśyapa, the southern quarter. From that day onwards the south got the name Dakṣaṇadāta. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 108, Stanza 1).

(iv) In days of yore Mahāviśvānu advised Vivasvān “Anavartkārthaka yaga”. Vivasvānu advised this art to his son Vaiśvāmata Manu. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 28, Stanza 1).

(v) Vivasvān is included among the twenty eight Pārthas. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 35).

(vi) He learned from Mahāviśvānu Śāvatvādbharaṇa and taught his son Vaiśvāmata Manu the same in Tretāyuga. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 348, Stanza 50).

(vii) The Āsūvinīkarsaṇa, Nyātśya and Dānura, are the sons of Vivasvān. They were born through the nose of his wife Sāṃjñā. (M.B. Amāśaana Parva, Chapter 150, Stanza 17).

VIVAVŚAṆ II. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 105, Stanza 12, that this asura was killed by Garuḍa.

VIVAVŚAṆ III. An eternal god concerned with offerings to the Manes. (M.B. Amāśaana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 31).

VIVAVŚAṆ IV. The first human being who performed sacrifice. This Vivasvān is considered to be the father of Manu and Yama. (Śrīveda 8.22; 10.14.16). In Tatītirīya Samhitā, mention is made that people of the earth are the children of this Vivasvān. (Tatītirīya Samhitā, 6.5.6).

VIVIDA. An asura who was the follower of Kamsa. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Sandhī 10, that the asuras Praimabaka, Ānātra, Tirnāvarta, Muṣṭika, Arjūḍaka, Kesi, Diṃuka, Āgita, Viviḍa and some others had been the followers of Kamsa who caused havoc among the people.

VIVIKTA. A king of Kuśadavā. He was the son of Hiranyaretas. (Bhāgavata, Sandhī 5).

VIVIMŚA. The son of Kuśa, the Solar dynasty. Kuśa had fifteen sons beginning with Khaṇīneira. (M.B. Aivumemdhika Parva, Chapter 4).

VIVIMŚAṬI. A son of Dhruvaśira. The following information about him is given in Mahābhārata

(i) This prince was present at the Svayamvara marriage of Draupadi.

(ii) He was taught hold and bound by the Gauḍharvās in Dvārakāna (a forest). (See under Ghaṣavāsata).

(iii) In the battle between the Vīraśāya and the Kaurava following the slaughtering of cows, this Vivimśati, was defeated by Arjuna. He ran away from the battle-field. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 43).
VIVINDHYA

(iv) In the battle of Bhārata, Vivimātī confronted Bhimaśena and Sutaśoma and was killed. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 93).

VIVINDHYA. An auras. Mention is made in Mahābhārata Vana Parva, Ch. 16, Stanza 22, that this aura fought with Čandraćana, the son of Ruxmin and was killed.

VIVITŚ. One of the hundred sons of Dhrītarāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhimaśena in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Kṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 12).

VIYAMA. One of the three sons of the hermit Sataśrīga. He killed Sudeva, the commander of the army of Ambārīsa and he also was killed in a battle. (M.B. Śantī Parva, Dākinīvāya Pātha, Chapter 98).

VIYATI. A son of Nahuṣa. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9; Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Chapter 4).

VRAJ. A king born in the family of Manu Śvayambhuva. He was the son of Hārvīdhāna. Six sons named Prācīnavarhi, Sukra, Gaya, Krṣṇa, Vraja and Ajīna, were born to Hārvīdhāna by his wife Dhiṣāna. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 16).

VRAJANASA. A king born to emperor Amajīda by his wife Kesina. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 31, that he was the brother of Ḍaṅgū and Rañjīrīma.

VRAJIVAN. (VRAJIVAN). A king of the Yadu clan. He was the son of Kṛṣṇa and father of Kuśa ( Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

VRAṬA. Controls ordained by Vedic Sambhātas are called Vratas. It is known as tapas (penance) also. Vratas are Avadama etc. When it involves mortifications of the body, it is called tapas or penance. Controlling the organs of sense is called nityama (control). Vratas, fast and restraining or control are always good. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 175).

VRDHAGARGYA. An ancient hermit. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 125, Stanza 77, that this hermit had conversed with the Manas about offerings made to them.

VRDHAKASTRA I. The father of Jayadratha, the king of Sindhu. (See under Jayadratha I).

VRDHAKASTRA II. A king born in the Puru dynasty. He favoured the Pāṇḍavas. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 200, Stanza 73, that in the Bhārata battle, Asvathāman killed him.

VRDHAKASTRA III. A king of the Pṛṣṭha dynasty. This king took the side of the Pāṇḍavas in the Bhārata battle and was killed by Bhīma. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 24, Stanza 49).

VRDHAKASEMA. The king of the country Trigarta. He was the father of Sūkra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 9).

VRDHASARM. One of the five sons, born to the king Āyus by his wife Svarbhānū. The remaining four sons were Nahuṣa, Raṭa, Gaya and Aṃcana. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 25).

VRDHIKAYA. A kind of goblin. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 16, that once the senapati of Siva fell scattered over the trees and that these goblins were born from that. Human flesh is the food of these goblins. It is said those who want children need only worship these Vṛdhikās.

VRHIDRAUVIKAYA PARVA. A sub-section of Vana Parva, comprising Chapters 259 to 261.

VRJA. A hermit who was born in the family of emperor Prthu. Antardhāna and Vādī were the two sons of Prthu. A son named Hārvīdhāna was born to Antardhāna by his wife Śikhandini. Diśaṇā who was born in the family of Agni, became the wife of Hārvīdhāna. Prācīnavarhi, Sukra, Gaya, Krṣṇa, Vraja and Ajīna were the six sons of Hārvīdhāna by Dhiṣāna. Of these, Prācīnavarhi became a great Jātāpatī. (M.B. Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 9).

VRJINIVAN. The son of Kṛṣṇa who was born in the family of Manu. He was the father of hermit Uṣāgū (M.B. Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 147, Stanza 23).

VRKA I. A son born to Dhrīṣṭakeśu, the king of Kekaya by his wife Durvā. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

VRKA II. A son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, born by his wife Mitra-priyā. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

VRKA III. An auras. This auras wanted to bring the Devas under his control. “How to achieve it? The only way is to please one of the three god-heads.” The auras saw Nārada and asked him which of the three god-heads could easily be pleased. Nārada replied that it was Śiva. Viṣṇu resolved to please Śiva and began to do penance. He cut each of his organs and offered it in the fire as oblation. At last when Viṣṇu was beginning to cut his head to offer it in fire, Śiva made his appearance, and asked him what his wish was. The boon he requested for, was that any one whose head he touched with his finger should die instantly. Śiva granted that boon. The auras decided to try the boon, on the giver himself first. Terrified the god-man became and began to weep. The auras saw protection from Viṣṇu. Assuming the form of a boy, Mahāviṣṇu stood on the way and stopped Viṣṇu, who was running after Śiva. The boy asked him why he was running. The auras told the boy everything. Then the boy laughed and said “Oh! Auras! What Śiva said was a lie. He has no divine power now. He was making fun of you. Not an ant would die by the touch of your fingers. You just try on your head and see for yourself.” Hearing this the auras became dejected. He thought what the boy said was true. The poor creature touched his own head with his finger. The moment he touched his head, he fell down dead. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10). This story has similarity with that of Bhasmāsura. (See under Bhasmāsura).

VRKA IV. A king. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Adī Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 10, that this king had been present at the Svayarjīvā (marriage) of Draupadi. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Karna Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 16, that this king was killed by a mountain King in the battle of Bhārata.

VRKA V. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by the charier Droṇa in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 16).

VRKA VI. An ancient King who was a pure vegetarian. (M.B. Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 63).

VRKA VII. One of the sons born to Śūra by his wife Mārī. Viṣṇu married Durvāsī. Two sons named Tāke and Puskara were born to the couple. (Bhāgavata Skanda 9).

VRKA VIII. A grandson of Dhrūva who was the son of Uttānapāda. Two sons named Śiṣṭi and Bhāvya were born to Dhrūva by his wife Śambhū. Succhāyā, the wife of Śiśi gave birth to five sinless sons named Ripu, Ripupāla, Vipra, Vṛkṣa, and Vṛkatejas. (Vishnu Purāṇa, Athāta I, Chapter 3).

VṛKATEJAS. A brother of Vṛkṣa. (See under Vṛkṣa).

VṛKṢA (5). (TREES). It is stated in Vaiṣṇava Rāmāyana, Aranya Kānda, Sarga 14, Stanza 29, as follows about the origin of Vṛkṣa (trees).

Prajapati Kāṣṭapa married Anālā, the daughter of Daksā. Trees yielding good fruits were given birth to by Anālā.

VṛKṢAPRATIṢTHĀ. The ancient Indian believed that consecration of Trees and gardens (paris) were means of remission of sins and attainment of heaven. As the consecration of trees is a divine ritual it has to be performed as ordained in the Vedas. The rites are given below:

As the first item of the consecration ceremony of a tree, besmear it with all kinds of medicinal herbs, and adorn it with flour and flower garlands and make it wear good clothes. Then make on it perforations for the ears with golden needle, and anoint ointment for eyes with golden wire. Place on the dais prepared at the foot of each tree, seven fruits and pots (Kalasās) and make invocations. After this, offerings and sacrifices to Indra and the other gods should be given. Again invocation should be made with burnt offerings to Vanaspati. From the middle of the tree alms of cows should be given. Brahmins should bathe the trees with pots placed on the dais, reciting spells and incantations of asynchont, and of Kg, Jyotir and Śāma Vedas along with instrumental music. The owner of the trees should be given bathing water by himself. Then the owner should give cows, lands, ornaments and clothes as gift.

After having done so much, food with milk should be given for four days and burnt offerings should be made with gingerly etc. and butter. The gift to the priest should be double the gifts given to others. (Agni Purāṇa Chapter 70).

VṛKṢAVASI. A Yaksa. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 11, that this Yaksa lives in the palace of Kubera.

VṛKṢAYUVRVEDA. The name Vṛkṣayurveda is used for the conventional rules about planting trees near dwelling places. According to Vṛkṣayurveda it is good to plant 1210 (mango-tree) on the North side of the house. Ficus Indica (banyan) should be planted on the east. Mango tree on the south and Ficus Religiosa (banyan) on the west of the house. Thoray trees should grow up by themselves on the south side of the house. Garden should be close to the house. Svāh, Hasta, Rohini, Svāṣaṇa and Māla are considered to be good stars for planting trees. Stars good for taking trees, across river or in vehicle and to take down into ponds, are Hasta, Maghā, Jyesthā, Asvini, Pushā and Māsha. The stars mentioned above are good for planting Neem tree, Jhonaśa Asoca, Calophyllum, Mimosatrixa, Acacia Priyangan, Syzygium, Mimouna and pomegranate tree. The distance between trees should be twenty rods. This distance is the best. Sixteen rods is medium. But it should never be less than twelve rods. If the tree does not bear fruit, the stem should be examined by cutting with a knife. Then mix powdered vermicile seeds with ghee and smear it on the cut. Then water the tree. If fruits are destroyed before they ripen, mix the powder of horse-grass, black-grass, green-grass, barley and sesam with ghee and smear the tree and water it. Watering the tree with water and ghee will make the tree flower and yield fruits quickly. Mix powdered dung of sheep, powdered barley, Sesam, and cow's flesh with water and keep it for seven days. Then water the tree with this water. This will make any tree yield more fruits and flowers. Watering the trees with fish-water will make them yield fruits more quickly. Mixture of Vermicile seed, fish and rice is a good manure. This manure is a good remedy for all diseases of trees. (Agni Purāṇa Chapter 281).

VṛNDA I. Wife of the asura named Ilandhara. (See under Māyāśiva).

VṛNDA II. See under Svarṇā.

VṛNDAKARA I. One of the hundred sons of Dhrta-sūrya. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Drota Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 33, that he was killed by Bhima, son of Bīma, in the battle of Bhārata.

VṛNDAKARA II. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas. Abhimanyu killed this warrior. (M.B. Drota Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 12).

VṛNDA. A warrior of Subrahmany. (M.B. Śalya Parva Chapter 45, Stanza 64).

VṛṅSHA II. An asura (demon). He is included among those who ruled over this earth in days of old. (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 51).

VṛṅSHA III. A King of the family of Bhārata who was the son of Sakuntalā. It is stated that he had a brother called Durmārya. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VṛṅSHA IV. An incarnation of Śiva in the form of an ox. The following is a story that occurs in Śiva Purāṇa, Saṭarudasiṇa, about this incarnation.

When the Devas and the Asuras united together and churned the sea of milk, ever so many noble objects rose up to the surface of the sea. Several beautiful damsels also came up. Viṣṇu grew amorous of them and thus thousands of sons were born by them. These sons who were born in the Pāṭāla (Nether world), by and by, came up and began to do harm to the dwellers of the earth. At this time Śiva took the incarnation in the form of an ox to study the situation properly. In this disguise Śiva entered Pāṭāla and took by stealth the Sūdradhana (the weapon of Viśnu) and drove him to heaven. When Viśnu had gone out from Pāṭāla, he had advised his sons to stay in Pāṭāla. Viṣṇu who knew of this, cursed them:—"Any man, other than the peaceful hermits Dīnava (asuras) who are born from my portion, who enter Pāṭāla shall die." From that day onwards, the world of Pāṭāla became a forbidden place for men.

VṛṅSHA V. One of the sons of Kārtavīryājuna. It is mentioned in Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, that this prince escaped from the Kātriya extermination of Parāurāma.

VṛṅSHA. An Indian river famous in the Purāṇas. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 33).

VṛṅSHAIIA. Son of Subala, the King of Gândhara. He was the brother of Sakuni. In the battle of Bhārata, this Vṛṅsha, with his five brothers, attacked Trāvāna, who killed the five brothers. Vṛṅshīva alone escaped death. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 90, Stanza 33).

VṛṅSHAIIIA. An asura. Aśīva was another name of this asura. (See under Aśīva).
VRŚABHA III. A Vṛṣabhā King who was the son of Anasūya. This Vṛṣabhā married Jayaunits, the daughter of the King of Kāśī. (Mahāyoga Purāṇa, 65, 25-26).

VRŚABHA IV. A mountain near Girivraj, the capital city of Magadha. (Mahābhārata, Satā Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 2).

VRŚABHĀN. A King. When Vṛṣabhān was cleaning the ground for performing sacrifice, once, he got a girl named Kāthā. He brought her up as his own daughter (Krāśī Parāśi). (Mahābhārata, Satā Parva, Purāṇa, Vṛṣabhān is mentioned as the father of Kāthā).

VRŚABHEKASANA. Another name of Śri Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 7).

VRŚADAMŚA. A mountain near the Mandara mountain, Arjuna once dreamt that he travelled to the world of Śiva with Śri Kṛṣṇa. It is mentioned in M.B. Bhārata Parva, Chapter 60, Stanza 35, that in this dream they visited this mountain Vṛṣadbha also.

VRŚADARIBHA I. 1) General Information. An ancient saintly King in Bhārata. This King Vṛṣadārībha and another King named Seduka were righteous as well as experts in wielding main and subordinate weapons. After completing the education of Vedas, a brahmin once approached King Vṛṣadārībha and begged as alms some horses for giving gift to his teacher. The Brahmin said “It is my wish that you will give me these horses as alms.” Seduka said that he had not enough wealth or horses to give the teacher’s gift. Seduka sent the Brahmin to Vṛṣadbha. The Brahmin went to Vṛṣadbha and begged as alms a thousand horses. The King asked the Brahmin why he was punished as he had done no wrong. The King asked the Brahmin who was beginning to curse. How Brahmin! Whom are you about to curse? Him who has not given you alms or another Brahmin? The Brahmin said, “O King I am sent here by Seduka. I begged as he had instructed.”

The King said, “This evening I shall give you all the horses of the day. You who have been whipped ought not to be sent embittered.” Accordingly the whole of the taxcollection of that day was given to the Brahmin. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 196).

2) Other details.
   (i) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Satā Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 29, that Vṛṣadārībha stays in the palace of Yama glorifying him.
   (ii) When he was reigning, he made a law that all his subjects should give gold and silver as alms to Brahmins. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 3).

VRŚADARIBHA II. Another name of Uśīnara the King of Kāśī. (See under Uśīnara).

VRŚADARIBHI I. A King of Kāśī. Vṛṣadārībhi who was the son of Vṛṣadbha, was known by the name Yuvaśeṣuva also. He gave as alms, various kinds of jewels, women, beautiful horses etc. and entered heaven. (M.B. Śantī Parva, Chapter 234, Stanza 24).

VRŚADARIBHI II. A famous son of Śibi. The following is a story given in Mahābhārata about this Vṛṣadārībhi.

Once seven hermits started going round the earth. At this time Vṛṣadārībhi had been performing a sacrificial service. Vṛṣadārībhi invited the seven hermits and gave them his son as a gift. The child died before long. As famine was prevailing everywhere the hermits were weak and worn out by hunger. They wished to eat the flesh of the child. Vṛṣadārībhi tried to dissuade the hermits from this beastly action in vain. At last the angry King created a wicked fairy to kill the hermits. Though the fairy attacked the hermits, Śibi, who had lived with the seven hermits killed the fairy. Vṛṣadārībhi was not at all behind his father Śibi in liberality. There are various stories in Mahābhārata to illustrate this.

VRŚADARPA. A son of emperor Śibi. He had three brothers named Bhadrā, Suvarṇa and Keśaṇa. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VRŚADHAVAJA I. A King born in the line of Paurava. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 16).

VRŚADHAVAJA II. See under Śibi, Para 1.

VRŚŚAGIR. A royal hermit spoken of in Rgveda. Rṛṣaśva was the son of this hermit. (See under Rṛṣaśva).

VRŚAKA I. Son of Subasta the King of Gandhāra. The following information about him is taken from Mahābhārata.

(i) He was present at the Śvayambhara marriage of Draupadi. (M.B. Aiti Parva, Chapter 139, Stanza 5). He was present at the Kṛṣṇyāya sacrifice (royal consecration) of Yudhīśhūra. (M.B. Satā Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 7).

(ii) He was a prominent archer of the army of the Kauravas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 168, Stanza 1).

(iii) In the battle of Bhārata this Vṛṣaka was killed by Arjuna. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 36, Stanza 2).

(iv) Vṛṣaka also was there among those brave men of the Kurus family who appeared on the surface of the Gaṅgetic water by the invocation of Vṛṣā. (M.B. Āśramavāsaka Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 12).

VRŚAKA II. A Kalīnga prince. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Kaṇḍa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 33, that he also was killed in the battle of Bhārata.

VRŚAKAPI I. One of the eleven Rudras. The eleven Rudras are Ṛṣiras, Bhrāmara, Vṛṣadhvaka, Aparajita, Vṛṣakapi, Śambhu, Kapardi, Raivata, Mrgyāgda, Sarpa and Kapūli. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18). (See under Āśädā Rudras).

VRŚAKAPI II. Another name of Mahāśivī. (M.B. Śantī Parva, Chapter 342).

VRŚAKAPI III. A hermit. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Aśvāsana Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 23, that with so many other hermits, he also attended the sacrifice performed by the gods.

VRŚAKETU. One of the sons of Kaṇā. As he was following the sacrificial horse of Yudhīśhūra as its protector, he was killed by Baṃbavatāna. (Jaimini Bhārata, Āśvamedha Parva, 30).

VRŚAKRĀTHA. A warrior on the side of the Kauravas. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 33, that this warrior stood in the heart of the Garuda-disposition of the army formed by Droṇa.

VRŚALĀKṢA. A King born in the line of Bhārata, the son of Dusyanta. He was the son of Caturanga and the grandson of Kinnapāda. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

VRŚAMĪTRA. A hermit. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 24, that this hermit honoured and loved Yudhīśhūra.

VRŚANASA. A King praised in Rgveda. It is mentioned in Rgveda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuvāsa 10, Śūkta 51.
that once Indra took birth as the daughter of this King under the name Indevi.

Vṛṣāṇḍa. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Stanza 53, that this asura had once ruled over the earth and that because of the attacks of Kāla, he had to leave the earth.

Vṛśanku. An ancient hermit. When Śrī Rāma returned from his forest life, the hermits such as Vṛṣṇiku, Kaviṣṇu, Dhūmrya, Nandreyā, Nārada, Viśvamitra, Sauraḥi, Anāvaka, Śrīśaka, Bhṛgu, Lomasā and Maudgala, from the west came and bowed before him. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

Vṛṣaparva I. A noble Asura. The following information about him is taken from Mahābhārata.

(i) Vṛṣaparva was born to Prajapati Kaśyapa by his wife Daunī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 24).

(ii) He took rebirth in the earth as King Dīghaprajāśī. (M.B. Ādi Parva Chapter 67, Stanza 15).

(iii) He had a daughter named Sarmiṣṭhā. (See under Devayāni).

Vṛṣaparva II. An ancient royal hermit. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 156, Stanza 15, that an ethereal voice was heard by the Pāṇḍavas, who were living in the forest, that they should visit this royal hermit. Accordingly the Pāṇḍavas visited the hermit and he received them cordially. This King rendered them various help such as giving them directions for going through the forest. It is stated in Vana Parva, Chapter 177, that on the return journey also the Pāṇḍavas entered the hermitage of this hermit and received hospitality.

Vṛṣapraśṭhāgiśī. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 93, Stanza 3, that the Pāṇḍavas visited this holy place during their life in the forest.

Vṛṣasena I. A son of Karna. The following information is taken from Mahābhārata about him. (i) Vṛṣasena was a famous warrior in the army of the Kauravas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 167, Stanza 23).

(ii) In the Bhārata-battle he confronted the prominent archers such as Śatānikā, Pāṇḍya, Abhīmānī, Arjuna, Dṛupada, Śātākyā, Nakula and others. (M.B. Drona Parva).

(iii) In the fight with Arjuna, he was killed. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 35).

(iv) Among the brave souls of the Kaurus who were involved to the surface of the river Gaṅga by Vyāsa, Vṛṣasena also was present. (M.B. Āravamavānī Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 10).

Vṛṣasena II. A King who shines in the council of Yama. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 13, that this King glorifies Yama.

Vṛṣasena III. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 167, Stanza 23, about a proud and honoured Vṛṣasena who attended the Rājasūya (sacrifice of royal consecration) of Yudhishthira.

Vṛṣṇi. A famous King of the Yadu dynasty.

(ii) Other details.

The birth of Śrī Kaśyapa was in the family of Vṛṣṇi. (See the genealogy of Śrī Kaśyapa).

(iii) The line of Kings beginning with Vṛṣṇi is called the dynasty of Vṛṣṇi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 217, Stanza 18).

(iv) Vṛṣṇi had two sons named Ādī and Maḥādī. Five sons were born to him by Maḥādī. (Vṛṣṇi 96: 14; Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 211; 1-2; 5-8).

Vṛtra (Vṛtrāśura). A mighty and fierce asura. 1) Reason for his birth. Vṛtra was the rebirth of emperor Cīrakreṣṭu. Cīraketu and his wife Kṛṣṇadwitiya prayed to Viṣṇu, as a result of which a son was born to them. That son died in his infancy. But Aniruddha brought him to life again. Brahma and Narada taught Cīraketu theosophy. Cīraketu sat in contemplation for eight days and changing himself to a Gandharva he flew through the sky. As he was flying, he saw Pārvati sitting on the thigh of Śiva and laughed aloud. Knowing this Parvati cursed him to become an asura. Vṛtrāśura was the rebirth of the emperor according to this curse. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 6).

2) Birth. Two stories are mentioned about the birth of Vṛtrāśura. One story is that Kaśyapa created him from fire. The other story is that Vṛtra was the son of Vṛṣṇi. Both are given below:

(i) Hiranyakaśipu was born to Prajapati Kaśyapa, by his wife Daunī. Mahāvīra killed him on being requested by the Daunī, Daunī then became/get the new mother. Kaśyapa gave her another son. He was Vāla or Bala. Indra killed him with his weapon, the thunder-bolt. Kaśyapa got angry and plucking a hair from his matt hair, made a burnt offering of it, saying "Let a son who would be the killer of Indra be born. Immediately a huge giant, as black as a tannin with yellow eyes, was born from his burnt hair. A hide of antelope with sword in hand, opening his mouth, from which two huge tusks protruded, very wide, and shining with radiance cried out in a voice of thunder, "Oh! Sage! Order me, what am I to do?" Kaśyapa ordered him to kill Indra. He named the monster Vṛtra. (Padma Parāya, Mahākavi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 19).

(ii) It was Prajapati Vṛṣṇi who created Vṛtra to kill Indra. He had sufficient reasons for it. From the very beginning Indra and Vṛṣṇi were enemies. Vṛṣṇi begot a son named Vīrāśima otherwise called Viṣvarūpa, for the purpose of killing Indra. This Viṣvarūpa had three heads. One was meant for drinking Śūra (a liquor), the second for drinking Soma (liquor) and the third for eating food. Viṣvarūpa was a Brahmana. Still, as his mother was an asura, he loved the asuras and mingled with them Indra knew about the behaviour of Viṣvarūpa. He concluded that it was blasphemy and wickedness. Indra who was afraid of Viṣvarūpa, got angry and cut off his heads. Of the heads of Viṣvarūpa, that which drank Soma became a bird called Kapiṣṭha. That which from the neck of Viṣvarūpa, drank the part called Kaḷalāpiṅga, and that which ate food became the bird Tittiri (partridge). Brahmaḥatha (the sin of killing Brahmin) took shape and went against Indra. Though Indra could have destroyed it, he joined his hands and received it. At the end of the year he cut it into four pieces and divided them among earth, water, tree and woman. The earth received it with the boon that depressions would be filled. That sin is now seen as salt beds. Water got it with the boon, “Will be swollen when joined”. That sin is foam and bubbles. The tree got it with the boon, “Will not die even if cut into pieces”. That sin is the sap of the tree. Women got it with the boon, “Amour will last without break”. That sin is the menstruation of women.

When Tvasṭa heard that his righteous son was killed by Indra unreasonably, he became angry and began to make burnt offerings with spells and incarnations of Atharvaveda. This offering continued for eight days. On the eighth day at night, an extremely bright male person arose from the fire pit. He rose higher and higher as the fire burnt. Then he appeared to Tvasṭa. “Father! What is my name? What have I to do for you? What is the reason for your grief?” He said that he was prepared to drink up the ocean dry or smash the mountains, or prevent the sun and the moon from moving or any such thing for the sake of his father. The father ordered him to kill Indra. From that day onwards Vṛtra got ready to kill Indra. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 6).

3) The slaughter of Vṛtra. Hearing about the prowess, strength, and the martial radiance of Vṛtra, Indra grew afraid of him and began to think about means and ways to kill him. Indra called the Saptarṣis (seven hermits) and sent them to Vṛtra. His intention was to make a treaty. The seven hermits approached Vṛtra and requested him to make a treaty with Indra, and told him that Indra was prepared to give half of the position of Indra.

Vṛtra:—Look hermits! If Indra honestly desires to be in peace with me, I have no objection. But what is the surety that Indra will not deceive me?

Hermits:—If Indra proves to be false and deliberately deceives you, he has agreed to bear the sin of Brahmaḥāya incurred, by himself.

Vṛtra agreed to make a treaty on this condition. The hermits took Vṛtra to the palace of Indra. Seeing Vṛtra who was coming to be friends with him Indra rose from his royal chair and offered half of it to Vṛtra. He embraced each other and vowed that they would be brothers from the same womb.

Thus having engaged Vṛtra in a treaty deceitfully, Indra waited for an opportunity to kill Vṛtra. Once Indra sent Rambhā to instigate Vṛtra. “Look, beautiful girl! Make Vṛtra senseless somehow so that I may kill him.” Hearing this, with a beautiful laugh, Rambhā went with her maids to the Park Nambhana and waited for Vṛtra. Vṛtra, with some Dānava friends, came to the park Nambhana for entertainments. Indra walked beside watching for the opportunity to kill him. Without fearing any danger from Indra, Vṛtra walked through the park, seeing the celestial maids singing and dancing and playing various games in the garden, and they reached a corner where Rambhā had been singing sweet songs and dancing with her maids. This sight made Vṛtra amorous. He approached Rambhā and prayed to her to become his wife. Under that sandalwood tree Rambhā asked him, “Oh handsome youth! I am Rambhā. I came here with my maids to play. Who are you, my Lord?”
the daughters of Mṛtyu (Death). (Agui Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

 Vyāghrābhaṭa. The minister of King Śrīdatta, described in Kāthāśīrṣaṇa. Besides Vyāghrābhaṭa, he had three more ministers named Mahābāla, Upendra-bala and Nīśhāraka.

 Vyāghradatta I. A king who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. This king who was a great fighter on the chariot, fought with the teacher Drona. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Drona Parva, Chapter 16, verse 52, that Kālī Parāśara, the nāyaka whom he was a child was Kṛṣṇa. As his birth took place in an island (Dvīpa) he got the name Kṛṣṇadāvāpalaya. After dividing the Vedas he got the name Vedavāsya. He is the composer of Mahābhārata, one of the greatest books in world literature. The birth of great men, generally will be wonderful. Behind the birth of Vyāsa also there is a wonderful story.

As has already been mentioned, Kāli, a fisherwoman was the mother of Vyāsa. There is a story about this Kāli also. When king Vasu of Gedi went to the forest for hunting, he saw the coition of animals and he had seminal discharge. The king sent that semen to his queen. But on the way it fell in the river Kālindī and was eaten by a fish. This fish was a celestial maid named Adrikā transformed to fish by a curse. The fish conceived and got into the net of a fisherman, who lived on the banks of Kālindī. When this fish was cut open a male and a female infant were seen inside. The male child was given to the king himself. The fisherman brought up the girl naming her Kāli. As the girl had a special skill of matsya (fish), she got the name ‘Matsya-gandha’, also. This fisherman was also a ferryman. Kāli used to help her father in ferrying people across the river Kālindī. She grew up and became a young woman.

Once the hermit Parāśara came by that way to go to the other side of the river. At that time, the fisherman who had been ferrying people across the river, was sitting on the banks of the river and having his meal. As soon as Parāśara came, the innocent fisherman—the fosterfather of Matsyagandha—called her, who was standing close by and asked her to take the hermit across the river. The hermit got into the boat. Matsyagandha began to row the boat. The beauty of the damsel sitting in front of him and the little waves of the river, combined together had the effect of arousing passion in the hermit. He became sexually excited and sat close to her. Discerning his intention she moved away from him and prayed to him humbly not to violate her chastity. She repeated her prayer. The hermit Parāśara created an artificial fog around the boat. The smell of fish was gone from her and the fragrance of Musk took its place. The hermit created an artificial island in the middle of the river. They got down on the island and acted a love drama. She became pregnant. Parāśara said to her, “Beautiful girl! Even after your confinement you shall remain a virgin. A son, who will be a portion of Visnu, a man of purity, famous throughout the three worlds, highly learned, the teacher-priest of the whole world, shall be born to you. He shall be born to you. He shall be born to you.”

After this the great hermit took his bath in Yamunā and went away. The pregnancy of Kili was completed instantly and she gave birth to a very handsome boy in that island of Yamunā. As soon as he was born, he grew up and became a hermit radiant with devotion and assuring a vow of purity and absolution. He said to his mother, “Mother! You can go anywhere, as you please. You need have no worry on my account. I am about to go for penance. When anything unpleasant happens to you, just think of me. The incantation you wish to see me, I will be there by you. I wish you a happy life. I am going.” Saying thus the brave boy walked away. (Devi Bāgavata, Sandhī 2; Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapters 60 to 63).

3) Spiritual life.

I) In the forest. We do not see Kṛṣṇadāvāpalaya, who had grown up, up to a youth at the time of his birth, for many years after his departure, hiding away to his mother. He might have been living with hermits in the forests, learning Vedas from them. After this he appears on the banks of river Sarasvati as a teacher and Priest. As he was doing penance there, he saw two sparrows, legs and beaks red, without even down feathers, crying for food, and the priest invited them to the holy fire, and the young ones opened their ruby-red mouths with cries and throbbing. They kissed the young ones and fed them. The young sparrows hid under the wings of their father and mother and enjoyed the surrounding, thrusting out their heads and looking on all sides.

II) Birth of son. Seeing this, the paternity instinct in him was aroused. He understood that love of children was merely for the sake of love, that this love was pure and simple. Moreover there is the maxim that a man without a son has no right to aspire for heaven. Sad and silent, thinking of this, he walked on unswerving and reached the vicinity of the Himālayas. Still, he was doubtful. He began to consider about the deity, before whom he had to do penance for the fulfilment of his wish. He could not decide. As he was sitting in thought, Nārāyaṇa came there. From the talk of Vyāsa, Nārāyaṇa knew that childlessness was the cause of his sorrow. Nārāyaṇa advised him that for the attainment of Puruṣottama (object of life) penance was to be done before Devi Accepting that advice, Vyāsa went to a place near Mahāmeru to do penance.

When Vyāsa began penance, the celestial maid also commenced their work of hindering the penance. It was Gītālī who confronted Vyāsa. She took the form of a parrot of live colours and flew in front of Vyāsa. The hermit was excited at the beauty of Gītālī and sat forgetting himself. As he sat there thinking of the fascinating beauty of the parrot, seminal discharge occurred to him. He became a slave to this infatuation, when he was engaged in making fire by attrition. In this amorous state of mind he was quite unaware of the seminal discharge or its falling on the pieces of wood used for attrition. He continued attrition. Then a very bright, divine person appeared from the pieces of wood. At the birth of a person, without attachment to a womb, all the worlds were delighted. The hide of black antelope, water pot, hermit’s rod etc. fell from the sky. Birth rituals and ceremonies, according to the custom, were conducted by Vyāsa. As he was born from the semen discharged into the sight of Vyāsa (parrot), the infant was named Suka. As soon as he was born, Suka began to grow by divine power and shortly became a boy of shining radiance. After investiture with the Brahma-string, the boy was sent for education to the hermitage of Bhrāpati, the teacher of the devas. Suka completed his education with Bhrāpati and having performed Sadvrata and offering of gift to the teacher, he returned home to his father.

2. Disciple. Suka commenced advanced study under his father Vyāsa. Besides Suka, Vyāsa had disciples such as Vaiśampāyana, Śūta, Pāma, Jaimini and others also, living with him. The hermitage of Vyāsa soon grew up to a great educational institution, with plenty of disciples.

3. Separation of son. In the meanwhile Suka married and lived the life of a householder in the hermitage of his father, for a time. Then forsaking his family and his father, Suka went to the peak of Kaṭākha and began to do penance meditating on Śiva. At last he became a divine person who had obtained complete attainments, and breaking the top of the peak open, he rose up into the sky and shone there as a second Sun. The devas who saw Suka rising up by breaking the peak of Kaṭākha and staying up in the sky, praised him.

This untimely separation of his son had undermined the firmness of the mind of Vyāsa. Filled with grief, he left his hermitage and wandered here and there calling out his son by name. He could not find his son. At last he reached the peak of Kaṭākha where his son had been doing penance. Standing there he called aloud his son by name crying. Paramatma appeared before the lamenting father and consoled him. Thus getting a little bit of peace of mind, Vyāsa returned to his hermitage and lived there. The sorrowing Vyāsa, was made still more sorrowful by the departure of his beloved disciples, Anir, Deva, Vaiśampāyana, Gāntaka, Jamini and others who had been living in the hermitage and who had departed, having finished their education. All the surroundings of the hermitage seemed to him filled with pain. At last he thought about his mother. (Devi Bhāgavata Skanda 1).

4) His terrestrial life.

1. Preface. Within this period many changes had taken place in Hastinapura and the bank of Yamunā. Santanu the king of the Lunar dynasty had married Gangādevī, who had disappeared after giving the king a son named Devavrata (Bhīma). Bhīma grew up. Once Santanu was hunting in the forest when he was attracted by the sweet smell of musk. Tracing the origin of that smell, the king reached the fisherman’s hut on the banks of the Yamunā. That smell proceeded from Kauravā (Satyavatī) the mother of Vyāsa. The king fell in love with her. He returned to the palace, sad and silent. Learning the cause of his father’s sadness, Devavrata went to the fisherman’s hut and took Satyavatī to the palace to be given to his father. Devavrata had taken a vow that the kingdom would be given to the son born to Satyavati and that he would remain unmarried, throughout his life. Because he had taken so terrible a vow, Devavrata came to be called Bhīma from that day onwards.

Two sons named Cīrāgāda and Vīceśvravira, were born to Santanu. Čirāgāda died when he was young. Vīceśvravira married Ambikā and Ambalikā, daughters of the King of Kāśī. Vīceśvravira also died before any children were born to him. It seemed as if the family was about to become extinct. At this juncture Satyavatī thought about her son Vyāsa.

ii) Vyāsa in Hastināpuri. The mother thought about him, and instantly he reached Hastināpuri. Because of her compulsion, two sons were born, one each to Ambikā and Ambalikā from Vyāsa. The son of Ambikā was Dhruva and the son of Ambalikā was Pāṇḍu. Vidura was the son born to Vyāsa by their maid.

iii) Vyāsa and the Kaurava-Pāṇḍava. From this time onwards we see Vyāsa as the spiritual teacher of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas. Behind all the movements of these two families we could see the hand of Vyāsa. Thus though he came to Hastināpuri and gave advice to the members of the family frequently, his main abode was his hermitage. Vyāsa’s contact with Hastināpuri could be seen up to the Mahāpravartana (the great departure) of the Pāṇḍavas. In all the administrative affairs up to this period, Vyāsa also had a part. The situations in which Vyāsa had taken part in the life-voyage of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas are given below.

(i) Vyāsa gave the boon that hundred sons would be born to Gāndhārī. (M. B. Adi Parva, Chapter 114, Stanza 9).

(ii) Vyāsa cut the mass of flesh given birth to by Gāndhārī into a hundred pieces and kept them in hundred pots. (M. B. Adi Parva, Chapter 114, Stanza 17).

(iii) Vyāsa consoled Gāndhārī by telling her that over and above hundred sons a daughter also would be born to her. (M. B. Adi Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 16).
(iv) Vyāsa consoled the Pāṇḍavas who had been living in the forest with their mother Kuntī, after the death of Pāṇḍu their father. (M. B. Adi Parva, Chapter 153, Verse 3).

(v) On another occasion Vyāsa came to the Pāṇḍavas and told them the stories of the previous births of Pāṇḍu (Adi Parva, Chapter 166).

(vi) Vyāsa rendered all possible help to the Pāṇḍavas to marry Pāṇḍavi (Adi Parva, Chapter 193).

(vii) Very often Vyāsa was a member of the council of Dharmaputra. (M. B. Saṁhitā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 11).

(viii) It was Vyāsa who sent Arjuna to the north, Bhimaśeṇa to the east, Sahadeva to the south and Nakula to the west for regional conquest. (M. B. Saṁhitā Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 34).

(ix) Vyāsa engaged himself in making various arrangements in the Rajasīya (sacred) congregation of Yudhishṭhira. (M. B. Saṁhitā Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 34).

(x) At the end of the Rajasīya, Vyāsa predicted the future of Yudhishṭhira. (Saṁhitā Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 1).

(xi) When the Rajasīya ended, Vyāsa appointed Yudhishṭhira. (Saṁhitā Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 10).

(xii) Vyāsa advised Dīṛghārātra to prevent Durvudhama from doing injustice. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapters 7 and 8).

(xiii) When the Pāṇḍavas were living in the Dvātavānā (forest) Vyāsa visited them and taught Yudhishṭhira the art of Prātimūrs. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 36, Stanza 24).

(xiv) He sent Saṁjaya to Dīṛghārātra to tell him about the greatness of Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M. B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 69, Stanza 11).

(xv) He gave Saṁjaya the power of having the eye of a seer penetrating beyond time and space (Divya drṣṭī). (M. B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 10).

(xvi) Vyāsa consoled Yudhishṭhira who was stricken with grief in the course of the battle of Bhārata. (M. B. Droga Parva, Chapter 71, Stanza 23).

(xvii) When Yudhishṭhira cried over the death of Ghaṭotkaca in the battle of Bhārata, Vyāsa came to Yudhishṭhira and consoled him. (M. B. Droga Parva, Chapter 183, Stanza 58).

(xviii) He talked to Aṣṭavāhuṁ about the greatness of Śiva and Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M. B. Droga Parva, Chapter 201, Stanza 56).

(xix) When Śatya was about to kill Saṁjaya, Vyāsa turned him back from the attempt and rescued Saṁjaya. (M. B. Saṁyā Parva, Chapter 29, Stanza 39).

(xx) Vyāsa argued and established that the act of cursing Aṣṭavāhuṁ on the part of Śrī Kṛṣṇa was correct. (M. B. Saṁpikā Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 17).

(xxi) Vyāsa prevented Gāndhārī from her intention to curse the Pāṇḍavas. (M. B. Śrī Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 7).

(xxii) When the battle of Bhārata was over, Vyāsa advised Yudhishṭhira about matters regarding the administration of the country.

(xxiii) Yudhishṭhira felt grieved at the death of relatives and friends in the battle of Bhārata and he decided to commit suicide. But Vyāsa dissuaded him from that attempt. (M. B. Śānta Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 28).

(xxiv) Vyāsa walked to the place where Bhīma lay on the bed of arrows and visited him. (M. B. Śānta Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 5).

(xxv) Vyāsa advised Yudhishṭhira to perform Avamadha (horse sacrifice). (M. B. Avamadha Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 8).

(xxvi) Vyāsa advised the Pāṇḍavas to go to King Marutta for wealth when the battle of Bhārata was over. (Avamadha Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 20).

(xxvii) Vyāsa consoled Udra, who was lamenting over the death of her husband. (Avamadha Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 11).

(xxviii) He consoled Arjuna who was crying over the death of his son. (Avamadha Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 14).

(xxix) Vyāsa advised Yudhishṭhira on the various arrangements which were to be made for the conduct of the horse-sacrifice. (Avamadha Parva, Chapters 62 to 72).

(xxx) Vyāsa went to Dīṛghārātra, who had gone to the forest after the Bhārata battle and pacified him. (M. B. Aṣṭamāvānī Parva, Chapter 28).

(xxxi) Vyāsa brought the spirits of those who died in the Bhārata battle to the surface of the river Gaṅga by the power of his prayer and Dīṛghārātra and the others saw them. (See under Dīṛghārātra, Para 7).

(xxxii) At the instruction of Vyāsa, all the Kṣatriya widows immersed themselves in the river Gaṅga and everyone of them entered the world of her husband. (M. B. Aṣṭamāvānī Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 18).

(xxxiii) When the Yādus clan was completely destroyed, Arjuna went to the hermitage of Vyāsa and talked with him. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 8).

(xxxxv) Vyāsa had been an advisor of King Janamejaya. (See under Janamejaya).

5) Saving a worm. Once a wicked man took rebirth as a worm. This worm was crawling in haste for life in front of a cart coming at great speed. He saved the worm and gave it Brahminho, and in the next birth it became a Brahmin who lived in peace and comfort. (M. B. Aṇuṇāsana Parva, Chapter 117).

6) The literary life of Vyāsa. Towards the close of his life Vyāsa again entered the caves of Himālayas. Vyāsa who had steered through a very wide and rough sea of life, was in a position to understand clearly the various sides of human life. In the mind of that sage, who sat in deep contemplation in the eternally silent caves of the Himālayas, the events of his post-life began to line up one after the other. From that inward instigation the Purāṇas (the Myths and legends) took form. It might have been during this period that Vyāsa divided the Vedas and composed Purāṇas and Upa-purāṇas.

One does not go wrong in saying that it was the composing of the Mahābhārata that brought Vyāsa very close to the later generations. The stories of the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas, flowed through his mind as a river flows down crushing down the banks on either side. A scribe was necessary to take them down, in the form of verses. Vyāsa informed Brahmin of this need. Brahmin replied “Gānapati is the only person capable of taking down every thing that you sing.” Accordingly Vyāsa thought of Gānapati, who came to the side of Vyāsa, and he informed Gānapati of his need. Gānapati said that he was willing to do the work on condition that Vyāsa would go on singing unceasingly, so that he weight, it had to stop the iron pen. Vyāsa said that while he would be singing the poems without stopping, Ganapati should not take down this and that without graping the meaning. Both agreed to this condition and the composing of the Mahābhārata commenced.
Within two years and a half the great poetic work was finished. The great disciples of Vyāsa, such as Vaikāmpayana, Jaimini and such others sang them and learned them by heart and published them in the world. (M.B.
Ādi Parva, Chapter 1).

7) Manu Vyāsa. It is stated in the Purāṇas that in every Manu's age, a Vyāsa will be born. It is mentioned in Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amṛta 3, Chapter 3, as to who the persons who took birth as Vyāsa in a particular Manu's age and which were the Vedas and branches of Vedas they had divided. It is given below:
During the age of Manu Vaivāvan, in each of the first Dvāparayugas, the Veda had been divided by great hermits, twenty-eighth. Twenty-eighth Veda-Vyāsa have passed, each of whom had divided the Veda into four parts in each Dvāpar Yuga. It was Brahma himself who had divided the Veda into four in the first Dvāpar Yuga; Prājapati was the Vedavyāsa in the second Dvāpar Yuga. In the third, Vyāsa was the teacher-priest Śukra; in the fourth Bṛhaspati; in the fifth the Sun; and in the sixth the all powerful Dharmarāja. It was Indra in the seventh, Varuṇa in the eighth, Śaṅkara in the ninth, and Trirādha in the tenth. It was Trirādha in the eleventh, Bharmvāja in the twelfth, Amṛtikī in the thirteenth, Varuṇa in the fourteenth, and Amṛtikī in the fifteenth, Dharmāja in the sixteenth, Krūtāvāya in the seventeenth and Jaya in the eighteenth. Next Bhāradvāja comes as Vedavyāsa and Gaurama after Bhāradvāja. It was hermit Haryātmā who was the next Vyāsa, and then comes Vaijāravā. The Next Vyāsa was Trāṇābinda born in the clan of Somaskama. He was followed by Viśvā, otherwise called Vaṁśi born in the family of Bhṛgu. Sahāsī is the Next Vyāsa. After that Pārāśara, then Jātāram and then Kṛṣṇadwaipāyana. They are the twenty-eighth Vedavyāsa. Each one of these had divided the Veda which had been one at the beginning of each Dvāpar yuga, into four Vedas. It is Avatābhāma, the son of Dṛṣṇa, who is going to be the Vedavyāsa of the coming Dvāpar yuga.

8) Other details.
(i) Most of the scholars are of opinion that the period of Vyāsa was between 1800 and 1500 B.C.
(ii) Apāntaratamas was the rebirth of Vyāsa. (See under Apāntaratamas).
(iii) In Mahābhārata, the word Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇadwaipāyana, Dwāparayana, Satyavatācala, Satyavatayātanaja, Parāśara, Parāśarātmajas, Bādhrāyana, Vedavyāsa etc. are used as synonyms of Vyāsa.
(iv) The word Vyāsa means he who describes elaborately.

"He became Vyāsa because he had described all the Vedas" (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 88).
Vyāsa—describe (Differently: the branches and divide).

VYĀSASTALI. An ancient holy place on the border of Kuruksetra. It is said that because of his grief due to the separation of his son, Vyāsa tried to commit suicide at this place. He who visits this place would get the fruits of giving thousand cows as alms. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 98).

VYĀSAVANA. A forest near Kuruksetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 98, that he who bathes in the holy bath named Manojivati tirtha in this forest, would get the fruits of giving thousand cows as alms.

VYĀSA. A King. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 3, that this King remains in the palace of Yama.

VYĀVAHĀRA. It is mentioned in Manusmṛti, Chapter 8, that administering the law was of eighteen types in ancient India.

i) Pertaining to giving and taking.
ii) Pertaining to the property entrusted to another for keeping.
iii) Selling the property by anybody other than its owner.
iv) Appropriating gain to oneself in a combined transaction.
v) Not handing over the property which was given as a gift.
vi) Non-payment of salary.
vii) Disobeying the law.
viii) Refraining and doubting the ownership after the completion of a transaction of selling or buying.
ix) A law suit between the owner of the cattle and the cowherd or shepherd.

x) Dispute about boundary.
xi) Striking another.

xii) Reviling others.

xiii) Theft and robbery.
xiv) Violence.
xv) Stealing another's wife.
xvi) Matrimonial responsibilities.
xvii) Partition. xviii) Gambling.

Whenever difference of opinion arises between two persons on any of the matters given above, the King should interfere and make a decision. For one reason or another, if the King could not attend the court, three learned Brahmins should enter the court and conduct the trial sitting or standing, and they should not conduct the trial walking to and fro. This was the practice of courts in ancient India.

VYOMA. A King born in the dynasty of Bharata, the son of Durgapāla. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Sandhāna 9, that Vyoma was the son of Dāśārha and the father of Jñāna.

VYOMĀR. An eternal Viśvadeva (deity concerned with offerings to the Manes). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 35).

VYOMĀŚURA. Son of Māyaśura. For the story how Kṛṣṇa killed this asura, see under Kṛṣṇa, para 24.

VYUDHORU (VYUDHORASKA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Bhim Parva, Chapter 96, Stanza 23, that Vyudhoru was killed by Bhimasena in the battle of Bhārata.

VYUHA. (Disposition of an army). Disposition of an army of four parts, (infantry, cavalry, elephants and chariots) in the battlefield, the arrangement of it, in various forms. It is said that during the period of Mahābhārata, there were various forms of disposition of the army. Some of them are given below:
i) Ardhacandravyūhā. (like a Crescent moon) (M.B. Bhāṣa Parva, Chapter 56).
ii) Garudavyūhā. (M.B. Bhāṣa Parva, Chapter 56).
iii) Krauṣṇavyūhā. (M.B. Bhāṣa Parva, Chapter 60).
iv) Cakravyūhā. (wheel-shaped) (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 34).
v) Makaravyūhā. (shark-like) (M.B. Bhāṣa Parva, Chapter 69).
vi) Maṅgalyavṛtta. (M.B. Bhāṣa Parva, Chapter 69).

vii) Maṅgalārādhavyūhā. (M.B. Bhāṣa Parva, Chapter 20). viii) Vajravyūhā. (Diamond-shaped) (M.B. Bhāṣa Parva, Chapter 81).
ix) Sākatavyūhā. (cart-shaped) (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 7).

xi) Śvayaṁvyūha. (Vulture-like) (M.B. Bhāṣa Parva, Chapter 69).

xii) Sarvabodhayuṭhā. (fortified all-round) (M.B. Bhāṣa Parva, Chapter 99).

xiii) Suparnavṛtta. (Kite-shaped) (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20).

xiv) Śucumkhavyūha. (Like the needle-eye) (M.B. Bhāṣa Parva, Chapter 77).

VYŪKA. A country of ancient India. (M.B. Bhāṣa Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 31).

VYŪṢĪṬASA. A King of the Puru dynasty, who was righteous and just. He performed many sacrifices. His wife was Bhadrā, daughter of King Kaṭavān. It is said that this Bhadrā was the most beautiful woman in India. As the King led a luxurious life with this queen Bhadrā he ended his life in an untimely death.

When the King died, he had no children. Bhadrā cried for a long while embracing the dead body of the King. Then the spirit of Vyūṣīṭasvā, without the body, said to her, "My love. Lie with me in your own bed on the eighth or fourteenth day of your menstruation. I will give you sons." She acted according to the wish of the King and got seven sons from the dead body. Her sons were three Satyas and the four Madras. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 120).

VYŪṢṬA. A King of the dynasty of Dhravā. This King was the son of King Purṣāṇa, by his wife Prabhā. Pradaṇa, Nīthiḥa and others were brothers of Vṛṣṭa. A son named Sarvaṭejas was born to this King. (Bhāgavata, Sandhā 4).

VYŪṢṬI. Another name for day-time.

YA. (a) This letter means "Yaga", "Yāti" (one who goes) or "hero". (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

YĀDAVA. See under Yaduvāṁśa.

YĀDAVI. Mother of the King Śaṅkara. (For more details see under Sargāga).

YĀDU I. The founder of the Yādava Vansha or Yadu Vansha.

1) Genealogy. From Visūṭa were descended in the following order:—Brahmā—Ṛti—Candra—Buddha—Purūrasva—Ayus—Nahusa—Yāṣṭi—Yadu.

2) Yadu Vansha (Yādava Vansh). The origin of Yadu Vansha is from Ṛti. Candra, Durvasas and Dattātreya Mahārahva, by Anasāya. Budha was born to Candra, Purūrasva was born to Budha, Ayus was born to Purūrasva, and Nahusa was born to Ayus. Two children, Ayas and Yasayī were born to Nahusa. Yasayī had two wives, Sarmitthā and Devayāṇī. Three sons, Drubhyu, Anudrubhyu and Puru were born to Sarmitthā. The Puru vansha takes its origin from Puru. Yadu had two sons by Devayāṇī. These were Yadu and Turvasu. The descendants of Yadu are the Yadavas.

Four sons, Sahasrajit, Kraśṭā, Nala and Ripu were born to Yadu. Sahasrajit had a son, Satajit. Three sons Mahābhāyu, Venūhaya and Hēhaya were born to Satajit. Of them Hēhaya became famous under the name of Ekaviras and his son Bhava was the ancestor of the Hēhaya and Bhgavas were on terms of enmity. Dīharma was born to Hēhaya, and Kuni or Kuni was born to Dīharma. Kuni had four sons—Sādajit, Mahisā, Bhadravesa and Durdamah. Dānaka was the son of Bhadravesa and Dānaka had four sons—Kṛtavrīya, Kṛtāgni, Kṛtavrāma and Kṛtavrja. Of them, Kṛtavrja who was the eldest, was the father of Kṛtavrja. From here, Yadu vamsa continues from Kṛtavrja. He had five sons, Jaya, Vṛṣṭi, Vṛṣṭi, Madhu and Uṣijita. Vṛṣṭi was the son of Madhu, the fourth of them. From this point, Yadu vamsa continues from Vṛṣṭi. Yaduvāṁśa from this stage is also known as Vṛṣṭi vamsa. Vṛṣṭi had four sons—Sumitra, Yudhajit, Vana and Śravabhuma. Yadu vansha continues from Yudhajit. He had two sons, Śrī and Nīma. Śrī’s son was Satyaka and Satyaka’s son was Śrīyāna. Śrīyāna had another name, Yuyudhāna. Yaya was Śrīyāna’s son. Kuni was the son of Yaya, Ananita was the son of Kuni and Prāni was the son of Ananita. Prāni’s sons were Citrāṇaṭha and Śvaphala. Viḍūrathā and Kukura were born to Citrāṇaṭha. Śrīva was the son of Viḍūrathā. Śrīva was the son of the three sons of Prāni. Śrīya was the son of Bhoga. Four sons, Devavāma, Gaḍādhanvā, Kṛtarpāva and Śrīva, were born to Hṛdika. Śrīva married Mārisa and their children were Vasa, Devabhaga, Devaṭravas, Anaka, Śṛṣyāya, Kākkānaka, Śyāmakā, Vatsa, Kāvika and Vaṃdeva. Vaṃdeva married Devaki, the sister of Kamsa. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was their son. Pradvyumma was the son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Aniruddha was the son of Pradvyumma and Vajra was the son of Aniruddha. The last known link of that branch of Yadu vamsa was Vajra.

Kamsa also belonged to Yadu vamsa. Kukura who was the brother of Viḍūrathā was the ancestor of Kamsa. Ugrasena who was a linear descendant of Kukura, was the father of Kamsa. Devaki mentions Devaki as the mother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa as Kamsa’s sister. But in fact she was not his direct sister. Ugrasena, Kamsa’s father, had a brother named Devaka. This Devaka had three sons, Devapā, Upadeva and Sudēva. Devaki, Śrī Kṛṣṇa’s mother was the daughter of Devapā. Devaki had six sisters who were—Śrutadeva, Śāntideva, Upadeva, Śrideva, Devārakṣit and Sahadeva. Akroha who went to Ambaḍi also belonged to another branch of Yadu vamsa. Prāni who was of the ninth generation from Vṛṣṭi, had two sons—Citrāṇaṭha and Śvaphala. Akroha was the son of Śvaphala.

3) Other details about Yadu Vansha.

(i) Once Yāṣṭi wanted his son Yadu to transfer the latter’s youthfulness to Yāṣṭi. The son refused to oblige the father who therefore pronounced a curse that Yadu’s descendants would not enjoy kingship. (For detailed story, see under Yāṣṭi).}

(ii) Yadu’s descendants are called Yādavas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 10).
YADU II was the son of Devayāni and the grandson of Sukrācārya. Although Yadu was a hero, he was dull-witted. He did not obey his father. He used to despise his father and brothers. His capital city was Hastinapura. He became dull-witted after the loss of his kingdom by the curse of his father. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 149).

The end of Yadu Varsha. Śri Kṛṣṇa was one of the most important members of the Yadu Varsha. That family continued for only 146 years more after the end of the Bhārata Yuddha. At the end of the thirty-six years, evil omens began to appear in Dwārakā. Whirlwinds began to blow furiously. Frightened birds began to fly helter-skelter. Rivers began to flow upwards. The whole land was enveloped in mist. Comets continued to drop from heaven, scattering sparks of fire. The sun’s disc was eclipsed with clouds of dust.

At that time, one day, the sages Viśvmitra, Kapa and Nārada happened to come to Dwārakā. A band of Yādavas, under the leadership of Śamba, gathered round the sages to make fun of them. They drugged Śamba like a pregnant woman and asked the sages what child “she” would bear. The enraged sages replied that the “Child” would be an iron pestle which would be the cause of the death of all the Yadvas. Yādava Varsha, they added, that with the exception of Rāma, (Balabhadrā Rāma) and Kṛṣṇa, the whole of Yādava Varsha would come to ruin.

Next day Śamba did give birth to an iron pestle. The frightened Yādavas recalled the curse of the sages. They reported the matter to their king. The king, in deep grief, dressed in dark yellow, sat in the castle filled with dust and ordered his men to throw the dust into the sea.

People recalled Gāndhari’s curse on Śri Kṛṣṇa after the Bhārata Yuddha. The curse was that the family of Śri Kṛṣṇa who was the cause of all mischief, would be wiped out within a period of 36 years.

At that time, women began to be stolen from Dwārakā every night by a dark woman monster. Śri Kṛṣṇa’s women, thin and ragged, slipped out of Kṛṣṇa’s grip and rose up to heaven, in the very presence of the Vṛṣṇis. Seeing these evil omens, the alarmed Vṛṣṇis and Andhakas began to leave the place on a pilgrimage. They reached the shore of Prabhāsī tirtha. The Uddhavas parted company with the Yādavas there. Nobody prevented the Uddhavas. Śri Kṛṣṇa saw that the end of the Yādava Yuddha was approaching, also kept silent. The Yādava leaders in despair, took to drinking. Intoxicated by drinking they began to quarrel. The particles of the iron pestle thrown into the sea, were carried and deposited on the shore by the waves. They began to sprout into a kind of grass. The blades of this grass soon transformed themselves into iron pestles. The Yādavas pulled them out and began attacking each other with them.

Most of them were beaten to death by their own kinfolk. Śri Kṛṣṇa who was in a state of trance in “Yogakṣana”, was hit on his toe by an arrow shot by a hunter and fell into Śāmbihi. Balabhadrā Rāma denounced his body and went to Pāṇāla.

After that the sea advanced and submerged the whole of Dwārakā. (M.B. Mausala Parva).

YADU III. There is another Yadu mentioned in the Purāṇas, who was the son of Upāricara Vasu. Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 31, says that this Vasu was never defeated by anyone at any time.

YAJNAŚARMA. A Brāhmaṇa made famous in the Purāṇas. He was the son of Sivaśārmaka. (For detailed story, see under Sivaśārmaka).

YAJNAŚARMA. King of Yadus. There are references to this king in many places in the 1st Mandala of Rgveda.

YAJNAŚARMA. A sage born in Kasyapa gotra. (For further details, see the word Upayāja and Pārśurāma).
YAṆAṢATRU. A Rākṣasa who fought against Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa in the forest. Kharā, Dūṣaṇa and Trīkūtra were the three Rākṣasas who declared war on Śri Rāma. YaṆaṣatru was one of the twelve military commanders of Kharā. Vālmīki Rāmāyana, Arāsya Kāṇḍa, 26th Sarga, mentions that the twelve heroes who were Kharā’s commanders were: Śrenagāmī, Prthugrīva, YaṆaṣatru, Vīṇāṅgama, Durṣaya, Karaṭrākṣa, Paruṣa, Kālakāṃuka, Meghamālī, Mahāmālī, Sarpāya and Rudhrīkāna.

YAṆASENA I. See under Pañcatantra.

YAṆASENA II. Drupada, the son of King of Pañchala. (For more details see under Droupada).

YAṆĀVĀKA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. There is a reference to him in Mahābhārata, Salva Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 80.

YAṆĀVALKYA. An ancient sage who was a profound scholar.

1) General. Purāṇas say that this sage spent the major part of his life at the court of King Janaka. He was also King Janaka’s priest. In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 16, it is mentioned that Kāli was YaṆāvalkya’s priest. Mahābhārata, Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 81, mentions that YaṆāvalkya was a “Brahmavādī son” of Viśvāmitra.

2) Thousand cows. Once King Janaka conducted a Yāga. At that time he wished to find out the most eminent among the sages. He promised to present a thousand cows to the sage who was a consummate scholar. A bag of gold coins was also tied to each horn of the cows. Jataka announced that the sage who claimed to be a consummate scholar might come forward and take the cows with him. No one among the numerous sages who were present, dared to come forward. YaṆāvalkya, however, ordered his disciple to take the cows home with him. The other sages questioned his right to claim the cows. YaṆāvalkya asserted his right to do so. One of the sages named Arthabhāgā stood up and asked him the following question:

Arthabhāga: —When a man who has not acquired divine knowledge dies, his “Īśānendriya” (senses of knowledge) are also merged with it. How is it possible for him to accept another body afterwards? “YaṆāvalkya: —Karma (action) becomes the cause of his rebirth.”

Next Kahola and many other sages put various questions to him. The substance of their talk is given below:

Kahola: —What have you to say about the invisible and omnipresent Brahman?

YaṆāvalkya: —Your soul is the omnipresent Brahman. The soul has no hunger or thirst, fear or desire, old age or death. Those who wish to know the soul, become sages after transcending love of wife, children or worldly riches. The two qualities essential for sages are scholarship and spiritual knowledge.

Gārgī: —Who is the warp and woof of everything?

YaṆā: —It is Brahman. Do not ask further; if you do, your head will be broken to pieces.

Arundhata: —Is the warp and woof of everything within? (Antaryāmī).

YaṆā: —He who is contained in Jagat (the universe) without the knowledge of Jagat, he whose body is Jagat, he who controls Jagat as antaryāmī, he is within every one. He cannot be seen, but he sees. He cannot be heard; but he hears. He is capable of thinking; but he is beyond our thought. He exists as one who sees, hears and thinks, in all creatures.

Gārgī: —I have two questions to ask. They are as sharp and pointed as two arrows. By what force is fixed that which is above Heaven, below the earth and that which is between them, like warp and woof?

YaṆā: —By the sky.

Gārgī: —By what force is the sky held in position like warp and woof?

YaṆā: —Under the command of God, the sun and moon do not deviate from their orbits. The sky and the earth remain in their respective places. Rivers run making the fields fertile. One who lives and works without the ability to know God does not obtain immortality. He who dies without knowing God is a Kṛpāṇa (spiritual bankrupt). On the contrary, he who knows God attains Mokṣa.

Śakalya: —How many gods are there?

YaṆā: —Thirty-three. They are—8 Vasus, 11 Rudras, 12 Ādityas, Indra and Prajapati. The 8 Vasus are—Agni, Prthvi, Vāyu, Antarikṣa, Āditya, Dyaus (Heaven), Ĉandra and Sūrya. The 11 Rudras are the combination of the 10 Ātmanendriyas and the working of the mind. The ruling deities of the 12 months are known as the 12 Ādityas. They receive into them our lives and our Karma (actions).

YaṆāvalkya gave suitable answers to all other questions of Śakalya. At last, he asked Śakalya: —“Now I will ask you a question. Whom do the Upaniṣads describe? If you do not answer, your head will break.” Śakalya could not answer it. He dropped down with a broken head. He asked the other scholars who had gathered there, if any of them wanted to ask him more questions. But no one came forward. All remained dumb. Then he continued: —“Frost leaves sprout from a tree which has been cut. If the seed is destroyed, the tree does not grow out of it. How is it that a man is born again after his death?”

No one was able to answer that question. Thus after deceiving all of them in argument, YaṆāvalkya went home with the cows.

3) In Janaka’s court again. On another occasion, YaṆāvalkya went to see King Janaka. The King asked him whether he had come for getting cows or to ask absurd question. The sage answered that he had come for both. Their conversation continued as follows:

Janaka: —Jīta Muni has said that “Vacana” (word) is Brahman or God. What is your opinion?

YaṆā: —It is correct. But did he say which is the body and abode of God?

Janaka: —No.

YaṆā: —In that case he has said only one-fourth about God. Vacana is god’s body and sky, his abode. Brahmanvīdyā depends on the word. The word is Parabrahman.

Janaka was highly pleased. He decided to give a thousand bullocks to the sage. But YaṆāvalkya said that his father’s principle was to give effective knowledge to the pupil and not to receive any dakṣiṇā (payment) from him. Janaka again wanted YaṆāvalkya to explain clearly what “Brahman Vidyā” is.

YaṆā: —Just as a person can reach his destination by walking or by travelling in a chariot or by sailing in a boat, in order to secure peace for the soul, you are depending on the Upaniṣads. But although one is learned in Vedas and Agamas, or adored by others, or wealthy, or well-versed in Upanisads, unless one has known God—unless one acquired Brahman—none can be said to be gratified. Do you know where you will go after renouncing your body?

Janaka: I do not know.

Yajña: I shall tell you. The deity of the right eye is "Indra" (light). People call it "Indras". The deity of the left eye is Indrāni, the wife of Indra. Indra is elder and Indrāni is food. In a state of consciousness they are separated. (Then the soul is called Vaśivānara.) In a state of dream, the two are united. (Then the soul is called Tājūsa.) In a state of slumber, the soul is in "Prṛṣṭā" state. (Since there is no activity it is called Prṛṣṭa.) In the fourth or "Turiya" state, one becomes capable of transcending the three other states and to attain Para-Brahman. It is a state of fearless transcending birth and death.

The King who was pleased by this teaching dedicated the kingdom of Videha and even himself to the sage.

4) In Janaka’s court for the third time, after some years Yajñavalkya went again to Janaka’s court. At that time also there was a philosophical discussion between the King and the sage in the form of questions and answers. Janaka:—Which is the light that gives us guidance during the day time?

Yajña:—The Sun.

Janaka:—After sunset which is the light that guides us?

Yajña:—The Moon.

Janaka:—And in the absence of the sun and moon?

Yajña:—The light of the stars.

Janaka:—Which is the light that guides us in the absence of the sun, moon and Agni?

Yajña:—Vacana.

Janaka:—Which is the light that shines in the absence of all these luminaries?

Yajña:—Ātmajyotis (soul’s light).

Janaka:—Who is Ātman?

Yajña:—Purusha, who is formed by the union of "svātman" in prānas (lives) and jyoτa (light) in the heart. The soul is disposed to action with the help of intelligence. In the end it transcends the body, senses and mind and attains Moksa. In the state of consciousness the soul’s activities become manifest to us. When in sleep, after deputing "Prāṇā" for the protection of the body, the soul remains outside the body. The senses become inactive. Therefore we should never wake up one who is asleep. When the soul remains in the body and the senses are active, it is in a most vigilant state. Thus the soul is above the states of wakefulness, dream and slumber. The soul is the divine light of pure energy.

Janaka, who was pleased, gave the sage a thousand cows more. After that Yajñavalkya spoke about liberation from worldly bonds.

Yajña:—The soul has no connection with the three conditions. Just as the actions in a dream do not affect the soul, the actions in a wakeful state also do not affect it. Just as a fish jumps from one side of the river to the other and back again, life keeps jumping from the state of wakefulness to the state of slumber and vice versa. Just as a kite goes up flying and then comes back to its nest, one moves from the state of wakefulness to sleep and back again. In deep slumber, he merges with God, but he does not know that. In that state, the father or the mother does not have the knowledge that: they are the father or mother.

After that Yajñavalkya explained the nature of the soul and the various aspects of its working in a state of wakefulness and of slumber. He added:—“As long as there is "Kama" (desire) there is "Karma" also. Life goes on passing from birth to death and from death to birth. One attains perfection when one is above all desires, and acquires the highest divine knowledge. He is liberated from birth and death and becomes immortal. By jñāna, dāna and tapas we become self-purified and thus become worthy of the highest divine grace. We have to go from the world of Karman (action) to the world of Ātman (soul). One who has acquired Brahman-jñāna (knowledge of Brahman) becomes a Brahmana.

Hearing these famous teachings of Yajñavalkya, Janaka became his permanent disciple.

5) In his end, Yajñavalkya had two wives named Kalyāni and Maiśrey. After giving his all to his wives he passed into immortality. (Bhṛhadāyana; M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 3-9).

6) His works: Yajñavalkya has written a Sūtrī on the subject of law. "Mitakṣāra" is its famous commentary. Mitakṣāra is the highest authoritative treatise on Law in South India.

7) Other details:

(a) Yajñavalkya flourished in Yuddhiṣṭhīra’s assembly. (M.B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12).
(b) He was also a member of Indra’s assembly. (M.B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 12).
(c) Yajñavalkya was the patron of the Rājasūya Yajña of Dharmaputra. (M.B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 33).
(d) Yajñavalkya had his knowledge of Vedas from Śrīyadeva. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 318, Verse 6).

YAJURVEDA:

1) General: The Caturvedas are—Ṛgveda, Yajurveda, Śāmaveda and Atharvaveda. Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 5, mentions that Viṣṇamādyaya, the disciple of Vedavyās, divided Yajurveda into twenty-seven branches and taught them to his disciples. Among those disciples there was Yajñavalkya, the son of Brahmarāja. It was Vyās who divided the Vedas into four parts. After dividing them, the sage Vyās taught Ṛgveda to Pāli, Yajurveda to Viṣṇamādyaya, Śāmaveda to Jaimini and Atharvaveda to Sumantu. The rules for Japa, Homa etc. of Yajurveda were taught to Vyās by Agnideva. If all the rules of Yajurveda are correctly observed, all desires will be fulfilled. There are special rules for the observance of homa for the fulfillment of particular desires.

YAKRLLOMA: An Indian town. (Mahābhārata, Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 46).

YAKṢA:

1) General: A class of Semi-gods. There are chiefly three classes of inhabitants in Heaven:—Devas, Gana-devas and Upadevas. Gana-devas consist of the 12 Adityas, 10 Viṣṇudevas, 6 Vāsus, 30 Tūrīyas, 54 Abhā-vāras, 49 Anīlas 220 Mahājātakas, 12 Śādhyas and 11 Rudras.

Among the Upadevas there are 10 subdivisions. They are, Viśdīḍharas, Aparas, Yakṣas, Rākṣasas, Gandharvas, Kinnaras, Pāścas, Guhyakas, Siddhas and Bhūtas.
2) Origins. There are different views relating to the origin of the Yakṣas. In Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 1 we find that the Yakṣas took birth after Brahmā's birth from "Vaiśiṣṭyom" soma. According to a statement in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 13, Yakṣas and Rākṣasas were born from Mūnī, the grand daughter of Kuśyapaprajāpati. Thus Yakṣas and Rākṣasas are related as brothers. In Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 7, there is another passage which says that Yakṣas are the progeny of the sage Puleśya.

3) Outlines.

(i) Once Śukadeva sung the story of Mahābhārata to the Yakṣas. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 108).

(ii) Lakṣas of Yakṣas remain in Kubera's assembly, worshipping him. (M.B. Sābah Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 18).

(iii) There are Yakṣas in Brahmā's assembly also. (M.B. Sābah Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 56).

(iv) Kayṭhas of Yakṣas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 111, Verse 10).

(v) Bāhmasena once drove away Yakṣas and Rākṣasas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 57).

(vi) On another occasion, Sundra and Upasunda defeated and persecuted the Yakṣas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 7).

YAKSA GRAHA. A Graha (Evil Spirit) connected with Yakṣas. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Verse 33, mentions that people become mad owing to the adverse influence of this Graha.

YAKSAVĀṬA. A place made famous in the Purāṇas. In Devi Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha, there is a statement saying that it was at this place that the Dānava called Aṁsāsuk took the she-buffalo as his wife.

YAKSAYUDDHAPARVA. A sub-division of Vana Parva, in Mahābhārata, Chapters 158 to 164 of Vana Parva, are included in this sub-division.

YAKSESVARA. An incarnation of Śiva. The devas were puffed with pride when they secured Amṛta by charming the ocean of milk. In order to allay their pride Śiva took birth as Yakṣesvara.

One day he came to Ugra, the bull of the devas. By bathing at this place the devas tried their best, they were not able even to move it. It was only then that they became convinced of their own incapacity. (Śiva Purāṇa, Satarudra Samhita).

YAKŚI (YAKŚIN). Women folk of Yakṣas. Agni Parāṇa, Chapter 50 mentions that the image of Yakṣi to be installed in temples should have fixed and long eyes. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 105, states that Yakṣi is a Devī and by eating the prasāda (naivedya) of the Devī one would be absolved of the sin of Brahmacṛṣṇa (killing a Brahman).

YAKŚI-TIRTHA. A famous sacred place situated on the coast of the sea in order to allay the evil influence of Yakṣi, one's desires would be fulfilled. The place is also famous for offering worship to the Pīṭha. A visit to this place will be rewarded with the benefit of Advamedha Yaga. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 23 mentions that this tīrtha was founded by Parāśurāma.

YAKSAJAYA VAKŚMA. The disease of consumption (Tuberculosis). There is a story in Mahābhārata which says that this disease was created by Dakṣa Prajāpati. (For more details see under Candra).

YAMA. Kāla. (For more details see under Kāla).

YAMA (S). A band of special gods of the Svāyambhuva Manvantara (See under Manvantara).

YAMADūTA. One of the Brahmaṇḍa sons of Viśvāmitra. (Agni Parāṇa, B. Anūkṣana Parāṇa, Chapter 4, Verse 51).

YAMAJĪVĪ. A prostitute. In Kāhāsātīgārahana, Saktiyasolambaka, 1st Taranā, there is a story about her as follows:—

In the city of Citrañē Jitāvāmarā a wealthy Vaiṣya, had a son named Iśvarāvarma. In order to avoid his son falling under the influence of prostitutes, the father declared, "Let those who want to be my son first come to me and tell me the story of Varṇāvāma while he was a boy. Yamajīvī, the prostitute undertook this task for a reward of 1,000 Nikṣas. (a gold coin of that time).

After completing his education on the wiles and tricks of prostitutes, he was sent by his father to start a trade with a capital of five crores of Nikṣas. Iśvarāvarma and his friend Arhatadatta was about to leave the place when Sundari pretended to be in danger of falling into a well and asked for his help. Iśvarāvarma, again caught in her trap and he was forced to spend the rest of his money also on her. When he was rendered penniless, the prostitute and her mother deserted him.

Iśvarāvarma returned home to his father, empty-handed. Rainavāma took his son to Yamajīvī again and told her the whole story. He said that his son fell into this plight because Yamajīvī's training was not effective. After listening to the whole story, Varṇāvāma promised to recover the whole amount lost by Iśvarāvarma. She brought her trained monkey named "Āla" and placed 1,000 Nikṣas before him. She taught him to swallow the whole amount. After that, she taught him to give out by vomiting, the swallowed money in instalments of twenty, thirty, forty etc., as ordered. Then Yamajīvī said to Iśvarāvarma: "Take the monkey with you and go to Sundari's place. Make him swallow the money in secret and get it again from him, in instalments, in her presence. She would think that the monkey is an inexhaustible source of wealth and would be prepared to buy it at any cost— even by offering her whole wealth in return. At first you must pretend to be unwilling to part with the monkey. In the end, you must make him swallow 2,000 Nikṣas which he would be able to give out in two days at the rate of 1,000 on each day. Exchange him for her whole wealth and leave the place immediately."

With this advice Yamajīvī sent Iśvarāvarma with the monkey. He went to Kāhanapura in the company of his friend Arhatadatta after renouncing his titles of Nikṣas from his father. When Sundari knew that Iśvarāvarma had come again with more money, she welcomed him with due respect and invited him to live with her. She accepted his invitation and took up his residence there.

One day, he brought the monkey into the house and in the presence of Sundari asked him to produce various amounts of money for different purposes. The monkey promptly vomited the various amounts separately without making any mistake. Sundari and her mother Makarakaṣi were naturally amazed at the marvellous performance of the monkey. It āsvaravārṇa explained that the monkey was capable of giving in this way, 1,000 Nicaragua Sundari made up her mind to purchase the wonderful animal at any price. She requested āsvaravārṇa to give her the monkey in exchange for the crores of Nicaragua she had taken from him earlier. But he turned down her request. At last she persuaded him to sell the monkey to her for the entire wealth she possessed. Āsvaravārṇa secretly made the monkey swallow 2,000 Nicaragua before handing it over to Sundari and left the place at once to go to Āsvāmedaḍa for business.

Āla, the monkey gave Sundari 1,000 Nicaragua on each of the first two days, but on the third day she was disillusioned. In her disappointment and anger, she beat Āla. The enraged monkey attacked both Sundari and Ākāraṇī and harmed them by biting and tearing with its nails. They turn to beat him to death. Thus Sundari lost all her ill-gotten wealth and was reduced to utter poverty and distress.

YAM ĀKA. A region in ancient India. The inhabitants of this place were called "Yamākas" Mahābhārata. Sadhī Parva, Chapter 37, refers to the present offered by the princes and people of Yama at Yudhisṭhīrā's Āsvāmedhaḍa.

YAMASAṬRA. Yama's assembly. This assembly is described in Mahābhārata, Sadhī Parva, Chapter 8.

It was Vīvakarmā who built Yamasāṭra. It is 100 yojanas in length and 100 yojanas in width. Although it is illuminated with sun-light it has an equable temperature. Sadness, old age, hunger or thirst are unknown there. There is a dense growth of Ākāraṇī. All the dead people, who were famous in ancient times are members of this assembly.

YAMI. A daughter of Sūrya. One of the wives of Sūrya was Sātī, the daughter of Vīvakarmā. Three children, Manu, Yama and Yami, were born to Sūrya by Sātī. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 5, Chapter 2).

YAMI. A wife of Dharmadeva. The four wives of Dharmadeva are—undhīyā, Vāmi, Yami, Lambā, Bhūmi, Mārgiyā, Sākṣāpā, Māhārā, Sādhyā and Viṣṇu. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 15).

YAMI. A daughter of Daśa Prajāpati. She was one of the wives of Kaśyapa. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

YAMUNA. Another name for the river Kālindī. (See also under Kālindī).

1) How the water in Kālindī turned black—The water in the river Kālindī is black in colour. There is a story behind the changing of the colour of this river-water into black. Originally it was clear. After the death of Sati, Daśa Prajāpati's daughter, Śiva broke up Daśa yaga and went about rambling round the world. Kāmādeva who saw Śiva who had lost his wife (Sati) shot him with "Unmūḍākara" (an arrow causing madness), Śiva, in his excitement, always thinking about Sati, wandered about, finding peace and rest nowhere. In his excited and restless state he plunged himself into Kālindī river. Just then, the clear water of the river turned black. (Vikrama Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

2) The state of Kālindī (Yamunā). The Purāṇas declare that by bathing in the holy Kālindī one attains heaven. There is a story illustrating this in Pātana Purāṇa, Chapter 30, as follows:—

Long ago, in Kṛtyaṅga, there lived in the country of Nīsadha, a very wealthy Vaiśya, by name Hemakunda. By doing various kinds of business, he had earned eight crores of golden coins. By that time he was advancing in age. At this stage he began to think of the transitoriness of worldly pleasures and set apart one-sixth of his entire wealth for charitable purposes. He built two temples—one for Viṣṇu and the other for Śiva. He offered daily worship to the gods and spent money in generous hospitality. His two sons, Sālāk and Yamunā, were grown up. He entrusted the burden of domestic affairs to them and went to the forest to perform austeritys, after which he attained Viṣṇu-loka.

YAMUNA. His sons, who were intoxicated with their affluence and luxurious life, deviated from the path of virtue and began to indulge in all kinds of sensual pleasures. It did not take long for them to be reduced to poverty due to their irresponsible actions. One of them went to a mountain and the other to a forest. One day, the elder brother was caught by a tiger and the younger was bit by a snake. Both of them died on the same day. Yama's agents took both to Yamaloka. Dharmarāja (Yama) ordered the elder brother to be sent to Naraka (Hell) and the younger one (Yamunā) to be sent to Heaven.

Yamunā who knew that he did not deserve Heaven by any standards, asked Yama's agent how this had happened. The agent gave him a Brāhmaṇa who was working in Vedic lore, who was the son of Harimitra. His kārma was on the southern bank of Yamunā. While you were living in the forest, you were associated with him. As a result of that contact, it so happened that you bathed for two months in the holy river Kālindī, the waters of which have the power of absolving sinners. By your bath in the first month, you were liberated from sin. By the second month you have become eligible for Heaven. You have qualified yourself for the eternal bliss of Heaven, by that holy act.

Yamunā is being worshipped as a goddess. Devotees of this goddess imagine her as riding on a tortoise, carrying a water pot in her hand and is of black complexion.

YAMUNA I. A town in ancient India. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 51).

YAMUNA II. A mountain, made famous in the Purāṇas, standing between the rivers Gāṅgā and Yamunā. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 3).

YAMUNADVIPA. An island in the river Yamunā. It was on this island that the Buddha was born. He was born here. By the second month you became eligible for Heaven. You have qualified yourself for the eternal bliss of Heaven, by that holy act.

YAMUNA III. A holy brahmin on the bank of the river Sarasvati. Mahābhārata, Śaṅkha Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 11, refers to a Rājāśya Yajña performed at this place by Varuṇa, the son of Aditi.

YĀNA. One of the royal qualities like Saradhī, Vigrāha etc. (For more details see under Sādvyāna).
YĀNASANDHIPARVA. A subdivision of Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapters 47-71 of Udyoga Parva, are included in the Parva. YĀSAHIKETU. A King of the city called Sobbhavatī. He was one of the chief characters in the sixth story told by the famous Vaiśāli in Kāthāsaritsagara.

YĀSAS. Father of Kāli, the tenth incarnation of Mahāvisuṣṇu. Agni Puruṣa, Chapter 16, mentions that toward the end of Kāliyuga all people will become atheists, there will be an intermixture of castes and all people will become thieves and devoid of virtue. At that time, the 15 branches of the Veda called Vājasaneyas alone will be the authority. Miecchas (low-class people) assuming the form of Kings will begin to eat human beings. Agni Puruṣa states further that at that time, Lord Viṣṇu will incarnate as Kāli, the son of Yāsas and Yaśaśvabhiyaka’s priest and after training himself in archery and weapons, annihilate all Miecchas.

YĀSASVINTI. A woman follower of Subhrasūrya. (M.B. Śālya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 10).

YĀSASVINTI II. A sister of Pāṇcatī. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

YĀŚKA. A famous Sanskrit Grammarian of ancient times. Although the people of India always believed in the greatness of the Vedas, the Vedas became unintelligible even to scholars owing to changes in language and differences in grammar. It was Yāśka and Śāyaṇa who saved the country from that plight. Yāśka became famous by composing “Nirukta” (etymology). There is a reference to this ancient sage in Mahābhārata, Chapter 342, Verse 72.

YĀSODHĀRA. A King of Manohbhadra. Padma Purāṇa, Kriyākānda mentions that Yaśodhāra happened to be born in a royal family because in his previous birth he had bathed in the Ganges.

YĀSODA. Foster-mother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. How she became Śrī Kṛṣṇa’s fostermother, is explained in a story given in Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha:—

Once Droṇa, one of the Pāṇḍavas, and his wife Droṇā deviated from the path of Dharma. In his anger, Brahmā cursed them to be born in the world as human beings and to spend a life-time on earth, tending cattle. Droṇa became sad and with tears in his eyes, prayed to Brahmā that during his life on earth he should be blessed with Viṣṇu’s darāma. Brahmā granted that prayer.

It was in fulfillment of this prayer that Droṇa was born as Nandagopa and Droṇā as Yaśodā in Ambikā.

YĀSODHĀRA I. Son of Durmukha, who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas against the Kauravas. (Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 184, Verse 5).

YĀSODHĀRA II. A son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Rukmiṇidēvi. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 33).

YĀSODHĀRA. Daughter of King Trīgata. She was married by Hasta, King of the Puro dynasty and they had a son named Vīśākhā. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 35).

YĀSAOVATI I. The name of Iśāna’s city. Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha mentions that god Iśāna, the ruler of the north-eastern part, lives in the city called Yaśasvati.

YĀSAOVATI II. A princess. (See under Ekāvira).

YATHAVĀSA. A muni (sage) who followed the Vaiśāya system of philosophy. He lived in Vaiśāyaśubhadharīni. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 244, Verse 17).

YATI I. A king who was the eldest son of Nāhūṣa and the eldest brother of Yāyā. Mahābhārata, Adī Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 31, mentions that he became a yogi and lived in the forest.

YATI II. One of the sons of Viśvāmitra. (Mahābhārata, Śānta Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 55). YATI III. A community-group. They were perhaps enemies of yājñis. There are references to them in various parts of the Rgveda.

YATINATHA. An incarnation of Siva. A huba, a forest-dweller and his wife who lived in Arbuda (Abu) mountain were blessed by Yatintatha and as a result of the blessing they were born as Nala and Damayanti in their next birth. (Śīva Purāṇa, Satarudra Sanhita).

YĀTUDHĀNA. One of the sons of Kṣatrapa and Suraśā. All Kṛṣṇas who were born in this family are known as “Yātudhānas”.

YĀTUDHANI. A Kṛṣṇa who was born from the sacrificial fire when King Yṛṣṭadhanī performed a yajña. As directed by the king, she proceeded to the forest to destroy the Saptarṣi. She remained there as the owner of the tank in which the sages used to take bath. Seeing her standing alone there, they enquired who she was. She answered that she was guarding the tank. She allowed them to enter into the tank after each of them explained the meaning of his name. Accordingly, the sages Attri, Vasiṣṭha, Kṣatrapa, Viśvāmitra, Gāumātra and Brahmā explained the meaning of their names before getting down into the tank. At last when sage Śunāsakha’s turn came, he said that he was not prepared to explain in detail, the meaning of his name and that she should be satisfied with his statement that he was the sage Śunāsakha. Yatudhāni became angry on hearing it and insisted on his giving the meaning of his name. Śunāsakha with a single stroke with his “tridaṇḍa” (trident) killed her. Śunāsakha was really Indra himself. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 93).

YĀTUHKARNA. A Devaguru. (See under Guru parampara).

YĀUDEHYA I. A son of Dharmsputra. Mahābhārata. Adī Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 16, states that this prince was born to Dharma by Devīkātvē, daughter of Govinda, King of Śibi land.

YĀUDEHYA II. A native of Yaudhey country. Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 14, mentions that the Yaudheyas had participated in Yudhiṣṭhira’s Kāṭajitayā.

YĀUDEHYA III. A king. According to Matsya Purāṇa, he was the son of Pritivindūya.

YAVUGANDHARĀYANA. Minister of Prince Udayana who is celebrated in the Purāṇas.

YAUNA. A particular caste. Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 207, states that they were Gaṇāḍhas and were as ignorant as animals and birds.

YAVANĀSAVY. Māndhāka, the son of Yuvanāśva. (For more information see under Māndhāka).

YAVUDHANJ. Son of Śatīyaka the Yādava King. This hero who escaped from the ruin of the Yādava dynasty was presented with the region lying in the Sarasvatī river valley, by Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Mahabala Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 19).

YAVAKRITA I. A sage. (See under Ardravānu).

YAVAKRITA II. Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 26, refers to a sage who was the son of Aśgīra and the supporter of the eastern land.

YAVAKSHA. A famous river in Bhāratavarṣa. (Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 30).
YAVANA.

1) General. There are many references to Yavana in the Puranas. There is a statement in Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 34, that the Yavanas took their source from Turvasu, the son of Yavati. There is another version in Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 174, Verse 36, that Yavanas were born from the womb and the sides of Nandini.

2) Other details.
   (i) Arjuna's brother Sahadeva once conquered the Yavana land. (M.B. Sakhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 73).
   (ii) Mahabharata, Sahā Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 17, mentions that on another occasion, Nakula defeated the Yavanas.
   (iii) According to Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 35, the world will be filled with Yavanas and other Mecha (low class) kings.
   (iv) In the course of his conquests, Kansa once subdued the Yavanas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 251, Verse 5).
   (v) Mahabharata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 21, mentions that king Sudakshina of Kamboja approached Duryodhana with an "Aksahodini" a-sang with the Yavanas, to take part in Bharata Yuddha.
   (vi) Mahabharata, Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 65 states that at the time of Mahabharata, Yavana land was part of India.
   (vii) Originally Yavanas were Katriyas but they became Sudras by the curse of Brāhmaṇas. (M.B. Anukāsana Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 18).
   (viii) Once there was a duel between a Yavana king and Mucukunda. (For further details, see under Mucukunda).

YAVASĀ. A particular region of Plakṣadvipa. Bhagavata, 5th Skanda says that Plakṣadvipa had seven divisions which were - Sivam, Yavasam, Subhadram, Sāntam, Meṣam, Amṛtam and Abhayam.

YAVINARA. A king of the Pāru dynasty. Bāhīyāvāna was his father. Five sons were born to Bāhīyāvāna. They were Mukula, Sṛjaśaya, Brhadīśṭha, Yavircara and Kramila. These five persons became famous in later ages under the name of Pāṇcālas. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 279).

YAYATA. An ancient holy place in India. King Yayati conducted a Yāga at this place. From that time the place became sacred. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 32).

YAYATI. An eminent king of the Lunar dynasty.

1.) Genealogy and Birth. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order—Brahma—Atri—Candra—Budha—Puruṣaras—Ayus—Nabha—Yayati. Sage Atri had three sons—Candra, Durvāsas and Dattātreya—by his wife Anasūyā. Candra's son was Budha, Budha's son was Puruṣaras, Puruṣaras's son was Ayus, Ayus's son was Nabha who had six sons—Yati, Yayati, Sāyaṇī, Ayāti, Ayatī and Dhrusva. Yayati had two wives, Devayāni and Sarmishṭā. Two sons, Yadu and Turvasu, were born to Devayāni. Of them, Yadu became the founder of Yaduvānā, Sarmishṭā had three sons who were Druhyu, Anudruhyu and Puru. The Purvavānī traces its origin to Puru.

2.) Yayati's marriage. Yayati married Devayāni, the daughter of sage Sukra and Sarmishṭā, the daughter of Vṛṣaparva. There is a story behind this marriage, given in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 76.

Once there was keen rivalry between Devas and Auras. For achieving victory Devas accepted Bṛhaspati and Auras accepted Śukra as their preceptor. Although Devas slaughtered all Auras they were restored by Śukra by the power of his mantra. Devas and Auras resumed their battle. "Mṛtaśaśyantī" (the art of reviving the dead) was then unknown to the gods. Devas sent the handsome youth Kaśa to Śukra, to learn Mṛtaśaśyantī from him. There, Kaśa fell in love with Devayāni, Śukra's daughter. But after acquiring the knowledge about Mṛtaśaśyantī he returned, without marrying Devayāni. At the time of his departure, Kaśa and Devayāni cursed each other. Devayāni's curse was that Kaśa's newly acquired knowledge would not produce the desired result, while Kaśa's curse was that Devayāni would not be married by any youthful prince. Sarmishṭā was the daughter of Vṛṣaparva, the Daitya king. Devayāni was the daughter of Śukra, the Daitya preceptor. One day they were enjoying a bath in a forest brook with their maids, after leaving their clothes on the bank of the stream. At that time Devendra who came that way, transformed himself into a strong wind and carried all the clothes to a place and put all of them in a heap. Seeing this, the women rushed out of the water and in the hurried confusion in snatching their garments Devayāni and Sarmishṭā happened to put on each other's clothes. A quarrel took place between them on this mistake and the angry Sarmishṭā pushed Devayāni into an unused well. Thinking that Devayāni was dead, Sarmishṭā and her maids went to the palace.

At this time, Yayati who was a king of the lunar dynasty happened to come there exhausted after his hunting. After rescuing Devayāni from the well and enquiring about her identity and the circumstances in which she fell into the well, he returned to his palace Devayāni sent her maid Ghūṣikā to her father and informed him about her mishap. The father, sage Śukra became angry towards Vṛṣaparva, and came down from Daityaloka and settled down in the forest with his daughter. Afraid of his preceptor's curse and anger, Vṛṣaparva came to Śukra and offered profuse apologies to him for his daughter's misconduct. But Śukra answered that he would be prepared to forgive only if Sarmishṭā with 1000 maids would go and serve Devayāni. Finding no other way, Vṛṣaparva yielded to the condition. Soon Sarmishṭā and her 1000 maids went to the forest and began to serve Devayāni. Śukra returned to Daityaloka. Some time after this, Yayati came to the forest one day for hunting. There he met Devayāni, being attended by many maids. In the conversation that followed, Devayāni was able to recognize Yayati. She fell in love with him. But Yayati insisted that he was not prepared to marry her without the consent of Śukrācarya. So she sent one of her maids to her father and informed him of her desire. The sage readily agreed and had their marriage performed. He also presented them 1,000 maids. After the ceremony, Yayati returned to his palace with his bride. Sarmishṭā and the 2,000 maids also accompanied them. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapters 76-81).

3.) Yayati's domestic life. After his arrival in his capital city, Yayati made arrangements for Devayāni's residence in his own palace while Sarmishṭā took up her residence.
in Aukavakani. In due course, Devayani gave birth to a son. The sight of the child roused the motherly instincts of Sarmistha who had been tormented by a thousand years of heart-burning. One day, while she was brooding alone in her garden, Yayati happened to come there. As they met, their hearts were moved by tender feelings. Sarmistha approached Yayati and begged for a son. But he tried to evade her by pleading that it was not proper to do anything in violation of Dharma. But in the end, he had to yield to her earnest supplications and philosophical arguments. Thus Sarmistha conceived a son in secret.

When the child was born and it grew up, Devayani's mind was constantly vexed with the thought as to who was the father. Once in an angry mood she questioned Sarmistha herself about it. She answered that the child's father was a sage whose identity she could not ascertain in the excitement of her union with him. Any way, this answer satisfied Devayani.

Soon after, another son was born to Devayani. The first boy was named Yadu and the second son, Turvasu. As a result of the secret relations between Yayati and Sarmistha, three boys were born to her and they were named Drubhu, Anudruhubhu and Puru, respectively. These boys also grew up in Aukavakani.

Once Devayani was in her garden with her husband and children. Just then, Sarmistha's children also happened to come there. Devayani who somehow had her own suspicions, suspected of their parentage and the innocent children replied that their mother was Sarmistha and their father was Yayati. Devayani who became furious, immediately went to Asurasoka and informed her father, Sukra about it. On hearing it, the sage was himself with anger owing to his paternal affection, cursed Yayati so that he felt a victim to the infirmities of old age. Yayati entreated Sukra to withdraw the curse since he had not enjoyed his youth to the full.

Sukra lifted the curse by assuring him that one of Yayati's sons would accept his father's old age in exchange for his youth. Then the son would be crowned King after Yayati. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapters 82 and 83).

3) Rejuvenation. Yayati asked his eldest son Yadu for his youthfulness. But the latter was not prepared to exchange it for his father's old age. Next the father approached his younger sons, Turvasu, Drubhu, and Anudruhubhu, with the same request, but all of them in turn refused to oblige him. Even though Yayati promised to return the youthfulness to them after a thousand years, they refused to exchange it for his old age. Yayati in his anger, cursed Yadu that his progeny would never become Kings. Turvasu's family would be completely destroyed and Drubhu would float down the river, with unfulfilled desires and faded prosperity. Puru who suddenly accepted his father's old age in exchange for his youth and went to the forest. From that day Yayati began his reign with a cheerful heart. (M.B. Adi parva, Chapters 84 and 85).

In Padma Parāsā, there is a slightly different version about the way in which Yayati fell a victim to the infirmities of old age. It is as follows: When the vigorous Yudhisthira bowed down to be alarmed at the thought that he might be dislodged from his place. He called his charioteer Mātali and ordered him to bring Yayati with him to Indraloka. When Mātali failed in his mission, Devendra sent some Gandharvas to escort the deities of "Vāmanīvātra" before Yayati. Enraged by the charms and perform-ance of Rati on the stage, the King became irresistibly fascinated by the female sex.

Once the Rākṣasī named Žarā and Madana got access to Yayati's body. While in that state, one day he went to the forest for hunting. There he happened to meet a beautiful girl named "Aṣtrubinda matai". From her companion-maid, Viśālī, the king came to know of her history. Viśālī said to Yayati—"Long ago when Kāma-deva was burnt Rati was in deep grief. The gods were moved to pity by her tears and they restored Kāma to life. Rati who was extremely happy, began to shed tears of joy. A beautiful girl was born from the tears which fell from her left eye. This maid who is standing before you is that girl. She is now looking for a suitable person for her Swayamvara." On hearing this story the King expressed his desire to marry her. Aṣtrubinda matai agreed to become his wife on condition that he exchanged his old age with some young person for his youthfulness.

Yayati returned to his palace and asked each of his sons to give him his youth. Puru alone fulfilled his father's desire. After this Yayati married Aṣtrubinda matai. But he was compelled to submit to another condition also, that he should not maintain any contact with his other wives. Devayani and Sarmistha naturally, became distressed and furious when they saw Yayati and Aṣtrubinda matai as husband and wife. So Yayati asked Yadu to kill both of them. But Yadu refused to obey him. Yayati who became angry at this, cursed his son that one of his descendants would marry his uncle's daughter and become heir to his mother's wealth.

After some time, on Menaka's advice, Aṣtrubinda matai urged Yayati to go on a visit to Heaven. So he entrusted his kingdom to Puru and went to Vaikuṇtha.

5) Yayati's reign. The Puranaś describe Yayati as a noble and eminent King. Some of the events which took place during his reign and which deserve special praise, are given below:

(i) Gift of cows. Once when King Yayati was in the company of his subjects, a Brahmana approached him with a request for Gurudakshi. At once Yayati gave him a gift of 1,000 cows. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 157).

(ii) Yayati and Cīlāva. See para 6 under Cīlāva.

(iii) His end. After a thousand years, Yayati handed over his kingdom to Puru and went to the forest. He spent many years living in Bhūrutunga in the company of sages, and feeding on fruits, roots, etc. and in the end died in the forest and attained Heaven.

(iv) Yayati's fall from Heaven. Yayati remained in Heaven for many years. Once, Yudhisthira, Devas, Indra and other gods and kings in the divine assembly. The gods looked at one another, wondering who this proud fellow was. They asked how this man reached Heaven without renouncing his pride. In the meantime Yayati lost his balance and fell down from Heaven to the earth. While descending, he prayed that he should fall in the midst of good men.

Just at this time, four kings named Prajsadana, Vashmanas, Tibi and Aṣṭaka were performing a Yāga in Naimiśāranya. Yayati happened to fall head downwards into their midst. But since they caught him in his fall he did not crash to the ground. He explained his story to them. They allowed him to accept the fruit of their Yajña and to go to Heaven. But since he was a Kṣatavīta he told them he had no right to it. Just then, his daughter Mādhavi arrived there. She allowed him to take half of the divine grace which she had earned and with the help of it Yayāti ascended to Heaven again. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 129).

6) Other details.

(i) Yayāti witnessed the battle between Kaūravas and Pāṇḍavas which was fought as a result of the theft of King Virāṭa’s cows. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 9).

(ii) In Mahābhārata, Satkṛi Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 8, it is stated that King Yayāti continues to be in Yama’s assembly.

(iii) Yayāti’s chariot was made of 1,000 cows by a Brahmana as “Garudakṣīpi” (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 195).

(iv) He came riding in Indra’s chariot and witnessed the battle between Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa, which happened from the sky. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 9).

(v) Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chap. 113 mentions that Yayāti had conducted 1,000 Yajñas and that he was the leader of all Kings.

YAYĀVARA(S). A particular section of Brahmānī. Their special feature is that they wander about here and there, following the course of life of the sages. Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 13, mentions that the reputed sage Jarālākhu was a Yayāvara.

YODHYA. A country in ancient India. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 254, we read that this country was conquered by Kaṇa.

YOGA I. A sage who was the grandson of Śvāyambhuva Manu and son of Śraddhā. Yoga was born to Śraddhā by Dharma. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

YOGA II. It is Jāna that reveals Brahmānī. Yoga is the concentration on Brahmānī. Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 372, mentions that Yoga is the perfect union of Jīvātmā and Paramātmā. In fact Yoga is activity with the body as its basis. It was described by a more physical karman helps Prabhramadārāsana. But Mahārāja asserts that there is an inseparable connection between matter and soul. Matter and soul are merely the two phases of the single “Atitva”. The object of Yoga is to achieve union with Prabhramāna; in other words, to attain Mukta. The recitation of mantras is important in many disciplines connected with the practice of Yoga. The letters and words of mantras are so arranged that their recitation in the proper manner produces profound and favourable effect in the body. The habitual recitation of mantras helps the practice of Yoga.

There are two broad divisions of Yoga—Hatha Yoga and Rāja Yoga. The two are interconnected and have to be practised simultaneously. Hatha Yoga is mainly connected with disciplining the body by various kinds of exercises. Stiffening in Pāchāśa with the arms held aloft; standing on one leg or standing on the head are some of these exercises. Rāja Yoga aims at arousing Prājñā by control of the senses.

Rāja Yoga involves the practice of eight disciplines. They are:—Yama, Niyama, Āsana, Prānāyāma, Pratyāhāra, Dhārāna, Dhyāna and Samādhi. An account of each of these is given below:—

i) Yama. Yama means refraining from evil courses or sinful things like cruelty or dishonesty. Yama demands the practice of Ahimsa, satya, aṣṭeya, brahmacarya and aparigraha. (Ahimsa = non-violence or not killing any creature. Satya = truth; practising truth in thoughts, words and deeds. Aṣṭeya = not stealing. Brahmacarya = sexual continence. Aparigraha = not coveting wealth or pleasures which are not absolutely necessary).

ii) Niyama. While Yama is a negative discipline, Niyama is a positive one. It requires the positive practice of virtuous courses. Niyama includes five things:—Saucha (cleanliness), Santosha (contentment), Tapas (penance and austerities), Śvādyāya (study of the Vedas and incantations or mantras) and Jñāna-prāpradhiha (prayer and meditating on God). Saucha means not only cleanliness of the body, but also of the mind. The mind must be purged of all ‘males’ like kama, krodha and lobha. Tapas means ability to endure opposites (dvarāvata) like heat and cold or joy and sorrow. Śvādyāya is “study of philosophical works.” Jñāna-prāpradhiha—dedicating all actions unto God.

iii) Āsana. The way of sitting or posture. Different postures have been prescribed for different actions. First of all, the yogi must choose a suitable place. (The place must be level, neat, free from stones, fire or gravel, agreeable to the mind and not causing irritation to the eyes). (Śvētāsvāratara).

Different Āsanās like Padmāsana, Svāttikāsana and Siddhāsana have been prescribed for the practice of Yoga.

Putting the left leg on the right thigh and the right leg on the left thigh, holding the right toe with the left hand and the left toe with the right hand, place the chin on the chest and look at the tip of the nose. This is Padmāsana.

Sitting upright with the feet tucked under the hips is Svāttikāsana.

Placing the left leg under the genitals, put the right leg on it. Insert the chin into the pit of the throat; control the senses; with steady eyes look at the point between the eye-brows. This is Siddhāsana which will break open the doors to Mokṣa.

iv) Prānāyāma. This is regulation of breathing. Inhale air through the left nostril, retain the air in the lungs for a few minutes and then exhale it through the right nostril. The process may be reversed—that is inhalation through the right nostril and exhalation through the left. This is the first step in Prāṇāyāma. Exhaling the breath and then not inhaling for some time is called reekṣa; the opposite process is called pūrva. The object of prāṇāyāma is to awaken Kaṭalajñā.

v) Pratyāhāra. This is a process of withdrawing the five senses from the outer world. A man who practices Pratyāhāra becomes oblivious of the outer world. This helps the concentration of the mind on the Ātman.

vi) Dāna. Withdrawing the mind from outer objects and concentrating it on the self.

vii) Dhyāna. Meditation, concentrating the mind on several places like Bhrūmadhyāya and viṣṇīcakra. Repeating the sacred syllable OM is very useful in dhyāna. viii) Samādhi. In Samādhi the soul and mind unite, the mind merging into the soul. Samādhi is defined thus:

When the mind and soul unite just as salt and water unite, that state is called Samādhi.

YOGAMĀYĀDEVĪ. The form of Devi in the state of Yoga. It was Yogamāyādevī who transferred the seventh child of Devaki (Balabhadrārāma) from her womb to that of Rohiṇī. (Devi Bhāgavata 4th, Skanda 3)

YOGAVATI. Third daughter of Menā. She was the wife of the sage Āgastya. (Padma Purāṇa, Śrīṭi Khaṇḍa)

YOGISVARA (8). A community of famous yogins. Kavi, Hari, Antarikṣa, Prabuddha, Pippālāyana, Avirhotra, Drumila, Canna and Karabhujana belonged to this community. They were sons of the sage Kṛṣṇa and used to go about naked, everywhere. This community of yogins participated in the yajña of Nimi, King of Mithilā, and gave him advice on Bhāgavata-dharma. (Bhāgavata, 4th, Skanda 3)

YONIDVĀRA. A sacred place on the Udaya mountain. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 95)

YONITIRTHA. A holy bath in North India. A bath in this place will make a person handsome and he will get the reward of a gift of 1000 cows. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 84)

YOTIMATSĀKA (YOTIMATSAKA). A King in ancient India. There is a passage in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 20, which mentions that the Pāṇḍava had sent an invitation to this King to take part in the war.

YUDDHA (WAR). (i) In ancient times in India war was considered a "Rājadharmā". A war declared under this law was known as "Dharmyuddha". (ii) It is forbidden to use a weapon describing it falsely as another weapon. The use of arrows heated in fire, is also against Dharmyuddha.

(iii) It is also against the rules of Dharmyuddha to kill a person who gets down from the chariot, a crouching, one with joined palms, one who squats on the ground, one who seek refuge, one who is asleep, one who is naked, an unarmed person, one who has come to witness the fight, one who is fighting with another, one whose weapon is broken, one who is bereaved by the death of a son or other relative, one who is vanquished, one who flees from battle, and one who refuses to attack in return etc.

(iv) If a warrior fleeing from battlefield is killed by his enemy, he carries with him his master's sins.

(v) All the grace earned by the young man who flees from battle, passes to his master.

(vi) The soldier himself may take all booty in the battle except chariots, horses, elephants, umbrellas, weapons, cow's milk, cows, women, weapons, silver and gold.

(vii) All of his battle, such as gold, silver, jewels etc. are to be handed over to the King, according to the Vedas. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 7)

YUĐHĀJĪT I. A Kekaya King. This Yudhājīt was the brother of Kaikeyi, Dasaratha's wife, and uncle of Bharata. Dasaratha's death took place at the time when Bharata was living in Kekaya country, at the invitation of Yudhājīt. (Vālmikī Ramāyana, Bāla Kānda, 73rd Sarga).

YUḌHĀJĪT II. A King of Avant. Lilāvatī, the daughter of Yudhājīt was married by Sudarṣāna of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. In course of time their relations became hostile and they separated. At last Yudhājīt exiled Sudarṣāna from his country and crowned his own son, Śatrūjīt as King of Ayodhyā. (See under Dhruvasandha).

YUDHĀJĪTA. A Yādua King. In Padma Purāṇa, Śrīṭikhaṇḍa and in Matsya Purāṇa, it is stated that Yudhājīta was the son of Anāmatra by Pthvī.

YUDHĀMANYU. A warrior who fought against the Kauravas from the side of the Pāṇḍava. The following references are made to him in the Mahābhārata:

(i) Yudhāmanyu was a prince of the Pāṇḍula royal family. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 5).

(ii) He took his position in the battle as the bodyguard of Arjuna. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 19).

(iii) Yudhāmanyu's war-horse was a wonderful animal, both in spirit and shape. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 3).

(iv) In Bhārata Yudhā he fought against Kṛṣṇavarmā, Duryodhana, Kṛṣṇāvīrya, Citrasena the brother of Karna, and Avatārāyana. Kṛṣṇāvīrya defeated him. He (Yudhāmanyu) killed Karna's brother Citrasena. (Droṇa Parva, Chapters 92, 130; Karna Parva, Chapters 61, 83).

(v) Yudhāmanyu met with his death in his fight against Avatārāyana. (M.B. Saúpita Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 38).

YUDHIŚTHIRA. See under Dharmapura.

YUGA. See under Manvantara.

YUGANDHARAS. In the Purāṇas there are references to a mountain called Yugandhara. The inhabitants of that place were known as Yugandhara. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 9, there is a statement that these people used to drink the milk of camels and donkeys.

YUGANDHARII. A warrior who fought against the Kauravas from the Pāṇḍava party. He attacked Droṇācārya in the battle and was killed by him in the end. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 30).

YUGAPA. A Deva. Gandharva. Mahābhārata, Aḍī Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 56, mentions that he participated in Arjuna's birth festival.

YUKTASVA. A sage who was a Sāmavedin. There is a story about this sage in Pañcavimsā Bṛhadāraṇyaka:—

Yuktaśva who was a scholar in Vedas and Sūtras once abducted two new-born babies and killed them. As a result of that sin, he lost all his Vedic knowledge. To recover his lost learning, he started an austere tapas. After many years of tapas, he got back the whole of his Vedic knowledge.

YOPAKSA I. A military commander of Rāvana. In the battle between Śri Rāma and Rāvana, he was killed by Hanumān. (Vālmikī Ramāyana, Sundara Kānda, 46 : 32).

YOPAKSA II. A Rāksasa. In the battle between Śri Rāma and Rāvana, this Rāksasa was killed by the monkey Mainda. (Vālmikī Ramāyana, Yudhā Kānda 76 : 34).

YUTAJIT. A son of King Bhoja of the Yaduvansha. King Bhoja had six sons, who were—Nimocī, Kūkana, Vṛṣi, Sahasrājita, Sātajita and Vuyājita. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skanda).

YUVANĀŚVA I. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty.

1) Genealogy. From Viśu were descended in the following order:—Brahmā-Martci-Kalayaṇa - Vivavān-(Puruṣa)-Aneśa-Priyāśa-Praṣenajit- Yuvanāśa. This Yuvanāśa was the father of Māndhātā.

2) Other details.
(i) Yuvanāśa performed many Yāgas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 126, Verse 5).
(ii) Once he drank water which had been subjected to special mantras (incantations) and as a result he became pregnant. Māndhātā was born by cutting open his belly. (For more details see under Māndhātā).
(iii) Yuvanāśa once received a wonderful sword from King Raivata. He presented that sword to King Raghu. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 78).
(iv) In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 51, it is stated that he had received “Parāvaratīvā” (ability to know the highest and the lowest) because he had renounced meat-eating.

YUVAṆĀṆṆĀVA II. Another Yuvanāśa was the grandson of Viśravasva of the Ikṣvakust dynasty and the son of Adri. This Yuvanāśa was the father of King Śrava. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 3).

YUVAṆĀṆṆĀVA III. Mahabhārata, Śaṇi Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 15, refers to another Yuvanāśa who was the son of Viśravasvā. He attained Heaven by offering gifts of jewels, women and dwelling houses.

YUVAṆĀṆṆĀVA IV. A King of the Ikṣvakust dynasty who was the grandson of Māndhātā. There is reference to him in the Rigveda. (Rigveda, 10; 134).

YUYUDHĀNA. Another name for Śātyaki. For further details, see under Śātyaki.

YUYUTSU I.

1) General. Son of Dhrūtarāṣṭra by a Vaiśya woman. He is not included in the 100 sons of Dhrūtarāṣṭra. Yuyutsu is referred to by another name, “Karana” in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 113.
2) Other details.
(i) It was Yuyutsu who disclosed to the Pāṇḍavas that once Duryodhana gave poisoned food to Bhīmaśena. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 128, Verse 57).
(ii) Yuyutsu was present at the Svayamvara of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 2).
(iii) In Bhārata Yuddha, Yuyutsu joined the Pāṇḍava party. (M.B. Bhārata Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 100).
(iv) He was an eminent warrior and an honest and mighty hero. Many Kings attacked him in the city Vaiśāleśa. He was not able to fulfil his desire to kill all of them. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 58).
(v) In Bhārata Yuddha he fought with Subhāṣu and cut off his hands. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 13).
(vi) The bullocks tied to Yuyutsu’s chariot were killed by Bhagadatta’s elephant. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 56).
(vii) Yuyutsu severely rebuked the Kauravas who rejoiced over the death of Bhagadatta. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 60).
(viii) Yuyutsu was defeated in his fight with Ulūka. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 11).
(ix) As advised by Śri Kṛṣṇa and Dharmaaputra, Yuyutsu went to Hastināpura with the ladies of the royal family. (M.B. Śaiva Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 86).
(x) On his return after the battle, Yuyutsu described the details of the battle to Vidura. (M.B. Śaiva Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 21).
(xi) At the suggestion of Dharmaputra, Yuyutsu began to attend on Dhrūtarāṣṭra to serve him. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 17).
(xii) Yuyutsu was guarding Hastināpura when the Pāṇḍavas went to the Himalayas to get money from Marutu. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 24).
(xiii) Under the leadership of Yuyutsu, the Pāṇḍavas offered Jalāṅjali (offering libations of water) to Dhrūtarāṣṭra. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 12).
(xiv) When the Pāṇḍavas departed on their Mahāprāśāna after handing over the reign of the country to Parikṣīl, it was Yuyutsu who was entrusted with the task of supervising Parikṣīl and the country. (M.B. Mahāprāśāna Parva Chapter I, Verse 6).
(xv) In Mahābhārata the following names are given for Yuyutsu:—Dhrūtarāṣṭra, Dhrūtarṣṭra, Daṛārāṣṭra, Karana, Kauravya, Kaurava and Vaiśya Parva.

YUYUTSU II. There is a reference to another Yuyutsu who was the son of Dhrūtarāṣṭra by his wife Gāndhari in Mahābhārata, Śaṇi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 93.

PURĀNIC ENCYCLOPAEDIA

VETTAM MANI

This voluminous work, a store-house of information about the Epics, Purānas and allied literature, was originally composed and published in Malayalam. It constituted the results of the author's devoted study and research extending over fourteen years. This English version of the same is to meet the growing demand of scholars interested in the study of Purānas. This stupendous work, in the form of an exhaustive descriptive index, covers the vast and varied field of ancient Indian culture in all aspects—History, geography, religion, philosophy, myths, beliefs and practices as depicted in the Epics and Purānas.

The work is planned on scientific lines. The material compiled is arranged systematically. Citations have been inserted in support of stated facts; at places they have been substituted by references. Obsolete and obscure words, denoting objects such as a particular tree or plant have been explained by their scientific or vernacular equivalents. All modern critical apparatus has been utilized in the preparation of this comprehensive work.
