3) It was while going to Śīva to marry a damsel that Jayādṛathā attacked Pācālī at the forest of Kānuka. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 264).

4) Feeling ashamed at the result of his attempt to carry off Pācālī, Jayādṛathā went direct to Guṇḍaḍvāra and pleased Śīva by penance. Śīva gave him the boon that he would be able to defeat all the Pāṇḍavas except Arjuna. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 272).

6) Jayādṛathā in the battle of Dhūrate. In the battle of Dhūrate he was killed for eighteen days between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas. Jayādṛathā was the son of Dhūrate, only means that he was a descendant of that king.
took the side of the Kauravas and fought against the Pandavas. The part played by him in the battle is given below:

(1) On the first day there was a combat between Jayadratha and Drupada. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 55 to 57).

(2) Attacked Bhīmasena. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 79, Stanza 17 to 20).

(3) Fought with Dhruva and Bhīmasena. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapters 115 and 116).

(4) Engaged in a combat with the King Virāṭa. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 116, Stanza 42 to 44).

(5) Jayadratha and Abhimanyu fought with each other. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 64 to 74).

(6) Fought with Kattravarna. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 10 to 12).

(7) Arjuna vowed that he would kill Jayadratha, who tried to flee from the battle-field when he came to know of this. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 4 to 12).

(8) He began to combat with Arjuna. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 145).

7) Jayadratha. When a fierce fight began between Arjuna and Jayadratha, Śrī Kaṭuṇa came to Arjuna and said, "Arjuna, there was an ethereal voice at the birth of Jayadratha. The head of the person who puts down the head of Jayadratha on the earth, would be broken into a hundred pieces. So send an arrow in such a way that his head falls on the lap of his father." Hearing this, Arjuna sent an arrow which cut off the head of Jayadratha and the head fell in the lap of Jayadratha’s father who had been sitting in deep penance and meditation in Saṁanta-pañcauka. Instantly the father awoke from meditation and stood up and the head of his beloved son, with ear-rings on both ears fell on the earth and the head of the father was broken into a hundred pieces and he died. (Drona Parva, Chapter 146, Stanza 104 to 130).

8) The names of Jayadratha. Saṁdhavaka, Saṁdhava, Saudra, Saudraja, Saudraja, Saudrapati Saudhrjula, Saudhrjula, Saudtravasaudrarbhrata, Saudraja, Saudravasaudrarbhrata, Vardhakhata and such other names are used as synonyms of Jayadratha in the Mahābhārata.

JAYADRATHA II. In Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 75, Varta 30 we see another Jayadratha who sits in the durbar of Yama (the death-god) and mediates upon him.

JAYADRATHAVADRAPARVA. A sub section of Drona Parva in Mahā Bhārata. This consists of Chapters 85 to 132 of Drona Parva.

JAYADRATHAVIMOKSANA PARVA. A sub section of the Vana Parva, in Mahābhārata. Chapter 272 is in this section.

JAYANTIK A I. A grandson of Drupada. Mention is made in the Mahābhārata, Drona Parva, Chapter 156 Stanza 18, that this Jayantīka was killed by Ākṣatḥāmara.

JAYANTIK A II. A brother of the King of Virāṭa. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 48).

JAYANTA I. Son of Indra.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā → Marici → Kṣaya → Indra → Jayanta. Jayanta was the son born to Indra by his wife Śaḍevī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 112, Stanza 3 and 4).

2) Jayanta lost one eye. During his forest life, Śrī Rāma lived with Śītā and Laksmana on the mountain Cītra-kāṭa for some days. Once Śrī Rāma, being very tired of walking in the forest fell asleep with his head in the lap of Śītā. Taking this chance Jayanta came in the shape of a crow and scratched the breast of Śītā with his claws. Śītā cried and Śrī Rāma woke up and saw Jayanta in the shape of a crow. Rāma got angry and shot the Brahmāstra (a divine arrow) against Jayanta. The arrow hit his eyes, but Jayanta was unable to protect himself. All the while the divine arrow followed him. Finally having no eyes he came and fell at the feet of Śrī Rāma. Śrī Rāma said that the Brahmāstra could never become futile and so the arrow must hit his right eye. Accordingly the arrow struck at his right eye and thus Jayanta lost his right eye. In Adhyātma Rāmāyana Jayanta struck his right eye and died before the arrival of Indra and Rāma.

3) Jayanta hidden in the ocean. After getting the boons Rāvaṇa became arrogant and with a big army went to the realm of the gods. Rāvaṇa engaged Indra in a fierce battle. In that fight Meghadūta, the son of Rāvaṇa attacked Jayanta, who swarmed and fell down. Immediately Pulomā, the father of Śaḍevī, gathered Jayanta in his hued unseen by anybody and hid him in the sea. After the disappearance of Jayanta the battle entered the second stage. Thinking that his son Jayanta had been killed, Indra began to fight with Rāvaṇa with more vigour than before. In the whole of the fight Meghadūta subdued Indra and made him a captive. Taking Indra and the celestial maid as captives, Rāvaṇa and his men went to Lankā. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

4) Jayanta became Bamboo. Once Agastya came to Indra’s durbar. Indra arranged for the dance of Urvasī in honour of Agastya’s visit. In the midst of the dance Urvasī saw Jayanta and fell in love with him. Consequently her steps went out of beat. Nārada who was playing his lute called Mahatī went wrong. Agastya got angry and cursed Jayanta and changed him to a bamboo. Urvasī was cursed to become a woman with the name Mādhavi. Agastya cursed Nārada that his lute Mahatī would become the lute of the people of the world. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

5) Other information.

1) In the stealing of the Pārijātapatra (the flower of a paradise tree) Jayanta fought with Prajāyuṇa the son of Śrī Kaṭuṇa and was defeated. (Viṣṇu Parva Chapter 75).

2) Jayanta was defeated by Śūrapadma, an Asura, in battle. (Śrāvastī Purāṇa). This story is stated with some slight changes. According to Adhyātma Rāmāyana, this incident took place when Śītā had been doing raw flesh. (Vālmīki Rāmāyana, Sundara Kānda, Sarga 38).

5) Jayanta became Bamboo. Once Agastya came to Indra’s durbar. Indra arranged for the dance of Urvasī in honour of Agastya’s visit. In the midst of the dance Urvasī saw Jayanta and fell in love with him. Consequently her steps went out of beat. Nārada who was playing his lute called Mahatī went wrong. Agastya got angry and cursed Jayanta and changed him to a bamboo. Urvasī was cursed to become a woman with the name Mādhavi. Agastya cursed Nārada that his lute Mahatī would become the lute of the people of the world. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

6) Other information.

1) In the stealing of the Pārijātapatra (the flower of a paradise tree) Jayanta fought with Prajāyuṇa the son of Śrī Kaṭuṇa and was defeated. (Viṣṇu Parva Chapter 75).

2) Jayanta was defeated by Śūrapadma, an Asura, in battle. (Śrāvastī Purāṇa). This story is stated with some slight changes. According to Adhyātma Rāmāyana, this incident took place when Śītā had been doing raw flesh. (Vālmīki Rāmāyana, Sundara Kānda, Sarga 38).

Agastya got angry and cursed Jayanta and changed him to a bamboo. Urvasī was cursed to become a woman with the name Mādhavi. Agastya cursed Nārada that his lute Mahatī would become the lute of the people of the world. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa).
JAYANTÀ VII. One of the ministers of Daśaratha. The eight ministers of Daśaratha were Jayanta, Dhrity, Vijaya, Asiddhārtha, Arbasūdhaka, Aṣoka, Mantrapaśka and Sumantra. (Vālmiki Ṛāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 7).

JAYANTÀ I. A holy place on the bank of the river Sarasvatī. There is a tīrtha (bath) here known as Somārtītha. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Yana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 15 that those who bathe in this tīrtha would obtain the good variety of sacrifice of Rājasūya. (Imperial consecration).

JAYANTÀ II. Daughter of Indra and sister of Jayanta. In Bhāgavata, Skanda 4, there is a story situating how Jayanta was the wife of Śukra for ten years. Śukrācārya was the teacher-priest of the Asuras (demons). Once the devas (gods) had completely defeated the Asuras. With the intention of procuring new powers from Śrī Paramēsvarā, Śukrācārya went to Kaṭāśā. When the penance of Śukra became more and more severe the gods and Indra began to be flurried. Indra told his daughter Jayanta to become the servant of Śukra and to break his penance somehow or other. Jayanta did not like this procedure of her father. Still she did not want to make the other gods sorrowful. So she went to Kaṭāśā and became the attendant of Śukra and stayed with him. She served him dutifully and with chastity. She would fan him with plantain leaf. She would prepare cold and fragrant water for him to drink. When the Sun became hotter she would hold her upper garment as an umbrella so that he should be in the shade. She would gather fully ripened good fruits for him to eat. She would gather good quality of darūka grass, cut them into the length of a span and with good flowers she would give them to the hermit for his morning Oblations. She would gather soft sprouts and make bed for him and would stand near him fasting till he slept. She would get water ready for him to rinse his mouth when he woke up. Thus she did the works of a hermit. She did not, in any way by speech or action, try to entice him so that his vow of penance might be broken. She spoke only words which would be pleasing and helpful to him. This continued for thousand years and then Paramēśvarā appeared before him and gave the boons he requested for. After that Śukrācārya talked with her. In accordance to her request the hermit Śukra allowed her to live with him for ten years as his wife. He gave her a boon that during that period of ten years they both would be invincible to the world. Thus Śukrācārya married Jayanta and they lived in the house very happily for ten years.

JAYANTTI III. The queen of the King Rāshba who was born in the dynasty of King Aṅgadā. Hundred children were born to Rāshba of Jayantī. (See under Rāshba II).

JAYAPRIVA. A female attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Sañja Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 12).

JAYAṬĀRA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas. Bhīmasena killed this warrior, who was a prince of Kaṭīka, in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Sañja Parva, Chapter 153, Stanza 28).

JAYAṬĀRA. A Sanskrit poet who lived in Kaṭāśa in the 12th century. He was a Saivaite. His important work is Haracarita-cintāmani. (History of classical Sanskrit literature).

JAYAṢĀRMAN. A Brāhmaṇa who became wealthy by taking the vow of Kamalā (Kamalāvratā). Kamalā is the eleventh day of ‘Adhimaś’. It is believed that this day is better than other days. If a man takes on that day Goddess Kamalā will be pleased with him.

The devotee should awake in the Brahmā muhūrta (forty-eight minutes before sunrise) and take bath thinking of Puruṣottama and begin the prayer and meditation is conducted at the house he will get double the fruits. If it is at a river it will yield four times the fruits. If it is at a cow-fed the fruits will be thousandfold and if it is conducted at a fired temple at a holy bath or in the presence of God the fruits will be a thousand and one hundredfold and if it is near a tulasi (holy basil) the fruits will be a lakshadās and if it is done in the presence of Vighu the fruits obtained will be unlimited.

This Jayaśārmān who took the last was the son of a noble Brāhmaṇa named Śivāśārmān of Avanti. He was the youngest of five sons. He became a wicked man. So he was avoided by his relatives. Being driven away from his home he went to forest and lived there. Once, by luck, he happened to reach the holy place of Triveni Mahātīrtha. He was very tired of hunger and thirst. So he bathed in the tīrtha and searched for some hermitage. By chance he saw the hermitage of Harśitama. As it was the month of Puruṣottama many people had gathered there. Brāhmaṇas were telling stories of meditation of sins. He heard the story of how if the Kamalāvratā and its fruits. So Jayaśārmān stayed in that hermitage with them and took the vow of Kamalāvratā. That night Devī appeared before him and said: ‘I have come from Vaikuntha, because I am greatly pleased with you. Since you have taken the vow of Kamalāvratā on the eleventh day of the dark lunar fortnight called Kamalā of the month of Puruṣottama I will grant you boon. Because you have taken vow at Triveni, I am immensely pleased with you. The noble Brāhmaṇas of your future generations also will be blessed by me’. Saying these words the Devī gave him boons and disappeared. From that day onwards Jayaśārmān became a great wealthy man and he returned to his father’s house (Padma Parāśa, Chapter 64).

JAYASENA I. Father of the famous Candraśāmaṇī. (See under Candraśāmaṇī).

JAYASENA II. A prince of Magadha. He was a member of the council of Yuddhiḥśīra. (M.B. Sañja Parva Chapter 4, Stanza 26).

JAYASENA III. A King of Avanti. To this King was born a son named Vindānuvinda and a daughter named Mitrāśvā by his chief wife Rājageśevari. Mitrāśvā was married by Śri Kṛṣṇa.

JAYASVA I. A son of King Drupada. It is mentioned in Mahā Bhārata, Drona Parva, Chapter 156, Stanza 181 that Jayaśva was killed by Asvāmśīma in the battle of Bhārata.

JAYASVA II. A brother of the King of Vīṛaṇa. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 136, Stanza 42).

JAYASENA IV. A King of the kingdom of Magadha. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 67 that this King, who was the son of Jaraśanda, belonged to the family of Kālakaśi. This King was a friend of the Pāṇḍavas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 8, that Jayatsena was present at theavyanvara (marriage) of Draupadi. Towards the end of the battle of Bharata, the Pandavas sent a letter of invitation to this king and accordingly he came in the help of the Pandavas with an ashaunati of army (21870 Chariots, 21870 elephants, 65610 horses and 109390 infantry). (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 8).

JAYATSENA I. A King of the Puru dynasty. His father was Sāvānabhūma and his mother was the princess Sunandā of Kekaya. Jayatsena married Subhavatī, the princess of Vidyadhara. A son named Arvākha was born to them. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 35).

JAYATSENA III. The name assumed by Nakula in his life unknown. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 35).

JAYATSENA IV. A King who took the side of the Kuravas. He was son of Jarasândha. This King came with an ashaunati of army and helped the Kuravas in the battle of Bharata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 6). It is mentioned in Kārga Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 30 that this King was killed by Abhimanyu.

JAYATSENA V. A son of Dīptavīrā. It is mentioned in Mahabhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 69, that this Jayantsena was defeated by Śatārūka and in Salya Parva, Chapter 26 that he was killed by Bhīṣma. (Jayatsena).

JAYAVIYAS. See under Jay XI.

JHA. This syllable means 'famous'. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 340).

JAHJA. The father of Sunda an Asura who was the father of Māric, whose mother was Tājaka. (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bīla Kanda, Sarga 23).

JHILLI I. A Yavana of the house of Vṛṣṇi. He was one of the seven chief ministers of the Kṛṣṇa in Dvārakā. (M.B. Subhā Parva, Chapter 14, Duṣṭānītya pāṭa).

JHILLI II. (Jhilionūrāk). A warrior of the Vṛṣṇis. It is stated in Mahabhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 20, that this warrior was present at theavyanvara (marriage) of Draupadi. It is also seen that this Yadava carried the dowry of Subhadrā to Khandava-prasada from Dvārakā. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 120, Stanza 52). This warrior took part in the Bhārata battle. It is mentioned in Mahabhārata, Dropa Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 28 that this warrior played a laudable part in the battle of Kurukṣetra.

JHILLI I. (Jhiliondrakam). A woman. This work has another name Jhīkka. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 64, Stanza 1).

JHILLIKAM. An ancient town in South India. Mention is made about this town in Mahabhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 59.

JHICU. See under Jhilli II.

JHYĀ. A servant woman who stole ornaments from the palace. It is detailed story of how she was caught with stolen goods and is under Haridvaran.

JIMUTAVĀHANA I. A King born of the family of Yayāti. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

JIMUTA II. A wrestler (Pahalvān). While the Pandavas were living incognito in the city of Vīraṭa, once Brahmornoṣva (Brahmā festival) was celebrated all over the country. Wrestling was an important item of the Brahmā festival. Jimūta was the most famous of the wrestlers who took part in the festival. He struck several wrestlers down. At last King Vīraṭa asked Bhīma to wrestle with Jimūta. Bhīma accepted the invitation. In the wrestling Jimūta was killed. (M.B. Vīraṭa Parva, Chapter 16).

JIMUTA III. A hermit. Mention is made in Mahabhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 111, Stanza 23 that this hermit got a treasure of gold called Jaimūta from the Himalayas.

JIMUTAVĀHANA IV. The horse of the King Vamsanams. See under Vamsanams.

JIMUTAKETU I. A synonym of Śiva. There is a story in the Purāṇas about how Śiva got the name Jimutaketa.

When summer season began Parvati told her husband Śiva. “My Lord, Summer has set in. What are we to do without a house to protect us from the hot sun and the strong wind?” Śiva replied. “Dear! It is because I have no house that I walk about in the forest always.”

Because Śiva said so, the loyal wife Sattdevi spent the summer with her husband in the shade of trees. When the summer was over rainy season began. People stopped walking about. The sky became black with clouds. The roaring sound of thunder was heard everywhere. Seeing that the rainy season had begun Parvati again requested her husband to erect a house. Hearing her request Śiva replied, “I have no wealth at all to build a house. You see that I am wearing the hide of a leopat. The serpent Seṇa is my Brahmanda-string. Padma and Pīṅgala are my ear-rings. One of my bracelets for the upper arm is Kambala and the other one is the nāga (serpent) Dhanābyāja. My bracelet on the right hand is Avatara and on the left hand is Tājaka. The string that I wear round my waist is Nīla, as black as antimony. So let us go above the clouds and spend the rainy season there. Then rain will not fall on your body.”

Saying thus, Śiva got into a lofty cloud with Parvati and sat there. That cloud looked like the flag of Śiva. Thenceforward Śiva came to be known by the name Jimutaketa. (Vīmaṇa Purāṇa, Chapter).

JIMUTAKETU II. See under Jimutavāhana.

JIMUTAVĀHANA. A Vidyādharā, (demi-god). He was the son of Jimutaketa, who was the ruler of a city named Kālcana-pura in a valley of the Himalayas. Being childless he had been sad for a long time. At last he approached the divine tree Kalpaka (a heavenly tree that yields every wish) that stood in his garden and requested it to bless him with a child. Thus a son was born to him. The famous Jimutavāhana was that son. When Jimutavāhana came to know of the divine powers of the Kalpaka tree, from the ministers, with the permission of his father he went to the Kalpaka tree, bowed before it and said to it, “Oh noble tree! You have
With his heart overflowing with joy, Jímútaváhana went to his house. Mitrávana was there. He revealed the purpose of his coming. Jímútaváhana, who had the remembrance of his previous births told Mitrávana that in the previous birth also they had been friends and that Malayavati had been his wife. Thus their marriage took place. Delightful days of the married life passed by one by one. One day Jímútaváhana and Mitrávana went for a walk. They reached a forest on the boundary. Seeing some bones there Jímútaváhana asked Mitrávana about them. Mitrávana said: "In ancient days Kárdrá, the mother of Nágas (serpents) made Vásuki, the mother of Garuda, her slave by some trick. Garuda liberated his mother from slavery. But the hatred increased day by day and Garuda began to eat serpents, the children of Kárdrá. Seeing this, Vásuki the King of Nágas entered into a contract with Garuda, so as to prevent the nágas from being destroyed altogether. The arrangement was that Vásuki would send a serpent everyday to Garuda. Garuda ate all those serpents sent by Vásuki in this place. These are the bones of those poor snakes."

When Jímútaváhana heard this story his heart was filled with joy and he decided to save the life of at least one serpent by giving his body instead. But the presence of Mitrávana was an obstacle to carry out his wish. At that particular moment a minister of Vídávávan appeared there and took away Mitrávana saying that he was wanted by his father. Left alone, Jímútaváhana stood there when he saw a young man coming with an old woman who was crying bitterly. On enquiry Jímútaváhana learned that in accordance with the agreement with Garuda, the old woman was bringing her only son Sákháruḍá to give him as food to Garuda. Jímútaváhana told them that he would take the place of Sákháruḍá that day. The mother and the son reluctantly agreed to his desire. The old woman went away crying and Sákháruḍá went to the temple.

Hearing the sound of Garuda's wings Jímútaváhana laid himself on a stone and Garuda taking him in his beaks flew to the top of the Malaya Mountain. On the way the jewel of Jímútaváhana known as 'Gádratvātu', which was soaked in blood fell down, in front of Malayavati. Knowing that it was the jewel of her husband, with a terrible cry she ran to her father. Because of his knowledge of arts and sciences, Jímútaketu also knew everything and with his wife and daughter he went to the top of the Malaya mountain.

In the meanwhile, Sákháruḍá, having done obeisance to 'Gádratvātu' (God), came back to the stone where he had left Jímútaváhana and seeing a pool of fresh blood, became sad and silent. Then determining that he would save Jímútaváhana at any cost, he went up the mountain following the track of the blood drops.

Garuda took Jímútaváhana to the peak of the mountain and began to prick at him. Jímútaváhana grew more and more delightful as the pricking became harder. Garuda looked at him with wonder and thought, "Surely, this man is not a nága, it must be a Sákháruḍá or somebody else." Not knowing what to do he sat looking at his prey, who invited him to finish off his meal. At this time Sákháruḍá had reached the spot. Soon Jímútaketu with his wife and Malayavati also arrived.
They all cried aloud. Garuda was in great confusion. When he knew that he was about to eat the famous Jimûtavrāhī, who had given away even the Kalpaka tree for the good of others, Garuda was filled with remorse. Instantly Jimûtavrāhī died. The parents and Satkhaărādhī cried beating their breasts. Malayaavati fell on the ground and cried. Then looking up she called out with tears. "Ha! Devī! Jagadambikā! You have told me that my husband would become the emperor of the Vidyādhāras! Has your boon become futile because of my misfortune?" Devī appeared and said "Daughter! My words will not become futile." Then Devī sprinkled Amṛta (ambrosia) on Jimûtavrāhī and brought him to life. He sprang up more radiant than before, and was anointed as emperor of the Vidyādhāras by Devī. When Devī disappeared Garuda was much pleased, told Jimûtavrāhī to ask for any boon.

Jimûtavrāhī requested for the boon that Garuda should stop eating the Nāgas and that all the serpents who had been reduced to bones should be brought to life again. Garuda granted him that boon. All the serpents which had been killed by Garuda came to life again and kindred again came there to give Garuda joy. After all had gone, Jimûtavrāhī went with his relatives to the Himalayas as the emperor of Vidyâdhâras. (Kathākrītaśūra, Saṅkhaţavatiyam Lumbaka, Tarangī 23).

Jînoddhârâ. Erection and consecration of images fixed in temples which have fallen into disreputation, is called Jînoddhârâ. Mention is made in Agni Purâṇa, Chapter 67, about the principles of Jînoddhârâ, as follows:

The priest should adorn the image with ornaments and perform Sāvāna. If the idol is very badly ruined by age it must be abandoned. Broken image and that with any part of the body severed or disfigured should also be abandoned, even if it is made of stone or any other hard material. Then the image is renovated and the priest should make burnt offerings thousand times with Narasimha mantra (spell or incantation). If the ruined image is made of wood it should be burned. If it is made of stone it should be placed at the bottom of deep water, either in the sea or any other body of water. The water should be covered with a cloth. With instrumental music and so forth the image should be taken to water in a procession and then submerged in water. After a good day in an auspicious morning a new image of the same material should be made and consecrated at of the old image should be erected and consecrated by the priest.

Jîtârī Son of Avîkṣṭ born of the family of Pûrû. Avîkṣṭ was the son of King Kurū. Mention is made about Jîtârī in Mahâbhârata, Adî Parva Chapter 94, Stanza 53.

Jîmîtâmâ A Vîśvâdvara (A class of gods) concerned with Śraddha (offering to the Manes). (M.B Anuśamana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 31).

Jîtvâvati A daughter of King Uśīgara. She was the most beautiful woman in the world. She was the friend of the wife of a Vâstu named Dyaû. It was because of the beauty of this Jîtvâvati that the Arjuna (the night Vâstu) stole the cow Nandini of Vasiṣṭha, and by the curse of Vasiṣṭha she had to take birth in the womb of women on earth. (See under Gâṅga, Para 7).

Jînu I. A name of Arjuna. (See under Arjuna).

Jînu II. A synonym of Sri Kṛṣṇa. As Sri Kṛṣṇa had won all the battles he fought, he got the name Jînu. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 19).

Jînu III. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pândavas against the Kauravas. This warrior was a native of Cedi, was killed by Karna (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 48).

JînuKarmâ. A warrior who stood on the side of the Pândavas and fought against the Kauravas. He was a native of the country of Cedi. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 48).

Jîvâyâka. A King of lârd. Mention is made in Mahâbhârata, Śânti Parva, Chapter 139, Stanza 6, about this bird.

Jîvala. A charioteer of Rûpārâ, the King of Ayodhyâ. Nala who had been living there under the name Bûhaka had accepted Jîvala as his friend. (See under Rûpârâ).

Jîvâtman (The individual life or soul). The Apara-brahman (which is next to the highest Brahman) that is so minute and subtle is called Jîvâtman. Parâbrahman is God Almighty. It is mentioned in Taittirîyopanîṣad about this aparâbrahman as follows:

'Vasam puede vasudevam akâśaḥ sambhâvah, akâśa dvarah vâyur vâyur apah, vâyur prabhârî prthivî caddayah, padâbhiv unnam amânt puruṣa sa vâ eva puruṣo annamâyah.'

'From this Atman came into existence ether possessing the quality of sound. From ether air, possessing the quality of sound and touch, came into existence. Fire with the qualities of sound, touch, and colour came into being from air. From fire, water having the qualities of sound, touch, colour and smell, came into being. From water earth with the qualities of sound, touch, colour, taste and smell came into existence. Vegetation grew from earth, and from vegetation food, from food semen, and from semen Pûrû came into existence. The materialized form of aparâbrahman is the body. Its subtle form is the soul. Jîvâtma or the individual soul is the subtle form of soul dwelling in the materialized form of aparâbrahman. This soul sits in the miniature lotus of heart in the miniature ether. The body which is made of the five elements is the dwelling place of this Jîvâtma. The individual life exists in every living being. The body originated from food is the outer covering of the Jîvâtma. This materialized body is also called Annâmâyakoṣa (the cask of food). Inside this annâmâyakoṣa there is the Prânavanmayakoṣa (the chest of the life breath). It is stated in the Taittirîyopanîṣad that this Prânavanmayakoṣa is separate from and existing inside the annâmâyakoṣa. The Prânavanmayakoṣa which exists inside the annâmâyakoṣa has the shape of man. The life breath which appears as the inhaling and exhaling breath is the head of the Prânavanmayakoṣa. The life breath Vâyuha is the right wing and Apâna is the left wing, ether its soul and Prabhî (the earth) its tail. Inside the Prânavanmayakoṣa, there exists the Manomayakoṣa (the chest of mind), but it fills the entire interior of the Pranamayakosa. The Vijnanamayakosa (the chest of knowledge or understanding) exists inside the Manomayakosa. The Jivatma or the individual life dwells inside this Vijnanamayakosa and pervades the entire body. It is by the activity of Vijnanamayakosa that the Jivatma feels its individuality. Inside the Vijnanamayakosa there exists a fifth kosa (chest) called the Anandamayakosa, which is the immediate covering of Jivatma, and which has no sense of individuality. The three Kosas, Anandakosa, Vijnanakosa and Pranamayakosa together is called Sukshma Kosas (the subtle body). It must be remembered that Sukshma Kosas is different from Sukshma Kosas (the minute subtle body).

Heart is the abode of the Jivatma. Hrdi (in heart) ayaam (this being—Jivatma exists). So the name Hrdi (heart) is meaningful. The Purusa (male being), which sits in the heart or the Jivatma is as big as the toe according to the Kathopanishad. The Jivatma or the Aparahman is without beginning. Even from the past which is beyond our thinking creeds and creeds of Jivatmas had got into individuals and when the Anandamayakosa of the individuals decayed due to death, they abandoned them and entered into negating forms. The author of the Bhdadra gives an explanation to the question why this Jivatma which is as fine as air enters the body of man, beast, bird, tree, rock etc. and subjects itself to misery and hardship. “Where does the Jivatma originate from? how does it enter this body?” Jivatma originates from Paramatma (the soul of the universe). As the shadow pervades the body of a man this Jivatma pervades this body. Sri Sankaracarya expounds it in another way; he says that the Jivatma is tied to the body by the imagination or desires of the mind.

JNANAPAVANATIRTHA. An ancient holy bath. Mention is made in Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapter, 84, Stanza 3 that those who visit this holy place will attain the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Agni.

JRMBHAVESV. Sec under Kottuv (Gape).

JRMBHIKA. Yawning or gasping. For the Puranic story of how gape came into existence in the world, see under Kottuv (Gape).

JUHU. A King of the family of Yavati. (Bahgavata, Skandha 9).

JVALA I. A daughter of Taksha. The King Rkna married her. Matinara was the son born to the couple. (Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 95. Stanza 25).

JVALA II. The wife of Niladhvaja. There is a story about this Jvala in the “Jaimini Atyavamedha Parva”, Chapter 15, as follows : The Pindavas began the sacrifice of Atyamedha, Arjuna led the sacrifice in the front. The King continued his victorious march defeating all Kings and reached the city of Nila-dhvaja. Niladhvaja was not prepared for a fight. Seeing this his wife Jvala tried various ways to put her husband to war. Seeing them to be futile she approached her brother Unmuka and asked him to fight with Arjuna. He also was not prepared to fight with Arjuna. Jvala became very angry and walked in the bank of the Ganges. When the Ganges-water reached her, she stopped and said, “Dear me! I am become sinful by the touch of Ganges-water.” The amazed Ganges took the form of Sumati-gadavi and stood before Jvala and asked her the reason for saying so. Jvala said “Gadavi submerged her seven sons and killed them. After that she took the eighth son from Santuna. That son too was killed by Arjuna in the Bhurata-battle. Thus Ganges is childless and sinful.” Hearing this Gadavi Devi cursed Arjuna “Let his head be cut off in six months’ time.” Jvala was satisfied. (For the result of the curse see under Arjuna, Para 28).

JVARA I. One of the two attendants given to Subrahmanya by Agnideva. (Fire god). Jvoti was the other attendant. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 33).

JVARA II. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 61).

JVARA III. Sec under Tripura.

JVARA. (Gape). (Fever).

1) General information. A fearful being. It is stated in the Puranas that living beings catch fever owing to the activities of this monster.

2) The origin of ज्वर. Once Siva and Parvati were talking with each other in the Holy Bath called Jyostikam on the Mount Mahamuni. On that day Daksya had performed a sacrifice at Gaigaldeva. Siva alone was not invited. Seeing the Gods Brahma and the others going to that place through the sky, Parvati asked Siva what the matter was. Siva explained everything to Parvati, who became very sorry because her husband had not been invited. Siva grew uneasy at the sorrow of his wife. A drop of sweat fell down from his third eye. A fearful monster with the lustre of fire arose from that drop of sweat. That figure is described as follows : “A terrible monster, with dwarfish figure, staring eyes, green moustaches, hair standing erect on head and body covered with hair all over, looking like a combination of hawk and owl, with jet-black colour, wearing a blood-coloured cloth.” (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 283)

“With three legs, three heads, six hands and nine eyes, comes Jvara the terrible monster, as fierce as Yama the god of death and fearful like a thousand clouds with thunderbolt, gaping and sighing, with tight body and horrible face, rendered so by many eyes.” (M.B. Visnu Parva, Chapter 122).

To this uncouth figure Siva gave the name Jvara, who dashed away and entered into all devas (gods). Brahma and the others caught fever and were laid up. At last they all came to Siva. Hearing their request Siva divided Jvara into several parts and separated them from each other and ensured them to other living beings, and ordered that, headache for elephants, green coverings for water, shedding of skin for snakes, hoof-root for cows, sore-throat for horses, feather-hunting for peacocks, sore-eye for cuckoo, hiccough for parrot, weariness for tigers and fever for men will be caused by Jvara. It was the time of the terrorism of Vrshaksha. Jvara caught hold of that Acura also. It was at this time that Indra used his thunderbolt and killed Vrshaksha. (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 283; M.B. Visnu Parva, Chapter 122).
JYĀMAGHA. A King born in the dynasty of Ikvāku. (Harivarana, Chapter 36).

Five sons, who were equal to gods, named Sahasrada, Pavota, Krūṣṭa, Niña and Ajika were born to Yadu of the family of Ikvāku. Several noble persons were born in the family of Krūṣṭa. A noble and broad-minded son named Vṛjūṇīvān was born to Krūṣṭa. Śvāhī was born to Vṛjūṇī, Rucāku to Śvāhī, Citrāratha to Rucāku and Citrāratha to Citrāratha. These sons were辅ed and conquered the countries and performed avarāmedha (horse sacrifice) gave away all the countries he conquered, as gift to Brahmanas. Five sons were born to Ruknakavaca. Jyāmagnā was one of them. His brothers were Ruknetu, Pithurukma, Parīgha and Hari. Of them Parīgha and Hari were made Kings of foreign countries. Ruknetu was given the country ruled by his father. Pithurukma served Ruknetu. They drove Jyāmagnā away from the country.

Jyāmagnā went to the forest and erected a hermitage for him. Then according to the advice of a Brahmin, he was an old man took bow and arrow and got into a chariot flying a flag and went to the bank of the river Naravā. He had neither wealth nor attendants. He stayed on the bank of the river. Ruknetu and thousands sons were and thousands cows. His wife Śavīyā also had become old. They had no children. Still Jyāmagnā did not marry anybody else. Once Jyāmagnā came victorious in a fight in which he got a girl. Jyāmagnā took the girl to his wife and told her, "This girl shall be the wife of your son." She asked him how that could be when she had no son. He said, "Well, this girl will become the wife of the son of the one who is going to be born to you." As a result of severe penance a son named Vidhūha was born to Śavīyā. The damsel who became the wife of Vidhūha gave birth to two sons named Krūṣṭa and Kaśīśka. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 12).

1. JYESTHA I. A deity of auspicious things. In Kamba Ramayana and Yuddha Kanda, it is observed that Jyeṣṭha was a goddess obtained by churning the Sea of Milk. As soon as she came up from the sea of Milk, the Trimūrti (Viṣṇu, Brahmā and Śiva) found her and sent her away ordering her to sit in auspicious places. The Goddess Jyeṣṭha came out of the Milk-Sea before the goddesses Laksūni. So this deity is considered the elder sister of Laksūni. As she is the elder sister she is also called Mūḍhā (Mudrā). The mode of worshipping this goddess is given in Bodhāyana Sūtra. Tondrājānāvār, who was a Vaisnava Aśvār, who lived in 7th century A.D said that it was useless to worship this Goddess. Ancient images of this Goddess have been found. But worship of Jyeṣṭha was completely discontinued after the 10th century.

In Savita Purāṇa it is mentioned that this Goddess is the one of the eight portions of Parākṣati. It was believed that the powers of this Goddess regulated human lives in various ways.

JYESTHA II. A star. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Amūdrasana Parva, Chapter 64, Stanza 24 that if Brahma- manas are given greens on the day of this star it will bring good to the giver.

JYESTHA. A hermit who was well-versed in the Sāma-Veda. This ancient hermit once received valuable advice from the Sātvatas called Barīshads. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 318, Stanza 46).

JYESTHAUKARA. A holy place. Those who visit this holy place will get the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Aṅgīnīṣṭha. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 200, Stanza 68).

JYESTHĀSĀMA. A Sāma meditation upon the hermit Jyeṣṭha. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 348, Stanza 46).

JYESTHA. A river. This river stays in the palace of Vāṃsa worshipping him. (M.B. Sābhiti Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 21).

JYESTHAUKARA. A holy place. He who stays in this holy place for a night will get the fruits of giving a thousand cows as gift. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 64, Stanza 164).

JYOTI I. Son of the Vān named Aha. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 23.

JYOTI II. One of the two attendants given to Subrahmanya by the god Agni (fire). The second one was Vaiśālīgha. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 33).

JYOTIKA. A famous serpent. This serpent was born to Kaśyapa by his wife Kadrā. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 13).

JYOTIRATHA. A famous river. The people of India were to drink water from this river. (M.B. Bṛhāṇa Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 26).

JYOTIRATHYĀ. A river. He who bathes in this river in the particular place where it merges with the river Sona-padārā, would obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Aṅgīnīṣṭha. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 8).

JYOTIRVASU. A King born in the family of Parīrāvas. He was the son of Sumati and the father of Pratika. (Bṛhaṇa, Skanda 9).

JYOTIṢA (M). (Astronomy and astrology). Jyotiṣa is the science about the stars and heavenly bodies. The heavenly bodies are the sun, the moon, the other planets and the stars etc. From the very ancient days men believed that these planets and stars in the sky played an important part in controlling the growth and activities of all the living and non-living things in the world.

Astrology has been a recognized science in Egypt, China and India from very ancient days. History tells us that 3000 years before Christ there were astronomers in Babylon. But even before that time astronomy had fully expanded and grown in Bṛhatāra. The Vedas are supposed to have six Aṅgas (ancillaries) They are Śīkṣa (Phonetica), Kalpa (ritual), Vyākaraṇa (Grammar), Jyotīṣa (astroonomy) Chandras (metrics), and Nirukta (etymology). From this it can be said that the Indians had acknowledged Astronomy as an ancillary of the Vedas. The expounders of the Vedas say that Astronomy is the eye of the Vedas. Astronomy has two sides, the doctrinal side (Pramāṇabhāga) and the result-side (Phalabhāga). The Calendar is reckoned in accordance with the Pramāṇabhāga. Prediction and casting horoscopes of living beings is the Phalabhāga.
The astronomers have divided the sky that surrounds the earth into twelve parts called rāśis (zodiacs). All the stars of the first zodiac appear in the shape of a goat (Mēsa) so that zodiac was called Mēsa. Then the zodiac in which the stars took the shape of an ox was called Rṣabhā (ox). In the zodiac Mithuna the stars took the shape of a young couple. Karkātaka means crab. In that zodiac the stars appear in the shape of a crab. In the same way Śūraḥ means lion and Kanyā means a darter. Tulā means balance and Vṛṣīkha means scorpion; Dhanus means bow and Makara means Makara matsya (horned shark). Kumbha is a water pot and Mina means fish. The name of the zodiac is according to the sign of the zodiac. That is, in what shape the stars in that particular zodiac appear to the people of the earth. The figure of the twelve zodiacs with the earth as centre is given below:

<tr>
<th>Mina</th>
<th>Meṣa</th>
<th>Rṣabhā</th>
<th>Mithuna</th>

<td>Kanyā</td>
</tr>
</tbody>

In Kerala and some other places the zodiacs are marked to the right in order beginning with Meṣa, whereas it is marked to the left in the same order in some of the other parts of India.

The earth completes one rotation in 60 Nādiaks (24 minutes) i.e. 24 hours. In each rotation these twelve zodiacs face the earth. For a man standing at a particular point on the earth it will take 60% minutes i.e. 5 nādiaks (two hours) on an average, for a zodiac to pass him. But it may vary in different places according to the difference of the shape of the earth. A month is the time the sun remains in a zodiac. The planet Jupiter takes a year and Saturn two years and a half on an average to pass a zodiac. The calendar shows which are the planets standing in each zodiac and how far they have travelled at a particular time in that particular zodiac. When a particular zodiac is in a particular region of the earth, a man born in that region is said to be born in that zodiac. When a particular place faces the zodiac of Meṣa the child which takes birth in that place is said to be born in the zodiac of Meṣa. The zodiac of birth is given the name Lagna by astronomers. Those who are well-versed in the results of astronomy are of opinion that the life, fortune etc. of living beings depend upon the position of the planets in relation to their lagnas.

JYOTISHKA. A famous serpent born to Kaṭyāpa by his wife Kadā. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 203, Stanza 15).

JYOTISHKA(M). A peak of mount Sumner. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 283, Stanza 5).

JYOTISĀMA. An ancient King of Kuṭadvipa. This king had seven sons, called Udhibha, Venumāna, Vairatha, Lambana, Dhiyā, Prabhākara and Kapilla. Each division of this country is given the name of each of these sons. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Aṃśa 2, Chapter 4).

JYOTSNĀKĀLI. The second daughter of Candru. In Mahā Bhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 98, Stanza 13, it is mentioned that this daughter was extremely beautiful and that the Sun married her.

KA. This letter has the following meanings:
- (i) Prajāpati. (Śloka 32, Chapter 1, Adi Parva, M.B.)
- (ii) A name of Dakṣaprājāpati. (Śloka 7, Chapter 208, Śanti Parva, M.B.).
- (iii) A name of Viṣṇu. (Śloka 91, Chapter 149, Anuśaṇa Parva, M.B.).
- (iv) Brahmachāri (Viṣṇu. Mahāvihara. (Chapter 348, Aṃśa Purāṇa, M.B.).

KABALABARHĪṢA. A King of Vṛṣṇivaśa. (See under VRṣṬIVAHMA).

KABANDHA.

1) General Information. The demon who attacked Rāma and Laksmanā while they were wandering in Dauḍa-lakṣmaṇa after the abduction of Sītā by Rāvana.

2) Prasūtī history of Kabandha. There was a King of Gandharvaas called Śri. He had a son named Daunu. Daunu was known as Viśvavasu ahu. Viśvavasu once performed a penance to propitiate Brahmā for long life and Brahmā appeared before him and blessed him with immortality. Arrogant of this acquisition he roamed about as he pleased.

One day he attacked Indra and the latter furious at his impudence used the Vajra-yudha against him and the head and thighs of Viśvavasu were squeezed into his body. Viśvavasu pleaded that he should be given some way to take his food. Indra then granted him two very long hands and a mouth on his belly. Then Viśvavasu spent his days in a forest near the Sattavārmanava in Krauṭakāraṇya bearing the name Kabandha (Headless truck).

Indra added that he would attain his real form when Rāma and Laksmanā cut his hands. A favourite pastime of Kabandha was to frighten the sages. One day he attacked a sage called Śīvācāra and that sage cursed him saying that he would retain his ugly figure for ever. The demon pleaded for relief and the sage said that he would retain his original figure when Rāma cut his hands and left him in the desolate forest. From that day onwards Kabandha lived there waiting for Śri Rāma. (Sarga 70, Aranyā Kanda, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

3) Kabandha meets Rāma and Laksmanā. Jatūyu was lying half dead by a blow from the sword of Rāvana and Rāma and Laksmanā went to him and talked to him. He gave them some information regarding Śītā before he died. After burning the body of Jatūyu in a funeral pyre Rāma and Laksmanā went westwards. They entered the Krauṭakāraṇya and reached Māṅgavan. There they saw a great cave. A huge demoness attacked them near that cave and seeing the beautiful form of Laksmanā she invited him for amorous plays. Laksmanā cut off her ear, nose and breasts and then they entered deep into the forest. Bad omens greeted them.

"I am the son of Śri named Daunu" says Kabandha to Laksmanā in Śloka 8, Chapter 71, of the Aranyā Kanda of Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa. In Śloka 42, Chapter 209 of Aranyā Kanda, Kabandha says, "I am a gandharva, Viśvavasu and came to be born in a demoness womb by the curse of a brahman."
Once Kaca came back to life and stood before them. All the three then returned to the Asrama happily.

The anger of the Asuras against Kaca knew no bounds. On another occasion the Asura seized him and after killing him pounded his body into a paste and mixed it up in sea-water. This time also, at the request of Devayani, Sukracharya brought him back to life.

The third time the Asuras burnt the body of Kaca and mixed the ashes in wine and served it; to Sukracharya to drink. The disciple thus went into fear fully of the guru. Dark came, the castle came and still Kaca did not return and Devayani reported the matter to her father. Sukracharya sat for some time in meditation and then he knew that Kaca was in his own stomach. If he got Kaca out, he would burst his stomach and Sukra would die and if he did not get him out his daughter would burst her heart and die. Sukracharya was in a fix. He asked Kaca how he got in and he replied that it was through the wine. Sukra imparted to Kaca the art of Mrtasaajivani and Kaca lying within the stomach repeated it. Then Sukracharya called Kaca by name and Kaca came out bursting the stomach of his guru. The preceptor lay dead and by employing the art of Mrtasaajivani he had learnt, Kaca brought him to life. Sukracharya consumed wine from that day onwards and declared it as a forbidden drink to brahmans. Sukracharya said that because Kaca was born from his stomach he must be deemed his son.

Kaca was cursed. Kaca remained for some more time under the tutelage of Sukracharya and when his education became complete he took leave of his preceptor and also of the Asuras and went to a far-off place for a long distance from the hermitage and requested him to marry her. Kaca replied he could not do so because he had become a brother to Devayani. Devayani got angry and cursed him saying that he would not be able to use the art of Mrtasaajivani he had learnt from her father. Kaca cursed her back saying that none of the sons of sages were to marry her. Kaca had however felt relieved that though he would not be able to practise the art, his disciples would be able to do so. He went back to Devaiska and was heartily welcomed by all the Devas. He then imparted the art of Mrtasaajivani to the devas. (Chapters 76 and 77, Adi Parva, M.B.)

Kaca married Blisna. Kaca was also one among the several people who visited Blisna while the latter was lying on a bed of arrows awaiting death. (Siokha 9, Chapter 47, Santi Parva, M.B.)

KACHAM. An ancient place of habitation. (Siokha 19, Chapter 54, Salya Parva.)

KACHAPAM. One of the nine treasurers of Kubera.

KADALIGARBAH. Daughter of the great sage Markana. There is a story about her in Kathasaritsagara.

There was once a city called Iksumati. It was on the banks of the river Iksumati. It was Viswamitra who set up that river and city. In a hermitage in the thick forest on the shores of Iksumati lived a sage, Markana performing penance. One day the beautiful nymph Menakà came there from above. As a wind blew, her upper garment was displaced. Seeing her bare body, Markana had emotion. The semen of the sage fell into a Kadali (plantain) tree and from there arose a maiden, extremely beautiful. Because she was born from a sage, she was called Kadaliagarbhā. Kadaliagarbhā grew up into a beautiful lady and one day a king named Drdhavarma came that way while hunting and seeing Kadaliagarbhā he fell in love with her and married her with the permission of Mañikanaka. The Devas advised her to scatter mustard seeds on the way to her husband's house and in case her husband abandoned her she should be guided by the mustard plants to return home. She did so.

One day by the evil advice of a barber the King divorced her and she returned to the Astama by following the young mustard plants. But Mañikanaka took her back to the King. (Tarunā 6, Madanamahājānâyana, Kathisamitâgara).

KADALIVANĀ. This grove is situated on the banks of Kubera-puskarâjī which abound in Sambhândhika flowers. There were different kinds of plantain fruits of golden hue in this grove. Hanumān resided in it. Chapter 146, Vana Parva, M.B.)

KĀDAMBARI II. A river flowing westwards in Jambudvīpa. In Bāhagvata it is said that this river got its name "Kādambari" because it had the hollow trunk of a Kadamba tree as its source.

KĀDAMBARI II. An excellent story book in prose written in Sanskrit by the great Sanskrit poet Banabhaṭṭa. Kādambari is the heroine of the story.

KADHMOR. A saintly king. He is worthy of being remembered in the morning. (Chapter 165, Anuṣṭhāna Parva).

KADRī. Wife of Kaviyapa and daughter of Daksaprajāpatī.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Visu thus:—Visu—Brahma—Dakṣa—Kadrī.

2) Kadrī—wife or daughter of Kaviyapa? Whether Kadrī was the wife or daughter of Kaviyapa is a question which remains unanswered still in the Purāṇas. Chapter 63 of Bāhagvata states thus:

The six spiritual sons of Brahma are: Marici, Angiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha and Kratu. Marici got a son named Kaviyapa and he married the thirteen daughters of Dakṣa, namely, Aditi, Diti, Kalā, Danāyas, Danu, Simhi, Krodha, Pradhā, Viṣvā, Vinatā, Kapili, Muni and Kadru. So according to this, Kadrī was the wife of Kaviyapa.

But the 14th Sarga of Aranyā Kanda of Vālmiki Rāmāyana states:

Daksaprajāpatī got sixty illustrious daughters and of these Kaviyapa married—Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālīkā, Tamrā, Krodhavā, Muni and Surāsā. Krodhavā gave birth to eight daughters. They were: Mrgī, Mrgamandī, Harī, Bāhramātā, Maṅtangi, Sārdūla, Svetā, Surālī, Surāsā and Kadru.

Tamrā another wife of Kaviyapa gave birth to five daughters, namely, Kraunčī, Bhāṣī, Śyenī, Dhṛtarāṣṭrī and Śuki. Kraunčī gave birth to owls, Bhāṣī to bhāsa, Śyenī to eagles and vultures, Dhṛtarāṣṭrī to swans and Śuki to Naṭē. Naṭē gave birth to Vinatī.

Thus, according to the Rāmāyana Kadrī was the daughter of Kaviyapa born on his wife Krodhavā. Again Vinatī who is spoken as the elder sister of Kadrī in Mahābhārata is the daughter of the grand daughter of Kaviyapa. This means that Kadrī’s mother and Vinatī’s grand mother’s mother were sisters. But both of them looked after Kaviyapa as if they were direct sisters.

3) Kadrī, mother of serpents. Kadrī and Vinatī lived serving Kaviyapa. Kaviyapa was pleased with them and asked them what boon they wanted. Kadrī asked for a thousand serpents to be born of her and Vinatī asked for two sons who would be braver and more brilliant than the sons of Kadru. Kaviyapa granted them what they asked for and when Kadrī and Vinatī became pregnant he left for the forest.

After some time Kadrī delivered a thousand eggs and Vinatī two eggs. Both of them kept the eggs in warm jars and after five hundred years the thousand eggs of Kadrī burst letting out a thousand serpents. Vinatī became impatient and broke open an egg of her. Out came from it a half developed being and that was Arunā. Aruna cursed her for being impatient and said “You let me out half developed because of your overanxiety and you will, therefore, become a servant of Kadrī. Keep the other egg for another five hundred years. Then a very powerful son will come out of it and that son will relieve you of your servitude to Kadrī”. So saying he rose up in the air and became the charioteer of the sun. After five hundred years the other egg of Vinatī broke and Garuḍa came out. (Chapter 18, Aru Parva, M.B.)

4) Sons of Kadrī. Names of the prominent sons of Kadrī are given below:

All the serpents in the world have been born from these prominent serpents. (Chapter 36, Aru Parva, M.B.)

5) Kadru carries her sons. Once Kadrī called Vinatī to her side and asked her the colour of Ucchāśras, the horse of Indra. It was purely a white horse and Vinatī told so. But Kadrī said its tail was black. Each stood firm in their statement and then Kadrī made a bet. She who was defeated in the bet should serve the other as her slave, Vinatī agreed. Kadrī wanted to cheat Vinatī and so asked her sons to remain suspended from the tail of the horse in such an artful way that the tail would look black from a distance. Some of her sons refused to be a party to this deceit and Kadrī cursed them saying that they would all be burnt in the Sarpa-sutra of Janamejaya. Kaviyapa did not like the curse. But Brahmi came there and said that the serpents as a class were injurious to society and as such a curse of that nature was necessary. Brahmi then taught Vinatāśambhāravidyā (Treatment of snake-poisoning). (Chapter 20, Ádi Parva, M.B.)
6) Kadru and children go to Rāmaṇyaka. Once Kadru told Vināṭa, “Vināṭa, take me to the island of Rāmaṇyaka in the middle of the ocean. It is a beautiful place to stay. Let your son, Garuḍa, take my sons to that place.” Vināṭa took Kadru and Garuḍa took her children during the journey. Garuḍa rose high up in the air near the sun and the serpents began to feel the heat unbearable and began to get charred. Kadru then prayed to Indra and the latter then sent a heavy downpour of rain. Thus saved the serpents from being burnt to death and they reached the island of Rāmaṇyaka safe. (Chapters 25 and 26, Adi Parva, M.B.).

7) Other deities.
   (i) Kadru lives in the court of Indra, worshipped him. (Chapters 25 and 26, Parva, M.B.)
   (ii) Kadru taking the form of Skanda-grahā in an infinite minute size enters the wombs of women and eats the embryos. (Chapter 230, Vana Parva, M.B.)

KAHO ḏA (KAHO ḏAKA — KHAGODAKA). A sage the disciple and son-in-law of Uddālakā. He was the father of the sage Aśvāvakūra.

Uddālakā had another name “Śvetakūra.” He was a sage who had personally seen and talked to the goddess Sarasvatī. It was at that time that Kadru became his disciple. Kadru had been of a gentle nature served his preceptor for a long time and won his favour. He was immensely pleased and after teaching the necessary things gave his daughter Sujātā in marriage to Kadru. In due course, Sujātā became pregnant. One day, the child in the father’s restitutions of the Vedas. Kadru was displeased at this. He cursed the child that he would be born with a body having eight bends (curves). So the boy was named “Aṣṭāvakura” (one who has eight bends). Sujātā who was poor, once sent Kadru to King Iśvānakar for some money. Kadru who was defeated in a dispute was immersed in water. Aṣṭāvakura rescued his father. (See under Aṣṭāvakura).

KAIRASI. Mother of Rāvaṇa.
1) Brūt. From the wrath of Brahmā the giant Prahat was made from Brahmā’s hunger the demi-god He was born. The son Vidyyukama was born to Hehi, of Bhiyā the sister of Kāla. (Godd of death-Time). Vidyyukama married Śālakāvatī the daughter of Sandhyā. A man named Suka was born to them. Sukā was married Dēvāvata daughter of Maṇiṣyan, a Gandharva woman. Three sons Māyavān, Sumāli and Māli were born to them. The three brothers Māyavān, Sumāli and Māli married Śundari, Ketumati and Vanudhi respectively, the three daughters of Narmada, a Gandharva woman. To Sumāli, by his wife Ketumati, born were the ten sons, Prahat, Akampana, Vīka, Kālikāmukha, Dhunārākṣa, Daṇḍa, Supārśva, Sahrsvā, Pārvāta and Bhūskarṇa and four daughters Veka (Rekha), Puspakā, Kairasi and Kumbhināsi.

2) Marriage. As Sumāli was walking through forests with his wives and daughters, he saw so many Yakṣas (demi-gods) going in planes to pay homage to Vaśīvanā. Sumāli understood that Vaiśīvanā became worthy of homage because he was the son of Vīra. So he took his daughter Kairasi and left her in the house of Vīra. After a while, being pleased with her services, Vīra took her as his wife. Once she requested her husband for children. Accordingly she got Rāvaṇa, Kumbhākaraṇa and Viḥūṣana as sons.

KAKEYI. J. 1) General information. One of the wives of Daśaratha, who had three wives, Kauśalyā, Kaikēyī and Sumitrā. It is mentioned in Viśvaṃkī Rāmaṇya, Ayodhyā, Sarga 20, Sūtras 102 of Kaikēyī. She is the sister of Yudhājīt, the King of Kekaya, Kekaya was seven days’ journey away from Ayodhyā.
2) Getting boon. In days of old there was a battle between the devas and the asuras and Daśaratha went to the world of Devas, with Kaikēyī, in a chariot to help Indra against the Asuras. The devas were in a sorry plight due to the illusory and sorcerous mode of fighting of Sambhata the Asura and his men. Daśaratha faced the Asuras in ten directions at the same time and fought with them. In this fight his chariot had to be turned to every direction and up and down so swiftly that the bolt of the wheel slipped out and the wheel was about to come off when Kaikēyī inserted her thumb in the hole of the bolt and kept the chariot safe and steady. The King was not aware of this bravery on the part of his wife. At last when he came to know of this he promised to give her two boons. The queen said that she would ask for those two boons later, as she didn’t want anything then. After this the King and the queen returned to their country. (Viśvaṃkī Rāmaṇya, Sarga 9; Kambha Rāmaṇya, Bahūdyā). Kaikēyī requested for the boon of Sambhata, as the celebration of anointing Śī Rāma as the heir apparent in Ayodhyā was going on, the humpy Mantharā approached Kaikēyī and advised her on the ways of making her son Bharata king and sending Śī Rāma to forest. At first Kaikēyī refused to agree to this, but at last she succumbed to the repeated advice of Mantharā. Daśaratha came to see Kaikēyī who was living in grief. Making use of this opportunity Kaikēyī requested for the granting of the two boons promised earlier. One boon was that Bharata should be anointed as heir apparent making use of the preparations made for Śī Rāma and the other boon was that Śī Rāma should live in forest, wearing bark of trees and matted hair for fourteen years. When Daśaratha heard these requests he became unconscious. But he granted her wishes.

KAKEYI II. Wife of Ajamūdaya, a King of the Pāru dynasty. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Sūtra 37).

KAKEYI III. Sudeśā, the wife of the King of Viśā, was known by the name Kaikēyī also. She was the daughter of Kekaya, the King of Sūtra, born of his wife Mālayī. As she was the daughter of Kekaya, she got the name Kaikēyī. (M.B. Vaiśā Parva, Chapter 16). Besides, it is stated in the Purāṇas that all the princesses of the kingdom of Kekaya were called by the name Kaikēyī.

KAÍLASA (KAÍLASA). A serpent belonging to the Kāiva family. Mention is made about this serpent in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Sūtra 111.

KAÍLASA. 1) General information. The mount Mahāmeru has an area of eighteen thousand nādhikās (Indian mile of ½ Kosā) and a height of two thousand nādhikās. On the eastern side of this mount there are two mountains called Jathara and Devakūja. Pavamāna and Pārīyāsa are the two mountains on the western side. On the south there are the two mountains of Kailāsa and Karvira. The two mountains on the north are called Trīṣṇa and Makaragiri. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapters 109 and 141 that the abodes of Śiva and Kubera are on the mount Kailāsa. Once, to please Śiva, Mahāviṣṇu performed penance on Kailāsa. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 222, Stanza 33 to 40). It is mentioned in Mahā Bhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3 that the mountain Mainākā stands to the north of Kailāsa. Once Vyāsā went to Kailāsa. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 17). In Vana Parva, Chapter 106, mention is made that the King Sagaras, with his two queens, once went to Kailāsa for penance. It was on the Kailāsa that Bhūgarbha performed penance. The στη τις of the Vedas which he had created. They caught hold of all the Vedas and went to Pātala, (the nether world) and hid themselves there. Brahmdwivedi at the loss of the Vedas and followed Madhu-Kaitabha, who began to attack Brahmdwivedi. At this Brahmdwivedi became terribly afraid of the Asuras and of Mahāviṣṇu. He was lying in a deep sleep of contemplation. Brahmdwivedi praised him. Mahāviṣṇu woke up. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

1) General information. Kaitabha was the brother of Madhu, an Asura (demon). These two brothers are known in the Purāṇas as Madhu-Kaitabhas.

2) Origin. In the Purāṇas, two stories slightly different from each other, occur about the birth of Madhu and Kaitabha. One story occurs in Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 10 and the other in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva. In Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 1, it is stated as follows: —

In the beginning there was no earth or any other planet. There was only water. Mahāviṣṇu slept on the surface of the water. From the navel of Mahāviṣṇu the stalk of a lotus grew up and there was a lotus flower at the end of the stalk. Brahmdwivedi was born in the lotus flower. He was planted in the flower to deep meditation reciting the Vedas. Earth-wax flowed out from both the ears of Mahāviṣṇu. From the ear-wax two Asuras Madhu and Kaitabha were born.

The following occurs in the Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 248 about the birth of Madhu-Kaitabhas.

A lotus flower grew up from the navel of Mahāviṣṇu and Brahmdwivedi was born in the flower. In the flower there were two drops of water created by Mahāviṣṇu. One drop was sweet as honey and from that drop was born the Asura Madhu with the attributes of rajas (darkness). The other drop was hard and from it Kaitabha was born with the attributes of rajas (duration).

3) Madhu-Kaitabhas’ nurturing boon. Madhu-Kaitabhas were born in water, grew up in water and walked on the surface of water, haughty and arrogant. They began to think about how the big flood of water came into existence. Then Devi appeared before them and taught them the mantra or incantation of Vāgīṣṇu (origin of logos). Reciting this mantra, Madhu and Kaitabha worshipped Devi for thousand years. Then she appeared and asked them what they wished. They wanted the boon that death should befall them only as they desired. Devi granted them the boon. After this they became haughtier because of the boon, and lived in the water playing with the creatures of water having nobody to confront them. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 1).

4) The theft of the lotus flower. Brahmdwivedi was lying in the lotus flower reciting the four Vedas which he had created. They caught hold of all the Vedas and went to Pātala, (the nether world) and hid themselves there. Brahmdwivedi saw at the loss of the Vedas and followed Madhu-Kaitabhas, who began to attack Brahmdwivedi. At this Brahmdwivedi became terribly afraid of the Asuras and of Mahāviṣṇu. He was lying in a deep sleep of contemplation. Brahmdwivedi praised him. Mahāviṣṇu woke up. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

5) The death of Madhu and Kaitabha. According to the request of Brahmdwivedi, Mahāviṣṇu confronted Madhu and Kaitabha. Madhu engaged Vīsus in fighting while Kaitabha took rest and when Madhu became tired, Kaitabha engaged Vīsus in fighting. Thus the fight went on for a long time and Vīsus became tired of continuous fight. Vīsus understood that owing to the boon given by Devi the Asuras would die only if they wished for death, and that no body could kill them. So Vīsus began to meditate on Devi, who said: “It would never be possible for you to kill Madhu and Kaitabha because of my boon. You are killed only by deceit. So you may kill them deceitfully”. Hearing these words Mahāviṣṇu approached the Asuras and said to them. “I am much pleased with you. So you may ask for any boon.” Hearing this they laughed and said that they were more powerful than Vīsus and that he might ask of them any boon. Taking that opportunity Mahāviṣṇu said: “Oh! I powerful one, you ask me to grant me this boon. Give me the boon to kill you.” This request shook them. They were willing to be killed at any place except water. They thought that Vīsus would not be powerful enough to kill them. Mahāviṣṇu instantly raised his thighs which were enlarged to a great extent over the water as solid earth standing which the back of the ocean enlarged the Kosāmbhara the extent of a thousand yojanas. But Mahāviṣṇu enlarged his thighs further, caught hold of Madhu and Kaitabha, laid them on his thighs and cut off their heads with his discus. All the surface of the sea was covered with the medas (shell) of these Asuras. This medas of Madhu and Kaitabha collected itself into a lump and became the earth. So the earth got the name “Medina”. As the earth was the last of the Asuras it was not fit for food. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 1).

6) The tale of Madhu-Kaitabhas. A horrible son named Dhundhu was born to Madhu-Kaitabhas. He lived under the sand in a wilderness called Ujjvalakam. A King of the Iksvaku family named Kausalyaguru killed Dhanabali. King Kausalyaguru got the name Dhanabhara. See under Dhanabali. (Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapter 202). (Kuara and Atikaya are the rebirths of Madhu and Kaivalbha. See under Atikaya).

KAIVAVA. Another name of Ulikha, the son of Satuni.

KAIVAVA (M). A country in ancient Bharata. Mention is made about this country in Mahabharata, Bhuuma Parva, Chapter 18, Sambha 13).

KĀKĀ. A son of Kumar (Bhagavata, 9th Skandha).

KAKAM. A town in ancient India. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 64, contains a reference to this).

KAKI I. Original mother of the crows. (See under CRW).

KAKI II. One of the seven mothers who suckled Sattadharmaya at his birth. The seven mothers were—Kāki, Halma, Brinkmā, Malī, Pañalī, Aīrī, and Minā. (M.B. Aranya Parva, Chapter 228 Verse 10).

KAKA (CROW).

1) Origin—Kakava was the son of M. gover, who was the master of Kākathya’s wife Tānāśa. Kākathya’s daughters like Kāki, Sānie, Dāliki, Gedulkā, Sakti, and Grīva. From Kāki were born the crows in the world. (Agni Purāna, Chapter 19).

2) Crow—the symbol of sun. There is a reference in Siva Purāna to this. Long ago the King of Kāki had a daughter named Kākavati. Even in her youth, she received the name of Pānchapākārā mantra. After that, she was married by Dārakha, King of Mathura, who was a warrior. When he attacked Kākathya who was a holy woman, he experienced unbearable heat. Kākavati said that it was because of the King’s sin. So she took Dārakha to the sage Garga, who purified Dārakha with his mantras (incantations) and made him stand in water. At once the King’s sin came out of his body in the shape of crows. Some of them flew away. Many of them fell down with their wings burnt. Seeing this, the sage Garga said that all those crows were the volume of sun accumulated in the course of the immovable births through which he had passed. (Siva Purāna, Pānchākārā Mahāmya).

3) The Crow and Rice-offerings. In Utara Ramayana there is a story about the crow’s right to the offering of rice to Pāris. Once a King named Marutu performed a Mahavesvarta sattrī. Indra and other gods attended the sattrī. Hearing about this, Rāvana came that way. The frightened gods fled away assuming the forms of different birds. Yama escaped in the form of a crow. From that time, Yama was pleased with crows. He gave a blessing that in future, when human beings worship the gods by offering rice to them, the crows will have the right to eat that rice. Thus the right of the cows to eat offerings of rice, originated from that time. (Utarka Ramayana).

KAKSA. A place of habitation of ancient Bharata. (Stūka 49, Chapter 9, Bhuuma Parva).

KASKA. A serpent born of the family of Vāsuki. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya (Stūka 6, Chapter 57, Adi Parva).

KAKSENA I.

1) General information. (i) A King who was the grandson of Avikait and son of Pariksit. For genealogy see Pariksit.

(ii) Ugrasena, Citrasena, Indrasena, Susepa, and Bhinasena were his brothers. (Chapter 94, Adi Parva).

2) Other details.

(i) Kakasena was a member of the court of Yama. (Chapter 8, Sabha Parva).

(ii) Kakasena was looked upon as one among the loyal souls, like Śibi, Pratardana, Raudhata, Ambasena, Janamejaya, Varādharhi, Paratarama, Sītā Rāma, Karandhama and Mitrāsaha who had attained salvation by their charity and righteousness. Mahabharata states that Kakasena was a saintly man who attained salvation by presenting gifts to the great Vaiśāgha. (Stūka 14, Chapter 137, Anusasan Parva).

KAKSENA II. There was another King called Kakasena in the court of Dharmastra. (Stūka 22, Chapter 4, Sabha Parva).

KAKISENASTRAMA. An Aśrama situated on the top of the mountain, Asita. Perhaps this was constructed by Kakasena. (Stūka 12, Chapter 89, Vana Parva).

KAKSEYU (KṚŚEYU). Son of Raudraśava born of a nymph called Mālākṣēti. He had nine brothers, namely KV, Samanvat, Komoy, Cīrēya, Sīrās, Īrēya, Dharmaney, Samnīteya, Rīteya, and Mātiyā. For genealogy see under ‘Puruśavāṁa’. (Stūka 10, Chapter 94, Adi Parva).

KAKSVIN I. This was a Rśi well praised in the Rgveda.

1) Birth. King Kaliṅga did not have children for a long time. The King therefore requested the sage Dīghatamas (Gautama) to get a son for him by his queen. The sage consented. But the queen did not like to sleep with the old sage. She therefore requested her servant maid, Usī, to lie with the sage. Kakṣīvān was the son born to Dīghatamas of Usī. (Stūka 125, Anuvāka 16, Māṇḍala 1, Rgveda).

2) Other details.

(i) He was of the family of Angiras and he lived in a hermitage in the east. (Chapter 206, Sānti Parva, and Chapter 135, Anuśasana Parva).

(ii) He praised Visnu by reciting the Rśis with deep concentration and acquired many virtues. (Chapter 292, Sānti Parva).

(iii) Mahabharata states that Kakṣīvān was the preceptor of Indra and also the creator of the world with Rudraśeṣa (majesty equal to that of Śiva). Yavakti, Kālīhiya, Avīśavas, Parīvās, Kakṣīvān, Angiras and Kevala are seven Barhiṣads (a set of men born of Brahma) who are also gurus of Indra living in the east. (Chapter 150, Anuśasana Parva).

(iv) Kakṣīvān was famous among the Yajayans. (Stūka 18, Anuvāka 5, Māṇḍala 1, Rgveda).

(v) To test the strength of Kakṣīvān he was once given a hundred pitchers of liquor by the Aśvinis. (Stūka 116, Anuvāka 17, Māṇḍala 1, Rgveda).

(vi) Kakṣīvān who was returning home from the Aśrama of the preceptor after completing his education spent one night at a place on the way. In the morning when he awoke he saw Svanyaya son of King Bhāva- vavaya before him. The beautiful boy had strayed to that place by accident while playing with his friends nearby. Kakṣīvān was attracted by the enchanting features of the boy and decided to make him the husband of his daughter. Svanyaya on knowing the details regarding Kāśīvān took him to his father’s palace and the King received the sage with respect and gave him many presents. (Sūkta 120, Anvāṭaka 16, Mandala 1, Rgveda).

Kāśīvān II. A King of ancient India. He was the father of Brhadra, wife of Rṣiśāvā. (Sūkta 17, Chapter 120, Adi Parva).

Kāśīvān. A son of Mahāraja Gautama. Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 5 states that at the time when Gautama was living in Gīrīvraja, he had connived with a Śūdra woman of Uttāra land and as a result of it Kāśīvān was born to her. This Gautama was not the husband of Ahalyā.

Kāśīvān had a son named Čandakaśītaka and two daughters named Brhadra and Ghoṣa. Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 17 states that Kāśīvān nourished in Yudhikraṇa’s assembly. Kāśīvān was a Śūdraka and named Ghoṣa, who was the daughter of the sage Kāśīvān. As she was suffering from the disease of leprosy, no one was prepared to marry her. She composed a mantra in praise of the Aśvinidevas. They cured her of her disease.

After that she got married. Besides Ghoṣa, Kāśīvān had another daughter named Brhadra (See under Kāśīvān).

Kākutṣṭha. A son of Śārāda, a King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was the father of Anena. (See under Kākutṣṭha).

Kākutṣṭha. Sri Rama got the name Kākutṣṭha because he was born in the dynasty of Kākutṣṭha. (See under Kākutṣṭha).

Kālα I. (YAMA). The god of Death. When the life span of each living being allotted by Brahmā is at an end, Yama sends his agents and takes the soul to Yamanpur (the city of Yama). From there, the holy souls are sent to Vaikūthamsa (Heaven, the abode of Visṣṇu) and the sinful souls to Hell.

1) Genealogy and birth of Yama From Mahāviśvau were descended in the following order—Brahmā, Marici, Kārtikeya, Saṃjñā, Yama (Kalā). Yama married Saṃjñā, daughter of Visvakarma. They had three children, Manu, Yama and Yatsi. Of them, Yama has the task of taking away the life of those whose life-span is at an end. Once Saṃjñā who was unable to bear the dazzling brilliance of Saṃjñā, ordered her maid Chīhāyā to attend on him and went to the forest for performing penance. Mistaking her for his wife Saṃjñā, Śrīvaigot her third sons Saṃjñā, Saṃjñā, and Tapaśi. Once Chīhāyā cursed Yama for disobeying the order. When Śrīvaigot her third sons Saṃjñā, she was not Saṃjñā. After that the Avanikumāras, Revanta and Bhāyā were born to Saṃjñā and Saṃjñā. Thus Visnu Purāṇa, Part III, Chapter 2 says that Yama was the brother of Manu, Yami, the Avanikumāras, Tapati, Saṃjñā, and Bhāyā. Yama’s sister Bhāyā was married by the Avatā, Hett. Saṃjñā was the eldest daughter of Yama. Anga married her. The famous King Vena was her son. (Visnu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 13).

2) Yama is a Dīkパāloka. Once Kubera offered penance to Brahmā for ten thousand years in water, head downwards and in the middle of Pathcdfni. Brahmā who was pleased, appeared before him and Kubera prayed to him that he should be made one of the Lokapāla. Auming Brahmā ordered that therefrom, Indra should rule in the East, Yama in the South, Varuna in the West and Kubera in the North. Yama’s city is called Sanyamini. (Uttara Ramāyaṇa).

3) Curse on Yama. Yama was once cursed by the sage Ani Māndavya. It was as a result of it that Yama was born as Visūra. (For details see under Aupamāndavya).

4) Bena becomes Nīva. Saṃjñā, after the Yama receded after his forest life became king of Ayodhya. He ruled over

1. It is also stated elsewhere that Kāśīvān was the son of Dirghatamas the father of Gautama. See under Dirghatamas.
2. Kāla and Dharma are not the same person. See under Dharma.
the country for 11,000 years. Then it was time to recall Mahāviṣṇu who had incarnated as Śrī Rāma, to Vaikuntha. Brahmā sent Yama to the earth to bring back Śrī Rāma. Yama who assumed the guise of a young Mahārāja, went to Ayodhya and visited Śrī Rāma. He said that he was the disciple of the sage Asitvāla and had come to tell him a secret. So Lakṣmana was posted at the entrance to prevent anyone from entering the room. It was announced that anyone who tried to enter would be slaughtered. After the while, Śrī Rāma and Yama were having their secret talk, Durvāsas, the sage, who was hungry at this fast of 1,000 years, arrived at the door, asking for food. Lakṣmana told him humbly that he could not be allowed to enter just then. Durvāsas, who became furious, was about to curse the whole race of kings. So Lakṣmana cried the room and interred Śrī Rāma of the arrival of Durvāsas. At the same time, in fulfillment of the order, he was ready to be slaughtered. Vasūga suggested that it would be enough if Lakṣmana was banished from the palace. Accordingly he was expelled and he went and drowned himself in the depths of the river Sarayū. Śrī Rāma who was broken-hearted at this separation from Lakṣmana, came to the river and drowned himself there shortly after. Yama then took their souls to Vaikuntha. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

5) Yama became crow. In Uttara Rāmāyaṇa there is a story that at Marutā's Yaga, Yama who was frightened at the sight of Rāvana, escaped in the form of a crow. (For details, see under Crow).

6) An Aër without Yama. In the Purāṇas there are references to Yama without Yama. (See under Aër).

(1) One such period was in Kratuyāga. At that time there was no death on the earth because overcrowded with living beings Unable to bear their weight, the earth sank down to a depth of 100 yojana. The goddess of Earth offered tearful prayers to Mahāviṣṇu, who incarnated as Varāha (pig) and lifted up the earth 100 yojana. (See under Varāha, Chapter 142).

(2) Where Mārkandeya recited the age of sixteen, Yama went to him to take away his life. Mārkandeya hid himself behind the idol of Śiva. Yama threw his arrow at him but it fell round Śiva's neck. Śiva opened his third eye and glared at Yama who was burnt to ashes in its fire. (See under Mārkandeya).

7) Yama returned Sattāvar's Life. (See under Sattāvara).

8) Yama and King Naga. See under Naga.

9) Yama and King Naga. See under Naga.

10) Yama and Nāgarṣe. (Yamaārtha). This is the city of Yama. Yama is thousand yojanās in extent. There is an entrance on each of the four sides. On one side of the city stands Cīrāgūpta's mansion. TheFort surrounding the city is made of iron. There are a hundred streets in Yamaārtha. They are all decorated with banyans and festoons. There is a group of people in Cīrāgūpta's mansion. They are engaged in calculating the livespans of living beings. They take into account the vices and virtues of human beings. To the south of Cīrāgūpta's residence is situated "Jayamandara" (the abode of diseases). Adjacent to it are the abodes of all kinds of diseases, each disease having its own abode. Yama's abode is situated at a distance of twenty yojanās from the abode of Cīrāgūpta. It has an area of two thousand yojanās and a height of fifty yojanās. It is supported by one thousand columns. On one side of it there is an extensive assembly hall. It is here that those who have led virtuous lives in the world, find their abode after death. They lead a life of eternal heavenly bliss there. (Garuda Purāṇa, Chapter 14).

11) Nāraka (Hell). There is a world called Pitīlokā in the middle of the three worlds, on their southern side below the earth and above the Atāla loka. The Agulīvātas and other pits stay there in meditative trance for securing prosperity to those who come to pitīlokā. Yama is the ruler of pitīlokā. Since he is accursed in imparting justice, Yama is also called Yamanadhara. He administers justice with an even hand to all living beings brought there by his agents, according to their virtues and vices during their earthly lives. He has power to assess the virtues and vices of people and to assign suitable punishments to them, but not to alter the laws or methods of punishment. Sinners are sent to the different Narakas by Yamanadhara according to the nature and seriousness of their sins. The Purāṇas refer to twentyeighty Narakas in all. They are:

(1) Tamīsran. Those who rob others of their wealth, wives, children etc., are bound with ropes by Yama's servants and cast into the Narakas known as Tamīsran. There, they are given sound beating until they faint. Then they recover their senses and the agents of justice who those who try to escape are bound hand and foot and pushed again into this hell. This is repeated as long as Fate has ordained.

(2) Andhitāntasram. This hell is intended for the wife who takes food after deceiving the husband or the husband who takes food after deceiving his wife. The punishment there is: they are beaten as that of Tamīsran except the beating. But the excruciating pain suffered by the victims on being tied fast with Yama's rope by his servants, makes them fall down senseless.

(3) Rauravam. This is the hell into which those who have persecuted other living beings are cast. Those who seize and enjoy another man's property or resources, also come under 'Persecution'. When such people are thrown into this hell, they have part of their body burned or cheated while on earth, assume the shape of "rūru" and torment them severely. "Rūru" is a kind of dreadful serpent. This hell is known as "Rauravam" because of the abundance of rūrus there.

(4) Mahātevamsram. Here also there are rūru serpents. Only they are of a fiercer type. Those who deny the legitimate heirs, their inheritance and possess and enjoy others' property, are squeezed to death by these terrible serpents coiling round them.

(5) Kumbhīṭakam. This is the hell for the punishment of those who kill and eat birds and animals. Here, oil is kept boiled in huge vessels. Yama's servants plunge sinners into this oil. The period of their torture extends to as many years as there was hair on the bodies of the birds or animals which they killed and ate.

(6) Kālasītrām (Yamastāra). This hell is terribly hot. It is here that those who do not respect their father, mother, elders, etc. are cast. They rush about in the unbearable heat of this hell and drop down exhausted, from time to time.

(7) Assīpārum. This is the hell in which those sinners who abandon dharma (one's own duty) and accept Purushārthas (other's duty) are flung by Yama's servants with whips made of asipattā (sharp-edged sword-shaped leaves). When they run about under the flaying they trip over stones and thorns and fall on their faces. Then they are stabbed with knives made of aspatra. They drop down unconscious and when they recover, the same process is repeated.

(8) Sākrasākṣi. Kings who neglect their duties and oppress their subjects by misuse, are punished in this hell. They are crushed to a pulp by beating until they fall down unconscious and when they recover, they are again subjected to the same treatment.

(9) Andhakāpa. This is the hell for punishing those who oppress Brāhmaṇas, gods and the poor. In this Kūpaka (well), there are wild beasts like tiger, bear etc., carnivorous birds like eagle, kite etc., venomous creatures like snakes and scorpions and insects like bugs, mosquitoes etc. The sinners have to endure the constant attacks of these creatures, until the expiry of the period of their punishment.

(10) Krmabhimana (Food for worms). Depraved Brāhmaṇas who take their food without worshipping gods and honouring guests, are thrown into this “Krmabhimana” Narakā which is one lakh yojanas in extent. Worms, insects and serpents sting them and eat them up. Once their bodies are completely eaten up by these creatures, they are provided with new bodies, which are also eaten up in the above manner. They have to continue so on in this manner, till the end of their term of punishment.

(11) Taipāmāsa. Those who plunder or steal other people’s gold, jewels, ornaments or money are cast into the furnaces of this Narakā, which is built of iron and always remains red hot with blazing fire.

(12) Sāhmātī. This Narakā is intended for men and women who have committed adultery. A figure made of iron, heated red-hot is placed there. The victim is urged to embrace it. Yama’s servants fling the victim from behind.

(13) Vījārakṣakādālata. This Narakā is for the punishment of those who have unnatural intercourse with cows and other animals. Here, the guilty people are made to embrace iron images full of diamond needles.

(14) Vaitarani. This is the Narakā for Kings who have violated all ordinances of Śastras and for adulterers. It is the most terrible place of punishment. Vaitarani is a river filled with human excreta, urine, blood, hair, bones, nails, flesh, fat and all kinds of dirty substances. There are various kinds of fierce beasts in it. Those who are cast into it are attacked and maimed by these creatures from all sides. The sinners have to spend the term of their punishment, feeding upon the contents of this river.

(15) Piplāka. This is a well, filled with excreta, urine, blood, phlegm etc. Brāhmaṇas and others who have intercourse with women of low caste against customs, ordinances etc. vagabonds who wander about irresponsibly like animals and birds and other such sinners are cast into this Narakā.

(16) Prāmpāla. This Narakā is for the punishment of Brāhmaṇas who keep dogs, asses and other mean animals and constantly hunt and kill animals for food. Here the servants of Yama gather round the sinners and cut them limb by limb with their arrows and subject them to constant insult.

(17) Vīśāna. This Narakā is for the torture of those who perform Yaga by killing cows to display their wealth and splendour. They will have to remain there during the whole term of their punishment under the constant flogging of Yama’s servants.

(18) Lālībhākṣa. This is the Narakā for lustful people. The lascivious fellow who makes his wife swallow semen, is cast into this hell. Lālībhākṣa is a sea of semen. The sinner lies in it feeding upon semen alone.

(19) Śrāmeyaśa. Those guilty of unseemly acts like incendiariusm, poisening food, mass slaughter, running the country, etc. are cast into the Narakā called Śrāmeyaśa. There, nothing but the flesh of dogs is available for food. There are 500 dogs in that Narakā and all of them are as fierce as leopards. They attack the sinners who come there from all sides and tear their flesh from their bodies with their teeth.

(20) Aśvag. This Narakā is for those guilty of bearing false witness, false swearing or assuming false names. They are hurled into Aśvag from a mountain which is 100 yojanas in height. The whole region of Aśvag is always whacked like an ocean with turbulent waves. As soon as the sinners fall into it, they are utterly smashed into dust. They are again restored to life and the punishment is repeated.

(21) Ayuhāpa. Those who belong to the first three castes viz. Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas and Vaiśyas who indulge in drinking soma, sūva etc. are bound and thrown into this hell. They are forced to drink melted iron in liquid form.

(22) Kshāramakā. Braggarts and those who insult people of noble birth are cast into this hell. Here, Yama’s servants keep the sinners upside down and torture them in various ways.

(23) Rākṣahsāka. This Narakā is for the punishment of meat-eaters. There are separate compartments in this hell for those who perform human sacrifice, eat human flesh or the flesh of other creatures. All the living beings they had killed before, would have arrived here in advance. They would all join together in attacking, biting and mauling these sinners. Their shrieks and complaints would be of no avail there.

(24) Cālāptapā. People who take the life of others who have done no harm to them, by deceiving them or by treachery, with weapons like the trident, are thrown into the “Cālāptapā” hell. Yama’s servants fix each of the sinners of the above class, on the top of a trident. They are forced to spend the whole term of their punishment in that position, suffering intense thirst and hunger, enduring all the tortures inflicted on them by Yama’s servants.

(25) Dāndikā. Sinners who persecute fellow creatures like venomous serpents are cast into this Narakā. There are many wild beasts and many hooded serpents here. They eat alive, the sinners who fall into this hell.

(26) Aṣṭara. This hell is for those who persecute the creatures living on mountain-peaks, dense forests, hollow trunks of trees, etc. It resembles mountains, caves, forests etc. After throwing them into this hell the sinners are tormented with fire, snakes, poison and weapons, just as they had tormented other creatures, while on earth.

(27) Pāṣāntapā. One who denies food to a person who happens to come at meal time and abuses him, is thrown into this Narakā. The moment he falls into it, his eyes are put out by being pierced with the breaks of cruel birds like the crow, eagle etc. It is the most painful experience for them.
(26) Suddharma: Proud and miserly people who refuse to spend money even for the bare necessities of life, find their place in this hell. Those who do not repay the money they have borrowed, will also be cast into this hell. Here, their bodies will be continually picked and propped with needles. (Devi Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha; Vismi Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 6).

12) Mahāsiṣā (vandana) to invoke Yama.

"Mahāsiṣā Yaṃniṣṭhaṃ
duniyaḥsiṣ namah bala/ulasa tvani daksinātītāram Vaiṣṇava yamah su te". //

After invoking Yama with this mantra, one should worship the mantra "Vaiṣṇavata Samanūśānam". (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 96).

(3) Tana Defeated by Rāvana. Once the sage Nārada went to Rāvana and expatiated on the glory and splendour of Yama. Immediately Rāvana set out to Samyamanī with the intention of subduing Yama. Accepting Rāvana’s challenge, Yama came out. After a terrible battle between them, which lasted for seven days neither of them was able to defeat the other. Both of them had received Brahmā's boon. In the night of the seventh day, Yama rushed forth with his staff to beat Rāvana to death. Then Rāvana took his Brahmā's boon. At that critical moment, Brahmā came to the battlefield and persuaded Yama to withdraw from the fight. Yama retreated to his city and closed the gate. Rāvana went back with a triumphant shout. (Uttara Rāmacaritāmāṇika).

14) Other details concerning Yama.

(i) Yama attended Drupāda's Svayamvarī. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 186, Verse 6).

(ii) It was Yama who performed "Śāmitra" (killing of animals) at the yāga done by devas in the Naimisāranya. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 196, Verse 1).

(iii) In the fight between Indra and Arjuna in Khañçavadvāra, Yama joined the side of Indra. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 226, Verse 32).

(ix) Once in a thousand years, Yama comes to Bindusarlovara and performs a yāga. (M.B. Sañcī Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 15).

(v) Yama is a member of Brahmā's assembly (M.B. Sañcī Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 51).

(vi) When Arjuna performed tapas and received Pañcapatāsa from Śiva, Yama was pleased and presented Dandāstra to Arjuna (M.B. Yana Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 25).

(vii) Yama was one of the devas who tested and then blessed Nala who went to Damayanti's Svayamvarī. (See under NALAJ).

(viii) Indra made Yama, the king of Pitrs. (M.B. Udyyoga Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 14).

(ix) Mahāsiṣā, Droṇa Parva. Chapter 69, Verse 26 says that when Deva milked Bhūmidevi, Yama took the form of a calf. (See under Vena).

(x) In Tripuradāhāna (burning of Tripura) Yama remained in Sālavāhu (the arrow of Śiva. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 77. See also under TRIPURA).

(xi) Yama presented two warriors, Unmatha and Pranāhita to god Skanda. (M.B. Śāliya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 30).

(xii) Once Yama gave advice to the sage Gautama on the subject of Dharma. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 192).

(xiii) Yama once gave a boon to a Brāhmaṇa named Jāpaka. (See under JĀPAKA. M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 199).

(xiv) Once Mahāsiṣa taught Yama, Śiva-Sahasrānāma. Yama taught it to Nāciketa. (See under ŚIVA and NĀCIKETA. Also M.B. Amāśāsana Parva, Chapter 17).

(xv) Yama sent his special agent to bring a Brāhmaṇa named Sārni. (See under SĀRNI. Also M.B. Amāśāsana Parva, Chapter 68).

(xvi) Yama once lectured on the efficacy of giving "ulā" (gingelly seed) "jāla" (water) and anna (rice) to a Brāhmaṇa. (M.B. Amāśāsana Parva, Chapter 68).

(xvii) Yama once explained the secrets of Dharma. (M.B. Amāśāsana Parva, Chapter 130).

(xviii) Yama used to worship Śiva on the mountain Munjavān. (M.B. Avadhūta Parva, Chapter 8).

(xix) Dhumomū is the name of Yama’s wife. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 9).

(xx) There is a story in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva about the condition of the world in the absence of Yama. Once Yama started a prolonged yāga at Naimisāranya. At that time there was no death in the world. All living beings continued to live indefinitely. The Devas all joined together and approached Yama with a request to solve the problem. Yama concluded his yāga and resumed his duties and death came to the world again. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 196).

KALĀ II. A Maharṣi. Mahābhārata, Śabha Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 14, refers to this sage as offering worship to Indra, in Indra's assembly.

KALĀ. A daughter of Dakṣaprajāpāti. (See under KALĪKĀ. KALĀ. See under the word Kālamāṇa.

KALĀ (S) A group of Mānes. This group lives in the Brāhmaṇabhāgā. (Chapter 11, Śanti Parva).

KALĀBADHIKA. An adviser of Mahāsiṣā. Cīkura was his war-minister, Tāmā his finance minister, Asīkona, Prime Minister, and Udāka, Chief of the army. Kālābanḍhaka, Bākula and Trīnetra were the advisers of Mahāsiṣā. (Devi Bhāgavata 5th Skandha).

KALABHĪTI. A devotee of Śiva. As his father Māṇḍū performed penance for the sake of a son for a thousand years his wife conceived, but did not deliver. Māṇḍū asked the child in his mother’s womb why he did not come out to which the latter replied that he did not come out as he feared the Aśura called Kālamāṛga. (As the child feared Kālamāṛga it came to be called Kālabhīti). As advised by Śiva, Māṇḍū created in the child knowledge about dharma, renunciation etc. and thus made him conscious about higher knowledge. The child came out of the mother’s womb. In due course of time Kālabhīti took to the worship of Śiva, who blessed him as follows: “Since you have outlived Kālamāṛga, in future you will become famous as Mahākāla.” (Skanda Purāṇa).

KALĀBRĀHMAṆA. A brahmin, who defeated Kāla. A great eloquence that emanated from his head two hundred years after his continuous Japa (chanting of mantra) blocked the passage of sky-walkers (Devas) and spread to the three worlds. When Brahmā and others asked him to choose any boon, he said that he wanted nothing but chanting Lord's name and mantras. Again, Brahmanes in the brahmin’s choosing some boon or other, and then he removed himself to the northern plains of the Hindustan, where also he continued chanting mantras. There too his effulgence became so powerful that Indra deputed celestial women to obstruct his Japa, but they could do nothing in the matter. Then Indra deputed Kāla to end the brahmin’s life, but he failed in the attempt. Ultimately King Ikṣvaku came to the brahmin and asked for half the power he had earned by his tapas, which the brahmin readily granted. And, Ikṣvaku became famous all over the world. (Kathāsaritsagara, Sūrya-prabhāśālakāra).

KĀLĀDA. An urban region in ancient India. (Bṛāhmaṇa Parva, Chapter 9).

KĀLADANTA (KĀLADANTA). A serpent born in Vatsa’s dynasty. It was burnt to death at the serpent-yea∫a of Jamanejaya. (Adi Parva, Chapter 57).

KĀLADVĪJA. A serpent, which attained salvation. The story of this nāga, which was at first a Śūdra, is told in chapter 16 of the Padma Purāṇa as follows:—

Once upon a time there lived in Kararavapura a very selfish Śūdra called Kāladvīja, who was sentenced by Kāla to live in hell for four Manvantaras. After living in hell the whole of the period, he was born as a nāga and suffered much in the crevices of a stone. While living thus, an Āśvin pārīmāna (Full moon day in the month of Āśvina) it threw out some fried pastry and Kauśi (shells) which fell before Viṣṇu. At this the Lord redeemed it from all its sins, and on its death, in due course, the attendants of Viṣṇu took him in a divine chariot to the Lord.

KĀLAGHĀṬA. A brahmin scholar in the Vedas. He was a member of the assembly at the serpent-yea∫a conducted by Jamanejaya. (Adi Parva, Chapter 58).

KĀLAHĀ. Wife of a brahman named Bhīkaus who was an inhabitant of the city of Saurāstra. This woman used to do only just the opposite of what her husband asked her to do, and so Bhīkaus kept it a rule to ask her to do the opposite of what he wanted her to do. But one day he asked her to float the śārddha pinda in the river Gaṅga, and she threw it in Saucakāṭa. As a result of that, she was born in a demoniac womb. But Dharmadatta got her purified by the Dvādayakṣa mantra and giving her half the virtue accrued by him. By virtue of this they were born as Daśaratha and Kausalyā. (Ananda Rāmāyaṇa, Sārakānda, Uttara-khaṇḍa,Padma Purāṇa). See also under Dharmadatta.

KĀLĀJAYA(S). A synonym of the Kālākeya. (See under Kālākeya).

KĀLĀ (KĀLĪKĀ). One of the daughters of Dakṣa. Kaśyapa married her. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 183 states that Kālākeya and Narakāsura were born to Kālā by Kaśyapa. (Vaiśālīkī Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kāṇḍa, Chapter 14). In Mahābhārata Aranyā Parva, Chapter 174 we find that Kālāke once received from Brahman, a boon that her sons would never be destroyed.

KĀLĀKA. An Asura born to Kālīkā by Kaśyapa. (Vaiśālīkī Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kāṇḍa, Chapter 14).

KĀLĀKĀSA. An Asura. He was killed by Gāruḍa. (M.B. Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 105).

KĀLĀKĀMUKHA (KĀLĀKĀMUKHA). A Rākṣasa. He was the brother of Prahlāda, Kaśyapa’s minister. (For Genealogy, see under Prahlāda). During Śrī Rāma’s life in the forest Kālākāmukha was also among Kīrtā, Dūṣaṇa and others. The other eleven members of that group were—Śyemaṇī, Prabhurāva, Yajñihātra, Vānapu, Dūṣaṇa, Karavīkṣa, Prabha, Mehamgad, Mahamāl, Sunyata and Rudhurasana. (Vaiśālīkī Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kāṇḍa, 26th Sarga).

KĀLĀKANYĀ. Daughter of Kāla (Yana). (See under Purāṇa).

KĀLĀKAVRĪṢIYA. An ancient Saint. During the reign of the King Kṣemadāsin in the country of Kosala, his subjects were put to great sufferings under the misrule and corruption of his ministers. At that time, Kālākāvyrika who was a friend of Kṣemadāsin and a reputed sage, came to Kosala with a caged crow. The sage went about the country claiming to know Kāla-vrīṣa (Vṛśa vrīṣa) by which a crow could be made to tell past events. Actually, the sage was going round the country in order to gather first-hand information about the corrupt practices of the King’s men. After acquiring knowledge of the exact state of affairs in the country, Kālākāvyrika reached the palace. Under the cloak of the crow’s words he exposed some of the improprieties of the King’s Minister. Naturally, the Minister was furious and by his secret instructions his servants shot the crow to death that same night. On the next day, the sage himself went to the King and convinced him of the Minister’s guilt. The King accepted the sage’s suggestions and brought about a thorough overhaul of the administration by punishing or dismissing the culprits. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 82).

In Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 106 we find that this sage once advised Durgadā in making a treaty with King Kṣemadāsin. Kālākāvyrika was a sage who flourished in India’s assembly. (M.B. Sālā Parva, Chapter 7).

KĀLĀKETU. A renowned Asura Emperor who was the son of Duru, the wife of Kaśyapa. Once he seduced Ekavālī, the wife of Ekavīra and went to Pātāla (underworld). Ekavīra fought a fierce battle with Kālāketu and recovered Ekavālī. (See under Ekavīra).

KĀLĀKEYA(S). (KĀLĀKĀNIJAS).

1) Birth. The Auras who were born to Kāla (Kālīga) by Kaśyapa Prujāpati, the son of Mārici and Brahman’s grandson.

2) General. “Kālākeya” is not the proper name of a particular Asura. The sons of Kāla (Kālīga) are all collectively called Kālākeyas. They number about 60,000 Sometimes they fought under the leadership of Vṛṣaṅara and at other times under other Asura leaders.

3) Agastya and the Kālākeyas. Once the Kālākeyas started a campaign of hatred against Brahmanas. At nightfall they used to enter Brahmanas premises and commit murders, disturb their yāga, etc. The Brahmanas complained to the sage Agastya. Agastya set out to capture the Kālākeyas, who were alarmed and hid themselves in the ocean. Agastya dried up the ocean by drinking it. But some of the Kālākeyas escaped and fled to Pātāla. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 101).
4) Ayama and the Kalakeyas.

The headquarters of the Asuras was Hiranyapura, situated near Devakuta. Once they called the Asuras "Nivāsaka-vacana" and launched an attack on Devakuta. Indra sent his charioteer Mātali and brought Arjuna to Devakuta. Arjuna defeated the Nivāsaka-vacana and Kalakeyas in battle. A large number of Kalakeyas were killed in the battle. (M.B. Vanā Parva Chapters 172-175).

KALAKIRTI. A Kṣatrīya King, Mahishāsura, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67 says that this King was born from the limb of Suparna, the younger brother of the Asura, Mayūra.

KALAKOTI. A sacred place in Naimiśāranya, (M.B. Vanā Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 3).

KALAKUTA. The uninvited guests that came up during the dancing of Milk. Śiva swallowed them and retained it in his throat, and so he came to be called Nilakantha.

"And Kalakūtha arose like fire burning all the worlds. The smell of it went through three worlds 8,000 priestly zones. At the request of Brahmā Śiva swallowed the poison to save the world from absolute destruction. And he (Śiva) retained it in his throat." (Ādi Parva. Chapter 10)

KALAMANA. (Calculating time). In ancient days in India time was calculated in the following manner.

- Time taken (needed) to pierce a leaf with a needle — Alpakāla
- 30 Alpakālas — 1 Truti
- 30 Trutis — 1 Kali
- 30 Kalis — 1 Kāthā
- 30 Kāthās — 1 Nimiṣa (matra)
- 4 Nimiṣas — 1 Ganiṭa
- 10 Ganiṭas — 1 Netuvipuru (time for a deep sigh)
- 6 Netuvipurus — 1 Viśālākāra
- 6 Viśālākāras — 1 Gāthākāra
- 60 Gāthākāras — 1 Day (Ahoraṇa)
- 15 Ahoraṇas — 1 Pāka (Furtīght)
- 2 Pākas — 1 Candra-mahā (A day for the Pitru)
- 2 Mahās (months) — 1 Ritu.
- 6 Rutis — 1 year (A day for the Devas)

| 300 Y. a. (Muni) | 1 Divyavarsa (Divine year) |
| 4800 Divyavarsas | 1 Kriyavāra |
| 3600 Kriyavāras | 1 Tretāyuga |
| 2400 Tretāyavarsas | 1 Dvāpara-yugas |
| 1200 Dvāpara-yavarsas | 1 Kaliyuga |
| 720 Kaliyavarsas | 1 Ārya-yuga |
| 72 Āryavarsas | 1 Manvantara |
| 14 Manvantaras | 1 Prajāya (Kalpa) |
| 1 Prajāya | Brahmapa’s one day |

(Devī Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha)

The ‘Kalamana’ according to the Viṣṇu Purāṇa differs in certain respects from the calculations given above. Chapter 3, Part 1 of Viṣṇu Purāṇa says:

Fifteen Nimiṣas make one Kāthā. Thirty Kāthās make one Kali and thirty Kalis make one Mahārātra.

Thirty Mahāratas make one day (manī) and thirty such days, divided into two fortnightly forms a Māsa (month). Six months form an Ayavana; there are two ayanas called Daksinā and Uttarā. Daksināyana is night, and Uttarāyana is day for the Devas. 12,000 Divyavarsas—Devas varṣas—form a Caturyuga consisting of the Kṛta-Tretā-Dvāpara-Arya yugas. (Devī Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha). The period between Sandhyā and Sandhyāyana is called Kṛta yuga etc. One thousand Caturyugas form one day for Brahmā, and it (Brahmā’s one day) has 14 Manus. Again, Chapter 8, Part 2 of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa has the following to say about Kalamāna.

Fifteen nimiṣas make one Kāthā, thirty Kāthās one Kali, thirty Kalis one mukhā and thirty mukhras one day and night. Day is long or short according to the length or shortness of the parts of the day like morning, noon and evening. Despite the above variation evening or dusk time is always (2 nīzhikās) the same. The three mukhras from the sun’s ardhayodha (when half of the sun has risen) is called Pratādhikā, (morning) and it is 1/5th of day time. The three mukhras following are known as sānghava. Madhyāvama (noon) is the three mukhras after sānghava. The time before madhyāvama is apratāman (afternoon). Apratāman lasts for three mukhras. The time after this is dusk. Thus, a day-time of fifteen mukhras is divided into five parts of three mukhras each. On Viṣṇu day the day will have full fifteen mukhras. Then during Uttarāyana and Dakṣināyana the day will be longer or shorter. During Uttarāyana the day will be longer than night, and during Dakṣināyana vice versa. Viṣṇu occurs when the sun enters the Tūla (Libra) and Mesā (Aries) houses. Dakṣināyana is when the sun enters Cancer, and Uttarāyana when it enters Capricorn.

Fifteen days and nights constitute a Pāka (fortnight) and two Pākas one month. Two solar months constitute a Rū (season), three rūs one ayana and two ayanas one year. Since there are four kinds of months, i.e. Saura, Sāvana, Čandra and Nāgāṣṭra, years are considered to be of five different kinds. The first is called Saṁvatsara; the second parivarśa; the third ivāvatsara; the fourth, anvutsara and the fifth, vatsara. This period of five years is called a yuga. In a yuga of five years there are 60 saha months, 61 sīvana months, 62 Čandra months and 67 Nāgāṣṭra months. At the beginning of the sixth year the sun and moon meet in the same house and that period of five years also is called yuga. (Śrīdharāsan).
was called Yajñasena. (Kathāsaritsagāra, Kathāmukhā-Parvan)

KĀLANEMI III. A Rāksasa. During the Rāma-Rāvṇa war, when Laksmana swooned, Hanumān started for Drona mountain for medicine. Ravaṇa deputed Kālanemi to obstruct the path of Hanumān. Well acquainted with the trickeries of the Rāksasas Hanumān killed Kālanemi who appeared before him disguised as a sage. (Adhyātma Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kānda, Chapter 35).

KALANIRNAYA. (Calculating time). See under Kālanāma.

KALANJARAGIRI. A famous mountain at Medhāvika tūrtha. He who bathes in Vedīṭhara on this mountain will get the benefits of gifting away 1000 cows. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 29). Spread on the four sides of Mount Mahāmeru are twenty mountains. They are — Kuruṇga, Kajaṅga, Muniṇa, Vaiśampāyana, Simha, Trikūṭa, Śīla, Patanga, Rucaka, Nila, Nālaka, Śīvāsena, Kapiḷa, Sukaṭa, Vaiḍūrya, Giriṇa, Harasa, Rāvaṇa, Niga, Kālājāira and Nārada. (Devi Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

KĀLĀPA. A powerful sage of great majesty. Yuddhishṭhira worshipped this sage at the end of the Kājaṇeṇa-vayu (Chapter 45, Sālukī Parva).

KĀLĀPA. A great sage, who was a member of Yuddhishṭhira’s assembly. (Śāluka Parva, Chapter 4).

KALAPARVĀTA I. A mountain on the sea coast near Lankā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 277).

KALAPARVĀTA II. A mountain seen by Arjuna on his way to Śiva with Śri Kṛṣṇa during their dream-journey. (Drona Parva, Chapter 60).

KALAPATHA. A son of Vīvāmba. He was a scholar in philosophy and a Brahmāvāda. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4).

KALAPİNGA I. A holy place. (Śloka 43, Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva).

KALAPİNGA II. A kind of bird. See, under Kapiḷa.

KALAPRŚTHA. A serpent. It was with this serpent that the hair on the necks of horses attached to the chariot of Śiva at the burning of the Śiḍhupuras, was tied. (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 34).

KALARĀTI. The Devata presiding over the night on the eve of the death. The fierce aspect of the Devāti is described in the Mahābhārata as follows:—

Coal-black in colour, with swollen mouth and eyes and wearing red garlands and cloths—thus appeared the woman (Devāti) presiding over the death-nights. With the fierce cord in her hand she drags away the souls of the dead. (Saupitika Parva, Chapter 9).

KALASA. A serpent born of the family of Kaṭyāpa. (Śloka 13, Chapter 103, Udyoga Parva).

KALASAILA. A range of mountains in Utarākhaṇḍa in ancient India. (Vana Parva, Chapter 139).

KALASAPOTAKA. A serpent. (Śloka 7, Chapter 35, Adi Parva).

KALASI. A holy place. If one dips water from a pond in that place one will acquire the benefit of conducting an Agniṣṭoma Śacīnīt. (Śloka 80, Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

KALASODARA. A soldier of Skanda. (Śloka 72, Chapter 85, Śalya Parva).

KALASŪTRA. A hell. (See under Kāla).

KALATĪRTHA. A sacred place in Ayodhyā. A bath here is as good as making a gift of eleven cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 65).

KALAVYAKA. An urban region in ancient India. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9).

KALĀVATI I. A daughter of the King of Kāśī. This gem of a woman worshipped the sage Durvīṣa and became a saint by obtaining the Śiva Pancaśīkṣa (five letters pertaining to Śiva—Sīvīya namah). Afterwards Daśārha, King of Mathura, married her. The King felt very sad whenever he approached her and he questioned her about it. She said she had received the Pancaśīkṣa Mantra even from childhood and sitters would feel the heat if they touched her. The King was greatly disappointed and Kalāvatī took him to Sage Garga to redeem him from all his sins. The sage dipped the King in the river Kālindī and when the King rose up all his sins flew away from his body as birds. The King then embraced Kalāvatī and then felt her body very cool and pleasant. They got a son also. (Pancaśīkṣāmāhītmya, Śiva Purāṇa).

KALĀVATI I. Mother of Mrgāvati, a queen. Mrgāvati was the mother of Udayana. See under Mrgāvati.

KALĀVATI I. A nymph. See under Taṁbūbāraka ṛṣi.

KALAVĪGHA. A serpent born in the Vāsuki dynasty. It was burnt to ashes during the serpent yajña of Jana-meṇa. (Adi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 7).

KALAYAYANA. A powerful Asura born out of the effulgence of Gargacārya. He was killed by Śri Kṛṣṇa. (See under Kṛṣṇa).

KALEHKĀ. A female attendant of Skandadeva. (Śalukī Parva, Chapter 46).

KALBYA (S). A set of Asuras born to the great sage Kaṭyāpa of his wife Kāli. Some scholars hold the view that the Kālikeyas and the Kāleyas are one and the same. Kāleyas destroyed the Āśramas of sages like Vaṭīṣṭha, Cīvānaya and Bhāradvāja. (Vana Parva, Chapter 102). Devas killed some of the Kāleyas; the others fled away to Pālīṇa.

KALI I. Incarnation of sin, the Sin-god.

1) Birth. Kaṭyāpanaprajāpati, son of Brāhmaṇa, begot of his wife Muni sixteen sons and Kali was the fifteenth son. He was a deva-gandhārva. The other sons of Kaṭyāpa were—Bhīmaśena, Ugraśena, Suparna, Varuṇa, Dhrītarāṣṭra, Gopati, Suvarṇa, Cīvāra, Ayaparna, Prayuta, Vīṣṭa, Citrāra, Śīvāra, Pāncaśīkṣa and Nārada. (4-Ślokas from verse 49, Chapter 65, Adi Parva).

2) How Parīkṣit controlled Kali. When Śri Kṛṣṇa went to Vaikuṇṭha, the Pāṇḍavas entrusted the administration of the state to Parīkṣit, son of Abhīmanu and started for the Mahāprāśāna. King Parīkṣit was travelling the continent conquering places when he saw Kali in the form of a Śīdha Rākṣasa with blue towel and bull couple. Parīkṣit aimed an arrow at him and then Kali came and bowed down before the King. The King did not kill him. He let him go free but ordered him to go away from his state. Kali was nonplussed because all the land belonged to Parīkṣit and there was no place for him to go. So Kali begged of the King to give him some space to live. Parīkṣit then promised that Kali could live in the following five places: Gambling, Drinking, Woman, Murder and Gold. From that day onwards the free movements of Kali were thus restricted (Chapter 17, 1st Skandha, Bhāgavata).
5) Kali, Lord of Kaliyuga. There are four main Manvantaras during the life of Brahma. The life time of a Manvantara is a Manvantara. This present period is the seventh Manvantara. In each Manvantara there are four yugas, Krita, Tretā, Dvapara and Kali. Kṛtayuga consists of 17,280,000 years, Tretāyuga consists of 12,960,000 years, Dvaparayuga 9,648,000 years and Kaliyuga 4,320,000 years. The Christian era started in the Kali era 3102 and after another thirty years Kaliyuga will come to an end and the present universe will enter the eighth Manvantara. From the beginning of the Kaliyuga acts of a predominante and Kali, sin-god, will lord over the world.

Kali was born on the day Śrī Kṛṣṇa ascended heaven. When Bhagavatī Mākundī abandoned his body and went to his place in Vālkalīkṣa, Kali came into being binding all on earth. (Śloka 69, Chapter I, Bhāgavatī Mahātmya).

4) Kali and Nāla. Kali and Dvāpara were going to the Swayamvara of Damayantī when they met Indra and others returning from the Swayamvara. They told Kali and Dvāpara that Damayantī was married to Nāla. Kali and Dvāpara felt it an outrage that amayantī should be married to a man of the lowest class and not a diva. Kali decided that Nāla should be sent out of his country and that his matrimonial life made him unhappy. Dvāpara consented to his accomplishment in this attempt. Kali followed Nāla waiting for an opportunity to enter his body. One day, by an oversight Nāla, without doing the aśrama after passing urine, performed his sandhyāvandana. Taking advantage of this opportunity Kali entered Nāla's body and made Nāla challenge his brother to a game of dice putting that buckler as a wager. Nāla accepted the challenge. Nala wagered and lost all his movable and immovable possessions and went to the forest with Damayantī, Nāla, prompted by Kali, abandoned Damayantī in the forest and went his way. Damayantī implored Kali.

It was at this time that the great serpent Karṇaṇa was entraped in a wild fire. Nāla saved him from the fire but in return the cobra bit him turning Nāla into one of blue hue and said: "Oh Nāla, let Kali who cheated you be now made your body suffer with the poison I have injected into your body.

Nāla was a brother of Aśvadhā, the charioteer of Kṛṣṇa and brother of the courtesan of Dvāpara. When Kṛṣṇa entered the forest, he was met by Kali, who wanted to marry him. On this way Nāla taught Kṛṣṇa the science of Aṣvadhā and Kṛṣṇa in turn taught him the science of Kṛṣṇa. When Nāla learnt the secret of Aṣvadhā he vomited all the poison inside him and Kali left him. Nāla was about to nurse Kali but refrained from it at the request of Kali. At once Kali climbed on a Tāṃsī tree and went down from the tree when Nāla left the place. Tāṃsī is from that day onwards considered a cursed tree. (Chapter 36; Vana Parva).

5) The world of Kaliyuga. The celebrated sage Mārkaṇḍeya has written that there are three eras in Kaliyuga, thus: In Kaliyuga all will be done without charity and sacrifices will be only for a name. Brahmans would do the duties of the Sūdras. Sūdras would become prosperous. There will be sinners as kings. People will be short-lived and the stature of the people also will diminish. Beastly type of men will be on the increase. Taste and smell will vanish. Women will be 'Mukhebhāgās'. Men will sell rice and brahmanas, the Vedas. Women will sell their vaginas. The yield of milk from cows will decrease. Flowers and fruits will become less. Crows will be on the increase. Brāhmaṇas would become beggars. Sages will be merchants. Brāhmaṇas would without any reason grow hairs and nails. None will observe the four āstamas correctly. Students will defile the bed of their preceptors. Kairs will be in and out of season. Trees and plants will refuse to grow in many places. There will be murder of people everywhere. Merchants will be cheats and they will use false measures. Righteous persons will decrease and sinners will increase. Girls of seven or eight years will become pregnant and boys will become fathers. Young men at the age of sixteen would be grey-haired. Old men will continue practising the habits of young men. Wives will lie with their servants. Wives will be prostitutes even while their husbands are alive. People will die in lots of hunger. (Chapter 180, Vana Parva).

6) Kaliyogadāśika. The greatest birth of Kaliyuga is the river Ganges. (Chapter 35; Vana Parva).

7) Duryodhana was the incarnation of Kali and Śakun, that of Dvāpara. (Chapter 31, Aśrama Parva).

KALI I. A synonym of Śräya. (Śloka 20, Chapter 3, Vana Parva).

KALI III. A synonym of Śīva. (Śloka 79, Chapter 17, Amūsāsana Parva).

KALI I. A synonym of Satyavatī, mother of Vyās. (See under Adīkā and Satyavatī).

KALI II. An aspect or form of Pūrvi. (See under Pūrvi).

KALIDĀSA. The greatest poet and dramatist in Sanskrit. Some scholars opine that Kālidāsa flourished in the 6th Century B.C. while others place his date up to the period 11th Century A.D. At any rate none of the scholars consider the period between 1st Century B.C. and 5th Century A.D. as the most probable date of the great poet. Some of the main theories in this regard are as follows:—

(1) Eighth century B.C. Towards the close of Rāghuvaṃśa Mahākāvalī Kālidāsa has referred to the son of Kītanāgīmitra. Therefore the poet must have lived in the 6th Century B.C. This is the view of the scholar Hippolyte Frenche.

(2) Second Century B.C. According to Dr. Kumar Kāli Kālidāsa lived in the second Century B.C., the reasons for the belief being as follows. The poet was a contemporary of King Agnimitras of the Sunga dynasty. This Agnimitra is eulogised in Kālidāsa’s Mālavikāgīmitra. Agnimitra is referred to in the Bharativiśālā (epilogue) of the drama also.

(3) First Century B.C. The traditional belief is that Kālidāsa was a member of the assembly of poets and scholars of the court of emperor Vikramādiya, who started the Vikrama era in B.C. 56.

Dhanvantarikapakṣaśāstra—Veda-Vaigāthā Kālidāsa

Kālidāsa lived in the fifth Century A.D. One Candra-gupta II, who defeated the Śakas in 539 A.D. was Kīlaḍa of Ujjain. He was known as Vikramāditya also.
Dr. Keith thinks that the great poet might have been a member of this King's court. Perhaps Kālīkāda had remembered his royal patron Vikramāditya in his drama called Vikramorvasīṇī. Dr. Keith is further of the view that Kālīkāda composed Kumārasambhava after attending the birth celebrations of Kumāragupta, son of King Vikramāditya.
5) Sixteent Century A.D. Three scholars, Ferguson, Max Muller and Kern have opined that Kālīkāda lived in the sixth century A.D.
Whichever be the date of Kālīkāda it could be known from his works that he spent the major part of his life in Ujjain, and was inextricably indebted to the city in many ways. Kaghuvasita and Kumārasambhava are his two mahākāvya. He had also written three dramas, Abhijñānākūṭāṇī, Vikramorvasīṇī and Mālavikāgnimātra and a lyric called Rūsaṁhāra. He wrote also a world-famous poem called Meghasandhāṇī.
KĀLĪKĀ. A female attendant of Skanda. (Sālīya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 14)
KĀLĪKA. One of the attendants given to Skanda by Pūsan, the other being Pāṇākara. (Sālīya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 43).
KĀLĪKĀSAGA A holy place. Bathing here is as good as that at Kālīkārama.
KĀLĪKĀSRAMA. A holy place. If one bathes and spends three nights here one will be released from the sorrows of life and death. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 23).
KĀLĪKAYA. A son of King Subala. He was killed by Abhimanyu. (Drona Parva, Chapter 49).
KĀLĪNDI (YAMUNA).
1) General. Kālīndi alias Yamunā is one of the holy rivers in India. The presiding deity of the river is Kālīndīdevī. Kālīndi, the daughter of the sun has her sanctuary in Kālīndīdevī and hence, the name Kālīndi for the river. Kālīndi joins the Gaṅgā at Prayāga, and this confluence of the two rivers is called Saṅgama, which is a sacred place.
2) Gave way for Śri Kṛṣṇa. As soon as Kṛṣṇa was born Vasudeva stealthily removed the child to Ambādi. Due to heavy rains the Kālīndi was overflowing, and Vasudeva begged Kālīndi for a passage, and the river gave way for Vasudeva to take Kṛṣṇa to Ambādi. (Bhāgavata 10th Skanda).
3) Balabhadrādra dragged Kālīndi. Balabhadrādrāma once stayed in Ambādi for two months. One day he was picketing on the banks of Kālīndi with the Gopis.
Under the influence of liquor he desired to play with his companions in the waters of Kālīndi. He called Kālīndi to his side, but the chaste Kālīndi refused to oblige him. So he dragged her by his plough hooking her to it. In great fear Kālīndi saluted him, and he enjoyed with the gopis for some time on its waters, (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).
4) Kālīndi, Śri Kṛṣṇa's wife. After Maya had built Indraprastha for the Pāṇḍavas, Śri Kṛṣṇa spent a few days there with his family. And, one day while Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna were strolling on the banks of Kālīndi the latter saw there a beautiful woman performing penance and he approached her. She told Arjuna that the object of her penance was to get Kṛṣṇa as husband, and when Arjuna passed on the information to Kṛṣṇa he took her in his chariot to Dwārakā and duly married her.
(Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).
5) Sons of Kālīndi. Ten sons were born to Kālīndi by Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).
6) Hamsa and his son in Kālīndī. Once Kṛṣṇa attacked Jarāṣandha and the son of his minister, Hamsa, being told that his father had been killed, committed suicide by jumping into Kālīndi. But, Hamsa had not been killed and when he returned to Puru's outfield and knew about the death of his son, he too jumped into Kālīndī and committed suicide. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14).
7) Other information.
(i) Kālīndi is one of the seven tributaries of the Gaṅgā.
One who drinks its water will be released from all sins.
(Adi Parva, Chapter 139, Verse 19).
(ii) The Pāṇḍavas, during their life in exile in the forest drank Yamunā water, got over their weariness and continued their sojourn. (Vana Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 2).
(iii) Sahadeva, son of Sṛṅgava, gave Agni Deva 1000 golden emblems on the banks of the Yamunā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 90, Verse 7).
(iv) Bharata performed thirty-three Āśvamedhas on the banks of the Yamunā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 90, Verse 8). On another occasion he conducted six Āśvamedhas at the same spot. (Drona Parva, Chapter 88).
On yet another occasion he conducted three hundred Āśvamedhas. (Sūnti Parva, Chapter 29).
(v) Ambaśīrī, the son of Nabhaga conducted a yājīna on the planes of Kālīndī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 129).
(vi) Agastya the great sage performed penance on the planes of Kālīndī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 161).
(vii) King Sāntanu conducted seven yājānas on the banks of the Kālīndī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 162).
(viii) The colour of Kālīndī is black. Kāma (Cupid) shot arrows of love at Śrīva, who was lamenting over the death of Śrīla, and by Śrīva thus excited to a condition of insanity jumped into Kālīndi with the result that its water turned black in colour.
(Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 6 and also see under Yamunā).
KĀLĪNDEVIPA. It was on this island that Vyāsa was born as the result of the intercourse between Pāṇḍava Parīchāni (Adi Parva, Chapter 10).
KĀLĪNGA I. Kṛṣṇa, King of Kālīnga was present at the swayyamvara of Draupadi. (Śloka 13, Chapter 180 Adi Parva). Rukmi played a game of dice with Balabhadrā with the help of Kālīnga (for details see under Rukmi). The sage Dhrirathas begot a son of the wife of the aged and senile Kālīnga and the boy was named Kālīśā (Śloka 129, Anuvāka 19, Mandala 2, Rgveda).
KĀLĪNGA II. A warrior of the god Skandha. (M.B.
Sālīya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 84).
KĀLĪNGA III. A Dasiya who lived in Kṛṣṇaṇa. In Skanda Purāṇa there is a story that he conquered heaven, drove away the Lokpalakus, possessed his own forces in their place and was finally killed by Devi.
KĀLĪNGA. Śrūṭāyaṇa, King of Kālīnga, and a member of Yudhīśṭhira's assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4).
KĀLĪNGA (M) (KĀLĪNGA). An ancient place in the south of Bhārata.
KALINGADATTA

Other details.
(1) Arjuna visited this place while he was on a pilgrimage. (Sloka 9, Chapter 214, Adi Parva.)
(2) Kaliya was also included in the countries conquered by Sahadeva while he was on his victory march. (Chapter 31, Sabha Parva.)
(3) People from Kaliyogra presented Yudhishthira with gifts for the Rajasuya. (Sloka 18, Chapter 52, Sabha Parva.)
(4) Yudhishthira visited Kaliyogra while he was on a pilgrimage. (Sloka 6, Chapter 114, Vana Parva.)
(5) Karna conquered Kaliyogra while he was on a victory march. (Sloka 8, Chapter 254, Vana Parva.)
(6) Sahadeva defeated the King of Kaliyogra. (Sloka 24, Chapter 23, Udyoga Parva.)
(7) Sri Krishna slaughtered the people of Kaliyogra. (Sloka 76, Chapter 49, Udyoga Parva.)
(8) The people of Kaliyogra took part in the war between the Pandavas and Kauravas. (Sloka 6, Chapter 29, Drona Parva.)
(9) Parashurama conquered this place. (Sloka 12, Chapter 79, Drona Parva.)

KALINGADATTA. See under Dharma. KALINGAENA. See under Madanamadhava.

KALIPRITYA A prostitute. She attained svarga by observing the Karitakavrita. (Chapter 21, Brahmakanda, Padma Purana.)

KALIVA.
1) Birth. Kalivara, grandson of Brahma and son of Marici begot of his wife Kastrina powerful naga like Sesa, Anavata, Takshaka, Karkotaka, Kaliya, Manini, Parashitigba etc. and from them were born all kinds of nagas on earth. (Adi Parva, Chapter 33). Kaliya possessed one thousand heads. (Bhagavata, 10th Skanda).
2) Kaliya took his abode in Anantika. Vinata and Kastrina were wives of Kaliya. The former was the mother of Garuda and the latter of the nagas. In a wager Vinata was defeated and had to become the slave of Kaliya. Garuda brought Ananta from Devakot and redeemed his mother from slavery. Yet Garuda and the nagas continued to be enemies. Garuda killed and eating naga whenever he got a chance for it. At last the naga entered into an understanding with Garuda agreeing to give him the havis (offering) which he got on certain days, and thus Garuda stopped eating the naga. But Kaliya did not subscribe to the above agreement; he treated Garuda with contempt. But, in an encounter with Garuda Kaliya was put to so much of hard ship that he, along with his family, shifted his abode to a particular sea in Kaliyogra.
3) Admission granted to Garuda. Owing to the curse of a sage called Vashitka, who was performing penance on the banks of Kaliyogra, that Garuda would die broken-headed if he entered Kaliyogra, it was a prohibited area to Garuda.
4) Suppression of Kaliya. Owing to the virulent poison of Kaliya the waters of Kaliyogra became poisonous and the trees on its banks dried up. Once, while Krishna and his companions, the Gopalis came to the banks of the river grazing their cows. The Gopalis drank water from the river and fell down dead. Then Karna jumped into the river from the top of a tree on its bank and danced upon the heads of Kaliya who had rushed to attack him. Kaliya vomited blood and saluted Krishna. His wives and children also saluted the Lord. Krishna sent all of them away to Ramaapaka island assuring Kaliya that Garuda would not attack him on seeing the marks of his (Krishna's) feet on Kaliya. Thus did Kaliya and his family shift their residence to Ramaapaka Island. (Bhagavata, 10th Skanda.)

KALINYOGA. See under Manvantara.

KALKI. The tenth avatara (incarnation) of Mahabhava. The ten avatara are called Daasavataraas. Kalki is the last of them. Agni Purana, Chapter 16 says as follows about the incarnation of Kalki:
Towards the end of Kaliyuga, all people will lose their faith in God and become irreligious. They will accept presents from the wicked. At that time, there will be intermixture of castes. People will become thieves and evil doers. Fifteen divisions of the Veda Vajrayana alone will become the authoritative document. People, wearing the garb of righteousness, will indulge in unrighteousness. Mlecchas (lowest class of people) assuming the form of Kings will begin feeding upon human beings. At that time Lord Visnu will incarnate as Kalki, the son of Vishvayasa and the priest of Vishvavalkya and exterminates all mischiefs. He will restore people to caturvarya and the four astras and maintain proper standards of conduct. Afterwards the Lord will renounce the form of Kalki and ascend Heaven. Then Krtavya will begin again. Chapter 190 of Bhagavata Purana supports almost all the above statements. In the light of these, we can gather certain features of Kalki's incarnation when Kaliyuga reaches its zenith. Mahabhava will be born as a Brahmana with the name Vishvayasa, in the village called Vambhalas. Vishvayasa will become famous under the name Kalki. He will be the priest of Yajnavalkya. He will create arms and soldiers by his will itself and destroy the wicked. With that Krtavya will commence.

There is difference of opinion as to whether Kalki's incarnation has passed or is to come. But in the light of the statements in the Puranas, Kalki has not yet come. Mahabharta, Vana Parva, says that Kaliyuga extends over a period of 4, 32, 000 years. It is now only a little over 5,000 years since it began. Still, more than 4, 26, 900 years have to pass before the end of Kaliyuga. Therefore lakhs of years have to elapse before the incarnation of Kalki.

KALMAASANGHI. See under the word KALMASSAPA.

KALMASSAPA. KALMASSANGHI, MITRASAHA, SAUDASA. A famous king of the Ikavuka dynasty. He wandered about in the forest as a Raksasa for twelve years.

2) Name. His actual name was Mitrasaha. Since he was the son of Sudasa, he was called Sudasa also.
KALMAŠAPADA

(M.B. Anutama Parva, Chapter 78). Kalmāśapada and Kalmāśapadā were names which he got as a result of Vasiṣṭha’s curse.
3) Mitrāsaha became a Rākṣasa. Mitrāsaha was a reputed and glorious king belonging to the solar dynasty of kings who ruled over Ayodhyā. He had a queen named Madayānti. While they were leading a happy and enviable married life, Mitrāsaha was forced to lead the life of a Rākṣasa in the forest for a period of 12 years, as the result of a curse. The story of this curse is given in different Purāṇas in different versions and they are given below:—
4) Śakti Cursed Mitrāsaha. One day Mitrāsaha went to the forest for hunting. Vāmānitra wished to get this mighty King as his disciple. While the King was passing through the forest, he saw Śakti, Vasiṣṭha’s son, coming towards him. The King was a Kṣatriya and Śakti was a Brāhmaṇa. They were faced with the problem of whether the Kṣatriya should make way for the Brāhmaṇa or vice versa. Neither of them made way for the other. At last, Mitrāsaha struck Śakti with his whip. In his anger Śakti cursed Mitrāsaha that he should become a Rākṣasa and roam about in the forest for 12 years. Vāmānitra who was standing nearby in the time introduced a devil into the body of the King and from that day Mitrāsaha wandered about in the forest in the form of a Rākṣasa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 176).
5) Vasiṣṭha cursed Mitrāsaha. Mitrāsaha once went to hunt in the forest. While hunting he came across two tiger cubs. Actually, they were two Rākṣasas in disguise. The King who was unaware of it, killed one of them with an arrow. The other cub suddenly assumed his own form as a Rākṣasa and after giving Mitrāsaha a warning that he would take revenge on him at the proper time, vanished.
After the hunt the King returned to his palace. He informed Vasiṣṭha that he wished to perform Āśvamedhāyāga like his ancestors. The sage offered to assist him in it. Shortly after, one day, the old Rākṣasas-tiger, disguising himself as the sage Vasiṣṭha, came to Mitrāsaha and said:— ‘Oh King! I will tell you a secret. Don’t tell anyone else. I have a great desire to eat meat food. Please send some cooked meat to my Ādrasana without anyone knowing about it.’ After saying this, the disguised Rākṣasa-sage left the place.
The King told this secret to his wife Madayānti. They prepared the meat-food secretly and took it to Vasiṣṭha’s Ādrasana. When Vasiṣṭha saw the meat food, he took it as a personal insult and transformed the King into a Rākṣasa. (Utirā Ramāyaṇa).
6) Another story of Vasiṣṭha’s curse on Mitrāsaha. Once while Mitrāsaha was hunting in the forest, he happened to kill a Rākṣasa by accident. The dead Rākṣasa’s younger brother swore to avenge his death. He went to the King in the disguise of a young Brāhmaṇa cook. Mitrāsaha appointed him as a cook in the royal kitchen.
At about that time, one day, Vasiṣṭha came to Ayodhyā on the invitation of Ādrasana, for a Śrāddha. Mitrāsaha accompanied by his queen, greeted the sage with honour. He ordered the cook to prepare food for the guest at once. The Rākṣasa disguised as cook, decided to make the best of this opportunity. In a short time he cooked some human flesh and offered it as food for Vasiṣṭha. The enraged sage cursed the King to become a man-eating Rākṣasa who would roam about for twelve years in the woods. Thus Mitrāsaha became a Rākṣasa. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śivarātri Māhātmya).
7) How Mitrāsaha got the name ‘Kalmāśapada.’ Mitrāsaha became very angry when he was cursed by Vasiṣṭha. He decided to pay back in the same coin by cursing Vasiṣṭha also. He took water in his hand and was about to throw it down with the words of curse. But his queen Madayānti stopped him. She reminded him that it was not right to curse a Brāhmaṇa and requested him to sprinkle that water on his own feet. The King’s anger cooled down and he sprinkled the water on his own feet. Since his feet were polluted by the water of sin Mitrāsaha came to be called ‘Kalmāśapada,’ and Kalmāśapadā from that day. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śivarātri Māhātmya).
8) Kalmāśapada’s life as Rākṣasa. The curse-ridden Kalmāśapada began to look upon Vasiṣṭha and his sons with invertebrate hatred. He roamed the countryside and forests in the form of a Rākṣasa. He started man-eating by feeding upon Śakti, the eldest son of Vasiṣṭha. After that he ate all the remaining 99 sons of Vasiṣṭha. Distressed at the loss of his children, Vasiṣṭha left his Ādrasana, bent on committing suicide. He tied his own hands and feet securely with a rope and jumped into the river to drown himself. This attempt, like several other attempts to commit suicide, failed and he did not die (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 177). In the Mahābhārata there is a story which says that once Utaika, a disciple of the sage Gautama went to beg the King’s (their ornaments) worn by Kalmāśapada’s (Śatarūpa’s) queen, for the sake of Gautama’s wife. (For details, see under the word “Utaika”).
9) Brāhmaṇa’s curse on Kalmāśapada. In the course of his wanderings through the forest as a Rākṣasa, Kalmāśapada happened to come across a Brāhmaṇa youth engaged in amorous pleasures with his wife Āgrasana. The King caught hold of the youth and killed him. His wife, the Brāhmaṇa wept loudly and after cremating her husband’s body in a funeral pyre, jumped into it and burnt herself to death. Just before her death she pronounced a curse on Kalmāśapada that if he touched any woman in future he would die immediately.
After the death of the Brāhmaṇa couple, the sin of Brāhmacaryā (killing of Brāhmaṇa) continued to pursue Kalmāśapada in the form of a terrible monster. He fled for life from it and at last reached the presence of King Janaka. There, he happened to see the sage Gautama who taught Kalmāśapada Dvīgajana (Divine wisdom). As advised by the sage, he went to the temple at Gokarna and spent some years in deep meditation. (Śiva Purāṇa, Śivarātri Māhātmya).
10) Sāpamoksa. (Liberation from Curse). Towards the close of the twelve years which Mitrāsaha (Kalmāśapada) spent as a Rākṣasa, Vasiṣṭha saw him. The sage sprinkled holy water on Mitrāsaha and at once the Rākṣasa (the spirit of the Rākṣasa) left his body and he restored his original figure of the King. He accepted Vasiṣṭha as his preceptor. They went back together to Ayodhyā. Although Madayānti, queen of Mitrāsaha was there, the King was not able to touch her owing to the Brāhmaṇa’s curse. So he requested Vaisistha to beg children by her. Accordingly, Madayantī became pregnant by Vaisistha. But she did not deliver the child even after twelve years. At last she hit the embryo in her womb with a stone and the child was born. Since he was born with the help of a stone (Asmāni), the child was named “A makt”. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 167).

KALMAṆI. A river. It was while travelling by the side of this river, that King Drupada reached a Brāhmaṇa village where he happened to meet Upāyā. (M.B. As Purva, Chapter 166). Mahābhārata, SBha Parva, Chapter 78, Verse 16 says that it was on the bank of this river that the sage Bhṛgu blessed Yudhishthira. (Modern scholars believe that Kaśmāṇī is the same as the present river Yumna).

KALODAKA. A sacred place. The sin of causing abortion to any one who utters the tenth of the thero here will be washed away. (Arunākana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 60 and Śatā Parva, Chapter 152, Verse 12).

KALPA I. A son of Dhruva. See under DHRUVA.

KALPA II. A period of one thousand Yugas or fourteen Manvantaras. See under MANVANTARA.

KALPA III. The customary proceeding of Yāgas. These proceedings are made in the form of Śūtras. The Śūtras describe how the Brāhmaṇas and maṇḍras are to be used. For each Śūtra there are separate Śūtra Śūtras. The Śūtra Śūtras for Āgama Śūtras are Ācārya, Svēkkhāyana and Svānak. Those for Svānveda are Māṭaka, Lāṭyāyanaka and Drāḥyāyanaka. Those for Kṛṣṇa Yajurveda are Āpadamba Svānveda, Satyāyana, Hiraṇyaka, Mānana, Bhrādavā, Vadhā, Vaiśākha, Lāṅgākṣa, Mātṛa, Kāśvā and Vṛdha. For Śukleyjuvendra it is Kātyāyanaka Svān Śūtra. For Aśvinveda it is Kauṭikā Śūtra Śūtras. All these Śūtras contain only brief symbolic words and are difficult to understand without explanation.

KALPAKA. Śiva’s garden. It is situated in Kaśmaṇī, (Kathaśatigāra, Kathābhuktaalambaka, Part 1).

KALPAVRKSA. A tree in Devaloka. It has the power of giving any object that one wishes to get. There are five Kalpavrkṣas in Devaloka. Their names are: Māndāra, Purnā, Sāntāna, Kalpavrkṣa and Haricandana.

Agni Purāṇa, third Chapter mentions that among the wonderful things obtained by the churning of the ocean of milk, there was Kalpavrksa also. So Kalpvṛkṣa was born from the ocean of milk.

KULYA (KALI). Mother of Vyāsa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

KALYĀṇA. A sage. Once certain Āgirasas including the sage observed sattva (sacrifice) for the attainment of heaven. But asādāya was sure about the Devayāna path which leads to heaven. So they selected Kalyāṇa to find out the path. He went in search of the Devayāna path and on the way he met Urṣyā, a Gandharva who was in the company of some apsārīs women. The Gandharva disclosed the Sāma which would enable Kalyāṇa to find out the Devayāna path. On his return, Kalyāṇa told the other Rsis that he had received the Sāma, but he refused to disclose from whom he obtained it. With the help of that Sāma known as Asmāya, the Āgirasas attained heaven, but because of his failure to disclose the whole truth, Kalyāṇa was denied access to heaven. Besides that, he became a victim to the disease of leprosy. (Paśca-viśla Brāhmaṇam).

KALYĀṆI. A female follower of Skanda. (M.B. Śatya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 6).

KĀMAY. God of beauty in Indian mythology.

1) General. A Prajāpati named Dharma was born from the right breast of Brahmā. Dharma was very handsome. Three sons, Śama, Kāma and Harṣa who were exceedingly handsome, were born to him. Of them, Kāma became the god of beauty. His wife was Rāi. Rāi became the husband of Pāvāt. Harṣa had Nandā for his wife. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 66, Verses 31-33).

In Kālika Purāṇa we see another story about Kāma’s birth. Brahmā created ten Prajāpatis. After that, the woman Sandhyā was created. At the very moment of her birth, Brahmā and the Prajāpatis were irresistibly fascinated by her charm and they sprang up from their seats. All their thoughts converged on the same object. At this time a handsome youth emerged from Brahmā’s mind with a floral bow in his hands. Immediately after his birth, he asked Brahmā “Kauś karpaṇa?” (Whom should I make proud?) Brahmā replied “Let the minds of living beings be the aim of your arrows”. He suggested Rāi the daughter of Dēkan, to be Kāma’s wife. Since he stirred the mind of Brahmā, he got the name “MANVATIHA”, and since he was extremely attractive in appearance he came to be called “KĀΜA”. (For further details, see under “RATI”).

2) How Kāma got the name “KANDARPA”. As soon as Kāma was born, he went to Brahmā and asked him “Kauś darpaṇa?” (Whom should I make proud?). Therefore he got the name “KANDARPA”. (Kathaśatīgīra).

3) Brahmā cursed Kāma. Once Brahmā was meditating upon Para Brahman for the purpose of creation. He felt carnal thoughts rising in his mind. At once a girl was born from his mind. She appeared before him and did obeisance to him. This girl was Sarasvatī. Brahmā fell in love with her. He declared that she should stay in the tongues of all living beings, and particularly at the tip of the tongues of all scholars. After that he made Sarasvatī his wife. Soon she felt repentant for his weakness of mind. His anger blazed at Kāma who was the cause of all this. He cursed that Kāma would be burnt to ashes in the fire from Śiva’s third eye. After that Brahmā gave his carnal desire to the great sage Atri who transferred it to his wife Anasātī. It hardened itself within her and took the form of Candrika, who was thus born to her. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 43).

4) Kāma was burnt up in fire. Long ago an Atri named Tāraka, who was proud of his invincible might, was causing much havoc and terror in the whole world. Even the gods were afraid of him because he had received a boon that Śiva’s son alone was capable of killing him. It was the time when Pārvatī, the daughter of Himāvat, was performing a penance praying that Paramesvara should become her husband. Taking advantage of this opportunity, Indra sent Kāma to rouse the passion of love in Śiva’s mind. Kāma reached Śiva’s seat and tried to stir up his passions. Śiva, who was enraged at this, opened his third eye blazing with fire. Kāma was burnt to ashes in that fire. The place where Kâma’s body (Anga) fell came to be called “Anagâryā”. Since he lost his body, Kâmadeva got another name “Anaṅga”. (Vâlmalikī Râmâyana. Kâla Kânda, Chapter 23).

5) Kâma’s Next Birth. When Śiva burnt up Kâma, the latter’s wife Râti prayed to Śiva to restore her husband to life. Śiva was pleased and said that Râti would be born in the world and Kâma would take birth as her son.” (Kâthâsarîṣṭâgâra).

According to Śiva’s blessing Râti was born in the world under the name of Mâyâvatî. She became the kitchen-maid of an Asura named Sambhara. At that time Śrî Kâraṇa approached Śiva with a request that he should be blessed with a son. Śiva blessed him saying that Kâma who was burnt up in the fire of his eye would be born as the son of Rukmiṇî, Śrî Kâraṇa’s wife. Accordingly, Rukmiṇî, conceived and a handsome child was born to her.

Sambhara, who employed Mâyâvatî as his kitchen-maid had received a boon from Śiva. A condition laid down in it was that Sambhara would die not long after Kâmadeva’s birth in the world. So Sambhara was making careful enquiries to ascertain whether Kâma was born anywhere in the world. It was during this period that Sambhara received the news that Kâma had been born as Śrî Kâraṇa’s son. At once he went secretly to Rukmiṇî’s house and stole the little baby and threw it into the sea. A sea-fish swallowed the child and a fisherman who caught it presented it to Sambhara. When Sambhara cut it open, he saw a lovely baby inside the fish. He entrusted the child to Mâyâvatî to be brought up.

At this stage, the sage Nârada happened to come there and he explained to Mâyâvatî in secret, that the baby was Kâmadeva and she was Râti. From that time, she brought up the child with great affection and tenderness. As years passed and Kâma grew up into a youth, Mâyâvatî began to make amorous advances towards him. Looking upon her with regard due to a mother, Kâma was displeased with these advances. Then she told him what Nârada had disclosed to her about their relations in the past life. She advised him to kill Sambhara and to leave the place for Dwârakâ as soon as possible.

As advised by her, Kâma killed Sambhara and both he and Mâyâvatî went to Dwârakâ in a Vimâna and paid their respects to their parents there. In the presence of a large number of sages, Kâma was christened “Pradhumna”. Aniruddha, the husband of Usî, was the son of Pradhumna. Besides Aniruddha, Pradhumna had a daughter too.

6) Other names of Kâma. The following names are used for Kâma in the Purâṇas—Madana, Manmatha, Māra, Pradhumna, Minaketana, Kamarpaka, Ananda, Kâma, Pañcaśaśra, Sambatârî, Manasijâ, Kuśmesu, Anavayava, Puspadhava, Ratipati, Mâkardhava, Atmabhâ, Īrâja, Isma, Kâśikâ, Abhirupa, Gṛiñkâkâtil, Kâshîra, Râma, Dîkha, Mahâdile, Mañanjâ,pâta, Mâhâ, Râjapâta, Vâma, Puspaketana, Mâkaretaka, Ratnâvatya, Ragavritta, Samârâguru, Gâdavittya, Mâpaya, Mâyâ.

7) Kâma’s weapons. Kâma has a bow made of sugar-cane, its string is made up of beetles, and the tips of his arrows are flowers. His vehicle is the parrot and the sign on his banner is fish. The five flowers of his arrows are—Arâvinda, Aśoka, Cûta, Nâvamâlîkî, Nîlpatpa. Besides these, he has five more arrows which are—Unmâdâna, Tâpâna, Sûpa, Sambhara and Sâmohana. (Amarâ Kosâ).

Kâma II. An Agni who was the son of Śvâhadeva. Mahâbhârata, Vana Parva. Chapter 219. Verse 23 says that this agni was of inimitable beauty.

Kâma III. Another name for Paramevara. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 42).

Kâma IV. Another name for Mahâsvaî. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 45).

Kâma V. A great sage. There is a reference to this sage in Mahâbhârata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 41.

Kâma. Daughter of Pritâvrasa. She was the wife of Ayuandî, a king of the Pûru dynasty and mother of Akrodhâ. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 177).

Kâmatî (Kâmatîkâ). A serpent born in Dhritâushrîa’s family. This serpent was burnt up in Jayameṣya’s surpaśa. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 15).

Kâmacari. A woman follower of Skandadeva. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 23).

Kâmadâ. Another woman follower of Skandadeva. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 27).

Kâmadeva. See under Kâma.

Kâmadhenu. (Surabhi—Nandinī).

1) General. She is the first mother of cattle. She is a goddess with marvellous powers and attainments who gives milk whenever needed by gods and sages. The Purâṇas declare that all the cattle in the world today are descended from Kâmadhenu.

2) Three different names. This sacred cow is sometimes called “Kâmadhenu”; at other times, “Surabhi” and also “Nandinî”. They are not three different cows, as some people suppose. See Bhâsâ Bharata, Aranyava Parva Chapter 8, Verses 7 and 17. There Surabhi and Kâmadeva are names used for referring to the same cow. Again, in the Bhâsâ Bharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 99, Verse 14, we find the name Nandini applied to Kâmadhenu. Thus we may conclude that Kâmadhenu had two other names viz. Surabhi and Nandini. But since the term “Surabhi” occurs in Anarâkosa, it follows that even ordinary cows may be called “Surabhi”.

3) Birth and family. In the Purânas Surabhi is described variously as Daksâ’s daughter, Kâsyapa’s wife, Kâsyapa’s daughter, etc. Although at first sight there may appear some discrepancy in these statements, in the light of them we may clearly arrive at the ancestry and birth of Surabhi. Vâlmalikâ Râmâyana, Aranyava Kânda, 14th Sarga says that Kâsyapa, the son of Mañî and the grandson of Brahmâ married Daksâ Prjâpâti’s daughters Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kâlikâ, Tâmra, Krodhâvasî, Manu and Anâlî. From verses 20 and 21 in the same Sarga we understand that Surabhi was the daughter of Krodhâvasî, Daksâ’s daughter, by Kâsyapa. In this same Sarga we find that Rohini and Gandharvî were born to this Surabhi and from Rohini were born all the cows in the world that we see today.

and from Gandharvi were born all the horses. It was by her 120 father Kadypa himself that Surabhi’s offspring were born. Therefore, the reference to Surabhi as the wife of Kadypa may also be justified.

Since Krodhavasa, the daughter of Daksa was the mother of Surabhi, actually Surabhi was the grand-daughter of Daksa, but in a broad sense, a grand-daughter may be considered as a daughter. So the reference to Surabhi in Bhasa Bhusana Parva, Chapter 89, Verse 29 as Daksa’s daughter is correct in that sense.

4) How Kamadhenu Received Divine Powers. Long ago Aditi, wife of Kadypa, conceived Mahavayu in her womb and began an austerities penance standing on one leg. At that time Surabhi went to Kaivalya and offered worship to Brahman for ten thousand years. The gods who were pleased, came to Surabhi, taking Brahman with them. Brahman said to her:—Surabhi I have made you a goddess. You are now above the three worlds—Heaven Earth and Hell. You will become famous. All people will worship you and the cows who are your offspring.

From that day on which Brahman blessed her Surabhi became a goddess with marvellous spiritual powers.

5) More than one Kamadhenu. There are references to several Kamadhenu’s in the Purânas. There is one Kamadhenu in Vasiṣṭha’s Aśrama. At Varuṇa’s yajña we see another Kamadhenu. There is no ground for believing that there is only one Kamadhenu and that it was borrowed by each Devas in turn for some particular occasion. This point is made clear in Kâma Parva, Chapter 89, Kamadhenu in the family of Kamadhenu and they were owned by different Devas. Moreover it is stated that several Kamadhenu’s take their origin from sources other than the family of Kadypa. One of them is from the ocean of milk. In Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 18, we find that when the Devas and Asuras churned the ocean of milk, along with many other precious things, Kamadhenu also came up to the surface. There is a reference to another Kamadhenu in Bhâsha Bhārata, Udyogya Parva, Chapter 102. There, it is said, Brahman who got Anura swallowed it beyond limit in his avidity and when he vomiting, a Kamadhenu came out from his mouth. That Kamadhenu is said to be living in the world known as Râthâla. The above-mentioned passage also says that there are four other Kamadhenu’s living on the four sides of the Kamadhenu which lives in Râthâla. They are Saurabhî in the east, Śūhadrâ in the west and Dhenu in the north.

The next Kamadhenu is the one which was born from the side of Śrī Krśna. Once Śrī Krśna and his consort Râdhâ were amusing themselves by amorous pleasures in a remote and secluded place. When they were tired they wished to drink some milk. At that time, Śrī Krśna created his will power, the cow Surabhi and the calf Matorâśa, from the left side of his body. Śrīdama milked that cow into a new earthen pot and when Śrī Krśna was drinking it, the pot fell down and the milk was spilled all over the floor. The milk which spilled out was 100 years. It became a lake called ‘Kâraśāgarâ’ for Râdhâ and her maids to bathe and enjoy water-sports. Numerous cows were born from the pores of Surabhi and they were presented to the Gopas by Śrī Krśna. (Devī Bhāgavata, 9th Skanda). Like this, several Kamadhenu’s are seen in the Purânas. Therefore there is no discrepancy or contradiction in statements declaring that there were many Kamadhenu’s in different Ārânas.

But since Kamadhenu had achieved divine powers by Brahma’s grace, it is but reasonable to believe that the different Kamadhenu’s are really the different forms of the original Kamadhenu, the daughter of Kâma.

6) Theft of Kamadhenu by Satyavrata (Tīrṣṇaka). Satyavrata (Tīrṣṇaka) was the son of Aruṇa, a King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was a vicious and immoral fellow. Once he abducted a Brāhmaṇa girl just at the time of her marriage in her bridal dress. Enraged at this his father drove him away from his palace. Satyavrata wandered about aimlessly in the country and in the forests. Soon after this there was a famine in the land. Human beings and animals began to die of starvation. At that time Viśvāmitra was performing penance in the forest after leaving behind his wife and children in the country. When he saw that the whole family was in danger of death by starvation, he decided to make some money by selling one of the sons, in order to save the lives of the rest of the family. Satyavrata who came to know of this, met Viśvāmitra and dissuaded him from selling his son. He promised to supply some flesh everyday to the family by hunting animals in the forest and keeping the flesh suspended from the branch of a near-by tree. Accordingly, he began leaving the flesh regularly hanging from the branch of the tree. One day he could not get any flesh by hunting. That night he went to Viśvāmitra’s aśrama and stole Kamadhenu. He killed the cow and ate some of its flesh. The rest he gave to Viśvāmitra’s family.

The next morning when Viśvāmitra woke up, he did not see his cow. But he came to know of the whole affair by his intuition. In his fury he cursed Satyavrata and said that the world would brand him with the name “Tīrṣṇaka” because he had committed three heinous sins viz. killing of cows, abducting another man’s wife and incurring his father’s displeasure. After that Viśvāmitra restored Kamadhenu to life. (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skanda).

7) Viśvāmitra attacked Kamadhenu. Once while Viśvāmitra was a ruling King, he went into a forest to hunt. In the course of his ramble through the forest, he happened to arrive at Viśvāmitra’s aśrama with his retinue. Viśvāmitra called Kamadhenu and ordered her to provide food for Viśvāmitra and his party. Kamadhenu, by her divine powers, prepared food within a short time and gave them a sumptuous meal; Viśvāmitra was greatly pleased with this amazing feat of Kamadhenu and he asked Viśvāmitra to give her to him. He even offered to give scores of cows in return for her. But Viśvāmitra refused to comply with his request. Then Viśvāmitra tried to seize and take her away by force. At once Kamadhenu assumed the form of a terrible monster of destruction. From the different parts of her body emerged fierce warriors who clashed with Viśvāmitra’s followers. All the arrows shot by Viśvāmitra were caught by Viśvāmitra with his hand. In the end Viśvāmitra admitted that the might of a Brâhmaṇa is superior to the might of a Kṣatriya. (Viśvāmitra was a Brâhmaṇa and Viśvāmitra a Kṣatriya).
soon gave up his kingly duties and began penance, thus turning himself into a "Rājarṣi" (Royal saint). (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bala Kanda, 52nd Sarga ; M.B. Śalīya Parva, Chapter 40 ; M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 175).

8) Kāmadhenu was attacked by the Aja Vasa. (See under the word "Aṣṭaṇuṣa", Para 2).

9) Kāmadhenu cried. (See under the word "Indra", Kāmālaka 16, Para 10).

10) Kāmadhenu revived King Baku. (See under the word "Gautama").

11) Other details:

(i) Kāmadhenu gave birth to Ajasa, Ekapūt, Ahiro, Budhhaṇa, Tvaṣṭa and Rudra. Viśvarūpa was the son of Tvaṣṭa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).

(ii) Kāmadhenu said that she had no part in the theft of Agastya’s lotus. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 94).

(iii) Śrī Kṛṣṇa turned Govardhana mountain into an umbrella and defeated Indra when Kāmadhenu came to Gokula and bathed Śrī Kṛṣṇa with her milk according to Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha.

(iv) Once the sage Janadagni went to Goloka and proposed to Kāmadhenu by her lotus. Kāmadhenu gave her sister Suśīlā to Janadagni. The sage presented that cow to his wife Renukā. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 61).

KAMALĀ I  Mother of Prahlāda. (Padma Purāṇa).

KAMALĀ II  A follower of Skanda-deva. (Śloka 9, Chapter 46, Śalīya Parva, M.B.).

KAMALĀKSA 1  A great warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas. Duryodhana sent this warrior along with Sakuni to attack Arjuna. (Chapter 156, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

KAMALĀKṢA II  A son of Tārakāsura. He was one of the famous trio of demons. For details see under "Tripura".

KAMALAKSA  A follower of Skanda-deva. (Chapter 46, Śalīya Parva).

KAMALĀVRATA  See under "Jayāśāman").

KAMANDAKA  A great sage of ancient times. (Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 123) states that this sage once taught Rājadharmas (kingly duties) to King Agirasara.

KAMAPALA  A Vāyu-devata from Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāga-vata, 10th Skandha).

KAMATHA I  A king of a country called Kāmbōja. This King was a prominent member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 22, Chapter 4, Sāhitī Parva).

KAMATHA II  A great sage. He became a realised soul by his penance. (Chapter 296, Sāhitī Parva, M.B.).

KAMATIRTHA  A sacred place. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 62, Verse 105 says that a man who takes his bath in this holy tirtha will have all his wishes fulfilled.

KAMBALA  A prominent serpent of the family of Kaśyapa. (Chapter 35, Ādi Parva, M.B.). The Prayāga tirtha was the abode of this serpent.

KAMALĀ  A part of Kuśādvipa. (Island of Kuśa).

KAMBAR  A celebrated Tamil poet. He was born in a poor family. At the orders of the King many poets wrote the story of Rāmāyaṇa in Tamil. But Kambār’s work was accepted as the best. This is the renowned Kambā Rāmāyaṇa. Kambār has written many other poems of which the important ones are Satarasat Antādi and Kāñcāṇa Purāṇa. It is said that unintelligent children of Tamil nādu are even now given sand from the burial ground of Kambār to induce intelligence into them. The (-r) suffix in Kambār is plural denoting respect. (See under "Bhadra-vikāli").

KAMBOJA I  Sudakṣaṇa, the King of the country, Kambōja. He was present at Draupadi’s swayanvar. In Mahābhārata, Karna Parva, Chapter 156 we read that his younger brother was killed by Arjuna. The Kings of Kambōja were all known as Kambōjas. Long ago, this country was ruled by a King named Kambōja. In Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 77, we see that this Kambōja was given a sword by the King Dhumadhvāna. Perhaps it was from this King Kambōja that the country came to be called ‘Kambōja’.

KAMBOJA II  This kingdom was situated in the north-western part of India. It is the modern Kabul. We get the following information from Mahābhārata.

(1) From Mahābhārata, Sāhitī Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 23, we see that Arjuna had subdued this Kingdom.

(2) The horses which were tied to Yudhiṣṭhira’s chariot were brought from Kambōja. (M.B. Sāhitī Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 5).

(3) The Mlecchas (a tribe of low-class people) of Kambōja will become Kings in Kaliyuga. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 36).

(4) There were Kambōjas in Duryodhana’s army. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 160, Verse 130).

(5) At the time of Mahābhārata the King Kambōja was the brave and heroic Sudakṣaṇa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 166, Verses 1-3).

(6) In the battle between Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas, the Kāṃbojas took their position in some places in the “Garuda Vyuha”, a phalanx in the shape of an eagle made by Bhīṣma. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 58, Verse 7).

(7) The horses of Kāṃboja were beautiful in appearance and of the colour of parrots. The horses which were tied to Nakula’s chariot, were of this kind. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 7).

(8) When the horses of Kāṃboja ran, their tails and ears remained motionless. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 36).

KAMUCHI  Son of Suchanā, King of the country of Madra. Candrasena, King of Sinhala, tried to get his daughter Mandodari married to this King. But Mandodari did not consent to it. (5th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

KAMODA  A goddess who came out of the churning of the ocean of milk. (For further details see under "Tripura").

KAMPĀ  A prince of Vṛṣṇi-vānu. He became a Vīśādeva after his death. (Chapter 5, Svarga-rohaṇa Parva M.B.).

KAMPANA I  A mighty King. He was a prominent member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Chapter 4, Sāhitī Parva, M.B.).

KAMPANA II  A demon. (See under Nabhās).

KAMPANA  A river. If one bathes in this river one will get the benefit of doing a Puṇḍarika yajña. (Chapter 84, Vana Parva, M.B.).

KAMPILYA  An ancient town in South Pāṇḍālipura. It was the capital city of King Drupada. Śīkanṭha had come to this city after his marriage. Once the King Daśāratha came near this place and sent a Brahmana messenger to Kāṃṣa. In ten days, a King named Bhūma-datta used to rule over this city. (M.B. Udya­yoga Parva).

See under the word 'Bhūma-datta'.

KĀMŚA I: Son of Ugrasena, King of Mathurā, and an incarnation of an Asura called Kālanemi.

2) Kāṃṣa, an incarnation of Kālanemi. In the yājñayam-bhavanavatara Kāṃṣa had a wife named Dūrī and they had six mighty and powerful sons. One day they ridiculed Brāhma saying 'A father who has married his own daughter' (Brāhma married Sarasvati, his own daughter). Brāhma became angry and cursed them to be born as demons on earth. All the six sons were, therefore, born as sons of a demon called Kālanemi on earth. In their next birth they were born as sons of Hiranyakasipu. They led a pious life and pleased at this Brāhma asked them what boon they wanted and they demanded that they should not be killed by anybody. Their father, Hiranyakasipu, did not like his sons getting a boon behind his back and so he cursed his sons 'May you all six go to Pūtāla (nether-world) and sleep there for a long time under the name of Sadākāla-Asura-Sahastra-Yagya-Dānmāra-Hiranyakasipu' and Hiranyakasipu said that they would after sleeping for a long time be born to Devaki, wife of Vasudeva, as their children and that Kālanemi, their father in their previous birth would then be born as Kāṃṣa and kill the children of Devaki by striking their heads on the ground.

Accordingly Kālanemi was born as Kāṃṣa and he killed the six children of Devaki by striking them on the ground. (Skandha 4, Devi Bhāgavata).

The 10th Skandha of Bhāgavata states "killing Kālanemi born as Kāṃṣa" when it refers to the killing of Kāṃṣa.

3) Another story regarding the birth of Kāṃṣa. Kāṃṣa was not actually the son of Ugrasena. It was Nārada who came to Kāṃṣa the story of his birth. It is as follows.

One day the wife of Ugrasena was in her menstors she went to the garden with her companions. Then a Gāndhārva named Dāmila disguised as Ugrasena went to her but she knew the trick and cursed him that he would go to hell. But Dāmila committed rape on her and then left the place making her pregnant. When the child was born Ugrasena's wife greatly hated the child got of an evil deed and cursed it saying that the child would be killed by a member of the family of Ugrasena. Thus Kāṃṣa was the son born to the wife of Ugrasena by Gāndhārva Dāmila. It was because Kāṃṣa was aware of it that he behaved very badly to Ugrasena and Kāṃṣa. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

4) How Kāṃṣa got Madhuvarṇa. In olden times there was a famous place called Madhuvara in the river-bank of Kālindī. The place got the name of Madhuvara because the demon Madhu had residing there. Madhu had a son named Lavan. Lavan was a very wicked demon always ill-treating the devas. Śrātrunā, son of Daśāratha, killed him and lived there establishing a beautiful kingdom there. He named that place Mathurā. After the death of Śrātrunā two of his sons ruled that country. Then when the Śrīṣa dynasty became extinct the city of Mathurā came into the possession of the Yadu dynasty. It was ruled then by a very brave and valiant ruler named Śrīśrānaca. Vasudeva father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa was the son of Śrīśrānaca. After the death of Śrīśrānaca another King of the Yadu dynasty, Ugrasena, became the ruler of the place, Vasudeva accepting cow-rearing as his profession. Kāṃṣa became King keeping Ugrasena as a prisoner. (Skandha 4, Devī Bhāgavata).

5) Vṛṣṇideva and Devaki are imprisoned. Vasudeva married Devaki daughter of Ugrasena and sister of Kāṃṣa. Kāṃṣa pleased with his father's arrangement, hatched a plot to get rid of Devaki, offer a chariot. Kāṃṣa, Vasudeva and Devaki ascended the chariot and Kāṃṣa himself drove the chariot. Then from an unknown source above came a voice which said "Oh King, know thou this and from this moment chalk out thy plans for the future. The eighth son of your sister will kill you for certain. You will be no match against him." (Chapter 1, Bhāgavata 10th Skandha).

Hearing this voice from heaven Kāṃṣa got furious and dragging his sister by the hair raised his sword to kill her. Vasudeva then pleaded weeping not to kill Devaki. Only the eighth child of Devaki was going to kill him. Vasudeva would hand over all the children to him as soon as they were born. Such arguments pacified Kāṃṣa and he left off Devaki without hurting her.

Devaki delivered a son. He grew up under the name of Kīrtīmāna and one day Nārada visited Kāṃṣa and told him that he was the incarnation of an Asura named Kālanemi and the son who would be born to Devaki to kill him was Nārāyaṇa. Kāṃṣa, blind with fury, killed Kīrtīmāna by striking him on the earth and imprisoned both Devaki and Vasudeva.

6) Man-πbud of Kāṃṣa. Pārvatā, Cāndrā, Tṛṇavatā, Mātika, Arjītā, Kēlī, Dhenukā, Aghā, Viśvīda and Pūtanā were born in the Asura family as servants of Kāṃṣa. He sent them to different sides of the country to torment the Yadavas. Many Yadavas left the place. Even Kāṃṣa's father Ugrasena, a great devotee of Viṣṇu, was teased.

In the meantime Devaki delivered six sons including Kīrtīmāna and all of them were killed by Kāṃṣa by smashing their heads against the ground below. The seventh foetus of Devaki was aborted. (Instructed by Mahāviṣṇu, Māyādevī invoked the seventh foetus of Devaki and transferred his spirit to that of another wife of Vasudeva. The child thus born to Rohini was Saṅkarṣaṇa or Balabhadra-Rāma. Mahāviṣṇu then entered the womb of Devaki instructing Māyādevī to enter that of Yāsodā, wife of Nanda-gopā of Ambādī at the same time. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was then born in the image of Viṣṇu. The watchmen were sleeping. Following directions from the new-born child Vasudeva took the child to Gokula and leaving the child there brought back the child of Yāsodā and placed it near Devaki. When the watchmen awoke and knew about the delivery of Devaki they immediately ran to Kāṃṣa to tell... him. Boiling with rage Karna rushed to the side of Devaki and taking the child by the legs, raised it for smashing it against the ground. The child to the frightened dismay of Karna slipped from his hand and rising up in the air said “Hi, ill-mannered wicked Karna, do not waste your valour on women. Your killer has already been born on earth. Do search for him quickly.”

Karna went pale with fright on hearing this and went away to his palace.

7) Conspiry of Kamsa. The thought that his killer was born somewhere made him restless. He let off Vasudeva and Devaki finding them innocent. Then he sat sadly pondering over the future. The courtiers then advised him to kill all the children who had been born within the past ten days and that would include the killer also. Kamsa accordingly sent to different parts of the country his secret agents to kill all children, ten days old.

During this campaign Pétansā, Śaketa, Tṛūvāropu, Ariṣṭā traumatic, and Kṣet tried to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa also but Kṛṣṇa killed them all easily. For details see under each head separately. (10th Sandha, Bhāgavata).

8) Kamsa is Select. Ariṣṭā was one of the prominent Aśvins who killed Kṛṣṇa in the form of an ox. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed it without any difficulty. Nārada who saw this incident informed Kamsa about it adding that Kṛṣṇa and Bālārāma were the sons of Vasudeva only and the child who slipped out of his hands was the child of Yosūpa. Kamsa got furious and he again imprisoned Vasudeva and Devaki and brought to Mathura Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Bālārāma and started thinking of ways and means to kill them. Kamsa arranged to conduct a grand celebration of Ayudhāpūjā (worship of the weapons) and invited Kṛṣṇa and Bālārāma to be the same among many other gopas from Ambādi. He sent his chariot with Akrūra to fetch Kṛṣṇa and Bālārāma from Ambādi. Akrūra privately informed Kṛṣṇa of the bad intentions of Kamsa and Nandagopā and many others from Ambādi started for Mathura. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Bālārāma reached Mathura. There they slew a huge wild elephant and the five Asuras, Cāṇātra, Mustaka, Kūta, Sāla and Kṛṣṇa who Kamsa had kept ready to kill Kṛṣṇa and Rāma. Sitting on a platform watching this, Kamsa became frightened and restless and roared with rage thus “The sons of Nandagopā should be instantly sent away from this palace. All their wealth and all that of the gopas should be confiscated. Bind with ropes the rogue Nandagopā, and kill the wicked Vasudeva. Throw my father, Ugrasena, into the river Kālindī bound hand and foot. Even a father should be killed if he was a relative of one’s enemy.”

Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Bālārāma boiled with rage when they heard the order of Kamsa and Kṛṣṇa, jumping on to the platform pushed Kamsa down and jumping down along with him killed him. (10th Sandha, Bhāgavata).

9) Other details.

(i) Karna had married the two daughters of Jarāsandha named Āsti and Prāpti. (10th Sandha, Bhāgavata).

(ii) Karna was a fierce bowman. All the kings hated him. Karna kept under him a crew of fighting men. He had eight lalaks of charioteers and an equal number of elephants. His army counted thirty-two lalaks of horses. (Dākṣiṇāyapāśa; M.B., Sahā Parva, Chapter 38).

KAMS. Mahābhārata mentions another Karna who was also killed by Kṛṣṇa. But he was not the son of Ugrasena. (M.B. Sahā Parva, Dākṣiṇāyapāśa, Part 285).

KĀMYĀ. A celestial woman. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, it is said that she took part in the celebrations at the birth of Arjuna.

KĀMYAKAVAN. The Pāṇḍavas lived in this forest for a long time, during their forest life. At that time, several sages were performing penance in Kāmyakavana. Vidura who went within search of the Pāṇḍavas met them in this forest. After that Saipaya went to Kāmyakavana and took Vidura with him. It was in this forest that the Pāṇḍavas met sage Mārkandeya and Nārada. (M.B. Vasu Parva).

KAN. Dakṣa. (See under DAKŚA).

KĀNABHŪTI. A devil. His name in the previous life was “Suprātaka”. Once he made friends with the devil Sūdhāśiras. Kūmar who became angry at this cursed Suprātaka and turned him into a devil. Suprātaka settled down in the Vindhyā mountain, assuming the new name “Kānabhūti”. After narrating Bṛhat-kathā to Gourī, Kānabhūti assumed his former form. (For further details, see under the word GURUDIYĀ).

KĀ. Aśoka. A famous sage of ancient India. He was the founder of the Vaikṣesā system. The word means one who eats Kana (atom). His fives gave him this name to ridicule him. He is also called Kanyabhataka. Kanyā is known as Pippaladā also. He got that name because he used to eat Pippali (long pepper) in large quantities. (See under PIPPALĀDA).

KANĀKA. A big forest on the southern base of Mahāmuni. Atjādaru gave birth to Hāmrāṇā in this forest. (Uttara Kāmyakava).

KANAKADHVĀJA. (KANAKAGADA). A son of King Dhṛtarāṣṭra. He was slain by Bīmāsenā. (Sloka 27, Chapter 96, Bhāgavata).

KANAKAKSA. A soldier of Skandadeva. (Sloka 74, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

KANAKAKGADA. See under KANAKDHVĀJA.

KANAKAREKHĀ. Daughter of the King of the island of Kanakapuri. By a curse she was born as the daughter of Paropakāri, King of the city of Vardhamāna. A brahman named Saktideva married her. (Caturdārikātāmbhaka, Kathāsaritarāgara, Tārāta 1).

KANAKAVĀRSHA. A King who ruled the country of Kanakapuri on the banks of the river Gaṅgā. (Kathāsaritarāgara).

KANAKAVATI. A follower of Skandadeva. (Chapter 618 Śalya Parva).

KANAKAYUS. A son of Dhūrurāṣṭra. He had another name, Karakayus. This prince was present at the swayanvar of Draupadi. (Sloka 183, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

KANAKHALA I. The place where the Dakṣayāga was conducted. (Chapter 4, Vīmāna Purāṇa).

KANAKHALA II. A holy place on the shores of the river Gaṅgā. If one bathes in this river one gets the benefit of performing an Atvamedha sacrifice. (Sloka 30, Chapter 84, Vana Parva). Kalidasa speaks about this place in his famous work ‘Meghaduta’. At the behest of Vasishth, Takṣaka, son of Laṅkamana, conquered the forests of Kaṅkhalal and then established a city there called Agast. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

KAŃCANA I. One of the two warriors given to Skanda by Mahaśeṣu. The other was named Meṣhamahī. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 47).

KAŃCANA II. A king of the Puru dynasty. See under the word PŪRUVAMŚA.

KAŃCANAḴA A warrior of Skanda. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 57).

KAŃCANAḴA. A river which flows through Naṁiṣvaraṇa. This is a part of the river Sarasvatī. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 38, Verse 19).

KAŃCANAṀALĀ. A lady attendant of Vāsavadattā, wife of Udāyana.

KAṆCĪ (KAṆCĪPURA). This was the capital city of the Cela Kings. This city was also called Kāṇcīvaram. It is mentioned among the holy cities. (M.B Udyoga Parva, Chapter 161, Verse 21).

KANDARA. A follower of Skanda. (Chapter 46, Sāya Parva).

KANDARPĀ. Another name for Kāmēdeva. Kāmēdeva was born of the mind of Brahmā and as soon as he was born he turned to Brahmā and asked “Kathācāracinti?” (When should I make proud?) So Brahmā gave him the name Kandarpa alias Kandarpa. (Lavānakalambaka, Kāthiṣasāgaṇa, Taranag 6).

KAṆDĪ. A great sage of ancient Bhāratas. He was the father of Māriṣa (Vṛkṣā); wife of the Pracetās.

1) Bāhūs Māriṣa. Māriṣa, daughter of Kandu, took her birth from a tree. There is an interesting story about this in Viśu Purāṇa.

Sage Kandu was one of the devaśas, was performing penance in a hermitage on the banks of the river Gomati. Devendra sent Pramlocā, an enchanting nymph, to Kandu to distract him from his penance. Pramlocā by her sweet words and enticing manners won the heart of the sage and Kandu accepting her as his wife went to the valley of Mandara and lived there happily for a hundred years. One day Pramlocā went and bowed before her husband and sought his permission to go back to Devaloka. “Deśa, stay here for some time more” replied the sage. Another hundred years went by. Again one day she went and sought permission to go home. Again the sage asked her to stay for a while more. Centuries passed without the sage losing even a little of his amours. On the other hand every day it found different channels of expression. One evening the sage stepped out of his Viśu and on seeing that Pramlocā enquired where he was going.

Sage: The sun is going to set. I am going to do my sandhya-vandana. I do not want to bring a break in my daily abstractions and duties.

Pramlocā: Oh! Righteous one, did the sun set for you only today? The Sunset of hundreds of years has gone by without your knowing.

Sage: Dear, you came to this holy river-shore only this morning. It was only this morning that I saw you coming to my Viśu for the first time. Now the day is over and dusk is coming. Why this ridicule? Please do tell me the truth.

Pramlocā: That I came to you one fine morning is quite true. But since that several centuries have elapsed.

Sage: How many years have gone by since I started enjoying with you?

Pramlocā: Nine hundred years, six months and three days have passed since I came to you.

The great sage became very angry and scolded Pramlocā much. That beautiful maiden heard it all standing bathed in perspiration. The sage in rage commanded the trembling nymph to go away from his presence. Pramlocā, thus reprimanded and sent away, rose up in the air and travelled by it. As she flew, the perspiration of her body was absorbed by the tender leaves of trees on the way. She was pregnant at that time and the embryo which went forth along with her perspiration was absorbed in bits by the tender leaves and sprouts. Wind gathered them from the different trees and made everything into one. Moonlight gave it development and gave it the form of a woman. She was named Māriṣa. That was how Māriṣa was born of trees (Chapter 13, Artha 1, Viśu Purāṇa).

2) Cura of Kandu. Kandu’s dear son aged sixteen died in a forest. Grief-striken, the sage cursed that forest and made it a desert. There was no water there and all the trees became dried and dead. Hanumān and party who went in search of Sītas came to this place. (Chapter 48, Kāṅkhamā Kandu, Vālmiki Viśu Purāṇa).

3) Kandu in the presence of Śri Rāma. When Śri Rāma returned to Ayodhya after his exile many sages from all the four different parts came to visit him. Those who came from the south were Kandu, Tattvāyana Nāmuci, Pramuci, Vālmiki, Soma and Agastyā. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

KANDUṬI. A follower of Skanda. (Sloka 14, Chapter 46, Sāya Parva).

KAṆIKĀ I. 1) General information. One of the ministers of Dhrātarāṣṭra. He was a brahmīn well-learned in Kūtāṅkiti (Diplomacy). The bad advice he gave to Dhrātarāṣṭra became well-known as “KAṆIKĀ’s Kūtāṅkiti.”

2) KAṆIKĀ’s Kūtāṅkiti. Once Dhrātarāṣṭra asked KAṆIKĀ how to conquer one’s enemies by using the four methods of Sāma, Dāna, Bheda and Danda. KAṆIKĀ replied: “Threaten the timid ones. Give respect to the brave and kill them by trickery. Give gifts to the greedy ones. If any one becomes your enemy kill him even if he be your father, preceptor, son, brother or friend. Never speak insulting words about others even when you are extremely angry. Never believe the faithful and unfaithful alike.”

3) KAṆIKĀ’s story. KAṆIKĀ justified his policy by means of the story of a fox who put into practice the four tricks to gain his end.

Once there was a very selfish fox in a forest. He felt a desire to eat the flesh of a lion. For that end he made friends with a tiger, a rat and a mongoose. The fox advised the rat to gnaw the paws of the lion and make it lame. The tiger should then kill the lion. The lion was killed and the fox suggested that they could have a hearty meal of the lion after a bath. Everybody excepting the fox went for his bath and the fox stood watch over the carcass of the lion. First came the tiger after his bath. The fox looked worried and the tiger asked him the reason why. The fox said "Comrade, the rat says with arrogance that he is that killed the lion. My pride does not allow me to eat what the rat claims to be his kill." Hearing this the proud tiger left the place saying "Let me see whether I can kill my prey without the help of anybody." Sometimes later the rat came after his bath. The sly fox said "My friend, the mongoose says that the flesh of a lion is poison. It says "Let the rat eat it and die." Hearing this the rat went its way.

Then came the mongoose. The fox threatened it and it went away. The fox then ate the flesh of the lion by himself and was contented.

Kanka then said that the Kings should use such tricks against their enemies. (Chapter 139, Adi Parva).

KANNA II. There is a statement in Mahabharata about another brahmin of the Bharadwaja family who was also very well-versed in Kûnî thus. He was a preacher to Satrujitaya, King of Sauvira. (Chapter 140, Sànta Parva).

KANNA. A child born to an unmarried woman. Vyasa, Karna, Sibi, Aśatak, Pratardana, and Vasuman were Kânicas.

KANJALA. See under Dharmârma.

KANKA I. One of the seven famous archers of the Vṛuj dynesty. The seven are: Kruvarna, Anâdûrû, Samika, Saranîthjaya, Kânîka, Sâmînu and Kunti. (Chapter 14, Sâbhâ Parva).

KANNA II. A King of ancient India. (Sloka 233, Chapter 1, Adi Parva).

KANNA III. A bird, son of Surâsi. (Sloka 69, Chapter 66, Adi Parva).

KANNA IV. The name which Dharmaputra bore when he spent his life in ignorance at the palace of the King of Vîrû. (See under Dharmaputra).

KANNA V. A place of habitation of ancient India. This place was given to Dharmaputra as a gift by the inhabitants of the place. (Chapter 51, Sâbhâ Parva).

KANNAK. A follower of Skandadeva. (Sloka 16, Chapter 46, Sâlya Parva).

KAN'TAKI. A follower of Skandadeva. (Sloka 16, Chapter 46, Sâlya Parva).

KANTARAKA. A city in South India. There is a reference in Mahabharata, Sâbhâ Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 16, about the conquest of this place by Saudêva. Modern scholars are of the opinion that Kântaraka is situated on the banks of the river Venu.

KANTARUKA. An ancient sage. He was a worker of his gotra. It was in this family that the pre-eminent Brahmadatta was born. (Chapter 342, Sânti Parva).

KANTI. A city in ancient India. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 40).

KANTIVRATA. A Vrata observed in the month of Kûrûksha. It consists in offering worship to Balarâma and Śrî Kṛṣṇa and taking food only at night. By observing this Vrata for one year, beauty, longevity and health can be obtained. (Agni Purâna, Chapter 177).

KANYA I. (KÂSYAPA).

1) General information. Kâsyapa attained Purânic fame as the father who brought up Śakuntalâ. From Ēgveda it can be gathered that the Kâsyapa family was very prominent among the Ra family of ancient India. Because he was born in the family of sage Kâsyapa, son of Brahmâ, Kâsyapa was known as Kâsyapa also. Kâsyapa's father was Medhârthi as could be seen by a reference to him in Sloka 27, Chapter 208 of Sânti Parva as Medhârthiśuta. Kâsyapa was staying in a hermitage on the banks of the river Mûlim, with a number of disciples.

Kâvyavârtaka. Vana Parva of Mahâbhârata states that Kâvyavârana was on the northern shore of the river Praviniti. According to certain critics Kâvyavârana was situated on the banks of the river Cambal, four miles to the south of 'Kota' in Rajputâna.

3) Huko Kâsyap get Sakuntala. Once Vûrvâmitra started a severe penance and induced desire to obstruct the attempt sent the enchanting Menakâ to entice him. They fell in love with each other and soon Menakâ bore a girl. The parents left the child in the forest and went their way. Birds (Sûkantus) looked after her for some time and so she was named Sûkântula. Accidentally Kâsyapa came that way and took the child to his Aśrama.

4) The Yaga of Bhârata. Bhârata, son of Dussyantha, performed a peculiar type of Yaga called 'Govira' with Kâsyapa as the chief preceptor to officiate'. (Sloka 130, Chapter 74, Adi Parva).

5) Kâsyap and Duryodhana. Once Kâsyapa narrated to Duryodhana how Mâtali and his wife Sudharmâ went to him in search of a suitable husband to their daughter Gonâkesi. (Chapter 97, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

6) Kâsyapa, a sage of the east. When Sûri Rûmâ returned to Ayodhyâ after his exile many sages from many different parts came to visit him. Kâsyapa was one of those who came from the east. The others who came along with him were, Vasishta, Atri, Vîvîrmitra, Gautama, Jamadagni, Bharadwaja, Saraka, Sarabhaṅga Durvâsî, Mañûja, Vishândakâ and Tumburu.

7) Kâsyapa and Ēgveda.

(i) There are ten Mandaḷas in Ēgveda. The Mandaḷas from two to seven are written by different Ra families. The second Mandaḷa was written by the Bhrgava family of rais, the third by the Vîvîrmitra family, the fourth by that of Vâmadeva, the fifth by Atri, the sixth by that of Bharadwaja and the seventh by the family of Vâsiṣṭha. Fifty Suktas of the first Mandaḷa and the whole of the eighth Mandaḷa were written by Kâsyapa.

(ii) Kâsyapa had a son named Medhârthi. Sukta twelve of Anuvâka four in the first Mandaḷa of Ēgveda is written making Medhârthi a sage.

(iii) Kâsyapa had a daughter named Indivaraprabhâ by Menakâ. (Kâthasûtrasigara). (See under Candravaloka and Kâsyapa).

KANVA II. A king of Pûrvavarta. (Pûru dynasty). He was the son of the brother of Sânturodhâ, father of Dussyantha. His father was Prâltrâtha and he also had a son named Medhârthi. (Agni Purâna).

KANVÂSTRAS. A caste. Originally they were Kaîtriyas. In Mahâbhârata, Anûsadana Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 17 we find that they were reduced to low caste because of their being jealous of the superiority of the Brahmans.

KANYÂHRADA. A sacred place. If one stayed in this place for a while one would attain Devaloka. (Chapter 25, Anûsadana Parva).
KANYAKÅGUNA. A place of habitation of ancient India. (Chapter 9, Bhitara Parva.)

KANYAKUJBHA. (KANYAKUJBHA.)

1) General information. A city of Puranic fame on the banks of the river Gaugé. This is the same place which is now known as Kanauj. Vivasvmitra was the son of Gádhé, King of Kanyakubha.

2) Origin of the city. Once there was a great sage named Kuśa who was the son of Bhráhmá. He had of his wife Vajrásrini four sons named Kuśámbha, Kuśñámbha, Asitárasajasa and Vasu. Kuśa asked them each to rule a country and so each of them built a city of his own. Kuśámbha named his city Kaśñámbha, Kuśñámbha gave his city the name of Mahodayapura, Asitárasajasa called his city Dhámranjanya and Vasu called his city Giriya. Of these Mahodayapura, city of Kuśámbha, became later famous as Kanyakubha. (Bhála Kánda, Valmíki Rámañjya.)

3) How Mahodayapura became Kanyakubha. Kuśámbha begged a hundred daughters of the nymph Gártári. Those beautiful girls were once playing in the forests when the wind-god fell in love with them. The girls rejected his love and Váyu getting angry with them cursed them and made them hunchbacks. Because the hunchback Kanyakubha (hunchback) at that place, the place became known as Kanyakubha.

When the daughters returned to the palace as hunchbacks Kuśámbha was greatly distressed. Weeping, the girls told him what had happened. At that time a sage named Cúti was performing penance in a forest nearby. Some said that Cúti, a gardener’s daughter, married Cúti and they got a son named Brahmadatta. This Brahmadatta married the hundred hunchbacks of Kuśámbha and the very touch of Brahmadatta transformed the hunchbacks into beautiful girls.

After having given his daughters in marriage Kuśámbha conducted a Putrakumára yága to get a son. In that Yága Bhráhmá appeared in person and blessed Kuśámbha and he got a son. The son was named Gádhé. Gádhé got a son and a daughter. The son was named Vivasvmitra and the daughter, Satyavati. Retka married Satyavati. Gádhé and Vivasvmitra were the rulers of Kanyakubha. See under ‘Retka, Vivasvmitra’—(Sargas 32 to 34, Bhitara, Valmíki Rámañjya).

4) Nárad and Kanyakubha. There was a very big laks in Kuśñámbha. Mahábháraṭa once showed Márā to Nárada at that place. (See under ‘Nárad’).

5) Vivasvmitra and Indra take wine together. Vivasvmitra and Indra took wine together at Kanyakubha. (Silka 17, “Chapter 87, Vana Parva.”)

KANYAKUMÁRI (KANYA-KUPA; KANYATÍRTHA)

1) General information. Mahábhárata makes references in many places to Kanyákumári, the southern extremity of former Káñsa and Gártári, the northern boundary. It must, therefore, be surmised that these two holy places were very ancient ones. Vana Parva, praises Kanyákumári at many places. If any one bathes at this place one will become very famous. (Anúśasan Parva, M.B.)

Chapter eighty-five of Arany Parva, of Bhágá Bhárata speaks praisingly of Kanyákumári and Gártári among other places. It says thus:

"If you visit Raabhácala of Pándyadéa you will get the benefit of conducting an Áśvamedhayága. Then you must go farther south and take a dip in Kanyártha. The touch of that water absolves you of all sins. Then visit Gártári situated in the ocean famous in all the three worlds and worshipped by all."

From this it is to be understood that at the time of Mahábhárata Kanyákumári was part of Pándyadéa and that Gártári was an island.

2) Puranic stories about Kanyákumári. There are several stories regarding the origin and renown of Kanyákumári in the Puránas. The most important ones are given below.

(1) Ahoṅkar of sins. The wife of a brahmin named Ánapučika living in Káñsa became unchaste and to wash away her sin she came to Kanyákumári walking all the way and did penance there, daily bathing in its waters. She attained Salvation and it is believed that a bath in its waters would absolve anybody of all his sins. (Mańjumékha.)

(2) Cakta thirtha of Kanyákumári. Púnyaúkáti, daughter of Mayáaura, once went to Káliá and worshipped Síva. After three yugas Síva appeared before her and asked her what she wanted. She replied that she wanted to be merged in Síva always. Síva then said that every three hundred and sixtyfive days would make a year. Four lakhs and thirtythree years would make a Káli Yuga. Kṛta, Tretá, Dvápara and Káli are four Yugas and when two thousand such Yugas are over Brahmá finishes a day. Such thirty days make one month and twelve months a year for Brahmá. When such hundred years of Brahmá are over the great deluge comes. Such ten deluges make a náčchika (twentyfour minutes) of Viṣṇu. Counting thus when you pass ten Viṣṇu deluges Síva passes a second. Then is the time for the fulfillment of your desire. Till that time you sit in meditation on the shores of the south seas. Your hermitage would be known as Kanyákasyatra or Tarpá Sthala. During your stay there you must kill all the wicked people like Bánaská and give them to the people. I will also come and stay with you there then."

Púnyaúkáti after prostracting before Síva went to the south seas. Taking a Japa málá (necklace for prayer) in her hands she assumed the name Kanyákumári, and started her penance. After conquering all the three worlds demon Bánasa was having a wicked rule over his people when he saw Kanyákumári and asked her to be his wife. He approached her with his wicked servants Durmukha and Durdárşana. But Kanyákumári flintly refused and in the battle that ensued, Bánasurá fell dead by the Cakráyudha (Discomb) of Devi and at that spot is the Cakratrítha. (Śandha Puráṇa.)

(3) The phantom child which escaped from the hands of Káñsa at the time of the birth of Sír Kṛṣṇa was that divine lady Kanyákumári. (Padma Puráṇa.)

3) The Geographical. It is said that there was an extension of the present continent to the south and that expansive land called Lánmri was later submerged in waters. There is a description of such an extended land in some of the old literature like Cápapadikattram."

Kanyákumári which was called ‘Kumári-amádá’ also was the first setu; Dhanuskot the middle setu; and Kopíkkara, last setu. (Sêtu Puráṇa.)
4) In History. Kanyakumari had attracted the attention of foreigners long before Christ. Herodotus who lived in the 5th century B.C. has written about Kanyakumari in one of his books.

In the book ‘Periplos’ written in 60 A.D. there is a mention of Kanyakumari. It says: “Pious persons at the end of their lives dedicate their lives to God and go to Kanyakumari on a pilgrimage and stay there accepting an ascetic life. A divine lady bathed in the holy waters there grants you ‘darśana’.”

Praemysl, a bishop who lived two thousand years ago refers to Kanyakumari in his book ‘Komaria Akron’. He had bathed in those waters and worshipped in the Kanyakumari temple.

Marco Polo of Venice who had travelled these parts in 1245 A.D. has written of his worshipping in the Kanyakumari temple. He has also recorded having seen thirty miles from Kanyakumari a glittering figure like that of the Pole-star.

Ibn Battūta who lived in 1293 A.D. has referred to Kanyakumari in his book as Kātakumāri.

KANYAKUMAVEDYATIRTHA. An ancient holy place. It is believed that those who visit this place will attain the world of Prajāpati tātma. (Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

KAPASA. One of the holy places. If a man spends three nights at this place he would attain Svarga. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

KAPA(S). A company of Asuras. The Mahābhārata gives a story of how the brahmins killed these demons. The Asvinidevas once came to the earth and gave eyesight to the blind sage Cyavana. It was the time when Indra had desired soma juice to the Asvinidevas. Sage Cyavana offered soma juice to the Asvinidevas and promised the Asvinidevas that he would lift the ban on wine for them. Cyavana conducted a Yaga to which the Asvinidevas were also invited. Indra and the other devas refused to take the sacrificial wine and butter along with the Asvinidevas. Cyavana got angry and he produced from the sacrificial fire an Asura named Maṇḍa. When Maṇḍa and his long teeth the demon went round eating all the Devas. All at once Cyavana conquered the earth and the Kapas subjugated heaven. When they lost both heaven and earth the Kapas approached the brahmins for help. The brahmins started a war against the Kapas. The Kapas sent Dhana to the brahmins for peace-talks. Dhana said “The Kapas are equal to you. Oh brahmins, and so why do you fight them? They are well-versed in Vedas and are very wise men who are entitled to conduct Yāgas. They are righteous persons similar to Brahmā-s. Prosperity lives in them. They never keep unchaste wives nor do they eat stale meat. It is not proper to fight against such virtuous persons.”

But Dhana did not pay heed to what Dhana said and they killed all the Kapas in bulk. The Kapas, though they were born Asuras, were good-natured persons. (Chapter 157, Anuśāsana Parva) KAPALA. See under Brahmā, 5th Para.

KAPALAMOGANA. A holy place on the shores of the river Sarasvati, in Kuruksetra. (Chapter 88, Vana Parva). See under Kauśika and Śiva.

KAPALI. One of the eleven Rudras. This Rudra was the son of Sthānū, son of Brahmā. (Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

According to the Mahābhārata the eleven Rudras are the following: Mrgavyādha, Sarpa, Nirṛti, Ajikapāt, Ahībudhnya, Pināki, Kivala, Kapālī, Śīhāgū, Bhargava and Dahana. (See under Kapardi).

The eleven Rudras are worshipped in different ways in Agni Purāṇa and Viśnu Purāṇa.

KAPALI. II. Śiva. The Mahābhārata gives the following story regarding the reason for Śiva’s getting the name of Kapali.

Once a great controversy arose regarding the supreme sovereignty of the three worlds between Brahmā and Viśnu. Then there came to their midst an effulgence of Śiva’s brilliance and showed them the source of this brilliance is the real sovereignty of the three worlds”. Brahmā went up to find the upper end and Viśnu went down to find the lower end. They travelled for a very long time without finding the end when Brahmā saw a Kēti flower coming down. On enquiry the flower said it was coming from the origin of the brilliance and that Brahmā should not follow it. Brahmā ignored this advice and followed the flower till it was returned to him. This is the flower which was given to him by Śiva.

Thus Śiva became a Kapali. Śiva cursed Brahmā back saying “You will not be worshipped by anyone” (See under Śiva, Brahmā).

KAPARDE. One of the eleven Rudras. According to Agni Purāṇa the Ekādaśa Rudra (eleven Rudras) are the following: Hara, Bhatṛīpā, Trīyāmbaka, Āparājaśī, Vṛṅkali, Sāmbhū, Kapardi, Kapalī, Mrgavyādha, Sarpa and Kapalī. (Chapter 18, Agni Purāṇa).

KAPASA. A demon. He was Kāyapa’s son born of his wife Danu. (Chapter 65, Bhīma Parva).

KAPASA BHIKSU. A false sage. To illustrate the fact that if a man fails in his deictic he will be subjected to ridicule, a story of a false sage occurs in Kathāsārasīgama. Since this has a special place in the Indian literature his story is given below:

There was once a city called Mākandī on the banks of the river Gaṅgā. In that city lived a sage who observed silence as a Vrata. One day when he went begging he saw a beautiful girl in a Vaiśya’s house and the false ascetic was attracted by her. Breaking his silence he said “What a pity!” and left the place. The Vaiśya was worried why the sage said so and approached him and asked why he broke his silence to say so. The sage said: “Your daughter is ill-omened. If you give her in marriage all of you remaining will perish. So pack her in a box and with a torch burning on the top of it set it alight on the river.” The Vaiśya did so.

The sage coming to his disciples told his disciples to his side and said “Tonight a box with a torch burning on the top of it will come floating on the river. You must take it and bring it to me without opening it.”

The disciples went to the river and seeing the box coming floating caught it and took it to their preceptor. But from a point high up in the river a prince had seen the box coming floating and had opened it. He had then released the girl from the box and had floated the box again filling it with a black monkey. When the disciples got the box to the guru he said “Take it upstairs and keep it there. There is a Pūjā to be conducted with the recital of sacred verses. It should not be seen by others. You can all go to sleep." The false sage went up eager to enjoy the girl in the box and opened the box with pleasant thoughts. But to his utter horror there jumped out of the box a ferocious black monkey that mauled him terribly. The Kapaṭuḥaṇu was fooled. (Tarāta 1. Lāvānakālamūkha, Kathāśārināgara).

KAPILA. A river (M.B. Bhājana Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 24).

KAPIDIVAJA. Arjuna.

KAPILA I. A fierce sage.

1) Genealogy and birth. Kapila was the son of Kardama-prajapati, son of Brahmadāta, born to him of his wife Devahūti, grand-daughter of Brahmā and daughter of Svaśambhava Manu. Svaśambhava Manu got two sons named Priyavātra and Uṇānapāla and three daughters named Aklīti, Devahūti and Pṛasiṭalī. The daughters were married to Ruci, Kardama and Daksa respectively. To Ruci was born of Akāśī a boy named Yajñiśa. He was a partial incarnation of Visu. To Kardama was born of his wife Devahūti Kapila the great sage and the celestal exponent of the Śāṅkya philosophy. Pṛasiṭalī got many daughters (8th Šaṅkhaṇī, Devī Bhāgavata).

Sage Kapila was known as Caṇḍradhānaṇi also. (Sloka 17 Chapter 109, Udvyoga Parva).

Kardama married the daughter of Vaivavavā Muni called Devahūti. They spent their honeymoon in the air travelling throughout the world. Devahūti delivered nine daughters and a son named Kapila. Kardama-prajapati gave his daughters in marriage to Marici and the other sages.

2) Kapila—incarnation of Visu. The Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa states that Kapīla was the incarnation of Visu. In Chapter 93 there is this statement: "Bhagavān Nārāyaṇa will protect us all. The Lord of the universe has now been born in the world as Kapilacarya."

3) Kapila attained spiritual knowledge in his mother. Kapila started a severe penance. At that time Kardama-prajapati died and Devahūti wife of Kardama and mother of Kapila approached Kapila and asked him to instruct her on the path of Bhakti Yoga. Kapila imparted to her spiritual knowledge and gave her instructions to follow the path of Bhakti Yoga for Salvation. She entered into a life of austerities and attained Samādhi (3rd Šaṅkhaṇī, Bhīgavata).

4) "new Kapila burnt to ashes the Sagaraputras. Once there was a king called Sagarā in the Solar dynasty. He had two wives named Keśī and Sumati. Keśī got a son named Asamajāśa and Sumati got sixty thousand sons. Once Sagarā conducted an Advamedha Yaga at a place where the rivers Sindhu and Gagū meet. Amśuśrī, son of Asamajāśa led the sacrificial horse. Indra disguised as a demon stole the horse when it came to a mountain side and hid it in the nether worlds. Sagarā sent his sixty thousand sons in search of the horse. They dug the whole continent of Jambudīpa surrounded by mountains. Devas, gandharvas, and bhūjaṅgas came up to Brahmā. Then Brahmā said: "The whole of this world belongs to Visu. He has incarnated himself as sage Kapila to kill the sons of Sagarā and is now in the nether-world bearing this world. In the fire of his anger the Sagaraputras will be burnt to death". On hearing this all of them came back. The Sagaraputras returned to their father when they could not find the horse. But Sagarā ordered: "Go and dig again till you find it". They went to the nether world. After circling the eight elephants who carry the world they dropped down to the nether world through the north-east corner of the earth. There they saw sage Kapīla engaged in penance and the sacrificial horse grazing by his side. The sons of Sagarā made a great hubbub there and Kapīla produced a big sound of rebuke and stared at them. All the sixty thousand sons of Sagarā were reduced to ashes. For more details see under Bhagāratha. (Sargas 39 and 40, Bālakāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

5) Kapilagadāstātra. Kapila made renown Kapilāśatra sitting in his Ārama and taught it to his mother Devahūti. Kapila was a great yogin. The yoga Sāstra itself is based on the Śāṅkya philosophy of Kapila. His Śāṅkya Sāstra, known as Kapilāśatra also, contains the distinctive yoga of meditation and it creates in you spiritual knowledge removing your ignorance totally. After teaching his mother his Kapila went to the Ārama of Pulāna and lived there. (8th Šaṅkhaṇī, Devī Bhāgavata).

6) Other details regarding Kapila.

(f) Kapila was the preceptor of the King of Sindhū. 5th Šaṅkhaṇī, Bhīgavata).

(ii) Kapila visited Bhājana while the latter was lying on his bed of arrows before his death. (Sloka 8, Śaṅkha Parva, M.B.).

(iii) There occurred a discussion once between Kapila and Sage named Gau on the subject whether Gṛhasūdradharmar (doing one's duty as a house-holder) or yogadāna (doing yoga practices) was superior. (Chapter 286, Śaṅkha Parva).

(iv) Kapila was a sage of great brilliance of body. When the sons of Sagarā went to the nether world in search of the horse they saw the sage Kapīla sitting there radiating a brightness equal to that of fire. (Chapter 107, Aranyā Parva).

(v) Kapila was an authority on Śāṅkya and Veda and was a worshipper of Śiva. (Sloka 4, Chapter 18, Anuśāsana Parva).

(vi) He has written two books, namely, Śāṅkyaśāstra and Tattvasaṃśāstra.

KAPILA II. Another name of Śūrya. (Sloka 24, Chapter 3, Vana Parva, M.B.).

KAPILA III. A serpent king. It is believed that Kapila is one of the seven serpent kings who hold the earth in its position. The others are: Dharmā, Kāma, Kāla, Vasu, Vāsuki and Ananta. (Sloka 41, Chapter 150, Anuśāsana Parva).

KAPILA IV. Son of an Agni named Bhānu. He was his fourth son and was believed to be another incarnation of sage Kapila (Sloka 21, Chapter 221, Vana Parva).

KAPILA V. Another sage who was the father of Śālihorśa. He officiated in a yajña conducted by Upāri-caranava. (Chapter 336, Śaṅkha Parva).

KAPILA VI. A son of Viśākṣiṣṭa who was a brahma-vādī. (Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva).

KAPILA VII. A synonym of Śiva. (Chapter 17, Anuśāsana Parva).

KAPILA VIII. A synonym of Viśu. (Chapter 149, Anuśāsana Parva).

KAPILÁ II. A holy place of Kurukṣetra. If one bathes in a sacred pond there one will get the benefit of making a thousand Godaśinas (giving away cows as gifts). (Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

KAPILÁ III. A river. (Chapter 9, Bhīśma Parva).

KAPILÁ IV. The mother of Pāhacūśika. (Chapter 218, Śanti Parva).

KAPILA (M). Seventh division of Kuśadvipa. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 14).

KAPILAHRADA. A sacred place in Kāśi. If one bathes there one will get the benefit of performing a Kājāśayya yajña.

KAPILASĀSTRA. The Śāstra made by Kapila, the sage. After making this Śāstra Kapila communicated it to his mother Devalagūti. (Devī Bhagavatī 12th Skanda).

KAPILÁSVĀ. Son of a King called Kuvalāśva. A sage named Dhanḍhu destroyed him. (Śloka 40 Chapter 204, Vana Parva).

KAPILA TĪRTHA. A sacred pond owned by a King called Kapila. (Śloka 32, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

KAPILÁVAJĀ. A sacred place. If you stay there and abstain from fasting you will get the benefit of giving away in charity a thousand cows. (Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

KAPILEYA. Son of Viśvaśītra. After saving Sūnaśeṣtha from death, Viśvaśītra was fondling the child on his lap. At that time, the child’s father Ajigarta came to him and wanted Viśvaśītra to return the child to him. Viśvaśītra then told him: “Like Kapileya and Bhājirāva, this is also my son.” From this, we may infer that Kapileya must have been Viśvaśītra’s son. (Antareya Brāhmaṇa).

KAPINJALĀ. A river of ancient India. (Śloka 26, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

KAPINJARĀ. (KAPINJALĀ). A bird. There is a story about the origin of this bird in the Mahābhārata. Once Tvaśā created Trīśiras to kill Indra. Trīśiras had three heads. When by one head he devoured the Vedas by another head he drank wine and by the third he looked at the world wickedly. Indra envied of the growing strength of Trīśiras fell him down by his Vajrayuddha. A person called Taksaka carrying an axe came that way then and by orders from Indra he cut off the heads of Trīśiras. When the heads fell down there emerged from them birds called Kapinjalā, Tittiri and Kalapiṅgala. From the head which received the Vedas came the birds Kapinjalā; from the head that drank the wine came the birds Kalapiṅgala; and from the head that looked at the world with wickedness came the birds Tittiri. (Chapter 9, Udyoga Parva).

KAPISKANDIJA. A soldier of Skandadeva. (Śloka 57, Chapter 43, Sālīya Parva).

KARANDHAMĀ

2) Han ho gai his name Karandhama. Once there came a famine in the country of Suvarcas. The treasury became empty. Taking that opportunity the enemies attacked his country. There was no army for him to fight against his enemies. Meditating upon God he bared his hands and then an army sufficient to fight his enemies appeared before him and using that he defeated them. Because he arranged an army by Karandhamana (bellowing of hands) he was given the name of Karandhamana also.

3) Other deities

(a) The celebrated King Aukstik was the son of Karandhamana. (Chapter 4, Agvamedha Parva).

(b) Karandhamana was a prominent member of the court of Yama. (Sloka 16, Chapter 8, Sâbâ Parva).

KARANDHAMANA. See under the word Karandhamana.

KARANDHAMA. A tirtha situated near the southern ocean. The two holy places in the southern coast are, Agastya tirtha, Saubhadra tirtha, Pauloma tirtha, Karandhamana tirtha and Bhairadaja tirtha were called Pašca sarita. In the course of Arjuna's pilgrimage, he visited these Pašca sarita. At that time, the Sages never used to go there. There was a special reason for it. The five celestial women, Varâ, Suraabhî, Svarata, Bâhu and Lâtâ used to live in the form of crocodiles as the result of a sage's curse. Arjuna liberated all of them. (For details see under the word "Varâ").

KARÂNJANILAYÂ Anâlî, the mother of all trees. She was the daughter of Daksâ and the wife of Kaîya. She is known as Virudhâ also. That is how Viru became a synonym of tree. It is believed that Anâlî stays in the tree Karânj. To obtain himsings from Anâlî people worship the Karânj tree. (Sloka 35 to 36, Chapter 230, Vana Parva).

KARAPARVA. A holy place in the Sarasvati river valley. (M.B., Sâlya Parva, Chapter 54).

KÂRÂSÂKA. A place of habitation in ancient India. (Chapter 9, Bhûsma Parva, M.B.).

KÂRTISÂ. A river. (Chapter 9, Bhûsma Parva).

KÂRÎTÎ. A place of habitation in ancient India. (Chapter 9, Bhûsma Parva).

KÂRÎKHANDA. A place of habitation in ancient India. This place was conquered by Karna for Duryodhâna. (Vana Parva).

KÂRÁNDU. A sannyâsi King mentioned in Sûkta 112, Anuvûkâ 16, Mandâla 1 of Rgveda.

KÂRÂKARA. A prominent serpent. See under Kâdrû.

KÂRÂKATI. See para 12 under Brahmâ.

KÂRÎ. The son of the sage Aparishka by his wife Aksakâtrita.

KÂRÂKOTÂKA. A terrible serpent.

1) Birth. This serpent was born to Kaîya by his wife Kâdrû.

2) The curse. Once Kârakotâka cheated the sage Nârada. The angry sage cursed him and said that he would have to remain without the power of movements in the forest till Nala came to rescue him. From that day Kârakotâka lived in that forest, awaiting the arrival of Nala.

3) Nala and Kârakotâka. Once a wild fire spread all over the forest. Kârakotâka whose power of movement was destroyed by Nârada's curse, cried aloud, calling upon Nala to come and save him. It was at this time that Nala arrived at the spot after leaving Damayanti in the forest. Nala came to him, on hearing his cries. The serpent informed Nala about the story of Nârada's curse and reducing himself to the size of a thumb sat on the ground. Nala removed him to a safe spot away from the ear. The serpent asked Nala to walk a few steps counting his footsteps. Nala did so and at the tenth step, Kurkotaika struck him and his whole body was turned blue. Suddenly Kurkotaika assumed his own original shape and spoke to Nala as follows:—"I have changed your appearance so that people may not be able to recognize you. Kali who is troubling you, still lives within you. His body is affected by my poison. You need not fear danger from poison any more. You shall be defeated in battle. Go and engage yourself as the charioteer of Ruparpana, King of Ayodhya. You will teach him Astavahdaya mantra. In return for it he will teach you Akshabdaya mantra. Here are two garments which I give you. If you put them on, you will be restored to your own shape. May you be blessed again with a happy family life.

After saying this, Kurkotaika vanished. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 60).

KARKOTAKA A land beyond the eastern ocean. It is not far from there to the river Sīvā. The Udāya mountain is just across it. (Kailāsanāthagāra).

KARMAHIȚI The land of Bhārata. How this continent got the name of Karnabhāmī is given below. All those who lived in this place enjoyed a life in Swarga on earth or in hell according to the class to which their actions belonged, namely Sātvic, Rājasic or Tāmasic. It is possible for only this land to obtain for its people life in other worlds. Therefore this land got the name Karnabhāmī. (8th Skanda, Devī Bhāgavata).

KARMAJIT A King of the family of Arjuna. He was the son of Bhṛṣadana and the father of Sṛutaḥbhujā. (9th Skanda, Devī Bhāgavata).

KARṇa I The eldest son of Kuntī. Though he was the brother of Pṛṛdāvas he joined sides with the Kauravas and became the King of Aśā. So the name of Karna comes in the genealogy of the Aśa royal family.

2) Birth of Karna. Pṛṛdāva, a King of Candramavana, married Kunti, daughter of King Sūrasena. This girl was brought up even from childhood by a King called Kurudheja. She grew up in the palace of the King. She was once put in charge of attending to the welfare of those engaged in religious duties. The sage Durvāsas came there then and stayed for four months as the king's guest. Kuntī served the sage during his stay there with so much care, patience and devotion that the sage was immensely pleased and gave her at the time of his departure a divine mantra. If she called upon any god repeating that mantra, then, that god would manifest himself to her and bless her with a son equal to him in glory. The mantra was to be used only five times. Kunti was young and wanted to test the power of the mantra. So she recited the mantra meditating on the sun. Instantly she felt she saw a divine person coming to her from the sun. She was perplexed. But the divine form embraced her and consolled her saying that she would never lose her virginity even if she bore a son from him. None excepting her step-mother knew about this. In due course Kunti delivered a male child and with the help of her step-mother she put that child in a box and floated it on the river Aśā.

That box leaving the river Aśā entered the Yamanā river and leaving Yamanā it entered the river Gaṅgā. Drifting slowly the box reached Campāpur, a country of Sūtras. Adhiratha born of the Sūtravatī and an ally of the Kauravas, saw a box floating on the river while he went for his bath and took it home. Rādhā, wife of Adhiratha, who was childless was greatly pleased to see a babe inside the box and they adopted it and brought it up. The boy was named Varuṇa. It was this babe that became the celebrated Karna afterwards. (Four chapters from 65, Vana Parva).

3) Education of Karna. Karna grew up in the house of Adhiratha in the country of Aśā bearing the names Vasuvena and Vraja. Kunti knew this through a dream. When the time came for imparting education to Karna Adhiratha sent him to Hastinapura to the presence of Drona for teaching him archery. Karna studied under Kṛṣṇa and Parasurāma also. After his education he entered into a treaty with Duryodhana. (Chapter 309, Vana Parva).

4) Karna is cursed. Karna was cursed by a brahmin and Parāśurāma. The story is given below. Even while they were studying archery Arjuna and Karna vied with each other. Karna once requested Drona to teach him in private the secret of the Brahmā missile to fight against Arjuna. But Drona did not accede to his request.

Karna then went to Mahendragiri and bowed before Parāśurāma and represented himself as a member of the Bhiru family. He said he had come to him to be his disciple and learn the secret of the Brahmā missile from him. Parāśurāma believed him and accepting him as his disciple taught him many new techniques in archery. Once Karna was wandering in the vicinity of the Aśrama when he saw a lonely cow grazing there and Karna without knowing that it belonged to a brahmin sent an arrow and killed it. The brahmin got furious and cursed Karna thus "Oh, sinner, the wheel of your chariot would go down in the mud when you face the enemy to fight against whom you are now taking training. Then, when you stand perplexed, your opponent would cut off your head." Karna requested for a re-novel of the curse but the brahmin refused to show any mercy.

Parāśurāma taught Karna the secret of the Brahmā missile. One day tired after a day's fast and a walk around the Āśrama with his disciples Parāśurāma slept resting his head on the lap of Karna. Then a beeble named Alakka attacked Karna and started sucking blood from his thigh. Blood was oozing from his thigh and still Karna did not sit from his position lest it should disturb his guru in his nap. Suddenly Parāśurāma awoke and stared at the beeble and the beeble fell to the ground.

According to a belief of old, all other parts of the world excepting Bhāratavarta were inhabited by Devata.
dead. It then took the form of a demon and rising up in the air said "Swâmin! I am the demon called Duryodhana. Once I carried away by force the wife of the sage Bhrgu and the angered sage cursed me and made me a beetle. When I craved for pardon he said that I would be given my original form by Parasurâmana."

When the demon disappeared saying so much Parasurâmana turned to Karâna who stood with respect, his dress all covered with blood. Parasurâmana said: "No brahmin can bear so much pain with such patience. Surely, you are not a brahmin. Let me know the truth." Trembling with fear Karâna revealed his identity and then Parasurâmana cursed him saying "You will forget the secret of the Brahmanas at the time when you want to use it against your enemy." (Chapters 2 and 3, Sânti Parvâ).

5) How Karâna became the King of Agga. The Pândavas and Kauravas were studying archery under Droñâcârya together and Karâna also was among them. When their education was complete a day was fixed to exhibit the skill of the students. The public also was invited to see the skill of the princes. Everybody showed his best and Arjuna displayed super-human skill so that the van assemblage was lost in wonder and admiration. Then strode Karâna to the scene and not only did he duplicate with ease Arjuna's feats but he did something more. The assemblage was dumfounded. Arjuna turned pale. At this moment Kîrpa stood up and questioned the right of Karâna to compete with those with royal blood in them. Then arose Duryodhana and said: "If the combat is not in order simply because Karâna is not a prince it is easily remedied. I crown Karâna as the King of Agga". Then there came to the scene the aged Adhirâtha, the foster-father of Karâna, and as Karâna saw him coming he went and bowed before him and Adhirâtha embraced him with tears in his eyes. (Chapters 134 to 136, Ädi Parvâ, M[B].)

6) Karâna's armor and ear-rings. Karâna was born with an armour on his body and rings on his ears. Chapter 99 of Uttar Parvâ says thus: "To Kûntî was born of Sûrya the mighty Karâna. Even at his birth he was adorned with an armour over his body and rings in his ears." Sûrya had ordained that as long as Karâna wore the armour and ear-rings he would be unconquerable. Indra saw this and wanted to get Karâna rid of these so that Arjuna, his son, might gain a victory over Karâna. Karâna was reputed for his charity and Indra under the guise of a brahmin went to Karâna and begged of him his ear-rings and armour. The Sun god had already warned him in a dream that Indra would thus try to deceive him. Still Karâna could not bring himself to refuse any gift that was asked of him and so he cut off the ear-rings and armour with which he was born and gave them to the Brahmana. The only request that the noble Karâna did make was that separating the ornaments from his body no wound should be made. Indra did it with great skill neither hurting him nor making even a scratch on his body. Indra had asked for any boon he wanted. The Sun god had also advised him to ask for a good weapon in return in case he gave away his assets and so he requested Indra the best of the weapons he possessed. Indra gave him his weapon, the Śakti, called Vaijyâjñi also. Karâna had to use that weapon to kill the great Ghatotkaca in the Mahabhârata battle.

7) Other details.
(i) Karâna was present at the Swayâvanvara of Droñapâdi. (Sloka 4, Chapter 185, Ädi Parvâ.)
(ii) Bhûma defeated Karâna once in a single combat. (Sloka 20, Chapter 54, Sabhâ Parvâ.)

(iv) Karâna defeated Jarâskandha once in a single combat. (Chapter 44, Sabhâ Parvâ.)
(v) Karâna defeated in his victory march many kings like Droñapâdi, Bhûgadatta and Keralsa. (Chapter 254, Aranya Parvâ.)
(vi) Karâna conquered the cities of Mâlini and Campâ and annexed them to the country of Anga. (Chapter 5, Karâna Parvâ.)
(vii) Karâna prompted Duryodhana to seize the Pandavas living in the forest. (Chapter 7, Vana Parvâ.)
(viii) Karâna swore that he would kill Arjuna. (Chapter 257, Vana Parvâ.)
(x) Kûndaprapûthra is the name of Karâna's bow.

8) Karâna and the Kurukshetra battle. The great battle of Mahabhâratâ lasted for eighteen days and some of the incidents touching Karâna during that period are given below:
(i) Before the great war started Kûntî went alone to the shores of Gaûñgâ and met Karâna. She then confessed to him that she was his mother and that the Pandavas were his brothers. She advised Karâna to join sides with the Pandavas and the Sun god approved of it. But Karâna refused to do so. He said he would never forsake Duryodhana who had brought him up from his childhood at a time when he was in peril. But he promised his mother that he would never kill any of her other four sons but would kill Arjuna in the battle-field. (Chapter 146, Udyoga Parvâ.)
(ii) Karâna started his fight against the Pandavas after taking blessings from Bhûma. (Chapter 3, Droñapâdi.
(iii) Karâna fought against the princes of Kokaya, Arjuna, Bhûma, Udrâjâyûrjuna and Sâyaki in single combat. (Chapter 32, Droñapâdi.)
(iv) Abhimanyu defeated Karâna in a single combat. (Chapter 46, Drona Parvâ.)
(v) Karâna made Bhûma unconscious. (Chapter 139, Drona Parvâ.)
(vi) Karâna once withdrew a bit when hit by the arrow of Arjuna. (Chapter 139, Drona Parvâ.)
(vii) Karâna insulted Droñâcârya at one time. (Chapter 139, Drona Parvâ.)
(viii) Karâna killed Ghatotkaca with the weapon Śakti which Indra had given him in exchange for the armour and ear-rings which he had given Indra. (Chapter 180, Drona Parvâ.)
(ix) Karâna ran away from the battlefield when he heard that Droñapâdi was dead. (Chapter 193, Karâna Parvâ.)
(x) Karâna was made the Generalissimo of the Kauravas army when Drona died. (Chapter 10, Karâna Parvâ.)
(xi) Sâlyâ became the charioteer of Karâna. (Chapter 86, Karâna Parvâ.)
(xii) The beautiful headwear of Arjuna fell down to the ground by the snake-faced arrow of Karna. (Chapter 90, Karna Parva).

(xii) When Arjuna was fighting against Karna the chariot-wheels of Karna sank into the ground. (Chapter 90, Karna Parva).

(xiv) Arjuna slew Karna. (Sloka 50, Chapter 91, Karna Parva).

(xv) Karna had three sons named Citrasena, Satyasena and Susena. All the three were killed at Kuruksetra by Nakula. (Sloka 19 to 50, Chapter 10, Salya Parva).

9) Karna died: to heaven. After his death Karna went to heaven and merged with his father, the Sun god. (Sloka 20, Chapter 5, Svaragorahana Parva).

10) Names of Karna.

(i) Because Karna was born with an effulgence (Vasu) he was first given the name Vasuvena.

(ii) Because he was born with Kundalas (ear-rings) in his Karna (ears) he was called Karna. (Chapter 302, Aranya Parva).

(iii) Besides these two he had many other names. A few are given below: Adhiratna, Adityanandana, Adityataanaya, Vigraham, Angelika, Arvaka, Bharathasarba, Gopatra, Kaun.

teya, Kumukuta, Kurudvaha, Kurupantarapati, Kuruvittu, Kuruvittu, Radasaiva, Raddhama, Raddhaba, Radasaiva, Raddhama, Raddhama, Raddhama, Raddhama, Raddhama, Raddhama, Raddhama, Raddhama, Raddhama, Raddhama, Raddhama, Raddhama, Raddhama.

KARNA II. A son of Dhrtarastra. Bhusasena killed this Karna. (Chapter 67, Bhishma Parva).

KARNA III. Younger brother of Ghattha. See under magjikana.

KARNAKA A barber who lived in Kati. (Chapter 29, Harivarshana).

KARANARIVHA. A sage who attained Svarga after observing correctly the duties of Vana-prastha. (Sloka 8, Chapter 244, Santi Parva).

KARANAPARWA. One of the Parvans of Mahabharata. See under Mahabharata.

KARNAPRAVARANA. A country of South India. The army of Durvodhana contained soldiers from this country. (Sloka 13, Chapter 51, Bhishma Parva).

KARNAPRAVARANA (S). An ancient tribe of people who inhabited the shores of the sea in the south. The one distinctive feature of this tribe was that their ears were extraordinarily long, drooping down to the feet. Sahadeva conquered and subdued this tribe. (Sloka 67, Chapter 51, Bhishma Parva). They once brought to Yudhishthira many valuable presents and paid their respects to him. (Sloka 19, Chapter 52, Sabbha Parva).

KARSAPANA (M). Karsikam. A measure of weight for gold and silver in ancient India.

KARSI. A Deva Gandharva, Mahabharta, Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 56 says that he participated in the celebrations connected with Arjuna's birth.

KARTA. A Visvadeva. (Sloka 35, Chapter 91, Amusa Parva).

KARTASVARA. An Asura. Once this Asura became world emperor. (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 52).

KARTVAYARUNA (KARTVAYIRA). A renowned King of the Hehaya dynasty.

1) Genealogy. From Mahavisnu were descended in the following order: Brhmn—Atri—Gandrima—Buddha—Paruravas — Ayu—Yayati—Yadu—Sahasrajit—Satajit—Ekavira—(Hehaya)—Dharma—Kriya—Bhrisna—Kartvayira—Kartvayirayuna.

2) Hehaya Dynasty and Bhargava Dynasty. The Hehayas were Kasatriyas and the Bhargavas were Sakastra. The Bhargava sages were the family preceptors of the Hehaya Kings. The Hehayas who were generous and charitable, used to give plenty of wealth to the Bhargavas. Consequently in course of time, the Bhargavas grew wealthy while the Hehayas gradually declined. In order to tide over their difficulty, the Hehayas decided to borrow some money from the Bhargavas. But the Bhargavas refused to oblige, on the plea that they had no money. The enraged Kasatriyas (Hehayas) began to persecute the Bhargas (Bhargavas). The Bhargas left for the Himalayas after burying all their treasures under the floor of their Atramas. The Kasatriyas pursued them and hunted them even there. At last a Brhmmani who belonged to the Bhargava race, gave birth to a sage named Aurova through her thigh. With his birth the Hehayas began to lead a less aggressive life. After the lapse of many years, the mighty Kargtivayarjuna was born in the Hehaya dynasty and the mighty sage Jamadagni was born in the Bhargava dynasty. Both of them nourished their hereditary lead. With his capital in the city of Mahismati on the banks of the river Namadda, Kargtivayarjuna began his reign. (See under Aurova 1).

3) Thousand Hands of Kargtivayarjuna. Once when Kargtivayarjuna was living in his capital Mahismati, the sage Narada happened to come there. The King greeted him with due reverence and asked him what course of action was to be followed for attaining moksa (salvation) and at the same time for enjoying worldly pleasures. Narada replied that by performing the rites known as "Bhadradipa Pratistha", both these objects could be achieved. Accordingly, Kargtivayra went to the banks of the river Namadda with his wife.
and began the observance of Bhadrariya Pratiṣṭhā. Kārtavirya’s grand was Dattātṛī. At the conclusion of the Vāga rite, Dattātṛī who was pleased, asked Kārtavirya’s what boon he wished to have. Kārtavirya with joined palms asked him many boons one of which was that he should have a thousand arms. Dattātṛī granted him the boons, and Kārtavirya who became proud of his new possession, ruled at Mahismā for 96,900 years. (Brahmacārī Purāṇa, Chapter 44).

4) Vāyu’s Warning. Kārtavirya’s who returned triumphantly after receiving the boon from Dattātṛī, heard a mysterious voice warning him in the following words: — “You fool! Don’t you know that a Bṛhmaṇa is superior in a Kṣatriya? A Kṣatriya governs his subjects in alliance with the Bṛhmaṇa”. On hearing this, Kārtavirya became angry. He understood that Vāyu, the divine messenger was behind the mysterious voice. He despised Vāyu and argued that a Kṣatriya was superior to a Bṛhmaṇa. Vāyu gave him a warning that a Bṛhmaṇa would curse Kārtavirya. (M.B. Ammasāna Parva, Chapter 152).

5) Kārtavirya cursed by the sage. Once Agni ireful) appeared before Kārtavirya and begged for food. The King allowed him to feed upon mountains and trees from any part of his Kingdom. So Agni began to devour the woods and hills. This led to the burning down of an Aśrama owned by a sage called Apaṇa. The enraged Sage came to know that Kārtavirya’s Kārtavirya was responsible for the havoc and pronounced a curse that Parāśārama would chop off all the thousand hands of Kārtavirya.

6) Kārtavirya and Raavana. In the course of his triumphal march, after conquering the whole world, Rāvana once arrived with his forces on the bank of the river Narmadā. Enjoying the smooth flow of the crystal clear stream of the Narmadā and the pleasant sand banks in the river-bed, he spent a night there with his followers. Early next morning, he took his bath in the river and setting up the idol of Śiva on the sandbank, began to worship it.

Just then Kārtavirya’s and his wives came to the place and began their water sports, a few yards down the river from the place where Rāvana was sitting. As part of his amusement, Kārtavirya stopped the flow of the river by making a dam with his thousand arms. This caused the level of the water to rise and Rāvana with his materials of worship was submerged in the flood. Enraged at this disturbance to his worship, he sent two of his men down the river bank to find out what was happening. They traced the source of the trouble to Kārtavirya’s and his water-sports and reported the matter to their master. At once Rāvana armed himself with his bow rushed to Kārtavirya’s and began a fierce fight. At last Rāvana fell down under the heavy stroke of Kārtavirya’s mace and was bound in chains and imprisoned. He lay there for one year. Rāvana’s father sage Pulasīrya came to know of this and he went to Kārtavirya’s palace. He was received with due respect and at his request, Kārtavirya released Rāvana and after that they remained friends for life. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

7) Kārtavirya and Renukā’s Death. One day when Parāśārama was fourteen years old, his father sage Jamadagni went to the forest to fetch some Samitis (sacrificial twigs). Jamadagni’s wife, Renukā swept and cleaned the Aśrama and went to the river Ravi to fetch water and Parāśārama was left behind in the Aśrama. When she reached the river bank, she saw Kārtavirya’s indulging in amorous pleasures with his wives in the water. She waited unobserved on the bank for some time and after they had left the place, she stepped into the river. But since the water was muddy, she had to go to another place in the river to get clear water. There also she lingered for some time, waiting for the amorous amusements of Citraratha, King of Sīha, with his wives. It was only after they had departed that she was able to return to the Aśrama with water. Meanwhile Jamadagni who had returned to the Aśrama earlier was angry at her delay and was waiting impatiently for her arrival. As soon as she reached the Aśrama, the sage, in a fit of fury, ordered Parāśārama to cut off her head and the latter obeyed him. (Brahmacārī Purāṇa, Chapter 50).

8) The Triumphal March of Kārtavirya. All the Kings in the world acknowledged the supremacy of Kārtavirya. In Brahmā’s Purāṇa, Chapter 16, we find that: Kings of the Solar dynasty like Travyāṇa, Harśaandra, Parama Kārtavirya and Cuhcfi lived in the same Aśrama as Kārtavirya. In his golden chariot he went about defeating Devas, Yaksas, Ras and others. He challenged even Vīṣṇu. He insulted Indra in the company of Indra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 115).

Infected by his successes, Kārtavirya went to the sea-shore and challenged the ocean and began to destroy the animals in the sea by shooting them with his arrows. God Varuna sent for Kaṭṭārā, the god of the sea and asked him what he wanted. Kārtavirya asked the god to name a man who had the capacity to fight with him. Varuna answered that Jamadagni’s son Parāśārama was the person who satisfied that condition. Kārtavirya accepted the challenge and went in search of Parāśārama. (M.B. Ammasāna Parva, Chapter 29).

9) Killing of Jamadagni. Once Kārtavirya went to hunt in the forest with his followers. They were roaming in the Vindhyā forests in search of game. At noon after a refreshing bath in the clear waters of the river Narmadā when they were preparing to return, they saw Jamadagni’s Aśrama. After asking his men to wait at the river bank Kārtavirya went alone to the Aśrama. He paid his respects to the sage and after their usual greetings, Jamadagni asked him to call his followers also to the Aśrama. When all of them arrived the sage gave them a sumptuous feast. Kārtavirya wondered how the sage managed to do it. They spent the night there and when they returned home next morning Kārtavirya’s minister Candragupta told him that he saw a cow in Jamadagni’s Aśrama and that it was from that divine cow that the sage was able to get all the rare articles of food which he supplied to the guests. He also offered to get the cow from the sage. So the King sent Candragupta to the Aśrama to beg the cow from the sage for him, Candragupta accordingly went with a few followers to the Aśrama and begged for the cow. At that time Parāśārama was not in the Aśrama. Jamadagni told them that the cow was Kāmadhenu’s sister, Sūryā and that it was not possible to give her. Candragupta tried to seize the cow by force but the suddenly vanished into the sky. The King’s men tried to capture her calf. Jamadagni who came forward to prevent them, was beaten to death by Ėsadragupta. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 67 to 20).

10) Jamadagni’s Return to Life.Paraśurāma returned soon to the Aśrama with the disciple Aktavaraṇa. At the sight of his father lying dead on the floor, Paraśurāma cried aloud. Reṇuksā beat her breast twenty times. Seeing this, Paraśurāma took a solemn vow that he would, in the next life, exterminate the Kṣatriya Kings. The sage Sukras appeared there with Suśāni who had vanished. After restoring Jamadagni to life Sukra went back.

11) Death of Kārtikeya. Paraśu Rāma who had turned himself into the very embodiment of Revenge, accompanied by Aktavaraṇa, took his stand at the gates of the city of Mahīmati and challenged Kārti-yājuna to a fight. Kārtikeya came out with a huge army. In the terrible flood that followed, Paraśurāma himself with his axe (paraśu) chopped off all the thousand arms of Kārtikeya. All his sons were killed. Kārtikeya himself fell down beheaded. This was the end of the pillars of Hēṣyā dynasty. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 81).

12) Birth of Kārtikeya. Kārtikeya had one hundred sons. All of them were killed in the battle by Paraśurāma. Their names, as given in Chapter 76 of Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, are given below:—

Nirnada, Rucana, Sārku, Ugrada, Dundubbi, Dhrvum, Śrīparī, Śatrājī, Kraunka, Sānta, Nirdaya, Antaka, Akrit, Vimala, Dhitra, Nīrogas, Bāhu, Dama, Adhu, Vīdhita, Vighum, Vīṣeṣa, Bhūta, Tulasi, Rāhule, Kṛṣṇa, Satyayasa, Subala, Bālī, Ugrera, Ugrakarmā, Satyayasa, Durāsada, Viradhāvarṇa, Dīgha-bahu, Akampaka, Subāhu, Dīghahsa, Vartulākṣa, Čēndukarṣa, Gōttvāṇa, Ṛmaṇava, Īrvatābhūta, Krodha, Satyakṛtur, Duspradharaṇa, Satyusandha, Mahāsena, Suboana, Rakṣantera, Vakradārṣa, Sudarman, Krātvārman, Mahenduy, Dīhakeya, Pūnacakana, Aṣvantaka, Jātika, Venuśam, Sānta, Pāsa-KĀRTIKEYA. Skanda, the son of Siva. For details see under Skanda.

KARUNA. See under Dhanaprāya.

KĀRṢA I. A King of Kārṣa. A lady of name Bhadrā was performing penance to get this King as her husband when Śiśupalā carried her away. (Sloka 11, Chapter 45, Śabha Parva).

KĀKUSHA II. One of the nine sons of Vaivasvata Manu. The other sons are: Iśvāku, Nābbha, Drīja, Sāryāki, Nariyavana, Prācunāṇa, Dīja and Pradhara. (7th Skanda, Devī Bhāgavata).

KĀRṢA III. A Yaka. This Yaka accompanied by his brothers performed penance on the shores of the river Kālindī, to propitiate Devī, taking in only air. Devī was pleased and appearing before him in person said “You will become the lord of Manvanta” (Skandaḥ 10 and 13, Devī Bhāgavata).

KĀRṢA I. The sixth son of Vaivasvata Manu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75).

KĀRṢA II. An ancient land. (The King of this land used to suppress robbers and plunderers. He was present at Draupadi’s Svanayavāra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185).

KĀRṢA (M). A place in ancient India. Historians are of opinion that it is the Bundelkhand of modern India. The sin of Brahmahāyā (killing of brahmins) of Indra was washed away by brahmins at this place. The place where Kārṣa (crowdung) from Indra’s body was called Kārṣa and it gradually became Kārṣa. (See under Angamāla).

KARVAṬA. An ancient country of India, The King of this land was slain by Bhīmasena. (Chapter 30, Śabha Parva).

KĀSERAKA. A Yakṣa. Mahābhārata, Śabha Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 15 says that Kāseraka continues to attend on Kubera as a member of his assembly.

KĀSERU. A lovely daughter of TVaṣṭa, the Prajāpati. Narakāsura abducted Kāseru when she was fourteen years old. She was one of the virgins married by Śri Kṛṣṇa who won a victory over Narakāsura. (M.B. Śabha Parva, Chapter 38, Dīkṣītya).

KĀSERUMĀN (KASERUMĀN). An Asura who was a Yavana. He was slain by Śri Kṛṣṇa according to Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 32.

KASI I. (VARĀSASI, BANARAS). (See under Divodāna also).

1) General. One of the oldest and most popular social centres in India, Kāsi is reputed for its Vaiṣṇava temple of holy traditions, according to one of which the Śiva linga in the temple was installed by Brahmā himself. (Hālāya Bhāmāyā).

2) Pilgrimage on foot to Kāśi. Devotees from many parts of India go on pilgrimage to Kāśi on foot, bathing in the holy waters of the Gāṅga and thus earn spiritual satisfaction and release from worldly attachments. The reason for the above is stated in the Agni Purāṇa as follows:—Once, at Kailāsa Śiva told Pārva: that the temple at Kāśi was called ‘Avinukta’ (unreleased) as it never perished, and all Japa, tapa, homa and dana made there never cease to give auspicious results. One should walk on foot to Kāśi and live there. Having gone there one should never leave the place. There are eight great tirthas at Avinukta, i.e. Harīkhandī śṛtī, Avrātakēvī śṛtī, Jānkeśvārī śṛtī, Śrī Parvaśī śṛtī, Mahālayaśrī śṛtī, Bhūgū śṛtī, Caṇḍeśvārī śṛtī and Kēdrāśrī śṛtī. These tirthas extend to two yojanas to the east of the Kāši temple and half-a- yojana to the west of it. The river Varanā is also there, and Varājana is at the centre of all these. Whatever is done at Varājana like bata, Japa, homa, worship of Devas, dana, obsequies for the dead, oneself living there etc. is productive of devotion and salvation. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 112).

3) References to Kāśi in the Mahābhārata.

(i) Pārva once conquered Kāśi. (Bhīma Purāṇa, Chapter 9).

(ii) Bhīma married Bālandhārā, daughter of the King of Kāśi. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 77).

(iii) Bhīmasena conquered Kāśi. (Śabha Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 6).

(iv) Sahadeva conquered Kāśi. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 31).
(v) In the war between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas, the King of Kāśī fought on the side of the former. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 196, Verse 2).
(vi) Arjuna conquered Kāśī. (Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 40).
(vii) Śrī Kṛṣṇa conquered Kāśī. (Droga Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 15).
(viii) Karna once conquered Kāśī on behalf of Duryodhana. (Karna Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 19).
(ix) Kāśī had been ruled by the Kings called Harṣavāsa, Śudesa, and Divodasa. (Antāśana Parva, Chapter 30, Verses 12 to 15).
(x) King Vṛṣamitra and Uṣāhara had ruled over Kāśī. (Antāśana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 9).
(xi) Bhima conquered Kāśī during the Svanavanvara of Ambā. (Antāśana Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 36).
(xii) The horse sent out in connection with Yudhisṭhira's Avaneśvara passed through Kāśī also. (Avaneśvara Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 14).
(xiii) For the origin of the name Kāśī see under Divodasa.
KĀŚĪ. An inhabiting-citizen of Kāśī. (Bhima Parva, Chapter 136, Verse 19).
KĀŚI 11. A son of Kṛśina the son of Kuppirājapati. (Antāśana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 135).
KĀŚIKA. A famous charioteer on the Pāṇḍava side. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 171, Verse 15).
KĀŚIŚvara Tīrtha. A sacred place on the banks of river Aṃbikmati on the borders of Kurukṛṣṭa. A bath in the river redeems one from all sins and raises one to Brahmā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 57).
KĀŚIRAMA. A state in North India. Kāśī was famous during the Mahābhārata period also. Once Arjuna conquered this state (Sahābhā Parva, Chapter 27). People from this state had attended Yudhisṭhira's Rājaśṭhāna with many articles of presentation. Śrī Kṛṣṇa once defeated its ruler. (Droga Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 16), Pārśurāma also once defeated its ruler. (Droga Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 15).
KĀŚIRAMANAPALAM. A particular place in Kāśī where once a conference of sages was held. (Vana Parva, Chapter 269). Besides all the prominent sages of North India, distinguished persons like Nahuṣa, Yaśatī, Asī and Kāśīyā attended the conference. Rivers Jhelam and Chenab flow through this place, and it is a holy centre. Those who bathe here will become like gos.
KASTHURGANDHĪ. Another name for Kāśī (Matsya-Parva) or Satyavatī, the mother of Vyāsa. To know how she got this name, see under Satyavatī.
KṣAYA I. A famous King of Kāśī; father of Ambā, Anbaka and Ambālākā. He was also called Krodhasva. According to Chapter 171 of Udyoga Parva, Kāśī's real name was Senābhūda.
KṣAYA II. One of the great sages who visited Bhima on his bed of arrows. (Sūnti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 16).
KĀŚYAPA I. Chief among the Prajāpatis.
1) Kāśyapa—Son or Grandson of Brahman? It is impossible to give a definite answer to this question. In Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 66, we see that six spiritual sons—Mārtici, Agrestis, Asī, Pulastya, Pāpuha and Krtana—were born to Brahmā. Kāśyapa was born as the son of Mārtici and that all living beings in the world took their origin from Kāśyapa according to this statement. Kāśyapa is the grandchild of Brahman.
But in the 14th Sarga of Aranyakāpada in Vālmīki Rāmāyana there is an account of the creation of all animate and inanimate objects in this world. According to a statement in that passage, we find that Kāśyapa was the youngest brother of Matrītī, Atri, Pulastya and others. This means that Kāśyapa was the son of Brahmā. Therefore there is nothing wrong in regarding him either as the son or as the grandson of Brahmā. In the Purāṇas we find references to him in both ways.
2) Original Gotra or Clan. Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 297, verse 17 says that all living beings belong to the four original Gotras—the gotra of Āgnīs, Kāśyapa gotra, Bhṛgu gotra and Vasiṣṭha gotra and that all the other gotras came into existence subsequently.
3) Kāśyapa's wives. Kāśyapa had 21 wives who were:—Adītī, Diti, Danu, Arītī, Surāśī, Khasā, Surabhi, Vinatī, Tārmā, Krodhaśī, Irā, Kadrū, Mūri, Puloma, Kālaka, Natā, Daṇḍyā, Simhihi, Pradhā, Viśvā, and Kaṭi. Of these, 13 wives, Adītī, Diti, Kālaka, Daṇḍyā, Danu, Simhihi, Krodha, Pradhā, Viśvā, Kaṭi, Mūri, and Kadrū, were the daughters of Dakṣa. Of these the first wife Adītī had 12 sons. These 12 sons namely Viśvā, Śakrama, Ayumā, Dhitā, Tvaṭrā, Pāśā, Viśvavān, Śivaitā, Mīrita, Varuṇa, Amītā and Bhanga are called Adītyas (sons of Adītī). In the sixth Manvantara these 12 Adītyas belonged to the tribe known as Tusiitas. The present Manvantara is the seventh one. The 33 degrees of Devas came into being from the twelve Adītas.
The Dānavas were born from Kāśyapa's second wife Diti. The chief Dānavas are Hiranyakṣipu, Hiranyakṣa and Simhihi. All the other Dānavas were born from them.
The Dānavas were the children of Danu, another wife of Kāśyapa. Vyāmula, Śāmbhara, Aṃyukha, Ekaśīra, Kaṇā, Kaṇkara, Ekaśvara, Mahābhātu, Tāraśa, Mahābhīrā, Svarbhānu, Vṛṣṇapāga, Pulomā, and Vīra-citati are the famous Dānavas. The other Dānavas were the children of the people mentioned above.
Another wife of Kāśyapa, Surabhi gave birth to Aja, Ekapāta, Aṃjubuddhāna, Tvaṭhrā and Rudra and also the Ekaśaṭa Raudra names:—Harā, Bahuṛuha, Tumyambaka, Aparajita, Vṛṣṇakapi, Śambhū, Kaṇḍari, Tvaṭhrā, Mṛgavāja, Sarpa, and Kaṇḍari. Vinau gave birth to Garuda and Kaṇḍari was the mother of the nāgas. The Purāṇas proclaim that all living beings that we see in the world today, sprang from Kāśyapa's offsprings by his different wives. (Vālmīki Rāmāyana, Bāla Kānda, Chapter 29; Viśvā Purāṇa, Part I, Chapters 15-21; Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapters 16 and 65 and Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).
4) Brahman taught Kāśyapa care for snake poison. The serpent (Nāga) were born to Kaṇḍrā, one of the wives of Kāśyapa. Once Kaṇḍrā asked her children to hang down like hair from the tail of Ucchāśiras. They refused to do so. Kaṇḍrā became angry and cursed them that they would be burnt alive at Janamejaya's Sarpa Sātra (snake-sacrifice). After the curse, the Nāga became dangerously venomous. At this stage, Brahmā taught Kāśyapa the art of curing snake-poison to protect other creatures that might be bitten by the Nāgas. Cure of snake-bite in this world dates from that time. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 20).
Kaśyapa I

5) Kaśyapa and Garuḍa. Garuḍa is a mighty son of Kaśyapa by his wife Vīnatā. Vīnatā made a bet with her sister Kadrū. Kadrū won the bet. Vīnatā became Kadrū's maid-servant as a result of the bet. To be relieved of this bondage Vīnatā's son Garuḍa had to bring Amṛta from Devakā and give it to Kadrū and her Nāga-sons. Garuḍa agreed and flew up to Heaven to fetch Amṛta.

On the way he visited his father Kaśyapa who was performing penance on the Gaṅgāhāmādeva mountain. He asked his father to give him some food, as he was very hungry. Kaśyapa told him the following story:

"Long ago a sage named Viḍhāvantā lived near this place. He and his younger brother named Supratika began to quarrel over the sharing of their father's wealth. The elder brother transformed the younger brother into an elephant by a curse and the younger brother turned the elephant into a tortoise by his curse. They are still living in a pond lake as elephant and tortoise and continue like enemies. If you eat both of them, you will be strong enough to fight against the Devas and get possession of Amṛta for yourself."

On hearing this, Garuḍa went to the lake and caught the elephant and tortoise in his claws and flew up into the sky. The mountains began to tremble and a whirlwind swept the heavens when Garuḍa beat with his wings. He flew about here and there unable to find a convenient place to sit and enjoy his meal. On the way, his eye caught sight of a huge banyan tree spreading its branches far and wide, to a distance of 100 yojanas around. A cow grazed near it with the elephant and tortoise, the branch broke and fell down. From that branch certain sages known as Bālākhiliyas were hanging with their heads downwards.

So, to prevent them from falling to the ground, Garuḍa lifted it in his beak and began to fly up again. Unable to find a suitable spot where he could deposit the branch with the sages, Garuḍa returned to his father again. At the request of Kaśyapa, the Bālākhiliyas went to the Himālayas. He showed Garuḍa a vast, snow-clad mountain on which he could deposit the broken branch he was carrying. Garuḍa flew to that mountain and ate up the elephant and tortoise and thus gained strength to fight with the Devas for Amṛta. After that he proceeded to Heaven. [M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 28-31].

6) Other Birth of Kaśyapa. In Cakṣuṇa Manvantara, the sage Sutapas performed a penance along with his wife Pṛṣṇī for 12,000 years. Lord Viṣṇu appeared to them and asked what boon they wished to ask. They prayed that the Lord should take birth as their son. Viṣṇu granted their prayer and was born as their son.

In the next Manvantara (the period of Vaivasvata Manu) Sutapas and Pṛṣṇī were reborn as Kaśyapa and Aditi respectively. At that time also Mahāviṣṇu was born to Aditi as Vāmana. (See under Vāmana).

In this birth, Kaśyapa had many other wives besides Aditi. Sarasā was one of those wives. [Bhāgavata, 10th Skanda].

It was in this Kaśyapa himself who was reborn as Vaṣudēva and Aditi became Devakī. Sarasā was born as Rohiṇī, another wife. There is another reason for Kaśyapa and Aditi to take birth for the third time. Once Kaśyapa had to perform a Yāga. All arrangements were complete. But the sacrificial cow alone was not available. Kaśyapa solved the problem by stealing a cow from Varuṇa's cattle-shed. Aditi and Sarasā concealed it in the Ātṛa. Enraged at the theft of his cow, Varuṇa complained to Brahmā. A curse was pronounced by Brahmā and Varuṇa that as a punishment for stealing and hiding the cow, Kaśyapa should be reborn as a cowherd and Aditi and Sarasā should be reborn as the cowherd's wives. It was by this curse that Kaśyapa, Aditi and Sarasā were reborn as Vaṣudēva Devakī and Rohiṇī respectively. (Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

7) Parāṣurāma's gift of land to Kaśyapa. Parāṣurāma performed a Yāga after exterminating all Kṣatriya Kings. At that Yāga he gifted all the lands he had conquered till then to Kaśyapa. In Mahābhārata, Aruṇa Parva, Chapter 117, there is a reference to this gift.

8) Kaśyapa and Kerala. After Parāṣurāma went round the world eighteen times and exterminated the Kṣatriya Kings he performed a Yāga. At that Yāga he gave the whole earth as daksinā to Kaśyapa. After that, Kaśyapa drove away Parāṣurāma from the earth to the south. Taking pily on Parāṣurāma, the ocean gave him the region known as "Śrīpāraka", Kaśyapa seized Śrīpāraka also from Parāṣurāma and gave it to Brahmānas. Parāṣurāma went to the forests after it. Later on, intermixture of castes took place in this region and anarchy prevailed there. At one time, Śrīpāraka sank down into Patala (lower world). Kaśyapa who saw this held the earth up, brought Kṣatriyas from the netherworld and made them rulers of the country. [M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 49]. This "Śrīpāraka" is believed to be Kerala.

9) Other Details about Kaśyapa.

(i) Kaśyapa arrived at the place of Arjuna's birth accompanied by other sages. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 127).

(ii) Kaśyapa flourished in Brahmā's assembly. [M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 11].

(iii) Once there was a dispute between Viṣṇu and Brahmā, the son of Prahlāda and Sūryāvati, the son of Agíras. It was Kaśyapa who settled this dispute. [See the 5th Para under the word Agírgras].

(iv) Once Kaśyapa went on a pilgrimage in the company of Yuddhiṣṭhīra. [M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85].

(v) Once Brahmā gifted the entire earth to Kaśyapa at a Yāga, Bhumidevī (Goddess of the earth) who was distressed at it, went to Patala and began to lament. At that time Kaśyapa propitiating the goddess by his austere penance. [M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 114].

(vi) After Parāṣurāma had given the entire earth to Kaśyapa, Kaśyapa drove away Parāṣurāma from the earth. Parāṣurāma then shot an arrow into the sea and converted that portion of the sea into land. [M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 78, Verses 13 and 19].

(vii) When the war between Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas was in progress, Kaśyapa approached Droṇa and wanted him to bring the battle to a close. [M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190].

(viii) Kaśyapa was also present with other sages at the time of Skanda's birth. [M.B. Śālva Parva, Chapter 49].
KAŚYAPA II

From the above facts it may be understood that Kaśyapa was born as a prince, and that later on, he became a sage. Moreover, the Agni Purāṇa says that Santuvoroda, the brother of Kaśyapa's father, was the father of Dasyuṣṭa. According to that Kaśyapa and Dasyuṣṭa were the sons of brothers, Kaśyapa being that of the elder one. For the time being the above are the only reasonable inferences, and the truth has to be found out by further researches. But, one thing is certain according to the genealogy, that Kaśyapa was born twenty generations after Kaśyapa.

KAŚYAPA AND TAKSASKA. The story is told in the 2nd Skandha of Devī Bhāgavata and in the Adi Parva of Bhāratā that Taksaska set out to bite King Parikṣit and Kaśyapa to cure him of Taksaska's poison, but that Taksaska bribed Kaśyapa off his mission to save the King. But, the story as such is unfounded. It was Kaśyapa and not Kaśyapa whom Brahmā had taught the science of the treatment and cure of poison (see under Kaśyapa) and, therefore, it should be Kaśyapa whom Taksaska bribed.

KAŚYAPA AND SAKUNTALĀ. See under KAŚYAPA.

KAŚYAPA AND RĀJASRIGA. Father of Rājasrīgī was one Kaśyapa; may be Kaśyapa or Kaśyapa. The greater possibility is for Kaśyapa to be the father. (See under RĀJASRIGA.)

6. After a Yajña Viśvakarman made a land-gift to Kaśyapa once. (See under KAŚYAPA.)

KAŚYAPA II. Priest of Vasudeva; this Kaśyapa lived for years as a good friend of the Pandavas. He is considered to be a very distinguished ascetic. (Aśvamedha Parva, Chapter 16.)

KAŚYAPA III. Son of Sage Kaśyapa. This Kaśyapa was member of Indra's assembly. (Sahā Parva, Chapter 7.) He was present at the Yajña conducted by emperor Prihu.

KAŚYAPA IV. An Agni, the son of Kaśyapa. Pāṇḍajanyā was born from the five Agni, Kaśyapa, Vasiṣṭha, Jajñā, Aśvin and Cuvana. Of the five, Agni and Cuvana were sons of Kaśyapa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 220.)

KAŚYAPA V. A haughty Yajña once filled to the ground a Brahmin youth called Kaśyapa by hitting him with his chariot. (See under Indra, Para 38.)

KAŚYAPA VI. Sons of Kaśyapa like Viṣṇudhāaka, Vaiśvāvanā, Indra, Aditya and Vasu, other Devas and other living beings born in Kaśyapa's dynasty—all these are also called Kaśyapa.

KAŚYAPADYĀPA (ISLAND). An island in the shape of a hare visible in the moon. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 55.)

KAŚYAPI. (Earth). The earth came to be known as Kaśyapi as it had been given as a gift to Kaśyapa by Parasurāma. "The whole of the earth was given to Kaśyapa and thus it came to be called Kaśyapi." (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 89.)

KATHAKA. A soldier of Skanda. (Sloka 67, Chapter 45, Sāla Parva.)

KATHĀSAḤAṢIGARA. See under BRĀHMAṆDAPARISHAD.

KATHĀPANISAD. See under NACIKETAS.

KAṬVĀΚU (KAṬVĀΚU). A son of Vaivāvasa Manu. Brahmarāja Purāṇa states that he was an ancestor of Ikṣvāku.

In the beginning Manu, alias Vaivāvasa, had a son named Kaṭvāku. He was the first of kings and he ruled the world for a long time. On the banks of the river Sarasvati he constructed a city called Ayodhya. Ayodhya was celebrated for its beauty and wise men proclaimed that it was more beautiful than the cities of the eight guardians of the universe or the city of even Brahmā, the Creator.

KĀTYĀYANA I. A grammarian who wrote a commentary on Pāṇini’s grammatical work entitled Asādhyāyī. He has also written Śrāvaka Sūtras and a book on Dharma Sāstra.

KĀTYĀYANA III. Kathāṣārītāṅgāra says that “Kātyāyana” was another name of Vararucī.

KĀTYĀYANA III. A great sage who flourished in Indra’s assembly. We see a reference to him in Mahābhārata, Sahā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 19.

KĀTYĀYANA. One of the two wives of Yājñavalkya. After withdrawing completely from worldly activities, Yājñavalkya asked his wives to divide his worldly assets equally between them. But Mairety the other wife, being of a deeply spiritual nature, Kātyāyani herself had to undertake the burden of all the material affairs. (Behandan yakopanisad).

KAUKHAKA. An ancient country in South India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 60).

KAUKHAKA. An attendant of Skanda dēvī. (M.B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 13).

KAUMODAKI. The club of Śrī Kaśyapa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 224, Stanza 23, that this club was given to Śrī Kaśyapa by Varūma the god of water, at the time of the burning of the forest Kaśyapā.

KAUSAPA. A serpent born in the family of Vāśi. This serpent was burnt to death in the Samā Sattra (sacrificial fire to kill serpents) of Janamejaya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 6).

KAUNAPASANA. A famous serpent born in the family of Kaurava. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 14).

KAUNASIPADA. See under Mirabhide.

KAUNASIPADA. A hermit who lived in the Palace of Yāsasana. Sahā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 16. See under Dhrāsharudhi.

KAUNASIPADA III. A hermit. This hermit had erected his hermitage in Hāsīmatthabhammeragamana and lived there. Once due to excess of rain the river flooded and his hermitage was washed away. So the hermit cursed the river. “Let the river be dried up.” Then he went to the realm of Vaishishti. (Padma Purāṇa, Utrara Khāṇḍa, Chapter 13).

KAUNIKUTSYA. A noble Brahmin. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 25, that this Brahmin visited Pramadavārī who died of snakebite.

KAURAVA(S).

1) Gauravāsya. Those who were born in the family of the famous King Kuru. Descended in the following order from Vīguṇa: Brahmā—Atri—Candra Budha—Parāravas—Ayīs—Nahas—Yayaṭṭi—Puru—Janamejaya—Prācīṇvān—Pravīra—Nāmasya—Vṛitaśaya—Sūṇḍu—Bahuśvīm Mānīyati—Rohovāḍi—Raudrāvā—Matirona—Santrodha—Dusyanta—Bharata—Subhata—Sukotra—Gaha—Garjita—Suketra—Bhadrakāla—Mahindra, and wise men proclaimed that it was more beautiful than the cities of the eight guardians of the universe or the city of even Brahmā, the Creator.

2) Dhrāsharudhi. The daughter of Subala the King of Gandhāra. Once Vyāsa reached the palace weary with hunger and thirst. Ghāndhārī gave Vyāsa food and drink. Vyāsa was pleased with her and told her that she might ask for any boon. She said that she wanted to get hundred sons from Dhrāsharudhi. Vyāsa granted the boon. Ghāndhārī became pregnant. After two years she died. Her son Kunti, the wife of Pandu had given birth to a child. Ghāndhārī became sad. She crushed her womb and died giving birth to a lump of flesh. Understanding this, Vyāsa came there and cutting the lump into hundred and one pieces kept them in ghee pots. Advising Ghāndhārī to keep the pots in secret, Vyāsa went to the Himalayas. The pots were broken and hundred sons and a daughter came out. Besides them Dhrāsharudhi had another son named Yuyutsu by a Vaishī woman.

The hundred and one sons of Dhrāsharudhi beginning with Duryodhana are the Kauravas. 3) Names of the Kauravas. Duryodhana, Duṣṣasana, Duṣsahana, Duṣsāla, Jalagandha, Śama, Saha, Vindu, Aṇuvindu, Durdhara, Subhā, Dusyandharaṇa, Dūrmarṣṇa, Duṣṣākha, Kurva, Vikarna, Saḷa, Saḷṭa, Suvaca, Citra, Upacitra, Citrakoṭa, Cārucitra, Sarasana, Durma, Durviṣṭa, Vitva, Vitvaśāna, Uruñābha, Suvaca, Upasuṇa, Cīravāna, Citraśvarā, Suvaņa, Durviṃśa, Ayodhā, Mahābhāra, Citrāṅga, Citraṇuḍha, Bhūlavāla, Vālasi, Kalivṛdha, Uprāyuvṛdha, Subhā, Kundadharā, Mahodara, Citrayudha, Nisang, Paīḍi, Vṛndāraka, Droṭhavāma, Droṭhakṣatra, Somakriti, Anuḍara, Droṭhásandha, Jāraśandha, Satyasandha, Sādhusaśā, Ugrastrāvas, Ugracitra, Saṇñi, Dusyandhaja, Aparajita, Kundaśay, Viśālacakṣa, Durvidhā, Dhrāshhrasta, Subasta, Viśvaṣa, Suvaṇa, Adiṣyaketa, Bhūlavāla, Nagaśrandha, Prayāsa, Kundaśika, Bhismekrama, Bhūladvāra, Vīrahā, Alajlapa, Abhaya, Dṛṣṭhakarman, Dṛṣṭhasthāraṇya, Anādhya, Kundābhedī, Virāṇ, Citraṇuḍha, Pṛamatha, Kaūraśvīna

Aramāśīna, Dīgharoman, Suśravān, Dīghabāhu, Suvarṇā, Kāśyapa, Kundāsin, Vīraśas, and Vuyisā. Mahābhārata. Adi Parva, Chapter 67 and 117. (For further details about the Kaūraśvīna see under Duryodhāna and Dursāna.)

KAUŚIKA VI.

A noble serpent which was born of Aśravata (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 218, Stanza 10).

KAUSALA (KAUSALĀ). Skandadeva once changed the shape of his face to that of the face of goat. Then he got the name Kausalya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 273, Stanza 1.)

KAUSALYĀ I. A queen of King Dasaśrutā and mother of Śri Rāma. Dasaśrutā had three wives Kausalyā, Kaikēti and Sūmitrā. Kausalyā gave birth to Śri Rāma, Kaikēti to Jāhrā and Sūmitrā to Laksmana and Satruṣṭa. (Vēṅkataśīra, Bāla Kānda, Sarga 15.)

KAUSALYĀ II. Queen of the King of Kaś. Ambā, Ambālikā, and Ambālikālikā were daughters of this Kausalyā. Of these daughters Ambālikā also was called Kausalyā. After the death of Pāṇu she went to the forest with Ambālikā. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 129.)

KAUSALYĀ III. The queen of a Yādava King. She was the mother of the Yādava named Kṛṣṇa. (Devī Bhāgavatam, Kṛṣṇa 9.)

KAUSALYĀ IV. Wife of Puru, the son of King Yāvati. Jammēgaya was born to Puru of his wife Kausalyā. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 11.)

KAUSALYĀ V. The queen of Janaka, the King of Mithilā. Once King Janaka decided to sell his palace and everything he possessed and to go begging for alms. But his brave wife Kausalyā convinced her husband by her reasonable arguments (that he should not venture to do so). Thus she prevented her husband from carrying out his decision.

KAUSALYĀ. A teacher, who belonged to the line of disciples of Vyāsa. Janmini was the disciple of Vyāsa. Sumanu was the son of Janmini. A son named Sūvā, was born to Sumanu. Sālarman was the son of Sūvā. Sūvā and Sālarman were two disciples of Hiranyanābhī and Purusūtī. Kausalyā was another name of Hiranyanābhī. (Vēṅkataśīra, Bāla Kānda, Stanza 9.)

KAUSAMBA. Four sons, Kuśāmba, Kuśanābha, Asūtraṇas and Vasu were born to Kuśa, the son of Brahmā, of his wife the princess of Vardhira. According to the order of their father each prince built a city and began to live over it. Kuśāmba built the city built by Kuśāmba. Kuśānābha built the city of Mahabodhvara; Asūtraṇas, the city of Dharmarāya and Vasu the city of Cīrvāra. (Vēṅkataśīra, Bāla Kānda, Sarga 32.)

It is mentioned in Kāḍārasiṣṭāgāra that the city of Kuśāmba stood in the middle of the kingdom of Vasa and that Udyāna born of the family of the Pāndavas had once ruled the country with Kuśāmbi as his capital.

KAUSIKA I. (Viśvāmitra). See under Viśvāmitra.

KAUSIKA II. A hermit who lived in the palace of Yudhiṣṭhira. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, that while going to Hastinapura, Śri Kṛṣṇa met this hermit on the way.

KAUSIKA III. A minister of Jarasandha. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sahitya Parva, Stanza 22, that he had another name Hamsa also.

KAUSIKA IV. While the Pāndavas were leading forest life, the hermit Markandeya told the story of a noble Brahmin named Kausika, to Dharmapura. Once this Brahmin sat under a tree and performed penance. A large crane which sat on a branch of the tree passed excrement on the head of the Brahmin. He became angry and looked at the bird. Instantly the bird was reduced to ashes. The Brahmin sincerely repentatted and went to the courtyards to live on alms. Once he reached the house of a Brahmin. The wife of the Brahmin came to the door and requested him to wait a bit. Immediately her husband arrived, and she, being engaged in looking after the needs of her seven husband-fiend Kausika, who became angry and spoke cruel words to her. She argued that the noblest deed was looking after one's husband and that it was not meet and right for Brahmins to get angry. She advised Kausika to go to Mithilāpurī and to receive advice from the famous Dharmāyudha. Kausika repented his rash nature, went to Dharmāyudha and received advice from him. He returned home and lived peacefully with his parents. (M.B. Vana Parva, ten chapters from 206).

Though a man of veracity, he finally had to go to hell, for the following reason. While he was engaged in penance in the forest some thieves came by that way with some stolen goods. The owners of the goods were chasing the thieves. Kausika told them the way by which the thieves had gone. Soon the thieves were thrown into hell. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 69.)

KAUSIKA V. A King of the Puru dynasty. Kapilā was his father and Grusapati was his brother. The four cases Brāhmaṇa, Kastriya, Vaśya and Śudra originated from Grusapati. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278.)

KAUSIKA VI. A hermit. This ancient hermit lived in Vēṅkataśīra. His name was Pīrvatī. His disciples were Kapi, Vāgīsīrī, and Pīrvatī. The hermit Garga for learning under him. Their names indicated their character. Their father died. The sons were in poverty. At this time rain ceased altogether. Garga asked his disciples to take his milch cow to the forest for grazing. Owing to the brothers decided to kill and eat the cow. But the youngest said: "If you are bent on killing the cow, we had better make use of it as an offering to the Manes, and no sin will visit us."

All agreed to this and Pīrvatī killed the cow and began the sacrifice. Two elder brothers were employed in worshipping the gods and three were detailed to give offerings to the Manes. One was asked to be the guest. Pīrvatīi was the sacrificial. Remembering his ancestors with reverence he began the sacrifice in accordance with the rites. Thus the seven hermits ate the cow and told Garga that the cow was caught by a tiger.

In due course the seven of them died, and took rebirth as rude low-caste people in Dātipura. Because of the sacrifice and offering of the Manes they had the remembrance of their previous birth. So they feared god and took fast and vow at a holy bath and in the presence of a multitude cast off their lives and were born again as animals in Kālañjara hills. Because of their abstinence due to knowledge they cast off their lives by Prapātana (jumping down from the top of the mountain) and were born again as Ruddy geese in the Mānasasaras when their names were Susana, Susama, Vān, Gṛdharī, Sudārśa, Jājakā and Jñānapāra—names conforming to their character. The seven brothers became pure and sinless by their union with God the Supreme Spirit. But three of them fell out of the union of good with their desire. They saw the pleasant life led by Anupa the King of Pañcāla who was married to a wealthy man with many beautiful wives. At the sight of this, one of the geese— the Brahmin Pīravyarita, who performed the sacrifice of offering to the Manes because of his love for his father—wished to become a king. Seeing the two wealthy ministers who led luxurious lives, two of the ruddy geese wanted to become ministers. Accordingly Pīravyarita was born as Brahmadatta, the son of Pañcāla and another one as a son of ministers with names Pandarika and Subālaka. Brahmadatta was anointed as King of Pañcāla in the great city of Kāmpilya. That King was mighty, loving his father well, always desiring of giving offerings to Manes and harmonious with God, having the ability to read the hearts of every living being. The wife of Suvadeva gave birth to a daughter in the same time of Suvadeva. This woman in her previous birth was the cow of Garga. As this cow was used as offering to the Manes she got rebirth as a religious-minded woman and became the queen of Brahmadatta, who ruled over the kingdom well for a long time. Once the King and the queen were walking in the garden in which there were two cats which were quarrelling with each other. They were husband and wife. After a time the quarrel ended and they grew more loving than before and the she-cat pressed closely against her husband, Brahmadatta hearing their conversation stood smiling. He could understand the language of every living being because of the merits of his previous births. When the King smiled his wife asked him for the reason. He described to his wife that he had been a couple. The Queen did not believe his words. She thought that the King had been making fun of her. She asked him how he learned the language of birds and beasts. But the King could not give an answer and he became thoughtful. The remaining four of the ruddy geese took rebirth as sons of a poor Brahmin in the same city of Kāmpilya. They remained in the remembrance of previous births. Their names were Dhriṃṭaṇa, Sarvādriṣṭa, Vidyāśandra and Tapodhiṇa, names befitting their character. They decided to perform severe penance to attain Supreme bliss, and were about to get away from the house when their father, the poor Brahmin cried bitterly, being helpless. They taught their father the following poem and advised him to recite the poem before the King the next morning, in order to get plenty of wealth.

"Noble Brahmins in Kurukṣetra
The seven foresters in Dāśāpara
Deer in Kālakṣaṇa and in Mānasā
Ruddy geese, the same now are men."

Brahmin Sūrya who also gave an answer to the question of his wife, was about to go out from the palace for a walk with his wife and ministers, when the old Brahmin made his appearance and recited the poem taught by his sons, to the King. When the King heard the stanza he remembered the previous births and fainted and fell down. The two ministers, Subālaka son of Bābhiravya the son of Rasika son of Bābhiravya the author of the science of love and Pandarika son of Pañcāla had enthusiasm to offer wealth and wife. After and treatment, also remembered about their previous births and fell down with grief. The three of them lamented about their fall from the union with the Supreme Spirit. Brahmadatta gave that old Brahmin plenty of wealth and villages and sent him away contented. After anointing his son Viśvakṣema as King, Brahmadatta and his retreat went to Mānasā for penance. For a while they lived in the forest engaged in penance and then cast off their lives and entered the world of Supreme bliss. (Padma Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 10).

KAUSIKA VII. A King. This king became a cock at night. His wife Viśālī was filled with grief at this transfiguration of her husband in the night. She told her grief to the hermit Gītāvī, who told the queen about the previous birth of her husband as follows—

"In the previous birth he used to eat cocks to get strength. Knowing this Tāmracūḍa the king of fowls cursed him, "You shall become a cock during nights."

That is why your husband has become a cock."

According to the advice of the hermit the King began to worship Lord Śiva and was liberated from the curse (Skanda Purāṇa).

KAUSIKĀ. (GOMATI). A river. The hermitage of Viśvānātra stood on the bank of this river. The modern name of river Kausikā is Kosi. The river Kosī flows through Bihar. Those who bathe in this river will obtain remission of sins. See under Gomati. (M.B. Vana Purāṇa, Chapter 94).

KAUSIKĀCĀRA. The king Ākriti. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Purāṇa, Chapter 21, that this King ruled over Sarasvati and was known also by the name Kausikācāra.

KAUSIKAKUNDA. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Purāṇa, Chapter 94, Stanza 142 that Viśvānātra got his attainments in this place.

KAUSIKĀŚARAMA. A holy place. It was at this place that Amāra, the daughter of King of Kāśi performed a severe penance. (M.B. Udyoga Purāṇa, Chapter 156, Stanza 27).

KAUSIKYAKUNĀSAGAMA. A holy place. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Purāṇa, Chapter 84 that in this place the king of Kauśika and his men made offerings to the Brahmins in the form of jewels.

KAUSTUBHA. A brilliant precious stone. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 3, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa Bālakāṇḍa Sarga 45, Stanza 39 and Mahābhārata, Adi Parva that this precious stone floated up at the time of the churning of the sea of Milk. This jewel which originated from the ghee in the sea of Milk, was worn on the breast by Viśnu. "This divine jewel called Kaustubha came up in the middle of ghee and stayed in the breast of Viṣṇu, spreading its rays everywhere." (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 37).

KAUTHUMI. Son of a Brahmin named Hirāyānātha. Once this Brahmin youth went to the hermitage of King Janaka and entered into a controversy with the Brahmins there. In the argument Kaustumī became angry and killed a Brahmin. From that day he became a leper. The sin of Brahmarāga (murder of Brahmins) also followed him. Finally according to the advice of his father he worshipped the sun God, with Śrāvya-samhājakātaka (a spell or incantation) and by the blessing of the Sun God he got deliverance from the sin of Brahmarāg and Brahmanas became lepers. (Śrāvyā Purāṇa, Brāhma Parva).

KAUTILYA. See under Čāṇakya.

KAUTSA. A noble Brahmin scholar. He was present at the sarpa-satra (sacrificial fire to kill serpents) of KAUTSYA. A hermit who was the disciple of Varāntana. When he had completed his education he asked his teacher what gift he desired. The teacher said that he wanted fourteen crores of gold coins as gift. Kautsyā approached the emperor Raghū. The emperor had just finished a sacrifice called Viśvajit and had emptied his treasury by giving away all the wealth he had as alms. Only pots made of wood were left as his wealth. When the emperor heard about the need of Kautsyā he decided to conquer the capital city of Kubera. That night Kubera filled the treasury of Raghū by a shower of gold. The emperor Raghū gave Kautsyā fourteen crores of gold coins. (Raghuvamśa).

KAVACA. A sage in the assembly of Indra. (M.B. Subhā Parva, Chapter 7). He was one of the sages of the western part. (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 289, Verse 30).

KAVACHI. One of the sons of Bhūtarāśa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 103). In Mahābhārata, Karṇa Parva, Chapter 84, it is said that he was killed by Bhimaśeṇa.

KĀVerī. A holy river in South India. Famously sacred places like Śrīmirg and Kumbhakonam are on its banks. The Devi of the river lives in Varūna's assembly worshipping her. (Subhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 20). The Skandha Purāṇa has the following story of how Kāverī came down to earth:

Once Agastya professed Śiva at Kailāsa and sought the boon of some water for him to found a sacred place on earth. At the same time Kāverī also was worshipping Śiva. Śiva filled Agastya's bowl with Kāverī water. Agastya's bowl was empty and Kailāsa curred the Rāksasa called Kramika and kicked the Viṣṇudharmountain down. (See under Agastya). After overcoming various difficulties Agastya at last reached South India. He sat in meditation with the bowl of Kāverī water before him, and then, at the request of Indra, Garuḍa, in the guise of a crow, came and sat on the brink of the bowl and upset it. The water in the bowl flowed as a river, and that river is the present Kāverī. (Aṣṭaśākhyā, Skandha Purāṇa).

KAVI I. A son of Vaiśvāvanāta. Vivasvān was the son of Kaśyapa and Aditi. Vivasvāna was the son of Vivasvān. Manu had sixteen sons who were—Manu, Yama, Yami, Āsvin, Kumbhakarna, Revanta, Śudumma, Ākāvaka, Nṛga, Suryā, Dīṣa, Dhṛṣṭa, Karuṇa, Nāyanta, Nābhiṇg, Priyadhara and Kavi. (Subhā Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 42). He was among the sages who stole the loutus of Agastya. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 32).

KAVI III. An agni who was the fifth son of Bṛhaspati, is named Kavi. This agni is situated in the sea in the form of Raṣavagni. This agni has two other names also—Udāśa and Ordhvabhāk. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 20).

KAVI IV. In Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Verse 132, Chapter 85, we find that three persons, namely, Kavi, Bhṛgu and Aṅgiras took their birth from the sacrificial fire at the famous Yāga of Brahmana. Ofthem Brahmana made Kavi his own son. This Kavi had eight sons known as the Varuṇas. One of them was named Kavi and another was named Kāva. (Subhā Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 4).

KAVIRA. A sage. There was a person named Kaviśa among the sages who came to visit Śrī Raṇa when he returned after his life in the forest. The sages who came there from the western country were—Vṛṣaṇa, Kaviśa, Dharma, Raudreya, Nārada, Vāmadeva, Saubhārī, Āśāvakā, Sūka, Bhṛgu, Lomā, and Maṇḍāgāya. (Uttara Kāmāyana).

KĀYA. Son of Kavi, one of the Prajāpatis. (Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 85). Alternate synonym of Śrīkaviśa.

KĀVA. Mother of Kaviśa, the preceptor of the Dīyasīr. Kāvyāmatī possessed extraordinary powers of penance. In the Devī Bhāgavata the following story is given: how she cursed Viṣṇu and how she made Viṣṇu Indra powerless.

Once a fierce war was fought by the Devas and the Asuras in which the latter got defeated, and they sought the help of Śrīkaviśa. But, as the Devas enjoyed the support of Viṣṇu, Śrīkaviśa could not do anything for the asuras, and he therefore advised them to get on somehow or other for some time. After that Śrīkaviśa went to Kailāsa and performed penance, hanging head downwards, for a thousand years to secure rare and exceptional mantras. During this period the Devas again attacked the Asuras, who ran up to Kāvyāmatī for succour, and she, by one glance, sent the Devas to long sleep. She reduced Viṣṇu and Indra also to a state of paralysis. Then Viṣṇu meditated upon the Soodārāma Cakra, which arrived immediately and with the Cakra he cut off Kāvyāmatī's head. Śrī Kaviśa then appeared on the scene and brought back Kāvyāmatī to life, and she, in furious rage cursed that Viṣṇu should take many births. As a result of the curse Mahāviṣṇu had to incarnate himself on earth many times. (Devī Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

KĀVYAVĀHA (S). A group of Pāirs. The Devī Bhāgavata, Skandhas II and 15 state that this group of Pāirs were born from the drops of sweat which came out of the bodies of Dakṣa and others when they were fascinated by the charm of Śaṅdilyā, the spiritual daughter of Brahma.

KĀVĀDH. Wife of Hiranyakasipu. Prahlāda was born to her.

Chapter 86, by taking a bath at this place the body would be purified.

KAYAVYA. A Cândala. He was born to a Cândala woman as the son of a Kṣatriya. But the Cândalas who were impressed by Kavyavya’s moral conduct, made him the headman of the village. He taught others that all people should honour Bṛhmagupas and love their country. His political creed was that those who prospered by the ruin of a country were just like the worms living on a dead body. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 135).

KEĐARĀ. A holy place in the interior of Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, that those who bathe in this holy Bath would obtain the fruits of good actions. One of the twelve Lingás consecrated in important places, is in Keđara.

KEKARALOHITA. A great serpent which once took sage Čywana to Pātāla. Čywana, after worshipping Śiva at Naku-medhara, tirtha got into river Narmadā to take his bath when the nāga called Kekaralohita caught hold of him, dragged him and bit him. As the sage meditated upon Viṣṇu the poison did not affect him. The serpent released him from Pātāla as he was unaffected by poison. This nāga married Čywana to the palace of Prahlāda accompanied by nāga damica. On the request of Prahlāda Čywana described to him the holy places on earth, and without any delay Prahlāda came to earth for hunting during which sojourn on earth he visited Naimisārayana. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 8).

KEKAYA. The Mahābhārata mentions another Kekaya, a king of the solar dynasty. He wedded two Mālāva princesses from the elder of whom were born Kıcaka and Upakī, and from the younger was born Sudeśa, also called Kicação. This Sudeśa married Mātasya, the Virāṭa King. (Virāṭa Parva, Southern text, Chapter 16).

KEKAYA (M. 1) General. A Kingdom in ancient India. Kicycle, one of Dāsaratha’s wives, was a daughter of a Kekaya King.

2) Origin. The country got the name ‘Kekaya’ as it was ruled by King Kekaya. His genealogy is as follows. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: — Brahma—Atri—Candra—Budha—Puruṣaras—Ayus—Nāhuṣa—Yayati Anudrubha—Sahābhara—Kālanara—Śyāṣya—Uśāra—Śibi—Kekaya. Śibi had four sons called Bhadra, Suvarṇa, Kekaya and Viśādarpa. (Bhāgavata 9th Skanda).

Other details. (1) The King and the people of Kekaya were called the Kekayas.

(2) Five heroic Kekaya princes met with their death in fighting Drona. (Śrī Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 25).

(3) Two Kekaya Princes, Viśada and Anuśāva fought on the Kaurava side. (Karma Parva, Chapter 13).

KERAKA. People of an ancient country in South India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sahābhāravāṇa, Chapter 31 that Sahadeva the son of Mādrī conquered the Kerakas and Kerala.

KEKAYA (M. 3) General information. A small country lying in the south-west corner of India. From the Purāṇas it could be understood that this country lying to the south of Gokarna up to Cape Comorin and to the west of Western Ghats had a very ancient history and civilization of its own.

2) Origin of Kerala. There are two statements, slightly different from each other, in the Purāṇas, about the origin of Kerela.

(1) For performing the funeral ceremony of the sons of Sāgara whose ashes were lying in Pātāla (Nether world), Bhagiratha performed penance and brought the heavenly river Čanyā to the earth. (See under Čanyā). The river fell in North India and flowed in torrents to the sea and the surrounding regions were submerged in water. Among the places submerged, there was the important holy place and Bath of Gokarna also, lying on the west coast of India. Those hermits who lived in the vicinity of the temple at Gokarna, escaped from the flood and went to Mahendra-giri and informed Parāsara about the flood. Parāsara went with them to the sea-shore. Varuna did not make his appearance. The angry Parāsara stood in deep meditation for a little while. The weapons came to his hands. Varuna was filled with fear and he instantly appeared before Parāsara, who asked him to release the land swallowed by the sea. Varuna agreed. Parāsara took his bow and arrow back to the sky. Then he took a winnowing basket (Śūpaka) and threw it at the sea. The sea retreated from the place up to the spot where the winnowing basket fell, and the portion of land including Gokarna which had been swallowed by sea was recovered. This land is called Kerela, which is known by the name 'Śūpaka' also. (Bhāmāṇa Purāṇa, Chapters 98 and 99).

(2) Parāsara went round the world eighteen times and killed all the Kṣatriya Kings. After that he performed the sacrifice of Āyurveda (horse sacrifice). In the sacrifice he gave all the lands as alms to Brahmins. Kaśyapa received all the lands for the Brahmins. After that he requested Parāsara to vacate the land. According to Purāṇas, Parāsara created new land by shooting an arrow at the sea, for his own use. "At the words of Kaśyapa, he made the sea retreat by shooting an arrow, thereby creating dry land." This land was Kerela. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 70).

3) Kerela and Pātāla (Nether world). The ancient sages of the Purāṇas have grouped the worlds into three, the Ārama (heaven), Bhūmi (the earth) and the Pātāla (the nether world). The three worlds taken as a whole were divided into fourteen worlds. It does not appear that this grouping was merely imaginary. A keen observation of the Purāṇas would lead one to infer that the Himalayan plateau was considered as Devlokav-Svaśva (heaven). The Brahmā and the Vindhyaka as Śūlīka (the earth) and the regions to the south of the Vindhyaka as Pātāla (the nether world), by the ancient people of India. The seven worlds of Pātāla such as Atala, Vītalā, Sutāla, Talātāla, Mahātāla, Rasātala and Pātāla might have been seven countries in this region. The following description which occurs in Devbāgavata, Skanda 8, would substantiate this inference.

"Pātāla is below the earth. This Pātāla is a group of seven worlds one below the other, with names, Atala, Vītalā, Sutāla, Talātāla, Rasātala and Mahātāla. In all those worlds, there are several beautiful cities and houses, palaces and castles, parks, gardens, open temples and halls, natural arbours etc. made by Maya. There live the Asuras, the Dānava (a class of Asuras-demons) the nāgas (serpents) and others, with their families, with happiness and comfort. Chirping birds, pigeons, parrots, doves, parrots etc. always play there with their inseparable mates. Trees bearing sweet fruits, plants covered with fragrant flowers, arbours with creepers growing up the beautiful gardens floors (Gärden), while marble, and so many other things giving pleasure and comfort are seen there in plenty. In these things the Pātāla surpasses heaven. Daiyais, Dānava and the Nāgas (the Asuras and the serpents) are the dwellers of these worlds. They lead a happy and pleasant life with their families enjoying all sorts of comfort and luxury." Pātāla, one of the seven divisions of the world is described as follows: "This is the region of the Nāgas (the serpents). At the root-place of this region there is a particular place having an area of thirty thousand yojanas. Vīśṇu Kālī who has the attribute of 'tānaśa' (darkness) lives there under the name 'Ananta'. The real Ananta - Adiśeṣa is the radiating embodiment of this Kālī. The daughters of the Nāga Kings are of fair complexion and very beautiful, with clean body. They use perfumes such as sandalwood, aloeswood, saffron etc." In this description, the words Daiyais, Nāgas, Ananta, Sandalwood, aloeswood etc. and the mention of natural beauty should be paid particular attention to. From the Kaṅkāyana we can understand that the Āryas referred to Babais, the nāgas and others (Garcias). History says that the Nāgas were the early inhabitants of Kēraḷa. The ancient word 'Ananta' denotes Tri-vandrum (Trivandrum-purana). The temple of Śri Padmanābha at Trivandrum answers to this description. The perfumes such as sandalwood, aloeswood (cinnamon), etc. are the wealth of Kēraḷa. On the whole the description of Pātāla fits well with that of Kēraḷa. So it is not wrong to infer that the description of Pātāla in the Purānas is entirely about Kēraḷa in all its aspects.

4) The Primogeniture of Kēraḷa From the portions of Purānas given below it could be ascertained that Kēraḷa had an independence of its own from the very ancient days.

(1) Among the kings who attended the Svayamvara (marriage) of Śaśikālā, the daughter of the King of Kaṇeśu, such as the King of Kumāra, King of Kaṇeśu, King of Pābāla, King of Kaṁpāka, Goa and Vidarbha, there was the King of Kēraḷa also. (Devi bhāgamvara, Skanda 3).

(2) When describing the various places in the Southern part of Bārāta, names such as Dvārakā, Koris, Mūša, Kaṁpāka, etc. occur in the Mahābhārata. So it is to be understood that when Vyāsa wrote Bārāta, there was the kingdom of Kēraḷa and that it was separate from the country of Drāviḍa. (M.B. Balṣāṇa Parva, Chapter 9).

(3) "Kārṇavaṇyājuna took his majeste seat in the midst of Kēraḷa, Pāṇḍya and other Kings of the countries under the sea, who were standing round him to pay homage to him." (Balṣāṇa Purāṇa, Chapter 54).

(4) It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277, that a King named Gāndhāra was born in the dynasty of Turvasu the brother of Yadu, and that from Gandhāra were born the powerful families of the Gāndhāravis the Kēraḷas, the Colas, the Pāṇḍyas and the Kōlas.

(5) In Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 175, it is mentioned that the people of Kēraḷa were considered as barbarians by the North Indians.

(6) In Bhāgavata, Skanda 10, it is mentioned that the Kings of Cola, Pāṇḍya and Kēraḷa, from South India, had reached the capital city of Vidarbha to take part in the Svayamvara (marriage) of Rukmikī.

(7) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Gunabha 15, that in his conquest of the countries Karṇa had conquered Kēraḷa also.

(8) It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Dāhī Parva, Chapter 31, that Sahadeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas, conquered the Kēraḷas and the Kēraḷas. It may be noted that the Kēraḷas are different from Kēraḷa. Karṇa had conquered Kēraḷa.

(9) Vālmiki mentions the countries which could be seen by the monkeys who were sent to the South by Sugrīva to search for Śīta. Nādirī Godavari caiva Sarvam evaṇapayata Tathāvādhrān ca Paṇḍrāṇ ca Colan Pāṇḍyan ca Kēraḷa. । You could see the river Godavari and beyond it the countries of Āndhra, Paṇḍrā, Cola, Pāṇḍya and Kēraḷa.। This is a proof of the primitiveness of Kēraḷa.

(10) The King of Kēraḷa had given Yudhīṣṭhira, as presents, sandalwood, pearls, Lapis Lazuli etc. (M.B. Balṣāṇa Purāṇa, Chapter 1). In several other Purānas also, mention about Kēraḷa occurs.

5) The ancient administration of Kēraḷa, Pārīcchekhaṭak, a Saṅgha poet who was a great exponent of "Truṅkural", has stated that from the beginning of the world the three kingdoms, Cera, Cola and Paṇḍya had existed. Though there is a bit of exaggeration in this statement, there are enough evidences agreeable to the time before the birth of Christ, Kēraḷa was under a systematic rule. In "Tolkāppiya", the first grammatical work in Tamil mention is made about the administration of Kēraḷa. Megasthenes, a traveller of 4th century B.C. has stated about the rule of Kēraḷa: There were five councils called the Pātacanāhasthas (the five great councils) to help the Cera Kings. It is stated that these councils were formed by the King Uṣyana Cera of the Trigkṣa fort. Besides these five councils there was an advisory Committee, of which, the priest of the King, the Chief Minister, Chief of the spies and the Chief Revenue officer (Kaṭi) were members.

For convenience of administration the country was divided into Ṭauka (groups of houses - villages) and Nālku (groups of villages). The villages were ruled by four elders (Karaṇava). Four villages formed a Nālpu (group) of four. Four Nālpu formed a Kaṭaka (division of the country with a chief temple within it) and four Kaṭakas formed a Perūnā (greater Kaṭaka). Perūnā was also known as Trigkṣa. The assembly hall of Trigkṣa is called Kaṭi. This hall was erected generally beside the temple. The chief officer of the temple was the chairman of the Trigkṣa (assembly of the people). When a Trigkṣa is assembled, sixty-four elders of the "taras" (officers) of Kāṭaka, the sixty-four Taṇḍār and sixteen Nāḷpaties had to be present. The Nāḷpaties were the chiefs of four tara. The accaṣa, who were the Presidents, had to come clad in variegated silk, with waist-band of long cloth and wearing a small sword (Churikā). Till recently the Kazhakas of An̄dailattār, Rāmpallya, Kurvandaṭa, Turuttu etc., and so many Nāḷpaties and tara and the elders thereof had been retaining and enjoying titles and distinction.

The Namboothiris (Brahmins) entered Kerala before the beginning of the Malayāla Era. With that, changes took place in the administration of Kerala. Certain edicts help us to ascertain the changes that took place in the administration. The edict of Vazhapally of the 9th century by Rājamuklika is an important one in this connection. This emperor of the Cera who is considered to be a contemporary of Śri Saṅkaračārya had the title beginning with "Rājamuklika Paramesvara Bhattachārki". (T.A.S. Vol. II, P. 8-14). The subject dealt with in the edict is the ‘daily worship and settlement’, in the temple of Tiruvottiyur. It is stated in this edict that the people of Vazhapally and the representatives of 18 Nāḍus or divisions had met in the temple and made decisions.

The next one is the Kotayam Copper edicts known as the ‘Tarisa Church Edicts’. This is a document granting the Tarisa Church in Quilon, the adjoining lands and some other institutions. This edict was granted by Ayyanaṭi tiruvaiykal the ruler of the Nāṭu ‘division’, for the Cera emperor. It is mentioned as “including the temple of Dhan Vilayankattava”, which means that Vilayankattava had been present on the occasion of granting the edict, as the representative of Emperor Śtāṇumāvai. The Nāḍuvāzhias (local chiefs or rulers of division) were not empowered to take decision in very important matters. Titles, rights divisions of rank etc., were granted by a council of Chief minister, Officers, Pulavatlapatī and Polakkuṭapati (two high officials of the temple). The Nāḍuvāzhias was the representative of the emperor at Mahadaya pura. The supervising officials of temples were generally called the ‘Koil adhiṭikārī’. Normally, the younger brothers of the Kings were appointed in this rank. These temple-officers were helped in their duties by the Division-rulers, people of the locality and the inferior officers in the temple.

When the empire of Kulaṭaka declined, the family of Perumpadappu got this position of ‘Koil adhiṭikārī’. So the title ‘Koil adhiṭikārī’ is added to the names of the princes of Cochin. Another one is the Mampilly Edicts. This is a deed of granting some lands free to the temple of Ayiru, in the name of Adiccan Umāyangama of Trikkalayaparam, by Venkata Śri Vallabhanēkota in M.E. 149. It so such an unimportant thing as the granting of free lands, had to be effected with the permission of Cera kings and their councils. (T.A.S. Vol IV, Page 9).

From these edicts it is clear that the administration of the temples was carried out by representatives elected by people. For each village temple there was an administrator called by Nāḍuvāzhias and Desāvāzhias (Divisional and Sub Divisional rulers who had Nair infantry (big or small as the case may be) at their disposal. The administrative assembly met either in the open hall at the main gate of the temple or on the stage for performances. The rights and authorities were in the hands of the general assembly of the people called Nāṭukkaṭṭi and the council of the temple officials. When the Namboothiris became powerful they became members of the council. With this change the Kings and Koil adhiṭikārī became puppets in the hands of the Namboothiris. In the Ramavaram edict of M.E. 278 it is mentioned that King Rāmarāma was not interested in ‘archer of the Aryas’. Finally the Namboothiris (Malayāla Brahmins) became the landlords of the country.

6) The people of ancient Kerala. It is assumed that the ancient inhabitants of Kerala were Dravidas. But some historians have mentioned about the ‘Proto Dravidians and the Pre Dravidians. The hill tribes such as Kaniikkarai, Muttavas, Malai Vejas, Pulayas, Kuravas, Nāṭṭi, Malayavayans, Malayats, Malappuram, Malayāthras, Muttavas, Pulāṭas etc. are said to have belonged to this group. They worshipped several things such as stone, banyan tree, elephant tree, Asclapia tree, Nīla tree Terminata Bellarica, Borassus Flabelliformis, cassia fistula, Ghosts, thunder, rain, the sun etc. They worshipped god gongs for welfare, and bad ghosts to avoid misfortunes. They had images of Gaṇa, Giva, Gaṇa, Putkova, Arakula, Preta, Vānhippākki, Ayamulli, Parakkutti, Kāṭtiari, Malavāzi, Māri, Nāṭṭi Pu Maṅkattam, Munippa, Veṭṭuṭṭakarān and so on. They worshipped in small houses, open grounds or houses. They knew black magic such as Kaniikkathara, was associated with irrigation for his ‘father’ of the Aryas. Finally the Namboothiris (Malayāla Brahmins) became the landlords of the country.

7) Ibn Batuta and Kerala. Ibn Batuta who was born in the town of Tāñfīr in Morocco in Africa in A.D. 1304 had travelled all over the Eastern countries then known. He had started from his house on a Haj pilgrimage at the age of 22. He returned home only after 25 years, having travelled all over the known countries. He has written a book in Arabic about his travels of 29 years. One third of this thick volume is devoted for descriptions of his travels in India alone. Its name is Tuh Phattamānār. He passed over the Hindu Kush in A.D. 1333 and entered India. In the midst of his travels throughout the length and breadth of India, he came to Kerala also. He says as follows about Kerala in his book—"Malabar is the country of Pepper. This country's length from Gokarna to Quilon is two months' journey. All the roads in this country are rendered cool and shady by asclapia trees. On the roads at intervals of half an hour there are inns. Near the inn there will be a well and a person to give water. The non-Muslims are given water in pots. But water is poured into the hands of Muslims. Rice is served in plantain leaf and sauces are also served in the same leaf. Uncultivated and uninhabited land is not to be seen. Each house is situated in the centre of a cultivated area. The people of this country do not use animals to carry goods.
Traveling is on foot. Only Kings use horses. There is a conveyance called mañálu (Falanquin). Slaves are used. Falanquin bears. I have seen roads which could be used so fearlessly, only in Kerala and, no where else in the world. Capital punishment is given to one who steals even a coconut. The people of this country respect Muslims.

There are twelve kings in Malabar. None of them are Muslims. Many of them are powerful having an army of more than fifty-thousand soldiers. But there are no quarrells or clashes among them. The powerful do not have the desire to subjugate the less powerful.
The inhabitants of these kings are not sons, but nephews (sons of sisters). Besides the people of Kesari
I have seen only the Muslims of the country of Salem on the banks of the Niger in Africa who have adopted the system of inheritance in the female line.

"Hun Ratana has given some minor descriptions about the towns of Mangalipuram, Ezhumala, Kaukuri, Calicut, Paliyam, Crangangurt and Quilon.

KESARA. A Mountain in Sukadvipa (Saka island).
The air on this mountain was always filled with fragrance. (M.B. Bhuma Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 23).

KESARI I. A forest King who lived in the Mahã Meru.
While Kesari was living in the Mahãmeru, Brahã cursed a celestial maid named Mánagavã and changed her into a female monkey. She became the wife of Kesari, under the name Afhãna. For a long time the couple had no children. Afhãna worshipped Vãyu Bhagavã (Wind-God) for a child.

Once during this period the gods and heroïs went to Paramev Siva and requested him to beget a son to help Mahãvisuñu who was about to incarnate as Sri Rama to kill Kãvana. Siva and Pârvati instantly took the form of monkeys and entered the forest for play.
They having not returned for a long time, the gods asked the wind-god to go in search of them. The wind god came in the form of a great storm and shook the whole of the forest. Still they did not come out. Pârvati who was pregnant was ashamed to come out. With Siva she got on an Atoka tree and sat there. Seeing that tree alone standing motionless in the big storm Vãyu god approached the tree and looked up. Siva and Pârvati appeared before Vãyu. Pârvati refused to take the focus in the form of monkey to Kãlãsã. As Siva had instructed, Pârvati gave the child in the womb to the wind-god. It was at this time that Afhãna had prayed to Vãyu for a child. Vãyu gave that child to Afhãna, who gave birth to it. This child was Hanãmã.
Thus Hanãmã got the names, Afhãnaputra (son of Afhãna).
Vãyunâtra (son of Vãyu), Kesariputra (Son of Kesari) etc. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 417).

KESAVA. See under Kesari.

KESAYANTRI. An attendant of Skandadeva. (M.B.
Salya Parva, Chapter 48).

KESI I. General Information. An Asura. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 65 that forty Asuras or Dãnavas were born to Kãyapa, the son of Märi, and the grandson of Bhrãmã, by his wife Danu, and that Kesí was one of them.

2). Kesí and Indra. Once a war broke out between the Devas and the Asuras. Disasters befell the Devas.
Daiyasañã and Devasañã, the daughters of Prajapati were about to be carried away by Kesí. Daiyasañã agreed to accompany him of her own accord, but Devasañã cried aloud. Hearing her cry Devendra reached the spot. A terrible fight ensued and finally the defeated Kesí ran away. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225).

3). Kesí and Vãyu. Once there was a fight which lasted for thirteen days, between Kesí and Vãyu. (M.B.
Vana Parva, Chapter 134, Stanza 20).

KESI II. A follower of Kama. This Asura, on the instruction of Kama, went to Ambãli (Gokula) taking the form of a horse, to kill Sri Kãna. Sri Kãna killed Kesí. It is seen in the Bhagavãta (Malayalam) that Sri Kãna got the name Kesava because he had killed Kesí.
(Sandhã 10, Kesavadiha).

KESI III. In Bhagavãta there is another Kesí who was the son of Vasudevã.

Pauravi, Khini, Bhadra, Madina, Rocãna, Iõa, Devavikramukha, Õasan, Patuva Anakadundubhel.

Pauravi, Koli, Bhadra, Madira, Rocana, Iõa and devakí were the wives of Vasudeva.

From this statement made in Bhagavãta, Sandhã 9, Chapter 24, it is clear that Vasudeva had a number of wives. Kaúalã, who was one of them, was the mother of Kesí. (Bhagavãta, Sandhã 9, Chapter 24, Stanza 48).

KESIN I. A celestial woman. In Mahabharata, Adi Parva
Chapter 65 it is stated that the twelve celestial maidi
Alambusã, Misrãkësi, Vidyaparçã, Tilottãma, Arunã, Rakštã, Rambhã, Manorãmã, Kesini, Suratã, Surajã and Supriyã were born to Kãyapa of his wife Pradhã.

KESIN II. The wife of Ajamidha, a King of the Puru dynasty. The three sons Jahnã, Vrãja and Rûpina were born to Ajamidha of his wife Kesini. (Agni Purãna, Chapter 278).

KESIN III. A maid of Damayanti. When Nala reached Kundunapuri, as Bãhuka the charioteer of Rûparãna, Kesini approached Bãhuka at the request of Damayanti and by various tests found out that Bãhuka was Nala.
(M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 74 and 75).

KESIN IV. A servant of Pârvati. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Stanza 48 that once Pârvati with her servant Kesini praised Siva.

KESIN V. Once there arose a quarrel between Sudha-vanã, the son of Añgiras, and Virocana the son of Prahlãda, because both wanted to marry the same girl grounded Kesini. Sudhanvã was a Brahmin whereas Virocana was an Asura. Kesini argued that Asura was nobler than Brahmin and Sudhanvã said that it was the other way. Both wagered their lives and accepted Prahlãda as their judge. The decision of Prahlãda was that the Brahmin was the nobler of the two. Because Prabhâda said the truth Sudhanâva did not kill Virocana. But Virocana had to wash the feet of Sudhanâva in the presence of Keśi. Keśi then married Keśi. Keśi in the presence of Virocana. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 35).

KEŚI. VI. A wife of King Sagara. This Keśi was the daughter of the King of Vidarbha. The son of Asamâjjas was born to Sagara of Keśi. (Vânâmâli Râmaâyana, Bâlakândâ, Sarga 39).

KETAKI. (A flower). [Pandarnus odoratissimus].

Though Ketaki is a flower which had been worn on Siva’s head, it is not worshipped for the following reason.

In Satyayuga Mahâvishnu performed intense penance on the Sveta island for the attainment of eternal happiness. Brahmâ also performed penance at a beautiful place for the annihilation of desire. During their tapas Vîśnu and Brahmâ, for a rest, left their seats and walked about in the forest when they met each other. There arose a controversy between them about their respective greatness when Siva, in the form of a Lâga, appeared between the two contestants and told them what he who first found his (Siva’s) head or feet was greater than the other. Accordingly Vîśnu went down and Brahmâ went up on a tour of enquiry.

Though Vîśnu went down deeper and deeper for a long time to find out Siva’s feet he failed in the attempt and so returned and sat at the place whence he started for the search. Brahmâ went up a very long distance when he saw a Ketaki flower falling down from the sky. He took the flower in his hands and went to Vîśnu and told him that he had found out Siva’s head and showed the Ketaki flower as proof of his discovery claiming that it was taken from Siva’s head. But Vîśnu did not believe Brahmâ and asked the Ketaki flower to bear witness to Brahmâ’s claim. The flower gave false evidence in favour of Brahmâ. Siva got angry at this false evidence and cursed it. The Ketaki lost its place among the best flowers from that day onwards.

KETU I. (KETUMÂN). A Dânava. He was the son of Kaśyapa (grandson of Brahmâ and son of Marici) by his wife Danu. This Asura, who exists in the shape of a planet had thirty-three brothers, i.e. Vipracitti, Śambhara, Nâmuci, Pulomâ, Aśi, Keśi, Vîrûyā, Ayaśi, Asvalas, Asva, Sañcu, Mahâbala, Garga, Amûrdana, Vagvah, Mânavâ, Svarbhûna, Asvapati, Vîravâparvan, Ajaka, Ávagrita, Sûkha, Tukunda, Ekapâ, Ekacakra, Vîrûpâksha, Harârâha, Nikumbha, Kapata, Sarabha, Sâlabha, Sûrya and Candramas. (Adi Parva, Chapter 65).

But Ketu maintained closer relationship with Râhu, a step-brother of his, being the son of Kaśyapa by another wife called Simhâka. Râhu and Ketu are even today considered as inauspicious planets. Râhu wears a half-moon and Ketu holds in his hands a sword and lamp. Amritaujas was Ketu reborn. (Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 11).

KETU II. A great sage of ancient India. He attained salvation by self-study. (Sânti Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 7).

KETU III. A synonym of Siva. (Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 38).

KETU IV. A king born in Bharata’s dynasty. (Bhâgavata, 9th Skanda).

KETU V. (DHÔMÂKETU). The following story is told in Vîstuddharmottara Purâna about the birth of Dhûmâketu.

Noting that the population on earth had increased abnormally Brahmâ created a damsel called Mûtyu and asked her to kill people. At this command of Brahmâ she began crying, and from her tear drops various kinds of diseases originated at the sight of which she took to penance. Then Brahmâ appeared and blessed her saying that no one would die because of her at which she heaved a great sigh of relief from which she was born Ketu or Dhûmâketu.

KUTUMALA I. The grandson of Priyavrata, the son of Manu. Agnîdhra, the son of Priyavrata married Pûrvacitti. Nine sons were born to Agnîdhra with his wife Pûrvacitti. Kutumâla was one of them. His brothers were Nabhi, Kûmâra, Hari, Ilvita, Kanyakâ, Hiraîyana, Kuru, and Bhradîvya.

In old age Agnîdhra divided his kingdom among his sons. Later, the portion given to Kutumâla came to be known as Kutumâla. (Kutumâla 9).

KUTUMALA II. A holy place in Jambûdvipa. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 69).

KUTUMALA III. (See under Kutumâla I). Kutumâla is the ninth division of Jambûdvipa. The people of this part of the earth are equal to gods (Devas). The women are very beautiful. In Mahâbhârata, Sahibhi Parva it is stated that Arjun conquered this land. Kutumâla is situated on the east of Mount Meru. In Mahâbhârata, Bhemâ Parva, Chapter 6, there is the description of Kutumâla.

KETU I. Ketu the Asura (demon). (See under Ketu I).

KETUMÂN. II. A King who was a luminary in the council of Yudhishthira. He was a warrior on the side of the Kauravas and a friend of Sūryâvâda, the King of Kaliga. It is mentioned in Mahâbhârata, Bhemâ Parva, Chapter 54, Stanza 77, that Bhumasena killed this warrior in the battle of Bharata.

KETUMÂN III. In the Mahâbhârata, another Ketumân who fought on the side of Pûrvâvasi, is stated. Dhrtya-râja had praised the valor of this warrior. (M.B. Bhemâ Parva, Chapter 10).

KETUMÂN IV. A palace in Dvârakâ. It is mentioned in Mahâbhârata, Daksinâyapa-pâtha, Sahiba Parva, Chapter 38, that Sudatta, the wife of Sri Kûrma lived in this palace.

KETUMÂN V. Antâpâla (the guard of the boundary) of the west. At the beginning of the creation of the world Brahmâ had appointed as guards of the boundaries, Sudhanvava in the east, Sañkapâda in the south, Keśimâna in the west and Hûrayamakas in the north. (Agni Purâna, Chapter 19).

KETUMÂN VI. A King of the Puru dynasty. (See under Varisâvali).

KETUMÂN VII. In Bhâgavata we see a Ketumân who was the son of Dhanvantari, who gave Ayurveda to the world.

"Who was the deva who made Ayurveda in days of old? His son was Ketumân whose son was Bhimâratha." (Bhâgavata, Skanda 9).

KETUMÂN VIII. Son of Ekalâyana. In Mahâbhârata, Bhemâ Parva it is mentioned that this King of the KETUMATI. Mother of Prahasana, a minister of Rāvaṇa. Ketumati had two sisters Sundari and Vasudhā. These three were daughters of Gaṇadharava woman.

Ganapati, the son of Brahmā married Bhāyā and Vidhyāksha was born to the couple. Sūkaśa was born to Vidhyāksha by his wife Sākaṇakāṇi. Three sons Mālāvīya, Sūmaī and Mālī were born to Sūkha by his wife Daivavati. Sundari, Ketumati and Vasudhā the three beautiful sisters mentioned above, were married by the grand Mālāvīya, Sūmaī and Mālī respectively. Thus Ketumati became the wife of Sūmaī. To Sūmaī and Ketumati were born ten sons, Prahasana, Akṣampana, Viśāla, Kākānaśākha, Dīnārākṣa, Daṇḍa, Supārśva, Samhāraṇa. Prakrāta and Bhāsakarna and four daughters Vekha, Pupantōka, Kākā and Kumbharnā. Most of the sons were ministers of Rāvaṇa. (Uttara Rāmāyanam).

KETUSRAGA. A King of ancient India. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 1).

KETUVARMA. A prince of the country of Trigarta. He was the youngest brother of Titravarn, the King of Trigarta. Arjuna led the sacrificial host and the horse-sacrifice of the Pāṇḍavas. Ketuvarma accompanied Arjuna as a helper. (M.B. Abhinnadha Parva, Chapter 74).

KEVALA. A city of ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Stanza 10 and 11 that Karna conquered this city.

KHA. Thus syllable hand and which are born to Sūkha by his wife Daivavati. (M.B. Abhinnadha Parva, Chapter 74).

KHA DGA. A warrior of Śrāvatārā. (Mahābhārata, Sālaya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 67).

KHA GJĀBHUSU. See under Duṣāśana II.

KHA DGI. See under Kaṭki.

KHA GA I. A rāga (serpent) born in the family of Kaṭvāda. (M.B. Udvyoga Parva, Chapter 103).

KHA GA II. A synonym of Śiva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 67).

KHA GAMA. A Brāhmaṇa. In Mahābhārata, there is a story which describes how this Brahmān Khagama changed another Brahmān to a serpent by cursing him. The Brahmān Khagama and Sahastrapāt were friends. Once Sahastrapāt made a snake of grass and terrified Khagama at Aṅghita (Burat offering in the holy fire) Khagama instantly cursed Sahastrapāt to become a serpent. Sahastrapāt requested for liberation from the curse. Khagama said that he would resume his original form on the day he saw Ruru the son of Pramati. From that day onwards Sahastrapāt roamed about in several countries in the form of a serpent. Once Pramadavāsa the wife of Ruru died by snake-bite. Ruru cried over the death of his wife for a long time. According to the advice of a messenger from the Devas Ruru gave half of his life-time to his wife and she came to life again. But Ruru felt a bitter hatred against serpents and began their extermination. Once he met with Sahastrapāt. Instantly at the sight of Ruru, Sahastrapāt obtained his original form. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 49).

KHA GA N A. A King born in the family of Śrī Rāma. He was the son of Vaṁśvaluationa and the father of Viśīti. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

KHA GODARA. See under Kāhoda.

KHALI I. A synonym of Mahāvīra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 43).

KHALI II. An Asura dynasty. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 155, Stanza 22, that Vasiṣṭha once destroyed an Asura dynasty called Kahlī, with his efﬂuvium.

KHALU. A river of ancient India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 28).

KHANAKA. A messenger sent by Viṣṇu, secretly to the Pāṇḍavas who were living in the wax-house. Viṣṇu sent a message through Khanaka to the effect that Duryodhana had decided to set ﬁre to the wax-house employing Puruṣaṇa to do it on the 14th night of the dark lunar fortnight. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 147).

KHANDAKHANṑDA. A female attendant of Śrīkade. In Mahābhārata, Sālaya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 20, mention is made about this woman.

KHANDAPARĀṢA. Śiva. A story occurs in Mahābhārata stating how Śiva got this name. The famous Daksāya-yaga (sacriﬁce performed by Daksā) was performed at a time when the Nara Nārāyaṇas were engaged in penance in Badarīkārama. Daksā did not invite his son-in-law Śiva. The angry Śiva sent his trident against Daksā. The trident destroyed the sacriﬁce of Daksā and then fell against the breast of Nārāyaṇa who was sitting in penance in Badarīkārama. By the power of the trident the hair of Nārāyaṇa became of multja (a grass) colour. From that day onwards Nārāyaṇa came to be known by the name Multjaśa. By a sound "hum", the hermit Nārāyaṇa deviated the trident, which reached the hands of Śiva, who got angry and approached Nārāyaṇa to kill him. Nara, who was close by took an arrow and reciting spells over it, released it to kill Śiva. Immediately the arrow changed to an axe. Śiva broke the axe. After this the axe became the weapon of Śiva. In Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 33, it is mentioned that this axe was given to Paraśurāma the disciple of Śiva. Henceforward Śiva got the name Khandaparāṣa. (Paraśu means axe). (Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 343, Stanza 150-59, 167).

KHANDAVAḌĀHA. 1) Introduction. Long ago a King named Śvetākha began to perform a sacriﬁce of duration of 100 years. Many Brahmans took part in the sacriﬁce as priests conducting the rituals and ceremonies. These Brahmans priests began to depart after a few years turning blind due to the smoke coming out of the sacriﬁcial ﬁre. Thus the sacriﬁce was stopped for want of priests. Śvetākha was grieved at this and performed penance to Śiva for getting a priest. Śiva appeared before him and pointed out hermit Durvāsas as the priest. Śvetākha recommended the sacriﬁce and under the supervision of Durvāsas the sacriﬁce was completed. But Fire god caught dysentery due to the continuous eating of oblations offered in the sacriﬁcial ﬁre for a long period. His face became pale, body became lean, and he had no taste for food. At last Fire-God went to Brahmā and complained about his disease. Brahmā said that in the forest of Khandavā there lived so many creatures which were enemies of the devas (gods) and that by eating their fat the disease of Agni would be cured. Accordingly Agni came to the Khandava forest.
The serpent Takṣaka, a friend of Indra, lived in this forest with his wife and children. Indra knew that Agni had come to burn the Kṛṣṇa forest, and he wanted to save Takṣaka at any cost. When Agni (fire) began to catch the forest, Indra had already begun rain. So it was not possible for Agni to consume the forest. Agni tried seven times to consume the forest and in all these seven attempts he failed. Agni again approached Brahmā, who told him that the Nara-Nārāyana would take care of him with Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna and that at that time it would be possible for fire to consume the forest Kṛṣṇa.

2) Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna in the forest of Kṛṣṇa. While the Pāṇḍavas were living in Indraprastha, once the hot season became unbearable that Arjuna took Kṛṣṇa with him and went to the forest of Kṛṣṇa. While they were playing in the river Yamunā with their wives, Agni came there in the guise of an old Brahmin and told them all that had happened and requested their help for eating the Kṛṣṇa forest. Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna promised to help him in this affair.

3) Preparation of weapons. For the time being Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna were not having sufficient weapons. Agni (fire-god) thought of Varuṇa (the God of water) who instantly appeared. At the request of Agni Varuṇa gave Arjuna the famous bow Candradhamas (Gāndiva), a quiver which would never become empty of arrows and a chariot having a flag with the sign of monkey and to Śrī Kṛṣṇa the weapon of the discus, Varuṇa gave four white horses also with gold chains around their necks for drawing the chariot of Arjuna. With these weapons Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna went to the help of Agni. Śrī Kṛṣṇa became the charioteer of Arjuna.

4) Burning the forest. When Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna stood ready Agni began to consume the forest. Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna guarded the boundaries of the forest so that the inmates of the forest might not escape. The living creatures ran hither and thither finding no way to escape. Many died of suffocation. At that time the birds of the forest ran to Kṛṣṇa and informed him of the great calamity. Indra instantly got ready to fight and save the forest. He covered the whole of the sky with clouds and a heavy rain was showered on the forest. Arjuna created a covering of arrows like an umbrella over the fire and saved him from the rain.

5) The family of Takṣaka. At this particular time Takṣaka had been away at Kurukṣetra. Atśvāsenā the son of Takṣaka was writhing with heat and pain. Seeing this his mother (wife of Takṣaka) swallowed him from tail to head. Then she ran to the boundary to throw the child into the outer region. Seeing this Arjuna got angry and cut at the head of Atśvāsenā. But at the nick of time a storm was sent by a storm and made Arjuna swoon and Atśvāsenā was saved. So Arjuna became furious and began to cut down every creature he saw. Arjuna, Kṛṣṇa and Agni together cursed Atśvāsenā that he would get refuge nowhere.

Atśvāsenā kept up his hatred of Arjuna. In the Bhārata battle, Atśvāsenā got on an arrow sent by Kṛṣṇa at Arjuna and knocked off the crown of Arjuna and retired. But due to the curse Kṛṣṇa did not receive him back.

6) Deadly fight. The serpents and hawks confronted Arjuna, who cut off their heads. Kṛṣṇa killed the Asuras with the weapon discus. Indra came to the battlefield riding on his elephant Anīratha, Kāla (time), Kubera, and other Devas (gods) and Asuras (demons) helped Indra in the fight. But Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna came out victorious.

7) The advent of Maya. Meanwhile Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna called Indra and told him that they were informed that Takṣaka had gone to Kurukṣetra. Hearing this Indra blessed Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna and retreated from the battlefield. Agni but to consume the forest more vigorously than before. Because of the unbearable heat, Maya, the architect of the Asuras, came out of the house of Takṣaka and ran to Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna and entreated them to save him. Accordingly Arjuna saved him from the fire.

8) The story of four birds which escaped from the fire. In this forest a hermit named Mandapāla had created his hermitage and lived there performing penance. He died and went to the world of ancestors. But there, the hermit did not attain any fruit of the penance he had performed. The hermit asked the Devas for the reason. They replied that it was because the hermit had not sons. The hermit came to the forest again to marry and begot sons. Mandapāla married a bird called Jāriṇī. Four sons named Jāriṇī, Śrīrijā, Surīrijā and Deva were born to them. After this Mandapāla left Jāriṇī and her sons and went after another woman Lapiṭi. Feathers were not yet grown on the body of Jāriṇī's four sons. The burning of the forest began before it. Jāriṇī and her sons were in a sorry plight. The mother could fly. But she did not think of leaving her young ones in danger. She decided to die in the fire folding the young ones under her wings. But her sons did not agree to it. They entreated her to fly away. Thus moments of tears passed by. At last Jāriṇī told them crying, “There is the hole of a rat closely. The rat had been taken away by a kite. I will take you to that hole and close it. Then I shall go away and return when the fire is afraid.”

But the young ones did not agree to this. They loved to be killed by fire, rather than to be killed by rat. Finally at their request Jāriṇī flew away. Mandapāla thought of his sons. He separated from Lapiṭi, and came to Agni and requested him to save his sons and Jāriṇī. Agni consumed the forest and shot the birds. Then some birds returned to save them. Agni Deva saved them. Mandapāla and Jāriṇī returned. That family lived for a long time in joy and happiness and finally attained the world of the gods. Agni returned to heaven after the burning of the forest of Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 233 to 236.)
Yoga (the path of knowledge or spiritual attainment), each desired to subdue the other. Consequently Khândikâya lost his kingdom and had to live in a forest with his priest and minister. (Bhâgavata, Skandhas 9 and 10).

Keśidhvaja who tried the path of knowledge to attain a position performed several sacrifices for that purpose and cut himself asunder from the bonds of action. Once, while he was performing himself a sacrifice, a tiger came to the place of sacrifice and killed the sacrificial cow. Then Keśidhvaja asked the priests who were conducting the sacrifice, what the atonement was for the death of the sacrificial cow. The priests sent the King to the hermit Kûcenâ, who sent the King to the hermit Bhrigu. Hermit Bhrigu in his turn sent the King to the hermit Sûnaka, but the matter did not end there. The hermit Sûnaka could not dictate the alonement for the death of the sacrificial cow. So he sent the King to Khândikâya who was living in the forest. The moment Khândikâya saw Keśidhvaja he stood ready to kill him. But Keśidhvaja revealed everything to Khândikâya. When he understood the situation Khândikâya told him with sincerity the rules given in the Sûtras (Vedângas) to atone the death of the sacrificial cow. Keśidhvaja returned and completed the sacrifice. The one item of ‘got’ to the teacher’s home remained. So Keśidhvaja came to the forest again. Khândikâya raised the sword to cut him. Keśidhvaja said that he had come to give Gurudakshîna to the teacher. Khândikâya repented his rashness and requested Keśidhvaja to tell him the ways of cutting himself asunder from the bonds of sacrifice. Keśidhvaja advised him the ways to obtain eternal bliss. (Nârada Purâna)

Khanînetra. The eldest son of Vivahâra, a King of the solar dynasty. It is mentioned in Mahabhârata. Asvamedha Parva, Chapter 4, that this King was driven away from the country because he harassed the people.

Kâra 1. A giant (Râkshasa). Khara and Atikaya were the children of Madhu and Kaṭabhâ. For details see under Kaṭabhâ and Atikaya.

1) Birth and genealogy. Mahabhârata mentions as follows about the birth of this giant:—Vâsuras was born from Pulâkya the son of Brahmâ. Kubera was born from Vîsûtras, Kubera ruled over Lanka. Vîsûtras had no one to help him. Once looked with anger at Kubera, who, understanding the wish of his father gave him three gânis named Puspojâta, Râkshâ and Malinî as attendants. They attended on him faithfully and Vîsûtras was pleased with them. To Vâsuras two sons named Râvana and Kumblakarna were born by Puspojâta. Vîbhisana was born by Malinî and the twin sisters and brother Sûryanâkha and Khara were born by Râkshâ. By and by Khara became a famous archer Râvana, Kumblakarna and Vîbhisana performed penance to obtain boons and Khara and Sûryanâkha stayed with them to serve them. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 275).

2) Other brothers. Khara had two other brothers Dûvana and Yûkîra. (Uttara Râmâyana).

3) The daughter of Kâra. While Sât and Lâksâmana were staying in the forest of Dânajâkaryana Sûryanâkha the sister of Khara came there once and tried to get one of the brothers Sât and Lâksâmana as her husband. Lâksâmana cut off her nose and ears.

She went to Khara, Dûvana and Trisiras and lamented before them. The three of them immediately started with an army of fourteen thousand giants and fought with Râma and Lâksâmana, who killed every one of them. (Vâmûki Râmâyana, Aranyakânda, Sargas 19 to 30).

Kâra II. Another giant who helped Râvana in the battle between Râma and Râvana. In Mahabhârata, Vana Parva, Chapter 285, Stanza 2, it is said that "Parvâna, Pâvana, Jambha, Khara, Krodhavasa, Hâri, Prarûpa, Arûja, Praghosa and others fought with Râma.

Khâsîra. A place situated on the North East corner of ancient India. (M.B. Bhism Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 68).

Kâtvârghya. 1) General Introduction. A King of the Ikvâku dynasty, known by the name Ditipa also. Bhâgavata Skandha 9, states that Khâtvânga was the son of the grandson of Kalmâsapâda. Atma was the son of Kaśîmâsa, Kâtvânga the son of Asma and Khâtvânga the son of Mulaka. Khâtvânga was a royal hermit once pleased God and understood how long he would live. From that day onwards he left all the work of administration in the hands of ministers and spent the remaining days in devotion and meditation. (Bhâgavata, Skandha 2).

2) Particular details. In Mahabhârata it is mentioned that Khâtvânga was the son of the woman called Ilibâla and that he had the name Ditipa also Khâtvânga was one of the sixteen famous Kings of Bhûrata. The sixteen Kings were Maruttra, Sûktra, Paurava, Śûri, Sîtra Kâmâ, Bhrasratha, Khâtvânga, (Ditipa) Mandhâtra, Yâyati, Ambarîsha, Sâsindu, Gaya, Râmideva, Bhûrata, Pîru and Parmarûm. Khâtvânga performed one hundred sacrifices. At the time of sacrifice he made golden roads. Even Indra came to the sacrifice. The Devas blessed Khâtvânga on that day. See under Ditipa. (M.B. Droha Parva, Chapter 61).

Khîla. There is an appendix to Mahabhârata called Khîla. This Khîla is known as Harivânsha also. This portion too was written by Vyāsa.

Khyâta. An attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Sâya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 20).

Khyâti I. A daughter of Pañjâpati Daksîna. The hermit Bhrigu married her. A daughter named Laksmi and two sons named Dhiåta and Vîdhâtå were born to Bhrigu by Khyâti. (Agni Purâna, Chapter 20).

Khyâti II. Daughter of Kuru, who was born of the family of Bhrûva. Six sons, Agra, Sûmanas, Svatå, Krin, Asiras, and Dhiåta were born to Kuru by his wife Agney. (Vîgîg Purâna, Arûja, 1, Chapter 15). Khyâti was a daughter born to them.

1) General information. To Kekaya, king of the Sutav was born four sons: Mahavati, the only sister was called Sudeşā. (Bhārata, Southern text, Page 189). Kicaka and Upa-Kicaka took their birth from an aspect of Bana, the eldest of the Asuras known as the Kakakeyas. (See Bhārata, Page 189). Mātaka, the Vīra king wedded Sudeşā; and from that day onwards, the brothers fell in love in the Vīra palace. Kicaka was the chiefman of Vīra's army, and he had many a time, defeated in war King Sūdrasman of Trigun. (Virāta Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 30).

2) Kicaka and Pāncālī. During their life incoherent, the Pāndavas lived in the Vīra palace after taking up various jobs. Pāncālī, under the assumed name Māthi, served Sudeşā and her daughter Utsrā as their chaperon. Kicaka fell in love with Pāncālī at first sight. But, Pāncālī resisted all his advances. Then, he sought the help of his sister Sudešā to bring round Pāncālī to him somehow. Sudešā asked Kicaka to be ready on the New Moon day with liquor and rice and promised to send Māthi (Pāncālī) to him. Ordered by Sudešā, she went to Kicaka with his plate of food. To each other's shock, Kicaka caught hold of her and when the former caught her by the hair, fell her on the floor and kicked her. A Rākṣasa, who was also represented Pāncālī's security appeared on the scene in a trance and sold Kicaka.

3) Kicaka's Death. The very same night with tears in her eyes, Pāncālī told Bhima all about the indecent behaviour. He asked Pāncālī to invite Kicaka to a secret meeting at a specified place the next night, and promised her that he would remain concealed there and kill Kicaka. Accordingly Bhima concealed himself the next night: in the dancing hall and, as requested by Pāncālī, Kicaka came to the hall at midnight to spend a few hours with Pāncālī. Bhima was lying there on a cot, and Kicaka, mistaking him for Pāncālī killed him. Bhima turned his head, and Kicaka fell on him to death. The next morning, it was the fate of Kicaka's brothers to lament over his death. The story also was spread that Kicaka was killed by some Gandharva, the husband of Pāncālī.

The Upa-Kicakas removed the dead body of their brother to the burning ghat. Proclaiming that Pāncālī, who was responsible for the death of their brother would also be burnt to death on the same pyre, the Upa-Kicakas forcibly took her with them. Hearing the heartrending cries of Pāncālī Bhima rushed to the spot and killed all the Upa-Kicakas and saved Pāncālī from death. In the presence of the Vīra king the cremation of the Kicaka and the Upa-Kicaka took place. (Virāta Parva, Chapter 13, etc.)

Kīkāṭa. A king born in the dynasty of Priyavrata, son of Manu. He was one of the nineteen sons of King Bharata, the other eighteen being Kuśavarmman, Iśvarta, Brahmāvarta, Arvāvarta, Malaya, Bhadraketa, Sena, Indrasprk, Vidarbha, Kapi, Hari, Antarika, Prabuddha, Pippalāvaya, Avirnotha, Dranida, Camaśa and Karabarjana. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skanda).

Kīkāṭa (M). The country ruled by King Kīkāṭa. The following story is told in Devi Bhāgavata as to how an as in this kingdom attained heaven.

There was once in Kīkāṭa a merchant who had an as to carry his merchandise. Once the merchant was returning home from Bhadrācīla with his ass loaded with bundles of costly Rudrakṣas. The ass fell down dead on the way, the weight of the Rudrakṣa bundles having been too much for it, and immediately it assumed the form of Siva and went to Karliṣa. Even if a man does not know what he is carrying, if he carries sacred things he will certainly attain salvation, like the ass that attained salvation in this case. (Devi Bhāgavata, 11th Skanda).

KILL (PARROT). 1) Urga. About the origin of Kill (parrots) the following is stated in Canto 14, Aranyaka Kund of the Kāṇḍyaṇa. Kāṇḍyaṇa, the grandson of Brahmā and son of Marici married the eight daughters of Daksāja-prajapati, one of them being called Tāmar. Tāmar had five daughters called Kacaka, Bhāti, Suci, Dīprakṣi and Suci. Suki or Killis (parrots) are the offspring of Suki.

2) Parrotis natura tranquillae. Lord Śiva agreed to begin a son to kill Tāmakura, at the request of the Devas. The contest between Siva and Pāṭaṇi from the purpose did not end even after a hundred years. Due to the pressure of the process the whole world shook, and when the world appeared to get destroyed the Devas asked Agni-Teva to persuade Śiva to stop. But, afraid of approaching Śiva Agni ran off and hid himself in the ocean. The Devas followed him, and animals in the water which were burning with the heat of Agni, told the Devas that Agni was hiding in the sea. But, Agni cursed them all to dumbness, and leaving the ocean hid himself on mount Mandara. The parrots revealed this secret, when Agni cursed them also and made their tongues fold inwards. The Devas and the parrots requested for redemption from the curse. Redemption was granted thus: "Though the tongue be turned inwards your sound will be melodious, just like the voice of a child your (parrots') sound also will be sweet and wonderful."

From that day onwards parrots began talking and singing. (Kāṭahārṣīṣikāra, Lāvāṇakālambaka, Tārūga 6 and Āruṣāsana Parva, Chapter 85.)

KIMPUṆA. A river in Devaloka. 1: worships Varuna in his assembly. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 29).

KIMPUṆA. A river in Devaloka. 1) General. A King called Agni-Teva was born in the dynasty of Priyavrata, son of Manu. He became lord of the Jambu island, and married an apsārā woman named Purva-Śi. To them were born nine sons called Nābhī, Kimpuruṣa, Hari, Iśvarta, Rāmakī, Hira, Kaiva, Bhadrācīla and Kettamula. Agni-Teva partitioned the kingdom among the nine sons. The land Kimpuruṣa ruled over was known as Kimpuruṣa or Kimpuruṣavasā. It lay to the south of Hemalaya mountain. It was here that Hanumān spent his last days worshipping Śri Rāma.

"The son of the wind god (Hanumān) lives in the country called Kimpuruṣavasā in the worship of Śri Rāma." (Bhāgavata, 5th Skanda).

According to the Sābhā Parva (Chapter 23, Verses 1-2) Kimpuruṣavasā guarded by the sons of Druma is situated to the north of the Himalaya facing the Dhavala mountain, and this country was once conquered by Arjuna.
KINDAMA

2) Other information.
(i) Kimpururas were the sons of Pulaha Prajapati. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 8).
(ii) They witnessed Agastya drinking up the ocean dry. (Vana Parva, Chapter 104, Verse 21).
(iii) They guard the lotus ponds kept by Kubera to sport with his beloved ones. (Vana Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 9).
(iv) Maru Labhas conflict with Rākṣasa, Kubera left behind huts Lañaka and his Puspaka Vīmaṇa, escaped towards the north and settled down on mount Gandhamādana with the help of the Kimpururas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 275, Verse 33).
(v) Yakṣa women were their mothers. (Śaṅgi Parva, Chapter 207, Verse 25).
(vi) They were present at the advancement of Yudhishthira. (Āvaneśha Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 37).
(vii) Sudra Brahmarśi reached Bhārata, crossing Kimpurusaśvara. (Śaṅgi Parva, Chapter 325).

KINDAMA. A great sage. Once sage Kindama and his wife were roaming in the forest; in the form of deer. While hunting, King Paṇḍu discharged his arrow amongst the deer. It assumed its original form as sage Kindama and told the King that it was wrong on his part to have hurt (the) sage while he was engaged in love play. “I am dying, but in future if you physically contact your wife you too will die.” After saying so the sage fell down dead. Paṇḍu could never have children of his own from his wives due to this curse. He forgot all about the curse once, embraced Madri and fell down dead. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 117).

KINDANA (M). A sacred place in Kuruksetra. A holy dip here is productive of innumerable auspicious results.

KINDATAKUPE. A holy pond. He who sows gingelly seeds in the pond is redeemed from the three Kuṇa (deities) i.e. Kṣi-Rūpa, Puru-Rūpa and Deva-rūpa. The first is to be redeemed by Brahmakarya (celibacy), the second by house-holder’s life and the third by yajñas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 88).

KINJAPYA. A particular holy place in Kuruksetra. A bath here is productive of innumerable auspicious results.

KIRKASA. A King born in the lunar dynasty. Nambo, Kirkasa and Vṛṣni were the three sons of King Mahābhūha (Bhāgavata, 9th Skanda).

KINFR 1. A Rākṣasa. Aṅkita, the son of Vasiṣṭha and King Kalmāśapāda of the solar dynasty once quarreled with each other, and the King cursed and turned Aṅkita into a Rākṣasa. At this juncture Vīvadhara invoked Kinkara, a Rākṣasa attendant of his, into the body of Kalmāśapāda, and induced by Kinkara, Kalmāśapāda killed all the sons of Vasiṣṭha. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 175).

KIRKARA II. Name of Kāla’s stick. It is with this stick that Kāla kills living beings. “Like Kāla who holds the stick Kinkara?” (Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 122).

KIRKARA (S). A race of Rākṣasas. After building the palace at Indraprastha for the Pandavas Mayānura put 8000 Kirkara for guarding the palace (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3) These guards were able to remove the palace from one place to another. Yudhishthira, who started for the north to collect money is said to have met the Kinkaras on the Himalayas. (Āvaneśha Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 6).

KISKINIKĀśRAMA. A holy place. A bath here will lift one to heaven. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 23).

KINNARA (S). A sect of Devas all of whom hold Vināś in their hands. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 31).

KIRATA. An urban region in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11).

KIRATARJUNIYA. During the life in exile in the forest of the Pāṇḍavas, Arjuna performed penance to propitiate Śiva in the Himalayas. Disguised as a forest-hunter Śiva appeared on the scene and tested Arjuna’s valour. Arjuna won in the test and was presented the Pāṇḍavaśṭra by Śiva. The story is told in Chapter 167 of the Vana Parva. (See under Arjuna).

KIRTI I. A warrior of Skanda deva. (Śaṅgi Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 71).

KIRTI II. A synonym of Arjuna. (See under Arjuna). KIRMITRA. A fierce Rākṣasa, brother of Baka and friend of Hidumb. Having heard about the death of Pāṇḍavas at the hands of Arjuna, Kirmira and his friend Baka fell into violent rage in Kanyakur forest planning a revenge against Bhīma. After being defeated in the game of dice the Pāṇḍavas came to the forest, and they confronted Kirmira. In the duel with Bhīma, Kirmira fell down dead. (Vana Parva, Chapter 11).

KIRTI I. Daughter of Sudra Brahmarśi, son of Vyāsa. Sudra wedded Pīravī, the beautiful daughter of the Parva. Four sons named Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprakāśa, Bhūri and Devasūtra and a daughter Kirti were born to Sudra and Pīravī. Kirti was wedded by Prince Anu, son of King Vibhramana, and a son called Brahmadatta was born to them, who grew up to become a great scholar and an ascetic. On the advice of Narada, King Brahmadatta ultimately abdicated the throne in favour of his son, performed penance at Badaryāśrama and attained salvation. (Devi Bhāgavata, 1st Sāraṃda).

KIRTI II. A daughter of Dakṣaprajāpatī. Svayambhuvamana wedded his own sister Satārūpā, and to them were born two sons called Priyavrata and Uttānapāda and two daughters called Prusūti and Akāti. Dakṣaprajāpati married Prusūti, and they had twenty-four daughters who were: Śradhā, Lāja, Dhūri, Tūṣi, Medhā, Pūṣi, Kṛṣṇā, Budhā, Lajā, Vāpas, Śītā, Siddhi, Kīrti, Khyāti, Satī, Sampātī, Śormī, Pritī, Kṣamā, Sannāti, Amśī, Urjā, Svāhā, and Svadhā. The first thirteen of the above twenty-five girls were married by Dharmadevā. The other eleven girls were married respectively by Birgu, Śiva, Marka, Angrās, Pulastya, Pulaha, Krautī, Ātri, Vasiṣṭha, Agni and Pīravī. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 7).

KIRTI III. The Devi who is the basis and cause of all fame and reputation. (Vana Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 38).

KIRTIDHARMA. A Kṣatriya hero, who was a supporter of Dharmanupta. (Dropa Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 39).

KIRTIMĀN I. The first son born to Vasudeva and Devakī. As a celestial voice had warned Kṛṣṇa that the eighth son of Devakī would kill him he had ordered that every child born to her should be taken to him. Accordingly the first-born son of Devakī was taken to him, but was returned to the parents as Kṛṣṇa thought that he was not his enemy. He was brought up under the name Kirtimān. Afterwards Nārada visited Kamsa and exposed this lie to him about his former birth, the object of Kṛṣṇa’s incarnation etc. This information so angered Kamsa that he got Vasudeva and Devaki chained in prison. Moreover he brought back the first-born son of Devaki and dashed him to death on a stone. Thus ended the life of Kirtimān.

KIRTIMĀN II. Mahāvīra mentally created a son called Vrukṣapura of Kirtimān was this son. A son called Kardama was born to Kirtimān. (Śaṅkha Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 90).

KIRTIMĀN III. A Visvadeva (universal deva). (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 31).

KIRTIMUKHA. A Siva gana born out of the matted hair of Śiva with three faces, three tails, three legs and seven hands. The Lord at first asked him to live on corpses, but later on, in appreciation of his valour granted him the boon that if anyone saw the Lord without thinking first about Kirtimukha, he would meet with his down-fall. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 50).

KIRTISENĀ. Son of the brother of the Nāga chief Vānukē. A love-mance with Śrutārtha daughter of a brahmin, and a child was born to them. (Kathāśārīśāgarā, Kadāpi-tvākalamāsakā).

KIRTISENĀ. A heroine who has firmly established her reputation in Sanskrit literature. An exceptionally good woman, Kiritā was the daughter of a merchant called Dhanapāla in Pațaliputra, and was married by another merchant called Devasena. Once Devasena left his wife for a long period of time and during his absence from home the mother-in-law of Kiritā shut her up in a dark room. But, with the help of an iron rod, which fortunately came to her hands she made a hole in the room at night, and through it escaped from captivity. Hungry and thirsty, Kiritā travelled for a long distance in the forest, and at night climbed a tree and rested thereon. Presently a Rākṣasa woman with her children came to the feet of the tree. During this period the King of Vasudattapura was suffering from pain in the head because a bug entered his ear and multiplied there in numbers. All the physicians gave up the case as incurable. But, the Rākṣasa at the foot of the tree advised the following cure for the King’s illness to her children — “Anoint the King’s head with ghee and make him lie in the sun at noon. After that insert a small tube into his ear, and keep the other end of the tube in a pot full of water. Then the bugs will come out from the ear into the water, and the King will be cured of his illness.” Kiritā, who heard medical advice from her went on top of the tree disguised herself as a physician, went to the palace and cured the King of his troubles. In her disguise, she continued to live in the palace as a friend of the King. Shortly, her husband Devasena, came there and they were happily reunited. The King gave them costly presents. (Kathāśārīśāgarā, Madana-mañju-kālamāsakā, Taralīga 9).

KISKINDHĀ. An ancient kingdom of the monkeys in South India. This kingdom is mentioned both in the Rāmāyana and the Mahābhārata. During the Rāmāyana period a monkey King called Rājarāja was the ruler of Kiskindhā. He was childless. Once upon a time a son called Bāli was born to Arundevi by Indra, and another son called Sugrīva was born to her by Śūrya. (See under Arunā). Both the boys were brought up in the Kīrtīrama of sage Gauṭama. When they grew up, Indra handed them over to Rājarāja, and thus Bāli and Sugrīva came to Kiskindhā. After the death of Rājarāja, Bāli became King of Kiskindhā and Sugrīva lived in the service of his brother. At that time there was a very mighty Asura called Durvāsī. Finding no one fit to fight with, he challenged Varuṇa. Varuṇa directed him to Himavān, whose peaks he renounced, and played with. Then Himavān told Durvāsī that he was of a peaceful nature and that Bāli would be a match for him (Durvāsī). Accordingly Durvāsī fought with Bāli and got killed. Bāli cast away the corpse of Durvāsī. The blood oozing out from the nose of Durvāsī fell on the body of sage Mataṅga who was engaged in penance on the peak Rāyūmākā. By means of his divine powers, the sage found out the origin of the blood contaminating his body, and cursed that Bāli would die the moment he set foot on the mountain.

Durvāsī’s son Māyāvī was enraged at the death of his father. He went to Kiskindhā to take revenge on Bāli; but got defeated by Sugrīva. While retreating to his quarters, Bāli took to his heels; Bāli followed him, and Sugrīva followed his brother. Māyāvī took refuge in a cave followed by Bāli, and Sugrīva waited at the mouth of the cave. Even after one year neither Bāli nor Māyāvī emerged out of the cave, but Sugrīva saw blood coming out of the cave and heard Māyāvī roaring. Taking it for granted that Bāli was killed, Sugrīva closed the mouth of the cave, returned to Kiskindhā, and at the instance of his subjects assumed kingship.

But, Bāli forced open the cave, hurried back to his kingdom, and interpreting the action of Sugrīva as one purposely done to usurp the throne, drove Sugrīva away and took for himself Sugrīva’s wife. Thus Bāli became again King of Kiskindhā.

Thus a mountain called “Kiskindhā-maṭa”—mountain prohibited to Bāli—in the eastern region of the former princely kingdom of Travarocare. Is it in any way connected with Rāyūmākāala?

Sugrīva founded a new kingdom at Rāyūmākā mountain. Maitrī, Devvidā, Hantumān and Jambavān were the ministers of Sugrīva. It was while Sugrīva was thus residing on Rāyūmākāla that Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa came that way in the course of their search for Sītā. In accordance with the agreement made between Sugrīva and Rāma, the latter killed Bāli and crowned Sugrīva as the King of Kiskindhā. (Valmiki Rāmāyana, Kiskindhā Kanda, and Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 289).

During the triumphal tour of Sahadeva in the South he fought against Kiskindhā, and after seven days’ fighting the monkeys saw Sahadeva off with a present of costly gems.

“Sahadeva fought against the monkey chiefs like Maitrī, Devvidā etc. for seven days, but neither of them got exhausted, and the monkey chiefs, with affection and gratitude asked Sahadeva to depart with words.” (Sahā Parva, Chapter 31).

During this period nothing was heard of Sugrīva, Hantumān and Jambavān in Kiskindhā. Might be Sugrīva was no more. Hantumān, after the death of Śrī
KISKINDHAGAHA

Rama, lived in Gandhamādana in Kimpurusavarya. (Bhārata and Bhīgavata, 10th Skandha). From the story of Prasela it may be seen that Jambavan left Kiskindha and lived in another cave with his sons and other relations. It was the other two ministers of Sugrīva, Maṇḍava and Dīvīdva, who were ruling Kiskindha when Sāhuḍeva went there. The power and prestige of Kiskindha had begun to set by then, and in course of time Kiskindha ceased to exist but in name.

KISKINDHAGAHA. A mountainous region in Dvārakadīṣa, 10th Skandha. Certain scholars hold the view that this was the actual Kiskindha.

KITAKA. A king born from an aspect of the Aśura called Krodhavāsya. (Aṣṭi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 60).

KITAVA. An ancient tribe of people. They once visited Vuddhāthāra with many presents. (Sāhuḍa Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 12).

KOBHA. A Brahmin scholar. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Aṣṭi Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 4, that this Brahmin was present at the Sarpā Sātra (as sacrifice to kill serpents) of Janamejaya. Once Bhīgavata gave this hermit all kinds of clothes with a calf. (M.B. Aṃśasa Parva, Chapter 139, Stanza 27).

KOHA. (Sakravakā bird). Ruddy Goose. To know the Putānā, a bird of the order of this bird (Ruddy goose) see under 'Ayarāṇa' (Swan).

KOKAMUKHA. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 123, that those who bathe in this holy bath will get the faculty of remembering their previous births.

KOKANDA I. A Kṣatriya King of ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sāhuḍa Parva, that at the time of the regional conquest of Arjuna, this King fell at his feet and sought refuge.

KOKANDA II. A warrior of Skandha. (M.B. Sāhuḍa Parva, Chapter 27).

KOVAKA. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhārata Parva, Chapter 9).

KOKILA. See under Dīnaka.

KOKILA I. A warrior of Skandha. (Mahābhārata, Sāya Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 23).

KOLAGIRI. A mountain of South India (Mahābhārata Sāhuḍa Parva). Sāhuḍeva conquered the people of this mountain.

KOLĀHALA. A famous Aśura. In the battle between the Devas and the Asuras carried on by Subrahmāya, this Aśura confronted Mihivān and was killed. (Padma Purāṇa, Part IV, Chapter 13).

KOL SVRŪPA (KOLATIJNĀPU). After the decline of the second Cera empire in Keralā, several royal families such as Perumapattan, Neelavirippu, Kolavaruppu, Ven juggir ir etc. came into power. Some details regarding the family of Kolasvaruṇa are given below.

In Kolavatam, it is given that Parasurāma had made a Sama-Kṣatriya, as King of Girakkal or Kolattunādu. According to 'Keralotpati' it was Cera- nian Perumal who did this. Logan says that Kolasvaruṇa came into being from the children born to the last Perumal of the Venjugir ir family. In the edicts Virāṭagāvapatam or Jēkāsaṅa no mention is made about Kolattunādu. Both the families of Venjugir ir and Kolattunādu, from very early times had observed the customary rites of taint, pollution, defilement etc. It is said in 'Keralamāhīmata' that Parāṣurāma had enthroned the sons of two sisters in both the kingdoms.

But no documents are available to prove that there was any connection between the two families till the 5th century M.E. (Malayālam Era). i.e. 14th century A.D. See under Kolavaruṇa.

KOLIKA (KOKILA). This is the name of a rat. Kokilā is a character in the story known as Bīdālopākhyāna, told by Narada to Dṛngalāṭa. Once a cat began to perform penance holding up both of its hands, on the bank of the Ganges. After a long time birds and rats began to come very close to it believing that it would not hurt them. They made the cat their leader. The wicked cat daily ate a rat secretly. Thus the body of the cat grew stronger day by day and there appeared a steady decrease in the number of the rats. Among them there was a wise rat called Kokilā. He understood the deceit played by the cat. So proclaiming independence he and his fellows ran away and saved themselves. (M.R. Udayapākhyāna).

KOLISARPA. A tribe. Formerly this tribe was of Kṣa- triya Caste. A Brahmin once cursed them and made them Śūdras. (M.B. Aṃśasa Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 22).

KOLLAGIREYA. An ancient country in South India. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Alvamedha Parva, Chapter 83, that Arjuna conquered this country.

KOLAVARUṆA (MALAYĀLAM ERA). Several opinions have been brought forward about the starting of the Malayālam Era. There is great controversy as to the causes of starting this new era. The opinion of Sañ- kupini Menon is as follows: The King Udāyamāndava-varṇam called together at Quillon, an assembly of the learned men and astronomers of the time, in Kaliyarasa 9392 (A.D. 825) and made astronomical researches and taking into account the movements and positions of the various planets in the solar system, started a new era beginning with the month of Ćittam (August-September). This new era commenced on the 15th of August 825 A.D. All the learned men and scholars of the time welcomed this Malayālam era. The neighbouring kingdoms also recognized this new era. Reckoning of dates based on this Malayālam Era is seen in the 'Madura and Tinnelley Stone-edicts and copper edicts.' On the fifth day of Ćittam of the first year of M.E., five royal families of Travancore met together and took a decision that the festival days of the temples should be reckoned according to the Malayālam era. The controversy is not about the starting of the new era, but the reasons for starting the new era.

Logan says that the Malayālam Era was started in commemoration of the conversion of Ceramān Perumal to Islam and his pilgrimage to Mecca. But there is impropropriety in thinking that the Hindu subjects of a King would commemorate, the conversion of their King into Islam religion. Some say that the new era was started to commemorate the erection of a Śāvite temple. Another argument is that a new era was started in memory of the exhortation of Śrī Saṃkaračārya to the Brahmins of Quillon, to do away with the irregularities seen in the Hindu religion. The period of Sañkaračārya has not yet been decided definitely. The opinion accepted by scholars on this subject is that of K.B. Pathak, according to whom Sañkaračārya lived from 787 to 819 A.D. If this is accepted as true, the exhortation made in 825 A.D. should be by somebody else and the Malayālam Era should have been established for some of her reasons.

Another opinion is that the new era was established to commemorate the independence given to the two Kolatteri Kings (North and South) by the Perumal. The North Kolattiri family should have begun the new era on the first day of Kannu (the second month) and the South Kolattiri family on the first day of Chitham (the first month). (Because in Malabar area, the era commences on the 26th day of Muni.) Another opinion that is prevalent is that Kollavara was started to commemorate the erection of the two towns of Quilon (North and South). But even two centuries before A.D. 825 the town of South Quilon had become famous. So it is an objection to this argument. Some are of opinion that a new era was started in commemoration of Sankaravijaya (the victory of Sankara) due to the fact that the Brahmins of the north and the south alike accepted the teachings of Sankaracarya. But it is difficult to believe that the northerners and the southerners accepted the teachings of Sankaracarya on a particular date and issued a declaration to that effect and started a new era. Some connect the starting of the new era with a grand festival held by the Malayalees. But it cannot be believed that a national festival was started by a single man. According to Logan it would appear that the grand festival of Tiruvonam was started to commemorate the journey of Perumal to Mecca. But the conversion episode is more likely to be considered as a blasphemy and the Kings and people of Malayala land are not likely to commemorate him.

Kollavara with Paraforumana, Buchanan said that the Malayalees have a recurring of every millennium. Burnell has stated in his book “South Indian Paleography”, that the theory of recurring Millennium is wrong.

An astronomer who was a contemporary of the King who established the Malayalam era has stated in his work called ‘Sankaranarayaniya’ (a manuscript in Palm leaves) that an astronomical movement was reckoned and a new era was started at Quilon. This palm leaf manuscript is kept in the Manuscript Library at Trivandrum.

KOSAKA. An ancient country of South India.
(Malayahrara, Bhima Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 60).

KOPAVEGA. A hermit. This hermit had served Yudhihithra. (M.B. Subhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 16).

KOSA. A river. It is stated in Mahabharata, Bhima Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 27, that the water of this river was drunk by drinking for the ancient people of Bharata.

KOSAKARA. See under Nilakara II.

KOSAL. I. The King and the people of the country of Kosal are called by the name Kosala.

KOSAL II. One of the seven figures of Kizh. The famous wrestlers of Kizhi were Cappara, Mustika, Katta, Salu, Kosala and others.

KOSALA.

1) General Information. A wealthy and prosperous country on the banks of the river Sarayu. Ayodhya was the Capital of this kingdom. This city was built by Manu, the father of Ikavaka. This city was twelve yojanas long with a breadth of three yojanas. It is understood from Vamikiri Ramayana, BalaKorvaka, Sarga 5 that during the time of Dasaratha this city was modified to such an extent as to be on a par with any modern city.

2) Additional Information. (1) Bhimasana once conquered Ugraja Kosala (north Kosala). (M.B. Subhash Parva, Chapter 30).

3) Sahadeva during his regional conquest, subdued Daksina Kosala (South Kosala). (M.B. Subba Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 12).

4) Sri Kama once conquered the country of Kosala. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 15).

5) Ashimanyu, the son of Aciqura, killed the King of Kosala in the battle of Bharata.

6) Karan once conquered this country for Daryodhana. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 19).

7) During the time of the battle of Bharata a King named Keshadari ruled over Kosala. (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 6).

8) At the time of the Swayamvara (marriage) of Anabha, Bhima defeated the King of Kosala. (M.B. Arusisana Parva, Chapter 44, Stanza 36).

9) Aciqura who led the horse for sacrifice conquered the country of Kosala. (M.B. Advamedha Parva, Chapter 85).

10) Those who bathe in the holy bath of Sambha tirtha in Kosala, will obtain the fruits of giving one thousand cows as alms. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 10).

KOSALA (S). The Katriyas of the country of Kosala. These Kosalas once fled to the southern countries.
fearing Jarasandha. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 27).

KOSTHAVAN. A mountain. It is stated in Mahabharata, Asvamedha Parva, Chapter 43 that this mountain was the overlook of many other mountains.

KOTAKA. An attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 14).

KOTARA. A serpent born in the family of Kaftapa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 109, Stanza 12).

KOPIKASYA KAOTIKRA. A King who was the follower of Jata of A while the Pandava were living in the Kanyakula forest until they went out leaving Panchali alone in the hut. At that time Jayadratha, the King of Sindhu, the son of Vrdhacaka came there and saw Panchali. He sent his follower Kopikasya to entice Panchali, who did not succumb to temptation. At last Jayadratha carried Panchali away by force.

This Kopikasya was the son of Surathka and was the king of Trigarta. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 265).

KOTILINGA. This word was added to the names of the members of the Korunadhruv royal family. Especially, Kingkuttan Tampran is denoted by the name ‘Kotilinga’ in some of his poetic works. The word ‘Kotilinga’ is the Sindhi form of the Dravidian word Korumadhruv. This city was the capital of the Cera Kings.

KOTTISA. A serpent born in the family of Vasuki. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 5).

KOTTITRTHA. A holy bath. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapter 102, that those who bathe in this holy bath will get the fruits of performing the holy bath.

KOTITUV. (Yawning, Gape). In Devi Bhagavata, Skanda 6, there is a story explaining how the living beings began to awh. After getting boons from Brahma, Vritrasura swallowed Indra. The Devas were filled with fear and approaching Bhagapati they represented their grievance to the instruction of Brahma. Deva could not hold Vrittrasura to gape. After opening the mouth he found it difficult to shut, and the mouth remained open. In the meanwhile Indra jumped out of Vritra through the mouth. Gape came into existence from that time. (For details see under the word Vritra.

KRAMAJIT. A king who was a constant follower of Bhishma. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 20).

KRA4APA. A son born to Pulaha by his wife Ksanu. Krupaspa had a brother named Salisuna. (Agni Purana Chapter 20).

KRAMAPATHA. A method of teaching the Vedas. It is due to the insistence on strict adherence to this method of teaching that even after thousands of years variations have not crept into the original texts of the Vedas which form the earliest literature. There is a portion called ‘word study’ (Pada Patha) in the Vedas (the scripture). Every word in the Veda is separated from its prefixes and suffixes. The second step is Kramapatha or the study of joining prefixes and suffixes to each word got by the first step. Next step is Jayapatha in which words are combined with their prefixes and suffixes. To guard against the creeping in of mistakes in this step, the next step which is known as Ghana-patha is taught. In this step the first step of Padapatha and the second step of Krama patha are mixed together and intermingled from beginning to end and to beginning. There are rules to make combined words by using prefixes and suffixes. These rules are called Pratulakhya. Because the Vedas are taught in this way with so much attention and care, their texts have never been subjected to changes and variations.

KRATTHA I. A Ksatriya King. He was the rebirth of an Asura called Krodhavasa. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 61). See under Jayamarga.

KRATTHA II. A King defeated by Bhumaisa during his regional conquest. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 7).

KRATTHA III. A hermit. In Mahabharata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 27 it is stated that this hermit visited Sri Krishna on his way to Hastinapura.

KRATTHA IV. There was a warrior named Krashta on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B. Droga Parva, Chapter 120, Stanza 10).

KRATTHA V. A warrior of Skandadeva. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 70).

KRATTHA VI. A Yaksa. (Demi-God). When Garuda reached the world of Devas he had to fight with this Yaksa. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 18).

KRATTHA VII. An Asura (Demon). It is stated in Mahabharata. Adi Parva, Chapter 67 Stanza 57 that this Asura was born as King Suryaksha on the earth in his re-birth.

KRATTHA VIII. Name of a son of Bhartrursha. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 116, Stanza 11).

KRATTHA I. A mount King in Ancient India. The following details about this King are found in the Mahabharata.

(1) He was the rebirth of an Asura called Rohu, the son of Sinhibha. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 40).

(2) Krashta attended the Savyasthara (marriage) of Draupadi. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 15).

(3) Sri Krishna defeated Krattha at the city of Jarushi. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 50).

(4) In the battle of Bhurata this King attacked Abhimanyu. (M.B. Droga Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 26).

(5) In the battle of Bhurata Krashta killed the prince of Kalinga, and a King from the mountain killed Krashta. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 15).

KRATTHA II. A King of the Puru dynasty. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 59).

KRATTHA III. A captain of the army of monkeys. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Stanza 19).

KRATTHA IV. A warrior of Skanda. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 70).

KRATTHA V. A famous serpent. At the time of the death of Balabhadraka this serpent came there to lead his soul to Patala (nether world). (M.B. Manasa Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 16).

KRATTHA (M). An ancient country in India. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 21 that Bhumisa the King of Vidarbha had conquered this country.

KRATTHA. General information. One of the six mental sons of Brahman, Marici, Angiras, Ati, Pulastya, Pulaha and Krashta were the mental sons of Brahma. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 65). Kratu is described as one of the 21 Prajapatis (lords of emonation).
2) Some details. (1) It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 9, that the hermits called Bājāṣhīṣhikās were present at the birth-celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 52).

(2) Arjuna was present at the birth-celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 189, Stanza 9).

(3) Kratu came to see the Rākṣasa from the Rākṣasaśātra. (A great sacrificial fire meant: for the Rākṣasaśātra (giants) to jump into and die by themselves) performed by the hermit Parāśara. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 10).

(4) Kratu was a luminary in the councils of Brahma and Indra. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 17).

(5) Kratu was present at the Birth celebration of Śkandadeva. (M.B. Śālīya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 10).

(6) There is a group of hermits called 'Citraśhīkudina', of which Kratu is a member. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 335, Stanza 27).

(7) By the blessings of Śiva, Kratu got a thousand sons. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 87).

(8) Kratu went to visit Bhūṣma who was lying on the bed of arrows awaiting death in the beginning of Utrarāyaṇa of the year. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 4).

KRAUNGA I. An Aśura. In Vamana Purāṇa, Chapter 57 it is mentioned that this Aśura was killed by Subrahmaṇya.

KRAUNGA II. A mountain. There is a story about this mountain. Long ago there lived an Aśura named Kraunca. He was leading a wicked life and was haughty and arrogant. Once Agastya went to Kālaśa and worshipped Śiva. Kāverīdevī also was standing close by, worshipping Śiva. God Śiva appeared before Agastya and told him that he might ask for any boon. He requested for the power to push down Vindhya by kicking and to establish a holy Tirtha ('bath') on the earth. Śiva granted the boons. For making the tirtha Śiva turned Kāverī into a river and placed her in the water-pot of Agastya. As Agastya was returning from Kālaśa, Kāverī in her water-pot, Kraunca the Aśura took the shape of a mountain and hindered his way. The Aśura caused a heavy rain too. Agastya wandered through the forest without finding the path for days. At last he realized the cause. He took a few drops of water from his waterpot and with chanting of Mantras and meditation threw the drops at the Aśura with the curse that he would stand there for ever as a mountain. He said that he would be liberated from the curse when pierced by the arrow of Subrahmaṇya, the son of Śiva. From that day onwards Kraunca the Aśura had been standing there as a mountain. That mountain was called 'The mountain of Kraunca.' (Skanda Purāṇa, Aśura Kāṇḍa).

There is another statement in Harivānśa, Chapter 18, that the mountain Kraunca was the son of the mountain Māmaka, the son of Menā. Subrahmaṇya fought a terrible battle with the Aśuras. Many died. Bājāṣa, the son of Mahābali, fled from the battlefield and hid himself inside the mountain Kraunca. Subrahmaṇya cut the mountain into two with the arrow given by Agni (Fire god). This Kraunca was liberated from the curse. (M.B. Śālīya Parva, Chapter 46).

In 'Meghadūta' Kāliḍāsa mentions about the cleavage in the mountain Kraunca. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Stanza 33, mention is made that through this cleavage swans and vultures fly to Mahābhārata. (For the story of how Pāravāna left the Kraunca mountain see under Pāravāna.)

KRAUNGA IIII. (A kind of snake). A bird.

KRAUNCADVIPA. (ISLAND OF KRAUNGA). One of the Saptadvipa (seven islands). The seven islands are Jambudvipa, Pākṣadvipa, Śālmalīdvipa, Kuṣadvipa, Kramaśa-dvipa, Śakadvipa and Puskardvipa. (Divya Bhagavata Skanda 8). Kraunca-dvipa is described as follows in Mahābhārata, Bīṣma Parva, Chapter 12: In this island there are the mountains Kraunca, Vamanaka, Andhakāra, Mainakī, Govinda, Nibihā, and Visākambha. The various countries in this island are Kuru, Mahārājya, Kshīra, Bāhu, Pātana, Andhakaraka, Muniśvaka, Daśšīvājana, etc.

KRAUMGANČUDANA. A holy place on the banks of river Sarasvati. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 93, Stanza 160 that he who bathes in this place would get a Vīmaṇa.

KRAUNCAPADA. A holy place. He who makes oblations of balls of boiled rice in this place will obtain remission of sin of Brahmahatyā (sin incurred by killing a Brahmin). (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 22).

KRAUNÇARUVAYHA. Another name of Kraunca-nāya (strategic disposition of an army). Dhṛṣṭadyumana formed the Kraunca-rāvaṇayāha. (Mahābhārata, Bīṣma Parva, Chapter 50).

KRAUNÇAVYHA. A strategic formation of the army in the shape of Kraunca bird (snake). In the battle of Bhūṣma, Bha. i. 14-20, the formation of it is described. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 75). The Kraunca disposition has eight strategical positions, the face, eyes, head, neck, stomach, left flank, right flank and thighs. In the disposition formed by Bhūṣma, Drona stood at the face, Bhūṣma and Kṛṣṇa stood at the eyes, Hārdika at the head and Śūraṇa at the neck. The King of Pragnyottasa stood at the stomach of the formation. The Tyāras, Yāyusia, Śakas and Čapuvas guarded the right flank. Śrīrājas and Bhūrkrānas kept the thighs.

KRAUCI. A daughter born to Kaśyapa-prajāpati by his wife Tapah the daughter of Dakṣa. Five daughters, Kraucī, Bhīṣma, Śrīva, Dhrūvarāśi and Śūki were born of Tapah. From Kraucī, were born the birds, the Bāhūs from Bhūṣma, the hawks and vultures from Śrīva, the swans and reddest geese from Dhrūvarāśi and Narā, the mother of Vīmaṇa from Śūki. (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sarga 14).

KRAVYĀDA (S). A particular group of the Mācas or the descendent ancestors that receive the souls of the deceased. Mention is made about the Kravyādās in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 269, Stanza 13.

KRIYA. One of the daughters of Dakṣa. Dharmadeva married her and three sons Danda, Naya and Vīrāya were born to him of Kriya. (Vīṇa Purāṇa, Amsa 1, Chapter 7).

KRAKESUYU. (KAKŚEYYU). One of the sons whom the King Raudriśva of the Puru dynasty begot of the Aśuras called Miraśkēti. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 10).

KRMI I. A King of the royal dynasty of Aṅga. King Uṣṭhara had five wives named Nṛgya, Nara, Krmi, Daśa and Dṛṣadvi, and of them were born respective-by the sons Nrega, Nara, Krimi, Suvarna and Sibi. (Agni Purana, Chapter 227).

KRMII. A wife of Utsavara. (See under Krm I).

KRMIII. A Kaatriya dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 13).

KRMIV. A river. (Bhim Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 17).

KRMBHOJANA (M.). One of the twenty-seven hills. (See Naraka under Kali I).

KRMLA. A king in the Puru dynasty. There was a king in the dynasty called Babhavata, who had five sons called Srivijaya, Bhadradja, Mukula, Krimila and Yavantara. In later years they became famous as Panicilay. (Agni Purana, Chapter 278).

KRMSA. A hell known as Krimbojana also. (See under Kala I).

KRMDADHANA. A famous Asura born to Kaisayapa by his wife Kala. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 35).

KRMDHA II. It is stated in Bhagavata that Krmdha was born from the eye-brow of Brahman. There is a story about this Krmdha in the 'Jamini-Avamadha Parva'. Once, while the hermit Jamadagni was performing sacrificial offerings to the Manes, Krmdha came there and secretly put poison in the pudding prepared from the milk of the sacrificial cow. Even though the hermit knew this he did not get angry. Seeing this, Krmdha became afraid of the hermit and approached him and said: "Oh, hermit! I thought that the Bhargavas (those born of the family of Bhrgu) would get angry quickly. Now I understand that it is wrong." Jamadagni pardoned him and said: "But you have to appease the anger of the Manes. The Manes cursed him that he would have to take birth as a mongoose. But he was given remission that he would be liberated from the curse, when he narrated the story of the Brahmin Utsavayvsthi at the palace of Dharana in the presence of Sri Krsna. Thus Krmdha regained his former form.

KRMDHAHANTA. A famous Asura. He was born to Prajapati Kaisayapa by his wife Kala. The notorius Vrtrata was the brother of Krmdhahanta. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 57).

KRMDHANA. An attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 6).

KRMDHANA. A hermit of great importance in the palace of Indra. (Mahabharta, Sabha Parva, Chapter 27).

KRMDHASATRU. A famous Asura who was born to Prajapati Kaisayapa of his wife Kala. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 35).

KRCDHAVARDHANA. An Asura. In Mahabharta, Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 46, it is mentioned that in later ages this Asura was reborn under the name of Krmdhavanasa.

KRMDHAVAS. A follower of Indrajit. In the battle between Ravana and Sri Rama this Asura made himself invisible and attacked the monkeys. By the help of Vibishana, who was an expert in the art of vanishing, the monkeys killed Krmdhavanasa in the battle. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 209).

KRMDHAVAS. Wife of Prajapati Kaisayapa. (Valmiki Ramayana, Ayodhya Kanda, Sarga 14). The Asuras who were born to Krodhavanasa are also called Krmdhavanasa. Most of these Krmdhavanas were employed to guard the lotus-leaf of Kubera. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 154). Bhima once entered the lotus-leaf of Kubera and plucked the "Saundhila" flower. The Krmdhavanasa ran to Kubera to inform him of this theft. It is stated in Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapter 285, Stanza 2 that these Krmdhavanas were present in the army of Ravana.

KROSANA. A female attendant of Skanda. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 17).

KRSTHA. A son of Yadu, Sahasradha, Payodha, Kroshta, Nila and Ajika were the five sons of Yadu. (Harivamsha, Chapter 36).

KRPNA I. A king in ancient India. He never ate flesh. (Anusasana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 64).

KRPNA II. (KRPA) CARYA.

tama married her. To Gauatama was born Satyavan, to him Satyadhiti, to him Saradvan and to Saradvan was born Krpa. The Puranas refer to the generation preceding Gautama only in the maternal line. It is told in verse 2, Chapter 30 of the Adi Parva, that Saradvan was the son of Gautama. According to Agni Purana, Bhagavata etc. Saradvan, father of Krpa was the son of the great-grand son of Gautama and grandson of Satavan. (M.B. Purana, Chapter 278).

2. Birth of Krpa. Though born in a family of Sages Saradvan evinced more interest in Dhanurveda. He performed penance in the forest, with bow and arrows deposited by his side. As his penance gathered intensity the Devas got alarmed. To break his penance Indra deputed the Devata called Jnanapadi to the earth and she appeared before Saradvan and danced, dressed only in one piece of cloth. Emission occurred to him. But, wisdom dawned on him immediately and leaving behind him the bow, arrows and deer skin he quitted the place.

The semen discharged by him fell on the arrow which broke into two giving birth to a male child and a female one.

3. Krpa in the Palace. One of the attendants of King Santanu, who had come to the forest to hunt, saw the children and took them to the King. The King felt Krpa (pity) for them and brought them up in the palace and as they were thus brought up due to his Krpa they came to be called Krpa and Krpl. (Adi Parva, Chapter 130).

4. Krpa’s mastery of Dhanurveda. While living in the forest engaged in penance Saradvan, with his divine power understood that the two children forsaken by him were growing up in the palace. He went to the palace and told the king details about the children. He also lived there in secret and taught Krpa everything contained in the four branches of Dhanurveda and the various usages in archery. Gradually Krpa became an archery (master) in Dhanurveda. Not only the Patalavas the Kauravas, the Yadavas and the Vrishis but also kings, who came from various regions of the country learned archery at the feet of Krpa. (Adi Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 23).
5) Kṛpā at the trial of skill in archery of the Kauravas and the Pandavas. When the training of the Kauravas and the Pandavas in archery was over a test was arranged for them. Spectators crowded to see it. Drona, Kṛpā, Somadatta, Balhika, Bhusma and Vidura and other great ones took their seats in the stadium. Arjuna and Karna entered the arena for contest when Kṛpā intervened and said that Arjuna was the youngest son of Kuntī. Arjuna should specify his parentage. At this, Karna stood stunned, and it was then that Duryodhana declared Karna to be the King of Anga. (Adi Parva, Chapter 136)

6) Activities of Kṛpā into the great war. He attended the Kṛṣṇapaba yaja of Yudhishthira (Saba Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 8).

   → He acted as the custodian of money and distributed dakāmas (monetary presents) (Saba Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 7).

   → It was he who instructed the spies deputed by Duryodhana to bow to detect the Pandavas during their life incognito (Vṛata Parva, Chapter 29). He also detailed to Duryodhana the various aspects of politics.

   (iii) Kṛpā once told Duryodhana that he was powerful enough to annul the Pandava army within two months (Vṛata Parva, Chapter 193).

7) Kṛpā at the war. On the first day of the war he fought with Bhaktiketu (Bhima Parva, Chapter 45).

   → In the fight with Cekata he fell down and fainted (Bhima Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 31).

   → He wounded Satyaki (Bhima Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 40).

   → Fought a duel with Sahadeva (Bhima Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 12).

   → He fought with Arjuna and Bhima (Bhima Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 114).

   → Fought with Dhrishtaketu (Drona Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 38).

   → Fought with Varidhatruma (Drona Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 41).

   → His flag floated in the sky and could be seen from anywhere in the battlefield (Drona Parva, Chapter 105).

   → He killed the body guards of Abhimanyu (Drona Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 36).

   → Fighting with Arjuna he fainted and fell down (Drona Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 9).

   → During the fight he ridiculed Karna (Drona Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 13).

   → He exhorted Yudhishthira to prevent Duryodhana from confronting Arjuna (Drona Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 77).

   → In the battle that ensued he defeated Śikhandi (Drona Parva Chapter 169, Verse 39).

   → When Drona fell down dead he fled from the battlefield (Drona Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 12).

   → He was defeated by Satyaki (Drona Parva, Chapter 20 Verse 53).

   → He killed Sutētu, son of Citraketau (Karna Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 28).

   → Defeated Yudhamanyu (Karna Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 55).

   → He killed the Kalinda prince (Karna Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 6).

   → He advised Karna to enter into a compromise with the Pandavas (Sālīya Parva, Chapter 4).

   → He ran away from the battlefield to Dvārapayana lake (Sālīya Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 9).

   → Yudhishthira came to the lake with an army and Kṛpā ran away from there (Sālīya Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 69).

   → He appointed Aśvatthama chief of the army on the suggestion of Duryodhana (Salīya Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 43).

   → He fought during the night along with Aśvathama (Saptaśīka Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 35).

   → He killed the soldiers who ran away from the Pandava camp (Saptaśīka Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 109).

   → He set fire to the camp of the Pandavas (Saptaśīka Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 108).

   → He cried at the pathetic condition of Duryodhana (Saptaśīka Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 10).

   → He went to Hastinipur after telling Dhrishtaketu and Ghandhari that both the Kauravas and the Pandavas would be ruined (Suit Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 21).

8) End of Kṛpā. The great war ended Duryodhana and others were killed and, when Dhrishtaketu left for the forest with Ghandhari Kṛpā desired to accompany them. But, Dhrishtaketu did not permit it Yudhishthira, as advised by Dhrishtaketu, put up Kṛpā with him (Añanaśīka Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 5). Before the Pandavas set out on their great journey Yudhishthira appointed Kṛpā as the preceptor of Pārīkṣata, the son of Arjuna (Maiśīrṇa Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 4). During his last days Kṛpā went into the forest for penance and there he breathed his last (Suit Parva, Chapter 296, Verse 14).

9) Synonyms for Kṛpā. Aśarya, Aśārasyātama, Bhurācārya, Brāhmaṇa, Śraddhāvata, Śraddhāvatapati, Gautama, Kṛpā.
KRŚAKA A niga born in the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Uttarāgāra, Chapter 106, Verse 15).

KRŚAVI 1 The sage who stood guard over Soma at the Yajña conducted by sage Kuśa. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 10, Sūkta 112).

KRŚAVI 1 The Prajāpati called Krśāvī married Jayā and Suprabhā the daughters of Dakṣaprājapati and to both were born fifty sons each. All the sons were really arrows called Sāunabha Vīkṣamātra, by the innumerable sons (arrows) of Krśāvī his own. It was these arrows, which Vīkṣamātra gave to Śri Rāma and lakṣmān. (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakanda, Cantos 21 and 26).

KRŚAVI 2 A lung of the solar dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skanda).

KRŚAVI 3 A king who served Yama in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 17).

Once he came down to earth in Indra’s Viniāna to witness Arjuna, in the company of Uttara, the Vīrāta prince, light during the lifting of cows. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 56).

KRŚUYA A king born in the Puru dynasty. ‘See under PURUVAṆAS.’

KRŚIVALA An ancient sage who lived in Indra’s court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 1).

KRŚNA (ŚRI KRŚNA) Born in the Yadava dynasty as the son of Vasudeva and Devaki, Śri Krśna was the ninth of the ten incarnations of Mahāviṣṇu.

Ten sons called Vasudeva, Devabhāga, Devāravas, Anasa, Śrījaya, Kaśkaśa, Sāyaka, Vatá, Kaṇādi, and Vi were born to Vasudeva by his wife Māriti. Of these ten sons Vasudeva married Devaki, the sister of Kansa. He had also a second wife called Rohini and she was the mother of Balabhadraseina.

2) Śri Krśna’s former births. Owing to a curse of Varuna, Kaśyapaprājapati was born on earth as Vasu leva and his daughter Kaśyapa’s wife Aditi and Surāsā were born as Devaki and Rohini. (See under Kaśyapa and Nārāyaṇa were born to him. Hari and Krśna turned out to be great Yogīs, and Nara and Nārāyana ascetics. Naranārāyanas performed penance to please Brahmā for a thousand years at Badarikāśrama in the valley of the Hūmākayas. Celestial women, whom Indra had deputed to break their penance, approached them and requested them to take them (celestial women) as their wives. Ascetic Nārāyana who got angry at the celestial woman’s request was about to curse them; when sage Nara intervened and pacified him. Then sage Nārāyaṇa told them thus:—‘You must protect my Vṛata (penance) in this life. In that case, in the next birth I shall satisfy your desire. In the 26th Dvaparayuga I will be incarnating on earth on behalf of the Devas. Then you also may be born as princesses. I shall incarnate as Krśna in the Yadu dynasty and marry all of you.’ (Bhāgavata, 4th Skanda).

Accordingly sage Nārāyaṇa was born as Śri Krśna in the Yadu dynasty, and sage Nara was born as Arjuna to be his companion.

The curse of Bhrigu the great sage also contributed to Mahāviṣṇu’s incarnation himself as Śri Krśna. Once in a war which lasted for 100 years between the Devas and the Asuras most of the latter were killed. Then Sukra, preceptor of the Asuras went to Mount Kailāsa to secure exceptional weapons, and the Asuras took refuge under Kāyavāntarā, the mother of Sukra. Devendra sought Mahāviṣṇu’s aid, and he cut off Kāyavāntarā’s head with his Cātra (discus). Bhrigu was enraged at this killing of a woman. He cursed that Mahāviṣṇu should be born as man. Owing to various reasons like the above Mahāviṣṇu happened to be born as man in the Yadava dynasty, as the son of Vasudeva. (Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skanda).

3) Vaiṣṇeṣa’s wedding. To Sūrascena, the Yadava King of Mathurāpuri was born a son called Vasudeva, and Devaki was born as the grand-daughter of Devākā, the brother of Ugrasena, another Yadava King. Devaki was the sister of Kamsa. Devaki was given in marriage to Vasudeva with a dowry of twelve bhāras (a particular weight) of gold and a chariot. Kārṣṇa acted as charioteer in the wedding procession during which a celestial voice addressed Kamsa as follows:—‘Asaḥ śvaḥ aṣṭaṃakarśabha hantā’ (Her eighth son will kill you). As soon as he heard the celestial voice Kamsa stood up in the chariot ablaze with rage. He caught hold of Devaki by her hair and raised his sword to cut her throat. All the conciliatory words of Vasudeva failed to pacify Kamsa. Then Vasudeva promised to hand over to Kārṣṇa all the children born to Devaki immediately after their birth. Accordingly Kārṣṇa left them alone.

4) First-born son of Vasudeva. The first-born child of Vasudeva was duly handed over to Kārṣṇa. But, he returned the child to its parents as, according to the celestial voice the first-born child was not to be his enemy. Vasudeva and Devaki brought it up under the name Kṛttikām. On one of those days Nārāyaṇa visited Kārṣṇa and told him about his previous life, the object of Kṛṣṇa’s incarnation etc. Then it was that Kamsa realised how fatal to him was the existence of Vasudeva and Devaki, and he hurried up to them and killed the child by dashing its head against a rock. He also kept them chained in prison.

5) Kṛṣṇa’s excitement. The information imparted by Nārāyaṇa upset Kārṣṇa much. He shut his father Ugrasena in prison and himself became King. He deputed Asuras like Pralamba, Cāntra, Ṭrāvarta, Jaśti, Ketu, Dhenuka, Agna, Vibhīndra and Pūṇāna to harass the Yadavas, the Anchaksas and the Vyṛga. After the death of Kṛttikām, Devaki, in the prison, delivered five sons. (See under Kārṣṇa. For 2 the previous history of the first six sons of Devaki). Kārṣṇa killed all the five children also as soon as they were born.
6) Birth of Sri Krishna. The Astras killed in the old Devasura war were later born as cruel and evil Kings on earth. The burden of such Kings having become too much for her, goddess Earth, in the guise of a cow complained about it to Bhrama who took her to Siva who too could not find a solution to the problem posed by Bhūmidevi. So, all of them accompanied by the Devas approached Mahāviṣṇu and prayed for the redress of their grievance. Mahāviṣṇu sent them both comforted by the assurance that he would be born as the son of Vasudeva and Devaki to solve the problem. He also arranged the Devas to be born as Gopas and the Apsaras as women as Godikas on earth for his assistance.

Devaki conceived for the 7th time, and it was an aspect of Ananta, Mahāviṣṇu instructed Māyādevi thus:
"You go to the earth and transfer the child in Devaki’s womb to that of Rohini, the second wife of Vasudeva and after that, at the very time of my birth you should be born as daughter of Yasodā, wife of Nandagopa. You would be worshipped by the world in various names like Ambukā, Nārāyani, Gāndikā, Durgā, Bhadrakāli etc. The child transferred by you to their womb of Rohini will become known as Balākāran, Balabhadra and Rāma.

Accordingly Māyādevi transferred the child in Devaki’s womb to that of Rohini, and it was given out that that seventh child of Devaki was aborted in the womb.

Devaki conceived for the eighth time, and on Āṣāmi day in the month of Shrīhā (Leo, August-September) when the sun was on the same date was Sri Krūra born. Mahāviṣṇu incarnated himself as Krūra with the conch, the discus, the club and the lotus flower in his four hands. Vasudeva saluted the marvellous child, and the chain that bound himself and Devaki broke asunder, and the new-born child spoke thus to Vasudeva — "In Svēyambhūva Manvantara the Prajāpati called Sūtapas with his wife Prāti meditated upon me for 12,000 years, and when I appeared to them and asked them to choose any boon they prayed for my being born as their son. In the next life Sūtapas was born as Kāyapa and Prāti as Aditi, and I incarnated in the form of Viśnu (Dwâli) as their son. Afterwards Kāyapa and Aditi took various births, and I too took various births as their son. Now also, Kāyapa and Aditi are born as Vasudeva and Devaki. Just at this time a daughter has been born to Nandagopa and Yāsodā at Gokula. You shall take me over there and replace me with the child born at Gokula." After having told Vasūdeva the above facts Krūra assumed the form of an ordinary child and lay by the side of its mother. At mid-night when the guards at the prison house were deep in sleep he entered the cell of the prison opened by themselves. Vasudeva with the child Krūra, started for Gokula and on his way the river Yumunā changed its course for him to proceed. The doors of Yāsodā’s house were open. Owing to the divine prowess of Māyādevi, the child of Yāsodā, everybody in the house went into deep sleep. Vasūdeva placed Krūra by the side of Yāsodā and returned home with her child. As soon as he had thus returned the prison-guards woke up and reported to Kansa about the delivery of a child by Devaki. Kansa rushed to the house, caught hold of the child and was about to dash it against the rock when lo!

the child slipped free of his hands and rose in the sky wherefrom it spoke as follows —
Oh! unrighteous and cruel Kansa! thy prowess is not to be exhibited against women. Thy killer is born on earth, and search for him everywhere. (Siva Purâna, Chapter 1.)

7) Colour of Sri Krūra and Balabhadrawarna. Sri Krūra was dark in colour and Balabhadra white. There is a story in the Mahāhārata to explain this difference in their colour. The Devas informed Mahāviṣṇu of their decision to incarnate themselves on earth for the annihilation of the evil and cruel people. Pleased at their decision Vasiṣṭha plucked from his head a black hair and also a white hair and threw them on the ground, and he said that the black hair would enter Devaki and be born as Krūra while the white one would enter Rohini and be born as Balabhadra.

Accordingly Krūra became of the colour of the cloud (black) and Balabhadra white in colour. (Atharvaveda, Chapter 198, Verse 31.)

8) The incidents during the childhood of Sri krūra.

(1) Pūtānākhoṣa (Salvation to Pūtānā). Pūtānā, a Rākṣasa and one of the assassins deputed by Kansa to search out and kill Krūra, went to Krūra’s house disguised as a Gopa woman and led him on her breasts. But the child extracted her life also with her breastmilk, and she assumed her original form and fell down dead.

(2) Sūcakājūra killed. Kansa next deputed the Astra called Sakāta to kill Krūra. He approached the sleeping Krūra in the form of a cat and raised great sound. Krūra jumped awake and kicked the cat into hundreds of pieces. (See under Sakāta).

(3) Killed Trisūkābhāva. Trisūkābhāva, son of Tārakāṇa, at the behest of Kansa went to Ambiḍi in an insensible (formless) manner. Yaśodā was then breast-feeding child Krūra, and the child appeared to gradually increase in weight. Yaśodā tried to lay the child on the bed, but had to lay him on the ground as it was too heavy for her to lift it up to the bed. At once, Trisūkābhāva, in the form of a whirl-wind, rose up to the sky carrying Krūra along with him. Ambiḍi (Gokula) was chillingly filled with clouds of dust; the Gopālis cried out. But, Sri Krūra clasped round the Asura’s neck and rested, and on account of the child’s weight he could not rise any more. The child hardened its hands around the Asura’s throat and he got killed and fell down with a thud on a rock. Yaśodā hurriedly took the child in her hands and covered it with kisses. (See under Trisūkābhāva).

(4) Naming. During this period the famous sage Garga visited Krūra at Ambiḍi, and he informed Vasudeva and Devaki of the actual facts relating to Krūra. The son of Rohini was brought there, and the sage named him Rāma, and Yaśodā’s child Krūra, and blessed them. Thereafter, Rāma and Krūra grew up in Ambiḍi as the apple of the people’s eyes. (See under Garga).

(5) All the worlds to Krūra’s mouth. The Gopālis once saw Krūra eating mud and informed Yaśodā of it; and she, in great anger, opened the child’s mouth to look for the sand when she saw there all the worlds including herself and she closed her eyes in great alarm. (Bhāgavata 10th Skandha).
(6) Kṛṣṇa drags Ulaśka. (Mortal) Yakiṣā was once breast-feeding Kṛṣṇa when she poured milk out of the boiling pot, and she put the child on the floor and went to attend to the boiling milk. Angry at this, Kṛṣṇa broke the milk-pot by throwing a stone at it. Yakiṣā then tried to bind the child to the mortar with a cord. But, any number of cords could not reach the child’s waist. At this trouble of his mother Kṛṣṇa decided to oblige her and then the first cord itself sufficed to bind him round the mortar. But, Kṛṣṇa then began running, dragging the mortar behind him. Dragging the Ulaśka behind him he passed through a narrow gap between two trees. The trees were shaken and at once the trees rose up in the sky as two Devas. The two trees were actually Nalaśkāra and Mahāśvāna, both of whom had been turned into the form of trees by Nārada. (See under Nalaśkāra.)

(7) Valśukra killed. Śri Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadraśrama were one day, engaged in sports along with the Gopālas on the banks of river Kālindī. At that time an Asura sent by Kamsa got into the ranks of the cows disguised as a cow. Śri Kṛṣṇa understood it; Balabhadra also pointed out the new ‘cow’ to him. Then Kṛṣṇa leisurely went towards the herd of cattle, lifted the new ‘cow’ by its legs and tail and dashed it against a peepul tree. The peepul tree and the one next to it were broken, and thus ended the life of Valśukra.

(8) Baka killed. On another occasion, Kamsa deputed Bākāśura, brother of Pūtandō to kill Kṛṣṇa. He assumed the form of a bird, and lay there on the road with its fierce mouth wide open. The Gopālas were terror-stricken. But, Kṛṣṇa entered the cave-like mouth of the bird leaving his companions behind. The Asura closed his mouth, and the Gopālas cried out in fear and agony. But, Śri Kṛṣṇa stirred round and round within Baka’s stomach, and he was forced to vomit Kṛṣna out. Along with Kṛṣṇa he vomited blood and died. (See under Baka.)

(9) Killed Aghāśura. Aghāśura, brother of Baka and Pūtandō, was deputed by Kamsa to kill Kṛṣṇa, as assumed in the form of a serpent and with its mouth opened like a cave lay on the road used by the Gopālas. The stench that emanated from its mouth vitiated the atmosphere. The Gopālas including Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra entered the serpent’s mouth, and immediately its entire body shrunk and it vomited blood. Life escaped through its broken stomach. The Gopālas came out of it and fell down unconscious. But, at the very sight of Kṛṣṇa they regained consciousness. (See under Aghā.)

(10) Brahma played in truisms situation. On another occasion, Brahma saw the town of Bāgavanta, in the assumed form of man, playing on the banks of the Kālindī along with Balabhadra and his companions. To test whether God possessed powers in the assumed form of man also, Brahma carried away the cattle of the Gopālas. The Gopālas were naturally upset at the disappearance of their cows. After consulting them Kṛṣṇa searched for the cattle in the highlands of Mount Govardhana and in the forest. But, the cattle were to be found nowhere, and when Kṛṣṇa returned to the banks of the Kālindī the Gopālas too had disappeared. Dividing the reason for the whole affair by his divine powers, Kṛṣṇa created both the Gopālas and the cows with his divine powers.

One year passed by thus, and one day Kṛṣṇa and his companions with their cattle went to the top of Govardhana. Brahma was alarmed to find Kṛṣṇa with the artificially created Gopālas and the cattle, and while he was looking at them the colour of all of them began changing and within minutes they put on the form of Vīṣṇu. Moreover, he saw another Brahma and Brahmākā. Upset and alarmed by the whole phenomenon he sang the prayers of Lalīstana; at which his illusion was lifted and he saw the actual Kṛṣṇa, the Gopālas and the cattle.

(11) Dhenukā killed. There lived in the Kadalī forest on the banks of the Kālindī an Asura called Dhenukā with his followers. The forest was thick with palm trees. Out of fear of the Asura nobody dared to travel in the forest. Śri Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra having heard the story about Dhenukā one day went to the forest with their companions. Balabhadra shook down a lot of the palm fruits, the Gopālas loudly cheered him. The Asura rushed forth challenging them when Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra thrashed him to death.

(12) Subjugated Kālindī. There lived in Kālindī a fierce serpent called Kālīya with its wife and relations. The trees on the banks of the river were withered and had dried up on account of the poisonous breath emitted by the serpent. One day the Gopālas and their cattle drank water in the Kālindī and fell down dead. Then Kṛṣṇa climbed a tree on the banks of the river and jumped into its waters and Kālīya rushed forward to him with his hoods spread out. Kṛṣṇa stepped on the hoods and subdued the serpent. Kṛṣṇa then called back his companions and prayed to Kṛṣṇa for mercy. At the instance of Kṛṣṇa the serpent with its family emigrated to the Ramanālī island. (See under Kālindī.)

(13) Kṛṣṇa swallows fire. When Kṛṣṇa came out of the waters after having suppressed Kālīya and taking with him the gem presented by Kālīya, the Gopālas covered Kṛṣṇa with embra. People of Ambālī came to the banks of the Kālindī looking out for the children. As the sun had set by now the Yādavas spent the night there; when a wild fire enveloped them and they cried out to Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa swallowed the entire fire. (Bhāgavata, 10.1.13. Skandha.)

(14) Killed Pralamba. While the Gopālas were playing once under the shade of a giant peepul tree called Bhadrunaska an Asura known as Pralamba joined their games disguised as a Gopāla. Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra understood the trick. They made all the others take the following pledge, i.e. that all of them would beat one another, and the vanquished should carry about the victor on his head. The beating began, and the Gopāla called Śridāman defeated Kṛṣṇa. Vṛṣabha defeated Bhadrāsena and Balabhadra defeated Pralamba. According to the pledge Śri Kṛṣṇa carried on his shoulders Śridāman, Bhadrāsena carried Vṛṣabha and Pralamba carried Balabhadra. But, Pralamba rose up to the skies with Balabhadra, who broke the former’s head, and Pralamba fell down dead in his actual form as an Asura.

(15) Again in wild fire. The Gopālas were once again caught in wild fire at the Mūtja forest on the banks of the Kālindī. They cried out in great fear when Kṛṣṇa went to them and asked them to remain standing with eyes closed. They obeyed him, and he swallowed the fire as though it were nectar. The Gopālas were astonished to find themselves safe when they opened their eyes. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(16) Blessed were the wives of Brahmins. Kṛṣṇa and his companions one day travelled a long way along the banks of the Kālindī. They felt very hungry and Kṛṣṇa advised them to seek food at brahmin houses. They begged for food the wives of brahmans, and the wives happy at Kṛṣṇa's presence there, came with food. Kṛṣṇa blessed them (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(17) Theft of clothes. Kṛṣṇa once picked up the clothes of the Gopās who were bathing in the Kālindī and climbed to the top of this hill with the clothes and played on his flute. The Gopās came out of the river and scolded Kṛṣṇa with folded hands. He then returned the clothes to them. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(18) Mount Govardhana used as Umbrella. Indra is the rain-God. The people of Ambādi used to perform yajña every year in favour of Indra for rain fall. Kṛṣṇa opposed the custom saying that Mount Govardhana was the house-hold deity of the people of Ambādi and it was enough for them to worship the mountain. The people of Ambādi, therefore, offered the Yajña they had arranged that year to Indra to Govardhana. Angered at this Indra let heavy heavy rains on Ambādi. Kṛṣṇa rooted and held Mount Govardhana like an umbrella lest the people should suffer from the heavy rains, and they took shelter under its. The rain did not stop even after seven days. Yet, due to Kṛṣṇa's kindness the people did not suffer any hardships. Beaten at his own game, Indra sang the praises of Kṛṣṇa. Devanahūhi (cow of the Desi) danced at the sight of Kṛṣṇa and anointed him, as the Indra of the Gopās. The Deva addressed him 'Govinda' meaning he who protects the cattle. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(19) Nandagopā abducted by Varuṇa. Once after having observed Kālikāvarṣa Nanda bathed in the river Kālindī. At the instance of Varuṇa a Deva abducted and took him into the abode of Varuṇa. People of Ambādi were distressed at the disappearance of Nandagopā. Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra dive into the Kālindī and rose up at Varuṇalaya. Varuṇa told them that he had abducted Nandagopā so that he might see him in person, and requested to be pardoned. Meanwhile the people of Ambādi, who came to Kālindī saw all the worlds reflected in it. Kṛṣṇa and Rāma returned to Ambādi with their father, Nandagopā. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(20) Rāşakṛtād. At the advent of the spring the melody of Kṛṣṇa's flute sounded the Gopās women love-lorn. He went to Vrndavana with his flute, and all the Gopās women, both married and unmarried followed him. Kṛṣṇa made a little attempt to send them back to their houses. But, the love-struck Gopās women did not. Suddenly Kṛṣṇa disappeared from among them, and the Gopās women maid with love roamed about Vrndavana with Rādhā calling 'O Kṛṣṇa! Kṛṣṇa!' Suddenly Kṛṣṇa appeared before them. He entered the waters of the Kālindī with them and satisfied them. Śrī Kṛṣṇa thus explained Bhaktiyoga to the world. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(21) Python swallowed Nandagopā. One day the Gopās performed Mahāyajna Pājī (worship in Desī forest, and they spent the night without going to sleep on the banks of the Kālindī. A python from somewhere began swallowing Nandagopā. Though the Gopās tried their best the snake did not loosen its grip on Nandagopā.

Then Kṛṣṇa gave it a kick and the snake transformed itself into a Deva called Sudarśana. He was a Vidyādhara, who had been converted into a python by the curse of sage Aṅgiras. (See under Sudarśana.)

(22) Kṛṣṇa killed Arjūṣāra. (Vyākṣa). During this period Arjūṣāra, a follower of Kamsa, came to Ambādi disguised as an ox, and people got terror-stricken at the sight of the fierce ox. Kṛṣṇa engaged himself in a duel with the ox (Arjūṣāra) and killed it. (See under Arjūṣāra).

(23) Kṛṣṇa killed Kśita. Kamesa then sent an Asura called Kṣita to Ambādi. He approached Kṛṣṇa in the guise of a boon into whose mouth the latter thrust his hand, which began growing in size with the result that the Asura vomited blood and expired; Kṛṣṇa got the name Kṣitāvata as he killed Kṣita. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(24) Kṛṣṇa killed Vyūmāsura. Vyūmāsura, son of Mayāśura was the last of the Asuras defeated by Kamsa to kill Kṛṣṇa. He joined the company of the Gopās disguised as a goat. Kṛṣṇa dragged him into a cave and killed him there. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(9) Śrī Kṛṣṇa goes to Ambādi. When all the attempts of Kamsa to do away with Kṛṣṇa failed, he recourse to another trick. Kamsa invited Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra, king great affection, to witness the dinanur yajña (worshippig the bow) being held at Mathurāpurī, the capital of the country. The invitation was sent through Akūra, a great devotee of Kṛṣṇa. He went to Ambādi with a chariot and delivered to Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra Kamsa's invitation to them for the fourteen days' dinanur yajña. The Gopās and Gopīs died at the prospect of Kṛṣṇa leaving Ambādi. But, Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra took leave of them and started for Mathurāpurī in the chariot brought by Akūra. On their way to Mathurā they bathed in the Kālindī and when they dived in its waters Akūra saw the Vīṣṇuvāpa (Cosmic form of Kṛṣṇa). After the bath they continued their journey when Akūra informed Kṛṣṇa in secret, about all the evil attempts of Kamsa and requested him to kill the latter. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(10) Rāma and Kṛṣṇa in Mathurāpurī.

(1) Bahakaśvāda (the washerman is slain) Rāma and Kṛṣṇa duly reached Mathurāpurī, and in the evening they went out for a stroll in the city to view its beauties and saw a washerman wearing the washed clothes of Kamsa. They asked him for some of the clothes but the washerman not only refused them but also ridiculed them calling them cattle-breeders. Śrī Kṛṣṇa asked the washerman to go and distributed the clothes among the children who had gathered there, himself wearing a yellow cloth from the stock and giving a blue one to Balabhadra.

(2) Keśasukhrūdrī, (tallow) given swātantra. Next, they saw a tailor who used to stitch shirts, turbans etc. for Kamsa. He presented costly shirts and turbans to Rāma and Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa gave him salvation and distributed the clothes to the Gopās with him.

(3) Sudāmā puruṣottama. Then Kṛṣṇa and Rāma entered the house of Sudāmā who gave them each a garland. Kṛṣṇa blessed him.

(4) Straightened the hunch-back Trāṇakā. Rāma and Kṛṣṇa continued their walk when they saw a female hunch-back coming opposite to them with a beautiful vessel filled with aṅga-āgā (fragrant things like sandalwood, mask etc. reduced into a paste to be smeared on the body. She told them that she was the maid-in-fat-tress of Kamasi. Her name was Trivikr̥ṣṇa and the anguish in the vessel was for the use of Kamasi. She felt pure love for Kṛṣṇa and gave him the anguish along with the vessel. Rāma and Kṛṣṇa smeared their bodies with it. Kṛṣṇa stepped on her feet and with his right hand raised her chin upwards and she was cure of her blindness. Her legs became weak and she begged him to spend the night in her house. Kṛṣṇa promised to oblige her on another occasion and continued the walk.

5. Kṛṣṇa broke the bow. Rāma and Kṛṣṇa continued their walk into the Yajna hall of Kamasi. A big bow was strung there, and Kṛṣṇa broke it with his left hand before the guests could approach him. With the broken pieces of the bow he killed the soldiers sent by Kamasi to take him and Rāma into custody. They again continued their walk. The sun set, and though they lay down to sleep thoughts about the underhand dealings of Kamasi kept them sleepless.

6. Kṛṣṇa killed the fierce elephant. That night Kṛṣṇa dreamt an apomptous dream. The next morning Kṛṣṇa and Rāma were awakened by a fierce elephant, an agitated bull, to which Kṛṣṇa resorted to the bull's dwellings. The bull belonged to Kṛṣṇa, and Kṛṣṇa killed it and smeared it on the ground. To this Rāma and Kṛṣṇa had to take to the arena for a pugilistic competition. The bullocks to Kṛṣṇa knew the bounds, and catch hold of Kṛṣṇa, and in the fight that ensued with the animal Kṛṣṇa killed it and gave one touch of it to Rāma. Kṛṣṇa led the mahout to death with the task. After this they entered the scene.

7. Kamasi killed. The pugilistic competition started. Cāṇḍrāja fought against Kṛṣṇa and Mūrtakṣi against Rāma. Both Gāṇḍarā and Mūrtakṣi were killed. Rāma and Kṛṣṇa killed the other famous pugilists also. After that they went to the arena for the pugilistic comb. Yadavas, chieftains like Nandagopu, many other important persons in Mathurā and Kamasi took their seats on the dias. Famous pugilists like Cāṇḍarāja, Mūrtakṣi, Kāti, Saṇḍa and Kṛṣṇa also entered the scene. Kamasi had stationed a fierce elephant called Kuluvalayāpida on the way. Rāma and Kṛṣṇa had to enter the arena for pugilistic competition. The bull, however, kept a subsequent distance. Kṛṣṇa led the mahout to death with the task. After this they entered the scene.

8. Farewell to the people of Ambāḍa. Rāma and Kṛṣṇa satiated Nandagopu and Yadavāda, and entrusted to them their clothes and bows for safe custody. Then saying that they would return after strengthening the Yadu dynasty, Rāma and Kṛṣṇa sent their parents and the other Gopas home. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skanda).

9. Education of Rāma and Kṛṣṇa.

10. After bidding adieu to the people of Ambāḍa, Vana-deva, on the advice of sage Garga sent Rāma and Kṛṣṇa for their studies to the Aśrama of the great sage Sāndipan. During their education at the Aśrama Kṛṣṇa and Kuksha became intimate friends. One day, at the instance of the wife of their preceptor, Kṛṣṇa and Kuksha went into the forest to gather firewood. In the heavy rain and storm that followed they lost their track and wandered about in the forest. The next day the preceptor brought them back from the forest. Kṛṣṇa learned the sixty-four arts and bhanurveda (science of archery) at the feet of Sāndipan. (Bhāgavata, Southern Text, Page 500; Satyārīja Purāṇa, Chapter 39) about them. So Kṛṣṇa sent a message to Ambāḍa by his minister Uddhava. After duly delivering the message Uddhava stayed at Ambāḍa for four or five months after which he returned to Mathurā with the presents given to Kṛṣṇa by Nandagopu, Yadavāda, and other Gopas. (Bhāgavata).

11. Visted Trivikr̥ṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa had promised to visit the house of Trivikr̥ṣṇa when he curred of her death. He had been long awaited Kṛṣṇa, but only now he got the opportunity to fulfill his promise. He accepted her hospitality at her house and thus ended her grief.

12. Interested himself in the Pāṇḍavas. By this time Pāṇḍu had died. The Pāṇḍavas and Kunti, sister of Kṛṣṇa's father were living at Hastināpura along with the Kauravas. They were victims to all sorts of miseries. Hearing about the sad plight of the Pāṇḍavas Kṛṣṇa deputed Akṛṣṇa to Hastināpura to enquire about them. Kuntilevi, with tears in her eyes, told Akṛṣṇa about the injustice being done against the Pāṇḍavas by the Kauravas and the continuous attempts being made to kill Bhima. Akṛṣṇa visited important persons like Vidura, Bhīmaśāstra etc. Akṛṣṇa exhorted Dhirāgūpita, who had succeeded Pāṇḍu as King, to vote out equal justice to Kauravas as well as to the Pāṇḍavas. Akṛṣṇa returned to Mathurā and gave a report to Kṛṣṇa about his visit to the Pāṇḍavas.

13. The Jāraśandha war. Aṣṭi and Pāṇḍu, wives of Karna complained about the killing of their husband by Kṛṣṇa to their father Jāraśandha, King of Magadh. Jāraśandha, aided by such famous Kings as Kauravas, Kalinga, Kedrāja, Dantavakra and Sīruptala besieged Mathurā with a big army. Yadavas leaders like Kṛṣṇa, Balabhadrā, Uddyāva, Akṛṣṇa and Kṛṣṇarman met the enemies in battle in which many kings got
14) Sri Krishna escaped from fire. Balabhadrā and Kṛṣṇa started for Dvārakā carrying all their riches to keep safe in Kṛṣṇavat. They met Jayāsandra on their way and took to their heels. Jayāsandra followed them to the heights of Mount Pravarsanā where they disappeared. Jayāsandra set fire to the four sides of the mountain when Rama and Kṛṣṇa escaped secretly from the fire to Dvārakā. Jayāsandra returned to Magadhā believing that both his antagonists were burned to death. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

15) Wedding of Rāma and Kṛṣṇa.
(1) Balabhadrā-Revati. Balabhadrā married Revati, daughter of King Anarta of Kuśasthāli, former name of Dvārakā.
(2) Kṛṣṇa-Rukmíni. King Bhīma of Vīdardha had five sons the eldest of whom was Rukmi. His sixth son was a daughter and Rukmi fell in love with her. Stories about Kṛṣṇa kindled in Rukmini love for him. Rukmi, who hated Kṛṣṇa, wanted to give his sister in marriage to Śisūpāla. Rukmini went through a brahmah message about the affair to Dvārakā. On the day of Rukmini’s Svayamvara Rāma and Kṛṣṇa also went to Kūndinapuri, capital of Vīdardha, and Kṛṣṇa, in the presence of all Kings, carried Rukmini to his chariot. The Kings who, under the leadership of Rukmi, attacked Kṛṣṇa were routed. A son called Pradyumna was born to Kṛṣṇa by Rukmini. (See under Pradyumna).
(3) Kṛṣṇa-Jambavatī. Prasena, brother of the Yādava King Satrājīt, went abducting wearing on him the gem called Syamantaka presented to the latter by the Sun god. Jambavatī saw a lion carrying off the gem after killing Prasena. He killed the lion, recovered the gem from it and gave it to his children to play with. A rumour was spread that it was Kṛṣṇa who had killed and stolen the gem. Kṛṣṇa searched for the gem in the forest and found it out in the cave of Jambavatī. In the duel that ensued between Jambavatī and Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa was defeated. Kṛṣṇa then went to the Lord and presented Syamantaka and also his daughter Jambavatī to Kṛṣṇa and Jambavatī thus became Kṛṣṇa’s wife. (See under Syamantaka).
(4) Sri Kṛṣṇa-Satyabhāmā. Sri Kṛṣṇa returned Syamantaka to Satrājīt and he, in return, gave his daughter Satyabhāmā in marriage to Kṛṣṇa. Though Syamantaka was given to Kṛṣṇa by Satrājīt who, in return, did not accept it. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).
(5) Sri Kṛṣṇa-Kālindī. The happy news that the Pāṇḍavas had escaped from the lac palace and were living at Kālindīvāvastha took some time to reach Kṛṣṇa, who had been pained to know that they were burned to death in the palace. As soon as Kṛṣṇa knew that the Pāṇḍavas were safe and Kālindīvāvastha he went there along with Yādava chieftains like Śiśupāla and others. It was then that the fire-god Vahni, requested Arjuna for the Kālindī forest for his food and Arjuna consented to it. It was Kṛṣṇa who drove Arjuna’s chariot in his flight with Indra at the burning of the forest by Agnideva. (See under Kālindīvāvastha). Arjuna saved Maya from the Kālindī fire and Maya, in return for the kindness, built a palace for the Pāṇḍavas at Indraprastha. Kṛṣṇa also lived there for a few days. One day while Kṛṣṇa was strolling on the banks of the Kālindī in the company of Arjuna they saw a woman, who told them that her name was Kālindī and that she would marry none but Krṣṇa. Krṣṇa then took her as his wife. (4. under Kālindī). After staying at Indraprastha for three or four months Krṣṇa returned to Dvārakā with Kālindī. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

6) Śrī Krṣṇa-Mitrāvindā. The King of Avanti had married Rājājīdevī, sister of Krṣṇa’s father and they had two sons called Vinda and Avindī and a daughter Mitāvindā, who had fixed in her mind Krṣṇa as her husband. When, however, her Svayaṃvara was to be pitched, she refused to be married to any of the greetings of the dravārī.

7) Śrī Krṣṇa-Satyā. King Nāgājīt of Kosala, father of Satyā, had seven oxen like elephants in strength. The King proclaimed that his daughter would be married to the man who would ride down the oxen. Various Kings attempted the task but failed. Ultimately Arjuna and Krṣṇa went to Kosala and Krṣṇa assumed seven forms and tied down the oxen with cords. The seven oxen at once fell down. Krṣṇa took Satyā for his wife.

8) Śrī Krṣṇa-Kālīkī (Bhādra). Krṣṇa married Kālīkī, the daughter of Śrutakīrtī, sister of Krṣṇa’s father.

9) Śrī Krṣṇa-Lakṣmanā. Lakṣmanā, daughter of King of Pāwara, attached herself to Krṣṇa at her Svayaṃvara and she became Krṣṇa’s wife.

10) Krṣṇa-16000 women. Brahmat had given the boon to the 16000 daughters of Narakāśura in their previous birth that Viṣṇu would marry them in their next birth. While even the Devas were suffering on account of Narakāśuras, Śrī Krṣṇa along with Satyabhāmā mounted Garuda, went to Narakāśura, defeated him in battle and released his 16000 daughters from captivity. He returned with them to Dvārakā, assumed the guise of 16000 men and married those 16000 girls. He built a palace for each of his 16000 wives. (For details see under Narakāśura).

15) Krṣṇa’s 16000 wives. The eight women, i.e. Rukminī, Jāmbavatī, Satyabhāmā, Kālindī, Mitāvindā, Vinda, Avindī, and Satyā, Lakṣmanā and the 16000 daughters of Narakāśura constituted Krṣṇa’s harems.

(16) The 16000 daughters of Narakāśura are not mentioned by name in the Purāṇas. (See under Suduttā and Kurma Dvāra.)

17) Gane Salvation to Ghatikārakas. Ghaṭa and Karnā were two demon brothers. Krṣṇa met them at Bṛhaspatī, where he had gone after his marriage with Rukminī, to perform yajña for Śiva for a child. Krṣṇa offered salvation to the two demon brothers, Ghaṭa and Karnā.

18) Fight between Krṣṇa and Arjuna. (See under Gāłąva.)

19) Killed Miraśīva. (See under Mura.)

20) Killed Narakāśura. (See under Narakāśura.)

21) Parījata. During the period when Narakāśura was having his own ways on the earth and when he took away by force Indra’s royal umbrella and the ear-rings of Aditi, the Devāmatā, Indra sought Krṣṇa’s help to suppress the Asura. Krṣṇa along with Satyabhāmā, mounted Garuda, went and killed the Asura and restored the royal umbrella to Indra and the ear-rings to Aditi. On the way back home Krṣṇa, as desired by Satyabhāmā, plucked by its roots the Parījata from Devaloka at which Indra sought Krṣṇa, but got defeated. The Parījata was brought to Dvārakā and planted in front of Satyabhāmā’s palace. It is stated that Parījata was thus brought and planted by Krṣṇa to alleviate the grief caused to Satyabhāmā by the return of Krṣṇa of Syamaṇīka to Satrajit. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha). 22) Krṣṇa’s sons and grand-children. Ten sons were born to each of the eight chief wives—from Rukminī to Lakṣmanā—of Krṣṇa. Names of the chief among those eight sons are given below.

(1) Of Rukminī—Pṛduryumna, Gāṇudeśa, Sudeśa, Gāṇudeś, Gāṇudeśa, Gāṇudeśa, Gāṇudeśa, Gāṇudeśa, Gāṇudeśa, Gāṇudeśa.

(2) Of Śrīmad—Bhīma, Subhānu, Svarbhānu, Prabhānu, Bhānumānu, Candrabhānu, Bhādṛbhānu, Hāvūrūbhānu, Sribhānu, Pratibhānu.

(3) Of Kālindī—Śrīta

(4) Of Mitāvindā—Vrkahūnta.

(5) Of Satyā—Bhānuśrī.

(6) Of Ghaṭa—Bhānuśrī.

(7) Of Bhādṛ—Sangrāmācītta.

(8) Of Lakṣmanā—Phraghra.

A daughter called Rukmavati was born to Rukmi, the brother of Rukminī. Pṛduryumna married Rukmavati and Aniruddha was their son. This was Aniruddha, who wedded Uṣā. Gāṇudeśa, the daughter of Rukminī was married to the son of Kṛśvanar (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

23) Krṣṇa tested Rukmi. While Śrī Krṣṇa was once having a chat with Rukmi he wanted to test her love for him. So he told her that he was penniless and helpless and was hiding from his enemies there at Dvārakā and that he would only be really glad if she married some other powerful King. Krṣṇa had not completed his sentences when Rukmi fell down unconscious. Krṣṇa then consoled her. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

24) Krṣṇa fought with Bāya. See under Bāya.

25) Krṣṇa killed Puṇḍraka. See under Puṇḍraka.

26) Nṛga given salvation. See under Nṛga.

27) Śrīkrṣṇa blessed Pātālī at the time of her Svayaṃvara (See under Pātālī).

28) Subhādṛ given in marriage to Arjuna. Arjuna had to go on a pilgrimage for one year as atonement for having got into the palace where Yūkṣhīṣṭa was spending the days with Pātālī. It was during this period of his pilgrimage that Arjuna married Subhādṛ, who was the younger sister of Krṣṇa due to whose cleverness alone Arjuna got her as his wife. (For details see under Subhādṛ).

29) Krṣṇa got the club called Kauśumudakā and he saved Maya. See under Khāṇḍavādāra.

30) Kuṭṭha with the Pāṇḍavas. The rest of Krṣṇa’s life was intimately connected with the history of the Pāṇḍavas. Important roles played by Krṣṇa during the period up to the great war, are summarised below.

(1) He conducted Yajña continuously for many years for the protection of Dharma (righteousness) (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 16).

(2) Permitted Yūkṣhīṣṭa to perform Rājasuyā yajña. (Chapter 14, Sabha Parva, M.B.).

(3) Along with Bhīma and Arjuna, he went to Mātburā in the guise of a brahmin and killed Jārāśandha. (See under Jārāśandha).

(4) He crowned Śabhadeva, son of Jārāśandha, as King of Mātburā. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 43).

(5) He gave a lot of money as donation at the Rājasīya Yajña of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 13).

(6) He was presented with ear-rings by Bhūmidevi (godess Earth). (Sabhā Parva, Page 808, Southern text).

(7) He killed Śūlapāla. (See under Śūlapāla).

(8) He made the clothes of Pāṇḍāli unending when Duryodhana tried to strip her naked in the royal assembly. (See under Pāṇḍāli).

(9) He fought Śālva and Saubhā. (See under Śālva and Saubhā).

(10) He once took Subhadrā and Arjuna to Dvārakā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 22; Verses 47, 48).

(11) He consorted the Pāṇḍavas at the Kāmyaka forest. (Vana Parva, Chapter 183, Verse 16).

(12) He ate the bit of a leaf of greens from Pāṇḍāli’s vessel and was pleased with her. (See under Pāṇḍāli).

(13) Attended the wedding of Abhimanyu at Upaplavanagāra and gave a lot of money to Dharmarūpa. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 24).

(14) He sent to the court of King Virātra a messenger, who explained to him the corrupt ways of the Kaurava king, the actions of the righteous Kauravas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 1).

31. Trested by Nārada. Nārada wanted to know how Kṛṣṇa managed to satisfy all his 16008 wives. For this purpose he visited their houses and Nārada was wonder-struck to find Kṛṣṇa engaged in conversation with his wives in all the houses he visited. (Bhagavata, 10th Skandha).

32. Kṛṣṇa blessed Kucela. See under Kucela.

33. The story of Sautānāgapālama. See para 7 (d) under Arjuna.

34. Kṛṣṇa feigned sleep. The Kauravas refused to part with half the kingdom to the Pāṇḍavas, who had returned from their exile in the forest. The both sides began preparations for war. Duryodhana went to Dvārakā to invite Kṛṣṇa to his side, and seeing him at a distance Kṛṣṇa feigned sleep and lay down there. Duryodhana occupied a stool at the head of Kṛṣṇa’s bed. Arjuna, who also came to seek his help, stood with folded hands at Kṛṣṇa’s feet. It was Arjuna whom Kṛṣṇa first saw on waking up. But Duryodhana told him that it was he who had come first. Kṛṣṇa was so moved by Arjuna’s request that he was to help both the sides. He promised his entire army to one side and his personal help, himself without any weapons with him, to the other side, and Arjuna was asked to make his choice first as he was younger than Duryodhana. Arjuna chose Kṛṣṇa without arms and Duryodhana with his infantry. Kṛṣṇa agreed to act as Arjuna’s charioteer.

35. As messenger of peace in Kaurava assembly. Dharmarūpa requested Kṛṣṇa to find out means to avoid war somehow or other and Kṛṣṇa sent a message to Dhṛtarāṣṭra through Saśījaya but nothing came out of it. Ultimately Kṛṣṇa himself decided to visit the Kauravas for which purpose he went first to Dvārakā in his chariot with Saśīyaki. On his way Kṛṣṇa held talks with many a great sage. From Dvārakā he returned to Hastinapura where he visited and consorted Kuntī at Vidura’s house. He had his supper also there. The next day he attended Duryodhana’s court and strongly pleaded for the Pāṇḍavas. But Duryodhana and others ridiculed him and even attempted to take him captive. Śrī Kṛṣṇa at once exhibited his Viśva-rūpa (Cosmic form). The Kauravas were frightened to witness Brahmā on Kṛṣṇa’s forehead, Śiva on his chest, Adiṣṭvam-Vasūdfīs in his mouth etc. Śrī Kṛṣṇa granted the blind Dhṛtarāṣṭra divine eyes to see this Viśvarūpa and he sang the praise of Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa returned to the Pāṇḍavas after advising Karna to fight on the Pāṇḍava side in the impending war. (Udyoga Parva).

36. Aṛjuna in the great war. The parts Kṛṣṇa played during the Kuru-Pāṇḍava war are briefly given below.

(1) The Kaurava and the Pāṇḍava armies were gathered at Kurukṣetra in full battle array and Arjuna, at the sight of the thousands of relations in the opposite camp, became a prey to a great delusion and sat down. Kṛṣṇa then exhorted him to fight by giving him advice, which came later to be known as the great Gītā. The Gītā contains the Sāṃkhya, Yoga, the characteristics of the wise people and the unwise, description about yajñas, greatness of knowledge, characteristics of Sāṃkhya and nīkṣaṇa-karma, yogīn, jñānayoga etc. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapters 26-42).

(2) At the commencement of the battle, Kṛṣṇa blew his conch Pañcajanya. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 15).

(3) Kṛṣṇa rushed forward with his Cakrāyudha to kill Bhīṣma, who then praised Kṛṣṇa. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 65).

(4) He prompted Arjuna to kill Bhīṣma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 105, Verse 53).

(5) He received on his chest the Vaisvāvāstra shot by Bhagadatta against Arjuna. (Drona Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 13).

(6) Consolled Arjuna, who was lamenting over the death of Abhimanyu. (Drona Parva, Chapter 72).

(7) Consolled Subhadrā, who was sunk in sorrow at the loss of her son. (Drona Parva, Chapter 77).

(8) Consolled the crying Pāṇḍāli and Uttarā. (Drona Parva, Chapter 78).

(9) Took Arjuna in a dream to Śiva and got Śiva’s blessing for him. (Drona Parva, Chapter 80).

(10) He looked after the horses in the battle-field. (Drona Parva, Chapter 100).

(11) Prompted Arjuna to kill Duryodhana. (Drona Parva, Chapter 102).

(12) Kṛṣṇa created illusionary darkness and prompted Arjuna to kill Jayadratha. (See under Jayadratha).

(13) He lifted the darkness after Jayadratha was killed by Arjuna. (Drona Parva, Chapter 146).

(14) As it was not proper for Arjuna and Karna to be fighting with each other at mid-night he deputed Ghāṭotkaca to fight Kṛṣṇa. (Drona Parva, Chapter 173).

(15) He consolled Dharmarūpa, who was grieving over the death of Ghāṭotkaca. (Drona Parva, Chapter 153).

(16) He prompted Arjuna to kill Karna. (Karna Parva, Chapter 60).

(17) Withdrew Arjuna from confrontation with Karna on the pretext of attending to Dharmarūpa, who had been wounded. (Karna Parva, Chapter 64).

(18) A sudden dispute arose between Dharmarūpa and Arjuna, who drew his sword to kill the former. And Kṛṣṇa reconciled them by relating the story of Vyaḍha and Kaśyapa. (For the story see under Valākṣa).
(19) Arjuna got ready to commit suicide: Krśna dissuaded him from the attempt. (Krśna Parva, Chapter 70).

(20) Krśna again prompted Arjuna to kill Karṇa. (Krśna Parva, Chapter 71).

(21) In the fierce battle that ensued between Arjuna and Karṇa, Krśna pressed down the platform of the chariot when the latter shot the nāgarśtra (the serpent arrow). The arrow flew off with Arjuna’s crown. (Krśna Parva, Chapter 90).

(22) Arjuna killed Karṇa after which Krśna prompted Dharmarāja to kill Śalya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 7).

(23) Krśna prompted Bhiṣma to kill Duryodhana in an illusory battle. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 58).

(24) As requested by Yudhishṭhira, Krśna left the battle-field for Hastināpura and returned after consulting Duryodhana and Gāndāhari. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 62).

(25) Krśna cursed Aśvatthāmahā who released arrows against pregnant women. (See under Aśvatthāmahā).

(26) Asked Bhiṣma to instruct Yudhishṭhira on dharma (righteousness). (Śanti Parva, Chapter 51).

(27) He granted the boon to Bhiṣma lying on the bed of arrows so that he would not feel hungry and thirsty and that his intellect would function powerfully as long as he was discoursing on dharma. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 52).

(28) He related to Arjuna the root meaning of his various names. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 341).

(29) He explained to sages and Bhūmidevi some profound truths about God and the world. (Anuśūsana Parva, Chapter 167).

(30) He gave permission to Bhiṣma to die. (Anuśūsana Parva, Chapter 167).

(31) Consolated Gaṅgādēvi who grieved over the death of Bhiṣma. (Anuśūsana Parva, Chapter 168).

(32) He once again revealed the doctrine of the Gītā in the form of discussions between Siddhāmāharṣī and Kaśyapa. (Āravānākāsā Parva, Chapter 16).

(33) After the great war was over he went to Dvārakā with Subhadra and Sāryaki with the consent of Yudhishṭhira. (Āravānākāsā Parva, Chapter 57, Verses 54-55).

(34) Śrī Krśna again at Dvārakā. When Krśna returned to Dvārakā, Sage Uṣūkṣa visited him. The sage was told details about the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas by Krśna. He detailed to the sage spiritual principles too and showed him his Viṣṇurūpa (Cosmic form). Krśna participated in festival held by the Yādavas on the Raivata month. Afterwards when he went to Dvārakā he told his father Vasudeva details about the war. He himself performed the obsequies of Abhimmānu. (Āvamadha Parva).

(35) Killed Hunkaḍhākās. See under Dībhaka.

(36) Krśna brought back Pārkhiṣṭa to life. Krśna again went to Hastināpura. There Uṭāra, wife of Abhimmānu, delivered, but the child was born dead as the arrow of Aśvatthāmahā had hit left womb. Krśna brought the dead child back to life on the request of Kum. It was this child, who became later famous as Pārkhiṣṭa. (Āvamadha Parva, Chapter 56).

(37) The evening of Krśna’s life. (1) The curse of Gāndāhari. Most of the heroes and distinguished archers like Duryodhana had been killed in the great war, and Gāndāhari overwhelmed with grief and anger at the death of her sons lamented over them loudly. She realised that Krśna was the cause of all the destruction and cursed him as follows:—“If I have gained any powers by my loyal and devoted service to my husband, O! Krśna I curse you on the strength of that power. Since you forsook relations like the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas who quarrelled with each other, you also will have to witness the killing of relations. Thirty-six years from today your relations, ministers and sons will be killed too will be killed by a hunter in the forest. Your women-folk also will cry as we women cry now!” (Śrī Parva, Chapter 25).

The curse of Gāndāhari that the Yādava dynasty would be annihilated after thirty-six years was fulfilled. In the thirty-sixth year another curse also befell the dynasty which contributed further to its annihilation.

(2) Curse of the sages. The sages Viśvānātha, Kaṇva and Nārada came to Dvārakā once. Some Yādavas brought Sāmba dressed as a pregnant woman before the sages and asked them derivatively what child, whether male or female, would Sāmba give birth to. Angry at this insult, the sage said that the ‘pregnant woman’ would deliver an iron rod, which would become instrument for the destruction of the Yādava dynasty. Krśna who was told about the curse said that it was as it was destined to be. Next day Sāmba delivered an iron rod. The Yādavas filed it into powder and threw the powder into the sea. Śrī Krśna enforced prohibition of liquor in Dvārakā with the object of avoiding any untoward incidents in Dvārakā. It was declared that those who produced and sold provisions for their sale would have to associate themselves with their families. (Maunasa Parva, Chapter 1).

(3) Soil Monica. Signs of the destruction of the Yādavas began appearing. Agents of Kalā visited house after house. Rats multiplied in numbers everywhere in the land, and they began growing the nails and hairs of people enjoying sleep. Sheep howled like jackals. Asses were born from cows and cats from men. Dogs inhabited with rats. The Cárvikāyudha (Divaśa) given to Krśna by Agniśeveda at the time of Khāṇḍavādana disappeared into the sky while the Yādavas were looking on. Thus symptoms of an all-round destruction were witnessed.

(4) Destruction of the Yādavas. Śrī Krśna, Balabhadra, Uddhāva and others were about to go on a pilgrimage, and the Yadus, the Krśṇa and the Andhiṅkas began manufacturing and drinking liquor. They also began to quarrel with one another. The powder of the iron rod thrown into the sea was washed ashore and it grew up like arrow-like grass. The Yādavas fought with one another and many were killed. Krśṇa got terribly angry at the death of Sātyaki, Padyumana and others. He plucked a handful of grass and it transformed itself into an iron rod with which he beat to death those around him. Then all the people plucked up the grass which turned into iron rods. They fought amongst themselves with the iron rods and all of them got killed.

(5) Death of Raṅga and Krśna. During this period Balabhadra went and seated himself under a tree in deep meditation. Krśna stood near him. Dāruka and Babhrū also arrived there. Krśna deputed Dāruka to Hastināpura to inform Arjuna about the annihilation of the Yādava race. Then Krśna went to the palace and consoled the women-folk there. When he told them that Arjuna would come and take care of them, his wives shed tears. Kṛṣṇa then took leave of Vasudeva and returned to Balabhadra. Kṛṣṇa saw even at a distance a white serpent coming out of Balabhadra’s mouth and moving away to Pañcāla through the sea. The serpent which was the soul of Balabhadra was duly received by the prominent Nāgas in Pañcāla. Kṛṣṇa roamed about the forest for some time and then lay down on the ground immersed in Yoga with his feet raised up. An Asura called Jara, who saw Kṛṣṇa’s raised feet from a distance mistook the same for of serpents and struck the back of his arrows. Kṛṣṇa expired at once and rose up in the guise of Viṣṇu to Vaikuṇṭha. (Mausala Parva).

(5) Reaso n for Kṛṣṇa’s feet being hit by arrows. Durvāsas once went to Dwārakā and enquired who was there to put him up as a guest. Kṛṣṇa invited him to his palace and treated him as a very honoured guest. He began creating trouble there by breaking vessels, eating only very sparingly at times but eating all that he saw at other times. Kṛṣṇa and Rukmini put up with the vagaries of the sage quite patiently. One day the sage expressed a desire to taste pudding, and accordingly Kṛṣṇa and Rukmini cooked it and served it to the sage. After tasting some pudding he asked Kṛṣṇa to smear his feet with the pudding. Kṛṣṇa asked him to excuse bottom of his feet. The sage asked him why he did not smear the nether surface of his feet with the pudding to which Kṛṣṇa humbly answered that he did not like doing so. Durvāsas smeared Rukmini’s body with what remained of the pudding. He yoked Rukmini to the chariot and rode off swiftly in it. On the way he whipped Rukmini. Kṛṣṇa ran after the chariot so that he might get service to the sage. After he had gone some distance the sage jumped out of the chariot and ran through the forest. Ultimately he turned round to Kṛṣṇa and told him as follows:—

“O! Kṛṣṇa! I am pleased with your service. Let Rukmini have the first place among your wives. She will not be affected by old age. And, you will never meet with death by day or night at those parts of your body which have been smeared with the pudding.”

When Kṛṣṇa and Rukmini returned to the palace the vessels which Durvāsas had broken were found to be in a more glittering condition than of old. Their welfare and happiness were also increased. Kṛṣṇa died hit by the arrow of the hunter on the lower surface of his feet as he had not smeared that part of the body with the pudding left over by Durvāsas. (Māsālā Parva, Chapter 159), (There is another story to the effect that Jara, the hunter, was Bālī (whom Śrī Rāma had killed) reborn, and he killed Kṛṣṇa in retaliation for his former death).

(7) After Kṛṣṇa’s death.

(i) Arjuna came to Dwārakā and cremated Kṛṣṇa. (Māsālā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 31).

(ii) After his death Kṛṣṇa, lives in the guise of Naraṇa in the divine sphere. (Śrīvārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verses 24-26).

(iii) Anointed queens like Rukmini and Jambhavi and some other wives of Kṛṣṇa entered his funeral pyre and ended their lives. (Māsālā Parva, Chapter 7, Verses 73 and 74).

(iv) While Arjuna was leading the remaining wives of Kṛṣṇa away from Dwārakā forest-dwellers attacked them on the way. But the women, to escape from their clutches, ran off and jumped into the river Sarasvatī and died in its waters. Their souls entered heaven (Śrīvārohaṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 25).

(b) Synonym of Kṛṣṇa in Amarāvali.

KṛṣṇaKṛṣṇa. A warrior of Skandadeva. (Śāliya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 51).

KṛṣṇaNānda. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 13th century A.D. He is the author of Sabhādyānanda Kāvyā which contains fifteen cantos. The theme is the story of Nala.

Kṛṣṇaṇājana. Capital city of Nṛṣīṭi, one of the eight Guardians of the quarters. (Devī Bhāgavata, 5th because of Bhāgavata, 5th).

Kṛṣṇaṇubhaūtiya. A great sage. He visited Bhima on his bed of arrows. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 11).

KṛṣṇaParvata. A mountain in Kuṭa island very dear to Viṣṇu. (Bhāṣā Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 4).

Kṛṣṇārtāya. A great sage of ancient India. It is said that the Devas gathered the whole of Ayūrveda and practiced it by the strength of his penance (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 210, Verse 21).

Kṛṣṇāvarta. Another name for Agni. Agni was addressed by the word as the serpent yājña by Astika. (M.B. Chapter 53, Verse 10).

KṛṣṇaVṛṣṇi. A sacred river in South India. A bath in the Devakunda in this river (Jātisamālakanda) willkindle in one remembrance about previous lives. (Śāliya Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 20). Agni is supposed to originate from this horda. (Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 26).

Kṛta. I. A King of Janaka’s dynasty. He was the son of Viśvā and father of Sunaka. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha). Kṛta had seven beautiful daughters who, because of a sense of non-attachment and renunciation, forsook their father’s home for the cremation ground even while they were mere children. They lay down there declaring that they had left their bodies as food for the birds; and birds and wild beasts ate up their beautiful bodies. Because of this life of renunciation, they attained salvation. (Kathāsaritśāgarā, Madana- mahāja Bhāgavata 7).

Kṛta II. A Vāsudeva (Univeral Deva). (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 31).

Kṛtacetās. A great sage of ancient days. (Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 22).

Kṛtadhvaja. A King of Janaka’s dynasty. (See under Vaiśāvāvalī.)

Kṛtajyoti. Queen of King Citraketu. Though the King had many wives he had no children. He pleased a gārvī by means of his austeritys and due to the latter's bequest Kṛtadyuti delivered a son. But, her co-wives possessed the child to death at which both Citraketu and Kṛtadyuti fell down unconscious. Though Angiras and Nārada appeared on the scene and tried their best to console the King and the queen they refused to be comforted. Then Angiras returned to them the soul of the dead child. The soul saluted them and spoke as follows:— "Oh elders, defining various births I had been the son of various parents. And, you please point out to me the particular parent as whose son I am to live just now." Nobody had any answer to this question, and the child remained on its own way. Afterwards Citraketu and Kṛtadyuti went round the earth as great devotees of the Almighty, and during this perambulation Citraketu came to the presence of Śiva whose thigh Pārvatī was sitting then. Citraketu felt ashamed at the sight and questioned Pārvatī about her action whereon she cursed and turned Citraketu into an Asura. The well known Vṛṣṇi rāṣṭra was Citra- ketu thus reborn. Kṛtadyuti ended her life following the curse upon her husband. (Bhāgavata, 6th Skandha).

KṛtaGaṅga. See under Dhanaiśarman.

KṛtaGāṇi. A King of the Yadu dynasty. Descended from Yadu thus: Sahasra-jyāt—Sahasra—Hehya—Dharmānus—Kunti—Bhadra—Dhanaka—Kṛti Gāṇi. Kṛti Gāṇi was the brother of Kṛṣṇa, who was the son of Kārtavirya. Kārtavirya had three brothers called Kṛti Gāṇi, Kṛtavarm and KṛtaJyoti. (KrtaJyoti).

KṛtaKṣaṇa. A King of Vīdēha, who was a member in Yudhisthira’s court. He made a present of fourteen thousand horses to Yudhisthira. (Śāliya Parva).

Kṛtāmalā. The river in which Mahāvīra first appeared as fish. (See under Mahāvīrata).

Kṛtāparvata. A king of the Yadava dynasty. (See under Yadava Varmā).

Kṛtasālacīma. A holy centre in Kurukṣetra. He who bathes here will derive the benefits of conducting a Punāravatī Yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 21).

Kṛtasrava. A great sage, who had distinguished himself in the court of Yudhishṭhira. He lived a life of renunciation as a Vānaprastha and attained heaven. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 244, Verse 18).

Kṛtaśva. A great sage of ancient days. He was the son-in-law of Daksānaprājapati. Daksā had sixty daughters by his wife Viṣṇi, thirteen of whom were wedded to Kīyāpa, ten to Dharma, twenty-seven to Candra, four to Bhrigu, four to Bṛhaspati, two to Garuḍa, and two to Āgiraka. (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

KṛtaJyoti. See under KṛtaGāṇi.

KṛtaVāk. A great sage, who was an admirer of Yudhishṭhīra. (Vana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 24).

Kṛtavarmā. A King of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. In the previous generation of Vṛṣṇi also a Kṛtavarmā is noticed. The genealogy of both is given below.

Dhanaka had four sons called Kṛtavira, Kṛti Gāṇi, Kṛtavarm and KṛtaJyoti, and one of the four was the first Kṛtavarmā.

Hruḍika had four sons, viz. Devavāha, Gādādhanava, Kṛtavarmān and Sūra. And, Sūra begot of his wife, Marītī ten sons, i.e. Vasu, Devabhāga, Devāsvatā, Anuśka, Śrījaya, Kākanā, Śyaśika, Vaiśa, Kavaika and Vasaudeva. Śri Kṛṣṇa was the son of Vasaudeva. The Kṛtavarmā referred to below was the brother of Śri Kṛṣṇa’s grand-father.

2) Kṛtavarmā and Śyāmanta. King Sahajāja had in his possession the famous gem called Śyāmanta. The King’s brother Prasena, went for hunting with this jewel on him. A lion killed Prasena, and Jāmbavān killed the lion and got the gem. A scandal was circulated to the effect that Śri Kṛṣṇa had stolen the gem. But, Kṛṣṇa got back the gem from Jāmbavān and handed it over.
to Satrājīt, who in turn, gave his daughter Satyabhāmā in marriage to Kṛṣṇa. Though Satrājīt wanted to give the gem to Syamantaka—to Kṛṣṇa as dowry, the latter did not accept it.

Akrūra and Kṛtvavarman were bosom friends, and they incited another Yādava King Satadhanva, to grab the Syamantaka. Satadhanva killed Satrājīt and took possession of the gem. Hearing about this murder, Śri Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra set out to kill Satadhanva, who, in turn, escaped north after entrusting the gem to Akrūra and Kṛtvavarman. His horse died at Mithilāpurī and he began running. Balabhadra and Kṛṣṇa ran after him, caught and killed him. But, they did not get the Syamantaka.

Now Akrūra and Kṛtvavarman began their presence at Kāśi. Seven years passed thus when famine broke out in Dvārakā. When once upon a time famine stalked Kāśi, the king had brought Sva-phalka, father of Akrūra, over to Kāśi, and there was no more famine in the country. Therefore, when famine broke out in Dvārakā the Yadavas thought the presence of Sva-phalka’s son, Akrūra would dispel the famine. Accordingly Akrūra was recalled to Dvārakā, and along with him returned Kṛtvavarman also. Śri Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra decided that Syamantaka should be kept by Akrūra himself.

3) Information relating to Kṛtvavarman.
(i) He was a very famous archer. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 81).
(ii) He was a great devotee of Śri Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 105).
(iii) He was present at the Svayamvara of Pāṇcālī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 18).
(iv) He had once gone to Khāṇḍāvāparśva with presents to Subhadra. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 31).
(v) He was a member in the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 30).
(vi) He was one of the seven Mahārathas in the Viṣṇi dynasty, the other six being Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Ārjunaka, Saubindu, Kṛṣṇaka, Kuntaka, and Sāmba. (Śrī Kṛṣṇa was present at the marriage of Abhimanyu at Uppalavanyanagara (Virūḍha Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 21).
(vii) The Pāṇḍavas invited him to war against the Kauravas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12).

(xxiii) He fainted on the field in fight with Dhrṣṭa- dyumna. (Kṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 54). When he regained consciousness he met Duryodhana at Dvāpāyana-saras and induced him to fight. Dharma-putra followed him with the army.
(xxiv) He also was present with Aśvatthāmā when he attacked those who were asleep during night. (Sauptika Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 38).
(xxv) It was he, who set fire to the camp of the Pāṇḍavas. (Sauptika Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 109).
(xxvi) He returned home after informing Dhrṣṭaraṣṭra about the death of Duryodhana, on the termination of the great war. (Śrī Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 21).
(xxvii) He was present along with Kṛṣṇa at the Śrīmeda vaṣṭi conducted by Yudhīṣṭhira. (Āśvamedha Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 3).
(xxviii) He was killed in the club-fight by the Yādavas. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 28).
(xxix) After death he joined the Maṇudgana and secured eternal fame. (Svarguṭrōhana Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 13).

4) Synopsis for Kṛtvavarman. Ānuśratvā, Bhūja, Bhṛja, Hṛdi, Hṛdi-kāma, Madhava, Sātvata, Vāsudeva, Vīṇākas, Kṛtvārya. Kṛtvārya. A very holy Rājarṣi. He was a member in the court of Yama. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 89).

Kṛtvārya I. Father of the famous Kārttavyārya (For genealogy see under Kārttavyārya). He got a Soma Yajña conducted by the sages of the family of Bṛgu and gave away a lot of wealth to people of Bṛgu’s family. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 177, Verse 16). Kṛtvārya was a member of the court of Yama. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 9).

Kṛtvārya II. Father-in-law of king Aharāvāti of the solar dynasty. He had a daughter called Bhuṣumati. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 15).

Kṛtvārya. There are four Yugas (Eras) called Kṛt, Treta, Dvāpara and Kali yugas. (For the set up etc. of the Yugas see under Maṇvantara).

In the first Yuga, i.e., Kṛta yuga, people will be quite righteous. As the Yugas change righteousness will fade out in increasing measure till the world will be filled with unrighteousness and evil by the time it is Kaliyuga.

When Kaliyuga is completed Mahāvīra will incarnate himself as Kalki and wipe out unrighteousness and establish Kṛtvārya once again.

Kṛtvārya (Kṛtājnas). A brother of Kṛtāgni. (See under Kṛtvāgni).

Kṛteyu. A king born in the Agra dynasty.
KRITI. A Sage who belonged to the order of the disciple of Vedavyasa. Jamini, was the disciple of Vyasa, and Sumantra was the son of Jamini. Sumantra had a son called Sutva, and Sukarmi was the son of the latter. He had two disciples called Hiranyanabhā and Paniputra. Krītī was a disciple of Hiranyanabhā, and he composed twenty-four Samhitās for the Sama-veda and taught them to his disciples. (Vismu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 6).

KRITI. A synonym of Mahāvīnu. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 22).

KRITI. A King who flourished in the court of Yamarāja. (Śabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 9).

KRITI. A synonym of Mahāvīnu. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 35).

KRITI. A King of the Yakṣas. He presented hundred chefs to Yudhishthira. (Śabhā Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 25).

KRITI. A son of Naubas. Naubas had five other sons called Yau, Yāv, Samvat, Ayant, and Yavait. Kuru was the sixth son and the youngest of the lot.

KRITIKĀ. When Subhrakunja was born the Devas deputed six mothers to breast-feed him, and they are called Krītikā. Certain Purāṇas hold the view that six faces were caused to Subhrakunja as he had to feed on six breasts at the same time while others opine that six mothers were deputed to feed him as he was born with six faces. Again, according to certain Purāṇas it was Parvati, who deputed the Krītikās. The child came to be known as Kṛttikēya also as it was fed by the Krītikās. (śraddha Parva, Chapter 27 and Kauśitākamātrā Parva, Chapter 29).

After having fed Kṛttikā entered into the sphere of the stars. (Vana Parva, Chapter 236, Verse 11). The star into which the Krītikās entered is called the Krītikā star. Nārada said once that when one feeds brahmās with ghee and pudding on Kṛttikā day one may ascend to Devaloka. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 5).

KRITIKĀ. A holy plane. He who bathes here will derive the benefits of performing an Atriya Yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 51).

KRITIKĀ-SĀRAKA A holy centre. He who bathes here and observes fast for two weeks will be absolved from all sins. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 22).

KRITIKĀ-SūRAMA. A holy centre. One who bathes here and worships the Pītas will be absolved from sins. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 22).

KRITVĀSEVARA. See under Śiva.

KR VI. Krīty alias Krihrmati was the daughter of sage Saka Anukula born in the family of Ajumit, married Krīthī, and Brahmadatta was their son.

KRITYA (KRITIYĀ). A Rākṣasa who was born when the black arts as enacted in the Atharvavedas are practised to annihilate enemies. Krītya may appear in male form too. Some of the activities of Krītya are given below.

(1) Coned of Duryodhana. While the Pāṇḍavas were living in exile in the forest, Duryodhana and others went in procession to the forest. Through Duryodhana was taken into captivity in the forest by a Gāndharva, Arjuna saved him out of fraternal consideration for him. Duryodhana returned to Hastinapura. Now the question was whether half of the kingdom should be given to the Pāṇḍavas or not. Sakuni and others advised Duryodhana to give it, but the latter remained adamant against it. Dhṛtarāṣṭra decided to end his life and for the purpose spread dārśa grass on earth and sat thereon. The Āsuras heard about these developments and created a Krītya by mantras. The Krītya took Duryodhana to Pātāla where the Āsuras advised him against any compromise with the Pāṇḍavas. On the other hand they wanted him to intensify his hatred against the Pāṇḍavas, and they assured him all support. After that Krītya took Duryodhana back to Hastinapura. (Vana Parva, Chapter 252).

(2) Krītya born under the name Madana. Devendra once prevented the Asvini-devas from drinking soma juice. (Devas drink a liquid-liquor extracted from the soma creeper, during yajñas, and that is called Somapāna). Aggrieved at the orders of Indra the Asvini-devas wandered about the world in the course of which they approached sage Cīvavāna of the Bhīgarāja family. They restored sight to the blind Cīvavāna, who, in return, assured them that he would see to it that they got the right of drinking soma juice. Cīvavāna began a yajña and Indra came for Somapāna. The sage invited the Asvini-devas also for Somapāna. Indra prevented them from doing so, and the sage opposed him. Then Indra drew his Vajra-yudha against Cīvavāna. The sage made Indra’s hands paralyzed. Further, he raised from the Vajra-yudha a Krītya which appeared in male form under the name Madana. Sharp molar teeth hundred yojanas long, tooth each tooth ten yojana long, hands ten thousand yojanas long and as big as mountains, round eyes like the Sun and Moon, mouth spitting fire—such was Madana, the Krītya, a really terrible being. Frightened at the sight of the terrible being Indra permitted the Asvini-devas to drink Soma.

(3) Krītya against Ambārīta. Ambārīta once began the Ākāśa Vrata and the Devas deplored Dvārakā to obstruct it somehow or other. Dvārakā came to Ambārīta, who requested him to return after bath. But, though the vrata was over the sage did not return and Ambārīta fed the Devas with the offerings (havī). Immediately after that Dvārakā returned and complained that what he was given was the left-overs of the havī. By means of a black art he created a Krītya, who charged against Ambārīta’s throat. Ambārīta prayed and the Sudarṣana Cakra of Śiva appeared and killed the Krītya and drove Dvārakā round the three worlds. At last the sage sought refuge with Ambārīta himself and thus saved himself. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

(4) Krītya opposed Śri Kṛṣṇa. While Kṛṣṇa was ruling Dvārakā, Paundrakavāsindeva was the King of Kāraḍa. Once he sent a messenger to ask Kṛṣṇa to go and bow down before him as he was the real Vaisudeva. Enraged at this insolent demand Kṛṣṇa cut off Paundrakavāsindeva’s head with the Sudarṣana Cakra. The dead King’s son, Sudakṣina, to gather power enough to fight Kṛṣṇa went to Kāḍa and performed penance to please Śiva. Śiva appeared and taught him the method of creating Kṛṣṇa. Accordingly he created from fire, a Kṛṣṇa, who dashed against Kṛṣṇa roaring like hell. Kṛṣṇa used the Sudarṣana Cakra, which burnt to death not only the Kṛṣṇa, but also Sudakṣina.
(5) Krūṭi against Prahlāda. To change the nature of Prahlāda, a great devotee of Viṣṇu, his father Hiranyakashipu deputed Asura preceptors. But, severe punishments like poisoning, throwing into fire etc. did not succeed in changing the devotee's character. At last, the preceptors raised Krūṭi from fire. The Sūlam, which Krūṭi thrust against the throat of Prahlāda was broken into hundreds of pieces. Krūṭi then got angry and turned against the preceptors, who had sent her against Prahlāda. The preceptors fell down unconscious on the verge of death. But, Prahlāda touched their bodies and they became alive again. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 18).

KRŪṬA. A river. Indians used to drink water from this river. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Chapter 9 Verse 18).

KRUDRA (KRUDHĀ). A daughter of Prajāpāti Dakṣa. She became the wife of Kuśaya. A large number of Asuras were born to her. They all were very cruel and were called Krudhavaśas. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 32).

KRUDRA. A country in Ancient India. (Mahābhārata, Bīṣma Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 65).

KŚĀMA. Wife of Prajāpati Pulaha. Three sons Kardama, Urvāriyān and Śaihnu were born to Pulaha of his wife Kśāma. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anuśa 1, Stanza 10).

KŚAMAKA. A King of the Puru dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

KŚATTRADEVĀ. The son of Śikhanda. He was a famous archer. Bhagadatta wounded the right hand of Ksattra Deva in the Bhārata-battle. He fought with Lakṣmana and Droṇa. Lakṣmana killed him. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapters 57 and 171; Bīṣma Parva, Chapter 95; Droṇa Parva, Chapters 14, 21 and 23; Karṇa Parva, Chapter 6).

KŚATTRADEVĀ. A son of Dṛṣṭādeva. The teacher Droṇa killed him. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 123, Stanza 68).

KŚATRAJAYA. A son of Dṛṣṭādeva. Droṇa killed him. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 53).

KŚATRAVARMAN. A son of Dṛṣṭādeva. He fought with Jayadratha in the battle of Bhārata. Droṇa killed him. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 186).

KŚATRIYA. See under Cāturvarṇya.

KŚATTĀ. II. Vidura.

KŚATTĀ. II. See under the word Varṣa.

KŚEMĀ. A celestial maid. This celestial maid took part in the birth celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 123, Stanza 30).

KŚEMĀ. A King in Ancient India. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 65, that this King was the rebirth of the Asura Krodhavat. In the Bhārata-battle this King took the side of the Pāṇḍavas and was killed by Droṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 38).

KŚEMĀDARŚI. A King of Kuśāla. There is a story in which there was a question how the hermit Kālakavyakṣya saved this King from the trap laid by his favourites. The treasury-keeper spent the money of the King lavishly on himself. The subjects began to consider how to inform the King about this. Finally the hermit Kālakavyakṣya began to travel throughout the country with a crow kept in a cage. As if the crow was speaking, the hermit began to tell the past, present and future fortunes of the people. The crow became famous and people began to have faith in the crow. Once Kālakavyakṣya and the crow reached the palace and under the pretence that the crow was speaking, the hermit disclosed all the secret dealings of the treasury-keeper. The servants of the King stealthily pulled the crow to death that night. When the King knew this he made Kālakavyakṣya the minister and his country began to prosper. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 82). On another occasion the treasure of the King Kśemaṇḍi became empty. At this time King Janaka had come to war with this King. According to the sincere advice of Kālakavyakṣya the King married the daughter of King Janaka. From that day onwards his country became prosperous. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 106).

KŚEMĀDHANVA. A famous archer who fought on the side of the Kauravas. This archer led Duryodhana in the battlefield. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 27).

KŚEMĀDHOTRI. I. A Kṣatriya King of Ancient India. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 65 that this King was born from a portion of the Asura called Krodhavat. The King ruled over the country called Kuśa. In the battle of Bhārata he fought on the side of the Kauravas and was killed by Bhīmasena. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 44).

KŚEMĀDHOTRI. II. A King who took the side of the Kauravas. This King who was the brother of Bhṛntaka, fought with Śaiyaki in the Bhārata battle. (M.B. Śaiya Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 8).

KŚEMĀDHOTRI. III. A warrior. He fought with Bhārikṣaṭra and died in the fight. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 107, Stanza 6).

KŚEMĀGIRI. Another name of Bhadrakāli (a goddess). In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12, it is mentioned that Ārīṇa, Durgā, Vedagāthā, Ambikā, Bhadrakāli, Bhadrā, Kṣemā, and Nukalāshū are also synonyms of Bhadrakāli.

KŚEMAKA I. A Rākṣasa (giant). In Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 2, it is mentioned that this Rākṣasa had lived in Kālī and that the King Divōṣa killed this Rākṣasa and built a city there.

KŚEMAKA II. A serpent (Nāga) born to Kuśapaprajāpati of his wife Kadrū. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 11).

KŚEMAKA III. A King who was a luminary in the palace of Yuddhishṭīrā. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 24, that the Pāṇḍavas had sent invitation to this King for the battle of Bhārata.

KŚEMAMŪRTI. A son of Dhrūtarātra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 100).

KŚEMAKARA. A King who was the friend of Jayadratha. This King ruled over the country of Trigarta. Nakula killed this King. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 265 and 275).

KŚEMĀSARMA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas. Kśemāśarma stood and fought at the neck of the Garuḍavāyuḥa (the formation of the army... into the shape of an eagle) made by Karṇa. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 20, Stanza 61).

KSEMĀVĀHA. A warrior of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 66).

KSEMĀVRA DH. The minister of King Sālva. He was both minister and general of the army at the same time. Śāmba, the son of Śrī Kraṣṇa defeated Ksemāvraṭi. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 16).

KSETRA S. Sacred spots. In Malayalam it means Temples also.

1) General information. The temples of India are reflections of the outward form or body of man. As the soul lives in the body of man, God dwells in the temples. The stone, rock, marble, metals etc. are equal to the bones of the body of a man.

2) Two types of temples. Temples are of two types. One type is the Gṛāmadevatā temple, and the other is temples in which goddess Bhadraṅkāli is consecrated and worshipped for the protection of villages and cities. The second type is of special temples. These are temples specially meant for a particular god or goddess. Thus there are temples for Viṣṇu, Śiva, Gānapatī and so on.

3) Gṛāmadevatā temples. Worship of Bhadraṅkāli existed in India from very early times. When Mahānandodara and Harappa were excavated idols of Devī (goddess) more than 5000 years old, were obtained from there. During the prevalence of Buddhism in India the goddesses Yakṣi and Hīrīti were worshipped in India. Later when Hinduism was revived these goddesses took their places in it as the goddesses of Hindu Panthas and epics. The Kālī temples of Ujjainī and Cālcutta are famous. In the Cidambara temple also the main deity is Kālī. The legend is that Paramāvatī defeated Kālī in a dance. In Myssore Cānunudi (Kālī) is worshipped as chief goddess or family goddess. Kāṅkāli in Kāśēl, Minākṣī in Madura (South India), Mūkūrīkhā in North Karṇātaka and so on are the gentle and peaceful forms of Kālī.

4) Devas (gods). In many of the temples in South India, Mūraṅvar and Karuppan are the grāmadevatā (village gods). In some places Bhaṁravar also is worshipped as grāmadevatā. In certain other places Vīraṇ, Iruṇa, Kārēti, Nōṇdi and Panakar are worshipped. Sāṣṭā or Ayyappan has a prominent place among the village gods. Importance is attached to Sāṣṭā or Ayyappan mostly in Kerala and Tamil Naţē.

KṢE. RAPĀLA. Kaṭṭrapāla is consecrated on the South-East corner of the temple, for protecting the villages and cities. This is a large image with three eyes. There are figures which are Sāṣṭā, Rākṣa, Kāmpī, Śāṇkara (having the attributes goodness, ostentatiousness and sole). In some places figures having two or four or eight hands are seen. It is presumed that this deity is a portion of Śiva. It is stated in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 5, that Kaṭṭrapāla should be figures having trident in the hand.

KṢIRASĀGARA. Sea of Milk. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 102, that Brahmā drank too much of Amṛta and vomiting, the vomit the cow Surabhi came into being. The milk of Surabhi flowed and collected into a sea. This sea is called the milk-sea or Kṣirasāgara.

KṢIRAVATI. A holy bath. Those who bathe in this holy bath will obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Viṣṇeṣa. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84).

KṢIRIN. A tree in the family of the Utara Kurus. This tree has six tastes. Milk flows ceaselessly from this tree. It is said that from the fruit of this tree we could get cloth, ornaments etc. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 7).

KṢITIKAMPAKA. A captain of the army of Skanda. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 59).

KṢUDRAKA. There was a country known as Kusdrakā in Ancient India. Those who inhabited this country were called Kusdrakās. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 52 that the Kusdrakās had brought gifts to Bhārampura. In the battle of Bhārata Duryodhana protected Sakuni with the help of the Kusdrakas. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 16. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 19 that the Kusdrakas attacked Arjuna at the behest of Bhīṣma. Many Kusdrakas were killed when Parasurāma exterminated the Kṣatriyas. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 70).

KṢUPA I. A Prajāpati. There is a story about the birth of this Prajāpati in Mahābhārata. One day Brahmā wished to perform a sacrifice. But he could not get suitable priest as the performer of the sacrifice. So Brahmā decided to create a befitting person as Rīvīk (the priest who does the rituals of the sacrifice) and he got pregnant in his head. After a thousand years he sneezed and a Prajāpati came out of the head of Brahmā. That Prajāpati was Kuṇa. He made Kuṇa his Rūk (Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 122). Rudra Bhagavān made him Prajāpati (the Lord of all subjects).

KṢUPA II. A King who was the son of Prasandhi, and the grandson of Vaivavasata Manu. He was the father of Iñkāvē. In Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 8, it is mentioned that Kuṇa stayed in the palace of Yamā. After his death in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 166 it is stated that this King had received a sword directly from Vaivavasata Manu. Kuṇa was not in the habit of eating flesh. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 159, Stanza 67).

KṢURAKARṇI. An attendant of Sānta. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 25).

KUBERA.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Sīv as thus: Brahmana—Pulastya—Viṣṇu—Kubera.

2) Birth. Pulastya Prajāpati wedded Mānini alias Hāvibha, daughter of sage Trāṇuṇbh, and a son called Viṣṇavas was born to them, Viṣṇavas married Liśibha alias Daśavarnī, daughter of Bharadvāja. Rāvanā Kunibhakarna and Vībhishana were the sons of Viṣṇavas by another wife. (Refer to the genealogy of Rāvana).

Viṣṇavas was childless for long, and the above mentioned four sons were the fruits of the boon granted him by Brahmā, whom he pleased by austerities. (For details see under Viṣṇavas, Para 1).

3) Kubera’s attainment of eminence. Once during Kṛta yuga the Devas went to Varuṇa, and after performing a Yajña for Kubera they told him thus: “In future you will live in the ocean itself as deva of all rivers, and let the ocean and the rivers obey you. As in the case of the moon you too will experience waxing and waning.” From that day onwards Kubera became the lord of oceans, rivers, streams etc. and all of them together gave him immense wealth. Siva became a particular grow of Kubera. (Saliya Parva, Chapter 47).

4) Kubera in Lanka. Afterwards Kubera performed penance for ten thousand years in water with head submerged, to please Brahmā. Yet, Brahmā did not appear. Then he performed penance standing on one foot in the centre of Paśupati. Brahmā appeared and asked him the purpose of his penance. Kubera requested that he might be made a lokapāla (protector of the universe) and the custodian of wealth, and Brahmā responded by supplying Kubera the treasures Śaṅkha niḍhi and Padmanīḍhi and also the Puṣpaka Viṃśān as vehicle. He was also appointed one of the Asādhipāla-kas. (Indra, Agni, Yama, Nirūtā, Varuṇa, Vāyu, Kubera and Śiva are the eight protectors of the eight regions). Kubera's city is called Mahādeva.

Kubera felt really happy and told his father Viśravas about his new status and dignity. The father also blessed the son. Kubera requested his father to get a city built for him to live in, and his father asked him to settle down in Lanka built by Maya on top of the mountain Trikulā in the middle of the south sea. From that day onwards Kubera took his abode in Lanka. (It was originally built for Indra).

5) Old history of Lanka. Once upon a time when Brahmā was repeating the Vedas he felt hungry. He was annoyed at that untimely hour he should have felt hungry, and from his angry face emerged the Rākṣasa called Hei. From his hunger emerged the Yakṣa called Hei and destroyed Kubera. Seeing this, Kubera promised to feed Hei. Hei married Bīrā, daughter of Kāla, and a son Viṣṇukīrti was born to them, who wedded Sākaśaṇā, daughter of Sandhyā.

To them were born a child, whom they foresaw in the valley of mountain Manthara and went their own way. Śiva and Pārvati came that way just then, saw the foraken child and brought it. At once the child became sacred youth. Śiva named him Sūkṣma, and he married Devavastī, the daughter of a Gandharva called Manimay. To them were born three sons called Mālāyavan, Sumālī, and Māli. Thanks to the blessings of Śiva all of them became youths as soon as they were born. By means of penances they secured from Brahmā the boon to conquer the three worlds.

They then returned to their father. They did not relish the advice of their father to lead a righteous life. They went round the three worlds harassing people. Maya built for them the city called Lankā on the top of the Mountain Trikulā.

There is a story about the origin of Trīkūṭa. Once a controversy arose between Vāsūki and Viṣvabhagavān as to who was the greater of the two. To prove that he was greater than Viṣvab, Vāsūki enveloped with his body mountain Mahāmeru so that Viṣvab (wind) could not enter it, and Viṣvab tried to blow off the mountain with the result that a dust storm concealed the whole world from view. The Devas took refuge in Viṣvab, who paci-Wed Vāsūki, and he then unwound one coil round the mountain. Viṣvab took advantage of the opportunity and swept off one peak of the mountain to the South into the sea, and that peak is Trīkūṭa.

Mālāyavan, Sumālī and Māli settled down in Lankā, and they married Sundarī, Ketaṇatī and Vāsūdhā, the three dughters of Narmadalā, a Gandharva woman. Seven sons called Vajramuṣṭi, Viśūpa, Durmukha, Supagna Vajakosha, Mattra and Unmattra and a daughter called Nalī were born to Mālāyavan and Sundari. Ten sons called Prahasa, Akampa, Viṅkaṭ, Kālakṣuṭuka, Dhūrdrasaka, Danāja, Sūpaparī, Sumbhīra, Prakātra and Bhaṣakarna and four daughters called Vēkā, Pur-pikṣa, Kakaśa and Kumbhālisa were born to Sumālī and Ketaṇati. Four sons called Anāla, Anulī, Aha and Sampati (these four were the ministers of ViṇākJa) were born to Māli and Vāsūdhā. When the harassment of the Rākṣasas became unbearable the Devas sought protection from Śiva, and Indra detailed to him about the unrighteous actions of Mālāyvan, Sumālī and Māli. Śiva directed the Devas to Viṣvab, who set out, to fight against the Rākṣasas mothers cut at Gārutā, and Viṣvab killed him (Māli with his Sudarśana Cakra. The other Rākṣasas retreated for Lanka. As their presence in Lanka was dangerous to the Devas, Viṣvab directed the Sudarśana Cakra to go to Lanka every day and kill the Rākṣasas in groups. The Cakra began its work, and the remaining Rākṣasas escaped to Pāṭala. Lanka became thus deserted and Kubera took his abode there. The Yakṣas, born from the hunger of Brahmā required all the land and settled down in Lanka under the leadership of Kubera. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

6) Kubera left Lanka. The other sons of Viṣravas like Rāvana returned with boons from Brahmā for the conquest of the earth, and the first thing Rāvana did was to drive away his brother Kubera from Lanka. He also forced the forest of Vāraṇa and the city of Kubera, who cursed Rāvana thus: "This will never be your vehicle, and will become fate of his, who kills you.

Kubera, with the Yakṣas, Kinnaras etc. went north and settled on mount Gandhimādana. (Vana Parva, Chapter 275).

7) Kubera's sāha. The assembly hall of Kubera is 100 yards in length and 100 yojanas wide. High walls surround the city. In the centre of the city is a beautiful mansion studded with gems where Kubera sits surrounded by thousands of women. Māruta Deva carrying fragrance from Kalpavṛkṣa worships them. Gandharvas and Apsārā cannot enter Kubera with music. Mārakēśa, Rāmtha, Menakē, Urvāśi, Cītrā, Sūcintī, Ghrīṣā, Purkṣhatthula, Viśvab, Saṅkṣayā, Prāmulī, Vargā, Suraśīya, Samīc, Bhoja and Lātē are the eight among them. Mānibhadra (Mānibhadra), Dhanada, Āśvēta, Bhandra, Ghyakha, Katrekara, Gandhakūtā, Pradyota, Mahābala, Ka, Tumbaru, Pāścara, Gajara,
Vāṭāla, Varāhakara, Tānirnātha, Halakakā, Halodaka
Hāṃsacūda, Saṅkhivara, Hemantra, Bhāsīśa, Pūpānāna, Pingalaka, Sornitā, Prāvīka, Vaiṣkāpa, Panikēta, Cīravās and Saṅkukbaru are the chief members in the court of Kubera. Śiva, a good friend of Kubera, very often visits him. Gandharvas and sages like Viśvānti, Hāhā, Hūhū, Pārvata, Tumbaru and Sālīṣa live in Kubera's assembly. Nārāda told Dharm-putra that the Kuberaśāhā was thus always sweet and pleasant. (Sahā Parva, Chapter 10).

8) Fight between Kubera and Rāvana. Kubera got secret information that the Devas and the brahmās had decidied jointly to complain to Mahāviṃśa about their unbearable harassment by Rāvana. He sent a mesgenger to his brother Rāvana warning him to lead a more righteous life. Rāvana got so much enraged at the advice of his brother that he cut the messenger into pieces and served as food to the Rakṣasas.

Rāvana mobilised his army against Kubera and the Devas, and decided first to attack Kubera. At the head of a huge army led by heroes like Mahodara, Prabhata, Manica, Sukha, Surasaka, Vajradamastra, Dhūirmukṣa, Virūpākṣa, Yāpaka, Mahāpatrā, Maitra, Unmata, Vāka, Supaguna, Vajrāntaka, Makarākṣa, Kumbhakarna, Aukrāya and Aksakumāra, Rāvana marched to Alakāpuri where a fierce battle ensued between Rāvana’s and Kubera’s armies. Many Yaksas were killed by Rāvana’s army, and the Yaksā hero Maṇipcara killed a large number of Rakṣasas. As a last resort Rāvana thrashed Maṇipcara on the head with a club and this turned the hair on his head to one side. From that day Maṇipcara came to be known as Pārvatvamaunu (head turned to one side). In the fight that followed between Kubera and Rāvana the former fell down unconscious. But, then Rāvana brought two Vīmanas and carried Kubera to the palace. Rāvana plundered Kubera’s palace and carried off to Lanka a lot of costly gems and other wealth. (Uttara Ramāyana)

9) Kubera became a Chanleuel. King Marutta once performed a Mahāvāra yajña to which were invited Indra, Varuna, Kubera and Gaia. While the yajña was progressing Rāvana came that way with his army. Indra and the others, in great fear, ran away and escaped disguised in various forms, Kubera assuming the form of a chanleuel. After resuming his own form Kubera gave the Chanleuel the gift to change its colour. It was further blessed that to the onlookers it would seem that there was gold on its cheeks. (Uttara Ramāyana)

10) Kubera cursed Viṣṇu. Kubera had a yakṣa called Virūpākṣa as Manager, and he was in charge of Kubera’s treasures also. Virūpākṣa had employed a gigantic yakṣa to look after the treasures outside the capital. One day a brahmin called Pāsūpata came to search of treasure to Alakāpuri. He knew very well the peculiar art viz. he would go about with a lamp lighted with ‘the ghee of men’ (only substance extracted from human body) and the lamp would tumble down from his hands on earth exactly on spots where treasures lay hidden. Pāsūpata tried to unearth Kubera’s treasures by the above means, and Virūpākṣa who got scent of the brahmin’s activities got him killed. Since a brahmin Pāsūpata was killed the sin of brahmahatya averted the Yaksā community, and angered at this Kubera cursed Virūpākṣa into a man, and he was born on earth as the son of a brahmin. Virūpākṣa’s wife complained about this curse to Kubera, who told her that she would be born as a daughter of the maid-servant of the brahmin as whose son her husband was born. She said she would marry him. Kubera further told her that association with her would redeem Virūpākṣa from the curse and that both of them would return to him. Accordingly she lay as a human child at the gates of a brahmin maid-servant, who took it to her master. The child and the brahmin’s son grew up together in his father’s house, and in due course they were wedded to each other. They felt so happy that though at a reunion after a long separation. First the brahmin boy and after him his wife expired, and they returned to Alakāpuri. (Kathāsaṅgītā)

11) Kubera and emperor Pṛthu. While emperor Pṛthu was ruling the land in the best interests of his subjects, mountains, trees, Devas, Anantas, Pānḍavas, Rākṣasas etc. came to the earth and sang his praises, and as ordered by the emperor the earth turned itself into a cow and they milked her. It was Kubera who served as calf when the Rākṣasas began to milk the cow. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69, Verse 24).

The Agvas crowned Pṛthu as emperor, and, on that occasion imperial symbols were presented to him. The throne was presented by Kubera; the royal umbrella by Varuna; the crown by Indra and the sceptre by Yama. (Bhāgavata, 4th Sthandha Chapter 15, Verses 14 and 15).

12) Kubera cursed Tumbura. The Yaksā called Tumbura once displeased Kubera, who cursed him into a Rākṣasa. He was to be redeemed from the curse on his death at the hands of Śī Rāma. Tumbura, who was born as Virādha, the Rākṣasā in Danakāranya attacked Rāma and Laksāmaṇa during their stay in exile in the forest and was killed by them. He was cremated in the forest. He resumed his former form as Tumbura and returned to Kubera’s palace. (Vṛūmi Ramāyana, Araraya Kanda, Canto 4).

13) Kubera became Pāṇḍalikā. Kubera once looked with jealousy at Pārvati seated on the left thigh of Śiva, and therefore, he became blind in one eye. When Pārvati regained her equanimity she turned that eye of Kubera into yellow in colour so that he might always remember the incident. Henceforth Kubera came to be known as Ekāpitāga.

14) Kubera cursed Kubera. Kubera also was invited to the chaining of mantras held by the Devas at Kusāvati. Kubera was on his way to Kusāvati with Maṇimāna when the latter spat on the head of Agastya, who was performing penance on the banks of river Kālindī. Agastya cursed them thus:—“Oh Kubera, your attendant Maṇimāna has insulted me. Therefore, he himself and the army will be killed by a man. You will grieve over their death. But, you will be absolved from this curse at the sight of the man, who had killed Maṇimāna and his army.”

Bhumagena, who went to mount Gandhamādāna in search of the Saudghānikha flower could kill Maṇimāna and his soldiers because of this curse of Agastya. After killing Maṇimāna Bhumā saw Kubera in person, and the latter got absolved from the curse. (Vana Parva, Chapter 161).

15) Other information about Kubera. (i) He comforted the Pānḍavas once during their life in exile in the forest. (Vana Parva, Chapter 161, Verse 41).

(ii) During the war with Rāvana when Śī Rāma fainted on the field, it was the water, purified by mantras, which Kubera sent through the Yaksā, Guhyakā, which brought Rāma back to consciousness. (Vana Parva, Chapter 269, Verse 9).

(iii) Kubera once cursed the Yaksā called Sthūnaṅkāra. He went to live in forests Ambara the woman became a male by getting the penis of Sthūnaṅkāra. (See under Ambara and Sthūnaṅkāra).

(iv) Sukrākṣaṇa once gave Kubera a lot of wealth. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 23).

(v) A King called Mucukunda once fought with Kubera. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 4). See under Mucukunda.
KUBERATIRTHA. A holy place on the banks of the river Sarasvati. Once the Devas appeared to Kubera at this tirtha and presented him with vessels of water, friendship of Siva, Deva-wealth and insignia of the world. The Marudganas crowned him King. He got the son Nalakubara also there. The place, thus important in many ways came to be reputed as Kubera-tirtha in later years. (Sahya Parva, Chapter 97).

KUBHĀ. A river mentioned in the Rgveda. Kuhā, Suhā, Suvā, Vīśā, Visā, Aśvā, Parūṣī, Vipās, Paśā, Sarvasvī, and Yamanā are the important rivers referred to in the Rgveda.

KUBJĀ. An ugly woman about whom the following story is told in Chapter 126, of Uttarākhaṇḍa in Padma Purāṇa. Kubjā became a widow in her very childhood, and she spent eight years in observing auspicious ceremonies. As she took the eight years of the attained salvation. This was the period when Sunda and Upasunda were harassing the world, and to destroy them Kubjā incarnated as Tīlaṭamā and hooked them by her excellent beauty. They fought each other for her hand and got killed. Brahmā was pleased at this and granted Kubjā a place in Sūryaloka.

KUJAMRAKA. A holy place. A visit to this place is as good as offering a gift of a thousand caws. The visitor will also attain heaven. (Vana Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 40).

KUCELA. Sudarman, better known as Kucela was a brahmin classmate of Śrī Kṛṣṇa at the Ārāma of sage Śāndipu. One day Śāndipu’s wife deputed Kucela and Kṛṣṇa to collect fire-wood from the forest, and they had to stay the whole night there as they could not find out the way back to the ārāma due to heavy rain, thunder etc. After their education was over these two thick friends left the Ārāma and went their different ways in life. Śrī Kṛṣṇa became the lord of Ēraṇakā, and Kucela a house-holder with many children, and starvation gripped the family. One day, at the instance of his wife, Kucela started for Ēraṇakā to visit Kṛṣṇa with a packet of rice flakes as a present to him. Kṛṣṇa received his old classmate most cordially, and ate one handful of rice flakes from the packet brought by Kucela. Kukīṃti prevented him from a second helping of the flakes. After spending a month with his good old friend, Kucela started homewards. Only on his way back did he think that Kṛṣṇa had not given him any monetary help. But, by the time he reached home his old dilapidated house had converted itself into a beautiful mansion, and his wife and children were in great happiness. Śrī Kṛṣṇa’s blessings thus converted poor Kucela into a very rich person (Bīgavān, 10th Sandhā).

KUHA. A prince of the Sauvāra kingdom. He was a follower of Jayadratha. (Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Verse 11).

KUHARA. A King of Kahūga. He was born from an aspect of the Ārāma called Krodhavāsya. (Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 65).

KUJA. Kuja is an individual belonging to the Devagana. His weapon is called Saktī. He wears the akṣojāla. (Rudrākṣa garland).

KUMBHĀ. A very powerful and vast Rākṣasa who possessed an iron rod named Sunda. He had earned the boon that the rod would lose its power only on contact with women. He lived underground in a thick forest on the banks of the river Nandīvīra. Once he abducted Māḍvāvati, the beautiful daughter of Vidurātha, King of Vaiśā. At last Vatsapi, the son of Bhārata made Māḍvāvati touch the iron rod of the Ārāma, which became powerless because of the touch of a woman, and then he (Vatsapi) killed the Ārāma. Vatsapi then married Māḍvāvati. (Markandeya Purāṇa, Chapter 116).

KUKARDAMA. A wicked monarch of Pīḍārakadeśa. He had to be born in Pṛḍujōṇi (womb of a ghostess) due to his many sins, and once he came to the Ārāma of Bhārata, and they were exposed him as his former disciple and absolved him from his ghosthood. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttarā Khaṇḍa, Chapter 139).

KUKKURA I. A King of the Lunar dynasty, the founder of the Kukkura dynasty.
KUKURA II. A noble sage who distinguished himself in Dharmanapura’s court. (Satisfied Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 19).

KUKUKTA. A female attendant of Skanda. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 13).

KUKUDMIN. A son, Ananta, was born to King Saryatha, the son of Vaiyavatana Maha. Revata, the famous Raipura, who ruled from his city at Kushan, heard the news of Ananta. Ananta had hundreds of sons, the eldest being Kukudmin, and also a daughter, Revati. (Devi Bhagavata, 7th Skandha).

KUKURA I. (KUKURA). A king of the Vrata dynasty. From Vrata the descendents are in the following order:—Yudhajata—Shri—Satyaka—Sattakam (Yuddhakam).—Jayas—Kuni.—Anasita—Prithi.—Kukura. As Kukura was a very reputed king his successors were also called Kukuras. The Katriyas of this dynasty were subject to the orders of Sri Krsna. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 26). Members of the Kukura and Mathuka dynasties became drunkards, and at last quarrelled with one another and died. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 5).

KUKURA II. The son of Ananta was born in the Kaishya dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 10).

KUKUKA (M). An urban region in ancient India. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 60).

KUKSI I. To Savkambubha Manu the son of Brahman were born two sons called Priyavarta and Uttanapada by his wife Sairijna and Kardama Prasupati married the daughter of Prasullinga. And, to them, they were born three sons called Sri, Kuksi and Virati. (Agni Purana, Chapter 18).

KUKSI II. A well known Asura king. An aspect of this Asura was later reborn as King Parvatiya. (Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 56).

KULAGAL. (KULAPARVATA). Kulaparvatas are seven in number, viz., Mahendra, Malayaka, Salya, Shukakshara, Vindya, Parvatiya. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 11).

KULADHARMA. The moral and ethical codes of conduct, especially with reference to family life. Arjuna told the following about Kuladharmas to Krisha at Kuruksetra.

In the decline of a family, its time-honoured usages perish, with the perishing of such rites impurity overtakes the entire family. With the growth of impurity even the noble women become unchaste, and if women become corrupt, mixture of castes ensues.

Hell is verily the lot of the family and family-destroyed through caste mixture; for, their ancestors fall off by the karmic drops of rice and libations. The ever-lasting caste virtues and the family merits get ruined because of the change in the caste system. We have heard that hell is verily the long-lasting abode of the men whose family religious practices have been broken. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 25 and the Gita).

KULAMPUNA. A river which ought to be daily remembered. (Anushasana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 20).

KULAMPUNA. A holy place. A bath here brings about sanctification of the entire family. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 104).

KUMARAVANA (M). The place where King Suydvanna got changed into a woman. When once Sanaaka and other sages went to Kumaraavana to see Siva he was seated there with Parvati on his lap. Seeing the sages Parvati got angry and cursed that men who entered the forest in future would be turned into women. King Suydvanna went to hunt in the forest ignotant of this curse, and as soon as he set foot in the forest he was turned into a woman. Pururavas was the son born to this woman by Buda. (Devi Bhagavata, 1st Skanda).

KUMARAVARSHA. A place near mount Raivatara. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 26).

KUMARI I. A princess of the Kekaya kingdom. She was the mother of Pratisravas, and wife of Bhimasena, a king of the Puri dynasty. (Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 43).

KUMARI II. In verse 31, Chapter 23 of the Vana Parva, it is stated that certain maidens were born from the body of Skanda. They were called Kumari and they used to eat unborn children in the womb of their mothers.

KUMARI III. Wife of the serpent called Dhanaftaya. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 17).

KUMARI IV. A river in ancient India. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 36).
KUMĀRĪ V. A river in the Śākā island. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 32).

KUMĀRIPĪJĀ. It is a special item in Navarātīpījā. According to the definition ‘Kumārīkā tu sā prakāśa dīvāṃgā yā bhavedhā’, Kumārī is a two-year-old female child. To worship such a child is Kumāripījā, and it should be conducted accompanied by sumptuous feasts and presentation of clothing etc. There are no hard and fast rules as to how many Kumārīs should be worshipped and as to the manner and method of the worship. The same Kumārī may be worshipped during all the days of the Pāja, or every day one more girl may be worshipped like this—one girl on the first day, two on the second day and so on. Or it may be in the order 4, 6, 8 etc or 4, 8, 12, 16 etc. Even if the daily number be nine it is in order. There is no rule that Kumārīs alone should be worshipped; any one of the navakanyākās would do. A girl two years old is called Kumārī, three years old Trimūrī; four years old Kalyāṇī; five years old Rohini; six years old Kāli; seven years old Candra; eight years old Sambhavi; nine years old Durgā and ten years old Subhadra. These girls are called Navakanyākās. But, a child less than these should not be worshipped because it will not be fully sensitive to taste, smell etc. Also, age alone does not render Kumārīs suitable for worship. They should be absolutely free from ulcers, leprosy, ugliness, squint-eyes, dwarfishness, lameness, bad odour, stigma of low birth etc. For the achievement of special objects a Brahmin child should be worshipped; for victory, a Kṣatriya child and for profit, a Vaśya or a Dwārī, etc. would be worshipped. The Brahmins may worship brahmin children; the Kṣatriya, Brahmin and Kshatriya children; the Vaśya, Brahmin, Kṣatriya and Vaśya children; and the Śūdra, Brahmin, Kṣatriya, Vaśya and Śūdra children. (Devī Bhāgavata, 3rd Skanda).

KUMBHA I. One of the three sons of Prahlāda, the other two being Vīragana and Nikumbha. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 19).

KUMBHA II. Son of Kumbhakarna, whose wife Vajravālā bore him two sons called Kumbhva and Nikumbha. Both of them were very powerful, and Kumbha, in the Rāma-Kāvya war defeated the army of monkeys on various occasions. Many of the ministers of Sugrīva tried to defeat Kumbha. Angada of Bāl also could not stand up to him. Then Sugrīva fought against Kumbha and flung him into the sea when the water in it rose up to the level of mount Vindhyā. Kumbha came ashore from the sea roaring but was fisted to death by Sugrīva. (Vālmīki Rāmāyana, Yuddha Kānda, Canto 76).

KUMBHAKA I. A warrior of Skanda. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 73).

KUMBHAKA II. (Nikumbhaka). A very reputed sage. If he visited any place at dusk he left it only after a thousand years. He visited Kāllī once when King Divodāsa was ruling the state after having killed the Rākṣasa called Keśmaka, who had lived like a king there. Kumbhakā lived in a forest in Kāllī with his disciples. Prosperity regained supreme position under one of the Yojanas from where the sage lived. Neither wild beasts nor famine infested the area. Once a fierce famine broke out in Kāllī, and the failure of rain caused great havoc. Finding it impossible to feed the cows their keepers went with their live-stock every morning to Kumbhaka's place where summer had not yet even peeped in, and after feeding their cows there, they returned home in the evening. But, one evening they led back with them the cows used by the sage for his Pāja. When the sun set, as usual the sage sat before the sacred fire for Pāja. But, the cow had not come. With his divine vision he found out the reason for the absence of the cow. He cursed that region where the keepers of the cows lived and burnt it down. Afterwards the king of Kāllī became a desert place, whereupon king Divodāsa went to the banks of the Gomati and founded a new kingdom there. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

2) Birth. Pulasiya, one of the Prajāpatīs married Hāvīrbhū (Māniṇī) and a son called Viśravas was born to them.

Rāvana and Kumbhakarna were born to Viśravas of Pupokattī and Viśrīṣṇu was born to him of Rākṣa, and Kāraṇa and Sūrpanakha were born to him of Mahāviśva. The above descent is based on Būdha 6 in Chapter 275 of the Vana Parva. But, according to Ugra Rāmāyanā, Rāvana, Viśrīṣṇu and Kumbhakarna were born to Viśravas of his wife named Kaikaśi. According to the Āgni Purāṇa, Pupokattī and Kaikaśi were one and the same.

3) Former births of Kumbhakarna. Rāvana and Kumbhakarna were originally the two Devas called Jaya and Vijaya. Viṣṇu appointed them to destroy the Rākṣasas. Once they stopped sages like Sāṅkha and others at the gates, and the latter cursed Jaya and Vijaya into Rākṣasas. When they complained about the curse to Viṣṇu he promised to welcome them back to Vaikuṇṭha after they had lived three births as Rākṣasas. Accordingly Jaya was born as Hiranyakaśipu and Vijaya as Hiranyakaśipu, both of them Asuras. Mahāviśva incarnated himself as a Boar and killed Hiranyakaśipu and then Narasimha he killed Hiranyakaśipu. Hiranyakasipu and Hirṇyakaśipu were reborn as Rāvana and Kumbhakarna respectively. Mahāviśva, during his incarnation as Śrī Rāma killed both Rāvana and Kumbhakarna. Rāvana was reborn as Śūnapa and Kumbhakarna as Dantavakra. Both of them were killed by Mahāviśva during his incarnation as Śrī Kṛṣṇa. And the Deva called Vijaya, on account of the curse of Sāṅkha and other sages, passed through three lives as Hirṇyakaśipu, Kumbhakarna and Dantavakra and finally reached Vaikuṇṭha. (Bhāgavata, 7th Skanda).

4) Kumbhakarna ascended heaven. Kumbhakarna spent his childhood with his brothers at the Śrīraama of his father on mount Gandhamādana. Kubera was at the zenith of his glory at that time, having been crowned king of the Yaksas, and also having got the Puspaka Vimāna. The reputation of Kubera kindled jealousy in Kumbhakarna and his brothers. They too performed penance in the forest on one foot for a thousand years. But, Brahmā did not appear. They continued the penance without eating any food. Kubera and his Asuras were serving their brothers. Even after the second thousand years Brahmā did not appear. Then Rāvana cut off his ten heads and made offerings of them to Brahmā. Then Brahmā appeared. Brahmā restored his heads to Rāvana.
and he was granted the boon that he would not be killed by anybody but a man. The Devas shuddered at the thought of Ravana, and feared about the future in case Kumbhakarna too got such a boon. At their request Sarasvati danced on his tongue at the time of Kumbhakarna's request for a boon. Kumbhakarna wanted NIRDEVATVAM (Absence of all Devas). But by a slip of the tongue (caused by Sarasvati) what he asked for was nirādevatvam (sleep). Brahmagotra agreed about the future in case Kumbhakarna would sleep for six months of the year continuously. Vishishta got the boon that he should remember righteousness in danger and use the Brahmāstra without any training in its use. The brothers returned home after securing the boons, and, after driving off Kubera, the lord of Lankā, Rāvana and his brothers took their abode there. (Vana Parva, Chapter 273 and Uttarā Kṛṣṇāyana).

5) Death of Kumbhakarna. Kumbhakarna played a very important part in the Rāma-Rāvana war. Prominent warriors on the side of Rāma, like Sugrīva, his minister and Lakṣmana fought with him. But, none of them could kill him. At last, Rāma’s arrows killed him. (Valmiki Rāmāyana, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Chapter 57). Kumbhakarna is not to be viewed merely and purely as an evil character. His advice to Rāvana on various occasions shows noble traits of his character. When Śri Rāma with his army of monkeys appeared on the other side of the ocean Rāvana held a conference of his brothers, ministers and others at which Kumbhakarna spoke as follows. You abducted Sītā without consulting us, and we would not have to suffer the consequences of that action of yours. But, it is not proper that the younger brother should keep away when danger faces the elder one, and on that principle here I am ready to fight Rāma. (Valmiki Rāmāyana, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Chapter 12).

KUMHAKAR RĀVAKAMA. A holy place where a man who visits this place will enjoy the respect of others. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 137).

KUMUDA VIII. There are four mountains supporting Mahāmeru on its four sides, and Kumuda is one of those four mountains, Mandara, Marumandra and Supārśiva being the other three. According to the 8th Sandhā of the Devī Bhāgavata there are other twenty mountains on the four sides of Mahāmeru, viz., Kuranga, Kuraga, Kumubhā, Viśakātā, Trikūta, Śaśā, Patanga, Rucaka, Nila, Nisadha, Śrivasta, Kapila, Sankha, Vaidurya, Āruḍhi, Hamsa, Šrabha, Nga, Kālājāra and Nārada.

KUMUDĀ. One of those Vedic scholars, who belonged to the line of Vīśā's disciples. His forte was the Ātharvaveda. Jaimini was a reputed disciple of Vīśā. His son, Sumantu, taught his disciple Kabandha the Ātharvaveda. Kabandha divided it into two between Devadāra and Pathya. Medhi, Brahmābali, Saṅkāyani and Piṭpalāda were the disciples of Devadāra, and Jābali, Kumudā and Saṅkara were the disciples of Pathya. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 6).

KUMUDĀKSA. A prominent serpent. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 15).

KUMUDAMALI (KUMUDAMALI). One of the four attendants given by Brahmā to Skanda, the other three being Nandīśena, Ghanākṣara and Lohitākṣa. All the four were very powerful, as swift and speedy as KUMUDODARA. A particular region in the Saka island. (Bhima Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 25).

KUMUDVATI I. Wife of King Vimarsana of Kirata-Dela. Kumudvati requested him one day, to put a stop to his cruelties against the people. His reply was as follows:—"Oh dear wife, don't feel sorry. In my past life I was a dog and, starved almost to death. I went to the gates of the Siva temple at Pampapura. It was Caturdashi day, and thousands of people had gathered there, and I stood there looking at the Sivalinga. Then someone cried out, 'Beat the dog to death', and though, in mortal terror, I ran thrice about the temple, people beat me to death. Since, although only by accident, I had run thrice around the temple, I was born as a King in the present life. I cherish the greatest devotion for Lord Siva; but, as inherent tendencies do not die out so easily I possess certain characteristics of the dog and that is why I commit the present cruelties.'

On hearing her husband's past history Kumudvati wanted to know about her past also, and Vimarsana said thus:—'In the past life you were a she-dove. Once you sat on the top of a Parvati temple with a piece of flesh in your beak. Then another dove tried to snatch it from you, and with it you flew thrice round the temple. But, the other dove killed you and flew away with the piece of flesh. Since you flew around the Parvati temple thrice you are now born as a dove.'

Vimarsana told her this also that in the next birth she would be born as the daughter of King Srijaya, as the daughter of the King of Kahtiga in her third rebirth, as the daughter of the King of Magadh in her fourth birth, as the daughter of King Daśārā in her fifth birth, as the daughter of Yayati in her sixth birth, as the daughter named Vasantih of the King of Vidarbha in her seventh birth, and that ultimately she would attain salvation. Vimarsana in his next birth would likewise be born as the Sindhu King, as the King of Sarabha in his third birth, as the King of Gandhara in his fourth birth, as King of Avanti in his fifth birth, as King Anarta in his sixth birth, as King of the Pandyas in his seventh birth, and that ultimately he too would attain salvation. Thus Vimarsana taught his wife that both of them would ultimately attain salvation as they had gone round the temple. (Siva Parva, Caturdashi-Chsana).

KUMUDVATI II. Wife of Kusá, son of Sri Rama. Kusá lost the ornaments on his hands in water once while he was bathing in the river. Angry at the loss, Kusá was about to shoot his arrows at the Sarayu when the naga called Kumuda not only returned to him all his lost ornaments but also gave Kumudvatii as wife to him. (Ananda Rāmagyan).

KUSIGARGA. A reputed sage. By severe austerities he increased his spiritual powers, created a girl by his self-willed will, and afterwards entered into Samādhi. The girl, who did not relish the idea of marriage, began penance in solitude, and she grew old. In the Mahābhārata she is known as Vṛddhakanyā (Old Virgin). In the evening of her life she longed to give up her material body and attain salvation. At this juncture Nāraka told her that salvation was not for unmarried women. She, therefore, gave half the power of her penis to a young man called Śrīgāvān and lived as his wife for one single night. She thus attained salvation. (Sālā Parva, Chapter 52).

KUNDINDA. A noble brāhmaṇa. He presented a divine couch to Vṛddhivāsas at his Rājadhyāya Yajña. (Sāhābī Parva, Chapter 51, Southern text).

KUNDALA. A reputed sage. Once he enjoyed the company of Pavana, the celestial woman. (See under Pavanā).

KUNDJALA I. A warrior of Skanda. (Sālā Parva, Chapter 45).

KUNDJALA II. A wise parrot which lived on the banks of the river Narmadā. The Padma Purāṇa (Chapter 85, Bhāishajyabandha) has the following to say about the parrot.

Kundjala, the wise parrot, had a wife and four sons called Ujjvala, Samāvijaya, Vījaya and Kapiśjaya. These brothers used to feed themselves on sweet fruits etc. on the plains, mountains and other places. They also used to carry tasty fruits in their parents. The four brothers thus led a happy life in every way. (See under Sūrya).

KUNDJALA I. A great monkey. Arjuna mother of Harīman was the daughter of Kundjala. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Kīrtiśudhī Kūrti, Canto 66, Verse 9).

KUNDJALA II. A well-known serpent. (Aḍī Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 15).

KUNDJALA III. A prince of the Sāvrutra country. He was a lover of Jayadratha, and was killed by Arjuna. (Yavana Parva, Chapter 27).

KUNTAKA (KUNTALA). A Sanskrit poet who flourished in the eleventh century A.D. He was a contemporary of Allānakavati, and a critic who maintained that the ‘life’ of real poetry was Vārakrītī (expressing ideas in an artistically round-about way instead of in a blunt and plain manner).

KUNṬALA. The King of the country Kunṭala. Kunṭala was a Kingdom in ancient South India. The King of the country was called Kunṭala and the people were known as Kunṭalas. (Sāhābī Parva, and Bhīṣma Parva).

KUNDI (PRITHA). Wife of King Pāṇḍu and the mother of the Pāndavas. Kunḍī is a noble heroine in the Mahābhārata.

Rath. Kunḍī was the sister of Śrī Krṣṇa’s father Vasudeva. Her real name was Pritha. Vasudeva and Pritha were the children of King Śrīvatsa of the Yādava dynasty. King Kunḍabhoja was the son of Śrīvatsa’s sister. He had no issues. Śrīvatsa had promised to give the daughter first born to hims the adopted daughter of Kunḍabhoja, and accordingly his first-born daughter Pritha was given to Kunḍabhoja, and she was brought up in his palace. From that day onwards Pritha came to be known as Kunḍī. (Aḍī Parva, Chapter 111).

Kunḍī, Mādrī and Gāndhārī were born from aspects respectively of the three celestial women Śidehi, Krīti and Māti. (Aḍī Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 160).

KUNT and the mantra. To treat brahmans who came to the court of Kunṭibhoja with worshipful offerings etc. was the duty of Kunṭī. Once sage Durvāsas visited Kunṭibhoja, and as he knew that the sage was easily annoyed Kunṭī was specially deputed for his service, and she served him to the utmost. One day, to test Kunṭī, he asked her to be ready with his food by the time he took his bath, and he took practically no time to return after bath and go for food. It was clear that Kunṭī had managed to cook his food which she placed before him in a plate. The food was too hot and steaming, and the sage meanly looked at the back of Kunṭī. Realising the meaning of the look, Kunṭī turned her back to the sage for him to place the plate of food thereon. The sage placed it accordingly on her back and began eating. Though her back was really burning she showed no sign of it. Feasted at her behaviour the sage taught her a mantra and blessed her to the following effect.

“Repealing this mantra you invoke whichever Deva you like and thank his favour you will get children.” (Kathā-sārīratanā, Lāvina-kalakāthaka, Tāranga 2 and Bhīṣma (Malayalam) Chapter 111).

Kunti tested the mantra. After the departure of Durvāsas from the palace, Kunṭī developed an irresistible desire to test the efficacy of the mantra, and one day she invoked Sun-god with the mantra. Thereupon Sūrya approached her in the guise of a brahmān youth. Kunṭī got alarmed. Owing to discomfiture to become an unmarried mother Kunṭī could not make up her mind to welcome the brahmān youth. But Kunti assured Kunṭī that his coming could not be in vain, and Kunṭī had to yield. She requested Sūrya for a son adorned with helmet, ear-rings etc. (Vana Parva Chapter 207 Verse 17).

Sūrya assured Kunṭī that even though a child was born to her from him, that will not affect her virginity and departed. Kunṭī delivered a son in due course of time in secret. She locked up the child in a box and routed it in the Yamunā. An old charioteer called Adhiratha picked up the child from the river and brought it up as though it were her own son. That boy grew up to become the famous Karna. (Aḍī Parva, Chapter 112).

Kuntī’s wedding. In due course Kunṭibhoja celebrated Kuntī’s Svayamvara and chose King Pāṇḍu of the lunar dynasty as her husband, and Pāṇḍu took her to Hastinapura in all pomp and glory. (Aḍī Parva, Chapter 112).

Pāṇḍu’s wedding life. Pāṇḍu married another wife also called Mādrī, and all the three of them led a very happy life. During one of those days Pāṇḍu went on a hunting in the forest and arrowed to death sage Kindana, who was making love with his wife in the forest, both of them having assumed the forms of deer. The sage cursed Pāṇḍu with death the moment he touched his wives, and grief-stricken at the curse he told his wives about it and decided to take to Sannyāsa. But, the wives told him that they would commit suicide in case he took to Sannyāsa. Ultimately Pāṇḍu went to Sārivatśa with his wives, and there he began the performance of penances. After some time Pāṇḍu asked his wives to become mothers by some noble persons. But, Kunṭī and Mādrī did not agree to it. Then Kunṭī told Pāṇḍu about the boon she had got from Durvasas, and with his permission she bore three sons called Dharmaputra, Bhima and Arjuna respectively from the three Devas, Dharmar, Vayu and Indra. As it had been ordained that the fourth and fifth children would bring sorrows and pain to the parents Kunti satisfied herself with three children. (Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Verses 77, 78).

But, as Pându desired that Madri also should have children by Kunti’s mantra she used the remaining mantra and two sons, Nakula and Sahadeva from the Ásañádevas were born to her.

6) Kunti disowned. During a winter when the forest was fragrant with flowers, Pându forgot all about the Sage’s curse and indulged in sexual joys, with Madri, and immediately he expired. Kunti and Madri competed with each other to end their life in the funeral pyre of their husband. But, as the sage and other relations insisted that one of them should live to bring up the children, Madri alone ended her life, and Kunti returned to Hastinápurá with the five children. (Adi Parva, Chapter 125).

7) Kunti at Hastinápurá. At Hastinápurá differences cropped up between the Pândavas and the Kauravas. Kunti and the five Pândavas removed themselves to the ‘Lakshapalá’ built at Varanáspura. When the palace was gutted by fire Kunti and her sons escaped through a secret tunnel to the forest, and Bhima carried the worn out Kunti on his shoulders. In the forest the Rákasa woman Hidimbi, requested Kunti to permit Bhima to become her husband, and Kunti advised Bhima to beget a child by Hidimbi, and thus was born Ghatotkaca. At the city named Ekakacá, Vyása consorted Kunti. There the brahmans complained to Kunti about the deprivations of Bákásura. Kunti got Baka killed by Bhima and asked the brahmans to keep the matter secret. On the advice of a brahmin who came there accidentally Kunti and others visited the Páñchála kingdom, and there Arjuna, having defeated all the Kings present at Páñchála’s Swayamvara wedded her. The Pándavas who returned with Páñchála at dusk time were asked by Kunti to enjoy that day’s bhiká (Alms received) together among themselves. Accordingly Páñchála became the wife of all the five Pándavas. Vidura, at the court of the Páñchála King saluted Kunti and presented to her various varieties of gems. Kunti and Vidura talked up about the painful incidents of the past, and Vidura escorted the Pándavas back to Hastinápurá.

Arjuna led a solitary life in the forest for one year, and then returned to Hastinápurá with Subhadrá whom he had married meanwhile. Kunti received Subhadrá heartily, in the game of dice with Duryodhana, Dharmaputra was not included, and the Pándavas again started for their life in the forest. During this period Kunti lived in Vidura’s house. Meanwhile Sri Krsna one day visited Kunti and she told Krsna about the fate of her sons with tears in her eyes. Duryodhana refused to give half of the kingdom to the Pándavas, who returned after twelve years’ life in exile in the forest and one year’s life incorrigible. Sri Krsna persuaded the Pándavas to war with the Kauravas, and both the parties began preparations for war. (Adi Parva, from Chapter 135 to Sabha and Vana Parvas and Udyoga Parva, upto Chapter 137).

8) Kunti before Karna. War clouds grew thick and fast, and Kunti at Vidura’s house got restless. Her heart trembled at the disasters of war as described by Vidura. She went alone to the banks of the Ganges where just then Karna was engaged in a japa with his hands raised and face turned to the east. Kunti waited for some time after which they began to talk. With tears in her eyes Kunti told Karna that he was her son, and implored him to return to the Pandava side to which Karna replied as follows: “Oh noble lady, that is quite impossible. I have vowed to kill Arjuna. I will not kill the other four Pándavas. You shall always have five sons alive. If Arjuna were to be no more I would be there for you in stead.” Kunti shuddered at those terrible words of Karna, and thus did both of them part with each other. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 145 and 146).

9) Last days of Kunti. The great war ended. Thousands of warriors on the Kaurava side like the mighty Karna were no more. On the Pándava side also many were killed. Though the Pándavas won the war their hearts no more enjoyed peace or happiness. Kunti suffered as though caught in a wild fire. She asked the Pándavas to perform her mortal prayers. When she let out the secret that Karna was her first-born child Dharmaputra burst into tears. Kunti consold Subhadrá and Uttará who were lamenting over the death of Abhimanyu. She requested Sri Krsna to cremate the dead son of Uttará.

Then Kunti went to Gándhari, who stood there bathed in tears. Grief-stricken Gándhari started for the forest. Holding Gándhari’s hand in hers Kunti led the way. The Pándavas prevented their mother from going, but she did not yield. She advised Dharmaputra to have a special eye on Sahadeva, not to forget Karna’s name and not to show any displeasure towards Bhima and Páñchála. But, the Pándavas wanted to follow their beloved mother into the forest. Páñchála and Subhadrá stationed themselves behind Kunti, who shed copious tears at the sight. Dhrstastra and Gándhari, who also felt deeply pained at the sight tried their best to dissuade Kunti from following them to the forest. But, Kunti consold her sons and daughters-in-law by means of sympathetic words and followed Dhrstastra and Gándhari to the banks of the Ganges, where all of them lived together. The Pándavas felt acutely the absence of their mother at home. They went to the forest and paid their respects to Kunti on the banks of the Ganges. Kunti embraced Sahadeva with tears in her eyes. Though Yudhiṣṭhira and Sahadeva wanted to say with Kunti in her service she did not allow that. Kunti, Dhrstastra and Gándhari performed penance in the forest near the Ganges, taking food only once in a month. The three of them died there in a wild fire. (Áśrama-váśika Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 41). Their relations immersed their bones in the Ganges and performed the necessary obsequies. (Sri, Śanti, Áśrama-váśika and Ávamudhika Parvans).

10) Kunti in Devaloka. Kunti, Madri and Pându went to Devaloka. (Svárágára Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 15).

KUNTI II. A particular region in ancient India. The warriors there were known as Kuntis. (Sabha Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 11).
KUNTI III. An urban area in ancient India. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 27).

KURU IV. A King born in the Yayati dynasty.

KUNTI BIJÖHA
1) General. A King of the Yadu dynasty; son of the sister of Sūrašena, who was the father of Vana and grandfather of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (For genealogy see under Śrī Kṛṣṇa.) Kunti Bijōha was also the foster father of Kunti, the daughter of Sūrašena. (See Para 1, under Kunti.)
2) Other information. (i) Sahadeva, during his triumphal march over the southern kingdoms subjugated Kunti Bijōha. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 16).

(i) He participated in the Kṛṣṇa Yoga Yajña of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Dharmarāja Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 12).

(ii) The son of Kunti Bijōha also became famous under the same name, and Purūj was the son of this Kunti Bijōha. Both of them were tenants of the Pāṇḍavas. (Kurum Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 22).

(iv) On the first day of the Kurumkētra war Kunti Bijōha and his son fought with Vinda and Anuvinda. (Bhārama Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 72)

(v) A woman who occupied the mehitā (eye-position) of the Kuru dynasty set up by Dhrisūdrayāna. (Bhārama Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 47).

(vi) Kunti Bijōha and Sūtānuka occupied the Pāḍāśṭhāna (foot position) of the Makaravāya on the Pāḍāśṭhāna side. (Bhārama Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 11).

(iva) He possessed a noble and high-bred horse. (Driona Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 46).

(vii) In the great war, he fought with Alambusa. (Driona Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 183).

(ix) Ten of his children were killed by Aśvatthāmā. (Driona Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 18).

KUPATA. An Aura son of Kasyapa by Dānu. (Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 26).

KURASGA. One of the mountains which encircle Mahāmeru. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

KURANSAGESTHA. A holy place. He who bathed here and observes fast for three nights will attain salvation. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25).

KURAKSU. (The Malayalam word for monkey). Kasyapa, the grandson of Bṛham and son of Marici, married eight daughters of Dakṣaśṛpajapati and one of them Krodhavānya delivered ten daughters. Monkeys and lions were born from Hāri, one of those ten daughters. Thus they are brothers, and both are called 'hāri'. (Vālmīki Rāmāyana, Aranyaka Kāṇḍa, Janama 14, Verse 24).

KURAPAVATA. One of the mountains which encircle Mahāmeru. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

KURGMUKHA. One of the sons of Vīśvavāistra. They were Brahmanvādins, (expounders of Brahman). (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 53).

KORMA I. A prominent serpent, son of Kadrā. (Adi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 41).

KORMA II. A tortoise. The second incarnation of Mahāmeru. (See under Avatāras).

KURMAPURĀNA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. (See under Purāṇas).

KURU I. A King called Kuru was born in Dhrūva's dynasty.

Genealogy. Descended from Viśvata thus: Brahman - Svyāmbhuva Manu - Uttānapāda - Dhrūva - Śiṣṭa - Ripu - Gāgadeva (Gāgadeva Manu) - Kuru. King Kuru was the grandfather of the reputed Vena and the great grandfather of emperor Prthu. Aṅga was the father of Vena. Not much is said about this Kuru in the Purāṇas. Kuru had ten brothers called Puru, Īru, Sataduryāna, Tapasvī, Sattapakṣa, Sūru, Aṅgikṛṣṇa, Aṅgikṛṣṇa, Sūru, and Īru. Kuru had by his wife Śrīgīt seven sons called Aṅga. Sūraśena Vaiśvā, Dṛkāṇa, Gaya, and Śibi, and to Aṅga was born by his wife Śrutī the son, who became reputed as Vena. Prthu was Vena's son. Prthu had five sons called Anurādhā, Vādhī, Sūtra, Māgadhā, Sālā. To Anurādhā was born by his wife Śrīkāṇḍi a son called Hṛvārthā, to whom were born by his wife Dhruvā six sons called Prāchabhitavī, Sākra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vṛja and Ajīna. The above is the only information available about this Kuru dynasty in the Purāṇas. (Viśu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 13).

KURU II. Two sons, i.e., Uttānapāda and Priyavrata were born to Svyāmbhuva Manu of his wife Satarāpa. One King Kuru born in the dynasty of Uttānapāda has been referred to above, i.e., Kuru I. Another King Kuru is noticed in Priyavrata's dynasty. To Priyavrata were born of his wife Priyavrata fourteen sons called Agnikṛṣṇa, Dīmaṇḍava, Yajñāvāla, Mahāvira, Dhṛiṇaprāśa, Sava, Hita, Āśvata, Vīttihātra, Kavi, Orjapati, Uttama, Tāmasa and Kāvātra. To Agnikṛṣṇa by his wife Purudhitā were born nine sons called Nābhi, Kṣipuravā, Hāri, Dhravā, Ramyākura, Hāra, Nāma, Kuru, Hāpa. Another Kuru appeared among them; but nothing more than the fact that he married a woman called Nārti is known about him. (Viśu Purāṇa).

KURU III. A King, the brother of Rāntideva. (See under Kantiyadeva).

KURU IV.

To Kuru were born four sons called Parikṣata, Sudhamu, Jahu, Narsihāvā. The genealogy of the Kuru Kings is as follows: Sudhamu-Cyavana - Kriti - Upārīcaravāsa - Brahadratha - Kūtṛa - Rāṣṭa - Purovāsa - Jahu.

Jārāndhā was another son of Bhradhratha. Jārāndhā had four sons called Soma, Saha, Ādva, Vīsa, and Śruṣika. From Jahu, the following sons were born:—Surastra - Vīrāstra - Sāravhāma - Jayatīsena - Raviya - Bāvuka - Cakrodhā - Devatī - Rāja - Bhima and Pratika. Pratika had three sons called Devaśī, Śantuvi, and Bhrājasa. Santuvi is known as Mahālāha. Also, Dharatātra and Pāṅgū were the successors of Santuvi, and they came to be known as Kauravas also as they belonged to the dynasty of Kuru. But, since the sons of Pāṅgū were born of Devas they may not be called Kauravas.

2) Other Information. (1) Kurumkētra became holy and sanctified on account of Kuru's tapas. (Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 80).

(ii) While Kuru was once ploughing a land in Kurukṣetra, a river Sarasvatī went there under the name Sutenu (Oṅgaḥavati) and watered the land. (Sāya Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 6).

(iii) While Kuru was once performing a yajña at Kurukṣetra, the river Sarasvatī went there under the name Sutenu (Oṅgaḥavati) and watered the land. (Sāya Parva, Chapter 30, Verses 26 and 27).

KURU V. One of the sages who wanted Bhīṣma on his bed of arrows. (Sāya Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 8).

KURU VI. A son born to Samvarana of Tapati. The boy, following his naming and other consorts, grew up like fire in which he was offered havis (ghee). At the age of ten he became omniscient. At the age of sixteen he married Saudāmi, daughter of Sūdān. (Vamana Purāṇa, Chapter 21).

KURUJĀGALAM (KURU). A kingdom in ancient India of which Hastinapura was the capital. This kingdom acquired the name Kurujīgala from Kuru. (Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 49).

KURUJĪ. A king born in King Janaka's dynasty. Aja was his father and Arjūnanem his son. The genealogy from Janaka to Aja is as follows: Janaka - Virada - Nandivardhana - Suhetu - Devatā - Bṛhadāśvā - Mahāvarsa - Dvataḥketa - Haryavā - Mara - Pradīpavaka - Kraurathama - Devamālaka - Vidiṭā - Mahādṛśa - Kṣīrā - Mahārīma - Svarnāśrīma - Pratharāma - Sīrāndhavāja (Janaka, the father of Sītā) - Kurud włia - Dharmañāvā - Kratrāvāja - Kesīketa - Bhāmanīśvā - Sīrāndhavāja - Surī - Vaidyavāja - Orjuketa - Aja - Kurujī. (Bhāgavata, Sū. 32nd Sandha). KURUKŚETRA.

1. General. Made famous by the Mahābhārata, Kurukṣetra is a sacred place situated to the south of the river Sarasvatī and north of Drāvada. People who live in this region really live in heaven. (Aranykāndha, Chapter 83, Verse 4).

According to the Purāṇas, even those who come into contact with the dust blown from this place meet with auspicious end.

2. Other details. (i) Taksaka lived on the banks of the river Ikṣumati in Kurukṣetra. (Adi Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 139).

(ii) Kurukṣetra became a sacred place as king Kuru did tapas there. (Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 50).

(iii) Two sons called Cīrīghada and Vicitravirya were born to Santanu of Sarasvatī. Once while hunting in a forest Cīrīghada met a Gandharva, whose name also was Cīrīghada. The Gandharva got angry that a man bore his name and so he killed Cīrīghada. The incident took place at Kurukṣetra. (Adi Parva, Chapter 101, Verses 8 and 9).

(iv) Sunda and Upasundha, who conquered and ruled all the worlds lived in Kurukṣetra. (Adi Parva, Chapter 209, Verse 27).

(v) Before the Khāṇḍava forest was burnt down Taksaka left the place and went to Kurukṣetra and lived there. (Adi Parva, Chapter 226, Verse 4).

(vi) During their life of exile in the forest the Pāndavas visited Kurukṣetra. (Vana Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 1).

(vii) King Madhūra once conducted a yajña within the boundaries of Kurukṣetra. (Vana Parva, Chapter 126, Verse 45).

(viii) The reputed sage Mudgala lived there. (Vana Parva, Chapter 260, Verse 3).

(b) Once a fierce fight took place here (Kurukṣetra) between Bhīṣma and Paratūrāma. Paratūrāma wanted Bhīṣma to accept Ambā, daughter of the King of Kāśi as his wife. (See under AMBA).

(x) Bhīṣma lay wounded on the bed of arrows here. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 119, Verse 92).

(xi) Kurukṣetra had been formerly known as Sāmavataparākṣa. Since King Kuru made this place holy it came to be known as Kurukṣetra thereafter. (xii) It was at Kurukṣetra that the Pāndavas and the Kauravas waged a fierce war and it was here that Śrī Kṛṣṇa taught Arjuna the Gītā. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 258, Verse 42).

(xiii) Emperor Sudārśana, son of Agna, who was famous for his hospitality, lived here. (Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 40).

KURUPĀNGALA. The combined name for Kuru and Pāṇcāla in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva Chapter 9, Verse 56).

KURUṬA. A Sage mentioned in Ryveda. He is also known as Kṛṣṇa. (For details see under Kṛṣṇa).

KRATĪRTIKA. A famous animal, the south of Tājvarūti in Kurukṣetra. He who takes a bath here will enter Brahma. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 16).

KRUVAVAMA. See under KURU.

KURUVARAKA. An urban area in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 56).

KURUVARŞA. The country ruled over by Kuru came to be called Kuruvaram.

KURUVINDA. An urban area in ancient India. The people of Kuruvinda were called Kuruvindas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 9).

KUSA I. A great sage of ancient India. He was as efficacious as burning fire. The famous Sage Viśvāmitra was born in Kusa's dynasty. (For genealogy etc see under Viśvāmitra).

KUSA II. One of the two sons of Śrī Rāma, the other being Lava.

1. Birth. To Śrītā was born by Śrāman a son called Lava while she was living at the ārama of Vālmiki. One day Śrītā took Lava to the stream to bathe him, and Vālmiki, who did not know about it was upset not to see the child in the ārama. He feared that it might have been eaten up by some animal. When Śrītā might die when she missed the child he created a child with Kuśa grass and laid it where Lava was lying before. When Śrītā returned to the ārama with Lava after their bath Vālmiki explained the whole situation to Śrītā. Since the second child was created with Kuśa grass he was called Kuśa, and he was made the second son of Śrītā. (Uttara Ramayana and Kathāśīrītāsagara, Alakāravatilambaka, Tamil 1).

2. Kuṣa went to Ayodhī. Śrī Rāma decided to conduct an Atvamedha yajña. It was ordained that the emperor, who conducted a yajña should have his wife. As Śrītā had been abandoned, Rāma had no wife for the purpose of the yajña. It was laid down that in the absence of the wife a statue of her may be made and performed. But, Vālmiki and the sculptor of the statue of Śrītā might be made with gold. The yajña was to be held in the Naimiṣa forest. During the triumphal tour of Sāruṇghā with the yājikī horse he reached the banks of the river Tamasā near the ārama of Vālmiki where Lava and Kuśa captured the born. Satrugnaha could not defeat Lava and Kuśa, and they routed the additional force also which arrived under the leadership of Lakṣmanā to help Satrugnaha. Then Vālmikī intervened and the born was restored to Satrugnaha. Afterwards, Vālmikī, Sīta and Lavakanás also attended Śrī Rāma’s yājña where Lava and Kuśa recited the poem Rāmāyana composed by Vālmikī. Rāma recognised the boys and they were made to live in Ayodhyā. Thus did Kuśa visit Ayodhyā.

The Kathāsāntāgara tells the following story about Kuśa’s visit to Ayodhyā:

Vālmikī duly performed the thread-wearing ceremony of Lava and Kuśa and taught them, even in their very childhood, all arts and sciences including the secrets about divine arrows. The boys one day killed a deer in the śramaṇa and submitted it to him (Kuśa) who was still the śramaṇa, which Vālmikī used to worship daily, and as a result of that the sages became ill. Sūdradeva requested for penance for the sages. When Vālmikī said that Lava should bring golden lotus flowers from Vaḍarāvāna’s pond and flowers of Kalīpavakaṇḍa from his arden, and that Lava and Kuśa together should worship the Śūdradeva by offering lotus flowers, Lava then went to meet Kuśa and after killing many vālakaśa collected the flowers. On his way back he rested for some time at the foot of a tree. Just then Lakṣmanā, who was on the lookout for a human being for the naraśāyana (human sacrifice) of Śrī Rāma, also reached the spot. He decided to take Lava captive with him, and they fought with each other for some time. At last Lakṣmanā took Lava captive by using mohānāstra (arrow) which makes the opponent unconscious and took him to Ayodhyā. Sīta was pained that Lava had not returned yet, and Vālmikī, with his divine vision understood the reason for his absence. He deputed Kuśa to Ayodhyā to bring back his brother Lava somehow or other. When Kuśa reached Ayodhyā, Śrī Rāma was conducting the Ayodhia yajña. Kuśa, by charming a number of people, got into the yajña ground. In the combat that ensued between Kuśa and Lakṣmanā the latter was defeated, as he could not defeat Kuśa due to the greatness of Vālmikī. When Śrī Rāma asked Kuśa who he was he replied that he was the brother of Lava and that he had heard from his mother Sīta that the son born to them was the born of Śrī Rāma. Kuśa wept over to hear that and he covered the boys with kisses. Sīta also was brought down from the śramaṇa to Vālmikī, and all of them lived very happily. (Kathāśāntāgara, Aṣāmukhāvālmambaka, Tārāja 1).

Kuśa’s reign. Following the demise of Lakṣmanā Śrī Rāma divided the country between Kuśa and Lava. A city was also built in the Kosala Kingdom and Kuśa was crowned King thereof. Thirty-two out of the sixty-four aerialācāryas of the kings of the solar dynasty, four out of the eight ministers and half of the movable property were allotted to Kuśa. Lava was crowned king of north Kosala where a city called Saravati was built for him, and the other half of the army, ministers etc. became his slaves. While Kuśa and Lava were ruling the country thus, Śrī Rāma immolated himself in the depths of the river Sarayu (Uttara Rāmāyana).

Kuśa’s successor. Descended from Śrī Rāma thus:

Kuśa—Aditi—Nisadhā—Nabha—Pundarika—Kṣemadhavā—Devāni—Kuśa—Pāryātra—Vindora—Vajranī—Khagana—Vidhyā—Hiranyākhyā—Puyya—Dhruva—Sudrāsana—Agni—Pītra—Śīglra—Maru. The solar dynasty was annihilated at the advent of Kalyuvya (Bāgavata, 9th Skandha).

KUŚA III. A king born in the Kuru dynasty. To Kuru, who built Kurukṣetra was born a son called Sudhanva, and to him was born Sudhrota, who became the father of (Gautama) Sudhrota a Brahmane. He married Girkā, a Brahmane, wife of Bhadrātra, Kuśa, Yadu, Pratāvagrasa, Bala, Matsuśākāla and Vra. Kuśa was one of the seven sons. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 78).

KUSA. An urban region in ancient India. (Bhāṣya Purāṇa, Chapter, 9, Verse 56).

KUSA. A river the water of which Indians of ancient days used to drink. (Bhāṣya Purāṇa, Chapter 9, Verse 24).

KUSA. A river the water from which Indians used to drink. (Bhāṣya Purāṇa, Chapter, 9, Verse 24).

KUSA. A Brahmin, son of Bhṛpati. Penniless and poor, the brahmin once sought the help of King Sālva. The miserly king did not give him anything. Thereafter he began to worship Bhagavati with the objects of worshiping, which Bhagavati accepted upon Bhagavati a girl emerged out of his mouth. She was named Devavati. When she came of age an asura called Sambhu desired to marry her; but Kuśa-deva did not agree to the proposal. Enraged at the refusal Sambhu killed Kuśa-deva while the latter was asleep one night. But Devavati cursed and reduced the asura into ashes. Kuśa-deva came again and secured Mahāvīra as his husband when Rāvana happened to come there, and he tried to make his his wife. But, she repelled all his attempts at which he caught hold of her by the hair. She escaped by cutting her hair. She then immolated herself in burning fire. It was this Devavati, who was, in her next life, born as Sīta, daughter of King Janaka (Uttara Rāmāyana).

KUSHA. One of the seven born. Born of King Janaka, father of Sīta. He lived on the banks of the river Iksmuat. (Vālmikī Rāmāyana, Bālakāyda, Canto 70). See under JANAKA I.

KUSA. A King. The following story about him is quoted from the Skandha Purāṇa.

Kusa-deva was a monkey in his former birth, and as he had then performed the auspicious act of burning Saiva in a candle throughout day and night, in the next birth he was born as King Kuśa-deva. One day the King abducted the daughter of the sage Agniśevasa when she was bathing. The Sage cursed the King into the form of a vulture. He was promised redemption from the curse that he would reign his human form on the day in which he helped Indra-yumma.

KUSA. The island encircled the sea of Śūra (Wine). Jyotisimā was the chief of the island. He had seven sons called Udbhida, Venūnta, Vairatha, Lambana, Dātri, Prahbhakara and Kapi. The Subcontinents, are called by their names. In Kuśa island, along with Dalyas and Dānavas, Men, Devas, Gandharvas, Kannaras and Kumārupas live. There are four castes of people there called Damis, Sūmus, Snehas and Mannedas, all of them leading righteous lives. The above four castes form the Brahmans, Kṣatriyas, Vaiṣyas and Śūdras people in the island. There are six mountains there called Vidruma, Hemaśaila, Duṣyāmas, Pūsravāna, Kuśāśyana and Harimandira. There are also seven rivers there called Bhūtanagā, Śivā, Pāravā, Simmatu, Vidyut, Aṃśī and Mahī. These rivers animitrate the suns. There are also other small rivers there. There is a Kuśambamba (a cluster of Kuśa grass) in the island. The stambha which glows like fire illuminates the island by its light and lustre. (Bhāgavata). The Kuśa island is encircled by the Oṛu ocean. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa Part 11, Chapter 4).

KUŚĀDYA. A Kingdom in ancient India. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 44).

KUSĀLA. A holy place near mount Kauśāna. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 21).

KUSĀLAVA (S). Kuśa and Lava, the two sons of Siha. (For details see under Kuśa).

KUSALEYA. A holy place in ancient India. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 4).

KUSĀMBA I. The third son of Upārīkavasana, Kuśamba is also known as Maṇjarīva. Vasu had five sons called Brhadārtha, Kuśamba, Vaiśekha, Yudha and Rājaśya.

KUSĀMBA II.

1) General. A son of Kuśa. The city he built was called Kauśāmbi. (See under Kuśa).
2) Other information: (i) Kuśamba had a daughter called Aparikā, who was married by Bhadrakariya, the solar King. (Brahmanda Purāṇa, Chapter 2).
   (ii) Two sons, Śakra and Gāḍhi were born to Kuśamba and to Gāḍhi was born a daughter, Satyavatī. Viśvāmitra was Gāḍhi’s son. (Brahmanda Purāṇa, Chapter 57).

This statement is not quite correct. Certain other Purāṇas maintain that Gāḍhi, the father of Viśvāmitra was the son of Kuśanābhā, who was the son of Kuśika and brother of Kuśamba. (See under Kuśanābhā).

KUSANĀBHĀ. A son born to Kuśa of Vardarhi. (For Genealogy see under Viśvāmitra). Sage Kuśa had four sons, namely Kuśamba, Kuśanābhā, Avārārājaṇa and Vasu, and Kuśanābhā built Madhavapatra and lived there. One hundred daughters were born to him of his wife Gauri. Viśvābhagavan once asked the girls to marry him at which proposal they laughed at him in derision. He cursed them and made them hunch-backed ugly women, and Kuśanābhā felt very sorry about this cruel fate of his daughters.

To Somadī, daughter of Gandharva woman called Urmilāi, had been born a son, Brahmadatta, due to the mental power of the sage Gāḍhi. Kuśanābhā gave in marriage his hundred daughters to Brahmadatta and they were cured of their hunch at the touch of Brahmadatta and became their previous beautiful selves.

Kuśanābhā conducted the yajña called Purarakāṃṣṭa, and Kuśa, who was so pleased by the yajña blessed him to have a son called Gāḍhi. Viśvāmitra was the son of this Gāḍhi. Viśvāmitra had also a sister Satyavatī, whose Rekha wedded. (Viṃśi Kūmārāṇya, Bālakāṇḍa, Cantos 32-35).

KUSĀPLAVĀ (KUSĀPLAVANAM). A holy place. He who bathes and spends three nights there will derive the benefits of an alamedha yajña. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 21). It was here that Dīdevi, wife of Kaśyapa did tapas for a son who would be equal to Indra. Again it was here that Indra entered into the womb of Dī and cut into pieces the child in the womb. Kuśapālava became famous because of the above happenings. (Viṃśi Kūmārāṇya, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 46).

KUSĀSTAMBHA. A sacred centre in the Kuśa island. He who bathes here attains a place in heaven surrounded by Deva women. See under Kuśadvipa. (Anūśaṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 28).

KUSĀSTAṬHALI. The ancient name of Dvārakāpurī; an island. It was emperor Revata, son of Anārta, the grandson of Varkavanta Manu, who first built a city in Kuśasthali and ruled the country. Their genealogy: Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahmā—Marici—Kāṣyapa—Viśvānu—Varkavanta Manu—Śurīya (Śayyati)—Anārta—Revata. Certain Purāṇas state that it was Anārta, who first built forts at Kuśasthali. It would not be incorrect to say that Anārta built forts in this city first founded by his son Revata. The city was sunk in the sea after a few years. Afterwards the region remained as a forest for long years. It was later on that Śri Kuśa built Dvārakā there. Following Kṛṣṇa’s death the Yādava dynasty got annihilated and the region was again swallowed by the ocean. Dvārakā is believed to have been an island situated in the sea to the west of Gujarāt. Even today there is a place called Dvārakā on the coast of India to the west of Gujarāt. (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha and Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

KUSĀŚVA. An Ikṣvaku King son of King Sahadeva and father of King Somadatta. (Viṃśi Kūmārāṇya, Bālakāṇḍa, Canto 47).

KUSĀVĀN. A deep region in the lake called Ujjāna near Mānasī lake. (Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 10).

KUSĀVĀRTA I. Son of King Rasbha, Kuśāvarta had nineteen brothers, viz. Bharata, Ilavarta, Brahmāvarta, Āryavarta, Malaya, Bhadrakariya, Sena, Indraspaṅk, Vidarbha, Kikata, Kavi, Hari, Antariksa, Prabhuddha, Pippālāyana, Āvirohita, Druṣmida, Cauśam and Karabhajana. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

KUSĀVĀRTA II. A holy place in ancient India. (Anūśaṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 13).

KUSĀVATI. A city in Devaki, where the Devas once conducted a mantra yajña. It was on his way to participate in this yajña that Agastya cursed Kubera and his attendant Maṇimana (Vana Parva, Chapter 161, Verse 54).

KUṢÉŚAYA. One of six great mountains in the Kuśa island. Durchartha, Duṣyāna, Purapavī, Kuśāya, Kurudma and Hari are the six mountains. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 12, Verses 19 and 11).

KUSIDA I. A sage belonging to the order of Vyāsa’s disciples. (Bhāgavata 12th Skandha).

KUSIDA II. To live on the interest of money lent to orders. Agriculture, breeding of cows, commerce and Kusida are the professions ordained for brahmins in emergency. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 152).

KUṢIKA I. A very famous monarch in the Puru dynasty. He was the grandfather of Viśvāmitra and father of Gāḍhi.
KUSIKA II

2) Kūṣika. A holy aśrama on the banks of the river Kosi where the sage called Kūṣika is believed to have lived. (Vana Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 131.)

KĀMSANA. A prominent serpent. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 11.)

KUSIUMBURI. A Rākṣasa in Kubera’s court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 16.)

KUSUMA. One of the five attendants given to Skanda by Bhūta. Kunḍa, Kusuma, Kumbha, Durmara and Adamba were the five attendants. (Sulī Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 39.)

KUSUMILHĀVAPARAYA. One of the mountains around the mountain Mahākāla. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha.)

KUSUMBHI. A forest near Dwārakā. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 36.)

KUTA. One of the pugilists deputed by Kamsa to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Baladeva when they went to Mathura to witness the dhanurājya. Cāntara, Mūṣika, Saśa and Kośala were the other prominent pugilists deputed by Kamsa for the purpose. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha.)

KUTAPA. Afternoon, considered to be auspicious for performing obsequies. The offerings made to Pītṛ at Kutapa are the best. (Ādi Parva, Southern text, Chapter 93.)

KUṭHARA. A prominent nāga. He was present among the nāgas who went to receive Balabhada when he went in the form of nāga, into the sea. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15.)

KUṬHARA. A nāga born in Dharatārastra’s family. It was beheaded at death of the serpent yajña of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 15.)

KUTI. See under Parvati.

KUT. A. Son of a Rajūrī called Kuru. Kusa is mentioned with reference to Indra in many places in the Kṛṣṇa.

KUTTAKA (M). Seat of a famous Śiva temple in South India, originally a Viṣṇu temple. There is a story about its conversion into the present Śiva temple as follows:—

Agastya, on his journey to the south, reached Tirukkuṭṭal (Kutṭakam) in the Tirumalvi Pillai on the southern borders of Tamil Nadu. The temple there was dedicated to Viṣṇu, and the Vaiṣṇavas (devotees of Viṣṇu) prevented Agastya from entering the temple with ashes on his forehead. At once he transformed himself into a devotee of Viṣṇu, and was permitted entry into the temple. As Viṣṇu wanted to show the world that he and Śiva were one and the same, and also the greatness of Agastya, the idol of Viṣṇu was all on a sudden changed into a Śiva Liṅga. Since then the temple has remained a Śiva Temple. (Skanda Purāṇa.)

KUVAṆAYAPĪDA. Name of the elephant posted at the gates of Mathurāpura to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadrāyana, who went there to witness the dhanurājya. But, they killed the elephant.

Rāma dvārānī samāṭādya
Tai mīgamavastiñāthā
Agāyāt Kūvaḷaṁpīḍām
Kṛṣṇo s mahatāpapravodīmātha
(Bhāgavata, Daśaṁa Skandha, Chapter 46, Verse 2.)

KUVRĀ. A river. (Bhīma Parva Chapter 27.)

KUYAVA. An asura referred to in the Rāṣṭra. (Rāṣṭra, Manḍāla 1, Anuvāka 10, Sūtra 104.)

L

Lā (स). This letter means the Creator. (Chapter 348, Agni Purāṇa.)

LABDHANĀSA. See under Paścataṇtra.

LAGHUPTATANA. A crow, a character of the storybook, ‘Paścataṇtra’. (See under Paścataṇtra.)

LĀJRA. One of the thirteen daughters of Daksapājapati. The other daughters were, Śraddhā, Lakṣmy, etc. (Chapter 7, Anuṭa 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa.)

LĀKHĀŚIHKI. The house of ‘I’, a kind of red dye. (See for details under Arakhśīlam.)

LAKSANA I. Daughter of Duryodhana. Wife of Śamba. (See for details under Śamba.)

LAKSANA II. A celestial maiden. This maiden took part in the birth day celebrations of Arjunā. (Sloka 62, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

LAKŚANA (LAKŚMANA) III. One of the eight queens of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Lakṣana was the daughter of Bhṛgavasena, King of Madra. (Śṛiṣi Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa.) Śrī Kṛṣṇa got ten sons of her some of whom are Praghaṇa, Triviravan, Śimha and Bala. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata.)

LAKŚMANA. Son born to Daśaratha of Sumitrā. 1) Short history. Since details about Lakṣmana are included in the story under ‘Rāma’ only a short description is given below:

Daśaratha, King of Ayodhya had three wives, Kausalyā, Kaikeyī and Sumitrā. To obtain children Daśaratha performed a sacrifice named Putakāmesī and requesting the great sage Ṛṣyaśṛṅgra to officiate at the ceremony. At the close of the ceremony a divine person rose up from the sacrificial fire with a pot of pudding and all the three wives became pregnant by eating the same. Kausalyā gave birth to Śrī Rāma, Kaikeyī to Bhārata and Sumitrā to Lakṣmaṇa and Satrughna. Lakṣmaṇa was an incarnation of Ananta and so Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa had more attachment to each other.

Viṣṇumātra once took Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to the forest to give protection to the same against the demons who gave them trouble. In the course of that Viṣṇumātra took them to the Svaśāyinvarī held at the court of Janaṇa and Śrī Rāma married Siṭā and Lakṣmaṇa married Ormīla.
When the coronation of Sri Rama was about to take place, Kaikyel demanded of Dasaratha, on the strength of the two boons granted to her on a previous occasion, to send Sri Rama to the forests for fourteen years and crown Bharata her son as King. Dasaratha was compelled to accede to her request and so Sri Rama went to the forests. Sitâ and Laksmâna accompanied him. Laksmâna during the fourteen years of their exile followed his brother Rama like a shadow. Laksmâna cut off the breasts and nose of Sûpanîkha, the demoness who made iheinous overtures to him. Laksmâna acted promptly and bravely when the monstrous trio, Khara, Disaîa, and Tîrîras attacked him and he was responsible for the slaughter of the three. Ravana, coming to know of that, carried away Sitâ to Lañka.

Grief-stricken, Rama and Laksmâna roamed about in the forests searching for Sitâ. At last they came to Sugrivava with whom they made an alliance. Rama and Laksmâna got back for Sugrivava his kingdom of Kiskindha and Sugrivava in return helped Rama and Laksmâna to fight Ravana. Accompanied by an army led by Sugrivava Rama and Laksmâna went to Lañka and Laksmâna took back Sitâ to Ayodhya. Sri Rama was crowned King and Laksmâna helped his brother in his duties. When there arose a scandal about Sitâ from the people, Sri Rama asked Laksmâna of the taking Sitâ away to the forest and have her there. In the Alvamedha conducted by Sri Rama, Laksmâna led the sacrificial horse and the horse was blocked and captured by Lava and Kusa and Laksmâna fought against them.

When the purpose of the incarnation of Rama was over, god of Death in the garb of a sage approached Sri Rama for a private talk. Rama and the sage were cleared in a room and Laksmâna was asked to keep watch over the door with instructions not to allow anybody inside. After some time sage Durvîsas came there and Laksmâna entered the room to give his brother information of his arrival Rama was angry and abandoned Laksmâna and, feeling repentant later, Sri Rama jumped into the river and drowned himself before a huge crowd of weeping subjects. Laksmâna immediately ended his life by drowning himself at the same place where his brother did so.

2) Birth. Laksmâna was born on the day of Astesha in the lagna of Karkataka. (Slokas 15, Chapter 18, Bîka Kânda, Vâlmiki Ramâyana).

LAKSMÂNA 11. A very brave son of Duryodhana. He was a great archer. The Mahabhârata gives the following information about him.

(i) In the great battle Abhimanyu defeated this Laksmâna. (Slokas 32, Chapter 73, Bîsha Parva).

(ii) Laksmâna fought against Ksatradeva. (Slokas 49, Chapter 14, Dropa Parva).

(iii) Abhimanyu killed him in the battle-field. (Slokas 17, Chapter 46, Dropa Parva).

(iv) After the great war when once, at the request of Kunti and Gândhîri, Vyasa by his yogic powers arrayed the dead warriors for Kunti and Gândhîri to see, this Laksmâna was also among them. (Slokas 11, Chapter 32, âtiramâvita Parva).

LAKSMÂNA. One of the queens of Sri Krsta. (Chapter 33, Sabha Parva, Daksinâtyapâthâa).

LAKSMI 1. Consort of Mahâvîṣṇu.

1) Origin. Devî originated from the left side of Paramâtmâ (Supreme Being). The beautiful Devî by a command from the Supreme Being divided herself into two enchanting damâs both equal in figure, splendour, age, majesty, adornment and love. One of these was Laksmîdevi and the other Râdhâdevi. That born of the left was Râmâ and that of the right, Râdhâ. Râdhâ wedded herself to the two-handed Sri Krsna and laksmî also wanted to be the same personage as Laksmî devi herself became two, Sri Krsna from the left side as a two-handed person and as four-handed Vishnu from the right side. (9th Skandha, Devi Bhâgavata).

2) Different incarnations of Laksmî. Laksmî had many incarnations and she had been on earth in different forms at different times. They are given below.

(i) Birth from the womb of milk. Once the Devas became aged and afflicted with rudoicity and grey hairs by a curse of Durvîsas Indra lost his majesty and was ousted from Svarga. Svargalaksmî deserted Devaloka and went to Vaishnavî and merged with Mahâvîṣṇu.

The Devas were greatly aggrieved on account of this flight of theirs and they went to Sâyâna and appealed to Brahmâ to find a solution to their difficultie. Brahmâ was helpless in the matter and so they all together went to Vaishnavî and represented their grievances before Mahâvîṣṇu. Vishnu smiled and told Mahâvîṣṇu thus: “You go and be born as Kîrṣa-sagarakanyakâ using a part of your inherent power and give the Devas and Vaishnavî and Mahâvîṣṇu and put a Vanamâla (garland of wild flowers) on Mahâvîṣṇu. The Devas got back all their lost wealth and prosperity and, on going to Devaloka, worshipped Laksmîdevi properly. (9th Skandha, Devi Bhâgavata).

(ii) Mahâvîṣṇu was born as a mare. (See under Elavîra, Para 2).

(iii) Mahâvîṣṇu was born as the Tulasi plant (Holy Basil. (See under Tulasi).)

(iv) Mahâvîṣṇu was born as Sitâ and Vedavatî. (See under Siâa).

1) Other births: Mahâvîṣṇu was born as a daughter to the sage Brhu of Kîrṣyâ. When Mahâvîṣṇu incarnated as Sûrya, Laksmî rose up from the lotus. When Visnu became Parasurâma, Laksmî became the earth. When Mahâvîṣṇu reincarnated as Sri Rama, Laksmî became Siîa and when Visnu was born as Krsna Laksmî became Râdhâ. Thus whenever and wherever Mahâvîṣṇu changed his form, Mahâvîṣṇu also changed hers to form part of the changed life. (Chapter 9, Ârînâ 1, Visnu Purâna).

3) Mahâvîṣṇu cursed Visnu. Once Mahâvîṣṇu cursed Mahâvîṣṇu, her husband, that his head would drop off from his body. (See under Cîtai).

4) Two forms of Laksmî. Mahâvîṣṇu has two forms, Vishnu-prîya Laksmî and Râjyalaksmî. The former is the embodiment of charity and virtuousness. The latter goes about courting Kings. Râjyalaksmî is sickle and unsteady. This Laksmî enters all places where virtue and charity are found and as soon as these two vanish from any place Kāyakālpaṇi will also vanish from that place.

5) Laksmaṇa in cow-dung. The people of Bāhtrāna consider cow-dung as very sacred and there is a story in the 52nd chapter of Anusāśana Purāṇa as to how cow-dung became so sacred.

Once a herd of cows was grazing in a large grassy ground when Laksmaṇa happened to pass that way. Mahālakṣmi was pleased at the cows and made them ask for any boon they wanted. The cows were prosperity incarnate andimmelent and they rejected the offer of Laksmaṇa and when pressed again by her, said that they would like to have prosperity deposited in their dung also. Mahālakṣmi did so and to even today it is believed that the cow-dung is ennobled with prosperity.

6) Other deaths:

(i) Laksmaṇa stays in the court of Kubera. (Śiśōka 19, Chapter 10, Saṁhitā Purāṇa).

(ii) Mahālakṣmi is installed in temples as an idol carrying a būka in her right hand and a Śiva fruit in her left hand. (Chapter 50, Agni Purāṇa).

(iii) Lakṣmīdevi stays in the court of Bṛhadāra. (Śiśōka 41, Chapter 11, Saṁhitā Purāṇa).

LAKŚMI N. A daughter of Daksārajapati. She was married to Dharma-deva. (Śiśōka 14, Chapter 66, Aṁi Purāṇa).

LAKŚMIDĀSA. A Sanskrit poet who was the author of Śukasandrī.

1) Birth. He was born in the former state of Cochin in Kāraṇīpuram Mana. This Mana (house) was near the temple of Tripurārāgala in Vellārapilly in Cochin (Kumārathu taluk). The Kāraṇīpuram Mana was the residence of Tāvatiśi in the village of Trānikāla. It is over two hundred years since that Mana became extinct. (The houses of Namboothiri brahmins are called Manaś).

2) It is believed that the famous Śukasandrī was written in 112 M.E. There is one set of historians who hold that it was written in 600 A.D. But the famous scholar and poet Ulūr states with authority that it was written in the 10th or 11th century A.D.

The story of this poet. As usual there are legends regarding this poet also. That the poet was a very dull boy in his childhood and that he became bright and brilliant by the blessings of his guru is one legend. After writing his Śukasandrī the poet went on a pilgrimage in South India. One night he came to a husbandman's house but was not given any food or a place to sleep. He slept in an open veranda on the outside. He was waking awake when he heard his Śukasandrī being read inside by a few people. At a stage they were not able to follow the import of a verse when Lakṣmaṇa shouted the meaning from outside. A door opened and a voice enquired in Tamil “Are you Kāraṇīpuram?” When he said yes they were extremely happy and took him inside and treated him with respect.

4) Work. No major work other than Śukasandrī has been found. Two small poems are available.

Śukasandrī has been written on the model of the famous Meghaśāstra of Kalidāsa. Many commentaries on this have come to light; of these the one written by Minavardan Rāja of Kozhikode. Palace named Viḷāsam is the best. Other commentaries are those of Varāharāni, Cintāmita and Vyākṣi are also worth mentioning.

LĀLIŚHAKSAM. A hell. (See under Kāla 1).

LĀLĀMA. A division among horses. The white patch on the forehead of a horse is also called Lālāma and so horses with lālāma are called Lālānas. (Śiśōka 13, Chapter 13, Droṇa Purāṇa).

LĀLĀKASA. A country of ancient India. The King of this country was present at the yajña of Yudhikṣira with very many valuable presents. (Śiśōka 17, Chapter 51, Saṁhitā Purāṇa).

LĀLITA. See under PUNDARTIKAMUKHA.

LĀLITA. A Gandharva. This Gandharva was born by a curse and by observing a vṛtta called Kāmāda Eknātri. He obtained relief from the curse and became Gandharva Mahān. (Uttāra Khanda, Padma Purāṇa).

LĀLITA. An ancient holy place of Bāhtrāna. If one bathes in a sacred pond there, one will be free from sins. (Śiśōka 34, Chapter 84, Vana Purāṇa).

LĀLITTHA. A country of ancient Bāhtrāna. The people of the place were called Lalithas. They fought on the side of the Kauravas in the great battle. Lalithas boasted that they would kill Arjuna in the great battle. The King of the Lalithas attacked Ahommayu. Arjuna killed them all in the battle. (Śiśōka 47, Chapter 5, Kāraṇa Purāṇa).

LAMBĀ. A daughter of Daksārajapati. Atikāh wife of Daksārajapati got a hundred daughters and ten of them were married to Dharma-deva. Lamba was one of them. (Chapter 13, Anuṣa 1, Vaisnava Purāṇa).

LAMŚI. A follower of Subrahmanyam. (Śiśōka 18, Chapter 46, Śalot Purāṇa).

LAMŚAPAYODHAK. A follower of Subrahmanyam. (Śiśōka 21, Chapter 46, Śalot Purāṇa).

LAMPĀK. A place of Purānic fame. In the great epic battle the people of Lāmpāka fought on the side of the Kauravas. They attacked Siyakaka and destroyed the Lāmpākas. (Śiśōka 42, Chapter 121, Droṇa Purāṇa).

LĀNGALI. A celebrated river of Purānic fame. This river worships Varuna in the form of a Devi. (Śiśōka 22, Chapter 9, Saṁhitā Purāṇa).

LĀNGHAHI. A river of Purānic fame. This river runs in the court of Varuna and worships him.

LĀNĪ. The kingdom of Rāvana.

1) Origin. It is believed that the present island of Ceylon was the Lānī of the Purānics, the city of Rāvana. This city of Lānī was situated on the top of the mountain Trīkūṭa. This Trīkūṭa was a peak of Mahāmeru. Because of a flight between Vāsuki and Vaiśvāhayu this peak broke away from Mahāmeru and fell into the ocean. (See Para 5 under Kubera).

2) History. Vishvakarma constructed a magnificent city on the top of the mountain Trīkūṭa for the use of Kubera. Kubera lived there adored and worshipped by all. One day Kubera travelled by air in an aeroplane of his, Kaikas, mother of Rāvana saw that and she became jealous. She called her son to her side and said that at any cost the city of Lānī on the mountain Trīkūṭa should be captured and given to her. Rāvana along with his brothers went to the Himālayas and performed penance there and obtained several boons from Śiva. Then Rāvana conducted a victory march as an arch-opponent.
of all living forces and drove away Kubera from Lakšā and took possession of Lakšā as the place of his abode. He lived along with him all the demons residing in Paśaloka.

3. The design of Lakšā. Viśvakarmā, the celebrated architect designed the beautiful Lakšā and the supreme building ability of Maya brought into form the enchanting city. On the top of Lakšā was the most important Navaratna-rāja and on a spacious platform on its top stood the majestic image of Lakšā. On the centre was the ten-storied palace of Rāvana and around it in eight different places stood the nine-storied buildings of the great ministers of Rāvana. The nine edifices were like the Navagrahas (nine planets) of Lakšā. Each of the nine edifices was built with one of the nine gems and the royal palace in the centre was built by using all the nine gems. Even his stride of his hand by which these buildings and changed his path either a bit to the north or to the south making what is known as the Daksināyana and Uttarāyana. (Yuddhā Rāma, Kamba Rāmayana).

4. No sand in Lakšā. The ancient belief is that there is no sand in Lakšā. The fourth tarāngga of Kāthāramukha-bhanusaka of Kāthava-sūggra gives a story relating to the reason for this belief. Garuḍa flew to Devakī to bring Anūta (nectar) to redeem his mother from her servitude to his step-mother. On his way he took an elephant and tortoise from near the Śrīpura of Kāyāna for his food. He sat on a huge banyan tree to eat them. On the ground below the Bāṇēkhiyas were performing penance. The branch on which Garuḍa sat with his food sagged and before it fell Garuḍa went to Rāma and denounced them on the mountain Gandhamadana near the ocean. The branch broke and fell into the ocean and the city of Lakšā was built on the branch and that was why the ancient people believed there was no sand in Lakšā.

5. Other details.
(i) Sahadeva sent Ghanavakaca to collect tribute from the King of Lakšā for the Rajāyayajña of Dhaṃmaputra (Chapter 31, Dākṣiṇāyana).
(ii) The people of Lakšā attended the Rajāyayajña of Dhaṃmaputra and took charge of serving rice in the feast. (Slōka 23, Chapter 53, Vana Parva).
(iii) Hanumān once burnt the city of Lakšā with a fire from his tail. (See under RĀMA).
(iv) It was Brahmā who gave Lakšā at first to Kubera. (Slōka 15, Chapter 274, Vana Parva).
(v) After the death of Rāvana, Vibhisāna was crowned the King of Lakšā (Slōka 5, Chapter 291, Vana Parva).

LAṆKĀLAKŠMĪ. A Devi who was relieved of her curse by Brahmā and later helped the Pandavas in their war against the Kauravas.

1. How she came to Rāma. Lāṅkālakṣmī was Vijayalakṣmī in her previous birth. She was the watch-girl of the treasury of Brahmā, and one day finding her negligent of her duties Brahmā cursed her "Go to the earth and be the watch-girl of the palace-gate tower of Rāvana". She begged for relief and Brahmā said, "During the incarnation of Viṣṇu as Rāma his wife Śītā will be carried away by Rāvana and Hanumān will come in search of her to Lakšā. You will then block the way of that mighty monkey and he will then strike you down by a fierce blow of his hand. You will then be released from the curse and come back to me."

Vijayalakṣmī accordingly was born in Lakšā and became the watch-girl of Rāvana's palace-gate tower. Rāvana then kept her in search of Śītā tried to find an opening through which to enter Lakšā. Then he saw a huge tower-gate on the northern side of the mountain Suvalagiri. When he reached the gate he found it closed. The mighty monkey beat hard on the door and the strong door burst into two and fell on to the floor. Instantly a furious woman of enormous size rushed to the gate with a piercing roar and blocked it. Hanumān found the situation dangerous and gave her a powerful blow and felled her. She then very politely asked Hanumān who he was and Hanumān revealed his identity and told her the purpose of his visit. Lāṅkālakṣmī then took leave of Hanumān and leaving Lakšā went to Śrī Rāma and handed him Śītā. Rāma blessed her and she returned to Sāyala and started doing her duties as before. (Sundara Kanda, Kamba Rāmayana).

LAṆETIKĪ. A holy place. If a man visits the place he would get the benefit of conducting a Viśvepya yajña. (Slōka 15, Chapter 38, Vana Parva).

LAṆITĪ. The second retreat of a sage called Mandapīla (See for details under Mandapīla).

LAṬĀ. A celestial maiden. She was the companion of another Devi of name Vanga. Though she became a crocodile by the curse of a brahman she was set free by Arjuna. (See under Paharīṭhara).

LAṬA. A particular division of the Kaṭṛya. Because a set of the Kaṭṛyas showed partiality towards the Brahman became Lāṭās. (Slōka 17, Chapter 35, Anuśasana Parva).

LAṬAVESTA. A mountain situated on the southern side of Deśarāka. It had five colours and resembled the Indraçāpa. (Chapter 33, Dākṣiṇāyana Pāṭha, Sābhā Parva).

LAŬHITYA I. A country of Purāṇic fame. This country of out-castes was conquered by Bāha and he took from there different kinds of diamonds (Slōka 26, Chapter 30, Sābhā Parva).

LAŬHITYA II. A sacred place constructed by the powers of Śrī Rāma. If one bathes in a pond there one would become golden in colour. (Slōka 2, Chapter 35, Vana Parva and Chapter 25, Anuśasana Parva).

LAŬA. A son of Śiṣṭa. (See under Kṣa. II for more details).

LAŬAṆA(M). A hell. (See under Kāla I).

LAŬAṆA I. A demon. He was the son of a demon called Madhu. Madhuvana on the banks of the river Kālini was the abode of this demon. This demon was a great defiler of the Puyas and Satruguna had to kill him. Satruguna then constructed a beautiful city there and lived there. In recognition of the increasing prosperity of the city it was named Madhuvan. After the death of Satruguna his two sons lived there. (4th Skanda, Devi Bhagavata).

LAŬAṆA II. A King who was a grandson of Ḫariścandra. He once conducted a Rajāyayajña and became a brahman (story in Jñānavasiṣṭha). This story was narrated to Śrī Rāma by Vasistha to teach him the truth that man does not realize that this whole universe is an illusion only because of his ignorance.
Lavanya was the King of Uttarakhand, a country of great fame. He was the grandson of Harisandra and wished to win fame by performing a Rajayasa yoga as Harisandra had done. Lavanya decided to perform the yoga in his mind only. He made grand preparations for the yajna. He invited the Rishis and after invoking the devas inflamed the sacrifical fire. For one year he observed yoga like that and in the end gave gifts to the brahmins and the Yogis. The imaginary performance that the King had in the course of a single day when he indulged in a reverie. In the evening as usual he continued his day to day duties.

One who performs Rajayasa will have to bear woes and sorrow for a period of twelve years and since Lavanya had performed it mentally, Indra sent his agent to give Lavanya woes mentally. Indra's agent appeared in the court of King Lavanya in the guise of a magician. The magician bowing barked [in the room] and said, "Lord, I shall show you a magic. See it sitting on your throne. It will be as astounding as if setting moon rise on the earth".

Saying this the magician took a bundle of peacock feathers and waved it against the face of the King. That bundle was capable of producing different objects and visions. The King fixed his eyes on the several glittering spots on the feathers and soon he saw a relative of the Saindhava King approaching the court. Behind him was a beautiful horse. Holding the horse by the reins the new-comer said at the King, "Lord, this horse is as good as Sukra and it has been sent by the King of Sindhuh to be presented to you. Best things should be given to the best people and only then the value of the thing would be correctly understood." The magician who was standing near-by supported the statement of the new-comer. He said, "Lord, what he says is true. This horse has wonderful powers. Take a tour of all the worlds riding on this horse". The King sat at the horse and he sat thus for an hour and a half. The entire court was perplexed.

After some time the King awoke from his meditation and looking at his courtiers in wonder he said thus: "I shall tell you what happened to me during the short period I was sitting in meditation. While I was looking at the peacock feathers of the magician I felt a desire to go hunting riding on this horse. So I went to the forest alone riding on this horse. Very quickly the horse took a long distance deviating from the main path and I soon found myself in the dark depths of dense forest. By the time we reached that forest my mind and body were equally tired and still we went on moving till evening came. Somehow we crossed the forest and reached a place where there was a cluster of lemon trees and to ease my body I caught hold of a creeper hanging from one of the lemon trees. As I did so, to my horror, I found the horse running away from me and leaving me alone. Tired by the day's travel I sat at a place and dozed. Darkness was creeping in and soon the whole place was in complete darkness. It was very cold also. Somehow I spent the night and when morning came, with hopes I walked around the place. The place was still and no living thing was in sight. As I roamed about I saw a forest-girl coming with a pot of rice. I approached her and asked for some rice. She did not pay any attention to my request and moved on. I followed her and she said she would give me rice if I promised to marry her. In despair I agreed to her condition and she was pleased with my reply. She gave me half the rice and curry she was carrying to her father and also some lemon-juice to drink. After taking that food I rested for a while. It was then it was informed that the marriage was arranged and I was expected to come. Her name was Harakeyabhi. As soon as her father came from the fields he told him everything. The cauldra was immensely pleased to hear about our marriage and all of us went to their hut. The scene I saw at the hut was astonishing. At one place was the flesh of boars, horses, rams and crows in a heap and on the intestines of animals hanging from ropes sat birds pecking at them. In the hands of children there were pieces of raw meat and flies hovered round them. The hut presented a disgusting atmosphere and yet I entered and sat on a leaf and my marriage with Harakeyabhi was conducted there. The celebrations of the marriage lasted for seven days and all these days people danced and shouted amidst loud noises of drumming in a hilarious mood of drunkenness. Eight months passed by very soon and Harakeyabhi became pregnant. She delivered a girl first and soon we had two or three children more. I had to do many cruel and nasty deeds to feed my family and gradually I became old. My hair became grey. At that time there occurred a great famine, and those residing in the forests were put to great trouble. There was no water to drink as all ponds and lakes went dry. Some of us migrated to the vicinity of the Vindhya mountain where there were plenty of water-fountains. A few committed suicide. We also left the place and started walking, taking the children also along with us. After some time we sat under a palm tree completely exhausted. My wife began to weep profusely. She then kissed her children and lay down and started sleeping. Thirsty and hungry my children lay there awaiting death. Unable to witness the scene I jumped up from there deciding to commit suicide myself. Suddenly my vision faded and I was able to see this court and you all. This is the work of that magician".

The courtiers sat dumb-founded at the incredible story of the King. Suddenly the magician disappeared. The magician after making the King experience the woes of twelve years in a very short time left for the court of Indra.

Next morning King Lavanya in the hope of seeing the place and people of his dream in reality near the mountain Vindhya started with his retinue on the false pretext that he was going to conduct a victory march. When he entered a big forest he met with many familiar places and hunters of his dream. Then he saw the hut where he had lived. The same men and women were there all around. Then he saw an old lady lamenting thus: "Oh my dear sons, where did you go from my lap? My dear daughter, have you forsaken me? Oh prince, you came here abandoning all luxury and the beautiful girls of your palace and married my daughter. But God did not allow even her to be your permanent wife. The river of life has to take worthless and mean paths forced by circumstances. A very virtuous. King had to come and live with a candala girl.”

Hearing this the King went to her and asked her all details. When she repeated the story the King knew that the lady was the mother of his candala wife. The King and ministers were surprised to find that his vision was real and without that short period of his meditation he did have a life of years. This perplexed the King.

Raju also had erred. The old lady whatever she wanted and after counting her started for the palace, thinking about the wonderful happenings and mysteries of life.

LAVANA III. A demon who lived in the island of Ramaruhasha. He had come to the island long before the serpents came to that place. The serpents saw him when they went there to live. (Sloka 2, Chapter 27, Adi Parva.)

LAVANA IV. Another King of the family of Hariscandra. Yogavasiśtha says that this King had participated in several Rājagṛiva yajnas.

LAVĀNAKA (LAVANAKA). A place of Purānic fame near the country of Madagadha. There are many forests in this place suitable for hunting and so several kings used to come and stay at Lavanaka in times of need.

LAVANŠVA. A sage. This sage showed very high respect to Dharmaputra. (Sloka 23, Chapter 26, Vana Parva.)

LAVAYA. A King of old. He was a member of the court of Yasna. (Sloka 21, Chapter 2, Sabha Parva.)

LEKHÀ (5). A deva-gana (set of celestial beings) of Raḥaṁtha Manovantara. In this set there are eight Devas named Dhupa, Durvakasī, Prabhisa, Pracetas, Rupapati, Manojaya, Mahāyānas and Yuvanas. (Brahmāṇa Purāṇa, 2, 36, 76.)

LIKAHI I. An ancient sage. The King of that land cut off his hands on a charge of theft. But they grew into their original form by the power of the penance of his brother. (Chapter 23, Sānta Parva.)

It was a time when the celebrated King Sudyuna was ruling over the country. On the banks of the river Bāhūda in that country there lived two sages, Saṅkha and Lekhīta, in two separate hermitages of their own
Once Lekhīta went to the drama of his elder brother Saṅkha and finding none but feeling hungry took some vegetables from there and started eating them. While he was eating his brother wanted him and he ordered the action of his brother taking the vegetables without his permission as an act of theft. Cutting the hands of the culprit was the punishment accorded by the King to that time to the offender. Saṅkha sent Lekhīta to the King. The King received the sage respectfully and gave him a seat. The sage then told him all that had happened to him and Sudyuna ordered the hands of Lekhīti to be cut off. Blood was coming from his hands when Lekhīta went and bowed before his brother. The brother congratulated him on his accepting the punishment for his crime and asked Lekhīta to go and take a dip in the Bāhūda river. Lekhīta bathed in that holy river and then he found both the hands growing like lotus buds from his body. He rushed to his brother and showed him the hands. Then Saṅkha said that it was due to the power of his penance that Lekhīta got his hands.
Then Lekhīta asked his brother why he did not purify him by his power before. Saṅkha replied that the power of punishment was vested in the King and the King Sudyuna had become great by executing the law secretly.

LIKHIHI I. An evil-natured priest of Raḥaṁtha, the King of Campakapura. Saṅkha his brother also was the King’s priest. Raḥaṁtha blocked the sacrificial house of the Brahmāṇa yajña of Dharmaputra and Aruna attacked the King to get the house released.
To molest an army the King announced that each and every soldier should assemble at the place by day-break the next morning and added that those who disobeyed would be put in burning all.

By early morning the next day all the soldiers excepting the son of the King arrived at the palace. Sudyuna, the King’s son, was a general of the army and his absence annoyed the King. Raḥaṁtha was hesitating whether his son should be punished when Lekhīta advised the King to execute the punishment.

The King put Sudyuna into a big cauldron of boiling oil but Sudyuna escaped from it unscathed to the surprise of all. Lekhīta and Saṅkha said that Sudyuna escaped because the boiling of the oil was incomplete and uneven. So they boiled the oil again and threw Sudyuna into it. At that moment a huge palm tree split into two and fell on them and they were killed (Jamūn Advamedaparva).

LILĀDHYA. A son of Vṛṣamukta. He was a Brāhmaṇi
(Sloka 52, Chapter 3, Andhakarna Parva.)

LILĀTILAKAM. The first book of literary criticism in Malayalam. The author of the book is unknown. The book is divided into eight parts. Mantravāda, Malayānśāstrā, Alankāra, Kavyānam, Kavyādēśas and Rasa are critically examined in this book.

LILAVATI I. Wife of Dhruva-mūrti, King of Kosala.
For details see under Dhruva-mūrti.

LILAVATI II. A prostitute women attained Sāvarga by simply observing the Śukklāśamanvita in the month of Pṛyāhapaḍa in which was born Rādhāvī. Chapter seven, Bhāmakhaṇḍa of Padma Purāṇa contains the following story.

In times of old in Kṛta-yuga there was a beautiful prostitute of the name Lilāvati. Once she went away from her own town to another in search of better pros-spects. There she saw a big assemblage of people in a temple. They were observing Rādhākuṭikāvī and worshipping their deity with sacred flowers and incense of sweet fragrance. Some were making prayers, some were singing and yet others were dancing. The whole atmosphere was filled with devotion. Lilāvati went to them and enquired about it. They told her that that day was the birthday of Rādhāvī, the Śukklāśati of the month of Pṛyāhapaḍa and if anyone observed Vṛta on that day worshippings Rādhāvī he would be absolved of all sins.

On hearing that, Lilāvati decided to observe the Vṛta.
She joined the devotees of the temple and observed the Vṛta with great devotion. Soon the died of snake-bite and the servants of Yama came to take her soul to hell because of the sins she had committed as a prostitute.
But before the Yamadūta could touch her, Pūrasidas of Mahāvīra wearing the insignia of Saṅkha, Cakra, Gada and Padma came to her with a chariot drawn by kingly swans and took her to heaven.

LINGAPURĀN. See under Purāṇas.
Lipi (Alphabet, Script).

1) Origin. Lipi is the record writing of the inhabitants of Java. There are several non-sound statements about the origin of lipi. In the beginning people used figures of objects to express their ideas. They were called pictorial writings and are found even now in caves in Spain and France where the aborigines lived. Gradually the pictures vanished and letters took their place.

2) Ancient historian Pundits give a different version. People of Java believe that the spirit originated from Java. The son of Dewa Tjowiki, a government official, published some poetic story relating to the origin of the script. Lipi came into being in 78 A.D. Agasikha, a son of the King of Senggigi who was the architect of Java, was the creator of the script. He had two disciples named Dora and Sempatú. All the three went and stayed in a village in the valley of the mountains of Komaghi. The country of Komaghi was ruled by a King called Baka. Agasikha heard of this wicked King who had ordered one of his subjects to go to him daily for his food. The people were worried. They tried in secret to find out someone to substitute this tyrant. One day they approached Agasikha and requested him to find out a way to get rid of this cruel King. Agasikha went back, planning to do something to help them. Agasikha set in meditation for some time and then told his disciples thus.— "Have you decided to help the people of Muntangram? Dora also should come with me. Sempatú should keep guard over my sword and clothes. Never give them to anybody but me. You should be prepared to give your life for it."

Agasikha and Dora went to see Baka. People discouraged them and advised them not to go to the King. But they did not listen and straight away went to the presence of Baka. Baka started to kill them but then Agasikha said, "Oh King, you can eat me tomorrow. I will give you my life today as my head is to your head." Baka agreed to that and Agasikha spread his cloth on the ground. As Baka looked with wonder that small piece of headwear began to grow big and it grew in size to cover the whole of the country. Baka got furious at this and attacked Agasikha. But Baka was slain in the dust.

The people burst into joy and made Agasikha their King. Agasikha then sent Dora to his akrama to fetch his sword and apparel. Little thinking of the instructions he had given to Sempatú, Dora went and asked for the sword and apparel. But Sempatú did not give and a big council on which both were killed.

Agasikha felt very sorry when he heard about the death of his disciples. He cursed himself for getting contradictory orders to his disciples and so wrote four lines, each containing five letters, to keep alive the memory of his faithful disciples. Those twenty letters are the first ones written not only in Java but the whole world. They were the following:

He no co ra ko — There were two disciples.
To to so to no — They became enemies because they obeyed the orders of the King.
Po dhu ayro lip — Both of them were brave men.
Mo ga ko no ra — Both of them died.

3) Bhārata lipa. Different kinds of lips were prevalent in ancient Bhārata. Lahuvistara mentions about sixty-four kinds of lips in Bhārata during the time of Buddha. From inscriptions and other historical records it can be gathered that the basis of all the lips had been two main lips named Brāhmi and Kharosthi. Kharosthi was used in the northwest of Bhārata and became extinct by the 4th century A.D. Brāhmi was the lipi universally used in Bhārata. This lipi had different forms in the north and south. The lipi in use in the south was called Dravid.

Linguists consider Brāhmi lipi as the base of all the lips of Bhārata. It underwent changes in different parts and took different names. The scholars of Europe are of opinion that the Brāhmi lipi was borrowed from foreign traders in B.C. 600. Others say that the Brāhmi lipi was born out of the pictorial lipi of the Chinese. There are those who say that the Brāhmi lipi originated in Greece and Phoenicia. The great linguist Bullard says that the Brāhmi lipi came from the Semitic languages. But Lassen makes a unique explanation that there is a bundle of leaves in the hands of Brāhmi in the temple of Bhārata. Hindus believe that the Brāhmi lipi found its leaves written by Brāhmi himself. The Aryans forgot that lipi and Vivas found it out. This is a statement by the Arab traveller Albarim who came to India in the 11th century A.D. 4) Kerala lipi. The Brāhmi lipi came to south India by the 3rd century A.D. Many scholars on languages say that "Veṭṭeluṭtu" is a changed form of the Brāhmi lipi. The great lipi expert L. R. Ravi Varma says that "Elutti" has come from the word "Elu" or "Ahu" meaning 'to mark by cut'. The common method of writing in South India was to use a pointed stick, long metal nail or chisel to make marks on leaves, rocks or copper plates. Writing by making marks with the pointed stick (Kol) got the name "Koleṭṭul". Veṭṭeluṭtu, Koleṭṭul and Malayalam were the three lips in use in Kerala. Veṭṭeluṭtu was in vogue in Tamālada also. But the Pallavas who were using Praṅkārī language when they conquered the southern Tamulnadu introduced Grānthikāra and Granthairatam there. T.K. Krishna Murty says that Granthikāra was a false creation to weed Sanskrit easily. In Pambayadu and Malanāṭu Veṭṭeluṭtu was in use even then.

The influence of the Pallavas began to wane and the Tamil lipi slowly rose into prominence. Even then Veṭṭeluṭtu was in vogue in the empire of Cera comprising of Malanāṭu, Mysore, Coimbatore, Salem and Togamandalam. When Tamulnadu came under the emperor of Vijayanagara those kings introduced Nāgarī lipi there. Veṭṭeluṭtu was called Nānām Monam also. In the south instead of using "Hāri Śī’ people used to say "Namo, mārdanyāya" and the first syllable ‘Na’ and the second one ‘Mo’ were used to name the language ‘Nānām Monam’.

When the Malayavas started juggling the Matupārvala they started using "Ara elutti" a form of Granthikāra. This script was known as Tulu-Malayalam also. This was also born of the Brāhmi lipi. Gradually Veṭṭeluṭtu and Koleṭṭul was in use in the north of Kerala among Muslims. The Alphabets now in use by the different languages of South India took shape only about two centuries ago. The lips of Malayalam in use came into shape by the time of Eluttantaśān spreading the belief that it was Eluttantaśān who had made the alphabet. It is wise to believe that the Malayalam script came into use gradually from Arña chittu than to give credit to one individual for its origin.

LOBHA I. One of the spiritual sons of Brahā. Matsya Purāṇa mentions that Lobha was born from the tip of Brahā while Bhagavata mentions that he was the son of Mayā.

LOHA I. An Aśura. When the Pāndavas were living incognito they kept their weapons in a secret place. Availing of this opportunity Loha made an attack on the Pāndavas. At once the devas made him blind and thus helped the Pāndavas. That place later became famous as Lohapura. (Skanda Purāṇa 1, 2, 5).

LOHA II. An ancient place of India. Arjuna conquered this place during his victory march. (Skota 23, Chapter 27, Śalā Parva).

LOHAJAGHA. See under MAKAARADAMSTRA.

LOHAMEKHAILA. A follower of Subrahmanya. (Chap 46, Skota 10, Śalā Parva).

LOHAVAKTRA. A soldier of Subrahmanya. (Skota 75, Chapter 45, Śalā Parva).

LOHITA I. (ROHITA). Son of Hārīscandra. (For details see under HĀRĪSCANDRA).

LOHITA II. A king of ancient India. This king was conquered by Arjuna. (Skota 17, Chapter 27, Vana Parva).

LOMAYI. A serpent. This serpent is a member of the court of Varuna. (Skota 8, Chapter 9, Śalā Parva).

LOHITAGANGA. A place of Purānic fame. Sir Kona killed five notorious demons here at Paṇcāja and Viṇḍyākṣa at this place. (Chapter 33, Daksināyatī Parītha, Śalā Parva).

LOHITAKSA I. One of the four Pāndavas given to Subrahmanya by Brahā. The other three are Nandīśa, Ghanāśa, and Kumbhānaśi. (Skota 24, Chapter 45, Śalā Parva).

LOHITAKSA II. A sage who was a Rūk in the Sarasvatī of Jananītī. It was this sage who prophesied through a brahmin that the Sarasvatī would never be complete. (Aśvamahāśa Parva, Ch 45, Verse 15; Ch 51, Verse 6; Ch 52, Verse 12).

LOHITAKSI. A follower of Subrahmanya. (Skota 22, Chapter 46, Śalā Parva).

LOHITARANI. A river of Purānic fame of ancient India. (Skota 18, Chapter 9, Bhīma Parva, M.B.).

LOHITASVA (ROHITASVA). Son of Hārīscandra. (See under HĀRĪSCANDRA).

LOHITAYANI. Daughter of Red Sea and one of the foster-mothers of Subrahmanya. Lohitayani was a worshiper of the Kadamba tree. (Skota 40, Chapter 260, Vana Parva).

LOHITYA. A great river. The present name of this river is Brahmaputra. The deity of this river sits in the court of Varuna and worships him. (Skota 22, Chapter 9, Śalā Parva).

LOKA.

(i) Origin of Loka. There are several views in the Purāṇas regarding the origin of Loka or the world (Universe).

(ii) In the beginning of the universe Mahāvisuṣa alone good as the Eternal, uncease, unbound, unknown entity. Then there was neither sky nor day nor night. When the time of creation came Prajāpati entered Viṣṇu as Purāṇa creating emotion. From emotion arose Mahā or the Great Principle and from Mahā arose cosmic egoism (Ahaṁkāra). Ahaṁkāra divided itself into Viṣṇukriṣṇa, Tajasa and Tāmanā. From Ahaṁkāra arose Akāra with the quality of sound and from Akāra came the possessing the quality of sound. From Viṣṇukriṣṇa egoism came the ten Viṣṇukriṣṇa devas and the eleven organ of sense, the mind. After that Mahāvisuṣa discharged his vitality into water and that vitality is life. (Chapter 17, Agra Purāṇa).

(ii) Mahāvisuṣa with a view to creating many different kinds of living things created water first and threw his whole energy into it. That energy grew into a golden mass of an egg and Brahā was born from that egg. Mahāvisuṣa broke that egg into two, making one half heaven and the other earth. Between the two halves he created the sky. The earth was floating on the waters and he fixed it by anchoring it at ten sides. Then he created Prajāpatī, Kūla, Manasa, Viśva, Vīra, Kṛṣṇa, Kṛshna and Krti. Then he created thundert, lightning, clouds, rainbows and birds. Then for yajñadāna he created from his face Kṛṣṇa, Yajuṣveda and Śāmaveda. He also sacrificed with them. From Brahmā the four castes were created the different Bhūtāṅgas and Sanatkumāra. He created Rudra out of Kṛṣṇa. From his mind were born Marici, Atri, Angiras, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kśiti and Vaśishtha. He made these seven Brahmās and Rudra began to create the prajā. Then Prajāpatī divided his body into two. One half of it became man and the other woman. Brahā started creation through that woman (Chapter 18, Agra Purāṇa).

(iii) In the beginning Mahāvisuṣa in the form of a child lay on a leaf of the Banyan tree. Lying there the Lord began to think like this, "Who am I? Who created me? Why was I created? What should I do here?" At once from the sky came a voice who said—

Svarāṣa khaḍvadānaḥ.

Nānāyadasi saṁna tu?

(All these are I. There is nothing eternal except me).

The Lord was surprised by the voice and there appeared before him Mahādevi with four hands bearing the Śatākha, Cakra, Gada and Padma one in each hand. She were divine garments and ornaments and was accompanied by Prosperity as her maid. She was surrounded by such forces as Rati Blūti, Buddhī, Matī, Kīti, Śruti, Dhyā, Śrāddhā, Medhī, Svādhiṣṭā, Suśrūṣa, Kṣudrā, Nidrā, Dayā, Gati, Tūṣi, Pushti, Kuṣāṇa, Lajja, Āmbūla and Tadrī. Devī then addressed Mahāvisuṣa thus: "Why wonder? You have always come into being whenever creation was started by the greatness of great powers. The Supreme Being is without quality of any kind. We are all with quality. You have predominance of Satvaguna. From your navel will arise Brahā who will be dominat ed by Rajaguna and from the centre of the forehead of Brahā will be born Rudra with Tamoguna predominant in him. Brahā by the power of his pen-of the universe. The shapeless qualities Purāṇātman permeated everything. From them there were born three powers: Jhānātaka, Kriyātaka and Arohaṣṭakā. The power of Sattvaguna was Jhānātaka, the power of Rajotguna was Kriyātaka and the power of Tamasguna was Arohaṣṭakī. From the divine personages born from these the five organs of sense, the five organs of work, hand, etc., speech, organs of excretion and the organs of sex were created. The organs of Prāna, Apana, Vyāna, Samāna and Uḍāna are the offsprings of Rājas. These are the forms of Kriyātaka. These are controlled by the favourable activity of Cittahātu. The five gods controlling the sense- organs like Vāyu, Sūrya, Pāti and Āśviniūdana and the four gods controlling intelligence, conscience etc., like Candra, Brahmā, Rudra, and Kriṣṇa and the mind are ten Tattvas (Principles) born of cittahātu empowered with jhānātaka. All the Tattvas were made into five basic elements through the process of Pariṇāmā. The Brahmāndā originated from it.

The constitution of Brahmāndā. The Brahmāndā is made up of seven Koṣas (coverings). The one in the extreme interior is very small. The second Koṣa originates from the centre of the first Koṣa. The third Koṣa also has its origin from the first one. Each of them envelops the one before it. The seventh Koṣa thus originating from the first Koṣa and bursting forth through the other six Koṣas spreads out for millions of miles around. If you cut the Brahmāndā longitudinally the one in the extreme exterior is the thinnest. Then come Bhūvar-loka, Svārloka, Mahāloka, Janaloka, Tapaloka, and Satyaloka in succession. The worlds in the lower half are called Pātala, Rasātala, Mahāatāla, Taḻātala, Sutala, Vitala, and Atala. From Satyaloka to Atala there are fourteen lokas. The Brahmāndā consists of the Sūrya, Candra, Stars, Śukra, Budha, Aśvāraka, Brhaspati, Sānu, Saptarāsi, Dhrūva, Sūryamā and Rāhu, called the Jyotiseśvara. Besides these there are twenty-seven hills also. (Visnū Purāṇa, Aīṣana 1.) Rāhu is ten thousand yojanas below Śūrya. Ten thousand yojanas below Rāhu is the loka of Siddhavīdāhāras. Below that up to the path of the clouds is the loka of the demons, genii and maras. Hundred yojanas below this is the Bhumīkā (earth). Ten thousand yojanas below the earth and many yojanas below the world above each are Atala, Vitala Sutala, Taḻātala, Mahāatāla Rasātala and Pātala. (5th Skandha, Bhāgavata.)

3) Origin of life. Brahmā originated from the navel of Mahāvīra. Brahmā started creation after obtaining permission from Visnu. In the beginning Brahmā created from the mind Matrī, Agni, Atri, Vasiṣṭha, Pulaha, Krauṣṇa, Pulastya. They are therefore called the Mānasaputras of Brahmā. (Manas = mind, Putra = son). From his wrath came Ṛṣiras, from his left thumb Dakṣa, from his mind Sanaka and others and from his left thumb, Vishnu. Dakṣa married VIRVATA. Dakṣa got five thousand sons of Viri, They also got sons. When the population began to increase thus Nāraka interfered and questioned the advisability of increasing the population before knowing the capacity of the earth. The sons of Dakṣa realised the sense in it and started to have a survey of the earth. Dakṣa was disappointed that the children left him without showing any interest in the work of creation. So he produced another five thousand sons and ordered them to survey the earth. But they were also sent away as before by Nāraka. Dakṣa became angry and he created sixty daughters.

He gave thirteen daughters to Kaṭyaṇa, ten to Dharma, twenty-five to Candra, two to Bhṛgu, four to Aśvatthama, two to Krīṣṇa, and two to Aśvins. Of these most of the living things in the world were born to Kaṭyaṇa. (7th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata.) Kaṭyaṇa was the last of the Prajāpatis. Kaṭyaṇa married the daughters of Dakṣa named Aditi, Diti, Damu, Kālikā, Taiṁā, Krodhavatā, Manu, and Anālā. Aditi got thirtythree sons and their family consists of the thirtythree cruses of Devas. From Diti were born the dāivate as well as devas. From Damu were born the dānavas Navaśrīmati. Kālikā got two sons, Naraka and Kalaka. Tāṁā got five daughters, Kraunche, Bhārī, Śyenī, Dhirārṣėī and Śukī. Kraunche gave birth to owls, Bhārī to Bhūsas and Śyenī to Śyenas (Vultures, Kites ect.). Dhirārṣėī gave birth to Hanuśa, Kalahamsas and Kosas. Śukī gave birth to Nāṭa and Nāṭa in turn to Vināțā. Krodhavatā gave birth to ten daughters; Mrgī, Mrgamandā, Hari, Bhadrāmā, Mātiṅī, Śardūl, Śretī, Suraḥī, Suraṇī and Kadrā. Of these Mrgī gave birth to beasts, Mrgamandā to trees and plants. Lions and monkeys are the children of Hari, Bhadrāmā got a daughter named śravati. Śravati was the son of śravati. From Matanī were born the elephants and from Śardūl the tigers. The Aṣātīgajas are the sons of Śvetā. Surāblī got two daughters named Rohini and Gaṇḍhari. Gaṇḍhari are the children of Rohini and boonies are the children of Gaṇḍhari. Serpents are the sons of Suraṇī and Kadrū gave birth to makes. From Manu were born men. Trees are the sons of Anālā. Vinatā got two sons named Aruṇa and Geruda. To Aruṇa were born two sons, Jaśṭyin and Baśepati.

4) The end of the World—There are different views in the Purāṇas regarding the end of the world. The different Purāṇas give different views. For knowing the views of Agni Purāṇa on the subject see under the heading “Prālaya.” The eleventh Skandha of Bhāgavata gives the following theory regarding the end of the world.

All the material objects of the world will become illusory. Fire will increase. There will be no rains for hundred years together. The World will be burnt by the heat. The heat will go down to the head of Ananta who holds this world on his head. The Saptameghas (Seven Clouds) will rise up in the sunshine infected with the poisonous breath of Ananta. Then rains will start pouring down in streams as thick as the trunk of an elephant. Everything will be drowned in that water. Viṣṇu alone will be left above the vast expanse of water. (See under Manvantara).

LOKALOKA. There is a mountain between Lokā and Aloka. This is called Lokalokaparvata and the land beside it is called Lokaloka. The mountain is as long as the distance between Mānasaottara and Mahāmeru. This place is golden in colour and as smooth as glass. Not a single being lives there. God has created this as a boundary to the three worlds. All the planets like the Sun get light from the brilliance of this mountain. Brahmadev has posted four diggajas named Vṛahha, Puṣpaśādja, Vāmanā and Aparaśīta in the four corners of this mountain. (8th Skandha, Devi Bhāgavata).

LOKAPĀLA. Indra, Agni, Yama and Varuṇa are called loka-pālas. (Stolka 35, Chapter 57, Vana Parva).

LOKAPĀLASAḤIKHYĀNAPARVA. A sub-di- visional Paṇva of Sabhā Parva. The chapters five to twelve are included in this.

LOKODDHĀRA. A sacred place of Purāṇic importance in India. Lord Viṣṇu raised all the worlds at this place. If anyone bathe in a pond there he will be able to liberate the souls of other people from sins. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

LOLA. Son of a great sage called Siddhāvitra. Lola in his later birth was born of a queen named Upalākavati. His name then was Tāmāsma. (Mārkandeyā Purāṇa).

LOMAHĀRṢAṆA. Father of Sūta who told Purāṇic stories. (1st Skandha, Devi Bhāgavata). He was a member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Stolka 12, Chapter 4, Sabhā Parva).

LOMAPĀDA I. (ROMAPĀDA). A King of the country of Asiga.

2) Other details.

(i) He was a friend of Daśaratha. (Stolka 53, Chapter 10, Vana Parva).

(ii) Once there was no rain in the country of Lomapāda. It was due to a curse from the brahmins and to remove the curse Lomapāda brought Rayaśīraga to his country. Sānta, daughter of Daśaratha was living with Lomapāda as his adopted daughter at that time. Lomapāda gave her in marriage to Rayaśīraga and made him live in his court. From that time onwards, Rayaśīraga and Sānta.

(iii) Lomapāda constructed a new hermitage for Rayaśīraga. (Stolka 9, Chapter 115, Vana Parva).

LOMAPĀDA II. A King born of the Yadu dynasty.

2) Birth. Rukmakavaca, grandfather of Lomapāda conquered many countries and gave them all as gifts to those brahmins who participated in his Asvamedha-yajña. Hemagṛhīt, five bravest Rayaśīraga, Puruṣaras, Mahāśila, Parītha and Hari. Of them he made Rayaśīraga and Hari live and rule in Vedasa. Rukmakavaka ruled his father’s country and Puruṣurasā helped his brother, Jyāmagha was sent out from his country and he lived quietly in a hermitage. One day as per the advice of a sage he left the place in a chariot with a flag flying to the shores of the river Namāha. He had neither servants nor the means for his food. He fixed on the mountain Rśvāvani eating only roots and fruits. He was very old and his wife Sābhāya also was getting old. They had no sons and still Jyāmagha did not marry again.

Once when Jyāmagha gained a victory in a fight, he brought a girl and entrusted the child to his wife saying “This child is your daughter-in-law.” Sābhāya was surprised and enquired “How can that be when I have no son?” Jyāmagha replied, “She is to be the wife of a son who will be born to you soon.” By means of the hard penance of that girl, Sābhāya got a handsome son named Vidarbha. Vidarbha married her and got two wise sons, Kratha and Kāśīka and a third son Lomapāda, who was righteous and virtuous and wise. All the three were great warriors also. Descending in order from Lomapāda came Babhrucu—Hari—Kultika—Cidi. From this Cidi came the Cedi dynasty of Kings. (Sṛṣṭi Khanda, Padma Purāṇa, Bhārana Purāṇa Sahasrādā).

(14) He praised the glory of the holy place Yamunātīrtha, known as Pānikṣprāraṇavaṇa also, near Kurukṛṣṇa. (Chapter 129, Vana Parva).
(15) It was Lomaśa who told the story of the emperor Sīva who gave his own flesh to protect a dove which went to him for refuge. (Chapter 130, Vana Parva).
(16) He told the story of the sage Āsāvakra to the Pāndavas. (Chapter 133, Vana Parva).
(17) He described the story of Yuvakritā and Medhīvā to the Pāndavas. (Chapter 135, Vana Parva).
(18) Dharmaputra heard the stories of Bhāradvāja, Kaśiśya, Arvāvasu and Parāvasu from Lomaśa. (Chapter 137, Vana Parva).
(19) Lomaśa told Dharmaputra the story of Narakāśura and the incarnation of Viṣṇu as Varāha. (Chapter 142, Vana Parva).
(20) Lomaśa visited Bhiṣma lying on his bed of arrows. (Śarit Parva).
(21) Lomaśa praised the glory of giving rice as charity. (Sloka 15, Chapter 87, Anuśāsana Parva).
(22) Lomaśa told the story of a sage from the north. (Sloka 46, Chapter 153, Vana Parva).
(23) Lomaśa relieved many nymphs like Pramohini from their curses. (See under Pramohini).

LOC.: VASA II. A cat. (See under Dīndika).

LOPĀMUDRĀ. Wife of Agastya. (For details see under Agastya).

LUGH. A Rgvedic hermit. It is mentioned in Rgveda that Lusha and Kutsa were rivals to win the mercy of Indra. Once Lusha and Kusāa invited Indra at the same time. But Indra refused Lusha and put him in prison. Even from the prison Lusha prayed to Indra to visit him. (Rgveda, Manuśa 14, Aumukha 88, Śūkta 5; Jaiminiśa Brāhmaṇa 1.129).

M.

MA. This letter has the following meanings—Prosperity, honour and mother. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

MACAKRUTA. A sacred place on the border of Kurukṛṣṇa. A Yāga of name Macakrutā keeps guard over this place. If one bow down before this Yāga one will have to his credit the benefit of a thousand Godānas (giving away cows in charity). (Chapter 83, Vana Parva, M.B.).

MADA I. An Asura. This demon came out of the sacrificial fire of Ciyavana to kill Indra. (See under Ciyavana).

MADA II. One of the Mānasaputras (spiritual sons) of Brahmā. Maṭya Purāṇa states that Madu was born of the Pride of Brahmā.

 MADADHĀRA. A mountain. Bhirāmsena, while on his victory march to the east conquered this mountain. (Sloka 9, Chapter 30, Sabhā Parva).

MADALASĀ. A Vidyādhari. She was married to a Vidyādha named Cūrappa. (See under Cūrappa).

MADALASĀ II. Wife of Rājadhāva, King of Kāśi. Once a demon named Pātālaketu carried away Madalasā and Rājadhāva took her back after defeating Pātālaketu in a fight. Alaka was the son of this couple.

MADANAMĀLĀ. A celebrated prostitute of the city of Pratiśthāna. Narasimha, King of Pratiśthāna, did not surrender himself to Viṣṇumālidaya, emperor of Pātālaloka. The resolute Viṣṇumālidaya imprisoned Pratiśthāna and caught hold of the prostitute Madanamālā first and then through her subdued the King Narasimha. After that Viṣṇumālidaya took Madanamālā to his place and made her stay there. (Tarāṅga 4, Ratnaprabhālamba, Kathāsūrīsāgara).

MADANAMĀNCUKA. A heroine of 'Vatārājaracarita'. Her mother was a nymph in her previous birth. By the grace of Devendra she was born on earth as Kaliṅgaśeṇī and lived serving in the palace of Udayana, King of Vatsa. She desired to make Udayana her husband. In the meantime a Gandharva named Madanavega fell in love with Kaliṅgaśeṇī. Knowing that Kaliṅgaśeṇī was in love with Udayana the Gandharva followed her in the garb of the King Udayana and at last they were married. Kaliṅgaśeṇī soon delivered Madanavega, an incarnation of Rāma. When she grew up the married Narasvanadatta, son of Udayana. (Madanamāncukālamba, Kathāsūrīsāgara, Tarāṅga 8).

MADANAVEGA. A Gandharva. (See under Madanamāncukā).

MADANIKĀ. A nymph, a daughter of Menākā. A demon named Vidvyudrūpa married her. But Kandbara of the family of Gaṇuṣa killed Vidvyudrūpa, and took Madanikā for himself. They get a child named Tārā. (Mārkaṇḍeyā Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

MADAYANTI. Wife of King Kalmāśapāda. He was known as Mitrashā and Saudāsa also. When Kalmāśapāda lay cursed Vasiṣṭha begot a child of Madayanti named Aśmaka. Madayanti gave her ears-rings to the sage Uṣīanka. (For details see under Uṣīanka and Kalmāśapāda).

MĀDHAVA I. A synonym of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Because Śrī Kṛṣṇa could be properly understood by Manu, Dhyāna and Yoga he got the name Mādhava. (Sloka 5, Chapter 7, Udyoga Parva).

MĀDHAVA II. Son of Viṣṇu, King of Tālādhāva. The Kṛṣṇa Khandha of Padma Purāṇa gives the following story about him.

Mādhava desired to marry a beautiful and good-natured Kṣatriya girl named Candrala. She was not prepared for that and she informed Mādhava thus:

"There is a princess in the island of Plakṣa named Sulocanā. She is far more beautiful than myself and is fit to be your consort. Do try to get her."

Mādhava accepted the advice of Candrakalā and started for the island of Plakṣa with a servant of his named Praceṣṭa. The news that welcomed him when he reached the island was that the marriage of Sulocanā had been fixed with one Vidyādharā. Undaunted Mādhava sent a love-letter to the princess mentioning his arrival in the city, seeking her hand in marriage. In reply to that Sulocanā wrote that if Mādhava appeared on the marriage-day in time she would accept him as her husband.

The marriage day arrived and Mādhava waited for the time of the function. But when the auspicious hour came Mādhava was asleep. Praceṣṭa, his servant, took advantage of the opportunity and carried away Sulocanā. But Sulocanā was determined to marry only Mādhava and she escaped from the custody of Praceṣṭa and reached the palace of a King called Suṣeṇa and stayed there as a servant wearing the robes of a male, calling himself Vīravara.

Vīravara, a slave in disguise, saved Vidyādharā and Praceṣṭa from committing suicide. At that time Mādhava also in despair was about to commit suicide when Sulocanā appeared before him in time and stopped him from doing it. Sulocanā then told him all that had happened and they were happily united as husband and wife.

MĀDHAVA III. A son born to Yadu of his wife Dhūravārī. The renowned Yēṣavā dynasty was established by this Yadu and his son Mādhava. (Harivansha).

MĀDHAVA IV. A virtuous brahmin. Once when he was about to sacrifice a goat in the sacrificial fire the goat in human voice told the story of its previous birth and requested the brahmin to sacrifice it after reciting the mantra chanted of the Gītā. Mādhava did so and the goat got salvation. (Uttara Kāṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

MĀDHAVI I. Daughter of King Yayātī. A lady friend she always wore decorously as her garment and went on observing a Vṛata called Mrugavāra: Yayātī gave this daughter in marriage to Gālava. (Śloka 12, Chapter 145, Udyoga Parva). Mādhavi bore a son named Vasumātī in Varmavās to Haravya, King of Ayodhyā. She got of Divodāsā, King of Kāśi, another son named Pratardana; of the King of Uśāsā she got a son named Śibi. Besides these she got a son named Āstaka of Viśvāmitra. (See under Gālava). When the accrued merit of Yayātī was exhausted and he fell down from heaven Mādhavi consented to part with half of her stock of merit to Yayātī. (See under Yayātī).

MĀDHAVI I. A follower of Subrahmanyā. (Śloka 7, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

MĀDHU I. One of the Asuras born from the ear-wax of Mahāvīra. The other was named Kaitabha. (For details see under KAITABHA).

MĀDHU II. Once there lived in a forest-garden on the shores of the Yamunā an Asura of name Mādhu. Sārūghna killed his Mādhu and established there a city called Mathurāpurī. (Uttara Kāṇḍa, Kamba Rāmāyana). While Indrājīt, son of Rāvana, was performing penance Mādhu carried away a demoness named Kumbhūmā and there ensued a fight on that account between Mādhu and Rāvana in which Mādhu was killed.

MĀDHU III. A king who used to sit in the court of Yama and worship him. (Śloka 16, Chapter 8, Subhā Parva).

MĀDHUCCANDAS. A sage who observed correctly the Aśrama of Vānaprastha. He was one of the Brahmavādī sons of Viśvāmitra. (Śloka 50, Chapter 4, Anuśasana Parva). Viśvāmitra had a hundred sons like Mādhuucandha (Viduruvīra) and Bhāgavata). The first Śākta of Rēvada was written by this sage.

MĀDHIKAṬABHA Ś. Two Asuras named Mādhu and Kaṭabha. (See under Kaṭabha).

MĀDHUKUMBHA. A follower of Subrahmanyā. (Śloka 19, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

MĀDHULIKĀ. A follower of Subrahmanyā. (Śloka 19, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

MĀDHUMĀN. A place of habitation of ancient India. (Śloka 58, Chapter 9, Bhisma Parva).

MĀDHUPARAKA. One of the children of Gauḍa. (Śloka 15, Chapter 11, Udyoga Parva).

MĀDHURA. A soldier of Subrahmanyā. (Śloka 71, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

MĀDHVAKRASA. A celestial maiden. She once conducted a dance performance in honour of Arjuna. (Śloka 30, Chapter 45, Vana Parva).

MĀDHUSĀKTA. An Asura. During the time of the emperor Prthvī, the earth was turned into a cow and people milked from her the things they wanted. Mādhusākta was the person who did the milking for the Asuras.

MĀDHUSRAVA. A sacred place in Kurukṣetra, situated near another another holy place called Bhūdaka. If one bathes in a pond there one will have to his credit the benefit of making a thousand Godānas. (Śloka 15, Chapter 88, Vana Parva).

MĀDHUSUḌANA. Another name for Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Because he killed an Asura named Mādhu he was called Mathurāṇa. (Śloka 16, Chapter 207, Vana Parva).

MĀDHUSYANDA. A sage who was the son of Viśvāmitra. (Sarga 62, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Viśvāmitra Rāmāyaṇa).

MĀDHUVANA. A forest-garden owned by the great monkey-king Sugrīva. After finding out the whereabouts of Śītā, Hanūmān and Aṅgada accompanied by other monkeys entered this garden and drank honey to their heart’s content. (Chapter 282, Vana Parva and Sundara Kāṇḍa, Viśvāmitra Rāmāyaṇa).

MĀDHUVARSHA. A soldier of Subrahmanyā. (Śloka 72, Chapter 42, Śalya Parva).

MĀDHUVAYT. A sacred place on the border of Kurukṣetra. If one bathes in a sacred pond there and worships the Manes one will have to one’s credit the benefit of making a thousand Godānas (giving away cows in charity). (Śloka 94, Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

MĀDHUVĪDYĀ. A special mystical lore of the Devas. This was imparted to the sage Dādhyān by Indra. (See under Dādhyān).

MĀDHUVIḷā (MĀDHU빌라). A river which flows in the neighbourhood of Kardamāla kṣetra. This river has another name Samandā. This is a very sacred tirtha. Indra who became a Brahmahatāyī-sinner by killing Vṛisārṇa was absolved of his sins by taking a bath in this river. Āśtvākara, the sage with eight bends in his body, got himself perfect by taking a bath in this river obeying the orders of his father Kahoḍakā. (Chapter 135, Vana Parva).
MADRī, Wife of Vasudeva, father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Vasudeva had seven wives named Rohiṇī, Bhadrānāmini, Madrī, Kṛṣṇā, Pauravī, Padvā, and Devād (9th Ādīr, Bhāgavata). Of these, Devakī, Rohiṇī, and Bhadrā abandoned their lives by jumping into the funeral pyre of Vasudeva. (Sloka 18, Chapter 7, Maṇrākṣa Parva).

MADRĪKĀṢA (MADRĪKĀṢA). I. A brother of Virātā, King of Matsya. When the Kauravas made Trigarta carry away the cattle of Virātā it was Madrīkāṣa who faced Trigarta in a fight. A great fight ensued between Trigarta and Madrīkāṣa. He had slain one of the chief fairs of the army of King Virātā. He was a very charitable man well-versed in Dhanuvārā (archery). He was killed in the big battle by Droṇācārya. Chapters 31, 33, 82 Virāṭa Parva; 171, Udāyo Parva and 9, Karṇa Parva.

MADRĪKĀṢA II (MADRĪKĀṢA). A king of the dynasty of Kṣiyā. He was the son of King Daśāśvē. Madrīkāṣa was a sainthood well-versed in archery. He was a very righteous person also. (278, Anuśāna Parva). Madrīkāṣa had a son named Duryūmān and a daughter named Sumādhvyā. (2, 6, Anuśāna Parva.) After giving Sumādhvyā in marriage to a sage named Hṛṣyāvahana Madrīkāṣa married his own daughter. (226: 34 Sānti Parva, and 82, Anuśāna Parva).

MADRĪKĀTA. A ferocious lion mentioned in Pañcāntara. (See under Pañcāntara).

MADRĀ. One of the ten wives of Atrimaharṣi. Atri got of Madra a son named Soma. (Brahmaṇya Purāṇa).

MADRĀ (M). An ancient place of habitation in Bhārata. This is situated near the river Jhelum. Madrā was the capital of the Pāṇḍu princess of the place. Bhīma went to Madrā and brought Madrā for Pāṇḍu. (Chapter 12, Ādi Parva). At the time of Arjuna’s birth there was a voice from heaven which said, “This child will grow up and capture many countries like Madrā”. Arvapati, father of Sāvītiri, was a king of Madrā. Karṇa condemned Madrā and Vāśiṅka as countries which had fallen on the earth. (Chapter 44, Karṇa Parva).

MADRĀKA I. Kṣatriya king of ancient Bhārata. He was born of the partial spirit of the demon Krodhavāda. (Sloka 59, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

MADRĀKA II. Soldiers of the country of Madrā were called Madrakas. Madrakas were included in the Kaurav army. (Sloka 7, Chapter 51, Bhāma Parva).

MADRĀKĀṢA. A place of habitation of ancient India. (Sloka 42, Chapter 9, Bhāma Parva).

MADRĀVATI I. Wife of Paṭīkṣi, son of Abhimanyu. She was the mother of Janamejaya. (Sloka 85, Chapter 15, Ādi Parva).

MADRĀVATI II. Another name for Mādri, wife of Pāṇḍu. (Sloka 55, Chapter 52, Sābhā Parva).

MADRĪYĀJĀGALA. A place of habitation of ancient India. (Sloka 39, Chapter 9, Bhāma Parva).

MADRĪ. Mādrī who was the second wife of Paṇḍu was a daughter of the King of Madrā. She was the sister of Śalā. Nakula and Sañēdeva took birth from Madrī. Paṇḍu expired when he embraced his wife Mādrī. It was because of a curse of the hermit Kindama. Mādrī ended her life in the pyre with her husband. (For further details see under the word Pāṇḍu).

MADYA. Wine. There is a story in the seventh Skandha of Devī Bhāgavata how Mādya happened to be an intoxicant. Once Indra sent out the Atśīndevas from Devakī and banned wine to them. They took refuge in Cīvavana a great sage. Cīvavana conducted a special Yāga and invited the Atśīndevas to partake of the Yajñā. Indra objected to this and Cīvavana had to face Indra in a fight. Then Cīvavana produced from the sacrificial fire a demon named Māda and he rushed at Indra to kill him. Indra then bowed down before Cīvavana and craved for pardon. Cīvavana withdrew the demon and teaching him into four pieces put one each in dice, hunting, wine and women. That was how all the four became intoxicating.

In ancient India there were certain social conventions regarding drinking of alcoholic preparations. All those drinks which were intoxicants were not listed as ‘Alcohol’. Wine, honey, toddy, juice of sugarcane, juice of truppa and Kūtampuli, and sweet toddy of palm trees were not considered alcohol. Śūra (liquor) chiefly meant Pāṇi (liquor made out of rice paste). Drinking of Śūra was banned to the three castes, Brahmaṇa, Kṣatriya and Vaiśya. If they drank Śūra they had to perform a penance for a year drinking only water or eat long pepper for a year. To be free from the sin of drinking Śūra one should wear dresses made of animal hair. Even if one drinks water in a pot in which Śūra was taken, one should observe Vrata for seven days. (Chapter 173, Agni Purāṇa).

MAGA-S (S). The brahmās residing in the island of Śāka are generally called Magas. The Brahmaparva of Bhaviśya Purāṇa and the Śāmba Purāṇa speak about the Magas thus: Śāmba, son of Kṛṣṇa, did severe penance to please Śūrayudha and pleased with the unceasing devotion of Śūrṇa Śūrya gave him a luminous replica of himself for worship. Śāmba constructed a beautiful temple by the side of the Candrabhūgā river and installed the idol there. He then brought from Śākadvipa the brahmās called Magas for conducting the ceremonies of the temple. All the eighteen families of Maga brahmās came and stayed near the temple at the request of Śāmba.

MAGADHA. A famous city of ancient India. Its present name is Rājaghaṇa. The Purāṇas mention many great Kings who had ruled Magadhā. Bhadrākata was once King of Magadhā. (Sloka 30, Chapter 63, Ādi Parva) Jayasena one of the Gaṅkākeyas was once the King of Magadhā. (Sloka 48, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva). Pāṇḍu, father of the Pāṇḍavas once attacked Magadhā and when the King of Magadhā was killed by Pāṇḍu. (Chapter 112, Ādi Parva). While Bhadrākata was ruling Magadhā he passed an order that each and every house should worship the demoness Jārā as a house-goddess. (Sloka 10, Chapter 13, Sābhā Parva). During the time of the Mahābhārata Jārāsandha was the King of Magadhā. Śrī Kṛṣṇa made Bhimaṇa kill Jārāsandha. After his death Śrī Kṛṣṇa made Sañēdeva brother of Jārāsandha the King of Magadhā. (Sloka 49, Chapter 24, Sābhā Parva). Bhimaṇa conquered this country during his victory march. The people of Magadhā offered gifts to Yudhiṣṭhira at his Rājaṇyā. (Sloka 18, Chapter 62, Sābhā Parva). The King of Magadhā and the people there fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas in the great battle. (Sloka 2, Chapter 33, Udāyo Parva).

MAGADHAS. A particular tribe of people. It was the work of Śākṣa to drive chariots and the work of Pulkas to hunt, the work of the Magadhās was that of an adulator. (Chapter 151, Agni Purāṇa). This work of a flatterer was given to them by Brahma. When the emperor Prthu was born. Brahmā conducted a Yāga. On the day of sütā at the place of Somābhāya of the Yāga a very intelligent Sūta was born. At the same yāga a Māgadhā rāja was born. He was an excellent scholar. Then the sages told Māgadhā and Sūta thus: “Praise this king Prthu, who is the very son of Vena. Praising is the fittest work suited to you both. Prthu deserves praise.” Then the Sūta-Māgadhās placing their hands on their breasts with respect said, “What do we know of the qualities and capabilities of a king just born? His fame is not known. Randassu is not even a word used in the world. (Chapter 13, Verse 70. Annā 1. Viśnu Purāṇa.)

MĀGADHĪ. A river which flows through the middle of five mountains. (Sarga 32, Bala Kāṇḍa, Valmiki Rāmāyana.)

MAGHA I. A sacred place. If one visits this place one would get the benefit of performing the yajñas like Agnīṣṭoma and Aitāra. (Śloka 51, Chapter 84, Vana Parva.)

MAGHA II. One of the twenty-four constellations. The importance of this constellation is mentioned in the Mahābhārata in several places.
(i) When the planet Kuja (Mars), during its retrograde motion, comes near the constellation of Māgha many unusual incidents occur in the world. (Śloka 14, Chapter 3, Bhīṣma Parva.)
(ii) If Candras stays near Māgha it is an omen. (Śloka 2, Chapter 17, Bhīṣma Parva.)
(iii) If one gives away land in charity on the day of Māgha one will be rich in children and cattle. (Śloka 12, Chapter 69, Anuśāsana Parva.)
(iv) If one sees the moon in the black ball of the moon of October the menes will be pleased. (Śloka 7, Chapter 88, Anuśāsana Parva.)
(v) If one worships the Māsas on the day of Māgha sitting in the shade of an elephant, the menes will be satisfied. (Śloka 8, Chapter 66, Anuśāsana Parva.)
(vi) If one worships the Māsas and the obsequial rites and acts of charity on the day of Māgha one would be one of the most excellent member of the family. (Śloka 5, Chapter 89, Anuśāsana Parva.)

MAHĀGA. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 7th Century A.D. The only work of his which has come to light is Siṣṇupāladva known popularly as Māgha.

Upāsanāsūrya / Bhāravaṛthagaṇurauma / Dandeśin padalāliyin

Māgha santi trayo gunā / / This is a very famous verse meaning thus: “The simile of Kālidāsa, the depth of meaning of the words of Bhāravi and the simplicity of the language of Dvāpatī are all present in Māgha”. This indicates how great a poet Māgha was.

From the last part of this Kāvyā it can be surmised that Māgha was the son of Dattaka and grandson of Suprabhādeva. Suprabhādeva was the minister of a king called Dharmadeva. Māgha was born in Gujarāt. A literary critic named Jacobí fixes the period of Māgha at the 6th century A.D. while others fix it as the 8th century A.D. Māgha has made references to the drama Nāgavanda' written by Harṣa. Harṣa was a king during the period 605 to 649 and that is why the period of Māgha is fixed after that period.

MAGHA. A month (February). This is so called because it is closely associated with the constellation Māgha. This month is between the months of Pāśa and Phālguṇa. Māhābhārata makes some statements about the importance of the month of Māgha.
(i) He who bathes at Prayāga during this month will be free from all sins. (Śloka 37, Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva.)
(ii) He who gives gingly as gift to Brahmans during this month will never go to hell. (Śloka 8, Chapter 66, Anuśāsana Parva.)
(iii) If one takes food only once a day during the whole of this month one will be born very rich in the next birth. (Śloka 31, Chapter 106, Anuśāsana Parva.)
(iv) If one worships Śrī Kṛṣṇa fasting on the Dvādadātī day of Māgha one will get the ben-efit of conducting a Kāśyapa yajña. (Śloka 3, Chapter 109, Anuśāsana Parva.)
(v) Bhīṣma expressed his desire to Kṛṣṇa to end his life on the astamī day falling in the bright fortnight of the month of Māgha. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 167, Śloka 28.)

MAHĀBHĀHU. One of the hundred sons of Dhrītarāṣṭra. Bhīmasena killed him in the Bhārata Yuddha. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 19.)

MAHĀBALA I. Minister of Śrīdatta. (See under the word Śrīdatta.)

MAHĀBALA II. A follower of Lord Subrahmany. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 71.)

MAHĀBALI. See under the word Hali.

MAHĀBHĀUMA. Son of Arjuna, a King of the Puru dynasty. He had a son Ayatānāyī by his wife Suyājā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 19.)

MAHĀBHAYA. A Rākṣasa. He was born to Ardhanārya by his wife Nīru. Mahābhaya had two brothers named Bhaya and Mrtyu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 54.)

MAHĀBHĪSAK. A King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He had another name Santanu. (For further details see under Santanu.)

MAHĀBHĪJOJA. A Yādava King. (Bhāgavata, 9th Sandhā.)

MAHĀCŪDA. A woman follower of Subrahmany. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 5.)

MAHĀGAṆĀ. A river in ancient India. (Mahābhārata, Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 33).

MAHĀGO. A river (Nuda) celebrated in the Purāṇas. It is also known as "Somabhadra" and Mahāśāna. It is after crossing this river that Krūṇa, Bhīma and Arjuna entered Magadha, the capital of Jārāsandha. (M.B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 27).

MAHĀHANU. A nāga born in the family of Taksaka. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 30, we read that this nāga was burnt to death in Janamejaya’s "Sarpasatcha".

MAHĀHANUS. One of the sons of Vasudeva by Rohini. (Matya Purāṇa).

MAHĀHAYA. A King of the Yayāti dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 8th Skanda).

MAHĀHAYA. A holy place. One who takes a bath here will never be in misfortune. M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 48 says that one who takes bath here and spends a month fasting with a pure heart will attain salvation.

MAHĀJANU. A Brāhmaṇa. When Pramadavāryā lay bitten by a serpent, this brāhmaṇa came near her with serpents’ eyes. (See under Pramadavāryā).

MAHĀJAYA. A woman follower of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalva Purāṇa, Chapter 46, Verse 22).

MAHĀJAYA. One of the two Parśadas presented to Subrahmanya by Vaiśūki, the king of serpents. The other one was Jaya (M.B. Śalva Purāṇa, Chapter 43, Verse 52).

MAHĀJALĀ. A hell. (See under Kāla 1).

MAHĀKĀLĀ. A tree standing on the tall peak of Sūpārśa mountain. The Purāṇas declare that five big rivers take their sources from the hollow trunk of this big tree. These rivers fall on the top of Sūpārśa mountain and flow through the western side of Liṅga. The region around this place to a distance of a hundred yojanas is filled with the fragrant air breathed out by the gods who feed upon the essence of the waters in these rivers. The Dei who lives in this sacred place is called "Dhāreśvara". (Devi Bhāgavata, 8th Skanda).

MAHĀKĀLĀ I. A Śiva parśada. Mahābhārata, Sahā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 34 mentions that Śiva Parśadas known as Mahākālās flourished in the assembly of Kañci Mahārāja.

MAHĀKĀLĀ II. A sacred place situated in the Śipā river valley in Ujjain. The Sīvalinga installed in this place is called "Mahākāla." Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 40 says that those who take a bath in the Kośī at this place, get the same effect as that of an A śramaṇa yāga.

MAHĀKĀLĀ I. The mother of the Rākṣasa Dūṣana. (Valmiki Rāmāyana, King Rāma, 11th Sarga).

MAHĀKĀLĀ II. A nāga who attacked Rama and Laksmana at Paṅkravatī in Valmiki Rāmāyana, Aranyaka Parva, 25th Sarga we read that when Rama and Laksmana fought with Khara, Dūṣana and Trīśiras there were three terrible Rākṣasas named Mahākāpāla, Śubhākāpa and Pramāthun.

MAHĀKARNI. A wicked minister of Ambibica, King of Magadha. There is a reference to him in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 203, Verse 19.

MAHĀKARNI II. A woman follower of Lord Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalva Purāṇa, Chapter 265, Verse 26).

MAHĀKĀŚA. A particular subcontinent in the Saka island. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 25).

MAHĀKĀYĀ. A woman follower of Lord Subrahmanya. (M.B. Śalva Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 24).

MAHĀKRAUNGA. A mount in the Krauṅga island. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 7).

MAHĀLAYA. A holy place. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 54 mentions that one who observes a fast at this holy place for one month, will be absolved of all sins.

MAHĀMĀLI. A Rākṣasa hero of Rāvana’s army. He was killed in the battle at Paṅcavaṭi between Rāma and Laksmana on one side and Khara, Dūṣana and Trīśiras on the other, over the affair of Śīraṇaṅkha. Mahāmāli appeared on the scene as a commander of Khara’s army. (Valmiki Rāmāyana, Aranyaka Parva, 25th Sarga).

MAHĀMĀNAS. Grand-son of Janamejaya, a King of the Asita dynasty. Mahāśāla was the son of Janamejaya and Mahāmānas was the son of Mahāśāla. Uśīnara was the son of Mahāmanas. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

MAHĀMATICI. The seventh son of the sage Asīgas. There is a reference to him in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 7.

MAHĀMERE. The golden coloured peak of Himavān. The seat of Lord Śiva, according to the Purāṇas.

1) General features. Mahāmeru surpasses even the sun in its dazzling golden brilliance. Devas and Gandharvas attend on it on all sides. It is inaccessible to sinners. There are celestial herbs and serpents at its base. It is Mahāmeru that keeps Heaven in its place by supporting it. The atmosphere there, is always alive with the sweet songs of various kinds of birds. Precious stones are scattered all over its surface. All the 33 crores of gods dwell on the sides of this Mountain. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 17).

Saptarśi like Vāsīṣṭha rise and fall on Mahāmeru. Mahā Vīṣṇu and Brahman have their places in Mahāmeru. Vīṣṇu’s place is in the east. There is a special place there for the residence of Mahārāja. Those who go to Mahāmeru never return. The Sun and Moon go round Mahāmeru everyday. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 163).

There are twenty mountains surrounding Mahāmeru. On the eastern side there are two mountains, Jāra and Devakūta. On the western side there are two mountains, Pavamāna and Pārvatī. On the southern side are the two mountains, Kailāsa and Karavīra and on the northern side, the two mountains, Trīśiras and Makaragiri. Thus Mahāmeru shines like the sun in the midst of eight mountains. In the middle of Mahāmeru is situated Brahamākosa, the abode of Brahamā, in a square extending over 10,000 yojanas. This region is of inexpressible splendour. At eight places around this Brahmapuri, there are situated the eight posts or abodes of the Aṣṭādikāpālas, each of the abodes being 25,000 yojanas in extent. Thus there are nine Purīs or Cities.

on the top of Mahāmeru. They are:— (1) Brahmapāni Manovant in the centre. (2) Due east of it, Indra's Amaravati. (3) In the south-east corner, Agni's Tejovatī. (4) On the southern side, Yama's Samayamanī. (5) In the south-west corner, Nṛtṛī's Kṛṣnāñjana. (6) On the western side, Varuna's Sṛdrdāvātī. (7) In the north-west corner, Vīyu's Gandharvātī. (8) On the northern side, Kubera's Mahodayā. (9) In the north-east corner, Bhārā's Yuvatī. (Devī Bhāgavatā, 8th Skanda.)

2) Mahāmeru and Lātkā. Rāvana's place of abode Lātkā was really a peak of Mahāmeru. (For further details, see the previous history of Lātkā in Parā 5 under the word Kubera.)

3) How Mahāmeru got its golden colour. The Purāṇas declare that the sun keeps going round Mahāmeru. Once, while the sun was thus going round, he wished to take a little rest. He asked permission to place the axle of his chariot for a short while on Mahāmeru. The mountain agreed to it. The grateful Sun-god (Sūrya) blessed Mahāmeru that it would thenceforth have golden colour. Until it received this blessing, Mahāmeru had the colour of ordinary mountains.

(i) Two daughters named Ayatī and Niyati were born to Mahāmeru. They were married by Dīnāk and Vidyāśhā respectively. (Vīṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 10).

(ii) Vasiṣṭha had an ārama near Mahāmeru. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 99, Verse 5).

(iii) Kubera's residence is supposed to be on Kubera's assembly. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 73).

(iv) The golden Jambū Vrksa stands on the southern side of Mahāmeru. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 38).

(v) At the time of Emperor Prthu, the earth was turned into a cow and all living beings obtained all their necessaries by milking her. It was Mahāmeru who stood as milking-mau on behalf of the mountains. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69, Verse 18).

(vi) In Tripura-dahana, it was Mahāmeru which was erected as the flag-staff in Śiva's chariot. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 202, Verse 78).

(vii) Mahāmeru presented two Pārṣadas named Kaṭkana and Meghānti to Subrahmanyā. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 48).

(viii) Mahāmeru once presented heaps of gold to Emperor Prthu. (M.B. Śantī Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 1).

(ix) Mahāmeru is appointed as the king of mountains. (M.B. Śantī Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 18).

(x) Mahābhārata, Śantī Parva, Chapter 341, Verse 22 says that Vyasā once stayed on Mahāmeru with his disciples.

(xi) Śhūlaśiras and Badavamukha once performed tapas on Mahāmeru. (M.B. Śantī Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 59).

MAHĀMUKHA. A warrior of King Jayadratha. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 16 mentions that he was killed by Nakula in the battle which followed the forcible abduction of Pāṇḍū by Jayadratha.

MAHĀPADMA 1. The first King of the Nanda dynasty. According to Vaṣu Purāṇa and Matsya Purāṇa, Mahāpadma was the son of Mahānandī, the last King of the Śkṣuto dynasty. Nanda was the son of Mahānandī by a Śīḍa woman. He killed his father and founded the Nanda dynasty.

MAHĀPADMA 2. An elephant in Gāṅgaṭikaṇa's elephant army during the Bhārata Yuddha. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 51).

MAHĀPADMA 3. One of the Asādīgajas. (The eight elephants guarding the eight cardinal points). (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 57).

MAHĀPADMAPURA. An ancient place in the south of the Gāṅga river valley. (M.B. Śantī Parva, Chapter 353, Verse 1).

MAHĀPAGA. A famous river in ancient India. There is a reference to this river in Mahābhārata, Bīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 29.

MAHĀPĀRADEŚAVARA. A follower of Lati Subrahmanyā. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 66).

MAHĀPĀRŚVA 1. One of the hermit-warriors of Rāvana. In the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa, all those warriors were killed. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 11).

MAHĀPĀRŚVA 2. A mountain to the north-east of Śiva's abode on the top of Mount Kailāsa. There is a reference to this mountain in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 21.

MAHĀPĀRAŚTHĀNIKA PARVA. A subsidiary Parva in Mahābhārata which describes the Mahāprāśthāna conducted by the Pāṇḍavas after the Bhārata Yuddha.

MAHĀPUMĀN. A mountain. (Mahābhārata, Bīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 20).

MAHĀPURA. A holy place. Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 26 states that if one performs a bath in this place and leads a pure life here for three nights, one will become fearless.

MAHĀRAUDA. A Rākṣasa who was the friend of Gāṅgaṭikaṇa. He was killed by Durūḍhāna at the battle of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 20).}

MAHĀRAUCHARVA (M). A nāraka (hell). (See the section on Nāraka under the word Kāla I).}

MAHĀRAVA. A King of the Yadu dynasty. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, we read that this Kaśトリya King had participated in the festival conducted by Yadavas at the Ravaṇa mountain.

MAHARLOKA. A world. As it was believed by the ancients that there are a dozen yojanas above the "Dhruvapada", Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part II, Chapter 7 says that it is there that sages like Bhrigu live till the end of Kalpa.

MAHĀRAGHA. A King of the Solar dynasty. He was the son of Kuśirā and father of Svarāparnā. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skanda, 15).

MAHĀŚILĀ. A King of the Aṅga dynasty. He was the son of Janamejaya and father of Mahāmanas. (Agui Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

MAHĀŚAKHKHA I. A crocodile celebrated in the Purāṇas. He had a wife named Saṅkhind. The seven children born to Saṅkhind became the Maruṣis in the Śvārōciśa Manvantara. There is a story in Chapter 72, Viṣṇu Purāṇa about these children who become Maruṣis.

Rādhvaja, son of Śvārōciśa Manu had seven heroic sons. They went to Mahāmeru and began to worship Bṛhaṇa for gaining Indra's place. Indra was alarmed. He sent the Apsarā woman, Pūtānā to the sons of Rādhvaja to obstruct their tapas. There was a river flowing at the side of their tapas. Rādhvaja's sons came to the river to take their bath. Just at that time, Pūtānā also came there and began to take bath. At her sight, the young men had an involuntary omission of semen. Saṅkhind, wife of the crocodile Mahāśakhkha swallowed it. The princes whose tapas was interrupted returned to the palace. Pūtānā returned to Indra and reported the matter.

After 50 years, Saṅkhind happened to be caught in a fisherman's net. The fisherman caught her and informed Rādhvaja's sons about their catch. They took her to the palace and put her in a tank there. In due course Saṅkhind gave birth to seven children. Immediately after that she attained mokṣa. The children began to cry for mother's milk, moving about in the water. Then Bṛhaṇa appeared to them and told them not to cry and assured them that they would become the Devas of "Vivya 'sandha'. He took them up to the sky and put them in Vivyaśandha. These children were the Maruṣis of the Śvārōciśa Manvantara.

MAHĀ-ĀNKHA II. A Nāga. Bhāgavata, 10th Skanda says that this Nāga revolves along with the sun in the niṃbha period.

MAHĀSENĀ I. Another name for Subrahmanya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 27).

MAHĀSENĀ II. A prince of Ujjayinī. (See under Angrakṣa 1).

MAHĀŚIRAS I. An ancient sage. In Mahābhārata, Sañkhya Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 10 we find that this sage was in the assembly of Dharmaputra.

MAHĀŚIRAS II. A Nāga. Mahābhārata, Sañkhya Parva, Chapter 9 states that this Nāga worships Varuṇa in Varuṇa's assembly.

MAHĀŚRANA. A holy place. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, says that a person who spends a night here observing a fast, would obtain "Subha-bloka". One who spends three months like that will become a "Pramasiddhā". (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 17).

MAHĀŚODRA. One of the Aśuras who fought against Subrahmanya. (Skanda Purāṇa, Aśura Kānda).

MAHĀŚVĀ. A King celebrated in the Purāṇas. Mahābhārata, Śabha Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 19 says that this King now lives in Yama's assembly.

MAHĀŚVANA. A follower of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 40, Verse 26).

MAHĀTALA. A section of Pāṇiśa. The descendants of the serpent Kāḍū live here. These serpents are many-headed and terrible monsters. Chief among them are Karaka, Takṣaka, Śūkaṇa, Kāliya and others. All these serpents have long and slender bodies, large hoods and are of very cruel nature. Still they are all afraid of Garoṣa and so live quietly with their families in Mahātala. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skanda).

MAHĀṬAPA. A great sage. Varāha Purāṇa states that this sage advised King Suprabha to worship Viṣṇu.

MAHĀṬEJAS. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 6).

MAHAT. Nārada's Virū (Lute). It was this Mahati which became the lute in the world, as the result of a curse. (See under Nārada).

MAHĀṬTARA. One of the five sons of the Agni Pātān- jaya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 9).

MAHĀUJAS I. A King of ancient Bhārata. The Pāṇḍavas had invited this King to take part in the great battle. (Skoka 22, Chapter 1, Udyoga Parva).

MAHĀUJAS II. A dynasty of Kaśトリyas. King Varuṇa was born in this dynasty. (Skoka 13, Chapter 74, Udyoga Parva).

MAHĀVEΓĀ. A woman follower of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 16).

MAHĀVIRĀ I. A son of Priyavrata. Śvāyambhavā, 12th Skanda had two famous sons named Priyavrata and Utānapāpa. Of them, Priyavrata married Śūrāṇa and Bārīṣmati, the two beautiful and virtuous daughters of Viśvākarma Pājāpati. By his first wife Priyavrata had ten sons, namely, Agnīdhana, Idaṃjīva, Yañjīvāh, Mahāvīra, Rukmānąkha, Gaṅgāśīrṣa, Švāna, Medhatithi, Viṣṇoṣa and Kavi. The youngest of his children was a daughter named Utānapāpa. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skanda).

MAHĀVIRĀ II. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 68, refers to a Mahāvīra, who was the re-birth of the Aśura Krodhavāša.

MAHĀYASĀS. A woman follower of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Sālya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 28).

MAHENDRA I. Father of the princess Pāṭallī. (See under Pāṭaliputra).

MAHENDRA II. One of the holy mountains. This mountain has great Purāṇic importance.

(1) After slaugthering the Kaśトリyas to extinction sage Parasurāma made Mahendra his place of abode. (Skoka 5, Chapter 129, Ādi Parva).

(2) Once Arjuna visited the mountain Mahendra. (Skoka 13, Chapter 214, Ādi Parva).

(3) The presiding deity of this mountain sits in the court of Kubera worshipping him. (Skoka 30, Chapter 10, Sañkhya Parva).
Mahishā was a King who became prosperous by accrued punya. Kaṭyaṇa was his guru. The King entrusted the affairs of the state to his ministers and led a very immoral life. The country began to decay day by day and one day Kaṭyaṇa gave Dharmopadeśa to Mahishā. The Guru said: "Oh King, your body which was in a state of sinning has attained a state of virtue by your association with me. Those well-versed in the Vedas say that the body is of three different kinds. Firstly there is the one which is evil-minded without either virtue or knowledge. Secondly, there is the virtuous one with good conduct. Thirdly, there is the acting body which hides both virtue and evil. The body without virtue and salvation is always a body of sins. Your body has now become virtuous by becoming devotional to your guru and attending to my words. You are now fit to do various deeds and I shall now make you enjoy the benefits of Vaiśākhānana (a bath with religious rites in the month of Vaiśākhā).

After that Kaṭyaṇa made him take the bath and worship with proper Vedic rites in the month of Vaṣiṇī. The King became old and died. At once the servants of Kāla (King of Death) came to fetch the soul of Mahishā. But angels from Mahavidya came and thrusting aside the agents of Kāla took charge of the soul of Mahishā. Nyāmsū from above sang in praise of the King whose sin had waned because of Vaiśākhapratītikā (early morning bath in the month of Vaiśākhā). The angels from Vaṣṇu carrying the soul of the King to Svarga took him through hell. The King heard the agonizing of the suffering from different kinds of torture in hell. The King made enquiries and feeling compassionate requested those in charge of the hell to release those there in hell then by accepting a portion of the punya acquired by him. The angels agreed to that and the King gave away the Punya he had acquired during one day by observing the Vaṣṭúvāhana. At once all those in hell were released from the agony and were sent to heaven. (Vaiśākhāmāhātmyuparākaraṇa, Padma Purāṇa, Pāṭalākhanda).

MAHIṢA. An Asura. 1) Birth. Long ago there was a famous Asura King named Danu. Two sons named Rambha and Karambha were born to him. Having no issue, he decided to worship Mālava vāja, praying to be blessed with children. They started tapas, Karambha, in the middle of water and Rambha in the middle of Paṇciganj. Indra was alarmed at their tapas. He took the form of a crocodile and went into the water in which Karambha was standing and caught hold of his feet, pulling him down. Karambha addressed to the mighty Rambha who was enraged at the death of his brother, decided to cut off his own head and offer it as sacrifice in the fire. He drew his sword and was about to cut off his head, when Agni, the god of fire, appeared before him and stopped him saying: "Do not kill yourself. Killing another person itself is a sin. Suicide is a more serious sin. Ask for any boon you wish to have; I shall grant it. Do not put an end to your life."

Then Rambha replied: "If you are prepared to grant me a boon, let me have a son who is more brilliant than yourself and who will be the conqueror..." of all the three worlds. He should not be defeated by Devas or Asuras, and he should be as mighty as the wind, handsome and an expert archer." Agni replied: -
"You will have such a son by the woman who wins your heart.

When god Agni had left after saying this, Rambha went in visit Mahisāṣarakta, who was attended to by Yaksas. There, they had a child known as Padma and numerous animals like elephants, horses, buffaloes, cows and sheep. Among them was a three-year-old she-buffalo of exceptional charm and Rambha fell in love with her. She was also irresistibly attracted by him. As late would have it, a sexual union took place between them.

The she-buffalo became pregnant and Rambha took her to his own house in Pītalā. There, the other Dānavas, his kinsmen who came to know of his connection with the she-buffalo, expelled him from their midst as one who had committed an forbidden act. So he returned to Milavāṣayaka. The pretty she-buffalo accompanied her husband to the holy Yaksamandala. While they were living there, she gave birth to an attractive buffalocalf. After that a he-buffalo came across her. But she remained loyal to her Dānava husband who drew his sword and rushed towards the he-buffalo. The terrible beast with his mighty horns attacked Rambha who fell dead on the ground. The widowed Mahisāṣa (she-buffalo) sought the protection of the Yaksas. They had a tradition known from the Mahisāṣa (He-buffalo). The disappointed and love-starved Mahisāṣa drowned himself in a holy lake and was reborn as a mighty and heroic Asura named Nāmarā. The Mahisāṣa spent some time under the protection of the Yaksas. When they cremated Rambha's body, she jumped into the funeral pyre and burnt herself to death. At once from the middle of the fire there arose a monstrous being. That terrible monster, armed with a sword drove away the Yaksas and killed all the Mahisāṣer Mahiṣa who was the son of Rambha alone was spared. He was the Asura named Raktabhīja. He defeated all gods like Indra, Rudra, Śivra, Viṣṇu and others.

Mahisāṣa became the king of the Asuras. The abandoned Devas (gods) abandoned their posts of honour. All the worlds were plunged in darkness. (Vāyu Purāṇa, Chapter 17).

2) Mahiṣāṣa's Reign. Mahiṣāṣa who was intoxicated with pride on account of the boon he had received, became the undisputed and sole emperor of the three worlds. He formed a strong council of Ministers. Medicine, Finance Minister, Śivra, was Foreign Minister. Udāraka became Military Commander. Bākṣa, Trinetra and Kālabhandhaka were assigned the posts of Members of the Executive Council. Saṅkṣāra was the Education Minister. Mahiṣa strengthened his army. The State Treasury overflowed with wealth. Kings of the neighbouring states paid tribute and bowed their heads to him. The Brahmans offered the share of yajya to Mahiṣāṣa and presented before him. (Devi Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

3) Outbreak of War. After strengthening his position as Emperor of the world, Mahiṣa contemplated the conquest of Heaven. He sent a messenger to Indra. The messenger ordered Indra to surrender to Mahiṣāṣa. Indra answered with utter contempt to the messenger and his master Mahiṣa. The messenger returned and reported the matter to Mahiṣāṣa who began to tremble with anger.

Indra ordered the other Devas to join him. The messenger with scorn, he had no peace of mind. He called together the Devas and discussed what was to be done. They decided to declare war on Mahiṣāṣa. Brahma and Indra, accompanied by the other Devas set out to Kailāśa. From there, taking Parameṣa with them, they proceeded to Vaṣanā. On arrival there, they offered prayers to Mahiṣavīṣnu who appeared before them. The Devas submitted to him their grievances and sufferings under the rule of Mahiṣāṣa. After deep deliberations, Mahiṣavīṣnu supported the proposal for war. Thus the war between Devas and Asuras started.

4) Devakī's Yaddha. It was a dreadful war. Mahiṣa himself appeared on the scene of battle. He struck at Indra with his mighty club. Before he received the blow, Indra broke the club of Mahiṣa with his thunderbolt. The Asura named Andhaka encountered Mahiṣavīṣnu. The five arrows of that Asura were broken to pieces by Mahiṣavīṣnu in the sky itself. Then they started a terrible fight with various weapons such as sword, spear, axe, arrow, discus etc. It lasted for about 50 days without a break. Bākṣa fought against Indra, Bhringa against Śiva, Trinetra against Yamadharma, Mahiṣavīṣnu against Śrīda, and Asīmā against Pracetā. In the course of the battle, Andhaka, struck a blow at Garuḍa with his cudgel. Garuḍa, the vehicle of Viṣṇu was stunned by the blow, but Viṣṇu restored his energy by stroking him gently with his right hand. After that he took up his bow Śarwią and tried to kill Andhaka with a shower of arrows. But the Dānava warriors covered all of them with 30 low cobble stones and shot as Viṣṇu. Viṣṇu smashed all of them and sent his destructive weapon "Sudarśana Cakra" against Andhaka. Without the slightest fear, Andhaka stopped it with his own Cakra weapon and kept Viṣṇu's weapon at bay and shouted in triumph. Finding that Viṣṇu's weapon had failed and hearing the scornful shout of Andhaka, the Devas were filled with panic. At this critical moment, Viṣṇu took up his club "Kauṇadakī" and rushed into the midst of the Asuras and struck Andhaka with it. Under the blow, the Asura hero reeled and fell down unconscious. At his fall, Mahiṣa himself rushed forward to Viṣṇu with a terrible roar. Then there ensued a bitter fight between Viṣṇu and Mahiṣa. Each began a shower of arrows on the other. But not a single arrow injured either. In the thick of the battle Viṣṇu struck a blow on Mahiṣa's head and he dropped down unconscious. But ere long the Dānava rose up and taking up his iron pestle aimed a mighty blow at Viṣṇu's head and brought it down with deadly effect. Under the blow, even Viṣṇu fell unconscious on Garuḍa's back. Viṣṇu's condition made Garuḍa withdraw from the scene of battle temporarily, with Viṣṇu on his back. Indra and the other gods began to cry aloud. Śiva, who saw this desperate plight of the Devas, at once came to the battlefield, carrying his trident, ready to fight against Mahiṣa. When he tried to pierce the Asura's chest with his trident, the latter thwarted the blow with his own lance andIndra rushed at him, but actually hit him, Siva disregarded it and gave another thrust to Mahiṣa with his trident. By this time Mahāviṇu had recovered from his swoon. At once he returned to the field of battle and joined Siva in his attack on Mahiṣa. When Mahiṣa saw that both Śiva and Viṣṇu were launching a combined attack against him, in his might he assumed his own buffalo form and started angling up his tail and shaking his head rushed towards his mighty adversaries. With his terrible horns he lifted up mountain peaks and hurled them at the enemy. But the Deva leaders stopped them with their shower of arrows. Viṣṇu sent his Cakra against him and it made the Asura chief drop down senseless. But he soon recovered and rushed forward to renew his attack with a terrible roar. Viṣṇu then sounded his divine conch “Pāṇcajanya” and drowned the sound of his roar. Just as the roaring of the asura frightened the Devas, the sound of Pāṇcajanya struck terror in the minds of the Asuras.

3) Mahiṣa’s Death. The Asuras were terrified at the sound of Pāṇcajanya. In order to encourage them, Mahiṣa assumed the form of a huge bull and rushed into the midst of the army of Devas roaring. Even the Trūmūrtis were alarmed for a short while when they saw the fierce beast advancing through their battlearray killing and mauling hundreds of the Devas on either side. Mahāviṇu at once sent his weapon Cakra against the lion. The lion was reduced to ashes by it, but Mahiṣa rose up again in the form of a buffalo and rushed forward. He gave a severe cut on Mahāviṇu’s chest with his long and powerful horns. Mahāviṇu started fleeing to Vaikuṇṭha. At the sight of this, Śiva concluded that Mahiṣa was proof against killing and so he also fled to Kaivala riding on his bull. When Viṣṇu and Śiva took to their heels, Brahmā also flew to Salmāñ, leaving this trouble on his own. Although the leaders of the Devas under the leadership of Indra, encountered Mahiṣa again, Indra drew his Vajra. The Aṣṭādiḍpākālasa assisted him. The battle raged fiercely again. The Devas began to flee for life. Taking this opportunity, Mahiṣa successfully forced his way into Heaven. He planted his Dānava flag highly. He drove out all the remaining Devas. In this way the Asuras took possession of Devaloka. The Devas took shelter on the tops of mountains.

Several centuries passed. The Devas assembled and prayed to Brahmā. He sent them again to Vaikuṇṭha. Śiva also arrived there. The Devas submitted their grievances to Viṣṇu. They prayed to him to devise some way by which Mahiṣa could be killed. Brahmā had given him a boon that no man was capable of killing him. Mahāviṇu said to them:—“By virtue of the boon, Mahiṣa could be killed only by a woman. If we can create a woman who is part of the Devas with their power and glory, we could kill him with her help. So let us try to create such a mighty woman, concentrating all our powers on her. After her creation, we must give all our weapons.”

As soon as Mahāviṇu spoke these words, a figure with dazzling effulgence issued forth from Brahmā’s face. Both Viṣṇu and Śiva were amazed at the sight of this figure radiating beams of light which were partly cool and partly warm. Similar figures, embodying the personal powers and effects of Viṣṇu, Śiva, Indra, Kubera, Varuṇa and all other gods, emanated from them. In a moment all these figures merged into a single figure and transformed themselves into a single woman with celestial beauty and having eighteen arms. This woman of exquisite beauty combining all the powers and glories of all the Devas was Devi herself. The Devas supplied her with jewels and the most gorgeous clothes. Decked in all glory and with fasciating beauty, riding on a lion, she took her stand at the entrance of Devaloka and challenged Mahīṣa. At the very first sight of Devī, Mahiṣa fell in love with her. She declared she would become the wife of the person who could defeat her in battle. Mahiṣa made up his mind to defeat her in a fight. It was a terrible battle. All the Ministers of Mahiṣa, like Bāgala, Dāmmaka, Tāmra, Cikṣura, Aslōma and Bīdala were slain. At last Mahiṣa himself appeared on the scene to fight with Devī. Mahiṣa started with a shower of arrows and Devī countered them all with her own arrows. In the end she attacked him with Viṣṇu Cakra. The Cakra cut off his throat and he dropped down dead. The devas raised a thunderous shout of joy and triumph. (Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skanda).

MAHĪṢĀDA. A woman follower of Lord Subrahmanya. (M.B. Sāyī Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 28).

MAHĪṢĀKA, MAHĪṢĀKA. A special tribe. They were once Kastriyas but they became Śūdras by their evil mode of living. (Bhāgavata 2.23.10; 33. Anurā, 1. Parva). Arjuna during his victory march conquered this tribe in the south. (Chapter 83, Aṭsvamedha Parva).

MAHĪṢĀKA (M). The name given by the Ancient people to modern Mysore. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 59).

MAHĪṢĀKA. An Asura who came into conflict with Subrahmanya (Skanda Purāṇa).

MAHĪṢĀNAṆĀ, A follower of Subrahmanya. (Sloka 25, Chapter 46, Sāyī Parva).

MAHĪṢMĀN. 1. A King of the Holuyā royal family. It was this King who constructed on the banks of the river Narmada, Mahīṣmātī, the capital city of Kārtavirya-jūrīna. It got the name of Mahīṣmātī because it was constructed by Mahīṣmān (Chapter 2, Brahmānā Purāṇa).

MAHĪṢMĀN 11. A King of the Vṛujī dynasty. He was the son of a King called Kunī. Kunī is called Kuntī in some of the Purāṇas. Kunī had three other sons named Sābhājī, Bhadrakarnī and Durdamā. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MAHĪṢMĀTĪ. Sixth daughter of Angirās. Mahīṣmātī was known as Anumātī also. (Sloka 6, Chapter 218, Vana Parva).

MAHĪṢMĀTĪ. An ancient city on the banks of river Narmada. There is reference to this place in many places in the Purāṇas and a few of them are given below:

(i) King Nila was reigning in a country with Mahīṣmātī as its capital. Sahadeva, one of the Pandavas during his victorious march to the south conquered this country. (Chapter 31, Sābhā Parva).
MAHODARA I

(ii) Dasākṣa, tenth son of Ikṣvāku, had made this city his capital. (Śloka 6, Chapter 2, Anuśāsana Parva).

(iii) Kartaṇvīrājuna who had made Māhismatī the capital of his kingdom had subdued many kings. (Śloka 3, Chapter 152, Anuśāsana Parva). (See under Kartaṇvīrājuna.)

MAHODARA I. A serpent born to Kaśyapa of his wife Krodha. (Śloka 16, Chapter 35, Aṣṭādhya Parva).

MAHODARA II. One of the hundred sons of Dhorta-nāmasa. Ilīnāsana killed him in the great battle. (Śloka 19, Chapter 157, Drona Parva).

MAHODARA III. An ancient sage. (See under Kapilamucāna).

MAHODARA IV. An army chief of Rāvaṇa. (Uttara Rāma-yāna).

MAHODARA V. A friend of Ghatotkaca son of Bhuṣa. When Ghatotkaca started for Prājyotisapura to conquer Kāmakātaka, Mahodara also followed him. (Skanda Purāṇa).

MAHODARA VI. One of the sons of Rāvaṇa. In the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle Mahodara fought first with Aṅgaśa and later in a combat with the monkey soldier Nila, he was killed. (Sarga 79, 81, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāma-yāna).

MAHODARA VII. The minister of Sumālī, grandfather (maternal), of Rāvaṇa. In the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle Mahodara accompanied Sumālī when he came to help Rāvaṇa. (Uttara Kāṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāma-yāna).

MAHODARA VIII. One of the sons of Visravas born of the potaka. Hanumān killed this demon in the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle. (Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Chapter 70, Verse 66, Vālmīki Rāma-yāna).

MAHODARYA. A King who is worthy of being thought of every morning. (Śloka 55, Chapter 155, Anuśāsana Parva).

MAHODAYA. One of the sons of Vasishtha. Once Trināku, King of Ayodhyā, conducted a yajña with Vivasvānīrśvīrīkā and for that yajña Vivasvānīrśvīrīkā invited Vasishtha and his son Mahodaya also. But Mahodaya refused to respond to the invitation and sent a message picturing both Vivasvānīrśvīrīkā and Trināku as Chandāsas. Enraged at this insulting message Vivasvānīrśvīrīkā cursed Mahodaya to become Sōdā. (Verses 20-21, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Chapter 59, Vālmīki Rāma-yāna).

MAHODAYAPURI. The capital city of Kuberā. This is called Alakāpurī also. (8th Skanda, Devī Bhāgavata).

MĀHĪTHA. A Janapada of Purānic fame in Bhārata. The chief of this place, Akraṣṇa was conquered by Nakula during his victory march. (Śloka 6, Chapter 32, Šabara Parva).

MAIṆĀKA I.

1) General information. A mountain. This mountain was the son of Himavān and father of Krauṇḍa. (Śloka 13, Chapter 16, Harvaṇīyā). 2) How the mountain helped Hamantā. There is an indubitable tie between Mainakā and the Kings of Ikyāvān family. There is a monastery in Brahmapura that the sāgara (ocean) was constructed by the sixty thousand sons of the King Sāgara of Ikyāvān family. This Sāgara once gave refuge to Mainakā and brought it up. There is a reason for that. —

In the early yugas mountains had wings and they used to fly and drop to the ground as they liked. People used to live in fright always and at the request of the people Indra made the mountains stand in a row and cut off their wings. At that time the god Viṣṇu (wind) took away his friend Mainakā and put him in the ocean. From that day onwards Mainakā and the ocean developed an intimacy which even death could not wipe off. Hanumān was the son of Viṣṇu, the friend and saviour of Mainakā. It was because of that that Mainakā gave refuge to Hanumān on his way to Lāṅkā. Because the ocean gave refuge to Mainakā after its escape from the sword of Indra and because the ocean (Sāgara) was the creation of the sons of Sāgara, a King of the Ikyāvān race, Mainakā felt indebted to Sāgara and the entire race to which he belonged. Mainakā thus had great respect for Śri Rāma who belonged to the Ikyāvān race. This was also responsible for Mainakā giving relief to Hanumān on his way to Lāṅkā. (See under Parvata).

2) Other details. (i) This mountain is situated near the lake Bindusaravāra which was to the north of Kaṭikā. Bhagirathā did penance to bring the Ganga to the earth on this mountain. (Chapter 3, Śabhā Parva).

(ii) Pāṇḍavas who went to the north crossed the mountain Mainakā and went further. (Śloka 1, Chapter 139, Vana Parva).

(iii) The mountain Mainakā shines with golden peaks. (Śloka 44, Chapter 145, Vana Parva).

MAIṆĀKA II. A holy place on the west coast on the bank of the river Narmadā. This is also a mountain. (Śloka 11, Chapter 89, Vana Parva).

MAIṆĀKA III. Another mountain. (This is in Krauṇḍadvipa. (Śloka 18, Chapter 12, Bhīṣma Parva). MAINDA. One of the monkeys who helped Śri Rāma in the search for Sītā. Purāṇas give the following information regarding this monkey:

(i) Maina lived in a cave in Krauṇḍa. While he was living there Sahadeva one of the Pāṇḍavas came that way during his victory campaign in Dakṣina Bhrātara and fought with him. Sahadeva was defeated. But Maina was pleased with him and gave him many valuable presents and advised him that no difficulties should be put against Dharmaputra achieving his object. (Śloka 18, Chapter 31, Śabhā Parva).

(ii) Maina was the minister of Sugrīva, King of the monkeys. He was mighty, intelligent, and kind to others. (Śloka 25, Chapter 28, Vana Parva).

(iii) Maina was one of the leaders who led the monkeys who went in search of Sītā. (Śloka 19, Chapter 283, Vana Parva).

(iv) In the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle Maina and others also fainted along with Lakṣmanā and others. It was only when they washed their faces with the water given by Kubera that they could see things clearly.

(v) Maina was the son of Aṃśikādeva. (10th Skanda, Bhāgavata).

MĀIṬRĪ. A demon tribe. Once a sage named Loma persuaded Dharmaputra to attack this tribe.

MĀIṬRĪ. An auspicious time (Muhūrta). Śri Kaṇa started on his historic journey to Hastināpura at Maitramūḥā. (Śloka 6, Chapter 83, Udyoga Parva).
MAITRA III

A constellation. Krāvāma joined the Kaurava side on the day of this constellation. (Śloka 14, Chapter 35, Sātā Parva).

MAITRAVARUNA. Another name for Vasiṣṭha. Agastya also is known by this name. Because they were born as the sons of Mitra and Varuna they got this name. How they came to be re-born as the sons of Mitrāvrūnas is told in Devi Bhāgavata.

There was once a celebrated emperor named Nimi in the Ikṣvāku line of Kings. Nimi was the twelfth son of Ikṣvāku. The agrahāra found near the ārāma of Gautama Mahaṛṣi, called Jayantapura was constructed by Nimi. Once Nimi decided to perform a big yāga and after taking the consent of his father made preparations for the same. He invited such great sages as Bhīrgu, Adīgapāra, Vāamadeva, Puluṣṭya, Pulaha and Rīkha. He then went to their family preceptor Vasiṣṭha and requested him to be the chief priest. But Vasiṣṭha had already promised Indra to conduct a yāga for him and so advised Nimi to postpone his yāga to a later date. But Nimi was unwilling to postpone his yāga and so he performed it with Gautama Mahaṛṣi as the chief priest. It took five hundred years for Nimi to complete the yāga. After five hundred years Vasiṣṭha after computing the yāga of Indra came to see Nimi and found that he had already conducted the yāga without him. Vasiṣṭha was angry and he cursed Nimi saying that Nimi would become childless. But powerful Nimi cursed Vasiṣṭha also and separated his soul from his body.

Griefstricken, Vasiṣṭha went to Brahmad and complained to him. Brahmad said: ‘Oh son, you go and merge with the brilliance of Mitrāvrūnas and stay there. After some time you will be able to be born without being in a womb; you will then have a memory of the past and you will be very learned and will be worshipped by all’.

Vasiṣṭha was pleased to hear that and he circumambulated Brahmad and prostrated before him and then went to the ārāma of Mitrāvrūnas. He then abandoned his body there and merged with the brilliance of Mitrāvrūnas. One day Urvāsī with her companions came to the ārāma of Mitrāvrūnas and attracted by her charm they spent a night with her. Their semen at one time fell into a jar nearby and from it were born two people, Agastya and Vasiṣṭha. (Śkandha 6, Devi Bhāgavata).

MAITREYA. A sage of great brilliance of ancient India.

Somapa was born as the son of Maitreya.

2) Other details.

Once Maitreya went to Hastinapura and told Durodhana that he should behave kindly to the Parīkṣit. Durodhana who did not much relish the advice sat tapping on his thighs with his hands, not seriously attending to the sage. Maitreya was displeased at the discourtesy and cursed that Bhima would one day break Durodhana’s thighs. (See under Durodhana).

(iii) Maitreya was a courtier of Vudhīṣṭhila. (Śloka 10, Chapter 4, Śabha Parva).

(iii) Maitreya was one among the sages who visited Bhīma while he was lying on his bed of arrows. (Śloka 6, Chapter 4, Śānti Parva).

(iv) Once he discussed with Vyūsh topics on Dharma. (Chapter 120, Amaśām Parva).

(v) When Śrī Kaṃsa died, the spiritualistic ideology of Dharmaputra became more dominant and he approached Vidura for Dharma. Vidura sent him to Maitreya. Dharmaputra went to the ārāma of Maitreya on the banks of the river Gaṅga and after paying respects to him accepted Dharmaputra’s instruction (law, duty and morals) from him. (3rd Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MAITREYA. Wife of the sage Jayavaliśa. She was one of the most learned and virtuous women in ancient India. There are innumerable references to her in the Purāṇas. (For details about her splendidure see under Candrāṅgada).

MAITRI. Daughter of Daksī. Thirteen daughters of Daksī were married to Dharmadeva. Maitri was one of them. Maitri bore a son named Abhaya to Dharmadeva. (4th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MAJANA. A soldier of Subrahmany. (Śloka 70, Chapter 45, Sātā Parva).

MĀKARI. A city of the King Drupada. This city was on the banks of the river Gaṅga. (Śloka 73, Chapter 137, Adi Parva). See under KAPATABHIKSU.

MAKARADAMSṬRA. A prostitute of Mathurā, the birthplace of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The story of this woman who had made prostitution and cheating her aim in life was told to Vasavadatta wife of Udayana by Vasantāka. The curbing of the arrogance of Makaradamsṭra by a poor brahmin of name Lohajaṅgha with the help of Vībhīṣana, emperor of the demons, is the theme of the story. Makaradamsṭra had a husband named Rūpīṇikā. The mother tried to make the daughter also a prostitute. Once Rūpīṇikā went to a far-off temple for worship as instructed by her mother. There she met a poor brahmin named Lohajaṅgha and Rūpīṇikā was attracted to him by his handsome features. She sent word through her maid requesting Lohajaṅgha to come to her house. Rūpīṇikā came back and waited for her lover to come. After some time Lohajaṅgha came. Makaradamsṭra scrutinised the new-comer with suspicion but Rūpīṇikā took him to her bed-room. Both of them remained there making love. Makaradamsṭra finding her daughter going against the principles of a prostitute called her to her side and said: ‘Dear daughter, why do you keep this poor brahmin? Is this the duty of a prostitute? Love and prostitution never go together. We are like dust. The twilight of love remains for a few seconds only. So do send away this brahmin who has no money.’

Rūpīṇikā discarded the advice of her mother and Makaradamsṭra felt annoyed. She decided to send out Lohajaṅgha somehow. One day a prince came that Parīkṣit and Makaradamsṭra criticised him to his house and requested the prince to accept Rūpīṇikā and send Lohajaṅgha out of her house. The prince accepted the request of the mother-prostitute. At that time Rūpīṇikā had gone to the temple.
and Lokạjaŋgha for a walk. After some time Lokạjaŋgha came as usual and entered the house and Makara-đastra introduced Lokạjaŋgha to the prince. At once the servants of the prince beat Lokạjaŋgha and carrying him away out of the house put him in an excrutient pit. Lokạjaŋgha somehow escaped from there and ran away. He was sorry to part with his love and he went on a pilgrimage. He walked for a long distance in the hot sun and feeling tired searched for a shady place to take some rest. Then he saw there came a herd of elephants. Jackals entering through the buttocks had eaten all flesh and the animal lay hollow inside with the skin in tact on the skeleton. Lokạjaŋgha entered the inside of the elephant and slept there. That night it rained heavily and the hoa at the buttocks contracted with little space for Lokạjaŋgha to get out. The rains continued, the water level in the river Gangā rose and soon the carcass of the elephant was carried away to the river and it gradually reached the ocean. At that time a great kite taking it to be flesh for food drew it up and took it to the other side of the ocean. When it peeked it open it found a man inside and frightened left there and flew away. By this time Lokạjaŋgha awoke from his slumber and while he was looking around he saw his servant Gajapeet enter Svaragā with Lokạjaŋgha. The demons thought he had come to the place crossing the ocean like Śrī Kāma to bring disaster to them and so they immediately ran up to Vihiśiṣana and told him of the incident. Vihiśiṣana asked his servants to bring Lokạjaŋgha before him and when he was brought before him enquired very politely who he was and why he had come there and what he wanted. In reply to the enquiries Lokạjaŋgha said thus: "I am a Brahmin from Mathurā. I did penance to please Viṣṇu to get relief from my poverty and one day Viṣṇu appeared before me in person and said, ‘Go to my devotee Vihiśiṣana, and he will give you enough wealth to live happily.’ It was in a dream and when I awoke I came by myself to this shore. I do not know how it all happened."

Vihiśiṣana was immensely pleased to hear the story of Lokạjaŋgha and gave him immense wealth including many precious diamonds, golden replicas of the emblem of Viṣṇu consisting of Sarasvati, Cakra, Gada and Padma and a small kite from the mountain of Svaragā. Accepting all these Lokạjaŋgha flew on the back of the kite back to Mathurā and alighted at a deserted place there. Keeping all his valuable articles in a secret place he took one diamond and selling it acquired some cash and with that purchased some ornamental dress for himself. At dusk he dressed himself and holding the emblem of Viṣṇu flew on the back of the kite to the house of Rūpiniṅkha and addressing Rūpiniṅkha in private said, “I am Viṣṇu came to you for a union because you are virtuous”. Hearing that Rūpiniṅkha respectfully surrendered herself to him. Before dawn Lokạjaŋgha left the house and flew back to the deserted place. Rūpiniṅkha felt herself to be a goddess and did not speak to anybody in the morning. The mother was perplexed to find her daughter observing a vow of silence and questioned her. Rūpiniṅkha then told her mother all that had happened on the previous night and Makara-đastra wanted to confirm the story of her daughter and so she kept awake that night to see what took place. She found Lokạjaŋgha arriving as Viṣṇu on the back of Gāruḍa and fully believing him to be Mahāviṣṇu was overjoyed at the fortune of her daughter and sleeping beside her. The next morning she said, "My dear daughter, by the grace of Śrī Nārāyaṇa you have become a goddess. How fortunate am I? You should do one thing for me. You must send me to heaven with this body of mine along with your husband."

Rūpiniṅkha agreed to do so. That night she told the false Vyāpasī to the desir of her mother. The Lokạjaŋgha said: "Your mother who is a great sinner is not eligible to go to Svaragā in her present state. Day after tomorrow on the Dwāḍaśī day the gates of heaven will open. Early morning on that day the goblins of Sva would enter Svaragā. I shall then try to send your mother along with them. But your mother should then appear as a goddess. The goblin on the head should be shaved at five places and the hair should be locked to form five tufts of hair. She should wear a garland of bones and the body should be painted black on one side with charcoal and red on the other side with saffron. The painting should be in oil and she should not wear any clothes. This would make her appear like a goblin of Mahēśvarā (Śiva) and then there will be no difficulty for me to allow her to enter."

Lokạjaŋgha left the place early in the morning and Rūpiniṅkha told her mother all that her husband told her. Makara-đastra dressed herself as instructed by Lokạjaŋgha and awaited the arrival of the false Mahāviṣṇu. Lokạjaŋgha came at night and Rūpiniṅkha showed him her mother dressed as desired by her husband. Lokạjaŋgha took Mahāviṣṇu on the back of his kite and flew up. As he rose high he saw a tall flagstaff of a temple nearby. It had a wheel on its top. Lokạjaŋgha placed her on the wheel and said, "Do sit here for a while. I shall soon come back to you and bless you”. To the people assembled in the temple he spoke from the air, "Citizens, today the goddess ‘Māri’, destroyer of everything, will fall on you. If you want to say that word that remain in this temple and worship Viṣṇu”. People were frightened when they heard the warning from air and all remained in the temple chanting prayers and reciting devotional songs about Viṣṇu. Makara-đastra sat there for a while dreaming about the happiness in store for her in Svaragā and awaiting her daughter’s husband to come and take her. But Lokạjaŋgha had come to the temple in an ordinary dress and was with the crowd in the temple. Time dragged on and it became midnight and Makara-đastra sitting on the wheel of the flagstaff felt uneasy. She could not sit there any longer and she cried aloud, "Oh, I am falling”. People mistook her for Māri and cried back, "Oh, goddess, do not you please, descend in the morning and in the sunlight they saw a figure sitting on the top of the flagstaff and were surprised. The King was informed and he came to the temple and so also all people from the place. When the people on scrutinising the figure knew it was Makara-đastra, they all clapped their hands laughing loudly. Hearing the news Rūpiniṅkha also came to the temple and she somehow got her mother down from the flagstaff. The King then made the prostitute tell her story and when it was finished he declared thus: "Who has thus played fraud on this prostitute who had throughout her life cheated others people? If he comes before me now I will give him my crown and Kingdom". Hearing that Lohajāṅgha appeared before the King and confessed that he had done the mischief. He then narrated his story to the king and placed before the king the golden Seal of Vīnu’s emblem which Vibhīṣaṇa had given him. The king as per his promise gave Lohajāṅgha his kingdom and Rūpiniṅka once more became his. The arrogance of Makaradāmsīra was thus curbed. (Kathāmañcaka, Kathāsārlitāgama)

MAKAṆAGIRI. A mountain near Mahāmeru, Mahāmeru is two thousand yojanas long and six hundred yojanas high and stands in the midst of eight mountains two on each of the four sides. Makaragiri and Triṇaṅga are on the north side. On the east are Jāṭhara and Devakūta, on the south are Kaiśaṇa and Kaiśavīra and on the west are Pavanāṇa and Parīṣṭīra. (3rd Skanda, Devī Bhāgavata)

MAKAṆAKAṆA. Son of the demon Khara. In the epic battle between Rāma and Rāvana after the death of Kumbha and Nikumbha the most prominent fighter who entered the battle-field on the side of Rāvana was Makāṅkaṇa. He gave a great fight to Rāma but was in the end killed by him. (Sarga 79, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Vālmīkī Rāmāyaṇa)

MAKAṆADHAṆAVAJA I. A son of Hanumān. He was born to a crocodile living in the ocean as the perspiration drops fell on her from Hanumān. (Sarvakāṇaṇa, Anandā Rāmāyaṇa)

MAKAṆADHAṆAVAJA II. One of the sons of Dṛkatāraṇa. He was killed in the great battle by Bhīmasena. (1st Kāṇḍa, Drona Parva)

MAKAṆI. A river of Purāṇic fame. (Sloka 23, Chapter 9, Bhīma Parva)

MAKŚOPEṬA. A daiya. This daiya whirls round along with an Ādiya, known as Visū in the month of Kārttika. (November) (12th Skanda, Bhāgavata)

MĀLĀ. A place of habitation of ancient India. (Sloka 39, Chapter 9, Bhīsma Parva)

MALĀDA. One of the wives of Sāge Atri. (Brahmāyaṇa Purāṇa, Chapter 38 Verse 74-87)

MALĀDA [S]. A community of people who lived in ancient India. From Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 27, we learn that they were the partisans of the Kaundins.

MALĀJA. An ancient town celebrated in the Purāṇas. It is also known as “Aḍagamalāja”. (See under ANGAMAṆALĀJA)

MALĀṬIṆKA. A follower of Subrahmaṇya. (Sloka 4, Chapter 46, Śaiva Parva)

MĀLĀṆA. A Purāṇic river to be remembered. (Sloka 25, Chapter 163, Anuśāsana Parva)

MĀLĀṆA. An ancient country on the west coast of India. Mahābhārata contains the following statements regarding Mālāṇa:
(i) The people of Mālāṇa participated in the Rājasīya of Yudhishṭhīra. (Sloka 11, Chapter 34, Sāhab Parva)
(ii) Armed young Kṣatriyas of Mālāṇa presented Yudhishṭhīra with great wealth. (Sloka 15, Chapter 52, Sāhab Parva)
(iii) Karna conquered Mālāṇadāsa. (Sloka 20, Chapter 254, Vana Parva)
(iv) Mālāṇa was one of the prominent and renowned countries of ancient India. (Sloka 60, Chapter 9, Bhīsma Parva)

(v) Obeying the order of Bhīṣma the people of Mālāṇa attacked Arjuna. (Sloka 76, Chapter 59, Bhīsma Parva)
(vi) Śrī Kṛṣṇa once conquered Mālāṇadāsa. (Sloka 16, Chapter 19, Drona Parva)
(vii) Paraṭurāma exterminated the Kṣatriyas of Mālāṇadāsa. (Sloka 11, Chapter 70, Drona Parva)

MĀLĀṆA [S]. The Kṣatriyas born to kingly Aīvapati of this race. Mālāṇa are known as Mālāṇa. (Sloka 49, Chapter 297, Vana Parva)

MĀLĀṆI. The queen of Aīvapati king of Madra. She was the mother of Sāvītī. Aīvapati beget of Mālāṇa a hundred sons called Mālāṇas. Yarna took to Kālapuri the soul of Sāvītī who was still alive. Sāvītī, wife of Sāvītī, followed Yarna. Yarna blessed Sāvītī and said she would have many children and gave life to Sāvītī. Yarna said “Sāvītī will live for four hundred years and you will get a hundred sons of him. Your father Aīvapati also will get a hundred sons of Mālāṇa and the earth will get the name of Sāvītī also”. Accordingly Malavī got a hundred sons and they were called Mālāṇas. (Chapter 19, 7th Vana Parva)

MĀLĀṆA I. A son of Kṛṣṇa Rāhbadeva belonging to the Priyavrata dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skanda)

MĀLĀṆA II. A son of Garuda. (M.B. Sāhab Parva Chapter 99, Verse 11)

MĀLĀṆA III. A son of Garuda. (Sloka 14, Chapter 101, Udvyoga Parva)

MĀLĀṆA IV. A mountain in South India. The following pieces of information are gathered about this mountain from the Purāṇas:
(1) The sovereign deity of this mountain attends on Kubera in Kubera’s assembly. (M.B. Sāhab Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 32)
(2) The Pandya and Cola Kings collected Sandal Paste essence from the Mālāṇa and Dārḍuṇa mountains, filled them in golden pots and presented them to Yudhishṭhīra. (M.B. Sāhab Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 33)
(3) The monkeys who went in search of Śītā crossed this mountain. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 289, Verse 44)
(4) Mālāṇa is considered as one of the seven chief mountains of India. (M.B. Bhīsma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 11)
(5) Once Mṛtyu deity performed upāsas on this mountain. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 26)
(6) In Tripūrārasana, Śiva used this mountain as the flagstaff of his chariot. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 102, Verse 75)

MĀLĀṆA V. In Mahābhārata there is a description of another Mālāṇa mountain besides the Mālāṇa mountain of South India. When the sage Naka ascended Heaven, he saw a Mālāṇa mountain on the way. The celestial women, Urvāśī and Vīpīcūti used to dance there daily. This Mālāṇa is somewhere above Kaiśāna. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 332, Verse 21)

MĀLĀṆADHAṆAVAJA (PANDYA). In Mahābhārata, Karna Parva, Chapter 20, we read about a Pandyas King named MālāndhaBHajva who took part in the Kurukṣetra battle and was killed in the fight against Aśvatthāma.

MĀLĀṆAṆPAṆHA. A King celebrated in Purāṇas. He ruled over Kurukṣetra. Once when there was a famine in the land, King MālāṇaṆPaṆha exempted his subjects from all taxes. The greedy ministers did not like it and they advised him against it. The King yielded to the advice of his ministers. On one occasion Mālayavāna’s son Indraprabha pleased with his father and told him that he should not oppress his subjects at the instigation of his evil ministers. He added that the King was their “Kalpacvāka” and the subjects were his “Kāndadheva.” But the King did not heed the advice of his son. He jokingly said that Indraprabha was also their “Kalpacvāka.” Stung by this taunt, Indraprabha took a solemn oath that he would either spend a ‘Kalpacvāka’ or lay down his life in the attempt. He left the palace at once and began an austere tapas. Indra was pleased and appeared before him. Receiving his blessing, Indraprabha returned to his capital and stood there as a “Kalpacvāka.” He fulfilled the desires of the people. A few days later, Indra came to the tree to test Indraprabha. He told Indra Abhaya, “Your mission of service is over; now you may come to Heaven.” But he insisted that his subjects also should be taken with him to Heaven. Indra was pleased at the devotion and love of Indraprabha for his subjects and agreed to take all his subjects also with him. Indraprabha gave up the form of the tree and reposing his own shape, accepted “Bodhi tāvācaryā.”

MĀLAYA(S). The collective name of the ministers of Vibhīṣaṇa. The four ministers were: Anala, Anila, Harā and Sampāti. (Uttarāṇādā, Vālmiki Rāmāyana)

MĀLĪ. A demon of great valour.
1) Genealogy and birth. There were two very brave brothers in the demon tribe named Heta and Praheti. They were inseparable companions of Mahāhāra. Praheti was unknown and spent his time in the pursuit of women. Heta married Bhayāni daughter of Kāla and got a son named Viduytikā. Viduytikā married Śakaranka daughter of Sandhyā and got a son named Sukēsa. Sukēsa married Devavati, daughter of Grāmā, alias Maṇjumāya. Devavati delivered three sons, Mālī, Sumāti and Mālyavāna.
2) Birth of Mālī. The three brothers, even while young decided to acquire great strength and started performing penance. When their penance became very fierce Brahmā appeared before them in person and asked them what boon they wanted. They said, “We must be invincible, we must be destroyers of our enemies, we must have long life, we must become rich and powerful ever remaining friendly with each other”. Brahmā granted the boon asked for.
3) Family life. After obtaining the boon they went to Viśvākarmā and asked him to construct a place of wood for them. Viśvākarmā was frightened and he said “I will construct a beautiful place for them to live.” He said, “There is a mountain named Trikūṭa on the coast of the southern sea. There is a mountain on it called Subhala. Its main top graces the sky. Its four sides have been beautifully channelled. No birds fly by its top. I have constructed there at the request of Indra a beautiful city surrounded by walls of gold and adorned on all sides with festoons of gold. That city is called Lankā and you, demon-fords, can stay there. You will get glory and prestige which even Indra could not achieve in his Aranyak. If you settle in Lankā with your followers you will be unconquerable.” The happy demons with their people went to Lankā. They married the daughters of a Gandharva woman named Narmadā. Mālī married Vasundhā; Sumāti, Ketunari; and Mālyavānak, Sundari. Māli begot of his wife Vasundhā four sons named Anila, Anala, Harā and Sampāti. Sumāti got his wife Ketunari ten sons named Prahati, Akampaṇa, Viṣṇu, Kaḷākaṃkha, Dhūmāraka, Danda, Supārīva, Sambhrāda, Prakruḷa and Bhāsakarṇa and four daughters named Vekā, Puspotaka, Kaḷīka and Kumbhīṣṭa.
4) Death. The three brothers attacked Devaloka under the leadership of Mālī and a great fight ensued and Māli died by the discus of Mahāviṣṇu. (Uttarāṇādā.)

MĀLINI. A river which flowed by the side of the Aśrama of Kaṇva Muni. The river Cukka which flows through the district of Saharanpur today was the Mālīnī of old. Some believe that Mālinī starts from the Himālayas. Susāktaka was born on the shores of this river. (Sloka 10, Chapter 72, Ādi Parva.)

MĀLINI. I. One of the seven mothers of Subrahmaputra. (Sloka 10, Chapter 228, Vana Parva.)

MĀLINI. III. A demoness. This maiden was sent to serve Viśvakarṇa, father of Rāvaṇa, by Kubera Vibhīṣaṇa was the son born to Viśvāsuras of Mālīnī. (Ślokā: 6, Chapter 273, Vana Parva.)

MĀLINI. IV. A city of Purānic fame in the country of Saṅkhara. Jārananda gave this city to Kaṇha. (Sloka 6, Chapter 5, Saṅkhara Parva.)

MĀLINI. V. The name of Saṅhari in her previous birth. (See under Saṅhari.)

MĀLINI. VI. A nymph born to Puskara of Pramloca. (Chapter 8, Verse 14, Viṣṇu Parva.) King Ruci married this nymph and they got a son named Raucya. The nymph Raucya was the wife of Rauṣya and they were celebrated with a Purāna called Raucya. (Mānandaya Purāṇa.)

MĀLINI. VII. A brahmin woman of very bad character. Because of her evil deeds she was born as a dog in her next birth. It observed then the Śukadvāsī Vṛata and so was born again as the nymph Urvāśi. (2.7.24, Skanda Purāṇa.)

MĀLĀRĀTRA. A country in ancient India. The capital of Mālarāstra was the present city of Kosi. At the time of Mahābhārata, this country was ruled by a King named Pārīvāra. There is a statement in the Mahābhārata that this King was defeated by Bālameṣa. When the Pāṇḍavas discussed the countries in which they were to live “incognito”, the name of Mālarāstra was also mentioned. Mahābhārata, Saṅhāra Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 3; Bīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 44, Viṣṇu Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 13.

MĀLĀYAPINDAKA. A serpent born in the family of Kātyāpa. (Ślokas 13, Chapter 103, Udyoga Parva.)

MĀLYAVĀNA. I. A Pāñcāra of Siva. The most intimate friend of Mālyavāna was Puspandana.
1) Curse of Mālyavāna. Once Siva was telling Pārvati a story of the Gandharvas and Puspandana heard it as he sat hiding in a place nearby. Pārvati got angry and was about to curse when Mālyavāna intervened and recommended for mercy. Pārvati got angrier and cursed them both to be born on earth as men. They begged for relief and Pārvati said: “In the deep depths of the forest of Vindhya mountains there lives a Yaka, named Supratika who has been turned into a devil called Kānaḥbhūti by a curse. Puspandana should narrate the story he has now heard to Kānaḥbhūti and he will then be released from the curse. Kānaḥbhūti would narrate to Mālyavāna what he has heard from Puspandana and Kāṇabhumī would then be released from his curse. Māyaṇav would then make public the story he had heard and then he will also be released from the curse.

Puṣpadanta was born as Vararuci in the city of Kauśāmbi and Māyaṇav as Guṇḍāyana in the city of Supraśiṣṭha. (See under Guṇḍāyana).

2) Another curse to Māyaṇav. By another curse Māyaṇav was born as a sparrow and Puṣpadanta as an elephant in the south of Bārānata. (See under Puṣpadanta).

3) Part in Devāvarṇa battle. Released from curses Māyaṇav reached the presence of Siva. It was the time of the Devāvarṇa battle and Māyaṇav fought on the side of the devas. Māyaṇav played a prominent part in the battle. Māyaṇav had to fight against a fierce archer named Kolkāhā. Kolkāhā sent three arrows one each on the forehead and the two shoulders. Māyaṇav returned the fight with arrows. Then Kolkāhā showing his swiftness of hand formed him with several different weapons. Unmindful of this vehement attack Māyaṇav plucked a hilllock and threw it at Kolkāhā. Then suddenly a fierce figure blazing with fire having nine pairs of hands and feet and three heads looking yellow in colour jumped out of the demon and made Māyaṇav faint by the terrible heat it gave out. Māyaṇav regained life and ran away to the mountain.

(Chapter 13, Part 4, Agni Parva).

MĀYAṆAV II. Son of the demon Sūkaṇa. He was the brother of Māli and Sumūlī.

Tāts Māyaṇav was the father of Rāvana's mother. They were all living in Pāṭalī but when Rāvana obtained his boon he went away Kuber from Lāṅkā and became the ruler of Lāṅkā. Māyaṇav and other demons were not able to make Rāvana to turn his mind to his father and stayed with him confirming his sovereignty over the place.

In the Rāma-Rāvana battle Sugīvā stole the crown of Rāvana and kicked him on his face. Ashamed of the insult Rāvana went back to his palace and the first person he saw was Māyaṇav. The old man had come to advise Rāvana to give back Sītā to Śṛṇa. But Rāvana was not able to accept the letter of advice. (For more details see under MĀLI).

MĀYAṆAV III. A mountain. This mountain is situated between the mountains of Meru and Mandara in the country of Ādīvata. This mountain shines like gold.

(Chapter 7, Bhūma Parva).

MĀYAṆAV IV. Another mountain near the Himālayas. These Pandavas visited this mountain on their way to the mountain Gandhārā, from the Āravatā of Āravatā. (Chapter 153, Vana Parva).

MĀYAṆAV V. A mountain situated in the country of Kiskindha. The fight between Bāli and Sugīvā took place near this mountain. This is on the banks of the river Turagamārdhā. Uttarā Rāmāyaṇa states that the palace of Sugīvā was on the top of this mountain. Sri Rāma stayed on the beautiful peak of this mountain for four months. (Slokā 40, Chapter 280, Vana Parva).

MĀMĀṆKAM Māmāṅkam was a very important national festival of Kerala. This festival used to be conducted on the sandy beach of Tirunākēyā. It represented the crowning ceremony of the sovereign of Kerala. There used to be a grand assembly of all the aristocrats of Kerala. There was a grand procession and the commerce of the land attracting a huge crowd of people from different parts of Bārānata. Scholars believe that the word Māmāṅkam is derived from the Sanskrit word "Māmāṅghā". Some say that it was so called because it was conducted on the day of Magha in the month of Māmāṅkh.

The festival was conducted under the auspices of the supreme power in Malabar. For a long period Perumals were in power in Malabar and so Māmāṅkam was conducted under the control of the Perumals. The last of the line of Perumals handed over the right to the then mighty chief, the King of Valluravānd and for several years Māmāṅkam was conducted under his auspices. The foreign traders who came to Malabar, the Muhammadans and the Portuguese, persuaded Sāmuntu (Sambhuri) to take control of this festival and with the help of the foreigners Sāmuntu wrested from the King of Valluravānd the right of conducting the Māmāṅkam. After some time the King of Valluravānd made an attempt to get back the right from Sāmuntu. This enraged Sāmuntu and there ensued a fight between them resulting in much shedding of blood. An agreement was reached that after twelve years each would relinquish the right in favour of the other. So after twelve years Sāmuntu was compelled to relinquish his right but by resorting to many sly tactics he retained the right. The strength of Sāmuntu increased and he became a great power in Malabar. (The fight managed to send away the Portuguese from the coast and Sāmuntu maintained his position till the advent of Tipπu Sultan to Malabar in the year 1780 A.D. Every twelve years Sāmuntu had to show his might to retain the right of the Māmāṅkam and those days of exhibiting strength were ghastly.

The place of this Māmāṅkam was at Tirunākēvēyā in Tirur taluk. A Siva temple of historic fame stands on the shores of the river Bārānata flowing through Tirur taluk. There was an expansive sand beach on its shores, famous for being the scene of many socio-political events there. It was the venue of the mighty Kamābūtis of Malabar to discuss matters of socio-political importance. Every year on the full moon day in the month of Aṣṇa all the chiefs of Kerala would assemble there and on a special day there Sāmuntu would sit with royal robes and a sword in his right hand presiding over the assembly. The sword was given to the Sāmuntu by Cēranu Perumal and was considered the symbol of undisputed sovereignty of Kerala. It was also a sanction to conduct the Māmāṅkam. The Sāmuntu came prepared to give a fight if the authority was challenged by anybody. The ruling Sāmuntu would send an invitation to all chiefs of Kerala. On either side of Sāmuntu would sit the relatives and friends of Sāmuntu. There would be an army of Nairs and Tipāyas ready outside and only after defeating them could anybody approach the dais of Sāmuntu. The dais was placed in front of Sāmuntu.

The whole atmosphere would resound with drumming and shots from pon-guns. Majestic elephants adorned with golden headaddresses would be arrayed there. The conference of the chiefs would last for twelve days and the festival for twenty-four days. The Māmāṅkam attracted a huge crowd from far and wide because there were then many items of interest and information. The Māmāṅkam commenced on a fixed day at an auspicious hour in the morning when the caparisoned elephants started moving to the accompaniment of drums and pipes. The last Māmāṅkam was in 1755 A.D. By the time of Mātānta Devī the centre of power shifted from Mahārājī to the south. Even today the memories of the same arc brightening spots in the history of Mahārājī.

MAMATA, Mother of the sage Dirghatamā. (See under Dirghatāmsā.)

MAMMĀTA. An Indian scholar who lived about 1100 A.D. He was a great scholar and critic in Sanskrit and was born in Kashmir. His masterpiece was a great book "Kāvyā Prakāśa". It is divided into ten chapters. Each chapter is entitled "Ullāsa". There is a view expressed by some people that Mammatā wrote only the first nine chapters of this book and the last chapter was written by another scholar named Alakā.

Numerous commentaries on Mammatā's Kāvyā Prakāśa have been published. It is said that Parabājī's commentator Kavyata was the brother of Mammatā. "Śāhīda Vāestā Vīśa" is another book written by Mammatā.

MANDAVI. Wife of Bharata. Rāma married Siśa; Bharata, Manda; Lakṣmana, Urmilā and Sattugrāha, Sruṭakti (Sarga 73, Viśvanīk Rāmāyana). Manda, Urmilā and Sruṭakti were the daughters of Kusadāvajī, brother of Janaka. (Bhāja Kṛṣṇa, Hanuma Rāmāyana). Bharata got two sons of Manda named Saṁbham and Śrīrāma. Both of them defeated the Gandharvas and established cities one on each side of the river Śindhud. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

MANDAVISARPINī. A louse, a character in a story of Pañcatantra. (For details see under Pañcatantra).

MANDAVYA. A sage. He is known as Anjāmālava also. Once Kauṭiya beat Manda because of his not respecting Kauṭiya. That day Mandava scolded him saying “You will also be beaten like this by a brave monkey” (Yuddha Kṛṣṇa, Kamba Rāmāyana). (More details can be had from the entry Anjāmālava). The Ārāma of Mandava is considered a holy place. Once the King of Kāli went to this Ārāma and performed severe penance there. (Chapter 186, Udyoga Parva).

MANDEHAS. See the 2nd para under Pakal.

MĀNDHĀTĀ. A King of pre-eminence in the dynasty of Īkṣvāku.

2) Birth. Yuvānānī, father of Māṇḍhātā, had a hundred wives. Still he had no children. Greatly grièver by the lack of a son he went to the forests to see people of virtue and piety. During his wandering in the forest he happened to reach a club of sages. Yuvānānī went and sat in their midst. He was happy to be in their midst but was worried in his mind and so he sent up deep sighs as he sat there sad and silent. The sages asked him why he looked so sad and the King crying like a child told them the cause of his grief. The sages took pity on him and made him conduct the yogi ‘Indrāvata’. They brought a jug of water made potent by recitals of mantras to be given to the queen to make them pregnant and placed the pot in the yagasmālā. The yāga was coming to an end. One day the King felt unusually thirsty and unwilling to disturb the sages who were taking rest the King entered the yagasmālā and finding a jug there full of water drank from it and quenched his thirst, little knowing that it contained the water made potent for a specific purpose by mantras. Guided by this event when the sages went to the yagasmālā they found the jug almost empty and were worried and started making enquiries. The King then confessed what he had done. The sages said that it was futile to fight against fate and somehow finished the yāga and went to their Ārāmas.

The King became pregnant and after ten months a child came out bursting open the right side of his stomach. The King consulted his ministers as to what should be done with the child and on their advice the child was taken to the forests and left there. But the child was protected by the Devas and they enquired among themselves as to whose breast-feeding it would get when Indra appeared and said "Oh! Om Dhitā", meaning it would drink me. That was how the child got the name 'Mandāthā'. Indra thrust the child's big toe into its mouth and the child began to suck milk through it. Mandāthā who grew thus drinking its own toe became a mighty man of renown. (7th Sūkha, Devi Bhāgavatam.)

3) Administration of the state and marriage. When Mandāthā became a man of great strength his father died and he ascended the throne and became an Emperor of great fame. He conquered many lands. He made his enemies flee from him. But he intimidated the dayus he got the name Trasuddayu. He married the perfect-figured chaste daughter Bindumati of Kusumanidrāja. She got two sons named Purukutas and Mandākunda. The Purusas state that Mandāthā had another son named Ambariva and sixty daughters who were all married to a sage named Saubhāti.

4) How he caused rains in the country. Mandāthā ruled the country very virtuously without at any time going against truth and justice and his country became peaceful. One day he happened that there were no rains for three successive years in the country and the greatly worried King went to the forest to know from the great sages there the reason for this calamity. The sages told the King thus: "Oh King, of all yogas, Krtya is the best. This yuga is a brahma-predominant one and Dharmma stands on four legs. Peace is for brahmins only and no man of this age can do penance in this yuga. But in your country a Siva is performing penance and that is why the clouds refuse to shower rains. Kill him and then the evil will go". Hearing this Mandāthā replied, "I will never kill an innocent ascetic. Teach me my duty at this time of peril". The sages were pleased at the reply of the King and advised him thus: "Oh King, start observing Vrata on the ekadāsī day. (Eleventh day in each half of a month.) The ekadāsī which falls in the bright half of Bhadrapada is called 'Padaanābbha', and if you observe it by its eugenics you will get not only rains but prosperity and happiness free from misery of any kind. You must persuade your subjects also to observe this".

The King on returning to his palace started observing 'ekada' along with his subjects of all the four castes and even it started to rain. Kausa came in plenty and all the crops were rich. The subjects became happy.

(Chapter 89, Padma Purāṇa.)

(iv) Once Mahāvīru came to Mandāthā disguised as Indra and conversed with him on 'Rājadharmā' (duties and responsibilities of a King). (Sloka 10, Chapter 64, Sānti Parva).
(v) Utuntiya, son of Aigirav, once taught Mandāthā the outlines of Rājadharmā. (Chapter 90, Sānti Parva).

(vii) Mandāthā conquered the whole world in one day. (Sloka 16, Chapter 124, Sānti Parva).

(vi) On another occasion Bhraspati conversed with him on the subject of Greats. (The giving away of cows as gifts). (Sloka 4, Chapter 76, Anuśāsana Parva).

(viii) Mandāthā gave away as gifts millions of cows. (Sloka 3, Chapter 83, Anuśāsana Parva).

MĀNDODĀRĪ I. (MĀNDODĀRĪ). (In South India the name Mandodari is current). Wife of Śiva. The Uttara Rāmāyana contains a story about the previous history of Mandodari.

Māya, an aśura, was born to Kaśyapapaṇḍājāti and his wife Dānu. Once Māya went to Devaloka to see the abodes of the celestial muses there. Dānu devised a way to make Dānu in love with the nymph Hemā and they married her to Māya. Māya went to the southern valley of Himavān and lived there with Hemā constructing there a city called Hemapura. They got two sons Māyā and Dandubhi. But they grieved over the lack of a daughter and she went to a side of Himavān and started penance there to get the blessings of Śiva.

Once a celestial damsel named Madhūrā after observing Somavāravṛata went to Kuṭiśī to pay obeisance to Śiva. Pāravitā was absent from the place then, having gone to attend the birthday celebrations of one of her sons. So Madhūrā met Śiva sitting lonely and this led to a clandestine sexual union between them. When Pāravitā returned she saw traces of the ashes from the body of Śiva on the naked breast of Madhūrā and Pāravitā in her anger cursed Madhūrā to live in a well for twelve years as a frog. Śiva was stupefied at the curse and he went to the well and consoled her by saying that she would after the twelve years of life as a frog become a very beautiful maiden and would be married by a man of great fame and valor. It was near this well that Māya and his wife were performing penance to get a daughter.

After twelve years the frog changed itself into a beautiful maiden and cried loudly from the well. Hearing the cry Māya and Hemā, who were nearby peeped into the well and seeing the young girl took her home and brought her up giving her the name Mandodārī. Śivapaṇḍit returning after his victory marched by that way visited Māya and seeing the girl fell in love with her and married her according to Vedic rites and took her to Lankā. Śivapaṇḍit got three sons of her, Meghānātha, Atīkāya and Aksakumāra.

Mandodari was a very beautiful woman. Hanumān when he entered the bed-room of Śivapaṇḍit in search of Sītā was thumb-found at the beauty of Mandodārī and mistook her for a second for Sītā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana).

MĀNDODĀRĪ II. A virtuous princess of the kingdom of Sītāra. She determined to live an unmarred life.
but was forced by destiny to marry a cruel and uncharitable husband. The story of this Mandodari as related by Devi in Mahabharata is given below.

Candraesana, King of Sudhala, got into his wife Gunavati a very beautiful daughter named Mandodari. Even when she was ten years old the King started searching for a suitable husband for her. He found out Kumbhagriha (son of Sudhanyaka, King of Madrada) and informed his daughter about his desire to make him her consort. But Mandodari refused to marry and desired to spend her life worshipping God. Candraesana felt miserable at her reply.

Years went by and Mandodari became a blooming lady and yet she remained unmarried in her determination. One day she was playing in the royal gardens with her companions when the prince of Kosala, Viravasa came and discovered Mandodari. The princess was so beautiful that Viravasa at first glance fell in love with her. But Mandodari refused to marry and made a request to Viravasa to marry her. Mandodari refused.

Time rolled on and soon the marriage of her younger sister Indumati came. Candraesana invited all the neighbouring kings for the marriage. The King of Madra Chandraesana was invited for the marriage. The King was very charming to look at but very bad in character. Mandodari was attracted by his external beauty and she expressed her willingness to marry him. Her father was immensely pleased and on the nearest auspicious day she was given in marriage to Chandrakanta.

Mandodari went to the palace of Chandrakanta and they lived happily for some time. One day she saw her husband having sexual affairs with Chandrakanta among the palace servants. She reproached her husband and yet two days later she saw her husband with another servant girl. She was greatly disappointed and she left the palace for the forests where she started performing penance.

Mandodari was of a class of house. The haghadas horses helped Agura in his campaign of victory (Sloka 6, Chapter 28, Sabha Parva).

Mandodari's (S) A tribe. The King of this tribe was Ayus. The daughter of Ayus,wear was married to Parikshit of the Ikshvaku dynasty. They had three sons, Sal, Dala and Bali. (Chapter 190, Vana Parva).

Mangala. A deity in the form of Kuja or Planet Mars. There are different versions in the Puranas regarding the birth of Mangala.

(1) Sati committed suicide at the Daksayana and Siva greatly grieved at the loss of his wife started penance. A sweat drop fell from the forehead of Siva doing severe penance and Mangala was the son born of this sweat drop and the daughter of the god Kama among the Navagrahas and according to the science of astrology this Graha is considered the protecter of the landed property and the wife of a person. (Siva Purana, Rudra Samhita 1-10 and Skanda Purana 4-17).

(2) Siva married Vikesi daughter of Hiranyaksha. One day while they were engaged in sexual pleas Agni came to their presence. Enraged at this the eyes of Siva blazed in anger and a drop of water from his eyes fell on the face of Vikesi and she became pregnant. After some days Vikesi found it impossible to bear the embryo of Siva thus formed and she aborted it. A child was born and the goddess of earth took it and fed it with breast milk. It was that child who later on became Mangala. (Skanda Purana).

(3) Mangala was born of the blood drops of Siva (Bhava Purana).

(4) Mangala was the son of Bharadvaja. (Ganea Purana).

(5) Mangala was the son of Bhumi Devi, Devki, Figure, Dhanvantari, Manas and Gandhari was worshipped at the time of Varahakalpa. It is also said that the Vedas that Bhumi Devi is the wife of Mahavasu's incarnation as Varaha. Mangala alias the planet Mars was born to Bhumi Devi of Mahavasu as Varaha. (9th Skanda, Devi Bhagavata).

MANGALAGAUDHYA. A devi. Vedas and Vedavats like praise this goddess who is always interested in granting the requests of her devotees. Because she shares the same qualities as Mangala (Mangala-gaudhia). There is another version that she got the name because she was worshipped by Mangala (Kuja) and because she grants the requests of Mangala. Yet another version is that she got the name because she was worshipped by the King Mangala chief of the seven islands. Born of the species of Dagadushet she is very kind and accustomed to her devotees. Parikshit worshipped this Devi before he went to destroy the demon trio of Tripura. (9th Skanda, Devi Bhagavata).

Maha 1. A serpent born of the family of Dhriratats. This serpent was burnt to death in the Sarpanatita of Janutakya. (Sloka 19, Chapter 37, Adi Parva).

Maha 2. A sage. This sage was a member of the Brahmana. (Sloka 21, Chapter 1, Sabha Parva).

Maha 3. One of the two Parzada given to Subahmania by Candra. The other one was named Sunand. (Sloka 32, Chapter 42, Shyla Parva).

Maha 4. A son born to Kasyapaprajapati of his wife Kadr. Kani lived near the city of Guvitra. This serpent died penance to please Siva and obtained a boon that Guvitra should cultivate him. (31:6, Adi Parva and Brahma Purana).
wrong information and Samudradatta was set free with his younger brother, Kumudachara, Kshatrimuci, and Maya, a fair woman, who was the wife of the King of Kamarupa (Kathana). The seven sons of Manibhadra after learning magic from Maya created a huge cobra and travelled all over the world on it. One day they reached a mountain near Raimulkalika. There they saw the sage Agastya coming that way and just to tease him they called the cobra and had it beneath the ground in the form of a circle and they themselves stood on it as seven palm trees in a circle and caused obstruction to the sage in his path. The sage as he came near the trees knew by his spiritual powers what trick had been played on him and said curing, ‘May you stand like this for ever!’ The princes knew the hideousness of the curse and pleaded for redemption and the sage said, ‘After centuries this magic will work in Vaisnava as Sri Rama would come and give you salvation’.

The princes stood there as trees grown to unusual heights with round black trunk casting shades all around. Underneath grew a shrubbage deep and thick and the seven trees stood there presenting to the onlookers a sight of wonder.

Sri Rama and Arjuna reached the place of the seven trees. Suddenly Rama took his bow and arrows and pressing his foot on a stone beneath sent an arrow and to the wonder of all, the seven trees standing in a circle fell all together and the arrow returned to his quiver.

When Rama pressed the stone on the ground with his foot he was pressing on a vital point on the head of the cobra lying coiled in a circle under the ground, bearing the seven teeth. The cobra got a shock and instantly straightened itself for a second and the trees thus came in a row straight on the path of the arrow of Sri Rama. They were all cut at once and before they had time to fall down the serpent coiled itself again and regained its original position and so the trees fell down in the circle in which they stood. All these happened so quickly that Arjuna was not able to see what happened and so every body was surprised to see all the seven trees in a circle falling down by a single arrow. The princes were thus relieved from the curse.

MANIBHADRA III

1. General information

A Yaksas. He was a deity of merchants and travellers. (Skotla 150, Chapter 64, Vana Parva).

2. Other details

(i) He stays in the court of Kubera. (Skotla 15, Chapter 10, Sabha Parva).

(ii) Once this Yaksas in the request of a cloud named Kumadhara gave a boon to a brahmin. (Skotla 21, Chapter 171, Santhi Parva).

(iii) The sage Asvavakra once welcomed this Yaksas. (Skotla 33, Chapter 19, Anugita Parva).

(iv) When Arjuna went to Marutta to bring his wealth Arjuna worshipped this Yaksas and the Yaksas blessed him. (Skotla 7, Chapter 65, Asvamedha Parva).

MANIBHADRA. A Pashoda of Siva. (See under Candrasena II).

MANICARA. A Yakas. In the fight between Ravana and Kubera this Yaksas helping Kubera created great havoc in the army of Ravana. (Uttara Ramayana).

MANIDVIPA. The abode of Devi. Devi resides in this island which is far beyond Kailasa. (3rd Skanda, Devi Bhagavata).

MANIGIRI. A brother of Nalakubara. (See under Nalakubara).

MANJALI. A prominent river in Sakaadvipa. (Skotla 32, Chapter 11, Bhishma Parva).

MANIKANGANA. A land portion of Sakaadvipa situated near Syumagiri. (Skotla 26, Chapter 11, Bhishma Parva).

MANIKUTTAKA. A follower of Subrahmanyas. (Skotla 20 Chapter 46, Salva Parva).

MANIKYAVACAKAR (MANIKKA-VASAHAR). A devotee and poet who lived in Tamilmadu. He is believed to have lived during the period of the eighth and ninth centuries A.D. He was born in Tiruvadivur in an Adilasava brahmin family. Tiruvadivur was a village near Madura, the capital of Pandiya kingdom. His father was Samudradatta, and his mother was Subrahmanyas. The name given by his parents to Manikyavacakar is still unknown. Because he was born in Tiruvadivur everybody called him Tiruvadivur. He became a scholar in his sixteenth year. The Pandiya king called him to his palace and appointed him as his minister. He gave him the honour of the title of Tennavar Brahmanar. Manikyavacakar showed more interest in devotional matters than in matters of the state. Once when the king was hearing his music he got information that in one of the eastern ports had landed a set of good war- horses for sale. He sent Tiruvadivur to that place. The minister, when near the port of Tiruppernur, heard a sound of Vedic utterances and he immediately went to the place from where the sound came. He saw Lord Siva sitting under a tree in the guise of a Guru. Forgetting all state affairs he became engrossed in the meditation of Siva. Suddenly he developed a talent for poetry and music and sweet attractive poems in praise of Siva started flowing from his tongue. Siva was immensely pleased and gave him the name Manikyavacakar meaning that every Yaksas (sentences) coming out of his tongue was equal in value to a manikya (Ruby). The guru gave him a ruby too. Manikyavacakar in the garb of a mendicant joined a troop of Siva devotees and spent all the money he had for the service of the devotees of Siva and also for the reconstruction of a dilapidated Siva temple in Tiruppernur.

Manikyavacakar reached Madura and informed the king that the horses would arrive at the palace on the day Avani-mula (Mula star in the month of Sravana) and presented the king with the ruby which his Guru had given him. The king was not satisfied and he imprisoned him. On the Avani-mula day at the stipulated time the horses arrived at the palace. The horses were led by strange foreigners. It was Sri Paramesvara himself who had come as the chief of the foreigners. Manikyavacakar was released from jail and he also came to see the horses. The king gave the leader of the troopers a silk shawl as present. The head of the troopers received it by the end of his whip. The king presented this but the troopers went back without any trouble. The horses were put in stables and Māṇikyāvācakar went to his Āśrama.

At midnight all the new horses in the stables turned into jackals and roamed about in the streets howling loudly and disturbing everyone. After some time they all disappeared. The anger of the king knew no bounds. He imprisoned Māṇikyāvācakar again. The servants of the king took him to river Vaigai. That day there was an unusual flood in the river and the city of Madura was submerged in water. The king then realised his mistake and begged pardon of Māṇikyāvācakar. Māṇikyāvācakar asked the king to repair the dam in the Vaigai. The king assented to the proposal but to save money the work was entrusted to the citizens of Madura.

At that time there was an old woman in Madura called Vanti. She earned her livelihood by selling sweetmeats. The king ordered her also to join the work of the dam. She prayed to Paramāśiva and then a young man came to the old woman and offered to work for her in her stead. The young man representing Vanti went to Vaigai and started working for her. When the king arrived he found the young man got his work satisfactorily and struck him on his back with a whip. A basketful of sand the young man was carrying fell down and the work of the dam was instantly completed. Not only that; all the persons including the king felt as though they were struck.

Vanti attained Svarga and Māṇikyāvācakar went to Cidambaram. The king repented.

Māṇikyāvācakar saw Śiva in person several times. Many wonderful events happened at the Cidambaram temple after the arrival of Māṇikyāvācakar there. The King of Lakāk hearing about the greatness of Māṇikyāvācakar brought his dumb daughter to him and she gained the power of speech. The Buddhist saints of Lakāk came to Māṇikyāvācakar and entered into philosophical discussions with him. They became dumb. The king of Lakāk and his followers became devotees of Śiva.

Māṇikyāvācakar sat in his Āśrama and composed divine songs. Once Śiva in the guise of a brahmin came there and copied the songs written by him. Even while he was reciting his divine songs to the devotees his soul left his body and merged with that of Śiva.

The divine songs by Māṇikyāvācakar constitute the eighth Khandā of Śaiva hymns by name "Tirumurai". They include "Tiruvācakam" and "Tirukkovāiyār". The Tiruvācakam contains 654 verses in 51 hymns and the Tirukkovāiyār contains 400 verses. All these are songs in praise of Śiva sung on different occasions. (Divyavacanam)

MĀṆIṆĀṆ. 1. A king. Mahābhārata gives the following details about him.

(i) MāṆiṆāṆ was born of an aspect of Viṣṇu, son of the asura Danuṣya. (Śloka 44, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).
(ii) This king was present at the marriage of Draupadi. (Śloka 22, Chapter 185, Ādi Parva).
(iii) Bhiramāsa while on his early victory march defeated this king. (Śloka 11, Chapter 39, Sahā Parva).
(iv) This king fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas during the great Kurukṣetra battle. (Śloka 20, Chapter 4, Udyoga Parva).
(v) MāṆiṆāṆ was killed in the fight between MāṆiṆāṆ and Bhūrīrāvaras. (Śloka 53, Chapter 28, Drona Parva).

MĀṆIṆĀṆ. II. A serpent. This serpent is a member of the court of Varuṇa. (Śloka 9, Chapter 9, Sahā Parva).

MĀṆIṆĀṆ. III. A sacred place. If one spends a night there one would get the benefit of performing an Agniṣṭoma yajña. (Śloka 101, Chapter 52, Vana Parva).

MĀṆIṆĀṆ. IV. A Yakṣa who was a friend of Kubera. Once the sage Agastyā cursed him that he would be killed by the hand of a man. The yakṣa was killed by Bhimasena. (Śloka 59, Chapter 160, Vana Parva and see under AGASTYA, Para 10).

MĀṆIṆĀṆ. V. A mountain. Once, when Arjuna went on a pilgrimage to Śiva's presence with Kṛṣṇa in a dream, he saw this mountain MāṆiṆāṆ. (Śloka 24, Chapter 9, Drona Parva).

MĀṆIṆĀṆ. VI. A parasid of Śiva. This pārśāṅga joined hands with Viśvakṛṣṇa to injure the sage Bhūta in the Dakṣayāga. (Uttara Kṛṣṇa).
MANIVĀHANA. Another name for King Kusāmba. (Chapter 63, 3d Parva)

MANIVAKKA. One of the sons of the Vasa, Apa. (Chapter 84, 3d Parva)

MANIVAKA. One of the sons born to Rājatasānta of his wife Manivakka. This Yaksa married Kausāthā's daughter Devakā. The sons born to them are called 'Gāyakās'. (Brahmanda Purāṇa, 3.7.127-131).

MANIVAKKA. A Yakṣa. He lived on the mountains of and fared (Sūktam 5, Chapter 139, Vana Parva).

MANIVATAPPĀRA. A rock of Pracūrōt fame. Rāvana spent one night on this rock with Rambhā. Rambhā was going to her lover Nakakśītharā one night alone and Rāvana seeing her on the way carried her away to the place. (Uttara Kātākaya).

MANJULĪ. A river of Pracūrōt fame. (Sūktam 34, Chapter 9, Bhūvama Parva).

MANJUNĀTHI. A nymph. The sage Medhavī cursed this nymph and made her into a devī. (See under Medhavī).

MĀNKA. A place of habitation in the island of Saka. This place is inhabited mostly by dull-witted Brahmans. (Chapter 11, Bhūvama Parva).

MĀNKA. A city of Vārāṇasī. The people of Vārāṇasī who was a great devotee of Ganesa. During the time of King Divodasa II Śiva wanted to destroy the city of Kaśi and appointed his son Ganesa (Nikumbha) for the same.

Ganeśa came to Kaśi and appearing in person before his devotee Mānka, asked him to build a temple on the outskirts of Kaśi. Mānka immediately fulfilled the wish of Ganesa (Nikumbha) installed himself in that temple getting for it the name Nikumbhabhūta. Devotees began to flow into the temple and Nikumbha sitting there answered the prayers of all but he never fulfilled the prayers of the King to have a son. This annoyed Divodasa and he destroyed the temple and turned Nikumbha cursed that the city of Kaśi would become desolate. Śiva's desire thus became fulfilled (22, 33, Vysya Purāṇa and 5, 67, 43, Brahmanda Purāṇa).

MĀNKAṆA (MĀNKAṆA). A sage

1) General information. He was born to Vāyubhavacī of his wife Vukanatika. (Sūktam 58, Chapter 30, Sālyā Parva).

Vamanā Purāṇa, 3d Chapter states that Mānkan was one of the spiritual sons of Kāyapaḥrapāṭi.

2) Juice of pothera flows from fingers. The sage was living in Sapañjakṣata and one day by accident his thumb was cut off from his hand by the sharp edge of Kārava. But instead of blood, the juice of pothera began to flow from the thumb and the sage, overjoyed at this strange phenomenon, started dancing. Along with Mānkan the earth and the sky also started dancing and the dancing showed no signs of stopping. Śiva then appeared before Mānkan and asked him the cause of his non-stop dancing. Śiva was in disguise and Mānkan did not recognize the new-comer and the sage told him about the strange phenomenon. As they were talking Śiva touched the thumb of the sage with his little finger and let the flow from the finger changed from pot-herb juice to sugar-candy juice. Vamanā Purāṇa states that it was ashes which flowed from the finger. The hermit was ashamed. He understood that the guest was Śiva and he fell at his feet. Śiva blessed the hermit and granted him boons.

3) Mānakāṇa falls in love with Sarasvatī Devī. One day Sarasvatīdevī came to the place of his residence in the guise of a very attractive woman. Mānakāṇa had semi-nudity emission on seeing her and the semen fell on the surface of the water. The sage stored the water with semen in a pot and soon seven spouts were born from it. They all became sages named Vayuvēga, Vayubāla, Vayuhā, Vayumulūḍa, Vayujitā, Vayujjita and Vayukar (Chapter 48, Vayu Parva and Chapter 38, Sālyā Parva).

4) Birth of Kāraḍāgabhandi. Besides the seven sons Mānakāṇa got a daughter named Kāraḍāgabhandi. Manakāṇa was her mother. (See under Kāraḍāgabhandi).

5) Mānakāṇa discards the river Saraswatī. It was sage Mānakāṇa who invoked the river Saraswatī and made it flow through Kuruksetra. Chapter 39, Vamanā Purāṇa).

MĀNKI. A great sage. It was Bhūssana, while he was lying on his bed of arrows who narrated the story of this sage. Mānki was an aspirant of worldly things and once he got two bullocks. He was plaguing with them one day when a camel came and carried them away. Happened he came to the Kaśi and lamented deeply over it. This lamentation became known later as the famous Mānkiṇi. By the time the goddess reached to him the mind of the sage was changed and he became one bereft of all worldly desires and he acquired moksha. (Chapter 177, Śanti Parva).

MĀNKI. A sage who lived in Pratīyuga. He was the son of Kausāthādhana and was a Vaivasvata of great renown. (This sage had two wives named Surūpa and Virūpa. Both had no sons and as per the advice of his guru he went to Sāhāsmantika and did penance there. After several years of rigorous austeritys he got very many children. The place where Mānkinhara ascet did penance was known later as Mānkin kurita. It is also called Saptasārāgata. In Dvaparayuga the Pādavas visited the place and gave it the name Saptadhirā also. (Uttara Kātākaya, Purāṇa Pragāsana).

MANMATHIKAṆA. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. There is a reference to this warrior in Mahābhārata, Sālyā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 72.

MANODARI. Wife of Dūrvaśīr. (See under Ghaṭṭi-kāṇa).

MANOṆGURA. Man may do many things, right or wrong, good or bad, but it is the purity of your mind that matters. The following story is to illustrate how much your life depends on the quality of your thoughts (ManoṆgura).

Once on the shores of Gauḍa a Brahmāna and a Candaśa sat side by side and performed penance. After some days of foodless penance the Brahmāna felt hungry and his thoughts went to the fishermen he had seen earlier. He thought thus, "Oh how happy are these fishermen. They catch good fishes and eat to their heart's content and are happy. They are the luckiest people of this world". The thoughts of the Candaś also went to the fishermen. But he thought thus: "Oh how cruel are these fishermen! How many innocent lives do they destroy to fill their belly. They must be demons to do so." Both of them died after some days and the Brahmāna was born as a fisherman and the Candaś a prince. Both of them were re-born near their abodes in their previous birth and both remembered their previous lives. The Candaśa was happy but the Brāhmaṇa regretted his fault. (Taraṇa I, Madanamahankālmabhaka, Kadhārīstigara).

MANOHARA I. Wife of the Vasu Som. Varcas was born of her first. Then she had three more sons named Śīśāra, Prāṇa and Ramaṇa. (Śloka 22, Chapter 66, Adi Parva).

MANOHARA II. A nymph of Alakāputri. Once when Asvāvakāra went to the court of Kubera, this nymph gave a perfect dance in dancing in honour of that sage. (Śloka 45, Chapter 19, Anuśāsana Parva).

MANOJAVA II. During the Manvantara of Cākṣusa, the sixth Manu, Indra was Manojiva, the leader of the Devas. (Anśa 3, Chapter 180, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

MANOJAVA III. A follower of Subrahmanya. (Śloka 17, Chapter 46, Salya Parva).

MANOJAVA IV. A sacred place situated in Vyasavana in Kuruksetra. If one bathes in a pond there one will have to one's credit the benefit of making a thousand Godinas. (Śloka 99, Chapter 68, Vana Parva).

MANONUGA. A place near the mountain Vāmanā in the island of Krauṣṭha. (Śloka 11, Chapter 12, Bhīma Parva).

MANORAMĀ I. Wife of Dhrusasandhi King of Kosala. (See under Dhrusasandhi for details).

MANORAMĀ II. A celestial woman. She was the daughter of Kāsiyapa Prjāpati, born of his wife Pradhā. (Śloka 50, Chapter 65, Adi Parva). She parted with her husband, Jaspurana of Arjuna. (Śloka 62, Chapter 122, Adi Parva).

MANORAMĀ III. Once by his spiritual powers the sage Uddālaka brought the river Sarasvati to his place of yajña and that diversion was then known as Manoramā. (Śloka 23, Chapter 38, Salya Parva).

MANORATHA. A calf once created by Śrī Kṛṣṇa by his spiritual powers. (See under Surabhi).

MANTHARA. The city of Bhṛma. This city is situated in the centre of the nine cities on the top of the mountain Mahameru. Around it are the cities of the Aṣṭādikāpālas. (Ith Sandha, Devi Bhāgavata).

MANTHARA I. A maid of Kalkeyi the wife of Dāsaratha. This hunchbacked woman was born of the species of a Gandharva named Dunabhipi. (Śloka 10, Chapter 276, Yana Parva). When everything was made ready to crown Śrī Rāma as the heir-apparent of Ayodhya, it was Manthara who persuaded Kalkeyi to go to Daśaratha and ask him to send Śrī Rāma to the forests. Had not the cruel tongue of Manthara played like that, the history of the solar dynasty itself would have been different. (See under Kalkeyi).

MANTHARA II. Daughter of Virocana. (Sarga 25, Bala-kāṇḍa, Vālmīkī Rāmāyana). Indra killed this Manthara.

MANTHINI. A follower of Subrahmanya. (Śloka 28, Chapter 46, Salya Parva).

MANTRA. See under Vedas.

MANTRAPĀLA. One of the eight ministers of the great King Dāsaratha. The other seven were: Jayanta, Dhrīṣṭī, Viṣṇu, Aṣṭādikā, Adbhudhaka, Aśoka and Sumantra. (Sarga 7, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Vālmīkī Rāmāyana).

MANU I. See under Manvantara.

MANU II. Son of the Agni Pācėcajana. Pācėcajana had three wives Supraja, Bhadbdhāsa and Nikā. He got of his first two wives six sons and of his third wife Nītē, a daughter and seven sons. (Chapter 223, Vana Parva).

MANU III. A celestial maiden born to Kāsiyapa of Pradhā. (Chapter 59, Verse 44, Adi Parva).

MANUSĀTIRTHA. A sacred pond lying on the outskirts of Kuruksetra. There is a legend showing the origin of this pond. Once a hunter wounded a deer with his arrow and the deer ran and dropped itself into the pond. When it rose up from the water it became a man. From that day onwards the pond became holy and got the name Manusātirtha. (Śloka 65, Chapter 86, Vana Parva).

MANUSMṚTI. A code of conduct written by Manu alias Manvācārya who was the father of man kind for the harmonious existence of a social life. The book contains twelve chapters. The first chapter deals with the origin of the Smṛti and the origin of the world. No other Smṛti begins like this and so it is believed that this chapter must have been added to it later. The contents of each of the other eleven chapters are given below:

Second chapter. It deals with the sense organs and stresses the importance of conquering and controlling them. It describes the qualities of a brahman.

Third chapter. It contains the duties of a householder after his course of study of the Vedas. Eight different kinds of marriages are described in it. It also deals with methods of giving protection to women and children.

Fourth chapter. Duties of a brahman, study of the Vedas and responsibilities of a Sūdraka are all described in this chapter.

Fifth chapter. This deals with pure and impure foods, impurity and methods of purification, women and their responsibilities.

Sixth chapter. This contains the duties of those who have entered the āśrama of Vānaprastha and also of others.

Seventh chapter. It deals with the duties of Kings and ministers.

Eighth chapter. It deals with law and justice. It contains laws for the proper conduct of justice and includes ways and means of settling disputes and handling cases of debts, sale without right, partnership, duels, theft, prostitution, boundary disputes and all such matters as are to be decided by a court of law.

Ninth chapter. It deals with the duties of a husband and wife. It also contains matters relating to property rights, partition and the duties of a King with regard to these.

Tenth chapter. It deals with the duties of the different castes, mixed castes and the duties of one in times of danger.

Eleventh chapter. It deals first with penance, observation of Vratas, Yāgas, Vajyas and fire to the priests. It then deals with punishments of crimes, expiation for murder, prostitution etc.

Twelfth chapter. It deals with the theory of births and describes how your deeds in the present life are directive of the nature of life in your next birth. What deeds would fetch you what life is also explained. It contains instructions on Ātmajātāna and the way to obtain mokṣa (absolute bliss).

The basis of the present Hindu Law is Manusmṛti and it is believed to have been written in B.C. 500, MANUSYA (MAN). The Purāṇas have not given a definite explanation regarding the origin of Man, the most important of all living beings. Many stories regarding the origin of Man were current among the ancient peoples. According to Hindu Purāṇas Man was born to Śivāyamihvā Manu who in turn was born of Brahmā. According to Vālmikī Rāmāyaṇa (Sarga 14, Aranya Kāndā) all the living beings including man were born to Katyāpaprajāpati of his eight wives, Aditi, Diti, Daśa, Kālā, Tārōri, Krodhavāsī, Manu, and Anālā. From Aditi were born the devas; from Diti, the daityas; from Daśa, the dānavas; from Kālā, the asuras Kālāka and Nārāka; from Tārōri, the bird-folk Kranṭik, Bīςṭ, Syenī, Dhrātāṛī, and Subhī; from Krodhavāsī the animal flock. Mṛgī, Mṛgāṇā, Ḥari, Bhūmāvā, Mātā, Śudālī, Svekā and Surālī; from Manu, mankind and from Anālā, the flora.

There is a basis to believe that the Greeks and the people of Bhārata accepted with slight modifications the theory of evolution. The Daśavatāras of Vīruṣa almost reproduces the progressive changes in the form of a living thing from a fish to a man. The theory of Darwin that life was first formed in water was current among the sages of ancient Bhārata, even from very carely times.

Apa eva savarjadau
Tām viyamāpasājat //

(He created water first and cast virility therein).

In the Daśavatāras (ten incarnations of Vīruṣa) the first avatarā is Mataya (Fish). The next one is Kṛṣṇa or Kṛṣṇa which is a progress in the form of fish.
The third is Vairiha or horse which is another step forward in evolution. The fourth is Narasimha (Man cadre lion) which is the last step towards the formation of Man. That avatarā has got the traits of both man and animal. The next one is Vāmana or a small man.
Then Śrī Rama and Śrī Kṛṣṇa, both fully grown men but with different kinds of culture.

MANVANTARA (M).

1) Kalpa, Manvantara and Caturyuga. The Prāṇātika (universe) is perishable. At one time, it takes its origin, at another time it perishes. Brahmā, the creator of the universe, has both the birth and death. The period of the birth and death of a Brahmā is known as a “Mahākalya”. The flood that comes at the death of a Brahmā is called “Mahāpralaya”. One day of Brahmā is called Kalpāla. In the Purāṇas one Kalpa or one day of Śvāmī is divided into fourteen parts. The master or rule of each of these divisions is a Manu. There are eighteen Manuṣyas. The life-span of each Manu is called a “Manvantara”.

There are seventy one Caturyugas in each Manvantara.
The four yugas namely Kṛṣṭya, Tretāya, Dwāparayuga and Kaliyuga make up one Caturyuga. At the end of seventy-one such Caturyugas, that is, at the end of every two hundred and eighty-four (71 x 4) yugas, a Manu completes his life-span. Along with that, the human being is born at the time of the birth of that Manu, also come to the end of their lives. Fourteen such Manvantaras make one day of Brahmā. It is at the end of that day that the original universe perishes. Brahmā’s life-span is 120 years. At the end of that period, that Brahmā perishes. That is to say, at the end of every 42,200 divine days (120 x 360) which is the life-span of a Brahmā, a deluge takes place. Thus in one Brahmā’s time 42,200 Kalpas take place. A Brahmā’s life-span is known as “Mahākalya” and the close of a Brahmā’s period is called “Mahāpralaya”.

2) Human year (Manusya-śarīra) and Divine year (Deva śarīra). When two leaves are placed one over the other and they are pierced by a needle, the time required for the needle to pass from the first leaf to the second leaf is called “Alpakāla”. Thirty such alpakālas make one “Truti”. Thirty truti make one “Kalpa”. Thirty Kalas make one “Kāraṇa”, which is also known as “Nimisha”, “Noṭi” or “Mātra”. Four “Nimissē” make one “Gamita”. Ten Gamitas, one “Nītrīṭāpruṇa”. Six nītrīṭāpruṇas, one “Viniśchākā”. Sixty viniśchākas one day (day and night together). Fifteen days, one “Paśa”. Two Paśas, one “Candra māsa” (lunar month). One Candraśāma for human beings is one “ahorātra” (one day and night making up one full day) for the gods. Twelve Candra māsas make one year for human beings. One year for human beings is one ahorātras for the gods. Three hundred ahorātras of gods make one “Devaśarīra”, 4,800 devaśarīaras make one Kṛṣṭya 3,600 devaśarīaras make one Tretāya, 2,400 devaśarīaras make one Dwāpara 1,200 devaśarīaras make one Kaliyuga.

A Manusya’s period is completed at the end of 71 Caturyugas. With that, the first generation of gods, the Devas, the Manuṣyas, the “Prapātika” and the animal biggest species become extinct. When 360 such ahorātras of Brahmā are completed, he completes one year. After completing 120 such years, a Brahmā perishes. Again a period of absolute inactivity follows for the length of a Brahmā’s life-span. After a period of 120 Brahma varṣas (the lifespan of a Brahmā) another Brahmā comes into being.

The life-span of Brahmā is shown in the following tabular form:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Period</th>
<th>Duration</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>360 days for gods</td>
<td>One Devaśarīra</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12,000 Devaśarīaras</td>
<td>One Caturyuga (56 lakhs years for human beings)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>71 caturyugas</td>
<td>One Manvantara (One Manu’s life-span)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14 Manvantaras</td>
<td>One Kalpa (one day time for Brahmā)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2 Kalpas</td>
<td>One day (and night) for Brahmā (Ahorātra)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>360 days of Brahmā</td>
<td>One Brahma Varṣa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>120 Brahma Varṣas</td>
<td>One Brahmā’s life-span</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

This life-span of one Brahmā is therefore 30 creases 9 lakhs 17 thousands 376 hundreds of years of human beings.

It is said that a Manu’s period of reign is 4,32,000
Manusyaśarīaras. (Bṛhadāraṇyaka, 3rd Skandha).

3) The caturyuga scheme. A caturyuga consists of the four yugas, namely Kṛṣṭya, Tretāya, Dwāpara and Kali yugas. At the end of each caturyuga, the Vedas perish Then the “Saptarśi” (seven sages) come down from heaven to the earth and restore them again. Manu who is the propounder of Dharma Ātika, is also born in every Kṛtayuga. The Devas of each Manvantaram feed upon the share of Hāvis (offerings at sacrifices) of the yāga till the end of that Manvantara. During the whole period of the Manvantara, the earth is protected and preserved by the sons of Manu and their descendants. Thus Manu, the Saptarśi, Devas, Indra and the Kings who are the sons of Manu are the authorities of the Manvantara. After 14 Manvantaras a Kalpa of about 1,000 yugas, comes to an end. After that there is a night period of 12 months over the same period in duration. At that time Mahāvīra sleeps on his bed Ananta in the ocean of deluge. After that, he wakes up again and performs creation. Manus, Kings, Indra, Devas and Saptarśi are the Śāṣṭrika aspects of Mahāvīra, who performs the work of protecting the world. In Kṛta yuga, Mahāvīra assumes the form of Kapila and others and preaches “Paramāṇa”. In Treta yuga he assumes the form of an emperor and destroys the wicked people. In Dvāpara yuga, he assumes the form of Vyāsa and after dividing the Veda into 4 sections, classifies each of the sections into the various branches. At the end of Kaliyuga, Mahāvīra assumes the form of Kalki and restores the visible to the path of righteousness. This is the last manvantara or the “existence” of Mahāvīra. (Vishnu Purāṇa, Part III, Chapter 2).

4) The fourteen Manus. The names of the fourteen Manus of one Kalpa are given as below:

(i) Śvāyambhuva (2) Śvāraciṣṇa (3) Uttama (Autami)

Each of the above Manus is described below:

(1) Śvāyambhuva.

(a) General. Śvāyambhuva was born as the spiritual son of Brahmā. This Manu got his name because he was “Śvāyambhuva” or born from Brahmā. He married the goddess Satarūpī, the spiritual daughter of Brahmā. After 14 months, he went to the bed of the ocean of milk, made an image of Mahādevi there, and worshipped her by chanting Vaiṣṇava mantras and performed an austere penance. After a hundred years of such worship the goddess was pleased. She appeared before Śvāyambhuva and granted him boons. She blessed him to attain the highest place in Heaven (Paramāṇa) after begetting vast progeny. Then the goddess went to Vindhyā mountain and became the deity of Vindhyā. Śvāyambhuva returned and started his reign by worshipping the goddess.

This Śvāyambhuva is regarded as the author of the famous work “Manu Smṛti”. Kālidāsa says that the Kings of the Rāgu dynasty lived in strict obedience to the laws laid down by this Manu. (Devī Bhāgavata, Dāśamūrta, Mahābhārata).

(b) Other details.

(i) The Saptarśis of first Manvantara were: Marīcī, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulaha, Kauṭiya, Pulasya and Vasiṣṭha. Devas are known as Yamas. The first Manu had ten sons namely Agnīdhra, Agnibhū, Mediḥa, Medhatithi, Vasu, Jyotirmān, Dyutimān, Haya, Savana and Putra and they ruled over the country. (Harivamśa, Chapter 2).

(ii) Emperor Pṛthu turned Śvāyambhuva Manu into a calf and obtained medicine from Bhūmi by milking her as a cow. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

(iii) Born from Virūṇa udā. (M.B. Ādi Parva Chapter 1, Verse 32).
(iv) Sage Gṛipana married this Manu’s daughter. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 46).
(v) This Manu taught Soma, the art of Āčārya. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Verse 43).
(vi) Since this Manu had blessed the clouds of the Magadh country they sent perennial rains to that region. (M.B. Śaiva Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 10).
(vii) Manu came to the world, riding in the chariot of the gods to see Arjuna’s fight. (Bhagavata Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 10).
(viii) This Manu had a wife named Sarasvati (Satarūpī). (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 14).
(ix) This Manu lives in Bhumisvārā. (Śiva Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 46).
(x) He came at the time of Subrahmanya’s birth. (Śiva Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 10).
(xi) Manu held discussions with Svāyambhuva. (Śiva Parva, Chapter 36).
(xii) He was the King of men. (Śiva Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 21).
(xiii) This Manu is called “Prajāpati Manu”. Once he had a talk with Brahmā on the subject of Dharma. (Śiva Parva, Chapter 20).
(b) Other details. Sūlaṅgi was the name of the Devendra of this Manvantara. There were five groups of Devas, namely, Sudhāmans, Satyas, Tapsas, Prärdanidas and Śivas, each group consisting of twelve Devas. The seven sons of the sage Vasiṣṭha were the saptārśis of this Manvantara. These seven sons of Vasiṣṭha by his wife Uṛjā were Rajas, Gotra, Uṛdhvabāhū, Savana, Anagha, Suṭapās and Sukra. Aja, Parasudipta and others were the sons of the Manu Uttama. (Viśṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 1).

4) Tāmaśa

(a) General. The fourth Manu Tāmaśa was the son of Priyavrata. That King performed penance to Devi on the northern bank of the river Narmadā with Kāmarāja mantra. As a result of Devi’s blessing, he obtained a prosperous kingdom and worthy sons. After a long reign he attained heaven. (Devi Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(b) Other details. At the time of this Manu, there were four groups of Devas, namely—Supāras, Haris, Satyas, and Suchis. Each of these groups consisted of twenty seven Devas. Sibi who had performed a hundred aśas was the Indra. The Saptārśis of this Manvantara were—Yudrīm, Pṛthu, Kāśya, Cātra, Agnimakka, and Pīvara and Nara. Khyāti, Ketuṛīpa, Jānajātīpas and others were the sons of Tāmaśa Manu. (Viśṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 1).

5) Raivavata

(a) General. The fifth Manu Raivavata was the younger brother of Tāmaśa. He worshipped Devi with Kāma-bhīja mantra on the banks of the river Kalindi. With the blessing of Devi he ruled for many years and then attained heaven. (Devi Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(b) Other details. The name of the Indra of this Manvantara was Viśhnu. There were four groups of Devas—Amūṣādhas, Buhūrvas, Vaikūṅthas and Sumudhas. Each of these groups contained fourteen Devas. The Saptārśis of Raivavata Manvantara were—Hrīyagopānas, Vedasūri, Uṛdhvabāhū, Vedābāhu, Sudana, Pārvyāna and Mahāmuni. The sons of Raivavata Manu were—Bhuhaburchu, Sunbhūvya, Śarvakya and others were mighty kings. (Viśṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 1).

6) Cākṣuṣa

(a) General. This Manu was the son of Anga. Once he went to the Rūjārī (royal saint) Pulaha and prayed for prosperity, mastery of the whole world, invincible power and profound scholarship. Pulaha sent him to D. A. The Rūjārī taught him the worship of Devi. After acquiring the mantra Cākṣuṣa went to the banks of the river Vibhaj and offered worship to Devi. At the end of twelve years, Devi appeared before him and blessed him with “Mast ṣvastu”, mastery of the Manu kingdom and brilliant sons. After many years he distributed his kingdoms among his sons and at last attained “Devīpada”. (Devi Bhāgavata, Daśaṃa Skandha).

(b) Other details.

(i) The following account is given in Viśṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 13, about the birth of Cākṣuṣa Manu. Dhrūva and his wife Śambhu had two sons, namely Siṣṭi and Bhāvyā. Suchāyā, the wife of Siṣṭi gave birth to five sons, Rīpu, Rūṣṭiṣaṅja, Vipra, Vṛkula and Vṛkṣaṭāja, who were all sinless. Cākṣuṣa was born to Bhūṣi, the wife of Ripu. Cākṣuṣa begot Manu by Puṣkarīṇī, daughter of Viṣṇu Prājāpati. This was the sixth Manu. By his wife Nādvāla, the daughter of Viṣṇu Prājāpati, he had 10 sons, namely, Kuru, Puru, Satadūṣṭa, Tapasvi, Satavēn, Śuci, Aṅgīṣtōma, Atirātra, Sūdyumna and Abhimanyu. Agnei, wife of Kuru, gave birth to six sons who were Aniga, Sumanas, Khyāti, Kru, Aṅgiras and Sibi. Sunātha, wife of Aniga, gave birth to Vena. Prthu was the son of Vena. He is also known as “Vāyāṇa”.

(ii) The Indra of that period was Manojitavā. There were five groups of Devas—Ākhyās, Pratāpas, Bhāvyas, Prthuṅkas and Lekhas, each group consisting of eight Devas. The Saptārśis of this Manvantara were—Sumedhās, Virājas, Havisūnā, Uṇtama, Madhu, Aṃśīnāma and Sāhīs. Suchāyās and other mighty kings were the sons of Cākṣuṣa Manu. (Viśṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 3).

(iii) The sons of this Manu became famous under the name “Vārīṣhas” (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 29).

7) Vaivasvata

(a) General. He was born from Sūrya. It is this Manu who rules the world today. All living beings that we see today were born from him. Vaivasvata Manu is the Manvantara Manu who escaped from the last deluge. To save him Viśṇu took up the incarnation of Matya (fish). Vaivasvata Manu was also the first of the kings of the Sūrya vamśa (Solar Dynasty) who ruled over Ayodhya.

(b) Other details. (i) In Devi Bhāgavata, Saptama Skandha, we see that the sons of Vaivasvata namely Ikṣväku, Nābhāga, Dhrūva, Śarvāti, Narmāyana, Prājā, Nṛga, Diṣṭa, Kāṛūśa and Pṛṣadhara were also called Manu.

(ii) This Manu worshipped Devi and received her blessing and attained heaven after a long reign. (Devi Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(iii) Vaivasvata Manu was another name, “Sṛaddhadeva.” The Devas of this Manvantaram are Adityas, Vāsas and Rudras. The name of the Indra of this period is Purandara. The Saptārśis are—Vasiṣṭha, Kāśyaṇa, Atri, Jamadhagni, Gautama, Vivasvāna and Bhadrājana. These Dharmikas (virtuous ones), Ikṣvaiku, Nṛga, Dhrūva, Śarvāti, Narmāyana, Nābhāga, Arīśa, Karāśa and Pṛṣadhara are the sons of Vaivasvata Manu. (Viśṇu Purāṇa, Part 8, Chapter 1).

(iv) Ten sons were born to this Manu: who were Vena, Dhruṣṭi, Narmāyana, Nābhāga, Ikṣvaiku, Kāṛūśa, Śarvāti, Nṛga, Pṛṣadhara, and Nābhāgaśṛṣṭa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 73, Verse 15).

(v) Mahāvīṃgu incarncated as Matyā for the sake of Vaivasvata Manu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 187).

(vi) He received Yogāvidyā from Śrīra and Ikṣvaiku received it later from him. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 58).

(vii) At the beginning of Ātriṇyuga, Śrīra taught “Śrīvastra Dharma” to Manu and Manu taught it to Ikṣvaiku for the protection of all creatures. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 348, Verse 51).

(viii) The sage Gautama taught Śivāhasastrasāma to Vaivasvata Manu. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 177).
(8) Śāvarni.
(a) General. Even in his previous birth he was a devotee of Devi. In his former birth (during the period of Śvārociṣa Manvantara) Śāvarni was born as a King of Cāitravana under the name Srutha. The origin of the dynasty known as Cāitravana was as follows:—Atri, son of Brahmā had a son named Niśākara. This Niśākara became an emperor by performing Rāja-yaja. Emperor Niśākara had two wives, Bhūta and Bhūtāni, both of whom were greatly renowned. It was Cāitravana's family which later on became the reputed Cāitravana dynasty. The son of that Cāitravana was Viratha. Viratha was the previous birth of Śāvarni Manu. Surathya was a great hero and poet. Once another king besieged his city and defeated him. Surathya left his kingdom and went alone on horseback, and took shelter in a dense forest. While wandering in the forest like a mad man with a broken heart, he happened to reach the śrāmanda of the sage Sumedha. The sage advised him to worship Devi in order to retrieve his lost kingdom and prosperity. Accordingly the king worshipped Devi who was pleased and restored his kingdom and prosperity. Hence, he blessed him that in his next birth he would become Śāvarni, the King of the Solar dynasty and would be revered as the eighth Manu. Thus the eighth Manu Śāvarni will be the second birth of Surathya. (Devi Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

(b) Other details. Śāvarni is also the son of Sūrya. How he came to be called Śāvarni is explained below:—

Sūrya had three children, Manu, Yudāsūrya, and Yama by Sāmījā, the daughter of Vīvaktarka. This Manu was Vaivāsvata Manu, the seventh Manu. Unable to bear the intense heat of Sūrya, Sāmījā once sent her maid Chāya to Sūrya in her own disguise and went to the forest for tapas. Sūrya had three children by Chāya, Śānaitaka, another Manu and Tapati. This Manu is known as Śāvarni who will become the eighth Manu. In his time there will be five groups of Devas—Śrītapas, Amīta, Bhāma, and Bhūta. Each of these groups will consist of twelve persons. The Saptarishi of the eighth Manvantara are Dīpatimān, Gālava, Rāma, Kṛṣṇa, Aftvathāmān son of Dropa, Vyāsa son of Parāśara and Ṛṣivirā. Mahābali, son of Viśoca will be the Indra, Virāj, Urviratya, Nirmoka and others are the Kings who are the sons of Śāvarni Manu. (Viśnu Purāṇa, Part III, Chapter 2).

(9) Daśaka Śāvarni.
General. At the time of this Manu there are three groups of Devas namely, Pāras, Marlicgarbhis and Sudharmanas. Each of the groups contains 12 Devas. The Indra who is the King of those Devas, is the mighty Abhūta. The Saptarishi of this Manvantara are—Savatva, Dvaitamān, Bhāma, Vyāsa, Medhitā, Jyotimān and Sāya. Dīpatiketu, Dīpatiketu, Paścahastra, Nārāmaya, Prabhūvatvā are the sons of Daksahāvarī Manu. (Viśnu Purāṇa, Part III, Chapter 2).

(10) Brahma Śāvarni.
General. In this Manvantara, the Devas are Sudhāmanis and Vīkuddhas. Each of these groups will contain 100 Devas. Their Indra will be the heroic Śakti. The Saptarishi will be Hājimān, Sukrta, Sāya, Tāpmudrī, Nābhiṇga, Apratimāsuras and Sāyaketa. Brahma Śāvarni will have ten sons, three of whom are, Sukṣetra, Utama-Tusita. In Uttara Manvantara that divinity Tusita himself was born again under the name of Saryà as the son of Saryà in the group of Devas called Saryàs. When Tatmás Manvantara began, that divinity was born again as the son of Harya as a Hari in the group of Devas called Haris. It was that divinity Hari himself who was born in Sambhū under the name of Matmá among the Devas called Rañatakas in Rañata Manvantara. In Cākṣa Manvantara that Vismu Bhagavati took birth in Vikṣuṣi as one of the Vismā Manvantara. Vismu has incarnated in Aditi as Vismā, the son of Kasyāpa. That great Vismā conquered all the three worlds and presented them to Devendra. (Vismu Purāna, Part III, Chapter 2).

Besides the fourteen Manus mentioned above, certain other Manus are also referred to in the Purāṇas. Some details that have been given below are:

1) It is said from Vābhikā Rāmāyana, Aranya Kāṇḍa, 14th Sarga, verse 11, that Kasyāpa had a wife named Manu.
2) There is a reference to a Rāñjarī (Saintly king) named Manu in Yajurveda, 3rd Maṇḍala, 16th Anuvāka, 12th Sūkta.
3) A son named Manu was born to the Anga Tapa or Paracat. This Manu has another name Bhānu. He had three wives named Suprajà, Bhadradāsī, and Nārā. Six sons were born to him by the first two wives, by his third wife he had one daughter and seven sons. (M.B. Vana Purāṇa, Chapter 221, Verse 4).

4) In Mahābhārata, Parva Purāṇa, Chapter 57, verse 43, we find a reference to another Manu named Pracetas.

5) In Manu says lying with his brothers, Manu, daughter of Bhimārjana was carried away by force by Ayukti from the marriage hall on the marriage day. (Markandeya Purāṇa).

6) Vatsya. The origin of this god is described in Brahma Purāṇa as follows:—

7) Once a terrible war broke out between Revās and Asuras. The Revās who were defeated, went to the Gaurāntic river valley and performed penance to Śiva praying for victory. Śiva produced Maryu from his third eye and presented him to the Revās. In the battle which followed they defeated the Asuras with the help of Maryu.

8) Maryu II. A king of the Pārśu dynasty. Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha states that Maryu, the son of Bhrādāvāja, had five sons including Bhrādāvāja.

10) Maryu. (M) (DEATH). Death is a goddess whose name is Maryu. The Purāṇas state that there was no death in the world before the birth of this goddess. In Mahābhārata, Drona Purāṇa, Chapter 53 there is the following story about the circumstances in which Brahmā created Maryu.

Living beings multiplied endlessly on earth. As they had no death, the goddess Earth found their weight too much for her to bear. She went weeping to Brahmā and prayed for his help. At that time, Rudra and Nārada were present in Brahmā’s assembly. Brahmā said that he did not like destroying living beings. Because of the pressure of Rudra and Nārada, Brahmā created out of Vīkṣuṣi (Cosmic Light) a woman. She was born from the south and Brahmā gave her the name “Maryu”. He gave her permission to destroy human beings. When she heard that she was to kill living beings, she shed tears and Brahmā gathered those tears. She went to Dhenukāśrama and other places and performed tapas. At last Brahmā called her back and assured her that it was not against Dharma to kill living beings. He charged the tears he had gathered from her face into the various diseases and returned them to her. She gave those diseases and the goddess Maryu started her dance of destruction. (See also under the word PUNARJANMA).

11) Mārdayahari. One of the sons of Visvāmitra who was a Brahma. (Sloka 57, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Purāṇa).

12) Mārgasārīrasamasa. The month of Dhanu (December). The month has got great Purānic importance. If one lives taking food only once during the whole of this month one will be free from all sins and diseases. (Sloka 17, Chapter 106, Anuśāsana Purāṇa). If on the 1st day of this month one fasts the whole day and night and worships Kāraṇī, one will get the benefit of conducting an Āvamadha yajña. (Sloka 3, Chapter 109, Anuśāsana Purāṇa).

13) Mārīca. A Dānavas. There is a reference to him in Uttara Rāmāyana.

14) Mārīca. The uncle of Rāvana.

15) Maryu. In his previous birth, Mārīca was the servant of the gate-keepers of Vaikuntha. One day Mahāvīra was displeased by a conduct of his and he cursed him to be born as a demon on earth. But he added that Mārīca would get salvation from the curse when he was killed by Śrī Rāma in which capacity Vismu would incarnate soon. He would then return to Vaikuntha to his original place. That was how Mārīca was born as the uncle of Rāvana.

16) Maryu. In his previous birth, Mārīca was the servant of the gate-keepers of Vaikuntha. One day Mahāvīra was displeased by a conduct of his and he cursed him to be born as a demon on earth. But he added that Mārīca would get salvation from the curse when he was killed by Śrī Rāma in which capacity Vismu would incarnate soon. He would then return to Vaikuntha to his original place. That was how Mārīca was born as the uncle of Rāvana.

17) Maryu. In his previous birth, Mārīca was the servant of the gate-keepers of Vaikuntha. One day Mahāvīra was displeased by a conduct of his and he cursed him to be born as a demon on earth. But he added that Mārīca would get salvation from the curse when he was killed by Śrī Rāma in which capacity Vismu would incarnate soon. He would then return to Vaikuntha to his original place. That was how Mārīca was born as the uncle of Rāvana.

18) Maryu. In his previous birth, Mārīca was the servant of the gate-keepers of Vaikuntha. One day Mahāvīra was displeased by a conduct of his and he cursed him to be born as a demon on earth. But he added that Mārīca would get salvation from the curse when he was killed by Śrī Rāma in which capacity Vismu would incarnate soon. He would then return to Vaikuntha to his original place. That was how Mārīca was born as the uncle of Rāvana.

19) Maryu. In his previous birth, Mārīca was the servant of the gate-keepers of Vaikuntha. One day Mahāvīra was displeased by a conduct of his and he cursed him to be born as a demon on earth. But he added that Mārīca would get salvation from the curse when he was killed by Śrī Rāma in which capacity Vismu would incarnate soon. He would then return to Vaikuntha to his original place. That was how Mārīca was born as the uncle of Rāvana.
demons named Sṛṣṇapakāḥ. In the sight that ensued when the demons were killed, Sṛṣṇapakāḥ complained to Rāvana who decided to kill Rāma and carry off Sītā. For this he sought the help of his uncle Mārīca. Flying in his golden Viniśa and crossing mountains and oceans he approached Mārīca and told him of his plan. Mārīca who was aware of the force of Rāmabāna dissuaded Rāvana from, such a venture. But Rāvana persisted in his plan and gave Mārīca the following instructions: “Become a chitrā sastra (a beautiful scene) and subdue the minds of the āśrama of Rāma for his wife Sītā to see. I am sure Sītā will request her husband Rāma to catch hold of you. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa will follow you and Sītā will be left alone. I will then carry away Sītā as Kālu takes Candrī (moonlight) and live happily with her. I will be contented if I can then tease Rāma who will be lamenting over her separation from him”. Thinking that it would be better to die at the hands of Rāma than at the hands of Rāvana, Mārīca agreed to do as his nephew desired.

Rāvana and Mārīca came near the āśrama of Rāma in Rāvana’s aerial chariot. Mārīca on alighting from it cut off the heads of a beautiful fawn and entered the precincts of the āśrama. The false fawn was capable of attracting the attention of anybody. It is described thus: “It appeared as a wonder to those who saw it. It was golden in colour with blue horns with white lines on it. The ears were like leaves of blue lotus and the face was of the colour of red lotus. The lips were like sapphire and the body beautifully shaped with sides like yellow flowers. The eyes were big, the body had a rainbow-scarf adorning it’s back. The whole body was silver-spotted and the deer was a feast for the eyes of anybody.”

The deer went and grazed in places where it could be seen by Sītā. It would run away from the āśrama and graze hidden from Sītā but would come back again to the edge of forest. It would mix with the deer of the āśrama for some time and run away from them to distant places. Like a butterfly it darted about always trying to attract the attention of Sītā. Other deer approached it but on getting its scent flew away from it. The false deer suppressing the demon-instinct in him to kill and eat the animals which came near it played well the role of a fawn. Sītā was enamoured of the deer and expressed to Rāma her desire to get it. Rāma followed it and finding it keeping a distance always got suspicious and shot it down with an arrow. The deer died “Hā Lakṣmaṇa” and fell down dead. The cry was intended to mislead Lakṣmaṇa and draw him away from Sītā. (Mārīca I, chapter 43, Aranya Kanda, Valmyaki Rāmāyana).

MĀRĪCA II. Kaśyapaprājapati. Mārīca was the father of Kaśyapa and so Kaśyapa was known as Mārīca also. (Sarga 46, Vālmīki Rāmāyana).

MĀRĪCA I. A Maharsi (sage) born from Brahmā’s mind.

1) Birth and Genealogy. The six great sages born from Brahmā’s mind were:—Mārīca, Angras, Atri, Pulasya, Pulaha and Kratu, according to Mahābhārata, Atri Parva.

2) Domestic life. Mārīca had several wives and children. He married Kaśi, the daughter of Kardama Prajapati by his wife Devahuti. Mārīca had two sons Kaśyapa and Pūrvimān by Kaśi. This Kaśyapa was the original ancestor of all living beings. But Pūrvimān’s family did not become well-known. Pūrvimān had two sons Vīra and Vīyaga and a daughter Devakuliya. Devakuliya washed the feet of Mahāvīmau and morganied with with Aśka Gaṅga.

Uma was another wife of Mārīca. Six sons were born to Uma. Under a curse of Brahmā they were born first as the sons of Hīranyakaśipu and in their next birth as the sons of Vasiṣṭa and Devakāśī. It was these six children who were born as Śrī Kṛṣṇa’s elder brothers whom Kansa killed immediately after their birth. (See under Kṛṣṇa).

Mārīca had another wife named Sumbhūti. She gave birth to Paurṇamāsa. In Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 10, we see that Paurṇamāsa who was a Mahātma had two sons Vīravā and Paurṇa. Dharmanārāṇa was yet another wife of Mārīca. She was a daughter born to Dharmanārāṇa by Brahmāvija.

3) Dharmarāṇa, cursed. Mārīca lived happily for long with his wife Dharmanārāṇa. Once he returned from the forest, carrying darbha grass, flowers etc. He was tired after a long walk. After taking food, he wanted his wife to manage his legs. While she was managing him, Mārīca fell asleep. Just then Brahmā happened to come there. Dharmanārāṇa was in a fix. She had to attend to her husband and at the same time receive Brahmā with due respect. She could not leave her husband’s guru (Sure). It was her duty to honour him properly.

At last she got up and welcomed Brahmā, offering him the customary honours. Meanwhile Mārīca woke up and not finding his wife near him cursed her to turn into a stone. Dharmanārāṇa who was distressed at the curse pleaded innocence and explained to him that she had been honouring his guru. She warned him that he would incur the curse of Siva.

Under Mārīca’s curse Dharmanārāṇa was separated from him. She performed penance in the midst of fires. Mahāvīmau appeared before her and asked what boon she wanted. She prayed that her curse might be lifted. Viṣṇu replied:—"It was Mārīca who cursed you. That curse cannot be withdrawn. You will be turned into a sacred stone. Your name, Dharmanārāṇa will be changed into Devakāśī. In future, that stone will become famous under the name Devakāśī. Dharmanāra, Dharmanāra, Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Mahāvīmau and goddess Like Lakṣśmi will dwell in that stone.”

After saying this, Mahāvīmau disappeared. Once Dharmanārāṇa held this Devakāśī above the demon Gava and the place became famous under the name of “Gaiva tirtha” (See under Gaivāntirtha).

4) Other details:

(i) Mārīca had participated in the celebration connected with Arjuna’s birth. (M B. Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 52).

(ii) Mārīca was a member of Indra’s assembly. (M B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 17).

(iii) Mārīca attended the celebration connected with Surabhi’s birth. (M B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 10).

(iv) After the Bhārata Yuddha, Mārīca visited Bhima who was lying on “Sara Sāya” (bed of arrows). (M B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 10).
MARICII

(v) Maḥābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 394, Verse 35, mentions that Maṛićī is a Prājapati.

(vi) Maṛićī is one of the group of sages known as Citraśikhāṇḍinī. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 355, Verse 29).

(vii) Maḥābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 310, Verse 44, describes Maṛićī as one of the Aṣṭāparakṛṣṭis.

(viii) Maṛićī once visited Dhrūva who was performing penance and gave him advice. (Viśṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 1).

MARICII. A celestial woman. In Maḥābhārata, Śrī Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 62 we find that she attended a dance at the celebrations at the time of Arjuna's birth.

MARICII III. An author of Dharmaśāstra. His statements are quoted in Aparārka, Smṛtiśāstra, Maṭhākara, and the Āparīṇa.

MARISA I. A nymph created as a maiden of the Flora.

MARISA II. A river of Purāṇic fame. (Sloka 36, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

MARISA. A place of habitation of ancient Bhūrata. (Sloka 69, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

MAKAM. A man, Jambavān. He is called in Brahma purāṇas that the mātrārūpas (cows) have their origin from this son of Jambavān.

MARKA. See under the word Śandīmaṛka.

MĀRKANDEYA. The son of Mṛkaṇḍu. He was a great devotee of Śiva.

2) Birth. Mṛkaṇḍu did not have sons for a long time and so he performed penance for several years to please Śiva to get a son. Śiva appeared before him in person and asked him thus "Do you desire to have a virtuous, wise and pious son who would live up to sixteen years or a dull-witted evil-natured son who would live long?" Mṛkaṇḍu chose the first type and took a son was born. He was named Mārkandeya. Even from boyhood Mārkandeya kept all the Vedas and śāstras. His pleasing manners got the approval of his teachers and the boy was liked by one and all. But the parents were sad and whenever they looked at their son a gloom spread over their face. The secret of the short span of his life was hidden from him. The sixteenth year was fast approaching and one day they did not control their grief they wept before him. Mārkandeya asked them the reason why they wept. Mṛkaṇḍu with tears running down his cheeks told him the story. From that day onwards Mārkandeya started performing penance wearing bark of trees for his dress and growing matted hair. The boy was soon engrossed in severe austerities.

The day of his death came and the boy sat before the idol of Śiva in deep meditation. The servants of the god of Death could not approach Mārkandeya for the meditation from him was too hot for them. So Yama, the god of Death, himself came to fetch him. Then Mārkandeya crying loudly for help embraced the idol before him. Yama threw his rope in a loop and it went and circled round the idol also. Angry Śiva rose from the idol and coming down killed Yama to save the child. From that day onwards Śiva got the names Mṛtyunjaya and Kāla-Kāla. After that the request of the deva Śiva gave lift to Yama again and made Mārkandeya to be of sixteen years for ever.

3) Penance of Mārkandeya. The Purāṇas state that after getting the blessing from Śiva, Mārkandeya lived for ten crokes of years. While he was in deep meditation six Manvantaras passed away. However, Mārkandeya continued his meditation to the seventh Manvantara. Indra got frightened and he made an attempt to abort the penance of Mārkandeya. Indra sent his troops of Gandharvas, nymphs, Manmatha and Vasanta to the Āśrama of Mārkandeya. The Āśrama of Mārkandeya was at a place which was on the northern side of the Himālayas and was famous by the presence there of the river Puspabhadā and the rock Citra. The agents of Indra came there and tried to entice him with many temptations. Beautiful celestial maidens danced around the Āśrama. Flowers fell from their hair when their waists shook by the weight of their heavy breasts. Enchanting girls played with balls here and there. As they played the bracelets on their waists fell down and the bangles that still clung round their necks began to alluring nakedness. Kama (God of Love) sent his arrows at that time against the sage. But Mārkandeya sat unconcerned as rigid as a rock and Indra accepted defeat. When Indra and his troops returned disappointed Mahāviṇa with many sages went to Mārkandeya. He awoke from his meditation and worshipped Viṣṇu.

4) The scheme of Pralaya. According to the Manuśāstra, Mārkandeya was sitting at Puspabhadārā when from somewhere a wind began to blow. The wind increased in strength and the sky became covered with clouds. The place resonated with peals of thunder and soon it began to rain. Rains became heavy. Rivers became flooded and water-level in the oceans rose. Everything around was submerged in water and Mārkandeya alone stood there with his matted hair and matted in the wind. It was impossible to know the directions and Mārkandeya started walking. He fell into whirlpools but was the next instant thrown up on to the top of surging waves. Then he saw on the top of a high wave a banyan tree. On a branch on the north-east of the tree he saw an infant lying, devouring the darkness by its effulgence. He was attracted to the infant by its vital force and went inside the infant as it inhaled. Inside the belly of the kid Mārkandeya had a vision of the entire universe. He saw the sky, the horizon, the stars, the oceans, the mountains, expanses of land, Suras, Asuras, forests and all that the universe contained in its proper set up. He saw passing before his eyes the elements, the Yugas and the Manvantaras. After some time he was thrown out by an exhalation of the infant. He stood on the waters. The old banyan tree was still there. An infant was still lying on a leaf on that tree. Mārkandeya then knew it was Mahāviṇa. He rushed to embrace the child; but the child disappeared before he reached it. Mārkandeya praised Mahāviṇa.

5) Pūrvati and Parameśvarā come to Mārkandeya. When Mahāviṇa disappeared from his vision he felt he was sitting at Puspabhadārā and he again went into meditation. At that time Pūrvati and Parameśvarā came that way and appeared before Mārkandeya. The sage worshipped them and they both blessed Mārkandeya.

and said “Every desire of yours will be fulfilled. You will never be rugged or grey-haired and will live virtuous and famous till the end of the world. Omniscience will be an asset for you”. After having said so much Parvati and Prabha-vara disappeared. The Puranic belief is that the realised soul of Markandeya is moving about in the universe. (10th Skandha, Chapters 8 to 11, Bhagavata).

6) Details from Mahabharata relating to Markandeya.

(i) This sage stood in the court of Dharmaputra. (Sloka 15, Chapter 4, Sahibh Parva).

(ii) He sits in the court of Brahma and worships him. (Sloka 12, Chapter 11, Sahibh Parva).

(iii) Once Markandeya gave Dharmapadea to the Pandavas. (Chapter 25, Van Parva).

(iv) Markandeya sitting on the banks of the river Payog sang praises about river Payog and king Nrga. (Sloka 5, Chapter 88, Van Parva).

(v) Once Markandeya narrated to Dharmaputra stories about Kings and Rsis (Chapters 185 to 232, Van Parva).

(vi) Markandeya had a vision of the great deluge. (Chapter 188, Van Parva).

(vii) He entered the belly of Balamukunda. (Sloka 100, Chapter 189, Van Parva).

(viii) Markandeya gave a description of Kaliyuga. (Sloka 7, Chapter 190, Van Parva).

(ix) He described at another time the incarnation of Kalki. (Sloka 93, Chapter 19, Van Parva).

(x) Once Markandeya narrated the story of Tripuravah to Dharmaputra. (Sloka 2, Chapter 35, Karna Parva).

(xi) Markandeya was also one among the several sages who visited Bhima lying on his bed of arrows. (Sloka 11, Chapter 47, Santi Parva).

(xii) Markandeya learnt Sahasranama (thousand names) of Siva from Nacliketas and taught the same to Upanayana. (Sloka 79, Chapter 17, Aumisana Parva).

(xiii) Once Markandeya discussed with Nara and other topics on many different subjects. (Dikshatayi Patha, Chapter 22, Aumisana Parva).

(xiv) Once Markandeya explained the evils of taking fish as food. (Sloka 37, Chapter 115, Aumisana Parva).

(xv) The name of the wife of Markandeya was Dhunorma. (Sloka 4, Chapter 146, Aumisana Parva).

(xvi) Yudhishthira worshipped Markandeya also when he worshipped great sages before commencing the Mahaparshana. (Sloka 12, Chapter 1, Prasithana Parva, M.B.).

(xvii) Mahabharta gives the following synonyms for Markandeya—Bhagava, Bhaghavata, Bhaghukulashadala, Bhagunandana, Bhumrashi and Viprasri.

MARKANDEYA (M). A famous holy place. This place is situated about sixteen miles to the north of Kashi at a place where the rivers Ganga and Gomati meet. He who visits this place would get the benefit of doing an Agnistoma. Not only that, he would lift the prestige of his family. (Sloka 90, Chapter 34, Van Parva).

MARKANDEYAPURANA. One of the eighteen Puranas. The number of granthas in it is nineteen. It contains a critical study of Dharma and Adivarma. It is considered to be very good to give this Purana as gift on the full-moon day in the month of Karthika (November). (Chapters 272, 273, Van Parva).

MARKANDEYASAMAYAPARVA. A sub-Parva of the Van Parva of Mahabharata. This contains chapters 82 to 242 of Van Parva.

MARMAN. According to Indian Sutras there are 108 Marman in the body of a living being. Of these the most important are forehead, eyes, ears, tongue, arms, shoulders, heart, shin etc. Bhagavata Purana, Chapter 34 says that a snake-bite or a heavy blow on any one of these marman would prove fatal.

MAHTTIKAVANA (M). An ancient country in Bharata. During the time of the Pandavas this country was ruled by King Saha. (Sloka 14, Chapter 16, Van Parva). Parausha burnt all the Ksatiyas of this country. (Sloka 12, Chapter 20, Drona Parva).

Arjuna once made the son of Ksatasri the King of this country. (Sloka 69, Chapter 77, Mansala Parva).

MARU I. A king of the Jastuka dynasty, the father of Pratisthuta and son of Sigha. He had become “Girartiti” (immortal) by his Yogic power. According to Bhagavata Purana, all Ksatisa families would perish in Kaliyuga. At that time, Maru would come back to the world to revive the Ksatriya race. (Bhagavata, 9th Skandha).

MARU II. A Videha king of the Nimi dynasty. (Bhagavata, 9th Skandha).

MARU III. One of the chief lieutenants of Narakasura. He was slain by Sri Krsna.

MARUBHOMI (MARUDHANVA). The ancient name of the present Kajishin. In Mahabharata, Sahibh Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 5 we see that Nakula had won a victory over Marudhanva during his triumphal march over the western country. Kamsakavana in which is included Tisabhiar, sarovara, is in Marudhana. (M.B. Van Parva, Chapter 258, Verse 13). Marudhanva was also known as “Marvata”. The sage Utsaha lived in Marvata. In Mahabharta, Atvamedha Parva, Chapters 53, 54 and 55 it is stated that once Sri Krsna allowed his Vivasvat to this sage at Marvata.

MARUDHA. A country of Puranic fame. Sahadeva conquered this place while he was on his victory march to the south. (Sloka 14, Chapter 31, Sahibh Parva).

MARUTA. The forty-nine Yausu. (For details see DITTI).

MARUTA (M). An ancient place of habitation of south Bharata. Those who stood on the right side of the Krauhcaruna Vyaha (a battle array) constructed by Dhritadyumna in the Kuruksetra battle were the people of Maruta from south Bharata. (Sloka 57, Chapter 50, Bhishma Parva).

MARUTANTAVYA. One of the sons of Vivasmita. (Sloka 54, Chapter 4, Anusana Parva).

MARUTASANA. A soldier of Subradhanya. (Sloka 62, Chapter 45, Salya Parva).

MARUTASKANDHA. An army of the Devas. The commander of the forces was Subradhanya. (Sloka 55, Chapter 23, Vana Parva).

MARUTS. In the Puranas there are references to 49 gods who are known as “Maruts”. All of them are the sons of Ksatasri. The story of how the child Diti's womb was cut into 49 pieces which became 49 Marutus. It is given in Chapter 71 of Vāmana Purāṇa as follows:

Kāya's first wife Aditi became the mother of Devas and his second wife Diti became the mother of Dāiyais. The chief of the Devas was Indra and the chief of Dāiyais was Hiranyakṣa and Hiranyakasipū. At the request of Indra, Hiranyakṣa and Hiranyakasipū were slain by Mahāvīra. Diti who was grieving at the death of her sons, approached Kāya and requested him to give her a son who would be strong enough to kill Indra. Kāya told her that if she could perform tapas for 10,000 Divyavarṣas with due observances, she would get a son who would be able to kill Indra and conquer the three worlds. He gave her a long list of conditions to be observed during the tapas, some of which were as follows:—Do not injure any creature; do not curse; do not tell lies; do not cut nails or hair; do not touch any unclean object; do not get angry, do not speak to wicked people; do not wear soiled clothes; do not wear garments used by others, do not eat what is left over by another; do not eat meat touched by a Śūdrā woman; put on clean, new, white clothing; carry auspicious substances, everyday before breakfast. Brāhmaṇa, goddess Lakṣmī and Kāya himself should be worshipped. This observance is known as Purāṇava. He said that if she performed the tapas with this austere observance, a son capable of killing Indra would be born to her.

Diti started the observance as advised by her husband. Kāya gave her advice and went on living a Dāiyas in Vaiṣṇavī. After his death, Diti came to the Āśrama and pretending friendship offered to serve Diti as an attendant. Diti accepted his offer and allowed him to serve her. One day Diti was utterly tired fell asleep and Indra took advantage of this opportunity and gained entrance into her womb through her nostrils. He cut the child in Diti's womb with his weapon Vāya into seven pieces. At that time the child cried aloud and Indra said to it, "Mā ruda", which means "Do not cry". He cut each of the seven pieces again into seven pieces and thus 49 Maruts were born out of the 49 pieces. Since Indra said "Mā ruda", they came to be known as "Marut". All these Maruts subsequently became Indra's servants.

After this, Indra with his weapon came out of Diti's body. With joined palms he begged Diti's pardon, and expounded to her that he destroyed the child in her womb since he was destined to be the (Indra's) enemy.

Marutta 1. A wealthy king who lived in Kṛtyaṅga.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Vīṣṇu in the following order:—Brahmā, Mārici, Kāya, Vīvāsvan, Vaiśvāna Manu, Mahābhūtu, Prasāndhi, Kṛṣṇa, Hāvākṣa, Vīrāṇa, Kāya, Khaṇinētra, Suvacarī, Karandham Or Marutta.

2) How Marutta got gold. As soon as Marutta became king he began to perform a Yāga. Money was required for it. He was puzzled as to how to raise funds. Besides, Indra was trying to obstruct the Yāga. At last he consulted Nārada who told him that Bhrārapā's brother Samratha was performing tapas in the forest and if Marutta approached him, he would give enough money for this purpose. So Marutta went to Sakrīvarta. He advised Marutta to worship Śiva. Accordingly, Marutta went to Kailās and got plenty of gold by worshipping Śiva and returned with it and began his Yāga. In spite of their efforts, Indra and other gods were not able to spoil Marutta's Yāga. After the Yāga Marutta stored up the surplus wealth in the neighbourhood of Himālaya where his capital was situated.

After the Bhārata Yuddha, Dharmaputra was in need of money to re-establish his administration and for conducting an Aṣvamedha yāga. At that time sage Vīṣṇu informed him about the gold which Marutta had left in the neighbourhood of the Himālaya. It was by fetching that gold that the Pāndavas conducted their Aṣvamedhayāga. (M.B. Aṣvamedhī Parva, Chapters 3-10).

3) Marutta and Rāvana. Once Rāvana started on a triumphal tour in his Puspakavīmaṇa with his followers. It was at that time that Marutta was performing his famous Yāga. The various gods were also present on that occasion. Alarmed at the sight of Rāvana who was invincible by virtue of a boon he had received, the gods assumed the shape of different animals and birds. Indra became a peacock, Dharmarāja (Yama) became a crow; Kubera became a chameleon; Varuṇa transformed himself into a swan, and so on. Rāvana entered the precincts of the Yāga and said to Marutta:—"Either you fight with me, or else admit defeat from me." To this Marutta replied calmly:—"May I know who you are?" Rāvana answered with a smile of contempt:—"I am amused at your strange pretence! Do you mean to say that you do not know Rāvana who is the younger brother of Kubera? There is no one but you in all the three worlds, who does not know me. I have won the Puspakavimana after defeating my elder brother." Marutta retorted with bitter irony:—"As a younger brother who has defeated his elder brother, you are certainly a great man. There is no praiseworthy hero equal to you in all these three worlds. Do you brag that you have defeated your elder brother? I do not know whether you have received the boon by your righteous conduct. I have not heard the stories which you have told just now. You wicked fellow, stop there! I don't think that you will return alive!" Saying this Marutta took his bow and arrows and got ready for a fight.

But Śaṅkaraṇa stopped Marutta saying "O King! If you would please heed my advice, do not prepare for a fight here. We have started "Mahāvarśatra". If we do not bring it to a conclusion, the whole family will come to an end. One who performs this Yāga should not be engaged in a fight. He should not even become a victim to anger. This Rākṣasa (Rāvana) is invincible. Your victory is doubtful." At this, Marutta put down his bow and began to occupy himself again with the affairs of the Yāja. Just then Śūkra shouted, "Rāvana has won." The Rākṣasas and their leader Rāvana continued their tour after eating the Mahārāja who had come to take part in the Yāga. After Rāvana left the place, the Devas resumed their own forms. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

4) Other Details.
(i) Marutta flourished in Yama's assembly. (M.B. Sāhbā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 16).
(ii) Marutta is considered as one of the "Pahacaṁahā-sūrāḥ" (five great emperors). The five great emperors are—Yuvanāśva, Bhagrattha, Kārtavīrya, Bharata and Marutta. (M.B. Sāhā Parva, Chapter 15).

(iii) Once Siva presented him a golden peak of the Himalayas. Indra, Bhapisati and other devas attended Marutta's assembly. His Yajñamaṇḍapa was all golden. His cooks were groups of Maruts. He was able to make all his subjects strong and healthy. In Mahābhārata, Drona Parva, Chapter 35, we see that Marutta ruled the country for 1000 years as an ideal emperor.

(iv) Once Marutta received a sword from King Mucukunda. Marutta gave it to Raivata. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 77).

(v) Marutta gave his daughter to Anīra and attained Heaven according to Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 18.

(vi) In Bhagavata, 9th Skandha, we find a passage which says that since Marutta had no sons he had adopted Dusyanta, a King of the Pūru dynasty, as his son.

MARUTTA II. A great sage. He entered into a dispute with Śrī Kuśa, who was on his way to Hustainarpura as the messenger of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 27).

MARUTVĀMALA. In south India, at the southern tip of the Sahya ranges, a mountain reputed for medicinal herbs, may still be seen. This mountain is known by the name “Marutvāmalā”. A legend connected with the origin of this mountain is given in Uttara Rāmāyaṇa, as follows:

It was the time of the battle between Śrī Rāma and Rāvaṇa. Rāvaṇa’s younger brother Vibhīṣṇa joined the side of Rāma and fought against Rāvaṇa. The enraged Rāvaṇa shot his arrow at Vibhīṣṇa. In his endeavour to save Vibhīṣṇa, Lakṣmāna fell down unconscious. Rāma and his followers discussed how Lakṣmāna could be revived. Jāmbavān observed that there was a herb called “Dronam” in one of the peaks of the Himalayas and if it was brought at once, Lakṣmāna could be restored to his senses. Hanumān flew to the Himalayas immediately. But although he combed the forests there, he was not able to find the herb Dronam. So he tore away and lifted a whole peak which was full of all kinds of medicinal herbs and returned to Lanka. Jāmbavān took the needed herbs from it and deposited the peak at the southern end of India. This is the present Marutvāmalā. (Mala means mountain).

MARUTVĀN. See under MARUTVATI.

MARUTVATI. The mother of two Marutvāns. This Marutvati was the daughter of Daksa, and the wife of Dharma. The ten daughters of Daksa, namely, Arundhati, Vasu, Yāmī, Lāmbha, Bhānu, Marutvati, Sahākī, Māhārī, Śādiyā, and Viśā were the wives of Dharmadeva. Viśādeva was born to Viśā, Siddhā was born to Śādiyā, Marutvāna was born to Marutvati, Vaiśu was born to Vasu, Bhānu was born to Bhānu, Gṛṣa was born to Lāmbha and Nāgavīlī was born to Yāmī (Viśā Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 15).

MĀRA. A princess of Vidarbha. She was married by the king named Arvādha. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 18, it is said that a son named Ariha was born to them.

MĀRA. II. A daughter of the king of Videha, Deviṣu, a king of the Pūru dynasty who married her. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, verse 23 says that a son, Ariha was born to them.

MĀŚA. A measure of weight in ancient Bhārata. (See under Traswaṇī).

MĀŚA (S) (MONTHS).

1. General information. It is believed that every year there are twelve months. There are six different kinds of months in force in Bhārata. They are the following:—

2) What the names of the months indicate;

1) Malayalam month: The months are named based on the menstrual cycle. It takes twelve months for the earth to go around the Sun once. When the earth passes through the twelve divisions, it faces a separate set of constellations in the shape of a lion, and so the month is called Simha (lion) or Chittam. In the next division, the earth faces the constellations in the shape of a Kanyaka and so the month was called Kanni. The earth faces next the constellations in the shape of a balance, and so the month was called Tailam (Taila-balances). In the next division, the earth faces the constellations in the shape of a horse, and so the month was called Vaiyakam (vaccinum). The set of constellations which faces the earth in the next division is shaped like a bow (dhánus), and so the month got the name Dhanu. In the next division, the earth faces a set of constellations in the shape of a Makaramatya (makara-fish) and so the month was called Makaram. Kumbha means a jar and Mimar means a fish and Medam (Virga) means a goat and Adavam (Rashba) means an ox. The shapes of the constellations in this division are like the things mentioned and the months were so named after them. In the next two divisions the constellations appear as twins and a crab respectively and the months were so called Mithuna (twins) and Karkatakan (crab).

2) English months:

i) January comes from the word Janus, the name of a Roman deity. Janus is twofaced, one facing the front and the other facing the back.

ii) February means 'to purify' and the festival of purification of the Roman is conducted in that month.

iii) March is Mars, a god of war. Rome was built by the brave warrior Romulus. In his time there were only ten months in a year and the number of days in a month varied considerably. There were months with twenty days and thirty-five days. It was in the year 730 BC that the then King of Rome, Numa, divided the year into twelve months and added January and February to it. Till then March was the first month of the year.

iv) April - Apeiron means 'blossoming' and since the trees and plants blossom in that month it got the name of April.

v) May is named after Maa, daughter of the demigod deva) Atlas. There is an opinion that it is named after Mars, another name of Jupiter.

i) June gets its name after the deva Juno though there is a version that it is named after a Roman tribe called Junias.

vii) July was formerly known as Quentinis meaning the fifth coming from March which was the first month of the year till the time of Numa. It was to commemorate the name of Julius Caesar that the name was changed to July.

viii) August: This month was formerly known as Sextilis meaning the sixth month. But it was renamed August in honour of Augustus Caesar. But it still lacked the importance that it got named thirteenth days and August only thirty days. So August took one day from February and made the number of days in August thirty-one.

ix) September means the seventh month from March.

x) October means the eighth month.

xi) November means the ninth month.

xii) December means the tenth month.

MASAKA (M). A place in the ancient island of Saka. Mahabharata, Bhisma Parva, Chapter 11 says that in ancient times, kings used to live there for the fulfillment of their desires.

MASARASA. A king of the Rgveda period. Rgveda, 1st Mandala, 19th Anuvaka, 122nd Satsa says that this king used to preside over the Saka.

MASAYRAKOPAVASA. Purana mention about the months in which Vratas are to be observed with efficacy and the details are given below:

(1) He who fasts for half a month in the month of Tailam will get children and vehicles in plenty and would become pure. (Sloka 29, Chapter 105, Anuvasana Parva).

(2) He who fasts the whole day of the Dwadasa in Tailam and worships Vittu will get the benefit of making a Sabhagandha (giving away thousand cows as gift). (Sloka 3, Chapter 106, Anuvasana Parva).

(3) He who fasts for one time of the day in Vrikshakam will become a very brave and valorous man and acquire many wives and fame. (Sloka 30, Chapter 105, Anuvasana Parva).

(4) All men and women who worship Vittu on the Dwadasa in Tailam in the whole day in Vrikshakam fasting for the whole day will get the benefit of a Godanayuga. (Sloka 14, Chapter 109, Anuvasana Parva).

(5) He who fasts for one time a day during the month of Meesha will get gold, diamonds and pearls in plenty and will be born to a high family in his next birth. (Sloka 23, Chapter 105, Anuvasana Parva).

(6) If one fasts for one day the whole of the Dwadasa in the day of Meesha one would get the benefit of conducting a Pujaartha. (Sloka 7 Chapter 109, Anuvasana Parva).

(7) He who fasts for one time in a day in the month of Mithuna will become very prosperous. (Sloka 25, Chapter 106, Anuvasana Parva).

(8) If one fasts the whole day and night of the Dwadasa in Mithuna and does Trivikrama pujai one would not only get the benefit of conducting a Gomedaya but will be able to enjoy sexual pleasures with celestial maidens. (Sloka 9, Chapter 109, Anuvasana Parva).

MASIRAM. A place of habitation in ancient India. There is a reference to this region in Mahabharata, Bhisma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 8.

MATANGA I. An ancient sage. The Rambava in Aranya Kanda describes the Astra of Mataanga. Rambalakshmana, after crossing the forest of Krausha came to the Astra of Mataanga. Kabandha was slain at this place. After abandoning his demonic side, Kabandha enticed the greatness of Mataanga to Rama and Laksmana. The flowers of this Astra are never plucked and worn on heads. Even if they are not plucked they never fade. They remain fresh always. There is a reason for this. The disciples of Mataanga once brought a heavy load of fruits for their guru and when they reached the Astra they were tired and drops of perspiration fell on the plants and they became flowers. Sabari is performing penance in this Astra.

Mataanga once cursed Bali. It happened that while the sage was living on the mountain of Rayamala Bali and the asura Dundubhi fought against each other and blood flowing from the body of Dundubhi by a blow of Bali spurted out and fell on the hands of the sage.
MATANGA II

Matanga then cursed Bali saying that his head would blow off if he entered Rājamūkācala again. (Sarga 40, Kiṣkindhā Kāmpa, Vālmiki Rāmāyana and Kamba Rāmāyana, Pūrv Kāmpa). Matanga’s name was a holy place. (Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

MATASGA II. Another name of Triśūkha. The name of Matanga is used for Rājarsī Triśūkh in Verse 31, of Chapter 71, of Ādi Parva. For more detail see under Triśūkha.

MATASGA III. A maharṣi born to a barber of a brahmin woman. This clandestine birth was not known either to the brahmin husband or Matanga for a long time. Once his brahmin father sent him to the fields for ploughing. He put a donkey to the yoke and ploughed. When the donkey slowed down its work Matanga beat it hard. The mother of the donkey saw it and wept. She called Matanga to her side and told him that he was the son of a barber and that was why he behaved like a candalas showing no kindness towards the animal. Matanga ran to his house and told his parents what the mother-donkey said. After that he left his house and did penance to become a brahmin. Indra was pleased and he asked Matanga what he wanted and he replied he wanted to become a brahmin. Indra made him a brahmin and sent him back. (Chapter 27, Anûsāsana Parva).

MATASGA IV. A preceptor. He was the guru of Śabari. (Aranyaka Kāmpa, Vālmiki Rāmāyana).

MATASGA Sage Matanga was known by this name also. (See under Matanga).

MATASGAKEDĀRA. A sacred place. He who bathes in a pond there would get the benefit of making a thousand Goûliams. (Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

MATASGI. The great grandmother of the elephants, Matarigika was the daughter of Kruhadavāsa, daughter of Daka and wife of Kanyakaprajapati. Matari had nine sisters. Elephants were born of Matargi. (Sarga 14, Aranyaka Kāmpa; Vālmiki Rāmāyana).

MATALI. Charioter of Indra. Chapter 69 of Vana Parva. Purāṇa gives the following story about the birth of Matali. A child was born to sage Śamika. It was the time of Devāśura war. A great army of asuras under the leadership of Andhaka attacked Devāśura and conquered it. In the great battle with Andhaka the Nairāyudha of Indra broke into two. Indra was thinking of a new weapon for him. Mahavīru then appeared before him and advised him to praise the glory of Agni. Indra did so and then a divine weapon rose from the fire. Indra flew as the asuras carrying the new weapon. There was no clever charioter to drive the chariot of Indra. Still, seated in the golden chariot given to him by the Vasan Indra drove very swiftly against the asuras. The earth shivered by the din of the chariot-wheels.

When the earth began to quake the sage Śamika following directions of his wife Tapasvīni placed the child on the ground outside the hermitage. An astrologer had told her that a child would become two if it was placed in an open ground at the time of earth quake. Tapasvīni wanted one more child. As soon as her child was placed on the ground another child identical in every respect with the first one was born by the side of the other. But the second child, as soon as it was born rose up and ran to Indra for driving his chariot.

When the Gandharvas knew he was coming to help Indra, they showered him with brilliance and the child approaching Indra said “Oh, Lord of the Devas, I shall be your charioter.” Indra asked him, “Child, whose son are you? How will you drive my horse? I doubt your competence.” The child replied, “I am the son born to Śamika on the ground. I have been given power and brilliance by the Gandharvas and so I am capable of driving your chariot.” On hearing this, Indra accepted him as his charioteer and named him Mātaraṇsī. A devatā (demigod). There are several stories in the Vedas regarding the birth of Agni (fire). Though Agni originating from the clouds teaches the earth as lightning it hides itself making it invisible to man. It was Mātaraṇsī who took its form from the earth and gave it to the Birgu family and made it possible for them to make it as and when it was required. (Rgveda).

This Mātaraṇsī was one of the prominent sons of Garuḍa. (Sloka 14, Chapter 10, Udyoga Parva).

MATHANA. An asura on the side of Tātākāmara. Mahāvīru killed him. (Chapter 152, Māyaviṣṇu Purāṇa).

MĀTHARA I. A demigod deputed by Indra to serve Śūrya (Sun). This demigod always sits on the right side of Śūrya, (Brahma Parva, Bhavisya Purāṇa).

MĀTHARA II. One of the Aspadāsāvīryakas (Eighteen Vināyakas). (Sambu, 16).

MĀTHARA III. An ascārya (teacher). He is believed to be the author of the book Simhāsakīrṇīvṛtti (Kausiṣṭhā Parāhāma).

MĀTHARAVANA. A holy place in Dakṣinā Bharat. The victory pillar of Mātharak, an aide of Śūrya, is situated here. (Sloka 10, Chapter 88, Vana Parva).

MĀTHURA. The birth place of Śṛi Kṛṣṇa.

MĀṬI. A daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. She became the wife of Bhīma-Rāja. (Sloka 15, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva).

MĀṬINĀRA. A King of Purva-vanci. The line from Puru as it follows: Puru - Janamejaya-Pracīvina-Manasa-Vitahbhaya - Sudu - Bahuvibha - Samyārī-Rahovādī-Bhadraśva-Rṣekyuy-Sannactus-Ghretuy - Sitaṇḍaleyu-Dharmeyu-Samvīdhīyeu-Kṛṣṇeyu-Matnāra. Matnāra got two sons, Śanturodha and Pratiruddha. Duyana, husband of Śakuntalā, was the son of Śanturodha. (Chapter 278, Ādi Parva).

MĀṬIKULIKA. A follower of Subrahmanya. (Sloka 19, Chapter 467, Śalya Parva).

MĀṬRĪTIRTHA. A sacred place situated on the outskirts of Kurukṣetra. If one bathes in a holy pond there one would be rich in children. (Sloka 58, Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

MĀṬSYA I. The first and foremost incarnation of Mahāvīru. (See under Avatāra).

MĀṬSYA II. An ancient country of Purānic fame. The people of this country are called Māṭsyas. The details available regarding Māṭsyadēśa from the Mahābhārata are given below:

1. The Pāṇḍavas wandering through the forests came to Māṭsyadēśa. (Sloka 2, Chapter 135, Ādi Parva).

2. The people of Māṭsyadēśa in fear of Jārāṇandha migrated from the north to the south. (Sloka 28, Chapter 14, Śabha Parva).
(3) Bhimasena during his victory march to the east conquered this country. (Sloka 8, Chapter 30, Sabha Parva).
(4) Sahadeva during his victory march to the south conquered the people of Matsya-de'a. (Sloka 4, Chapter 31, Sabha Parva).
(5) Matsyade'a was one of the countries suggested by Arjuna to spend their life incognito. (Sloka 12, Chapter 4, Virata Parva).
(6) Virāṭa was the chief of Matsyade'a during the time of Mahābhārata. (Sloka 17, Chapter 1, Virāṭa Parva).
(7) In the Kuruksetra battle Virāṭa, King of Matsyade'a, came to the help of Yudhishthira with an Akṣauhini (army). (Sloka 12, Chapter 18, Udyoga Parva).
(8) The Pāṇḍavas spent a year of their life incognito at the palace of Virāṭa, king of Matsyade'a. (Chapter 7, Virāṭa Parva).
(9) Matsyārjya was one of the prominent kingdoms of ancient Bharata. (Sloka 40, Chapter 9, Bhīma Parva).
(10) Bhīma slaughtered many soldiers from Matsyade'a.
(11) Droṇiḍrāyana killed at a stretch five hundred Matsyas in the great battle. (Sloka 31 Chapter 190, Droṇa Parva).
(12) Karna once conquered Matsyade'a. (Sloka 8, Chapter 8, Karna Parva).
(13) The people of Matsyade'a were honest and charitable. (Chapter 4, Sloka 28, Karna Parva).
(14) Those who were left out among the Matsyas in the great battle killed by Aśvatthama. (Sloka 138, Chapter 8, Saupūjika Parva).
MATSYA III. A King. He was the brother of Satyavati, mother of Vyāsa. Satyavati and Matsya were both found in a fish by the same fisherman. (See under Adi.)
MATSYAGANDHĪ | MATSYAGANDHĀ. Another name for Satyavati, mother of Vyāsa. (See under Satyavati.)
MATSYAKALA. A King of Paurāṇa. He was one of the seven celebrated Kings known as Giriñakutas. The others were: Bhadrachala, Kuśa, Yadhva, Pratyangira, Bala and Vira. The seven sons were born to Girīkā of her attendants. (Chapter 278, Agni Purāṇa).
MATSYPURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Pūrāṇa. This Pūrāṇa was told to Manu Satyavatā by Mahāviṣṇu during his incarnation as Matsyā. There are thirteen thousand slokas in it. For prosperity this Pūrāṇa should be read as gift on the Vikrama day along with a golden image of Matsya. (Chapters 2 and 272, Agni Purāṇa).
MATSYODARI. Another name for Satyavati, mother of Vyāsa. (See under Satyavati).
MĀṬA. A demon. He was born to the demon Māṭyaśvan of his wife Sundari. Māṭa had six brothers named Vajramūrti, Viṣṇupāsaka, Durmukha, Supatīṅga, Vajrakīrti and Umaci. This Māṭa was killed in the Rāma-Rāvana battle. (Chapter 10, Agni Purāṇa).
MATTAMAYURA(S). A special tribe of Kṣatriyas. Nakula, one of the Pāṇḍavas, defeated these people during his victory march to the west. (Sloka 5, Chapter 32, Sabha Parva).
MAUDGALYA | MAUDGALA. A maharṣi. This maharṣi once cursed Rāvana. Once Māudgalya was sitting in Svatikasana resting his shoulders on his yogic staff in the forest of Kadamba. Rāvana returning after his victory march came that way. Seeing the sage sitting in a wonderfully queer posture Rāvana was amused and playfully tapped the staff with his Candraśāla. The staff broke into two and Māudgalya fell flat on the ground breaking his spine. The sage was furious and he cursed Rāvana saying that his Candraśāla would thenceforth have no effect at all. (Yuddhā Kāṅḍa, Kamba Ramāyaṇa).
MAUHRRTIKĀGATI. When the Sun passes through the centre of Purāṇavilāpa it covers a path equivalent to a thirtieth part of the earth and the journey of the Sun is called Mauhurtikāgati. (See under Sārīya).
MAṆṆAYANA. A maharṣi. This sage shone in the court of Yudhishthira. (Sloka 13, Chapter 4, Sabha Parva).
MAURAVAPĀṢA. See under Mura.
MAURYI. A kind of grass. It is with this grass that ascetics make vāastics (waistlets). (Sloka 33, Chapter 17, Droṇa Parva).
MAUSALAPARVA. A Parva of Mahābhārata. This Parva contains the story of the end of the Yādavas by killing each other.
MÄVELLA. The fourth son of Upārśivān. Māvela attended the Rajasāya of Yudhishthira. (Chapter 63, Ad Parva and Chapter 54, Sabha Parva).
MÄVELLEKARA. An ancient place of habitation in India. Sutarmā, King of Trigarta, fought against Arjuna taking along with him the warriors of Māvelaka. Arjuna killed them all. (Sloka 20, Chapter 17, Droṇa Parva).
MAYA. A Daṇava king who served Devas and Asuras as their architect and builder
1) General. Kasyapa Pratikpati, son of Marici and grandson of Brahmā married Indra, the chief of the Daṇavas. Among them, the first was Aditi, the second was Diti and the third was Danu. Adityas were born to Aditi, Daityas were born to Diti and Daṇavas were born to Danu. The chief among the sons of Danu was Maya. Maya was found to be very proficient in the art of architecture even from his boyhood. He worshipped Brahmā in the Himālayas and gained unrivalled skill in architecture. Brahmā was pleased and appeared before him. He blessed Maya to become the unequalled architect of the Devas, Asuras and Daṇavas. After that Maya was engaged in building magnificent mansions for Devas and Asuras. He was also anointed King of the Daṇavas. It was a period of friendly co-operation and brotherly relations between Devas and Asuras. Once there was a dancing show in Devaloka. Maya was also invited to see the performance of the women of Devaloka. All the dancers acquitted themselves creditably. But what attracted Maya most, was the dance of Hemā, the Apsara woman. Maya and Hemā were mutually attracted and fell in love with each other. The Devas who came to know of this, gave Hemā in marriage to Maya. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).
2) Dvarini. Maya and Hemā went to the valley south of Himāla and built there a city named 'Hemapura'. While leading a happy life there, two sons, Māyāvi and Dundubhi were born to them. But they had no daughter. So they worshipped Śiva, praying for a daughter.
At about that time, one day, an Apsara woman, Madhumā, after observing Somavāra Vratā, came to Śiva and did obeisance to him. Parvati was not at home at the moment. Fascinated by Madhumā's charm, Śiva embraced her. Parvati who came to know of it, cursed MADHURÁ and turned her into a frog. But she said, that after twelve years the curse would be lifted and she would become a woman again. It was in a well near the place where Maya and Hémá were performing tapas that Madhurá fell as frog. After twelve years, the frog recovered her former shape as a woman. At that time Maya saw her, and taking her to be the daughter given to him by Siva, took her with him to his palace. He gave her the name "Mandodari". It was this "Mandodari" whom Madhurá married later. Besides these three children, Maya had some other sons and daughters. In Devi Bhágavata, 8th Skandha there is a reference to the Dánava named Bala, the son of Maya, living in Atala, a section of Páta. In Kathá sarítsúgára, Madanamañcukálambaka, 3rd Tárañja we find that Maya had two daughters named Swayamprabhá and Somaprabhá. Of them, Somaprabhá was married by Nalakúbara, the son of Váishnaváni.

3) Alliance with Arjuna and construction of Indraprastha. Once Krása and Arjuna offered Khándaavamgaa to Agni-deva as a feast. (See under the word "Khándadvadáha"). While Agni was furiously feeding upon the forests, the human and animal inhabitants in it began to flee from it. Krása and Arjuna shoot arrows with arrows. At that time Maya was hiding himself in the disguise of Taksaka. When the flames of fire approached that place Maya left his shelter and rushed out. Srí Krása aimed his weapon Cakra at him. Crying aloud with fear, Maya ran to Arjuna praying for protection. Arjuna stopped Agni-deva and Srí Krása and thus saved Maya. (M.B. Aidi Parwa, Chapter 240). From then, Maya became a loyal follower of Arjuna. After Khándadvadáha, Krása and Arjuna were taking rest when Maya approached them with joined palms and asked Arjuna what he should do in return for saving him from the fury of Krása and the blazing fire. Arjuna replied that he expected no return from Maya for saving his life but wanted only his friendship. Madhurá was satisfied. Arjuna insisted that Arjuna should accept some service from him as a token of his deep gratitude. On hearing this, Srí Krása suggested that Maya should build a beautiful palace for the Pândavas. Accordingly he built a magnificent palace for the Pândavas at the place called Khándavaprása. (M.B. Subhá Parwa, Chapter 1).

4) Maya settled down in Vindhyá. Once Maya sought shelter from Maháviśnu. Vishnu offered shelter to Maya and so he built a mansion called "Sudharmá" for all the Devas. It was a building of inexpressible beauty and rare architectural craftsmanship. The Asuras who became angry with Maya for his alliance with the Devas made preparations to attack him. Alarmed at it, Maya sent out his friends with his family and reached Vindhyá. There he built a lovely mansion and settled down in it. (Kathásarítsúgára, Madanamañcukálambaka, 3rd Tárañja).

In Válmiki Rámáyána, Kiskindhá khasa, 50th sarga also there is a reference to this wonderful mansion which Maya built on the Vindhyá mountain. In their search for Síra, Hanuman and the other monkeys reach this mountain. Then they came down the forests and caves to find out Siirá. When they came to the peak to the south west of the mountain, they saw a huge dark cave. They entered it and cautiously moved forward. After a long and tedious walk the monkeys were exhausted with hunger and thirst. When they proceeded a little further, they came across a bright place. There they saw a woman sitting alone, dressed in deer skin and barks of trees. She greeted them and in the course of her talk with the monkeys she told them that the cave was made by the magician Maya and that her name was Swayamprabhá. Her mother was Merusálvarjá and that she (Swayamprabhá) was entrusted with the task guarding the wonderful mansion. Then she gave them fruits and fresh water.

5) Building of Tripará. It was Maya who built three magic dwellings for the three Dánava, Kamašáká, Tárañjaka and Vidyumáli. (For details see under the word Pura).

6) Other details.

(i) Mahábhárata, Adi Parwa, Chapter 227, Verse 41 says that Namuci the Dánava was the brother of Maya.

(ii) Maya had two sons named Sunindu and Súndanitka. They became human beings under a curse. (For details see under the word Súryaprabhá).

(iii) In Kathásarítsúgára Madanamañcukálambaka, 6th Tárañja we see that Maya was an incarnation of Vívatkarmá.

(iv) At the time when Maháviśnu as Vámaná took the three worlds from Mahávolá, Maya joined with other Dánava and fought against Vámaná. (M.B. Bhavistá Parwa, Chapter 55).

(v) Once Maya was relaxing with his friends on the Malaya mountain. Knowing about it Mahávolá sent Indra to that mountain. Indra challenged the Dánava for a fight. In the battle that followed, Indra killed the Dánava named Páká. Thus he got the name, "Pákáśrama". Indra killed Pura, the son of Mahávolá also in that battle and so came to be known as "Pranadára". The remaining Dánava under the leadership of Maya fled to Páta. (Vámaná Purañá, Chapter 71).

MAYÁ

1) General information. A consort of Maháviśnu, Mayá has got a very prominent place in Hindu Púrāna. The Púrāna statement that this whole universe is unreal, illusory and if we feel it real it is because of the working of this Mayá.

2) Birth. How was Mayá born? Agni Purána in its twentieth chapter gives a genealogy of Mayá. Hímarí (injury) is the wife of Adharmá (evil). They got two children named Anyá (falsehood) and Nikíti (wickedness). From them were born Bháya (fire), Naraka (hell) Mayá (illusion) and Védana (pain). Mayá in turn gave birth to Death, the destroyer of all pain produced from Hate or Misery. Mútyu (death) produced Vyádhi (disease), Jara (toughness), Soka (sorrow), Trýá (desire) and Krodha (anger).

3) Exhibition of Mayá. Maháviśnu once told Náradá thus: "There is nothing like living beings on earth. All is an illusion due to Mayá." Náradá requested Maháviśnu to show him that and Viśu took Náradá to the banks of a river and exhibited the wonderful working of Mayá. (For details see under Vidhvatí 1).

4) How Gáthá, a brahmana, saw Mayá. In the country of Kusala there was once a brahmana named Gáthá. He went to the forests and standing there in water in a pond, immersed up to his neck, started doing penance. For eight months he did penance thus and then Maháviśnu appeared before him and asked him what boon he wanted. The brahmin said he wanted to see Māyā-devī. Vīṣṇu granted the boon and disappeared.

Several years passed after that and nothing happened. One day the brahmin as usual went to bathe in a pond. When he took a dip in the waters he forgot all his prayers and mantras. The next day he was found in a pond with a change of clothes. He felt he was lying dead in his house. Relatives were sitting around weeping. His wife was in tears and was holding his legs. In an atmosphere of mourning, his own people weeping bitterly carried his body to a frightening burial ground and put it on a funeral pyre. It was burnt to ashes. He then left himself in the womb of a Cāndālīa woman living in a village near Hāmamandala. The foetus developed and a black baby boy was born. The boy grew passing the stages of infancy, childhood and boyhood and became a man, black and stout. He started enjoying sexual life with a beautiful Cāndālīa girl. The amorous plays were done on leaf beds, in creeper-huts, bushes and in caves and soon many evil-natured sons were born to him. Gradually his health faded and he constructed a hermitage and lived there as a hermit. His children grew up and he became old and then all on a sudden all his children and wife and other members of his family died and he was left alone. He then left the place and travelling much reached the capital city of Kīrāmagāma. The city gates were decorated and people stood in groups. The road to the palace from the gate had been beautified and as he reached the palace gates he saw an elephant as big as black as mountain standing there well caparisoned. It was customary in those days to post an elephant well decked before the palace gates when a King died. The elephant he saw was one who had been let loose to select a new King in the place of the one who had just died. The elephant entered into the courtyard and placed his trunk and placed him on its back. The people when they saw it shouted “The King”, “The King”. Drums were beaten and people shouted with joy. He was taken to the palace where he was received by young and beautiful girls. He was dressed in royal robes and he took over the administration of the state. Gradually he came as his wives were the wives of the former King and lived there accepting the name of Gālava. He ruled the state to the satisfaction of all for eight years. One day the King went out for a stroll dressed as an ordinary man. Just outside the gate of the palace a set of Cāndālas were singing songs to the accompaniment of a violin. As soon as they saw Gālava one of the Cāndālas, a red-eyed old man, got up from the group and addressing the King as “Hi, Kalāja” shouted loudly, “friend, have you been all this time? It is a long time since we saw you. It is our luck we saw you at least now”. The King of Kīrāma did not like the words of the Cāndāla and he rebuked the old man. The queens and others standing on the terrace of the palace could see this scene. They were shocked. They regretted they had all along been seeing a Cāndāla. The news spread like wild fire in the state. The King had to live in the palace without the help and co-operation of anybody inside or outside the palace.

People wanted to atone for the crime they had committed in instilling a Cāndāla as their King. They made small fire pits throughout the country and started committing suicide by jumping into it. The King lamented that such a mass suicide was due to him and he also made a fire-pit and jumped into it. The heat of the fire-pit woke him from his day-dream and Gāthi found himself in the pond where he had come to bathe. “What! Who am I? What all roles did I take just now? These puzzling thoughts filled him and he went back to the āśrama and started life as usual. One day an old friend of his came to the āśrama and after the daily routine they lay down to sleep. During their conversation Gāthi asked his friend why he had become feeble and so lean. Then his friend narrated a story exactly similar to the experiences which Gāthi had in the country of Kīrāma. He added that to atone for the sin of his association with the Cāndāla he was conducting Pāpyāgamāna in Prāyāga, Japa and Cāndālamahāvāra. All those things he explained, made him lean. Gāthi knew that the story of the ghost related to him and he was eager to visit the country of Kīrāma. When he went to Kīrāma he saw everything there in the same way as in his dream. Then he realised that it was an exhibition by Vīṣṇu of the working of Mayā. Gāthi then renounced everything and went into a cave and started doing penance there. After some years Vishṇu appeared before him and blessed him. (Jānavadāstī.)

MĀYĀDARŚANA-PARVA. A subdivision of Aḍī Parva, in Mahābhārata. Chapters 227 to 233 of Aḍī Parva, are included.

MAYĀDHARA. An aura. Indra got down Purārāvas to fight against this demon who was always giving trouble to the devas. Purārāvas killed Mayādhara in a battle. The day the killing of Indra, Purārāvas held a banquet in honour of Purārāvas. After the banquet there was a dance performance by Rambahā and as she was dancing before Anātra Tumburu, Purārāvas openly criticized Rambahā for the mistake in dancing the committed then. Tumburu did not redish it and he cursed Purārāvas saying that Purārāvas would bear a separation from his wife Uvraṭī. It was because of this curse that Mayādhara was once carried away from the palace of Purārāvas by the Gandharvas. (Kathāśāsitarāga, Turāṅga 3, Lavinaikalamabha).

MAYAMRGA. Mārica, uncle of Rāvana, took the form of a beautiful deer to tempt Sītā and went to the āśrama where Sītā was staying. This deer is called Mayamrga. (See under MĀRICA).

MAYAPURI. A city of the ārasas. (See under Krauṣṇa).

MAYASĪṬHA. When Rāma and Lakṣmanas were in exile in the forests with Sītā, Rāvana came to carry away Sītā. At that time the real Sītā disappeared in Agni and in her place a false Sītā was installed. It was this phantom Sītā who was carried away by Rāvana and who lived in Lāṅkā till the time of Ravan’s death. It was this Mayasīṭha whom Rāma asked to jump into the fire to test her purity. At that time Mayasīṭha disappeared and the real Sītā came out from the fire. (See under SĪTĀ.)

MAYAVIṢA. Padma Purāṇa gives a story of how once an aura named Jalandhara approached Pārvatī as Sīva to induce her to surrender to his desires. This Sīva was called Mayavīṣa.

A great battle between the devas and ārasas was going on. The ārasas were winning and the devas got frightened at the strength of the ārasas and so Śiva himself entered the battlefield. Jalandhara who led the army of the asuras found the fight against Siva very tough and smelt defeat. He decided to cheat Pārvatī, the consort of Siva, to compensate for his defeat in the heaven field, and so making an asura named Sumbha as the chief, he left for Kaśī. Sumbha became a māyā Jālandhara and continued the fight.

Taking another asura named Durvāraṇa, Jālandhara went to a cave in Kaśī and there changed himself into an exact replica of Siva. He made Durvāraṇa look like Nandikesa. Then they went to the top of the mountain where Pārvatī and her companions were staying. Siva approached Pārvatī on the shoulders of Nandikesa with wounds all over his body and blood oozing from them. Pārvatī seeing Siva thus, with tears rolling down her cheeks asked him, “Oh, Lord of the gods what happened to your lordship? Who defeated you in the battle? Why do you weep like a low-born man?” Māyāvī took his body all his ornaments like Vasiṣṭh and gave them to the companions of Pārvatī. When Pārvatī saw the heads of Garapati and Subrahmanyam in the hands of her husband she cried in bitterness. Siva told her that all his pārśadas like Manabhadra, Virabhadra, Prasada and Hemakumara and Kumbhanda were killed in the battle. Canḍi, Bhūṣiṇī, Kārttiyī, Mahākāla, Śrīkūṭi, Candāśī and Guptanetra were all killed. Māyāvī told her that he had picked up the heads of Garapati and Subrahmanyam found lying in the battlefield. He requested Pārvatī to console him by embracing him. Pārvatī answered the request. She said, “What you say is unfit for the situation. Sexual enjoyment is forbidden in times of misery, fear, meditation, vomiting fever, performing offering to the manes, journey, royal visits, marriage festivities and in the presence of elders and teachers. Why do you make this request to me when I am mourning the death of my sons? Pretending to be grief-stricken Māyāvī said “She who does not give sexual pleasure to a man in distress would go to pāraśudas now. I have lost my sons also. I lost my house. Now you also hate me. I am going to my cave. Let me end my life there. Come on, Nandikesa, Vajra we will go. Hearing this Pārvatī went near him.

At this time there happened a few bad omens in the ocean of milk where Viṣṇu was residing, and calling Garuḍa to his side Viṣṇu asked him to go and enquire about the battle that was going on between the devas and asuras. To prevent him from being deceived by the magic of the asuras Viṣṇu dropped into the mouth of Garuḍa a pill of great potency. Garuḍa reached the battlefield very soon but could not find anything out of the way and so flew to Kaśī. He did not see Pārvatī first but hearing a noise from somewhere else peeked in and saw Māyāvī. Garuḍa could understand him because of the power of the pill and so flew swiftly back to Mahāviṣṇu and told him what he saw.

Mahāviṣṇu knew that Pārvatī had been deceived by Jālandhara. So he decided to cheat Vṛndā, wife of Jālandhara. Mahāviṣṇu filled with amorous desires, avoiding Mahālokana, covering his head with a yellow scarf and taking Garuḍa by his yogie powers stepped out of his abode taking Ananta for his company. He went to Durgākāmana the abode of Vṛndā. They constructed an śātra there and the wild animals like the lion, tiger, bear, boar and monkey became their disciples taking human form. Then Viṣṇu created mental agony in Vṛndā to attract her to his abode. Vṛndā started getting hot and her mains fanned her continuously and anointed her with sandalwood paste. She thought of her husband in the battlefield and often fainted. She had a very bad dream. She saw her husband Jālandhara lying wounded on her head, ears and nose, with his body smeared with ashes and his eyes pecked by vultures. She saw Kālī, with her hair lying lose, her face reddened with blood, with a skull in her hand dancing before the body of her husband before starting to eat it. At this moment she was awakened by the music of the Māgadhas and loud chanting of family praises by Kimpūrusas. She at once stopped the music and prayers and paid them off. Then she sent word for pendits to explain the dream she saw. The Pandits said “Devī, this appears to be a dream giving unimaginable fear. To calm the fear give as gifts to Brahmins, diamonds, garments, cows and elephants.” Then the brahmin pandits sprinkled on her, water made potent by mantras. There was no waning of the fever. Dismissing the pandits, queen Vṛndā went and sat alone upstair. She felt the whole palace burning and by the craft employed by Viṣṇu she found living inside the palace unattackable.

She got out of the palace and boarding a chariot drawn by horses she went to her play garden. The sight of the garden filled with beautiful flowers and celestial maidens where no one else but pleasing breeze could enter made her remember her husband. She then brooded how to find out Jālandhara, and there also she did not get peace of mind. So she accompanied by her maids started for another garden. That garden gave a ghostly sight with huge trees standing crowded interspersed with black rocks and the place resounding with the roars of lions and tigers. Vṛndā got frightened and she hastened to say “Smaradāti, I feel frightened. Please drive back the chariot home.”

Hearing this Smaradāti said “Oh, Devi, I do not know the place. I do not understand the directions also. To which direction am I to drive? The horse is look tired. There is no way here. Anyhow let me go as directed by God. If we stay here we will be eaten by man-eaters.” So saying the maid drove the chariot and soon they reached a forest more grisy than the former. It was a forest where great yogins lived. There was no light there neither water nor wind. No sound came. Even the sounds of the bells on the horses and the chariot stopped. Vṛndā moaned, “Where are we to go now? There is no peace of mind for me anywhere in this world.”

Smaradāti looking ahead cried, “Look Devi, there is a great black mountain in front of us. The horses refuse to move, for they are afraid of it.”

Cold with fear the queen stood up from the chariot and keeping her hands on the pearl necklace on her breast jumped out of the chariot. Then a very fierce demon came towards them. He was yellow in colour with three legs, five hands, seven eyes and ears like a tiger’s and the shoulders and chin like those of a lion. It was a horrible sight and Vṛndā hid her eyes with her hands and trembled like a plantain leaf. The maid jumping out of the chariot cried aloud “Oh, my queen, help me. This demon is going to eat me.” The demon approaching MAYÀVASIŚTHA. There was once a King called Mitrasaharma among the Kings of the Solar dynasty who ruled Ayodhyā. One day while he was hunting he saw two demons roving about as tigers and Mitrasaharma killed one of them. The other demon waited for an opportunity to wreak vengeance and an opportunity presented itself. Mitrasaharma was conducting an Āśvamedha yāga to which Vasiṣtha was the chief priest. The demon went to the King as Vasiṣṭha and privately told him that he desired to eat meat and the King accordingly prepared meat which was greatly resented by the real Vasiṣṭha and the sage cursed Mitrasaharma to become a demon. The false Vasiṣṭha who played the trick on the King is called MAYÀVASIŚTHA. (See for details under Kalmāṣapāda).

MAYÀVATI. An incarnation of Ratidevi. An asura named Sambarna made her his wife. But Pradyumna, son of Krsna, carried her away to Dvārakā. (See under Pradyumna).

MAYÀVI. An asura.

1) Both. MAYÀVI was born to the great architect of the Dānavas, Maya, of his wife Hema, a nymph. MAYÀVI fell in love with Hemā when he once found her dancing in Devaloka and the devas coming to know of it gave her in marriage to MAYÀVI. MAYÀVI took Hema to the southern side of the Himālayas and constructing a city there called Hemapura stayed there happily. They got two sons named MAYÀVI and Dunḍubhī. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

2) Brahm. VANAVASISVA fought against anybody and everybody. He once challenged Bali to a fight. But the mighty blows of Bali were unbearable to him and the defeated MAYÀVI ran away from Bali and hid himself in a big cave. Bali followed him and when he reached the mouth of the cave he posted his brother Sugriva there with instructions to shut tight the opening of the cave in case he died in the cave in the fight. He said that if blood flowed from the cave the dead person was MAYÀVI and if milk flowed from the cave the dead person was himself. In the cave a great fight ensued in which MAYÀVI was killed. But MAYÀVI by his powers of magic made the blood that flowed out look like milk for Sugriva and the latter thinking that it was his brother who was killed shut tight the mouth of the cave and went his way. (Sarga 9, Krishnādāsa Kanda, Vālmīki Rāmāyana and Purva Kanda, Kamba Rāmāyana).

MAYIL (PEACOCK). In Uttara Rāmāyana there is a story about how the peacock got its beauty. MAYIL in Malayālam means peacock. Once Rāvana set out in his Puspaka Vimāna with his army of Rākasas, determined to gain victory over all Kings. They got down on the mountain called Uṭimāvī. Rāvana examined the valley to see whether there were any Kings doing taps anywhere there. A King named Marutta was performing a yāga called “Māheśvara” in an āśrama. Indra and other gods were also present to receive the share of offerings (Hāvīrbhāgā). At the sight of Rāvana, the gods took different disguises and fled in panic. At that time Indra assumed the form of a big peacock. As soon as Rāvana left the place, the gods reassembled there. From that time, Indra who put on the disguise of a peacock felt a special attachment to that bird. He called the peacock and said:—“Till now you were blue in colour. But from today onwards, your feathers will have various colours. All my thousand eyes
I transfer to you. Besides, you will be immune from all diseases. Whoever kills you, will meet with death, soon after. You need not fear this condition of the rainy season. People will greet you with enthusiasm. It is because of Indra's blessing that Peacocks are so beautiful in appearance and dance at the onset of the rainy season.

MAYURA. An astra who fought against Subrahmanya. Skanda Purana, Varahamihira's Kadga describes the terrible battle between Mayura and Subrahmanya. Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 65 says that after death, Mayura was reborn in the world as a King named Viva.

MAYURADHVAJA. A King of Ratnapara. After performing seven Avasmedha yugas this King started another Avasmedha in the Narmada river valley. The task of protecting the sacrificial horse was undertaken by the King's son Suttra or Tamradhavraja. He set out for the conquest of the world with the chief minister Babudhavraja. On his return, he came across Yudhisthira's Avasmedha horse at the city of Manipur. The heroic Suttra encountered Sri Krishna and Arjuna who were leading the horse. After making them unconscious, he entered the city with the sacrificial horse.

When Sri Krishna discovered himself as a Brahmana and Arjuna as a Brahmana boy and they went to Mayuradhavaja's palace. The King welcomed them respectfully. Sri Krishna, in his disguise as Brahmana told the King that he was coming from Dharmapuri to meet the King's priest, Krishna who was to officiate at the marriage of his (Brahmana's) son. He added that unbeknownst to them and said, "I have the half (Vishvabha) of the King. You may take me and offer me as food to the lion." But the Brahmana replied that the lion wanted the right half of the King's body.

On hearing the Brahmana's story, Mayuradhavaja agreed to give half of his body to the lion. Just then his queen Kumudadevi came and said, "I am the half (Vishvabha) of the King. You may take me and offer me as food to the lion." But the Brahmana wanted the right half of the King's body.

When the King heard this, he readily agreed to give the right half of his own body. Accordingly, they started cutting his body into two halves. Just then, seeing tears coming down from Mayuradhavaja's left eye, the Brahmana said: "I find that you are in great sorrow; I do not wish to accept a gift which is not given wholeheartedly." Mayuradhavaja explained that his tears were not caused by pain or sorrow. His left side was disappointed in not being able to be of as much service as the right side.

When Sri Krishna heard these words of the King, he resumed his own shape and embraced him and blessed him. After that Mayuradhavaja completed his yaga and started with Sri Krishna and Arjuna, taking Yudhisthira's sacrificial horse with them. (Jaimini ; Avasmedha: 41-46).

MEDHA. A serpent of the clan of Aikavata. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Sloka 11, Chapter 57, Adi Parva).

MEDHA. One of the twenty-four daughters born to Dakaprapajata of his wife Prafsuti. Of these, thirteen daughters including Medha were married by Dharmadeva. (Chapter 7, Vishnu Purana).

MEDHATHII. Grandson of Svayambhva Manu. Svayambhva Manu had two sons named Priyavrata and Uttanapada. Of these Priyavrata married Sarupi and Barhismati, daughters of Vayakarmaprapjatai. Medhathii was the son born to Priyavrata of Sarupi. Agudi, and others were the brothers of Medhathii. Medhathii became the King of Plaksadvipa after the death of Priyavrata. (Bh Skandha, Devi Bhagavata).

Medhathii got seven sons named Santahaya, Sisra, Sukhodavasa, Anandavas, Siva, Sivavara, Keemavara and Dhruvavara. There are seven mountains showing the boundaries of these states and they are called Gomeda, Cantra, Narada, Dunudhru, Sumana, Sumana and Vaihikara. In these beautiful countries and grand mountains live a great many Devas, Gandharvas and virtuous men. (Chapter 4, Artha 2, Vishnu Purana).

This Medhathii got two sons named Dusyanta and Pravra. It was this Dusyanta who married Sakuntali. (Chapter 276, Agni Purana).

Medhathii was a celebrated sage of Bharata. The maharsis referred to in Sloka 12, Anuvaka 1, Mandala of Ryveda is Medhathii son of Kanva. Once Indra, coming in the form of a goat, drank the soma of Medhathii and the latter called him 'goat' (Mesa) and thenceforth Indra got the name Mesha. (Sloka 51, Anuvaka 10, Mandala 1, Ryveda). We get the following details about Medhathii from the Mahabharata:

1) He was a King in the court of Indra.
2) Medhathii had a son named Kanavamuni who was popular on the east coast of Bharata. (Sloka 23, Chapter 107, Sant Parva).
3) Medhathii observed Vasanaprastha and attained Svarga. (Sloka 7, Chapter 336, Sant Parva).
4) Medhathii was considered to be a sage deserving worship and when he went to see Bihima, the charger of Dhrupapatra, received him with respect and worshipped him. (Sloka 1, Chapter 26, Anuvaka Parva).

MEDHATHII III. A river. This river is the place of birth of Agni. (Sloka 23, Chapter 222, Vana Parva).

MEDHATHII IV. A sage who was the father of Arunadhari, wife of Vaishista. This Medhathii who was living in an Aikam on the banks of the river Candrabhradh performed a Jyotishma yajna. (Kilika Purana).

MEDHAI. 1) General information. A fierce sage. His father was a sage known as Balaadhi. For a very long time Balaadhi had no children and so, greedily, Balaadhi came to see Medhavi and Medhavi was born as a result of his penance. Even from boyhood the child showed wonderful powers of grasping things and so he was named Medhavi. (Chapter 135, Vana Parva).
2) How Medhāvi cured a nymph. One day in spring, Mahājñāna (Sukumāra), a nymph, was playing with other companions in the Cittaradvīdāyā. Medhāvi was doing penance in a place nearby and Mahājñāna fell in love with the sage and she went near him and made love to him by dance and music. Medhāvi was attracted by her and the sage accepted her advances and lived with her for a long time.

One day Mahājñāna sought permission to go to Devaloka. "Wait till daylight," said the sage. When it was morning the nymph renewed her request and the sage said "Wait till I finish my evening prayers." Hearing this Sukumāra said "Oh, best of brahmīs, how many mornings and evenings have gone by this time! Fifty-five years nine months and three days have gone by since we started living together". The sage then counted the years and found she was correct. The astounding fact that her penance had such a long break made the sage angry and he cursed her and made her into an evil spirit. She begged for pardon and the sage said "If you observe with fasting the Cittaradvīdāyadāta called Pāpanocī it will absolve you of all sin and you will be free from the curse". (Chapter 48, Part 4, Padma Purāṇa)

3) In Rājāya The Aśvinīdevas once gave rice to this sage. (Śloka 117, Anuṣūkā 17, Māndala 1, Rgveda).

MEDHAVI II. A brahmin boy. This child once gave Tattvopadeśa to his father. (The philosophy that the human soul or material world is identical with the supreme spirit pervading the universe). Chapter 377, Śloka 34, Anuṣūkā Parva.

MEDHYA. A holy place on the west coast. A river flows through this place. This sacred river is believed to be the place of origin of Agni. This is one of the riversworthy to be remembered every morning and evening. (Chapter 135, Anuṣūkā Parva).

MEDINI. A synonym for Earth (Bhūmi). (See under Kaitabha for details).

MEGAHĀŚA. A son of Rāhu. When he heard that Mahāvīra had cut off the head of his father he went to the banks of the river Gaurītani and practised severe penance. As a result of that Rāhu, his father, got a place among the other planets in the sky. (Chapter 142, Brahmāṇḍa Parāśa).

MEGAKARŚA. A female follower of Subrahmanyā. (Śloka 36, Chapter 15, Salaya Parva).

MEGHĀLÁ. A female follower of Subrahmanyā. (Śloka 30, Chapter 46, Salaya Parva).

MEGI'MĀLĪ I. A demon who fought against Rāma and Mahākāma in the forest. He was one of the captains of the army of the great demon Khara. The other captains were Śeṣaśāma, Pratihṛiva, Vaṭṭalatra, Viraśāma, Vīrāja, Kaṃkāvīra, Parājiva, Kaṃkāvīra, Mahākāma, Kaṃkāvīra, Parājiva, and Kaṃkāvīra. (Sarga 26, Aranyaka Kūdā, Valmiki Rāmāyana).

MEGHAMALI II. One of the two pārjyadas given to Subrahmanyā by Mahākāma. The other was Kāntaka. (Śloka 47, Chapter 45, Salaya Parva).

MEGHĀNADĀ Indrajit, son of Rāvana. (Only portion which were left off under the entry Indrajit are given here.)

1) Synonym of Meghanāda. Kāntaka, Rāvana, Māyāvi, Indrajit. The origin of each name is given below:

(a) Kāntaka. Son of a virgin. In olden times, once, the Sea of Milk was churned. From it arose a beautiful maiden called Sulakṣṇā. She became an attendant of Pārvatī and one day while bathing in a pond in the garden she sent Sulakṣṇā to fetch some clothes for her. Siva who was then in Pārvatī's chamber alone, lost his control when he saw the beautiful Sulakṣṇā and had intercourse with her. The maid was perplexed and then Siva assured her that she would give birth to a child only after her marriage.

But when Sulakṣṇā returned with the dress Pārvatī felt suspicious and she cursed her and made her into a frog and pushed it into that same pond. Time passed on. Once Maya performed severe penance to please Siva to get a daughter and Siva persuaded Pārvatī to release Sulakṣṇā from the curse and she did so turning her into a beautiful maiden named Mandodari and Siva gave her to Maya. Rāvana married her and their first son was Kāntaka.

(ii) Rāmaṇā. Son of Rāvana.

(iii) Meghanāda. (One having the sound of thunder). When he was born he made a snout like a thunder and so he was called Meghanāda.

(iv) Māyāvi. He accepted Siva as his Guru and learned all the divine arts of magic like Mrganāṭa, Brahmatrā, Strītrā, Mahānāṭa, Vāyusūtra, Āhasthātra, Agnīstātra, Ākāśaśātra, Parākṣāpravaśa, Rāpabhāsadasivākara and Tirodhana. Because he knew all these tricks he was called Māyāvi.

(v) Indrajit. When Rāvana attacked Vaḥa he rushed forward too much and so was caught inside an army of the Devas which surrounded him. When Meghanāda saw the huge army of the devas and getting in caught Indra as a prisoner and brought him to Lanka. Indra was later released by the meditation of Brahma and the latter gave him the name Indrajit meaning "Conqueror of Indra."

2) Books. When Rāvana was conducting his world campaign he performed at Nokumbhā many yāgas. He got from Brahmas many boons. Mehandāna acquired powers which had not been possible for mānasas, dānasas, vānāsas or rākṣasa to acquire. He got a Vimaṇa (divine chariot) which could travel in all directions, backwards and forwards, up or down. He received an armour against which no weapon would be of any use. He possessed a weapon which would be effective against anything. Above all these, he had the power to remain invisible. He could be killed by only one person of his age who had lived for fourteen years dutifully and virtuously without sleep. Only Indrajit knew about this.

In a battle Māyāvi would show many tricks. If one was found ineffective he would use another. He had in his stock over a thousand such tricks all of which he had acquired with very little effort. (Yuddha Katha, Kamba Ramayanam).

MEGHANĀDA II. A soldier of Subrahmanyā. (Śloka 57, Chapter 44, Salaya Parva).

MEGHAPUSPA. A horse of divinity drawing the chariot of Sri Krsna. (Śloka 27, Chapter 45, Virāta Parva)

MEGHAŚANDHĪ. A prince of ancient Magadhā. Once Meghsandhi fought against Arjuna and was defeated. (Chapter 92, Asvamedha Parva).

MEGHAŚARMA. A brāhmin who was a great devotee of Sūrya. When there was a drought in the country during the reign of Śantānu this brahmīto his worship.
of Surya brought rains to the country. (Bhaviya Puraná, Pratsangasautahita.)

MEGHASVANA. A female follower of Subrahmanyá. (Sloka 8, Chapter 46, Salya Parva.)

MEGHAVÁSHA. A King. He was a dependent of Jarvantada. (Sloka 13, Chapter 14, Subhás Parva.)

MEGHAVÁSINÍ. (MEGHAVÁSINÍ.) A female follower of Sámanzé. (Sloka 17, Chapter 45, Salya Parva.)

MEGHAVARÁ. A character in a story of Pandavántara. (See under Pandavántara.)

MEGHAVARÁNA. A son of Ghatotkacá. Meghavaná was also present with Arjuna when he went to protect the sacrificial horse of the Avámedha conducted by the Pandavavá. (Sloka 19, Chapter 5, Mahabharata.)

MEGHAVEGÁ. An asura. This asura sits in the council of Varuna and worships him. (Sloka 19, Chapter 9, Subhás Parva.)

MEGHAVEGA. A very brave soldier who fought against the Pandavas on the Kaurava side. Abhimanyu killed him. (Sloka 15, Chapter 48, Dropha Parva.)

MEKHALA (MEKALA). Mekhala was a country which had attained Puránic fame in ancient India. The inhabitants of this country were called Mekhalis. They were the bodyguards of Bhumaí. (Chapter 5, Bhumaí Parva.) They formed a separate division in the army of Bhumaí.

King of Kosáí. (Sloka 87, Bhumaí Parva.) Once Karna conquered this country. (Sloka 8, Chapter 4, Dropha Parva.) Mekhalis were Kauravás formerly. But they became part of low caste when they showed jealousy towards the brahmás. (Sloka 17, Chapter 35, Bharatí Parva.)

MENÁ. Wife of Himaván. Beautiful Mená was the daughter of Mahámeru.

Himaván lord of the mountains and the sea of many minerals and fossils had two daughters of unparalleled beauty and their mother was the lovely Mená, daughter of Mahámeru and wife of Himaván. (Sarga 25, Bhishma Parva, 18th Váni, Rámâyana.)

Rámâyana states that Mená had two daughters of extraordinary beauty named Gangá and Umá. They were both married by Siva.

But Váma Paráma in chapter 51 states that Mená had three beautiful daughters and a son named Sunáthha. Mená's first daughter was Rágvá with red body and eyes and wearing a red dress. Her second daughter named Kutila was white in colour, had lotus eyes, and wore white dress. The third was a girl of enchanting beauty named Káli. She was blue-black in colour with eyes like the blue lotus leaf.

It can be surmised that the Umá of Rámâyana and Káli were one and the same person by the following verse in the Amarakosá.

Umá Kátyáyaní Gaurí Káli Haimavatí Varí //

When the statements of the two Puránas are taken together Mená should have had four daughters, Gangá, Rágvá, Kutilá and Káli and a son named Sunáthha.

MENÁ II. Daughter of the Pittás (Manes). Pittás are of two kinds: Anaginis and Ságinis. Anaginis are those who do not perform yágas and those who perform yágas are called Ságinis. Anaginis are called Anaginávatas and Ságinis are called Bárchádas. Svadá was the common wife of all the Pittás. Svadá got two daughters, Mená and Dhrási. They were both very well-learned, virtuous girls and were Brahmavádins (exponents of Vedánta philosophy). (Chapter 10, Ámá 1, Víshnu Purána.)

MENÁKÁ. A nymph of extraordinary beauty. Taking instructions from Indra, Menáká used to enter many sages and destroy their power of penance. There are innumerable stories of this kind in Puránas. Some important events connected with Menáká are given below:

1) Mother of Pramadárá. Once Menáká became pregnant by a Gádharva named Viśváviśu. On the day she delivered she threw the child on the banks of a river and went to Svarga. A sage named Stíhukaká who was doing penance nearby took the baby and brought it up.

When she grew up she was named Pramadárá and Rámacá married her. (See under Pramadárá.)

2) Birth of Śakuntála. When Viśvámitra was performing penance in the forests, Menáká, under instructions from Indra, went and entered Viśvámitra and broke the continuity of his penance. A girl was born to Menáká and became later the celebrated Śakuntála. (See under Śakuntála.)

3) Agaś with Viśvámitra. Once again when Viśvámitra was performing penance in Parikárátírtha, Menáká approached him and again Viśvámitra fell in love with her and they lived together for ten years. Then one day Viśvámitra realised his folly and leaving her went again to the forests for penance.

4) Mahávána was entered. See under Mahávána

5) Other details.

(j) When once Púrásáva visited Devaloka it was Menáká who presented him with a flower garland. This incident led to the charming of the milk ocean at a later period. (See under Ámára.)

(ii) Menáká was one among the six prominent celestial maidens: Urváśi, Púrvacítá, Sábájání, Menáká, Ghráci and Viśváci are the six. (Sloka 66, Chapter 74, Ádi Parva.)

(iii) Menáká attended the Jánmastama of Arjuna and sang on the occasion. (Sloka 64, Chapter 122, Ádi Parva.)

(iv) Menáká was a dancer in the court of Kuberá. (Sloka 10, Chapter 10, Sálá Parva.)

(v) Menáká once gave a music performance in the court of Indra in honour of Arjuna. (Sloka 29, Chapter 43, Vana Parva.)

MENDHA (MENDHA). A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 5th century A.D. Among his works only one is known viz. Hayagrivavadhá (the inspiration of Hayagriva). This book is known by another name "Hastipaka".

MEPPATŤÚR NÁRÁYANA BHÁTTATÍRÍ. A Sanskrit poet who lived in Keralá.

1) General information. It is believed that this poet lived during the period from 1560 to 1648 A.D. He was born in the village of Kurumattí in Malabar district. The illam (house of theillam) which became famous by his birth was a mile to the east of the Bhagavati temple, Cândanakkúvá, which itself is situated just two furlongs to the north of the well known Tirunáváyu temple. Meppattúr illam became impoverished and was merged with another illam of name Maravelíeri Teklattú.

Náráyana Bhattachári had a brother named Máréddáta. He was younger to Náráyana and his work was to take MERUBHŪTA down the verses which Nārāyaṇa composed. Mepattūr (Nārāyaṇa is more well-known under the name of his harī) studied under different preceptors. His father studied under Māmāśā and such other subjects. He studied Vedas under Mādhavācārya and Vīrka under Dūmādaraśārya. Arupā Prāśāta taught him Vyākaraṇa.
The poet became a rheumatic patient in his old age and he stayed in the Guruvāyur temple worshipping the deity there. His famous work Nārāyaṇiyam was written sitting in the temple of Guruvāyur and the mandapā (trussula) where he sat and wrote is now present preserved for pilgrims to see. He took hundred days to write the Nārāyaṇiyam
2) His work. It is not yet known how many books Mepattūr had written but the following have been recognised as definitely written by him: (1) Nārāyaṇiyam (2)
Śrīpādasaptā (3) Guruvāyurpratapottam (4)
Goér-in-pravarnam (5) Māmāshāprapāsā (6)
Śālāśāprapāsā (7) Śūkṣāloka (8) Āśvālāyana
Kriyākrama (9) Prakriyāpravarnam (10) Dūpāvāyam
(11) Apāniyapramyāśāvadham (12) Mānāpariccheda of Mānāmṛtyudaya (13) Tantaravariṇikambadeśa (14)
Rājaśī (15) Dūpāvāyam (16) Pāhaiṣāvadham
(17) Nāyāyacitam (18) Sundarapradopā
Bhāshā (19) Nāsa-pradopā (20) Kusumyāvīkrama
(21) Kirāta (22) Kaśīvāyana (23) Māyāśrat
(24) Nyagamokṣa (25) Nīramidikā (26)
Śrīraṃākāma (27) Rāksadipati (28) Ahalāvākṣa
(29) Bālākanda story (30) Dīpupradahana (31)
Agaricacūpa (32) Sāhārasūdākaram (33)
Kosyārāma.
MERUBHŪTA. A place of habitation of ancient Bhrātra. (Śloka 40, Chapter 9, Bhāma Parva).
MERUDĀNA. Merudāna (gifts of heaps like Meru) are all very effective and productive of good result.
The Merus for the dānas are the following:
1) Dāhiyamunra. A dāhiyamunra or a thousand dromas of dhīnū (grain) is considered the best; a dāna of half that quantity (i.e. 500) was fair and half of the other, the least acceptable.
2) Lomamunra. A dāna of sixteen dromas of lavana (salt) is considered to be Uttama (best); with half of that as Madhyma (fair) and with half of the latter as Adhama (worst).
3) Gudamunra. One with ten bharas of guda (jaggery) is considered Uttama; with half of that as Madhyma
and with half of the latter as Adhama.
4) Sōrāmunra. A sōranunra with a thousand palas of Sārpa (gold) is considered Uttama; with half of that as madhyma and with half of the latter as sārāma.
5) Tīlamunra. One with ten dromas of tīla (gingelly) is considered Uttama; with half of that as madhyma
and with half of the latter as adhama.
6) Kārpaśāmaru. A Mūna with twenty bharas of Kārpaśā (coconut) is considered Uttama; with ten as madhyma and with five as adhama.
7) Guttamunra. One with twenty jars of ghṛta (ghee) is Uttama; with ten, madhyma and five, adhama.
8) Rajatamunra. One with ten thousand palas of silver is deemed Uttama; with half of that as madhyma
and with half of the latter as adhama.
9) Sārūkamunra. One with eight bharas of sugar is deemed Uttama; with half of that as madhyma and with half of the latter as adhama. (Chapter 210, Agni Parāṇa).
MERUDEVĪ. A daughter of Mahāmeru. The nine dughters of Mahāmeru are: Merudevi, Pratupu, Ugradaśumī, Lātā, Ramya, Śūnā, Nāri, Bhadru
and Devāvatī. They were married to Nābhi, Kimpuruṣu, Harī, Ilayā, Ramyaka, Hīrānmayo, Kuru, Bhadrā and Ketumā respectively. All these nine Kings were born to a King Anudhira of the nymph Pūrvacitti.
(Mithi Skanda, Bhagavata).
MERUMANDARA. A mountain. This supports Mahāmeru.
The mountains which support it from the four sides are Mandara, Merumandara, Supārśva and Kumuda. (5th Skanda, Bhagavata).
MERUPRAHĀ. A forest. There were three beautiful forests situated around the seat of the mountain Latveṣa, situated to the south of Dvārakāpurī. Meruprahā is one of them. The other two are Tālāvāna and Purpakā vasa. (Chapter 26, Sābha Parva, Dākṣinātya Pācha).
MERUSĀVARĪ. A Manu. (See under Manvantara).
The daughter of this Merusāvarī named Swayamprabhā was met by Harīnāma on his way in the search of Sītā.
(Sarga 51, Kishinā kanda, Vālmiki Ramayana).
MERUVRĀJA. A city of ancient India. A demon named Vīrūpākṣa lived there. (Śloka 19, Chapter 17, Śānti Parva).
MEṢA I. A synonym for Indra. Once Indra taking the shape of a goat went and drank the soma of the sage Medēthi. Then that sage called Indra ‘goat’ (mēṣa) and that name of Mēṣa stuck to him. (Śloka 51, Avasāka 10, Mandala 11, Rgveda).
MEṢA II. A synonym for Sarsabha Subrahmanyam. (Śloka 64, Chapter 45, Sāλya Parva).
MEṢAHURT. A son of Garudā. (Śloka 12, Chapter 101, Sāλya Parva).
MIṢRAKA I. A special tribe of horses. (Dākṣinātya Pācha, Chapter 36, Sābha Parva).
MIṢRAKA II. A garden in the city of Dvārakā. The city shines more by this divine garden. (Dākṣinātya Pācha, Chapter 38, Sābha Parva).
MIṢRAKA III. A sacred place within the boundaries of Kurukṣetra. If one bathes in a holy pond there one would get the benefit of bathing in all the sacred ponds in India. (Śloka 91, Chapter 81, Vana Parva).
MIṢRAKESĪ I. A celestial woman. She was the beautiful daughter born to Pradhā wife of Kṣayapparājā.
Rādhrāva son of Purī married Mīrakēsī and begot a son named Anvagbhānu and nine sons more who were all good archers. When once Arjuna went to Indrāloka Mīrakēsī gave a dance performance in his honour. (Chapter 65, Ādi Parva and Chapter 43, Vana Parva).
MIṢRAKESĪ II Wife of King Vatsaka, brother of Vanudeva. (9th Skanda, Bhagavata, and Chapter 59, Ādi Parva).
MIŚRI. A serpent. This serpent also was among those serpents which came to take away the soul of Balamādrarāma to Pātāla at the time of his death.
(Śloka 15, Chapter 5, Māusala Parva).
MIṢADHVAJA. A King of Videha. According to Bhāgavata Mīsadhvāja was the son of Dharmadhvāja Janaka.
MITHI (MITHI JANAKA). Son of King Nimi. The sixth chapter of Devi Bhagavata gives the following story about the birth of Mithi.
There was once an emperor of great renown in the line of Ikṣvakū named Nimi. He was the twelfth son of the celebrated Ikṣvakū and was devoted to the welfare of his subjects. He was a very honest, virtuous, righteous and good-natured man of a charitable disposition. The agrahāra (village where Brahmins reside) named Jayantapura near the śrama of Gautama Mahārāja was constructed by this emperor. This emperor of a Rājānic line also performed a yāga which would take years for its conclusion and in which land was to be given as gifts. He went to his father Ikṣvakū, and took permission from him to conduct the yāga. He made all preparations for the yāga. He invited Bhṛgu, Aṅgiras, Vasistha, Pulantya, Pulaḥa and Rekha all of whom were well-versed in the Vedas and were worthy of being priests in a Yāga of the kind he was conducting. He then went and invited his Kulaguru (family priest and preceptor) Vasishtha for the Yāga. But Vasishtha had to officiate at a Yāga conducted by Indra and so he commanded Nimi to postpone the Yāga by five hundred years. Nimi did not act according to it and he performed the Yāga with the help of the other sages and completed it successfully. After five hundred years when the Yāga to Indra was over, Nimi was to give the land to Nimi. Nimi was asleep then and the servants in the palace hesitated to go and inform him of the arrival of the sage. Vasishtha got angry and cursed him and made him directly (without body). At once the body of the King fell to the ground and the soul got out of it. But before the soul separated from the body Nimi cursed Vasishtha with a curse which would make him one body. Vasishtha was again born as the son of Mithāvaruṇa. The other sages present there took the lifeless body of Nimi and after sacrificial ceremonies and worship of gods started to churn the body. After some time a mighty and perfect man of great brilliance was born out of it. Because he was born by Mathana (churning) he was named Mithā. Because he was born from his father (Janaka) he was called Mithajamuka and because he was born of Nimi, a Videha, he was called Videha also. The country which was ruled by Mithi got the name of Mithilā. It is the country of Sītā.

MITHILĀ

1) General information. A celebrated country of ancient Bharata. This is situated on the north-eastern side of Bharata. In modern times, Mithilā was ruled by the renowned Janaka Kings. See under Mithi to know how the country got the name Mithilā.

2) The wealth of Mithilā. Mithilā was the capital of the extensive country of Videha. Successive generations of Janaka ruled the country. Mithilā was noted more for its śāvic virtues than for the pomp and glory of kings. Everyday on the protruding breasts of an idol of Rājaśa-Rājakumāri (embodiment of royal prosperity) bhasma (ashes) and candana (sandalwood paste) would be smeared. In the middle of Tretāyuga Videha was ruled by a Janaka who brought fame and prosperity to the successive generations. A devotee of Śiva and of a śāvic disposition he was a Nityabrahmacārī (observing celibacy throughout life), and his wife a disciple of Śrīmātī and well-versed in Advaitavādaṇa was a Nītībrahmacārī.

Videha grew prosperous with agricultural wealth by hard work put up by the peasants and divine wealth by the virtuous deeds of the King and the people. Agriculture was given importance, so much so that the royal emblem itself was the figure of a plough. Rains were there in season and in plenty because of the yāgas conducted properly by the King (Bālakāṇḍa, Kamba Ramāyaṇa).

3) Other details.

(i) Once Pānda, father of the Pāndavas, attacked this country and conquered it. (Śloka 28, Chapter 112, Adi Parva).

(ii) Śrī Kaśītā, Arjuna and Bhīma once visited this country when they were on their way to Magadha from Indraprastha. (Śloka 28, Chapter 20, Śabhā Parva).

(iii) Karna once conquered and captured the country of Mithilā. (Śloka 8, Chapter 254, Vana Parva).

(iv) Sītā was born in Mithilā. (Śloka 9, Chapter 274, Vana Parva).

(v) Because she was born in Mithilā she is known by the name of Maithili. (Śloka 2, Chapter 277, Vana Parva).

(vi) Once Mithilā was ruled by a King called Dharmanāda. Hearing about his great Dharmanāda (knowledge about virtues and duties) a female ascetic named Sūbhā visited him in the guise of a beggar woman. (Śloka 8, Chapter 280, Nāyikī Parva).

(vii) Śka the great sage, with the permission of his father Vyāsa came to Mithilā and took Dharmanāda from King Janaka. (Śloka 6, Chapter 325, Sāntī Parva).

MITHU. A very valuable dānava. Once Bharata son of Arjunēśvara was making preparations for an Aṅgadha on the banks of the river Sarasvatī with Upamanyu as his priest; when Mithu came and took them both to Pātha. Then Devā, son of Upamanyu, got his father and the King released from there by continuous worship of Sītā (Brahma Purāṇa—127. 50-57).

MIRA. A woman to understand the story of how Mitrāvaruṇas became the father of Agastya.

1) General information. One of the twelve Sūryas. The twelve Sūryas born to Aditi of Kāśvapācārōopa are Vīṣṇu, Śakra, Aravanō, Bhatō, Tvaṭa, Pāśa, Vīraśiva, Sāvatī, Mira, Varuṇa, Bhaga and Anā. (Chapter 15, Amśa 1, Vīṣṇu Purāṇa).

Mitrāvaruṇas are two devatas of great intimacy. They are always found together. If you pray to Mitrāvaruṇas you will get plenty of rains. (Śloka 2, Anuvāka 1, Mandalā 1, Kṛṣṇedī). See para 2 under Agastya.

MITHRAHEDA. See under Paṭetrānta.

MITRADEVA. Brother of Sūrāṁa, King of Trigartta. Arjuna killed him in the great battle. (Śloka 3, Chapter 27, Kṛṣṇa Parva).
MITRADHARMA. Son of the Agni called Pańcajanya. (Sloka 12, Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

MITRAKSHA. A demon who fought on the side of Rṣeṣa in the Rāma–Ravana battle. Śri Rāma killed this demon. (Chapter 34, Verse 27, Yuddha Kanda, Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa).

MITRAJNA. Son of the Agni named Pańcajanya. He was one of the five Devamāyakas. (Sloka 12, Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

MITRASĀHA (MITRASĀH). A King of the Solar dynasty. He was known as Kaliṃśaṇapāda also. (See under Kaliṃśaṇapāda).

MITRASENA. A King who fought on the side of the Kauravas in the great battle. Arjuna killed him. (Sloka 20, Chapter 19, Karna Parva).

MITRAVAN I. Son of the Agni named Pańcajanya. He was one of the Pańcavadevamāyakas. (Sloka 12, Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

MITRAVAN II. An ascetic who lived in the city of Sāpurā. He acquired complete peace of mind by reading the second Chapter of the Gītā grainin in a Śvī temple. Once a brahmin of name Devarām approached him with a question to obtain peace of mind. The latter directed Devarām to Mitravan and Mitravan advised him to read the second Chapter of the Gītā. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍha, 176).

MITRAVARDHANA. Son of the Agni called Pańcajanya. He was one of the Pańcavadevamāyakas. (Sloka 12, Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

MITRARAVUNA(S). The combined name of two of the Devaśādityas (twelve Śvīyas) Mitra and Varuna. These two are mentioned together. Agstya and Vāishṇa were born as sons of Mitra Varunā. It was due to a curse by Mitravarunā that Urvāśi had to marry King Parvavas, a man of the earth. Manu had no children and he performed a yāga to placate Mitravarunā. But since there were many faults in the ceremony a girl was born to him. (For details see under III, Nimi, Urvāśi, Vāishṇa and Mitra).

MITRAVINDA. A deva. The havis (clarified butter which is put in the Agni, called Rāthantarika) is intended for this deva. (Sloka 19, Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

MITRAVINDA. Daughter of Śri Kṛṣṇa’s father’s sister. Mitraṇī’s mother’s name was Rājādvegeti. Rājādhveta, queen of Avanti, got three children named Vindu, Anuvinda and Mitraṇī. In the Śvīu Varan Mitraṇī chose Kṛṣṇa as her husband. Vindu and Anuvinda did not like it and joining the Kaurava side fought against Kṛṣṇa. But Kṛṣṇa defeated them all and took Mitraṇī to Dvārakā. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MITREYU. A King of the Lunar dynasty. He was the son of Divodasa and father of Cyavana.

MLECCA. A tribe of people of ancient India. This tribe was born from the tail of the celestial cow Nandini, kept by Vāyu to save the cow and Vāishṇa. Mahābhārata gives the following information regarding them:

(1) The mlecchas who sprang up from the tail of the celestial cow Nandini sent the army of Vāyu in terror. (Sloka 38, Chapter 174, Ādi Parva).

(2) Bhīmaśena defeated the mlecchas living in the coastal regions and took from them several valuable diamonds as tax. (Sloka 25, Chapter 30, Sābhā Parva).

(3) The mlecchas living in the coastal area were once defeated by Sahadeva, one of the Paṇḍavas. (Sloka 66, Chapter 31, Sābhā Parva).

(4) Nakula also once defeated the mlecchas. (Sloka 16, Chapter 32, Sābhā Parva).

(5) Bhāgadatta was the King of the mlecchas. (Sloka 14, Chapter 51, Sābhā Parva).

(6) Bhagadatta accompanied by the mlecchas living on the coasts attended the Kṛṣṇa Yuddha of Yudhīṣṭhira. (Sloka 14, Chapter 51, Sābhā Parva).

(7) Different tribes of mlecchas will be born on earth at the beginning of the era of Pralaya. (Sloka 34, Chapter 186, Vana Parva).

(8) Kali, the incarnation of Viṣṇu, will destroy the mlecchas who are found everywhere in the world. (Sloka 97 Chapter 190, Vana Parva).

(9) Karna, during his world campaign, conquered many mlecchas countries. (Sloka 19, Chapter 254, Vana Parva).

(10) A place of habitation in Bhārata is called Mleccha. (Sloka 57, Chapter 9, Bhāmā Parva).

(11) Aṅga, a mleccha warrior, was killed in the battle by Bīśmaṇa. (Sloka 17, Chapter 26, Drona Parva).

(12) Once the mlecchas attacked Arjuna with arrows. Arjuna killed the mlecchas soldiers. (Sloka 43, Chapter 93, Drona Parva).

(13) Sayāṇa, killed many mlecchas soldiers in the great war. (Sloka 43, Chapter 119, Drona Parva).

(14) Nakula killed Aṅga, a mleccha King. (Sloka 18, Chapter 22, Karna Parva).

(15) Arjuna had to face a great army of mlecchas to protect the Yāgāvā. (Sloka 23, Chapter 73, Āvamedha Parva).

(16) The wealth that remained in the Yāgāvā of Yudhīṣṭhira after the distribution as gifts to brahmans was taken away by the mlecchas. (Sloka 26, Chapter 59, Āvamedha Parva).

(17) The mlecchas drove angered elephants on to the army of the Paṇḍavas. (Sloka 10, Chapter 22, Karna Parva).

MORA 1. A demon who was a companion of Hiraṇyakaśipa. In the Devasura battle Viṣṇu killed him.

MORA 11. A serpent born of the clan of Airavata. This serpent was burnt to death in the surapata of Janamejaya. (Sloka 10, Chapter 52, Āgraṇāvāsa Parva).

MODAGIRI. A country of ancient Bhārata. The King of this country was killed by Bhīmaśena. (Sloka 31, Chapter 30, Sābhā Parva).

MODAKI. A vast area of land in Śrīkāvī near the mountain Kesara. (Sloka 26, Chapter 11, Bhāmā Parva).

MODAPURA. A country of ancient Bhārata. Arjuna defeated the King of this country once. (Sloka 11, Chapter 27, Sābhā Parva).

MOHA. A son born of the lustre of Brahmā. (3rd Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MOHAKA. Son of Surañjuna, a devotee of Śri Rāma. When Surañjuna blocked the Āvāmedha home of Śri Rāma, a fight ensued in which Mohaka also took part (Padma Purāṇa, Pātañjala Khaṇḍha).
MOHANA. An ancient place of habitation in Bhārata. This place was conquered by Karna. (Sloka 10, Chapter 224, Vana Parva).

MOHANA. Wife of Sugriva. Mohana helped her husband in bringing water from the Sarayu river to bathe the Asvamedha horse of Śrī Rāma. (Padma Purāṇa, Padāla Khaṇḍa).

MOHINI. The female form of Mahāviṣṇu. Devas and Asuras quarreled with each other over the right of partaking of the Asvamedha (sacrifice) obtained from the sea of Milk. At that time Mahāviṣṇu appeared in the guise of a beautiful maiden of maddening charm and the asuras were gulled into turning their attention on her for some time during which time the nectar was carried away by the Devas. The female form of Mahāviṣṇu was called Mohini. Śiva fell in love with Mohini and by the union of the two was born Śūtā. (See under Amṛtam). (6th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MOKSA I. One of the seven divisions of the island of Plakṣa. The seven divisions are Śiva, Yavasa, Subhadra, Śānta, Mokṣa, Amṛta and Abhayā. (5th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MOKSA II. Moksa means liberation and is generally meant to convey the meaning of the deliverance of the soul from recurring births. The Jīvātma enshrined in the body has the delusion that it enjoys or suffers happiness or woe. In truth it neither suffers nor enjoys anything. It is detached from all. It is the Supreme Being (Para-brahman). When Jīvātma deserts its woe it gets mokṣa i.e. Jīvātma gets merged with Paramātma. When once Jīvātma merges with Paramātma, Jīvātma is devoid of happiness or woe. It need not be enshrined in any body. A Jīvātma getting released from one body joins another new body and thus a Jīvātma in succession enters thousands of bodies and each time without knowing the absolute Truth languishes over its woes. In the words of Jīvātma it is explained thus: "Jīvātma, which is bliss in itself living in births after births searches for bliss elsewhere just as a person wearing a golden necklace round his neck searches for the same elsewhere." The passage of Jīvātma from one birth to another and the bodies that enshrined it each time constitutes the worldly life. When once a Jīvātma thus involved in Samsāra (mundane existence) gets real knowledge, the knowledge of Jīvātma and Paramātma are one and the same, then that Jīvātma gets final emancipation, liberation from recurring births. It merges with Brahman. This is called Mokṣa.

MOKSA DHARMAPARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of Śanti Parva. It contains the chapters 174 to 365 of Śanti Parva.

MRGADHUMA. A sacred place on the border of Kuru-keerta. If one goes there and worships Mahādeva one will get the benefit of conducting an Āśvamedhayajña. (Sloka 101, Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

MRGAMANDĀ. A daughter of Kaśyapa. (See under Mṛgas).

MRGANGKARA. A sword. Once Kubera cursed a Yāsaka and making him a lion posted it to guard the palace gates of Mahābali. He said he would be released from the curse when any man on earth defeated it. Once a brahmin warrior named Śrīdratta defeated this lion and at once the lion changed into a Yāsaka and the Yāsaka presented Śrīdratta with the sword named Mṛgāṅkara. (Kathāparīthakam, Kathāśārīta-gāna).

MRGANGKAVATI. Daughter of an ancient King called Śrī Rimbaki. (See under Śrīdratta).

MRGAS (DEER). All the animals originated from Kaśyap-prajapaati. Kaśyap-prajapaati, son of Marici, married the eight daughters of Daksā named Taṁrā etc. From Taṁrā were born birds. Krodhavatī gave birth to ten girls named Mṛgi, Mṛgandā, Hari, Bhadrādā, Mātāgī, Śārdūli, Śved, Surabhi, Surāsa and Kadrū. Mṛgas (deer) are the children of Mṛgī. (Vālmiki Ramāyana, Aranya Kāṇḍa, Sarga 4).

MRGASVAPNODHABHAPARVA. A subsidiary Parva of the Vana Parva of Mahābhārata. Chapter 258 of Vana Parva constitutes this Parva.

MRGAVATI. See under Udayanu.

MRGAYĀDHA. The disguise Śiva took when he went to test the devotion of Parasurāma. Parasurāma once went to the forests and did penance to please Śiva to learn archery from him. Śiva in the form of a Mṛgavāyādha (forest hunter) appeared before Parasurāma and tested his sincerity in his penance in several ways. Śiva was pleased to find Parasurāma's devotion to Śiva unswerving and blessed him. He gave instructions in archery and also permitted him to go round the earth. (Chapter 65, Brahmadea Purāṇa).

MRGAYĀDHA II. One of the Ekādhis-arudras (eleven Rudras). (Sloka 2, Chapter 66, Adi Parva).

MRGĪ. The mother of all types of deer. (See under Mṛgas).

MRKANDU. Father of the sage Mārkandeya. (See under Mārkandeya).

MRTAM. See under Pranamtra.

MRTASAJÑIVANTI. This is a medicinal herb to give life to those who are dead. When in the Rāma-Rāvana battle Lakṣmana and others fell dead, Śrī Rāma wanted Mṛtasaññīvani to be brought to revive them back to life. Jambavān the oldest among the monkey-warriors then instructed him how to bring the mountain Mahāmeru explaining to him the way to reach there. He said: "If you go a hundred yojanas (1200 Kilometres) from here to the north you would reach Rāmāvāra the southernmost point of Bhārata. From there if you go to the north another thousand yojanas you would reach the Himālayas which is the northernmost point of Bhārata. Himalaya is thousand yojanas high, two thousand yojanas wide and is long enough to reach the two oceans on the east and the west.

On that mountain is the marriage-dais of Pārvati and Parameśvara and you will find places where Parameśvara had sat for portraying penances. On the northern side under a big Kuva tree lie Kamadhu. This cow gives milk to the sages and tourists who go there.

1 Jīvātma-The individual soul enshrined in the human body imparting to it life, motion and sensation as opposed to Pāramātma.

2 Pāramātma-The Supreme spirit or Brahman.

3 Samsāra-The circuit of life consisting of births and rebirths with sufferings and enjoyments of woes and happiness.
Nine thousand yojanas to the north of this there are two mountains named Hemakûta and Ramakûta. The centre of that is Râbhâvastra. On a big Kârâkâstra tree there will be hanging a king with his face downwards after being cursed by the sage Durvâsas. He will be released from the curse by you. If one eats the fruits of this tree one will be free from graying of hairs and rugosity.

If you go four thousand yojanas north from Hemakûta you will reach Râbhâvastra. There is a lake there. If one bathes there one will be granted all prosperity by Kârâkâstra. Farther to the north is situated Mahâmeru. The greatness of this mountain is indescribable.

Mahâmeru has got four supporting mountain pillars named Mandara, Merumâdara, Supârśva and Kunûda. The abode of the three deities is on the top of this mountain. On a peak in the centre is living Brahmah with his wife Vâni, Gâyatrî and Sêvitrî as creator of the universe. This place is called Satyalokas and to the west of it is Sûrya’s abode of Mahâvâsakya. Mûdèvī and Bhûdèvī are his two wives. He is the god who protects us all. To the east of Satyaloka is Kûllasa, the abode of Sûrya. There lives there with him his brothers Gânat and Parvati and sons Cûnâ and Subrahmanyas. To the south of Satyaloka is the city Sûryanâvâ and to the west of it is the wonderful Drâvaloka. There lives Indra, his wife Sûdidevi and son Jayanta with thirty-three crores of Devas. Celestial nymphs like Urvatî, Rambî and Tîlottmâm live there. Kâmâdhenu, the Kâjpa tree, Airâvata, Uccâsiravâ and Cintâmanî are all there. You will find Amaçvâtî the Capital of Indra and Sudharma his court there.

On the northern side of Meru is a tall Aventha tree. To the north of that is the Nila-mahâgiri (the great blue mountain). Kâlîya has installed a deity named Svetavarāhâmurti there. Beyond that is the Râshabhâdri (ox-shaped mountain). It is believed that a divine ox became a mountain there. Its two horns are like two peaks. This mountain contains many divine medicines of which Sâvyâhûrâni, Vîkâlayâkarâni, Sandhanâkarâni and Mrtasahijvâni are the most important.

Once the asuras defeated the Devas. Then Paramesvara and Mahâvasu gave the Devas these four medicinal herbs. They planted them here and watered them from the Milk-Sea. Around these precious plants stand guarding the parshads of Sûrya and the Discus Sudharma of Vînu.” (Yuddha Kanda, Kamba Râmâyana).

There is another statement in the Mahâbârata that Sahijvani is an art, the use of a mantra. Sukrâcârya by this art brought to life all the asuras killed in a war with the devas (Śloka 8, Chapter 76, Adi Parva). Again Sukrâcârya brought to life three times his disciple Kaca whom the asuras killed three times. Sukrâcârya taught the art to Kaca. (Śloka 26, Chapter 76, Adi Parva).

MRTIKAVALI. A place of habitation in ancient Bhrâtra. (Śloka 10, Chapter 234, Vana Parva).

MRTYU. The goddess of Death. Agni Purâja gives details about the birth of Death. Hiimâ was the wife of Adharma. They got a son named Anûta and a daughter named Nikûta. From them were born Bhaya, Naraka, Mâyâ and Vedanâ. Of these Mâyâ gave birth to Mrtyu, the destroyer of matter.

Mrtyu has been described both as a god and goddess in Mahâbhârata. The statements regarding Mrtyu as a deva are as follows:

(i) Three sons were born to Nikûta, wife of Adharma. One of them was Mrtyu. Mrtyudeva has neither wife nor children because he is the destroyer of all. (Śloka 54, Chapter 66, Adi Parva).

(ii) Once the son of an old Gautam was bitten by a snake. A hunter seeing it rushed to kill the serpent but Gautam objected to it. He advised him that it was a sin to injure any living being. The serpent then said, “It is not my fault that I bit the boy. I was persuaded by the god of death to do so.” The god of death Mrtyu also appeared there then. He confirmed the snake’s statement and added that God had programmed all events beforehand and the boy’s death was not due to any mistake on anybody’s part. (Śloka 50, Chapter 1, Amaçvâtî Parva).

(iii) Once Mrtyu followed the King Sudarşan, but Mrtyudeva had to withdraw after accepting defeat because the king had been living a virtuous life of high standard. (See under Sudarşan).

The statements regarding Mrtyu as a goddess are the following:

(1) This devatâ was born from the body of Brahmah in the shape of a woman. (Śloka 17, Chapter 53, Droha Parva).

(2) Brahmah gave the work of destruction to Mrtyu. When she got the work she wept aloud. (Śloka 21, Chapter 257, Śatî Parva).

(3) The goddess of Mrtyu once did severe penance. (Śloka 17, Chapter 54, Droha Parva).

(4) Brahmah assured the goddess of death that any destruction by her would not be deemed as a sin. (Śloka 44, Chapter 54, Droha Parva).

(5) The terrible strength of Mrtyu-devatâ is described in Chapter 61, Śatî Parva, Mahâbhârata.

MUCUKUNDA. A celebrated King of the Solar dynasty.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Vînu — Brahmah — Marici — Kûlyapa — Vivasvan — Vaiavasvam Manu — Ikavâku — Susudhâ — Purâjâya (Kakutstha) — Anenas — Purtulâsa — Prajasenajit — Yuvanâ — Mandhâtâ — Mucukunda. Mandhâtâ got three sons named Ambaris, Mucukunda and Purûkutu and fifty daughters and all the fifty were married to a sage named Sambhâri.

2) How Mucukunda attained salvation. (For the story see para 72, under Indra).

3) Other details.

(i) Mucukunda had a daughter named Candramukhi. She was married to Sobhâna, son of Candrasena. Once, when Sobhana came to his wife’s house it was an Ekadâsî day and all were observing fasting and so Sobhana also did so. The next day Sobhana was seen living dead. The soul of Sobhana went to the valley of the mountain of Mandara and started enjoying heavenliness. One day a pilgrim from the country of Mucukunda named Sanskarâma met the soul of Sobhana and coming to know that it was the son-in-law of their King he started making enquiries about him. Sobhana then said that all his happiness was due to his observing the Ekādāsti Vrata. On hearing the gladdening news about her husband Candramukhi became happy. (Chapter 61, Bhāga 1, Padma Purāṇa).

(ii) This Rājarṣi shines in the court of Yama. (Śloka 21, Chapter 8, Sābhā Parva).

(iii) Once being greatly pleased with him Kubera offered him all the worlds as gift. But Mucukunda refused to accept it saying that he would enjoy only what was earned by him by his own efforts. (Śloka 97, Chapter 132, Udyoga Parva).

(iv) Once Mucukunda just to try the might of Kubera attacked him. The demons sent by Kubera defeated him. He then meditated on Vaiśāhu and he was able to defeat the army of asuras of Kubera. (Śloka 4, Chapter 74, Sānti Parva).

(v) Once Parśurāma gave dharmopadēśa (instructions on morality, piety etc.) to Mucukunda. (Śloka 7, Chapter 143, Sānti Parva).

(vi) Once the King of Kāmboja gave him a sword and he gave that sword to Marutta. (Śloka 77, Chapter 166, Sānti Parva).

(vii) He believed in making gifts of cows. (Śloka 23, Chapter 26, Āgni Purāṇa).

(viii) Mucukunda hated eating flesh. (Śloka 61, Chapter 115, Anuśasana Parva).

(ix) Mucukunda is listed among those kings who are worthy of being remembered morning and evening. (Śloka 54, Chapter 165, Anuśasana Parva).

MUDĀVARTA. A King born in the line of Hehya kings. (Śloka 13, Chapter 76, Udyoga Parva).

MUDĀGALA I. A country of ancient Bhārata. This country was once conquered by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Śloka 16, Chapter 11, Drona Parva).

MUDĀGALA II. A serpent born of the family of Takṣaka. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarwasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 10, Chapter 27, Adī Parva).

MUDĀGALA III. (MAUDGALYA). A sage of Purānic fame.

1) Mudgala and Durvāśa. Mudgala had never been provoked even once by anger. Durvāśa once came to the āśrama of Mudgala in Kurukṣetra where he was living on alms received by begging. Durvāśa came naked. Mudgala gave all that he got that day to Durvāśa. He tore his own heart’s content and smeared on his naked body what remained after his meal. Mudgala never got angry. This continued for days together and not for once did Mudgala get angry. Durvāśa was immensely pleased with this behaviour of Mudgala and he offered to send him to heaven with his body. Devas came with a Vimāna at once. Mudgala after enquiring about the conveniences and luxuries of heaven refused to go. (Chapter 261, Vana Parva).

2) Other details

(i) Mudgala, who was well versed in the Vedas, was a priest in the Sarvasatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 9, Chapter 53, Adī Parva).

(ii) Mudgala visited Bhima lying on his bed of arrows. (Śloka 9, Chapter 47, Adī Parva).

(iii) Once Satadātmanā gave Mudgala a golden house. (Śloka 21, Chapter 137, Anuśasana Parva).

(iv) Once the King of Cola conducted a Yāga making Mudgala the chief priest. (Chapter 130, Part IV, Padma Purāṇa).

MUDGARA PĀRNAKA. A serpent of the family of Katyāya. (Śloka 13, Chapter 103, Udyoga Parva).

MUDGARAPINDAKA. A serpent born to Kauśi of Katayapaprājapati. (Śloka 9, Chapter 35, Adī Parva).

MUDITA Wife of the Agni named Saha. (Śloka 1, Chapter 222, Vana Parva).

MUDRĀŚ. When he recites the mantras a Mātrika should use different kinds of gestures with his hands to suit the recital. They are called Mudrās. The Mudrās in general are given below:

The first mudrā is called Anjalimudrā. Anjali means a cavity formed by folding the hands and joining the open hands together. If the hands thus folded are placed on the breast it becomes a Vāndini mudrā. The hands should be placed on the breast with a slight slant to the left for Vāndini mudrā. The third mudrā is called Ārddhva mudrā. Hold the left hand first in such a way that the thumb comes on the top and then with the fingers of the right hand bind the thumb of the left hand. The thumb of the right hand should also come to the top. This is called Ārddhva mudrā. The lowering of the left palm opened up is called Varāhā mudrā. (Chapter 26, Āgni Purāṇa).

MUKA I. A serpent born of the family of Takṣaka. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sasapastara of Janamejaya. (Śloka 9, Chapter 5, Adī Parva).

MUKA II. An asura. This demon once went to Arjuna who was engaged in penance in the forests. He had assumed the form of a boar and Arjuna killed him. At once Śiva appeared there in the guise of a forester and contended that the boar was killed by him. A quarrel ensued which ended in a fight between them. In the end Śiva appeared before Arjuna in his real form and granted him the viṣṇu Pāñcapatī. (See under Arjuna).

MUKA III. A Candāla devoted much to his parents. A Brahmana named Narottama went to this candāla to learn moral lessons from him. (Śrī-vyākhandi, Padma Purāṇa).

MUKHAKARAJI. A follower of Subrahmanya. (Śloka 29, Chapter 46, Sānya Parva).

MUKHAMANDIKĀ. One of the evil spirits tormenting infants. This is called Diti also. (Śloka 30, Chapter 21, Ādī Parva).

MUKHARA. A serpent of the family of Katyāya. (Śloka 16, Chapter 103, Udyoga Parva).

MUKHASECACA. A serpent born of the family of Dīrghārṣṭa. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarvasatra of Janamejaya. (Ādī Parva, Chapter 47, Śloka 16).

MUKTĀPHALAKETU. A Vidyāchāra youth. The story of this young man who was born to kill Vidyyudhavājya, a fire-brand of an asura, is told thus in Kathā-saritāgāra.

An eminent asura of name Vidyyutprabha performed penance to propitize Brahmā to get a son. As a result of the blessings of Brahmā he got a son invincible to the Devas. He was named Vidyyudhavājya. Even from boyhood he was very brave and dashing. Once when he saw some demons standing guard to protect the asura family he said "At present our country is being protected by the hands of others. I shall, therefore, perform penance and obtain means to remove this disgrace. I will conquer our enemies." Vidyyuddhvaja went straight to the forests and performed penance to propitiate Brahmā. When the austerities became severe, he was fasting without break and the whole world became excited due to anxiety. So Brahmā appeared before him in person and gave him many divine weapons like Brahmiṣṭra. For Brahmiṣṭra the only counter-missile was Paṭuṣṭaṇa and so Brahmā warned him that it should be used only when it was found absolutely necessary.

Vidyuddhavajā became furious with the possession of such divine weapons and started for Indraloka with his father and his army to conquer Indra. He knew that Indra was ready to face him with a big army headed by Candraketu and Padmaśekhaṇa. The battle that ensued was very grim. Even Brahmā and Rudra came to see the fight. In a combat with Indra, Vidyuddhavajā was killed. Vidyuddhavajā saw his father killed, got furious and sent Brahmiṣṭra against Indra who in turn opposed it with Paṭuṣṭaṇa. Vidyuddhavajā fainted. Devas sounded the trumpets of victory and left the place.

After some time Vidyuddhavajā awoke from his swoon and lamented thus to those of his men who were around him: "My tapobala (strength resulting from penance) was of no use. I have deserted to die fighting against Indra. I do not want to return to a country where my father is not alive. On hearing this his aged master pointed out to him his mistake in having used the Brahmiṣṭra unthinkingly.

Vidyuddhavajā decided to attain more powers and so he went to the base of the Himalayas to perform penance by remaining in the weapon of Vidyuddhavajā. At once a voice from the air commanded, "Take away Indra from the battlefield. It is dangerous to keep him there." Vāyu came and carried him away swiftly. When Indra awoke from fainting he went to Brahmiṣṭra with all the other devas.

Vidyuddhavajā established himself in Amavāṣyā, the capital city of Indra and lived there enjoying his life as Indra. In the meantime Candraketu, King of the Viśvākuras was sitting in Vāyulokā musing thus, "How long should we remain thus displaced from our traditions? There is no waning of the power of Vidyuddhavajā. My friend Padmaśekhaṇa, King of Gandharvas, has gone to Śiva pura to perform penance. I do not know whether he has been blessed by god. Anyhow I will act after hearing from him.

As his musings came to an end Padmaśekhaṇa himself appeared before him and said: "I have come to tell you the glad news that Śiva told me. Śiva said "Son, do not grieve. You will get your country back. You will get a son and a daughter. They will be top-ranking men in all activities. The husband of your daughter will kill Vidyuddhavajā." A happy Candraketu went to Kailāsa with his wife Muktāvalī and started penance. Padmaśekhaṇa went and mentioned to the devas all that had happened. The devas then went to Mahāvīṣṇu and told him of the boons which Vidyuddhavajā had received from Śiva and how he was ruling Indraloka then. After hearing them patiently Vīṣṇu said that only Śiva could do anything in that matter. They all then went to the temple of Śivāvara and sat there meditating on Śiva.

In the meantime Bhagavān appeared before Candraketu and blessed him and said he would get a very valorous son who would kill Vidyuddhavajā and restore Devaloka to the devas. But after that he would be born as a man on earth by a curse. Padmaśekhaṇa daughter of a Gandharva King, would by the strength of her penance release him from the curse and help him to get his original state as a Gandharva. He would then marry Padmaśekhaṇa and remain as emperor of the Vidyuddhāras for ten kalpas together. Candraketu and wife came back to Vāyulokā.

At this time Śiva appeared in person to those sitting in the temple of Śivāvara and said that a son would be born to Candraketu from a part of his and that valorous youth would kill Vidyuddhavajā. Muktāvalī wife of Candraketu became pregnant at this time and soon delivered a son. He was named Muktāphalākeṭu. Even from boyhood he became an ardent devotee of Śiva and started performing penance to propitiate Śiva. Śiva appeared before him and gave him the secrets of many techniques in archery.

Vidyuddhavajā was once bathing in a river when muddy waters flowed from up the river and the arrogant demon sent a servant to find out the cause thereof. When he went up by the shores he saw an ox and an elephant bathing in the river. The demon sent his servants to capture the ox and elephant. Śiva and Indra, the elephant was the famous Airāvata. He came back and intimated to Vidyuddhavajā what he saw. The demon then ordered his people to bring the culprits to his side. But the Vāhanas killed those who went to capture them and then they went to their masters, Śiva and Indra. Hearing about this audacity of the demon-chief the Devas challenged the asuras to a fight. This time the army of the devas was led by Muktāphalākeṭu.

A Gandharva princess named Padmaśekhaṇi grew up to be a beautiful maiden at that time. She was in love with Muktāphalākeṭu. Padmaśekhaṇi was one day plucking flowers from a pond in the Gandharva land thinking about Muktāphalākeṭu who had gone to war against the asuras. A demon who was going to eat fish in the battle-field of the devas and asuras saw Padmaśekhaṇi, took her and went up. Muktāphalākeṭu coming to know of this went up with her and got back Padmaśekhaṇi who was struggling in the hands of the demoness like streaks of lightning among clouds. Then he asked her maids about her and they said, "She is the daughter of the Gandharva King Padmaśekhaṇa. Padmaśekhaṇa is her name. She is unmarried. But she is attracted to the son of Candraketu named Muktāphalākeṭu, who is born to destroy Vidyuddhavajā. She has come here to practice penance for the success of her father and Muktāphalākeṭu in this war between devas and asuras."

Padmaśekhaṇi recognised Muktāphalākeṭu from the words of his followers. But the latter had to go back to Devaloka under instructions from Indra. The Devakura war became fierce. By the valour and skill of Muktāphalākeṭu many of the asuras were killed. The war was won. Muktāphalākeṭu was given a grand reception at devaloka.
and was then sent back. Muktāpahalaketu did not seem to be happy and everybody thought that it might be due to his having killed Vidyuddhavaya. But the real cause was his separation from Padmāvati.

A sorrow-stricken Padmāvati sent her female companion Manoharikī to the country of Vidyuddhavaya to inquire about Muktāpahalaketu. What she saw there was a sad Muktāpahalaketu plining to see Padmāvati. Both now understood each other and Manoharikī returned with presents for Padmāvati from Muktāpahalaketu.

At that time Muktāpahalaketu went to see a Mahārāja named Tapodhana. Disregarding the objections of the disciple Drīghavrama who stood guard outside the āśrama Muktāpahalaketu entered the āśrama with his friend. Drīghavrama followed them. When they entered the āśrama they found the āśrama empty and at once Drīghavrama cursed them both to be born on earth as men. Padmāvati fainted when she heard the news.

When she regained her consciousness she started practising austerities sitting in a temple devoted to Gauri, wife of Siva. She meditated on her husband Muktāpahalaketu in his life on earth and performed penance to propitiate Siva. By the grace of Siva Muktāpahalaketu got his original life and he married Padmāvati and led a happy married life. (Tarāgī 2, Padmāvatālambhaka, Kālāsārītāgīrī)

MUKULA. A King of the dynasty of Pūru. Mukula, Srījaya, Byahadiso, Yavinara and Krimila were the sons of King Bāhyaśv. All these five are known as Paścālas. Of these the family of Mukula comprised of Maukulya. Mukula got a son named Paścāla. (Chapter 201, Agni Purāṇa.)

MUKUṬA. A Kṣatriya family. It was in this family that the wicked King Vīgāhāna was born. (Chapter 16, Chapter 74, Udēgā Purāṇa.)

MUKUṬIA. A follower of Subrahmanya. (Chapter 23, Chapter 46, Sānya Purāṇa.)

MŪLAKA, A son of Kumbhakarṇa. Mūlaka was born on Mula day and Kumbhakarṇa deceasing that day and the constellation inauspicious threw the baby away. The abandoned child was brought up by honey-bees giving the baby honey. When Mūlaka grew up he became a mighty demon who always tormented people. He was killed by Sītā with the help of Śrī Rama. (Ananda, Ramāyana, Rāyākānda.)

MUMUCU. A sage who lived in Dakśināḥārata. (Chapter 165, Vērī 39, Anūṭhana Purāṇa.)

MUNDA I. A warrior of the country of Mundā. In the great battle the Mundas were present in the Kaurava's army. (Chapter 9, Chapter 56, Bhīṣma Purāṇa.)

MUNDA II. An asura. (See under Gandhamūndas.)

MUNḌAKA. A forest. During his exile Śrī Rāma entered this great forest of Mundaka and paid homage to the sage Agartya. (Aranya Kanda, Kambha Ramāyana.)

MUNḌAVEDĀNGA. A serpent born of the family of Bhṛtarṣa. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasētra of Janamejaya. (Chapter 17, Chapter 57, Ādi Purāṇa.)

MUNDĪ. A female follower of Subrahmanya. (Chapter 25, Chapter 55, Sānya Purāṇa.)

MUNI I. The mother of the Yakṣas. It is stated that Kaṭavaprapajāpati begot of his wife Muni, the Yakṣas. (Chapter 19, Agni Purāṇa.) The Gandharvas also were born of Muni. She gave birth to sixteen Gandharvas of which the first was named Bhimaśena. (Śloka 42, Chapter 65, Ādi Purāṇa.)

MUNI II. Son of a Vācī named Ahar (i.e. Ahā). (Śloka 23, Chapter 66, Ādi Purāṇa.)

MUNI III. Son of Kuru of the Puru line of kings. Kuru begot of his wife Vākini five sons named Avāvān, Abhīyānī, Cīdrārātha, Janamejaya and Muni. (Śloka 50, Chapter 94, Ādi Purāṇa.)

MUNI IV. One of the seven sons of a King named Dyutimān. (Mārkandeyā Purāṇa 5, 24.)

MUNDĪŚE. A country in the island of Kuṇḍūka. (Śloka 22, Chapter 12, Bhīṣma Purāṇa.)

MUNIVIRYA. One of the eternal Viśve Devās. (Śloka 31, Chapter 91, Anūṭhana Purāṇa.)

MURJA. An ancient sage of Bhārata. This sage respected Yuddhishthira very much. (Śloka 23, Chapter 25, Vana Purāṇa.)

MURJAŚE. A Kṣatriya King of ancient Bhārata. He was the re-birth of an asura called Nācendra. (Śloka 21, Chapter 67, Ādi Purāṇa.) The Pāndavas had sent an invitation to this King to participate in the great battle. (Śloka H, Chapter 4, Udyoga Purāṇa.)

MURJAŚE. A Kṣatriya King of ancient Bhārata. He was a member of the court of Yuddhishthira. (Chapter 23, Chapter 4, Sāhya Purāṇa.)

MURJAŚE. A place on a mount in the Himālayas. Rudra once practised penance sitting on this mount. (Śloka 4, Chapter 122, Śaṅti Purāṇa.)

MURJĀVĀN. A mountain. This is in the range of the Himālayas. Paramārṣa performs his frequent penances at this place. Siva freely offers for pleasure with his army of goblins in the caves and shades of trees in this place. Everyday the Sādhyas, Rūdras, Vīvādevātas, Vānus, Yānas, Varunos, Bhūses, devils, Nāsanyakas, Aśvins, Gandharvas, celestial maidens, Yakṣas, Devarśis, Aśūs, Marus, and Yuddhānas come to this mountain to worship Siva. There is neither heat nor cold here. Greying of hairs or rugosity is unknown here. There is no hunger or thirst either. None die here. On the sides of this mountain gold lies spread like sunlight. (Verse 1-12 Alvamedha Purāṇa, Chapter 8.)

MUNIĀVAṬA I. A holy place of pilgrimage devoted to Siva in the neighbourhood of Kuruṇaka. If one resides here for one night one will get the position of Ganapatī. (Śloka 22, Chapter 83, Vana Purāṇa.)

MUNIĀVAṬA II. A holy place of pilgrimage devoted to Siva on the banks of the river Ganges. If a man goes to this place and does circumambulation of the idol there singing songs in praise of Siva he would get the position of Ganapatī and if he bathes in the Ganges river also, he would be absolved of all sins. (Śloka 67, Chapter 85, Vana Purāṇa.)

MUNIĀVAṬA. A place on the Himālayas. Once Parāśurāma went to this place and calling the sages there instructed them to keep their tufts knotted together. (Śloka 3, Chapter 112, Śaṅti Purāṇa.)

MUNNU (THREE). The importance of the number three is indicated below:

1) Āṁśitva (Three agnis). The three agnis are Daksīṇa, Gārhapattya and Avasīnaya. Of these the first is in the shape of a semi-circle, the second in the shape of a full circle and the third, a square.

52) Sārṣṭrāstra. The different kinds of vowel are three: in number namely Hrasya (short), Dirgha (long) and Pluta (prolonged). Udātta, Anudātta and Svartā are also three different kinds of accent, i.e. the acute grave and circumflexed.

MURA I. A ferocious asura.

1) Birth and acquisition of boon. Mura was the asura born to Kaśyapa-prajapati of his wife Dantu. Once Mura was shocked to find the huge heap of dead bodies of the asuras killed by the devas. Mura got afraid of death and did penance for years to propitiate his grandfather and Brahmā appeared before him and asked him to name the boon he wanted. Mura said "Lord, anybody whom I touch with my hands in a battle, even if they are immortal, should die." Brahmā the father of the universe granted him the boon. (Chapter 60, Vāmanā Purāṇa).

2) Family life. Mura became the guard of the boundaries of Prāgyojitasa, the capital city of Naraka-sura. Mura went four thousand sons. Of these ten were posted to guard the palace of the queen. Mura performed penance and obtained boons. He fenced the boundary of Prāgyojitasa with six thousand ropes and arrested the approach of the enemies. These ropes were known in Purāṇas as the Māraṇapāṇas. (Chapter 38, Dākṣiṇāṭya Pātha, Sābhā Parva)

3) Dugṣṭha. (Conquest of the quarters). Mura who became arrogant by the power of the boons he possessed went to Mahāśura and challenged the Yāsas and Gondharvas to a fight. But none dared to fight with him. Then he went to Amāra-vātī and challenged Indra. Indra also did not accept the challenge. Then he entered Amāra-vātī with a raised hand. Nobody stopped him. Going to the palace of Indra he said "Oh, thousand-eyed deva, fight with me or leave this place". On hearing it Indra left his place and came to earth. Then Mura took possession of Aīra-vata and Vajra. He lived in devāna with Maya, Tāra and other dānavas enjoying the luxuries there. Along with his wife, son and other devas Devendra established himself on the southern bank of Kālindī river.

Then one day Mura-sura came to the earth on the Aīra-vata and landed at a plain. He struck the inner Sarayā where Rāhu a king of the solar dynasty was conducting a yāga. Mura-sura went to Rāhu and said "Come on, fight with me or you should stop this yāga. You should not worship the devas." Then the great and brilliant Mātravātita said, "Don't fight, what use is there in conquering men of the earth? You should win against those who are already defeated. If you want to fight go and challenge Aītaka, the god of Death. Oh, king of asuras, that day of Aītaka would never obey your orders. If you conquer him you will have defeated all the world." On hearing the words of Vāsudha, Mura started to fight with Dharma-rāja. Yama on hearing that Mura was coming to fight him went to Mahāvīra on his buffalo as he knew he would kill him. Mahāvīra asked him to send Mura to him. Yama returned to his place and went to Mura there ready to fight. Yama told him that he would do whatever Mura ordered him and then Mura said "You should stop killing people or I will chop your head off." Dharma-rāja replied "Mura, if you had been the person who had appointed me for this job I would have willingly followed your agreement under control of somebody else," Mura asked "Who is the person superior to you? Tell me, I shall surely defeat him." Yama said "There is an individual called Visnu holding a Cakra and a Gada in his hands living in Śvetāśvāra. He is the person who has appointed me." Mura anxiously asked "Where is his abode? I shall go there myself to conquer him." And the asura replied "If you go to the ocean of Milk. It is there that Visnu, the omnipresent protector of the universe is residing." Mura said "Well, I am going to him. But you should in the meantime discontinue your work of killing people." Yama replied "Go and win him. If you defeat him I shall abide by your instructions." Mura went to fight Mahāvīra. It was at this time that Śri Kṛṣṇa the incarnation of Mahāvīra, attacked the capital city of Naraka-sura, Prāgyojita. Mura went to the help of Naraka-sura. The boundary of the city was well-fenced with ropes but Kṛṣṇa cut them all and removed the barrier. In the fight that ensued both Naraka-sura and Mura were killed by the celebrated weapon Sudarśana of Kṛṣṇa. From then Kṛṣṇa got the name of Muraśaṃkha. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

MURA II. Son of Tālajāngha, an asura born of a part of Brahmā. The capital of this valorous Mura-sura was in the city of Candrasvatī.

Mura-sura who possessed the brilliance of Brahmā was a nightmare to the devas. Once Mura-sura fought against Yāvuda and in the fierce fight that took place Mura-sura was defeated and he ran away from the battlefield and started sleeping in a cave named Sumbhavati in the neighborhood of Badarkāśrama. Mura went there too. Then Mahāvīra created a Devī through his Yogamāyā and made her kill Mura.
Pleased at the slaughter of Mura, Vigna blessed her and said, "From today onwards you will be known as 'Eka-dati.' You will be capable of wiping off all sins on earth." (Padmapurana, Utsarakhandya 36, 50-80).

MURA III. (MURU). A Yadava King. He was one of the neighbors of Jarasandha. The daughter of this Yadava king called Kukumata was married to Ghatotkaca. (12, 13, Sahiba Parva and Skanda Parva).

MURASAVA. A country of ancient Bharata. A King called Bhagadatta was the King of this country. (Skota 14, Chapter 14, Sahiba Parva).

MURARI. A Sanskrit dramatist who lived in the 8th century A.D. in India. His father was Bhattacharvadhamana. Murari is the author of the drama 'Anagha-righava.' This drama has eight acts. Murari has mentioned in his works about Anagha-righava who lived in 700 A.D. and Ramakara who lived in 750 A.D. It is therefore, surmised that Murari must have lived during the later part of the 8th century. In the writing of dramas Murari has excelled the Mahaviraracita of Bhavabhuti and his verses indicate he had the style of Mihira.

MURUKA. A river. Agni originated from this river. (Skota 25, Chapter 224, Vana Parva).

MCRTI. One of the thirteen daughters of Dakaprapajapatiti. This girl was married to Dharma. Nara and Narayana are the sons born to Murti of Dharma. (4th Skanda, Bhagavata).

MOSAKA. An ancient place of habitation in Bharata. (Skota 56, Chapter 9, Bhima Parva).

MUSAKA. (MUSIKODA). A serpent born to a Kalyappapajapatiti of his wife Kadrini. This serpent sits in the court of Varuna and worships him. Once Narada introduced this naga to Maitri. (Skota 10, Chapter 9, Sahiba Parva and Skota 14, Chapter 103, Udyoga Parva).

MUSALA. A Brahmagiri son of Visvamitra. (Skota 53, Chapter 4, Anusasana Parva).

MUSIKA. An ancient merchant. In the Kathappanambaka of Kashiinarasigara a story is told to demonstrate that even without any capital, an ingenious and industrious man can earn money.

A merchant got this name by means of his industry. Once a poor man of no resources went to the house of a great merchant named Visvikhila. He was then admonishing a young man of his own caste. The merchant was saying, "See, here is a dead rat on the ground. A clever man would earn money by using this as a capital. To you I have given money for business on several occasions. Not only that you have not increased it but also you have lost it."

The poor man who went to him requested the merchant to give him the dead rat. Visvikhila greatly amused at the request gave him the rat. A rich man bought it for his cat to eat and gave him instead two measures of Bengali grain. He roasted it and made it palatable and then put a pot of water outside the city gates and sat under a tree on the road-side. Wood-cutters were passing that way carrying loads and he sold the roasted grain to them who purchased it with eagerness to ease their weariness. They gave him in exchange firewood and in the evening he took it to the market and sold it. With the money he purchased more Bengali grain and continued the trade as before and after a few days he purchased from them a great stock of firewood. Suddenly there were heavy rains and there was a scarcity of firewood in the market and he sold his stock for good price. With the money thus received he purchased some goods and started a grocery shop. Gradually his business increased and he became a big merchant.

MUSHIKA STRI. See under Pabcatata.

MUSHTIKA. A slave who was a servant of Kaptha. This asura was killed by Balabhadra. (See under Kryata).

NA. In Agni Purana, Chapter 346, the meaning of this syllable is given as 'vrnda' (collection) and 'Buddha'.

NABHA. A brother of Ikavuku, who had ten brothers named Nabha, Saryati, Diju, Dhrasta, Nariyanta, Nabhaga, Pradha, Kavi, Karuna and Vasumati. (Bhagavata, Skanda 8).

NABHA. A brother of Ikavuku. The famous Ambarsita was Nabhaga's son. After conquering all the worlds he ruled the kingdom strictly along the path of truth and righteousness. (Vana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 12). In the evening of his life Nabhaga gifted away the whole land to Brahmanas. Since he could not leave Nabhaga, Bhimdevi herself assumed physical form and went to him on the occasion. This emperor never consumed meat. He lives in Brahmaloka according to Chapter 115, Anusasana Parva. (Santu Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 124).

NABHAGARISHAA. A son of Vaivasavata Manu. (Agni Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 17).

NABHAKAN. An androgynous woman in South India. (M.B. Brihas Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 59).

NABHASVAYAN. A son of Narakasura. Tanara, Antariksa, Dravanika, Vani, Vihavasiva, Nabhavan and Arauna were the seven prominent sons of Narakasura. (Bhagavata, Skanda 10).

NABHODA. An eternal Vivasvata. (A class of gods concerned in the Sradh offerings to the Manes). (M.B. Anusasana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 34).

NACIKA. One of the Brahmagiri sons of Visvamitra. (Anusasana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58).

NACIKETIKA (NACIKETA). A sage of olden days. Son of Uddalaki, he lived for a long time in the Jatramas while his father, being in his old age and unable to perform vajpati. Naciketa, who was once sent into the forest for flowers etc. did not find them anywhere there and he returned to the Jatramas without them. Angry at his father, he cursed him to be taken to Yamaloka. Accordingly he went to Yamaloka. He waited at the gates for a long time to see Yama, who appeared at last when he sang the praises of Yama. The advice then given by Yama to Naciketa forms the Kathopanisad. After studying the advice he returned to his father, who was pleased to find him a great scholar. (Anusasana Parva, Chapter 71).

NACIKETAS. A famous hermit. Kathopanisad is the exhortation given by Yamadeva (God of Death) to this hermit. There is a story to substantiate this statement. The father of Naciketa was the hermit Vajrafalas. This hermit gave as alms, cows which had grown lean by old age and lack of food, at the time of sacrifices. Naciketas felt grieved at this action of his father. He went to his father and sadly asked him, "Father, to whom are you going to give at the question of the son, and replied; "You are to be given to Yama."

On hearing these cruel words of his father, the boy went to the palace of Yama who had been away. For three days and nights the boy waited there without food and drink. When Yama returned the boy was happy and cheerful and Yama was pleased with him. Yama promised the boy three boons and asked him what boon he wanted. The first boon he asked for was, "Give me the boon that father will be pleased with me and not angry with me." The second was, "Advise me how to attain heaven." The third was, "Tell me the solution of the mystery, whether the soul remains after death." Yama granted the first two boons and said to him, "Boy, this is a difficult question. So ask for another boon such as long life, power over the world, all the pleasures of the world." The boy replied: "The things you have promised to give me are useless things because after a while the organs of sense will become fragile. The life also will end. So, please tell me. I want the answer to my question." Being greatly pleased at the reply of the boy Dharmadeva expounded to him about the impermanence of the body and the significance of things regarding God Almighty. (Kathamapisad.)

NACINA. An ancient region of the country mentioned in Chapter 38, Sabhā Parva.

NADA. See under Pāpu.

NADAGIRI. An intelligent elephant with discriminative power. Mention is made about this elephant on several occasions in Kathāsaritgāra.

NADICAKRA. The ten nāḍis where the yogi in meditation retains the five prānas form the nāḍicakra. At the bottom of the nābhi (nābhikanda) innumerable nāḍis or nerves originate or sprout up. 72,000 such nāḍis exist at the centre of the nābhi (nāvel). The whole body is filled with these nāḍis spread out in parallel and horizontal positions, and they exist in the form of circles entwined with one another. Ten nāḍis are prominent amongst them, i.e. Idā, Piṅgala, Śūṣṇā, Gāndhārī, Hṛṣijāvā, Prāṇa, Yāsā, Alambūsā, Kuhā and Satyākāmi. Any defect or harm caused to any one of these ten nāḍis may lead even to death.

There are ten Vāyu (winds) in the body. The five Prānas called Prāṇa, Apāṇa, Śūṣṇā, Udāna and Vājra, and the five Vāyas called Nāgī, Kaṭa, Nāḍa, Devadatta and Dhanājaya together constitute the ten Vāyas. Prāṇa is the most important Vāyu. This vāyu does the emptying as well as the refilling of the other nine vāyas and thus sustains life. The prāṇavāyu has its existence ever in the chest of living beings and fills the body with air through breathing in, out, coughing etc. It depends on us and it is called Prāṇavāyu as it moves or travels with life.

Apāṇa leads vāyu downwards. It is Apāṇa which directs man's food downwards. Also it keeps in its fold urin and semen. This vāyu is called Apāṇa as its function is adhonaṇya (leading downwards) as mentioned above. Samānavaṇya conveys to the different parts in the body liquids, excreta, the things which living beings eat, drink and smell as also blood, bile, phlegm and vāta. Udāna causes the shivering of lips, flushing of face and eyes and excitement of joints etc. Vājra causes the limbs to be closed and stretched, and it excites diseases. Nāga exists in nauscea, Kāma in the bulging of the eyes Kṛkāla in food, Devadatta in yawning and Dhanājaya in sound. Dhanājaya does not quell the body even after death.

Life, Prāṇa, travels through the nāḍicakra depending on ten different courses, i.e. Saukrānti, Viṣṇu, Ahar, Rātri, the two ayanas (Daksīṇa and Uttarā), Adhīvaśa Śūra, Īnātra and Dhanā. Īnātra means hiccough, Rāja cough, Dhanā breathing and Adhīvaśa yawning. Of the two ayanas, Uttarā and Daksīṇa, the former is the course towards the left and the latter towards the right and Viṣṇu is the centre between the two. Saukrānti is the change of position of Viṣṇu. On his left side of the human body is the nāḍi called Idā, on the right side Piṅgala and between the two Śūṣṇā. The prāṇa above these three nāḍis is Ahar i.e. day and that below is Apāṇa, i.e. night. Thus every vāyu assumes ten different forms.

There are various kinds of prāṇāyāma (control of breaths). Prāṇāyāma practised with the prāṇa contained in the centre of the body is called Čandrāgrahana; that which supersedes physical principles is called Sūryagṛhana. To fill the stomach with much as desired is Pārakṣiṣṭāyāna. To remain like a full pot all breathing being cut off and having closed all the openings—doors—of the body is Kumbhāka. The yogi practising Kumbhāka should direct the vāyu upwards in one breath, and that practice is called Rācaka. He who does it should be conversant with the yogas of inhalation. Erudite people call it Japa, because when it is practised Śiva resides in one's own body and moves within Śiva, the King of yogins, chants the mantra (Japa) 2,600,000 times within the course of one day and one night. The soul chants the mantra—Gāyatri—which Brahmi, Viṣṇu and Śiva are the presiding deities, and that is called Ajapa. He who chants Ajapa will have no future births. Prāṇāyāma should be followed by Kundalininavaga, Kundalinī meaning promordial force. The force is a compound of Sun, fire and Moon and its seat is the heart, where it exists in the form of a sprout. Since creation is dependent upon this force power for creation should be invoked on it. The yogin should picture in his mind that nectar flows out of Kundalinī. He should also realise that the soul within the body possesses form while pure soul is formless. He should address this soul as 'Hamsa Hamsa.' Hamsa means Śiva. Śiva exists and possesses energy as the body just as oil is in the gingelly seed and fragrance in flower. Soul possessing form is of five kinds. Accordingly Brahmi's seat is the heart, Viṣṇu's the neck, Rudra's, the centre of the throat; Mahāvāra's the forehead; and Śiva's, the tip of the prayer. Soul without form is just contrary to the above. Its place is where the prāṇa ends. By prāṇāyāma the formless soul may be experienced. (Agri Parāśa, Chapter 214.)

NADIJA. An ancient King. In Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 15, it is mentioned that the Pāṇḍavas had sent an invitation to this King to take part in the Bhārata battle.

NADIJANGEHA I. A famous monk. It lives in the pond called Indradyumna as an external being, without death. (See under Indradyumna.)

NADIJANGEHA II. A kite, who was a son of Kaśyapa. A friend of Brahmi, it was known as Rājadharmaś as well. Nadijangha was once killed for food by an ungrateful brahmin. (For details see under Gantama V.)
NADVALA (a). The wife of Manu, the son of Cakrāva Manu. Ten sons named Čru, Pāru, Satadyumna, Tapavatī, S atravik, Kavi, Agniṣṭha, Atriṭra, Sūryyān and Atriṃagāya were born to Manu by Nadvala. (Agrā Parva, Chapter 16).

10. The daughter of Prajāpati Varuṇa. Manu married Varuṇa. Ten sons named Varuṇa, Śatadyumna, Tapavatī, S atravik, Sūryyān, Sutrāṇa, Atriṃagāya, Atriṭra, Sūryyān and Atriṇān were born to Nadvala from Manu. (Agrā Parva, Chapter 1, Chapter 13).

NAGA III. An asura and demon. (See under Nāgāsura).

NAGA IV. A class of serpents. It is stated in Valmiki Rāmāyana, Chanda Kuntī, Sarga 14, that of the ten daughters of Kīrtikā, the nagas and nāgas, Kālidīth, the Vṛinda (both are serpents) came into the world.

NAGADAṬTA. One of the hundred sons of Dravyastra. The Nāgadatta was killed by Bhūmaśena. (Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Stanza 197).

NAGAHAṆAṆARIṬHA. An ancient holy place of bath, situated on the south side of the river Saradvati. Vaiśaisya says here it was at this holy place that Vasiṣṭha was anointed as the King of the Nāgas. (M. Śāya Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 10).

NAGAVIPA. A region inside the island Sudarsana. This region has the shape of the ear of the hare in the Moon. (M.B. Hālīra Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 35).

NAGAṆASA. The husband of the Nāgā or Pitāla. Vasiṣṭha (Māravi Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 60). There is a pond in Nagadatta and a drink in its water bestows the strength of a thousand elephants. (Asta Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 68). Pitāla is thousands of miles away from earth. Its area exceeds a thousand yojanas and it is surrounded by magnificent forts studded with gems. The steps at the entrance of the fort are also decorated with gold and gems. There are beautiful gardens, fountains and singing birds in Pitāla. Its outer doors are hundred yojanas in length and five yojanas in breadth. (Avanveda Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 37).

NAGAPURA. A place situated on the basin of the river Gomati in Nambudurā. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śant Parva, Chapter 303, Stanza 3, that in this place, a Naga named Vātu originally lived.

NAGARĀ. In ancient days there were rules and principles regulating the construction of a city. The name "garā" could be applied to them only if they conformed to the rules and principles in vogue. The principles and rules of the erection of a proper city are given below:

One yojana or a half of land should be selected as the site of the city. The planning of the city should be commenced after worshipping the deity of Vasiṣṭha. There should be four main gates on the four sides, East, West, North and South. The South gate should be in the position of Gadāhavāpada, West gate in the place of Varuṇa, the North gate in the place of Soma (Moon) and the East gate in the place of Sūryyāpada (the position of the Sun). On the south side of the gate should be wide enough for elephants etc. to pass through. The main gates should be seven rods wide.

When the city is completed goldsmiths should be settled in the Agni corner (i.e. South East). The craftsmen who live by dancing etc. should have their houses on the south side of the city. The houses of actors, those who extract oil, fisherman etc. should be in the corner of Nīrtri (South West). Sheds for chariots, weapons, swords etc. should be on the western side. Dealers in liquor, carpenters, blacksmiths, masons etc. and servants should have houses in the Vaiśāya corner i.e. North West. The houses of Brahmins, hermits, sages, saints, and such others should be on the north side. In the Jāma corner (North East) merchants of vegetables and on the eastern side, the authorities of the army should have their houses.

The army (Infantry, cavalry, chariots and elephants) should be put up in the Agni corner. On the south the goddesses who are protectors of women-folk should be consecrated. Archers should live in the Nīrtri corner. Most honourable people, Treasury officers, Leaders of the people, Brahmin groups and such others should have their abodes on the western side. So also Kṣatriyas should have their houses on the eastern side, Vaiṣāyas on the south and Śūdras on the west of the city. Vaiṣāyas and horses should be placed on all four sides. The army should be placed thus. The movable wealth should be placed on the west, the store and the funeral place on the south. The cattle etc. should be kept on the west, farmers on the north, and the outcastes on the corners. This should be the plan of a city as well as that of villages too.

On the east fort-gate of cities and villages Vaiṣāvānas and Śri Bhagavat should be consecrated. They will confer prosperity upon those who visit them. Temples dedicated to Gods should be erected on the western side facing the east. If temples are erected on the east they should face the west and those erected on the south should face the North. For the protection of the city, there should be temples dedicated to Indra, Vaiṣṇa and such other Gods. If there is no worshipping place in a city, a village, a fort, or a house, such places will be haunted by devils and troubled by diseases etc. If cities are built according to this plan they will afford both salvation and prosperity.

On the east there should be the house of Lakṣmi, in the Agni corner, the kitchen on the south, bedrooms in the Nīrtri corner the weapon-chamber, on the west the dining hall, in the Vaiśāya corner, the granary on the north, the treasury, and the place of worship in the Jāma corner.

Houses could be erected with four blocks, three blocks or only one block. Houses with four blocks could be made in two hundred and fifty-five ways by making changes in each block and the open verandas. Houses with three blocks are of four types; with two blocks are of five types; and houses of only one block are of four types. There are houses and cities with twenty-eight open verandas. There are fifty-five types of houses with four open verandas and seven open verandas. Houses with six open verandas and eight open verandas are of twenty types. In cities houses should have right open verandas (Agrā Parva, Chapter 105).

NAGARĀṆA. Minister of King Cīrāya. (For details see under Cīrāya).

(Udoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 9).

NAGASAṬA. The mountain where Pāṇḍu did tapas. along with Kunti, Madr and others. (Aï Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 47).

NAGAŚRI. Wife of King Dharmaśātta of Kumbha. Tārādattā was her daughter (See under Dharmaśātta).

NAGASTRA. A destructive weapon (arrow). The following story about the astra is told in the Yuddha Kāanda of Kamba Rāmāyaṇa.

In olden times there was a very powerful and mean asura called Naga. Brahma resorted to virulent black magic to kill Naga, and from the fire-pit arose a terrible goblin called Nāgapāśa. It was deputed to kill Naga and the Trimūrti followed it. Nāgapāśa went to the city of Nāgāsura called Viradhendra, ascended its tower and made a terrible noise the echo of which caused abortion in all the pregnant nāgas women. Many children fainted and many died. Nāgāsura deputed his army chief Adir Virasena with an army to kill the nāga goblin. At the sight of the army the goblin raised an other terrible cry, which blew off Visravana and his army, reducing them to powder. Then Nāgāsura’s minister with a big army attacked the goblin. But the minister was devoured by him, and the army annihilated. Enraged at this defeat of his minister, Nāgāsura attacked the goblin with an army of crores of soldiers. But, within seconds the goblin devoured the mighty army. At that point Nāgapāśa and Nāgāsura engaged themselves in a duel which lasted for years. Ultimately the goblin swallowed up Nāgāsura also. Then he went to the Trimūrti and saluted them. They granted him many boons, and Sīva, in excess of joy, wore it as one of the ornaments round his neck. Some time later Nāgapāśa set out on a tour to see the fourteen worlds, and Sīva specially instructed Nāgapāśa not to visit the Śivali island. He visited the various worlds earning all knowledge and started for mount Kailāsa. On his way he saw Śivali island, the abode of nāgas, and in violation of Sīva’s instructions, he entered the island. The nāgas there did not honour him and his false pride made him tremble with rage. Then the nāgas of the island told him thus: ‘We have a powerful enemy, who visits us every month, and unless we feed him sumptuously he will devour all of us for food. He is to come today, and if you are capable enough, you defeat and drive him off and save us. If you do so, we shall crown you as our King and honour you.’

The powerful enemy of the nāgas was Garuḍa and he came. All the nāgas ran off at his sight. Garuḍa then attacked the goblin Nāgapāśa, who was standing unperturbed before him. There being no chance of victory for the goblin he ran away and took refuge with Sīva. Garuḍa also followed him, and demanded of Sīva to return to him, his enemy, the goblin. Sīva told Garuḍa thus—‘If, in future he (the goblin) interferes with anybody connected with you, you may either punish or eat him. Do not do anything with him now’.

Garuḍa agreed to the above proposal of Sīva. From that day onwards Nāgapāśa lived in Vaikuṇtha entwined with nooses. He became the arrow called nāgapāśa or nāgāsra.

NAGATIRTHA I. A holy place situated on the boundary of Karuṣa. Those who drink the water of this bath will obtain the fruit of performing an Agniṣṭoma sacrifice. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 14).

NAGATIRTHA II. A holy place which is situated near Guniśvara or Kanakhala and which keeps up the memory of Kapila, the King of the Nāgas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 66).

NAGAVIṢHī. Daughter born to Yata, the daughter of Dakṣaprajapati. (Visnu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 15).

NAGAJIT. A Kaśtriya King. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Aï Parva, Chapter 37, Stanza 21 that this King was born from a portion of an asura called Ijapāda. This Nagajit who was the King of Guntahara was killed by Karna and his sons were defeated by Sṛt Kṛṣṇa. (Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapter 254 and Udyoga Parva, Chapter 43).

NAGAJIT II. An asura. This asura who had been the disciple of Prahlada took rebirth as a King named Subala. (Mahabharata, Aï Parva, Chapter 63, Stanza 11).

NAGODBBHEDA. A holy place near Vinatana tirtha. Saravati is supposed to dwell here in invisible form. He who bathes here will attain nāgala. (Vana Parva, Chapter 62, Verse 12).

NAHUSI A. A famous King of the Lunar dynasty.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Visnu in the following order—Brahma—Atma—Gandha—Buddha—Parāvatas Ayu-Nahusa.

2) Birth. Ayu, the son of Parāvatas, married the princess named Indumati (Svarabhakukutam). Nahusa was the son born to the couple, thanks to the blessing of the great hermit Dvaitera. Nahusa married Aṅkauṣandari, the daughter of Siva.

There is a story about the birth and marriage of Nahusa and Aṅkauṣandari in Padma Purāṇa as given below:

Once Siva and Parāvati were engaged in love-making in Kālāsa. Parāvati requested Siva to show her the best garden ever created by Brahma. Siva took her to Nandanaśana, where she saw the Kulp tree, which was beautiful all over, and asked Siva about its special features. Siva replied that anything asked of it would be granted by the Kulp tree. Parāvati made a request to the Kulp tree for a girl just for a test. Instantly a very beautiful girl was born from the tree. Parāvati named her Aṅkauṣandari and brought her up as her daughter. Once Parāvati gave her a boon that she would become the wife of King Nahusa of the Lunar family, who would be equal to India.

One day, when the beautiful Aṅkauṣandari was walking with celestial maidens in the Nandanaśana an asura named Hunḍa the son of Vipractiti, came there. The moment his eyes fell on Aṅkauṣandari he fell in love with her. The asura spoke to her of his love, and requested her to be his wife. Not only did she refuse his request but also told him that according to the boon given by Parāvati she would become the wife of Nahusa, the King of the Lunar dynasty. Hearing this Hunḍa smiled and said: ‘That righteous man named Nahusa is yet to be born in the Lunar dynasty. You will be much older than he. He will not suit you as he will be too young. So don’t waste your blooming youth. Come and enjoy life with me.’ But Aṅkauṣandari did not concede. Hunḍa was disappointed. So he began to think about ways to get her. He disappeared from there and reappeared in the guise of a beautiful woman. and told Alokasundari thus:—"Lady, I have taken a fast. Hunda has killed my husband. I am doing penance to return him. You may come to my hermitage on the banks of the Gaṅga."

Alokasundari believed these false words. She went with her. Both of them walked on and at last entered a palace. Then only did she understand that it was the palace of Hunda, who assumed his original form and tried to violate her chastity. Alokasundari became angry and vowed revenge that she would die at the hands of Nahuṣa, and ran away to Kāllās. Hunda was sad for two reasons. On the one hand he did not get Alokasundari and on the other hand he had incurred the curse that Nahuṣa would be his slayer. Now what was the way to get out of the trouble? He asked his minister Kampana to take Indumati, the wife of Āyu, by stealth and bring her to his palace. They decided to destroy Nahuṣa with the help of Indumati, in case it was not possible to carry her away. They waited for an opportunity.

Āyu was an emperor of righteousness. After the marriage, for a long time he was childless. Once he visited the hermit Dattātreya, in his hermitage. Dattātreya, who was the son of Ātri and the mostlearned and the holiest of all the hermits, was quite sensesless and red-eyed because of drinking, and without even the brahmaśirā, was playing with a young woman, seating her in his lap. His body was besmeared with sandalwood and ash and adorned with garlands and necklaces of pearls and he was surrounded by many women. The King seeing the divine hermit bowed and vowed around the face. The moment the hermit saw the King, he sat in deep meditation. This continued for a hundred years, at the end of which period, seeing the devotion of the King, he said, "Oh King! Why do you take this trouble, I have left off the customs and manners of Brahmins. I have no brahmaśirā (Brahmīnism). I am immersed in liquor, meat and women. So you had better go and serve another Brahmin."

At this word, all that the hermit said and requested him to bless him and that he might get a son. Finally the hermit ordered the King to bring meat and liquor in a skull. The King obeyed him. Dattātreya was pleased at the devotion and willingness to serve as a disciple and told the King that a son would be born to him; that the son would be a esoteric Devaitātra (Holy bats), that he would not be defeated by devas, āsuras, Kinnaras, gāntas, and Kaiśītīyas, that he would be the protector of his subjects and that he would be a great scholar in Vedas and Sāstras. Saying this he gave the King a fruit to be given to his wife. The King returned to his palace.

The King gave the fruit to his wife Indumati. She ate it and became pregnant. One night she gave birth to a son. When the servant-maid went out of the room of confinement Hunda entered into her body and went in. When all were asleep he took the child and ran to his palace at Kāllās. He gave the child to his wife Vipulā and asked her to make a sauce of the child for him. Vipulā gave the child to the servant woman to cook. With the rest of the cook she hid the child and prepared a sauce with some other flesh. The cook took the child to the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha and placed it at the door of the hermitage, in the night. At dawn Vasiṣṭha came out of the hermitage and seeing the child took it, named it Nahuṣa and brought him up.

The King and his wife Indumati cried for a long time over the loss of the child. At that time Nārada came there and told them that their son would return soon.

Nahuṣa was bringing Satītuss (butea-fuel) when he heard some devaśiras (heavenly singers) saying among themselves the history of Nahuṣa. Nahuṣa heard it. He told Vasiṣṭha all that he had heard. Vasiṣṭha told him all the stories from the beginning to his being kidnapped by Hunda. Nahuṣa was amazed at what he heard. He wanted to kill Hunda instantly. So he bowed before Vasiṣṭha and taking bow and arrow went away to kill Hunda.

Believing that he had eaten Nahuṣa, Hunda approached Alokasundari again and told her that he had actually eaten Nahuṣa. Alokasundari felt very sad when she heard this. At that time a Kinnara named Vidyudhārana and his wife came there. They consoled Alokasundari and told her that Nahuṣa was alive. He continued.

"Oh beautiful lady, that great sage will kill Hundaśūra and marry you, and live with you as an emperor in this world, as Śakra (Indra) in heaven. From Nahuṣa will be born to you a son named Yāṣṭi, who will be righteous, kind and loving towards his subjects and equal to Indra, and a hundred daughters who would be exceedingly beautiful and of very fine character. Then Nahuṣa will go to heaven and become Devendra. At that time your son Yāṣṭi will be the emperor and will rule his subjects with kindness. Four sons, who would possess prowess and valour, who would be second to none in archery, will be born to him. They will be known by the name Tuṣvantā, Puru, Kuśa and Yudhū. Powerful and mighty sons called Bhēja, Bhima, Andhaśa, Kukkura, Vṛṣṇi, Śrutaseṅa, Shrutiadhāra and Kālādāśāṅtra will be born to Yudhū. They will become famous by the name Yadavas. Several sons will be born to them. Thus the family of Nahuṣa and yourself will increase."

By this time Nahuṣa had arrived at the spot fully armed and ready to fight Hunda, who was killed in the terrible battle which ensued. Nahuṣa married Alokasundari in the midst of devas and after the marriage the couple reached the palace of Nahuṣa. [Padma Purāṇa, fifteen chapters from 102].

3) Nahuṣa became Indra.

Became a python by the curse of Agastya. To get remission from the sin of Brahmiṣṭya, incurred by jailing Vṛitrā, Indra hid himself in a cluster of trees in the Manasa lake. The devas who were worried due to the absence of Indra, elected Nahuṣa as Indra temporarily. Nahuṣa wanted to get Indrānt. Agastya cursed Nahuṣa and changed him into a python. At the sight of the Pāndavas he regained his original form and went back to the world of Indra. [For detailed story see under Agastya].

4) Other details.

(i) Nahuṣa had six sons: Yāti, Yāṣṭi, Śariyāti, Ayati, Ayati and Bhūra. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 75, verse 30).

(ii) Nahuṣa was allowed to enter heaven because he made himself pure by performing the sacrifice Vaiṣṇava yajña. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 257, Stanza 5).
(iii) Nahusa once came down to the world in the aerial chariot of Indra to see the battle of Arjuna. (M.B., Virata Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 9). (iv) Nahusa got a famous sword from his father Ayus. (M.B., Santi Parva, Chapter 266, Stanza 7). (v) Nahusa had once a talk with the hermit Cyavan about the wealth of cows. (M.B., Amsahasana Parva, Chapter 51). (vi) On another occasion the hermit Cyavan granted Nahusa a boon. (M.B., Amsahasana Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 44). (vii) Once Nahusa gave to Brahmins lakhs of cows as alms. (M.B., Amsahasana Parva, Chapter 81, Stanza 5). (viii) It is stated in Mahabharata, Sahibas Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 9, that Nahusa, after death, stays in the palace of King Yama (God of death). (ix) Mention is made in the Kveda, Mandala 1, Anuvaka 7, Suktam 31, about Nahusa's becoming Indra. (x) The names Devaraja, Devarat Devendra, Jagapati, Nagas, Nagendran, Suradhapati, Surapati etc. are used in Bharata as synonyms for Nahusa.

NAHUASA II. A famous nag (serpent) born to Kaavyaparvatii by his wife Kadru. (Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 37, Stanza 9).

NAIDHRUVA. A gotra-originator of the Kaavyaparvati dynasty. He was the grandson of Maharaja Kaavya and son of Avatasa maharaj. He was one of the six Brahmagvins of the family of Kaavyaprati the other five being Kaavya, Avatasa, Kalibya, Asita and Devala. (Vayu Purana, Chapter 52; Matsyapurana, Chapter 145).

NAIGAMEYA. A younger brother of Subrahmanyat. He had three younger brothers, i.e., Sakhha, Vitaksha and Naigameya. (Vayu Purana, Part I, Chapter 13).

NAIKABAHU. A synonym of Parvati. (Agni Purana, Chapter 11).

NAIKRPASTHA. A particular region in ancient India. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 41).

NAIIMS. (NAIMSARANYA).

1) General. Naimisa is very famous in the Puranas. It is considered to be a sacred place. Narmas is the modern name for the place, and it is in the Shatapatha zilla of North India. Saunaka conducted a yajna here which lasted for twelve years. All the reputed Rishis participated in it, and there Sitra (Sveta) the son of Vyasa recited the Mahabharata composed by Vyasa. (Adi Parva, Chapter 1; also see under Sitra).

2) Other information. Devas once came to this place and conducted a yajna there. (Adi Parva, Chapter 196, Verse 1).

(iii) Arjuna once visited here the river called Upalini. (Adi Parva, Chapter 214, Verse 6).

(iii) Half of the sin of those who visit Naimisa will at once be dispelled. The remaining portion of the sin also will be removed before they return from the place. He who stays for a month and bathes here will derive all the results of Omeda yajna. He who quits his life here by fasting will attain all the sacred lokas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 59).

(iv) River Gomati, Yajabhishmi of the Devas and the yakshic vessel of Surya are found at this place. (Vana Parva, Chapter 87, Verse 6).

(v) Dharmaputra once came to this place with his brothers and bathed here and made gifts of cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 1).

NAIMSARANYA. An ancient sacred place on the borders of Kuruksetra. The Raja of Naimisaranya built this place. A bath here gives the same results as an agnimitrayajna. (Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 108).

NAIMISEYA. A sacred place. River Sarasvati which flowed westwards changed its course here towards the east so that river might see the stages of Naimisaranya. There is a story about it in Mahabharata as follows:— The Yajna conducted by Saunaka at Naimisaranya ended in the twelfth year. The Raja who came from various parts of the country were put up in aramavas built on the banks of river Sarasvati. But, many Rasis did not get accommodation and moved eastwards. The river Sarasvati which felt sorry that the Rasis could not be accommodated also turned and moved eastwards, and thus afforded space for aramas to be built on her banks. (Salya Parva, Chapter 37).

NAIRKTA. An urban region in ancient India. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 51).

NAK. A Raka was also known to occur in the list of the ancient gods or protectors of the world. (Santi Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 52).

NAKSA. The son born to Prithusena by his wife Akasa. Mehtou is made in Bhagavata, Sandha 5, that he had a son named Gaya of his wife Drutu.

NAKSTRAKALPA. A part of the Atharvaveda. The great hermit Mundalma had divided the Atharvaveda into five parts called Nakstrakalpa, Vedaka, Sahiniyakalpa, Agharasakalpa and Santi Kalpa. Nakatra Kalpa deals with the order of worshipping the Nakstras (stars). Vedaka deals with the activities of Brahman as a Rtvik (family priest), the Santi Kalpa, the mantras (spells and incantations), in Udgrinas, Kalpa sorcery and enchantment, and in Sahini Kalpa, Sants (Ascetics or gurus) of holy elephant etc. are given. (Visnu Purana, Anu 3, Chapter 6).

NAKSTRAYOGA. It is ordained in the Puranas that alms-giving on each star or day will be rewarded by particular attainments. This is called Nakstrayoga. The Nakstrayoga of each star is given below:—

1) Arogay— Those who give horses and chariots as alms on this day, would be born again in a noble family.

2) Bharanai— If lands and cows are given to Brahmins on this day, one would get a large number of cows and will become famous in heaven.

3) Kritis— If rice-pudding is given to Brahmins to their satisfaction on this day the river will attain the prominent worlds after death.

4) Rehga— If milk-rice and venison mingled with glue is given to Brahmins on this day, his indevolence to the manes would end.

5) Mrijalas— (Candra nakstrak). If a milch-cow is given as alms on this day, one would attain heaven.

6) Arth— If fat is taken and gingelly oil is given as alms on this day, the giver will become capable of crossing mountains and trenches.

7) Panu— He who gives bread on this day will be born again in a good family.

8) Purya— He who gives gold as alms on this day will enter the world of bright planets.
NAKULA

9) Atrey — He who gives an ox made of silver as alms on this day, will become fearless.
10) Mahe — He who gives gingly as alms on this day will become prosperous with cows.
11) Pëthākāṣṭu — If ghee is given to Brahmins taking fast on this day, the river would become happy and prosperous.
12) Utartākāṣṭu — He who gives rice of Nivara variety mixed with milk and glue on this day will be honoured in heaven.
13) Hasta — If one gives four horses and an elephant as alms on this day, one will attain the world of bliss.
14) Cātra — He who gives oxen and perpendicular alms on this day, will enter the parks in which celestial maidens stay.
15) Śrī — He who gives any sort of wealth as alms on this day will become renowned in the world.
16) Vīrahe — He who gives as alms on this day, oxen, milch-cows, granītha, card, paddy and diamond will attain heaven.
17) Amsudha — If he who gives cloths, rice and blanket on this day will be honoured in heaven for a hundred yugas.
18) Tava — Brahmins are given yams and greens on this day one could realize one's wishes.
19) Male — The maids will be contented, if Brahmins are given roots and nuts on this day.
20) Pātcāha — If the Brahmins who are expounders of Vedas are given as alms pots of card, after observing fast, the givers will take birth again in families with many cows.
21) Utartākāṣṭu — He who gives milk and glue to wise men will be honoured in heaven.
22) Śrīvastra — Those who give cloth and rug on this day will enter a white conveyance and reach heaven.
23) Śrīma — Those who give cattle, cart and cloth on this day will enter heaven.
24) Śrīvastra — Those who give sandalwood and aloes wood on this day, will go to the world of devas (gods).
25) Pātcāha — He who gives coins on this day will reach the world of bliss.
26) Utartākāṣṭu — Those who give munition on this day will be pleasing the maids.
27) Pātcāha — If he who gives cows which could give pails of milk, could reach any world. (M.B. Antarākāṣṭu, Parva, Chapter 64).

NAKULA

1) Birth — The fourth of the Pándavas, Mādri, the second of the two wives of Pāndu, meditated on the twin gods Asvinīdevas, and recited one of the Mantras given to him by the hermit Durvasās and the two sons Nakula and Sahadeva were born to her from those gods. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Aṣṭī Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 11 that Nakula and Sahadeva were immensely handsome.
2) Story of Nakula till the Bhārata battle — Naming and such other rituals after birth were performed for Nakula also as in the case of the other Pándava children, by the hermits who lived in Sātrāiga. The ceremony of investiture with the Brahmacarya was conducted by Kāya, the priest of Vāudevā. The royal hermit Suka taught Nakula archery and swordsmanship, in his boyhood. When Pāndu died, Mādri jumped into the funeral pyre and died leaving her two sons with Kunti. After this the hermits of Sātrāiga took Kunti and her five sons to Bhoṣhpura at Hastinapura.

At Hastinapura, Nakula learned archery under the great teacher Drona. According to the instruction of the teacher, Arjuna had to fight with him (teacher) on the completion of the teaching and during that fight Nakula and Sahadeva were the guards of Arjuna's chariot-wheels. As Nakula was such an expert in wielding the weapons, he got the name 'Astrātu'. (M.B. Aṣṭī Parva, Chapter 138, Stanza 30). When the last palace was completed at Vāranavāsi, the Pándavas shifted to that mansion by the instruction of Bhīṣma. When the last palace was set fire to, the Pándavas escaped by way of an underground passage and reached the banks of the Gaṅga. There Nakula and Sahadeva fell down weary and exhausted. Bhīṣma carried them on his shoulders. After Bhīṣma had killed, they proceeded to Pāṇḍapura, where at the Svayamvara (marriage) Pāṇḍali became the wife of the Pándavas. They returned to Hastinapura. A son named Śrīnālak was born to Nakula by Pāṇḍali. (M.B. Aṣṭī Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 75).

It is said that Nakula married Karmavati, the daughter of the King of Gauri. A son named Niraiz was born to Nakula and Pāṇḍali. (M.B. Aṣṭī Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 78).

Nakula was next sent to the kingdoms of the west for regional conquest, by Dharma-putra. The wealth of the kingdom he had conquered, was carried on ten thousand camels to the capital Hastinapura. (M.B. Aṣṭī Parva, Chapter 92). After the Rājaśāya (imperial consecration) of Vidyākṣara, Nakula went to Gandhāra to escort Subhata and his sons. After the defeat of Vidyākṣara in the game of dice, the Pándavas went to live in the forest. At that time Nakula put soil all over his body and sat on the ground because of his profound grief. In the forest, once Jataująura carried away Nakula. (See under Jatająura). Nakula killed Karmakara, Mahākṣara and Sumatra in the forest. At Dvārakā (a forest) Nakula went to a lake to fetch water and was killed by Dharma-deva who appeared in the form of a crane. At the request of Dharma-putra, who came afterwards, all the Pándavas including Nakula were brought to life again, by Dharma. During the pseudonymity of the Pándavas at the city of Vīrața, Nakula assumed the name Granthaka. When the period of pseudonymity expired, Nakula fought with the Trigartas on behalf of the King Vīrața. On the return of the Pándavas after the expiry of their forest-life and pseudonymity, when Duryodhana announced that he would give not even a single dot of land to them, Nakula was very eager to decide the matter by a battle. He proposed that the King Dru-pada should be made the chief captain of the army.

3) Nakula in the Bhārata battle — The following is the part played by Nakula in the battle of Kurukṣetra.

(i) There was a combat between Nakula and Daśārama on the first day of the battle. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 55, Stanza 23).
(ii) Nakula fought with Śūlya and was wounded. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 83).
(iii) He fought with Sakuni. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 105, Stanza 11).
NĀKULA

(iv) He engaged Vikarna in a combat. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 11.)
(v) Nakula defeated Vikarna. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 116, Stanza 12.)
(vi) Nakula defeated Sakuni. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 168, Stanza 16.)
(vii) He defeated Duryodhana in a fight. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 167, Stanza 30.)
(viii) Nakula killed the King of Anga. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 22, Stanza 13.)
(ix) He retreated on being defeated by Karṇa. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 24, Stanza 45.)
(x) He fought with Drona. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 48, Stanza 34.)
(xi) Nakula fought with Duryodhana again and was wounded. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 7.)
(xii) He fought with Virāsaṇa. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 30.)
(xiii) Nakula killed Cūrasena, Satyasena and Susena the sons of Karṇa. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 10.)

4) After the Bhāratva battle:
(i) After the battle, Nakula explained to Yudhiṣṭhira, the duties of a householder. (M.B. Sārin Parva, Chapter 12.)
(ii) On the instruction of Yudhiṣṭhira, Nakula became the chief captain of the army. (M.B. Śārin Parva, Chapter 41, Stanza 12.)
(iii) After the battle, the palace of Dwarmasana, the son of Dhūrāśra, was given to Nakula by Dharmaputra. (M.B. Sani Parva, Chapter 44, Stanza 10.)
(iv) After the battle when Yudhiṣṭhira performed the horse sacrifice, Nakula and Bhiṣmaṇa stood as protectors of the city. (M.B. Advanečha Parva, Chapter 72, Stanza 19.)
(v) Nakula went to the forest to see Kuṭtis, who was engaged in penance during her latter days. (M.B. Advanečha a Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 8.)

5) The end. At the 'great departure' (Mahaprasthāna) of the Pāndavas, Nakula died in the forest. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Svargārohana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 9, that after death Nakula and Sahadeva attained the position of the Āsvinidevās.

6) The name Nakula. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Viṣṇupāda Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 25 that the name 'Nakula' was given to him because there were none more handsome than he in the family (Kula) of the Pāṇḍavas.

NĀKULA. An ancient country in India. (M.B. Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 53)

NĀLA 1. Nala the King of Nisadha. (As the history of Nala is included under the word Damayantī, some points which are not given here, are mentioned here).
(i) Nala was the son of Virāsaṇa, the King of Nisadha. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 56.)
(ii) Once the hermit Bhuddaśva came to the palace of Virāsaṇa and praised Nala a good deal and spoke highly of his good qualities to his father. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 2.)
(iii) When Nala was playing in the garden some swans with golden wings flew to the lake in the garden. Nala caught hold of one of them just for fun. The swan said to Nala, "If you will let me off, I will tell Damayantī about you." So it was released. As a reward it flew to the country of Vatātila and persuaded Damayantī to go to Nala. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 53.)
(iv) After death Nala sat in the ancestral chariot of India and witnessed the battle fought by Arjuna with the Kauravas at the end of the forest life of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 36, Stanza 10.)
(v) Previous births. Two different stories are narrated about the previous birth of Nala.
1) In the previous birth Nala was a Vāśya of the city of Pippala in the Gauda country. This Vāśya became abstinent and after leaving off everything he had, he went to the forest. There, according to the advice of a hermit he undertook the fast of Gaṇeśa. As a result he was born as Nala in the next birth. (Gaṇeśa Purāṇa).
2) Nala and Damayantī were foresters named Āhuka and Ahuka. Śiva was pleased with the couple. So they were born in royal families in the next birth, and Śiva in the form of a swan helped them. (Śiva Purāṇa, Satarūdra Sandha). NALA II. An ancient hermit. In Sahā Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 17, it is mentioned that this hermit lives in the palace of Indra.

NĀL 1. A monkey. This monkey was the son of Vāvakarma. Śrī Rāma and the monkey-army went to redeem Śītā from Lankā and reached the seacoast. A bridge had to be made to cross the sea and reach Lankā. Immediately Varuna the king of the seas appeared there and said, "Nala who is in the monkey-army, is the son of Vāvakarma. His father had given him a blessing that he would become as expert an architect as his father. So let the construction of the bridge be commended under his supervision." Accordingly under the supervision of Nala, Rāma's bridge of rock was completed and Śrī Rāma and the army of monkeys reached Lankā by walking over this bridge. (Vālmiki Ramāyaṇa, Yuddha Kānda, Sarga 22).

In the battle between Rāma and Rāvana, Nala fought with the giant TAHIKA. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 285, Stanza 9)

NALAKUṬĀRA. A son of Vaiśravaṇa. He had a brother called Manigriva.

1) Carving Rāvana. It was the time when Rāvana was ruling over Lankā and terrorising the fourteen worlds. As he was carrying on his conquests, once he came to a round rock near Kaḷīśa. It was night Rāmbhā had fixed a rendezvous near the rock that night with Nalakūṭāra. The full moon shone bright. The radiance of the moon rendered Kaḷīśa and its vicinity most beautiful. Filled with passion Rāvana could not sleep. At all. In the silence of that calm night he heard the tinkling of bangles. Rāvana opened his twenty eyes and looked in that direction. He saw an extremely beautiful woman clad in splendid garments and ornaments going along the way. He ran to her and caught hold of her hand. She was flurried and confused at his sudden appearance. So she said, "Oh Lord! I am the wife of Nalakūṭāra who is the son of your brother Kubera. My name is Rāmbhā. Your brother's son is your son too. So don't do any harm to your son's wife." But Rāvana did not pay any heed to her words. He lifted her up and placed her on the round rock and raped her. Before dawn Rāmbhā, who had become like the lake of lotus trodden by a mad elephant, went to Nalakūṭāra and told him everything. Nalakūṭāra became very angry and cursed Rāvana. "You, who have become blind with lust, shall not touch a woman who does not reciprocate your love. If you do so your head will be split into seven pieces." It was because of this curse that Rāvana did not touch Sītā though she was kept in his harem. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa; Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 29).

2) Another wife of Nala. It is mentioned in Kathāsaritāgāra, 263, Mahabálakamba, Tarancata 3, that of the two daughters, Svanaprabhā and Somaprabhā of Maya, Somaprabhā was the wife of Nalakābara.

3) The curse of Nārada. Nalakābara and Māngirīva, the sons of Kubera were playing with celestial maidens in the Ganges in nudity, when Nārada came by that way. The hermit was returning after visiting Viṣṇu. The moment the celestial maidens saw Nārada they put on their clothes and stood aside bowing before Nārada. Nalakābara and Māngirīva did not see Nārada. They ran here and there, playing with no clothes on. At this Nārada got angry and cursed them that they would become two 'Marutu' trees (Terminalia slata) on the earth. They became very sad and requested for liberation from the curse. Nārada told them that they would get liberation from the curse when they saw Śri Kṛṣṇa, the incarnation of Viṣṇu. Accordingly Nalakābara and his brother took birth near the house of Nandagopa in Āmbāṭi, as double 'Marutu' trees. It was the period of the childhood of Śri Kṛṣṇa. Once Śri Kṛṣṇa swallowed mud, and Yāsodā tied him to a mortar. The child dragged the mortar to his tree and got himself between the double tree. Immediately the trees regained the original forms of Nalakābara and Māngirīva. They paid homage to Śri Kṛṣṇa, who blessed them, and both of them returned to Vaiśravānapпуri. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

NALASETU. The rock bridge built by the monkey named Nala. The bridge over which Śri Kṛṣṇa and the monkeys crossed the river to Lankā was built under the supervision of Nala and so the bridge came to be called Nalasetu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Stanza 45).

NALTANTU. One of Viṣṇu's sons who were exponents of Brahmā. (M.B. Amrīṣārana Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 50).

NALLANGY. See under Pātanīl.

NALLANDY. JAPRABANDHAM. See under Nammāḻār.

NALIN. A branch of the Ganges. When the heavenly Garuḍa came down to the earth as a result of the presence of Bhagiratha, Śiva received it on his head. It is also in Valmicī Rāmāyaṇa, Būda Kanda, Sarga 43, that when the Garuḍa fell down from the head of Śiva it split into seven river-arms called. Hidāmini, Pāvandh, Nalini, Suckānu, Sītā, Śimdh and Gaṅgā. The Ganges which flows through North India is one of these seven river-arms.

NALOPĀKHYĀNAPARVA. A sub Parva (section) of Mahābhārata. This sub section consists of Vana Parva, Chapters 52 to 79.

NALU (FOUR). Various things mentioned in the Purāṇas having some association with four (Nīla) are given below:—

1) Four distances. In the case of an elephant one must keep a distance of 1000 kols, a horse 100 kols, horned animals 10 kols, evil people, unlimited number of kols. (1 kol is equal to a metre.)

2) Four Ādīkārīkrī. Manda (the very ordinary), Madhyama (medium standard), Uttama (best) and Uttamottama (the very best).

3) Four Anuvandhas. (Factors). In philosophy there are four factors called Viśaya (subject matter), Pratyojana (purpose), Sandhī (relationship between factors) and Adhikāra (the deserving or eligible person).

4) Four Ādīkārīkrī (Internal organs), Manas (mind), Buddha (intellect), Īśvarā (heart) and Ādīkārī (ego).

Imagination is the function of the mind, decision that of Buddha; to retain knowledge gained in orderly form is the function of Īśvarā and self-respect that of Ādīkārī.

5) Four Anuvandhas. Samvāra (truthfulness), Dama (self control), Āravam (straightforwardness) and Āravam (not to be cruel).

6) Ānanda. (Sacred offerings). Dāna (alms-giving, gifts), Adhikārī (earning) and Tapas (penance).

7) Four Ādīkārīkrī. (Not suited to the particular station or place in life). Brahmins are forbidden from receiving bribes, engaging in trade, service of Śrīdās and uttering lies.

8) Āhārya. (Acting). Āgikām (where gestures and bodily actions are used to convey ideas). Śāṅkara (Subjective feelings expressed by perpiration etc. Āhārya (extraneous), Āvikā (by words of mouth). Āhārayā (Subjects for practice and training). Viśaya (time, place, means), Damanī (control of mind), Ānandighra (controlling the senses, organs) and Bhratdayā (kindness).

9) Ānudrā. (Nector). Good wife, talk of children, present from King and honourable food.

10) Ānudrā. (Ornaments). For the stars, Moon; for women, husband; for earth, King and for all, education (learning).

11) Ānudrā. (Matter that is as it is), and Śieṣa (one word with two meanings) are the Ādīkārīkrādasīnas.

12) Ādīkārīkrī. (States, conditions). A. Saīdāvam (childhood), Kaumārī (boyhood), Yauvanam, (youth) and Vardhakya (old age). B. Jāgrat (wakefulness), Svāstikā (sleep), Susupī (sleep) and Turīya (being one with the supreme soul).

13) Ādīkārīkrī. (Objects of shooting arrows). Śvirāram, Gālām, Ādaicālām, Dvāyacālām. When the archer and the object of his shooting remain motionless the object is called Śvirāram. When the object is moving but the archer is not, the object is called Gālām. When the case is just the opposite of the above it is Ādaicālām. When both are moving it is called Dvāyacālām.

14) Ādīkārīkrī. (Factors of the novel). Kathābandha (plot or theme), Pātraprakājanam (exposition of characters), Rasasūṭi (sentiment) and Gadārṣṭi (prose style).

15) Ādīkārīkrī. (Object). For man, shape or form; for form, quality or merit; for quality, knowledge and wisdom or for wisdom, patience, or forbearance.

18) Āśrama Four. (Courting, Protection). For court the sea, for houses the compound wall, for country the King, for women chastity.
19) Āhārās Four. (Food etc.). Āhārā (food), Nināhā (Evacuation), Matihuna (sexual act), Nidrā (sleep).
20) Āhāraṇāstus Four. (eibkā). Kātikā (eaten by munching with teeth and chewing), Pēyām (that which is drunk), Lehyam (laced with the tongue and Bhojyaam [that which is not included in the above three]).
21) Āṇu Four. (Obligations, debts). Debits due to Dēvas, Rēsī, Pētra and Mēn. One pays back one's debts to Dēvas by performing jāyās. By Svādhāyā (self-study) and tapaṇi one pays the debt due to Rēsī; by procession of children and libation offerings that due to Pētra and by truthfulness, hospitality etc. that due to people are repaid.
22) Bīrēs Four. Adhāravam, Udghātā, Hatā and Brahman. The first of the four should be an erudite scholar in Yajuvṛdha, the second in Sānavēka, the third in Atharvanveda and the fourth in all the four Vedas.
23) Kaṭu Four. (Poet). He who boasts about himself in secret is called Uddāsa; he who cries down others and indulges in self-praise is known as Uddhāsa; he who preaches others' truths is called Prausā and he who shows humility is called Vīṇāla.
24) Kākukulaṃgus Four. (Treats of the Cock). To rise early in the morning, to struggle for existence, to share whatever is got with relations and to work and earn one's own food—these are the qualities of the Cock.
25) Gāyīs Four. (Acetabularia). A. Nectar even from poison, good advice even from boys, good action even from enemies and noble and chaste brides even from low families are to be welcomed.

B. Literacy (learning of alphabets) should be accepted from brahmmins, food from mother, pan from wife and bangles from king.
26) Cśarvus Four. Elephant, Horse, Chariot and Infant.
27) Āśroṣas Four. Brahmayrā (student life), Gārāsṭhyā (married life), Vānaśasthī (anchorite, forest-life) and Sanyāsā (Renunciation).
28) Ṭhugas Four. Kṛta, Tretā, Dwāpara and Kali.
29) Vargas Four. Dharma, Artha, Kāma and Mokṣa.
31) Cīhitācīpṇtus Four. (Four elements in the treatment of patients). Vāidyā (doctor), Rōgīn (patient), Aśadham (medicine) and Paričākara (attendant).
32) Jātis Four. (Costs). Brahmānca, Kṣatriya, Vāidyā and Śūdra.
33) Tājīkas Four. (things to be shunned).
   A. Horse returning after bath, elephant in its rut, love-lorn bull and wicked scholar.
   B. Evil action, unhealthy region, evil wife and bad foods.
34) Dānās Four. (Gifts). Gifts daily given without expecting return or result is Nityāśāna. Gifts given to scholars (āśramata) for the sake of alleviation of or redemption from sin is Naimittikāśāna. Gifts given for welfare and prosperity is Kāmāśāna. Offering made to propitiate God is Vīśaṇa.
37) Pravāṣas Four. (Mean of valid knowledge), Prayakaṇṭa, Anumāṇa, Upamāṇa, and Sadbha.
38) Muktas Four. (Salvation). Śālekuṇa, Sāmīpya, Sārūpya and Śānyūya.
40) Four Śatras (Enemies). Mother leading an immoral life, father who incurs debt; foolish son and beautiful wife.
41) Four Śāstra. Nitiśāstra, Turkaśāstra, Mānusmṛti and Kāmāśāstra.

NAMASUYA. A King of Yāyāti's family. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

NAMBUṬIRIS. (Malayāla Brahmmins). Logan says that the Nambūṭiris were the batch of Aryans who settled down in Kerala after the Nairs. The historians like Śaṅkumān Menon and others have stated that the Nambūṭiris had come to Kerala from the banks of the rivers Godāvāri, Narmada and Kaverī. Famous historians have inferred that the progress of the Aryans to the south took place between 1000 and 325 B.C. But Thomas Fawkes thinks that the Nambūṭiris probably left South India in the time of Buddha. N.K. Datta, the author of the book "Aryanisation of India", is of opinion that during the time of the invasion of Alexander, the Ayans had spread all over India and Ceylon. Thus historians have not yet come to an agreement as to the correct period of the exodus of the Aryans to the south. Anyhow in the Geography of Ptolemy mention is made that half a degree east to the Tābāt there was a place called Brahmagāra. It may be assumed that Brahmagāra may be Brahmagārṇ (settlement of Brahmins). It has been decided definitely that the period of Ptolemy was A.D. 2nd century, and in that case the Brahmins must have settled in the south before that period.

Though the period of the 'Saṅgha poets and their works' has been assessed differently by different scholars, the majority have fixed it as the first few centuries of A.D. In these Saṅgha poems the gods of the Ayans are praised. The gods Śūrya (the Sun), Candra (the moon), Varuna (god of water), Baladeva (Śrī Kṛṣṇa's elder brother) and Visnu (Supreme God) are specially mentioned in "Gīpapadiśāra". The Saṅgha poets' "Gīpapadiśāra" is an encomium to theloyd of the Vedas and Agnihotra Brahmmins (Brahmins who maintain the holy fire by burnt offering). In those days the King carried on the administration of the country with the advice of Brahmins. Economics, Grammar and law were taught in royal palaces. Pādcākara and such other spells, reading of the scriptures, Aranyaka ways of marriage, Recitations of Purāṇic stories etc. were prevalent in those days. Nanimekkalā is stated to have reached the capital of the Cera King and learned Vedas and Saṁkhya doctrines (one of the six systems of Indian Philosophy dealing with evolution) from the prominent teachers here. The diction of both the works 'Gīpapadiśāra' and 'Manimekkalā' is, to a certain extent, indebted to Sanskrit. Many of the Sanskrit poetic traditions are used in these poems. When these proofs are taken into account, it is not wrong to presume that in the period from 1st century to 5th century A.D. Aryan civilization prevailed in south India. If, during this period, Aryan civilization had taken root to such an extent in south India, the advent of the Aryans to south India must have taken place at least two or three centuries prior to this period. The Namboothiris of Kerala are called Malayala Brahmins. Between them and the Brahmins of other countries there are differences in manners and customs. They are given below:

1. The Brahmins of other parts of India do not perform agnistha rites (maintaining the holy fire by burnt offerings) so elaborately as the Malayala Brahmins.

2. Among the sixteen purificatory rites, Agnisvakara (or taking up of sacrificial fire) is an important item in Malabar. From Vedic period Agni (Fire) had become a prominent God. Most of the verses in Rigveda are concerned with fire. The attachment of the Brahmins of Kerala to fire shows the antiquity.

3. Much importance is attached to the learning of scriptures and priest-hood in Kerala. There were 18 Mathas and residential institutions in Kerala for giving religious education.

4. The peculiar type of recitation of the Vedas of the Malayala Brahmins and the accompanying gestures of their hands and the movements of the head at the time of recitation are considered by them to be ancient. Even today certain sounds are produced by them in the Vedic way. (For instance Samrāth—Samrā; Vasi—a—Vasā; Ie—Ie etc.).

5. In Malabar there is a customary atonement or excommunication called Vaayastoma for those Brahmins who had not undergone investiture with the sacred thread in their sanctified time. This shows the stress laid on the need of religious education.

6. The custom that all the male members of the family except the family chief should be engaged in Snaṭaka-vruti (should remain celibates even after education) is prevalent only in Malabar.

7. Much importance is attached to evening worship in Kerala. At that time the Vedic gods are not housed. But Brahmins of other places do not seem to attach so much importance to this practice.

8. The Brahmins outside Kerala repeat the mantras uttered by the priest and perform the functions, at the time of meditation and worship. But in Kerala for meditation and worship with or without incantations a priest is not necessary. This indicates the practice in vogue during the Vedic period before the priestly class became predominant.

9. The Namboothiris have recognized only three Vedas.

10. The Kerala Brahmins wear only one sacred thread. The Namboothiris became predominant in Kerala and began to have a hand in the various spheres of activities. Thus the Aryan civilization shook the customary faith and religion of Kerala from top to bottom and the Aryan religion hoisted its flag of victory here. Aryan literature also found its way into Kerala. The authors and scholars in Kerala began to imitate it. The Namboothiris erected temples in Kerala with the help of local chieftains. The sounds of alphabets, sentence pattern, grammar, poetic tradition etc. of Malayalam language underwent a thorough change. Sanskrit education spread far and wide. They spread Aryan civilization through Kalī and Kūṭyāṭṭām (Aryanisation of mythological stories with gestures etc. and collective dance) Paṭhakka and Sanghakallu (Musical lectures and dramatic performances), in connection with festivals in the temples.

They absorbed many of the customs and manners of Kerala. The Namboothiris who had adopted priest-hood as their career had amassed wealth and landed property in the capacities of priests and authorities of the temples. Some of them became Kings (e.g. King of Koppallu, King of Campakāśerī etc.). They kept up the contact with the people of the locality by means of morganatic marriages and made their positions secure. Thus these peoples, though a small minority, were able to hold sway over the people of Kerala for a long time.

Namówki. The first of the twelve great Álvins, the Saivite devotees of South India are called Nāyānanārs and the Vaishnavite devotees, Álvars. The word Álvār means, a devotee of God. The Vaishnavite religion says that the twelve Álvārs are the incarnations of Nārāyaṇa and Gaurāṇa the followers and the embodied deities of the Conch and the discus the weapons of Viṣṇu. It is mentioned in Śrīmad Bhāgavata that divine persons who are followers of Viṣṇu will incarnate on the earth in Kaliyuga and that their native places will be the banks of the holy rivers in Dvārakā such as Tāṁrapārī, Kārmāṇī (Viṣṇu), Paśupati (Pāmpānā), and Kaverī. It is stated there that these divinities will take birth in that place that they would take birth in any caste and compose Dvārakā songs and thereby propagate lofty truths. The collection of Dvārakā songs thus composed by the Álvār is called Divya Prabandha (Divine Composition).

There are four thousand songs in four parts in the Dvārakā composition and hence it has the name Nālāyira Prabandham Four thousand composition. The theme of the 1st and 2nd thousands is a secret known as Tirumantira (the divine spell). The third thousand is concerned with the Caramaṭloka (the verse of death) and in the fourth Dvārayamantira is dealt with. The Tirumantira (the divine spell) is the collection of three words Om, namah and Śrīvilvāya, which is repeated in the first thousand and the word Nārāyanāyā in the second thousand of the composition. The Caramaṭloka (the verse of death) is the last utterance of the songstress-priest. It is a propagation of the theme of seeking refuge. The individual soul has to seek refuge under the universal soul, unconditionally. This is what is called Tirappattu. Dvārayamantira (the two fold mantra) deals with the aim and the ways for the realisation of that aim. It would be possible only by the help of Laksmini Bhāgavati (the goddess Laksmini). It is a verse of only two lines.

The first and foremost among the Álvārs is Nammālvār. "Tiruvāyāsvi" is his work. It had been predicted in Vaisnavi Purāna that at the beginning of Kaliyuga, Viṣṇu Śrīnātha named Vaisvākṣena would incarnate as Nammālvār and that he would restate the Vaisnavite religion. It is hinted in Brhadānta Purāṇa that Nammālvār would incarnate in Śrīnāgarī (Tirunāgarī) on the banks of river Tāṁrapārī in the Kingdom of Pândya. As was foretold Nammālvār was born in Tirunāgarī. The present name of this place is Álvār tirunāgarī.

There is a traditional lore about the birth of Nammālvār. There was a ruling chief named Kātyārī in Tirunāgarī. Udayaśīkāṭārī was his wife. The couple once went to the Vaisnavite temple near Mahendrā mountain known as Tirukkurukkūṭi temple and prayed to the god consecrated there called Nambī, for a son. Reply was given through the priest that the god himself would take birth as their son. Accordingly Udayanā‑kāyār gave birth to Nannālmāvār. Scholars say that the birth of Nannālmāvār was on the 43rd day of Kailyyaga that is in B.C.3102.

Nannālmāvār had another name Pārākunja. Some believe that he was the incarnation of portions of Senesā and the jewel Kauśubha. Some say that there are portions of Mahāvīṣṇu, Pānchayuddu, Adivēsa and Senesā in Nannālmāvār. The Vaisnavites have given Nannālmāvār a lofty place. The infant born to Kārīvār and Udayanā‑kāyār was not an ordinary one. Generally infants at birth are covered with a case of air called ‘Sātha’. Because of this, they lose the memory of previous birth. But Nannālmāvār had no Sātha. So he got the name ‘Sāthakopā’. The parents were amazed at the infant which lay still without beating its legs, and crying or sucking its mother’s breasts. The bright infant was taken to the Vaisnavite temple on the twelfth day. Because of his difference from ordinary infants he was named Māra. A golden cradle studded with jewels was hung on the branch of a tamarind tree and laying the child in it, the parents went home. That tamarind tree still stands there. The devotees believe that that tree also is a portion of Adivēsa.

Nannālmāvār spent sixteen years under the tamarind tree without opening the eyes or uttering a single word. In the sixteenth year a wise man who could understand the dignity of Nannālmāvār came there. The person was the Madhura Kavi Ālvar. After this Nannālmāvār sat under the tamarind tree and sang songs of praise of Nārāyana. Madhura Kavi set tunes for them and sang them. Everybody who heard them was struck with wonder and stood still. Nannālmāvār spent his days under the tamarind tree in meditation and contemplation. At the age of 35 he entered heaven.

NAMUCI I. A fierce Rākṣasa (giant). It is stated in Mahābhārarata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 42, that this giant was the son of Prajapati Kasiyana by his wife Danu. This fierce giant was killed by Indra. There is a story in the Purānas describing how Namuci was killed.

Under the leadership of Namuci a great army of the giants invaded the realm of the gods. Indra came with an army of devas. Though the giants were defeated in the battle Indra was not able to kill Namuci. To save himself from the attack of Indra, Namuci got into the radiance of the Sun and hid himself there. Indra found him out and made a treaty with him, the conditions of which were as said by Indra:-

“Oh, noble giant, I will not kill you by wet thing or dry thing, in the night or in the day. What I say is true.”

According to this treaty it became impossible for Indra to kill Namuci either with wet things or with dry things and either in the day time or in the night. Only when Indra had agreed to these conditions did Namuci come out.

The battle continued and Indra drove away Sumbbha and Nkummbha the elder brothers of Namuci, who went to Pātāla. Indra ran after Namuci and in the evening Indra found him hiding on the sea shore and killed him with the foam of the sea. As Indra had violated the condition of the treaty the severed head of Namuci followed Indra. With this Indra incurred the sin of Brahma‑hatya (killing a Brahmin). To get remission from this sin Indra approached Brahmā. He was advised to bathe in Arunāchārīgame and doing so Indra got remission of his sin. From that day onwards Arunāchārīgame became a holy bath (tirtha). (M.B. Śālya Parva, Chapter 46).

NAMUCI II. An arm‑of-the-deity, of Hirayaśaka. In the battle with Indra, Namuci made him unconscious and the elephant Airāvata thrust its tusks on the ground. After that by his magic and sorcery he created many creatures. But Viṣṇu destroyed all those creatures with his discus Sudarśana. At last Indra killed Namuci.

(Padma Purāṇa, Śrītyāhanda).

NAMUCI III. Another arm‑of-the-deity of Hirayaśaka. He sent five arrows against Indra in a fierce battle. But Indra cut all the five arrows in the midway. Then by his magic and sorcery Namuci spread darkness everywhere. Indra defeated that strategy also. Then Namuci dashed forward and taking hold of the tusks of Airāvata shook Indra down. Indra stood up and cut off the head of Namuci with his sword (Padma Purāṇa, Śrīty Khandā).

NANAGĀBHU. A King of the family of Yāṣāti. (Bhagavata Skandha 9).

NANDA I. (NANDAKA). See under Nandagopa.

NANDA II. (See under Vararuci).

NANDA III. A son of Dhitaraṣṭra. In the battle of Kuruksetra, Bhimasena killed him. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 22).

NANDA IV. A serpent born in the family of Kaṣyapa (Mahābhārarata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 12).

NANDA V. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. (M.B. Śālya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 64).

NANDA VI. A synonym of Bhagavān Viṣṇu. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Stanza 69).

NANDA I. Wife of Harsa the third son of Dharmadeva. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 35).

NANDA II. A river. Mention is made in Mahābhārarata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 214, Stanza 6, that while Arjuna had been engaged in a pilgrimage visiting the holy places in the east, he reached the banks of the rivers Nanda and Aparanandā. Many of the scholars are of opinion that this river flowed through the eastern side of the forest Naimśīranya. When the hermit Dhaumya talks about the holy places of the east to Yudhisthira, he says as follows about the river Nanda. “The beautiful mountain 'Kugūda' is a place which abounds in roots, fruits and water. Nāla the King of Nisudha, who was weary of thirst rested here. There is a holy temple here called Devavana which is thronged by hermits. Near this temple there is a mountain through the top of which, two rivers Bāhū and Nandā flow.” (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 67).

During the time of the forest life of the Pāṇḍavas, Yudhisthira travelled with the hermit Lomasta, through the basin of the rivers Nanda and Aparanandā. During the Purāṇic times some deities had lived in the basin of the river Nandā, and men began to come there to visit the deities. The devas (gods) did not like this and so they rendered the place inaccessible to men. From that time onwards the river basin of Nandā and the NANDABHAĐRA. A righteous Vaiśya. Having been childless for a long time thus Vaiśya, who was an ardent devotee of God Kapilasava, got a son in his old age. But he died after his marriage. With this calamity Nandabhadra became a man of abstinence and began to try to acquire spiritual knowledge. After a while a seven-year-old boy appeared before the Vaiśya and questioned him for spiritual knowledge. Later with meditation on Śiva and the Sun, Nandabhadra attained heaven. (Skanda Purāṇa, Chapters 1, 2 and 46).

NANDAGOPA. Foster-father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

1) Previous birth There are two stories about the previous birth of Nandagopa.

(i) Drona, one of the eight Vaiśus and his wife Dhrára commit suicide, and become the gods. Brahmā who found it out, cursed the couple to take birth in the family of cowherds. Drona and Dhrāra prayed for remission. Brahmā told them that Mahāviśnu would incarnate as their son as Śrī Kṛṣṇa and that after that birth they would be liberated from the curse. Accordingly Drona took birth as Nandagopa and Dhrāra as his mother. (Mahābhārata, Skanda 10).

(ii) Once a King named Candrasena sat in the Mahākāla temple in Ujjaini to perform penance. Śiva was pleased at his penance and gave him a jewel. That brilliant precious stone fulfilled all his desires. Other kings heard about this jewel and came to war to take possession of the jewel. The King came and took refuge in the temple.

At this time a childless Śrīkara was born to a cowherd in Ujjaini. He was god-fearing since childhood. Śrīkara came to Mahākāla temple and sat in worship and meditation and attained the goodwill of Śiva. The kings who came in charge of Candrasena could not approach the temple because of the unearthly brilliance that radiated from Śrīkara. Not knowing the reason the kings brought him to Śrī Mahākāla temple and submitted him before them and said, “Hear this, oh King! Śrīkara is not a mere cowherd. The God is pleased with him. In his eighth birth from today he will be born in Ambādi under the name Nandagopa. Then Mahāviśnu will incarnate as the son of Nandagopa under the name Śrī Kṛṣṇa.”

Śrī Kṛṣṇa was the eighth birth of this Śrīkara. (Śiva Purāṇa, Sanśpruḍha Mahāmya).

2) Ve una carried away Nandagopa. While Śrī Kṛṣṇa was young in Ambādi as the foster-son of Nandagopa, Nandagopa went to bathe in the river Yamunā. While he was taking a dip under the water a servant of Vaiśuva carried him away to the realm of Varuṇa. At Nandagopa’s command people of Ambādi ran here and there in grief. At last Śri Kṛṣṇa jumped into the water and reached the city of Varuṇa, who praised Śrī Kṛṣṇa and said that it was to see Śri Kṛṣṇa that he had carried Nandagopa away, and requested for pardon. Śri Kṛṣṇa pardoned Varuṇa and brought Nandagopa to Ambādi. (Hṛṣīkeśa, Skanda 10).

3) Nandagopa sustained by a great mountain-ratha. (See under Kesava, Para 21).

NANDAKA II. A sword of Mahāviśnu. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 147, Stanza 15).

There is a story explaining how Mahāviśnu came by this sword Nandaka. In days of old Brahmā performed a sacrifice on the banks of the heavenly Gangā on a peak of mount Mahāneru. While Brahmā was sitting in deep meditation in the sacrifice Lohiṣu was seen coming to cause disturbance to the sacrifice. Immediately a male being came into existence from the meditation of Brahmā. The being was paid homage to Brahmā and the devas (gods) because glad and they encouraged the male being. Because the gods greeted the male one, he was changed to a sword called Nandaka (that which is greeted or thanked for). That sword was received by Mahāviśnu at the request of the gods. When Mahāviśnu slowly took it Lohiṣu came near him. He was an asura of blue complexion, with thousand hands of adamantine fists. By wielding his club he drove away the god. Mahāviśnu cut down his limbs one by one and those organs became metals by the touch of the sword. Then Mahāviśnu killed the asura. Then Mahāviśnu granted Nandaka a pure body and various arms. Afterwards Nandaka became the deity of weapons on the earth. Thus Brahmā, who got rid of the disturbance by the aid of Viṣṇu, completed the sacrifice. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 245).

NANDANA I. Son of Hiranyakasipu. Nandana who had been ruling over the Śveta island had obtained boons from Śiva and had become invincible. He ruled over the kingdom for ten thousand years and then he pacified Kailāsa and died. (Śiva Purāṇa, Ucchāra Khaṇḍa, Chapter 2).

NANDANA II. One of the two attendants given to Skandadeva by Asvini Kumāras. (M.B. Śantí Parva, Chapter 44).

NANDANA III. A divine park in the world of devas (gods). Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 45, that those who had brought the organs of senses under control and who had not killed any living being, would be permitted to enter this park. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 26).

NANDI I. A Deva Gaddharva. He was present at the birth celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 56).

NANDI II. One of the divine attendants of Śiva. (See under Nandikēsa).

NANDIRĀMA. It is stated in Vālimki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyākanda that while Śri Rāma had been leading forest life, Bharata lived in Nandīgrāma for twelve years worshipping the sandalwood of Śri Rāma. This Nandīgrāma is situated nearly fourteen miles away from Ayodhyā. (Faizabad).

NANDIKēSA. The chief of the Bhūta Gaṇas (the attendants) of Śiva. For the story of how Nandikēsa once took the form of a monkey and cursed Rāvana, see under Rāvaṇa.

NANDIKUSANA. A holy place. In Mahābhārata, Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 60, it is mentioned that the sin incurred by causing abortion will be washed away by taking a bath in this holy place. (See under Rāvaṇa).

NANDINĪ I. A cow of the world of the gods (Devas). (See under Kāraṇḍaṁu).
NANDINI II. A holy place. In this place there is a well esteemed by the gods. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 53, stanza 15, that those who bathe in this holy well will obtain the fruits of Naramedhayajā (human sacrifice).

NANDISENA. One of the four attendants given to Subrahmanya by Brahmā. Lohitākṣa, Gantjakara and Kumudamālā were the other three attendants. (M.B. Śalva Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 24).

NANDIVARASA. See under Nandikeśa.

NANDIVARDHANA I. The name of the couch of Śiva. (M.B. Śalva Parva, Chapter 61, Dīksināyapatīha).

NANDIVARDHANA II. A King of the solar dynasty. He was the son of Vīrada and the father of Sukuṭu. (Bīhagavata, Skanda 9).

NANDIVEGA. A Kaśtriya family of ancient India. A famous King named Śiva was born in this family. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 17).

NAPTA. An eternal god concerned with offerings to the Manes. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 37).

NAPUMSAKA. Mention is made in Brahmapāda Purāṇa, Chapter 49, that the semen introduced into the womb of the woman at the time of coition, will get mixed with the blood in the womb, and that the issue will be male, female or eunuch according to the proportion of the mixture. In the mixture of semen and blood, if blood exceeds semen the issue will be female; if semen exceeds, it will be male child and if both are equal the child will be a eunuch.

NARA I. A hermit of divine power.

1) Birth. Brahmā created Dharmadeva from his breast, Truthful and righteous Dharma married ten daughters of Dakṣa. Several sons were born to Dharma of his ten wives. But foremost among them were Hari, Krṣṇa, Nara and Nārāyaṇa. Hari and Krṣṇa became great yogis and Nara and Nārāyaṇa became great heroes of penance. The Nara-Nārāyaṇa lived in the holy Asylum of Badurīkārma in the vicinity of the Himalayas for a thousand years performing penance to Brahmā. (Devī Bīhagavata, Skanda 4).

2) Giving birth to Urva. See under Urva I, Para 1.

3) Keeper of Amṛta (Ambrosia). The Devas (gods) and the asuras (demons) together churned the sea of milk and obtained Ambrosia (the celesial nectar of immortality). Mahāvīra took the guise of a fascinating woman and obtained the Amṛta by stealth from the asuras and gave it to the devas. The asuras waged a terrible war with the devas. At that time, at the request of the devas, Nara and Nārāyaṇa took sides with the devas, and fought against the asuras as a consequence of which the asuras were defeated. In Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 31, it is stated that from that day onwards Indra entrusted the keeping of the celestial Nectar with the hermit named Nara.

4) Dambhadhaba brought under control. See under Dambhadhabha.

5) Conflict with Śiva. Because he was not invited to the sacrifice by Dakṣa, Śiva got angry and sent his trident against Dakṣa’s sacrifice. The trident completely destroyed the sacrifice and flew through the air here and there. Then it reached Badurīkārma and hit the breast of Nārāyaṇa who was sitting engaged in penance. By the force of the utterance of the sound ‘Hum’, made by Nārāyaṇa, the trident was ejected from his breast. Not finding any accomplishe, Śiva, getting angry at this rebuff approached Nara-Nārāyaṇa with the intention of exterminating them. Nara took a grass from the ground and discharged it at Śiva. Instantly the grass became an axe. It flew round Śiva to attack him, Śiva broke the axe. From that day onwards Śiva got the name ‘Kāṇḍyakaraśu’ (one who broke the axe). In this story, it is said that the trident which had returned from the breach of Nārāyaṇa located the hair of Śiva to such an extent that they were dried as dry grass. So Śiva came to be called ‘Muniśkaśa’ (with hair having the colour of dry grass). (M.B. Śata Parva, Chapter 543).

6) Fight with Prahlāda. Once Īgyavana the son of Ilīguru went to Nākeleśvara tirtha (Bāhī) to take his bath in the river Narmadā. As soon as he got into the water, the serpent called Keka-lōkita caught hold of him. Īgyavana meditated on Viṣṇu. So the poison of the serpent did not affect him. The huge serpent dragged Īgyavana to Pārāśara (the Nether world). But as his poison did not affect the hermit, the serpent left the prey and went away. The Nāga damsels welcomed him and showed him hospitality. The Nāga damsels he travelled through Pārāśara and reached the great city of Dānavas. The asurachiefs greeted him with respect. Prahlāda met Īgyavana, and received him with pleasure. The hermit said to Prahlāda, “I came to bathe in the Mahāūra and worship Nākeleśvara. When I got into the river a serpent caught hold of me and brought me to Pārāśara, and made it possible for me to meet you.” Hearing these words of Īgyavana the King of the asuras said: “Oh good Lord! which are the holy baths in the earth, the sky and the Pārāśara? Would you be pleased to tell us?” Īgyavana replied: “Oh! powerful and mighty King! The holy baths are Naṁśa on the earth, Puṣkara on the sky and Cekaṁ tirtha in Pārāśara; there are the most important.”

The King of the Daityas decided to go to Naṁśa and said: “We must go and bathe in the Naṁśa tirtha. We could visit and worship Viṣṇu with eyes as beautiful as lotus.” Obeying the words of the King, preparations were made instantly and the asuras started from Rasitaīla for Naṁśa.

The mighty host of Daityas and Dānavas reached Naṁśa and bathed in the tirtha. After that Prahlāda went to the forest for hunting. As he was walking thus he saw the river Sarasvati. Near the river there was a Pine tree with very big branches, all of which were covered with arrows, the head of one at the tail of another. Prahlāda saw near the tree two hermias, with matted hair, clad in the hide of black antelope, performing penance. Near them were two perfectly made divine bows named Sārīga and Ajagava and two quivers which would never become empty. Prahlāda questioned them without knowing that they were Nara and Nārāyaṇa. The questioning ended in a contest. The hermit Nara stood up and taking the bow Ajagava began sending showers of arrows at Prahlāda. Prahlāda checked every one of them. The hermit saw his fight was severe. Prahlāda also Withstood it. At last pushing Nara back Nārāyaṇa came to the front. The fight between Prahlāda and Nārāyaṇa was fierce. In the end Prahlāda fell down, his breast being pierced by the arrow of Nārāyaṇa.
Prahlada realized that the hermit Nārāyaṇa was none but Viṣṇu. He praised Nārāyaṇa (Varāṇa Purāṇa, Chapter 8).

7 Other information.
(i) On the occasion of the stripping of Pāñcālī, her clothes at the palace of the Kauravas, Pāñcālī cried, calling Nara and Nārāyaṇa. (M.B. Saba Parva, Chapter 68, Stanza 46).
(ii) Arjuna and Śri Kurma were the rebirths of Nara and Nārāyaṇa. (See under Arjuna).
(iii) It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 334, Stanza 9, that the hermit Nara was one of the four incarnations taken by Mahāviṣṇu in the Manusya yuga (age of man) of the Svayambhuva Manvantara.
(iv) It is mentioned in Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khanda, Chapter 2, that, of the two vasu, Nara and Nārāyaṇa, Nara was of fair complexion and Nārāyaṇa of dark complexion.
(v) It was because of the curse of the hermit Bhūrga that Nara-Nārāyaṇa took birth as Arjuna and Kurma in the Dvāparayuṇa. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandh 4).
(vi) The meaning of the word 'Nara' is he who is not damaged. The universal soul named Nara has created water and earth. When got the name 'Nārāyaṇa'. Because he lives in that water which has the name Nāram, the universal soul got the name Nārāyaṇa. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 1, Stanza 10).

For the other incarnations of Nara see under Nākṣata.

NĀRA II A Gandharva (Semigod). It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 14 that this Nara stays in the presence of Kubera.

NĀRA III A King of ancient India. He never tasted meat in his life. (M.B. Anusasan Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 61).

NĀRA IV One of the wives of Uṣāṇa, a King of the family of the Anga Kings. Uṣāna had several wives such as Niṣṇa, Nārī, Kṛṣṇa, Daśā, Dvaddvat and so on. Niṣṇa was born from Niṣṇa, Nara from Nārī, Kṛṣṇa from Kṛṣṇa, Suvaṇṭa from Daśa and Śabi from Dvaddvat. All these sons became Kings (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

NĀRA V An ancient place in South India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 60).

NĀRĀČ The particular type of arrow.

NĀRĀJ A very famous sage of the Purāṇas.

1 With. Nārada was the son of Brahmā, born from his lap. Brahmā mentally created the famous saptarishi, Mārici, Angras, Atri, Pushtya, Vasiṣṭha, Pulaha and Kārtikeya. From Brahmā’s anger was born Rudra, from his lap Nārada, from his right thumb Daksā, from his mind Sanaka and others and from his left thumb a daughter called Vṛtra. Daksā wedded Vṛtra. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandh 3).

2 Various births of Nārāda The Purāṇas refer to more than seven prominent births of Nārada. He was first born as the son of Brahmā, and after that, on account of Brahmā’s curse he was born as the Gandharva called Upabarhaṇa. Following that he was born as the son of emperor Drupada and was named Nārada. Again born as the son of Brahmā under the name Nārada, he married Mālāti and ended his life as a monkey. He was again born as the son of Brahmā and was cursed by Daksā. Afterwards he was born as the son of Daksā and also as a worm. These births did not occur in one and the same Manusvanta. Nārada may be noticed doing something or other in connection with the various characters in the Purāṇas. There is no other character in the Purāṇas occupying so popular a place in them as Nārada. The important five births of Nārada are described below.

(i) The Gandharva called Upabarhaṇa. Nārada born from the lap of Brahmā desired to remain a celibate. But, Brahmā suggested that he should assume responsibility for propagation as his (Brahmā’s) another son like Marici and Sanaka had already become celibates. Nārada did not accept this suggestion of Brahmā at which the latter got angry and cursed Nārada to lose his knowledge and to marry fifty beautiful women. Brahmā continued:—“You will be born as a Gandharva known as Upabarhaṇa and will become a great musician. You will be unrivalled in the handling of the Vina. After your death as the Gandharva you will be born as the son of a very beautiful woman, and as such you will be a great devotee of Viṣṇu. Afterwards you will be born as my son when I will impart knowledge to you.”

There was a Gandharva called Cītrakaṇṭa, who performed penance on the banks of the Parakara lake to propitiate Śiva for a child. Śiva appeared and blessed Cītrakaṇṭa to the extent that Nārada, the son of Brahmā, would be born as his son. Accordingly the wife of Cītrakaṇṭa delivered a son whom the family priest named Upabarhaṇa. The boy grew up as a devotee of Viṣṇu. Bhagpati taught him the worship of Hari (Viṣṇu). Upabarhaṇa lived on the slopes of the Himalayas performing penance. While Upabarhaṇa was one day engaged in Sāmadhi fifty daughters of the Gandharva called Cītrakaṇṭa passed that way, and they fell in love with Upabarhaṇa, who was in Sāmadhi. He awoke from Sāmadhi on hearing the melodious songs of the fifty damsels who stood there with palms joined in reverence. Upabarhaṇa too fell in love with them, and he married all the fifty girls. He remained with them to the palace and lived there for thousands of years. Once the Gandharvas and the Apsaras were invited to sing the story of Viṣṇu in Brahmāloka. Upabarhaṇa accompanied them. He became lustful towards Rāmaḥū. The Prajapati, who noticed it, got angry, and Upabarhaṇa well-nigh died due to his curse returned home. He told his wives all that had happened to him. He spread a bhrasṭha grass on the ground and lay on it and died. Mālāti, the eldest of his wives, got ready to curse Brahmā, Yama and Mṛtyu. In great consternation they sought refuge under Viṣṇu, who comforted and sent them back to Mālāti. They saluted her. Then a brahmin, who went there questioned Brahmā about the death of Upabarhaṇa. The brahmin told him that, according to previous decision, life for another thousand years remained for Upabarhaṇa, but he died in the meantime on account of the curse of Prajapati. Immediately the brahmin assumed the form of Viṣṇu. The brahmin blessed Upabarhaṇa who woke up from death rubbing his eyes. He lived happily at home with his wives. He was blessed with children and grandchildren. Knowing that his end was near Upabarhaṇa and Mālāti spent their time in austerities on the banks of the Ganga. At last Upabarhaṇa expired, and Mālāti ended her life in his funeral pyre. (Bhāgavata, 7th Skandh).
(ii) Son of Kalavati. There lived in Kanyakukti the emperor called Drumila. He, along with his wife Kalavati, performed penance at the banks of the Ganges for an offspring. Kalavati pleased Kasyapa, by her worship and with his blessing she became pregnant. Drumila, who in the meantime had renounced everything in life, decided to spend the rest of his life in the forest itself. He gifted away all his wealth to brahmins and died in the forest. Though Kalavati got ready to follow him in the funeral pyre, a celestial voice stopped her and she refrained from committing self-murder. She returned to the village and lived as a slave in a brahmin's house. In due course of time she delivered a son. On the birth of the child it rained in the land which was suffering from failure of rains, and because of that the brahmin master of Kalavati named the child Nārada, meaning he who gives water. When the child Nārada grew up he told his mother the story about his former birth. He turned out to be a great devotee of Viṣṇu. Meanwhile, Kalavati, who went to milk the cow one night, was bitten to death by a snake, and Nārada was orphand. Śiva and three attendants of his who went there in disguise were pleased at Nārada's great devotion for Viṣṇu and his service-mentality. He lived on the left-overs given by them. He repeated songs sung by them about Viṣṇu. Gradually Nārada became perfect devotee of Viṣṇu and a unique master of music. Śiva and others imparted Bhāgavata to Nārada before they left him. Nārada who thus attained divine knowledge performed penance for many years on the banks of the Gaṅga and died there. (Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha). Nārada, who expiated on the banks of the Gaṅga was again born as the son of Brahmā. Though the father wanted the son to get married the latter preferred to spend his days in the meditation on God. Brahmā then told his son as follows:—“Why are you so much afraid of the house-holder's life? Many people have attained salvation by following the four śramas (stages in life) like that of the celibate, the householder, the ascetic and the sannyāsi. In fact, only such people will be able to serve man and God. A girl named Mālati alias Damayanti is born to maharsi Śaṅkya, and Śiva has granted her the boon that in this birth you will become her husband. You, therefore, go to Naraṇaśīśanāyanas engaged in penance on the Himalayas. They will give Mālati in marriage to you.”

Accordingly Nārada went to Badarikāśrama where in the presence of Naraṇaśīśanāyana he married Mālati. During those days Nārada and sage Parvata started on a pilgrimage in the course of which they went to the palace of emperor Śaṅkya to observe Caturmukha. The emperor left a well-furnished house at the disposal of the pilgrims. He also deputed his daughter Damayanti to serve them. The humble service of Damayanti pleased them both. But, Damayanti's devotion towards Nārada was more ardent and both of them noticed this fact. One day Parvata asked Nārada whether Damayanti did not take a special interest in him (Nārada) and to this Nārada answered “Yes, I too think so”. Parvata grew angry at this answer of Nārada and told him that:—“We had agreed at the time when we started on this tour to divulge all secrets to each other. Now you have broken that contract. Why did you not tell me about Damayanti's partiality for you? You become, therefore, a monkey”. Nārada, in turn, cursed Parvata as follows:—“You will live in hell in Yavanakoka for a hundred years.”

Accordingly Nārada became a monkey and Parvata lived in hell. At this juncture Śaṅkya's minions advised him to marry his daughter to a prince, and the news made her very sad. Śaṅkya understood the reason for his daughter's sadness from her nurse. The father had ultimately to yield to her wishes and Damayanti married Nārada, who had been turned into a monkey. Hundred years ruled by, and Parvata, the period of his curse being over, returned to the palace of Śaṅkya. Nārada treated Parvata duly well, and pleased at the treatment, he gave redemption to Nārada from the curse. Nārada lived very happily with Damayanti for a long time at the palace, and after the demise of Damayanti he attained Bhāgavatā. (Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

(v) Born at Dakṣa's son. After the creation of the Devas was over, Brahmā called Dakṣa to him and asked him to marry Viruti and procreate, and Dakṣa accordingly begot five thousand sons of Viruti. They were called Haryāvas. Finding that the Haryāvas also were interested in the procreation of children Nārada, the Devasi, approached and told them as follows:—“Oh! Haryāvas! You who are exceptionally vital; people seem to be trying to procreate children. But, you have not enquired as to whether there is enough space on earth for such large numbers of people. You are just like children who know nothing about the world. How will you procreate people? Since you could live absolutely free in the sky, why do you not find out the limit of the earth?”

The Haryāvas thereupon ran away in different places to find out the limit of the earth, and they have not, like the rivers which entered the ocean, returned yet. At the loss of the Haryāvas in the above manner, Dakṣa created the Sabālāyānas, whom also Nārada sent away to various parts of the earth. Dakṣa created five thousand people whom also Nārada drove away in the above manner. Angry and sad at this, Dakṣa cursed Nārada thus:—“Well, Nārada! My children roam about like this because of you. Therefore, you too in future will be roaming about without a permanent abode. Moreover, you will have retribution in my son.”

Nārada became a world-rover on account of his love curse of Dakṣa. He was also reborn as the son of Dakṣa. (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha and Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 15).

(vi) Born as a worm. There is a story about Nārada being born as a worm. On the approach of a chariot the worm moved quickly away from its route lest its wheel should crush it to death. The King seated in the chariot burst into laughter at the above sight when the worm told him as follows:—“There is nothing to be laughed at in my action. In every birth the body is much dearer to the ātman (soul). Just as you love your body I also love and protect my body. (Mahābhārata).”

9) Viṣṇu showed Nārada the function of Māyā. See under Tīrthaṅka 1.

4) Nārada became a woman. While staying once with Kṛṣṇa at Dvārakā, Nārada and the former went out on a tour in an aerial chariot. On the way they saw a stream and Kṛṣṇa stopped the chariot there as Nārada wanted to quench his thirst at the stream. Nārada drank water from the stream disobeying Kṛṣṇa's injunction that he should bathe before drinking water, and lo! the next moment Nārada was turned into a woman and when 'she' looked around neither Kṛṣṇa nor the chariot was to be seen. She wandered about in the forest and at last reached an Ashrama. When the Rsi of the Ashrama awoke from his samādhi he saw standing before him a beautiful woman who requested him to accept her as his disciple. The preceptor married the disciple and in due course of time she became the mother of sixty children. One day all the sixty children and their father expired together. The grief-stricken widow felt too weak to perform the obsequies of the dead. An extraordinary hunger also held her in its grip. She raised her hand to pluck a fruit from the mango tree that stood nearby but could not reach the mango above. She placed together the corpses one on the other, mounted upon the heap of dead bodies and plucked the mango-fruit. Immediately a brahmin arrived on the spot and exhorted the widow on the imperfection of taking food without bathing after the death of husband and children. Then the widow entered the stream and dived in its waves having removed the hand in which was held the mango, and lo! it was Nārada who came out from the water. Only the hand, which had been held above water and did not therefore get wet, remained like that of a woman with bangles theron. The brahmin, who stood there on the banks of the stream transformed himself into Kṛṣṇa. As ordered by Kṛṣṇa Nārada again dived with the whole of his body into the water in which was held the mango, and turned into that of a man. The mango held in the hand turned into an excellent Viṣṇu. And Kṛṣṇa told Nārada: “The Rsi who lived with you as your husband and who is no more is Kālāpuruṣa, and the sixty children are yours, Prabhāva, Vibhāva etc.

Kṛṣṇa and Nārada then returned to Dwārakā. (Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

5) Nārada was a woman called Bhakti. When Kalikīkā held the earth in its grip Nārada, on a particular occasion, went round the world viewing the evils of Kali, and he saw a young woman immersed in grief sitting on the banks of the Yamunā, the sportsfield of Kṛṣṇa. On both sides of her two old men were breathing in an unconscious state, and the woman, weeping her grief, restored them to consciousness. Many other women were mourning the unconscious men and trying to comfort the woman. Nārada approached the young woman when she spoke to him as follows: ‘Oh! great sage, please put an end to my grief, because your words will remove all grief. I am called Bhakti and these two old men are my sons, one of whom is known as Lakṣma (knowledge) and the other Vaiśakī (renunciation), and they have become old due to time. The others found here are sacred rivers, who have come to serve me. But, the service of nobody will do me good.

I was born in the Brāhma region, grew up in Kaṁcynthaka, lived here and there in Mahārashtra and became old at Gujarāt whereafter, atheists due to the evil of Kali inflicted wounds on me for a long time to the extent that I became very weak. I did then go with my sons to the worshipful Vṛndāvana where I regained my old form and became a young woman in the shape of a ghost. My children suffer here in an unconscious state and I have to leave this for another place. I am so very sad that my sons have become old. Why did I become a young woman when my sons were old people? We three were touring together, and how then did this difference arise with regard to us? Is it not the proper thing for the mother to be older, and her children younger? You will please explain the reason for all these.”

Nārada read out the Vedas and the Vedāṅgas to her, to no purpose. To Śāṅkara, Śāntakumāra, Śaṅkaraśrī and others (all of them the mentally diseased of Bhāmā and gifted with eternal youth) asked Nārada to read out Bhāgavata to the sons of Bhākti. Nārada did so, and they became immediately young. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttarākhaṇḍa).

6) Teṣṭa Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa was living in Dwārakā with his 16,008 wives. Nārada once wanted to know how Kṛṣṇa managed to maintain so many wives without any difficulty or quarrels among them. To test it he first went to the palace of Rukmiṇī where both Kṛṣṇa and herself welcomed and treated him duly. Nārada next visited Śāyānāśī's house where also Kṛṣṇa and herself welcomed and treated him well. In the house of all the 16,008 wives of Kṛṣṇa, Nārada had the same experience as above. He was struck by divine powers of Kṛṣṇa and returned home praising Kṛṣṇa (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

7) Mahāvaṁśu put down Nārada’s haughtiness. Nārada had been very proud about his greatness as a musician. Viṣṇu decided to put an end to this conceit of Nārada for which purpose he took Nārada to a forest. There he saw many women, whose limbs had been cut, crying on account of insufferable pain. Mahāvaṁśu asked the women who they were and why their limbs were cut. They answered Viṣṇu that they were Rāginīs, the presiding deities over the various tunes and that they were reduced to their present plight by the totally erroneous singing of the tunes by Nārada.

Nārada hung his head down in shame at the above words of the women and he was cured of his conceit. (Adbhutā Rāmāyaṇa).

8) Hanumān shamed Nārada. Nārada once met Hanumān, who sang a song for him. Enjoying the music Nārada placed his Viṣṇu on a rock which had been melted by the song of Hanumān, and Nārada’s Viṣṇu sank into the melted rock. When the singing by Hanumān was over, the rock, as of old, became hard again and the Viṣṇu got stuck up with it. Hanumān asked Nārada to melt the rock again with a song of his and take away his Viṣṇu. Nārada sang and sang, all to no purpose. The rock did not melt again. Then Hanumān sang a song and the rock melted. After praising Hanumān Nārada left the place ashamed. (Adbhutā Rāmāyaṇa).

9) Śri Kṛṣṇa instructed Nārada about Māyā. Nārada once requested Kṛṣṇa to teach him about Māyā (illusion) and Kṛṣṇa told him that he would be taught sometime later. Afterwards, one day while Nārada was walking about, it began to rain and he took shelter from the rain in a hut near at hand. There was a beautiful young woman in the hut and Nārada fell in love with her. Nārada lived with her for many years and a number of children were born to them. But, a flood washed the mother and children off into the sea, and Nārada was grief-stricken. Then Kṛṣṇa appeared there and asked Nārada whether he loved Māyā. Nārada confesed that he understood Māyā very well and requested Kṛṣṇa to save him from attachments on account of Māyā.

10) Nārāyaṇa and Śaṅkumāra. Once Nārāyaṇa went to Śaṅkumāra and requested him to instruct him in spiritual wisdom telling the latter that he had already learned the Vedas and all other scriptures and arts. Śaṅkumāra accordingly taught him about the perfect nature, without either beginning or end, of supreme bliss. He taught Nārāyaṇa thus: “Everything is God. God exists in all animate and inanimate objects, and God is superior to everything.” (Chandrakoṇi-pānadsad.)

11) Other information about Nārāyaṇa.
(1) Once Brahmā advised him sixteen names which would wash off all the evils of Kali, i.e. Hare Rāma Hare Rāma Rāma Rāma Hare Hare, Hare Kṛṣṇa Hare Kṛṣṇa Kṛṣṇa Hare Hare. (Kalisatārāpanasad.)

(2) It was Nārāyaṇa who gave the impetus to Vālmiki for the composition of Rāmāyaṇa. Once Vālmiki asked Nārāyaṇa, who had returned after a tour of the three worlds, who the greatest of men was. Nārāyaṇa replied ‘Śrī Rāma’ and related to Vālmiki a brief history of Rāma. Nārāyaṇa departed from there and Vālmiki went to the banks of the river Tarnā. It was there that Vālmiki, at the sight of a hunter shooting down one of the Kauśika birds, sang the famous verse ‘Mānīśāda’ etc. (See under Vālmiki.)

(3) Nārāyaṇa once went to Veda Vyāsa, who was very unhappy because he had no children. Questioned by Vyāsa as to the means to have a son, Nārāyaṇa advised him to worship Parākṣaki (the supreme power). Accordingly Vyāsa worshipped Parākṣaki at Kailāsā and was gifted with the son Sūka. (Devi Bhāgasvāta, 1st Skandha.)

(4) When once Nārāyaṇa came to Vaiṣṇava Prakṛti playing on his Vīṇa, Lakṣmi-devi went bashfully into the inner apartment. In fact, she felt some love towards Nārāyaṇa who asked Vīṇa for the reason thereof. Vīṇa replied that none existed who had absolutely conquered Māyā (illusion) and that Lakṣmi-devī felt love towards Nārāyaṇa for a few moments because of the influence of Māyā. (Devi Bhāgasvāta, 6th Skandha.)

(5) Once Agastya kicked down mount Vindhyā and Nārāyaṇa had also a small share in it. Vindhyā had risen above the path of the sun as Nārāyaṇa told him querulously that the Sun was circling Mahāmeru and was ignoring Vindhyā. (Devi Bhāgasvāta, 10th Skandha.)

(6) Nārāyaṇa once went to Pātalaloka and returned after having been duly treated as guest by Prahlāda. (Brahma Purāṇa, Chapter 23.)

(7) Nārāyaṇa once cursed Nakākūbara and Mahiprīva (sons of Kubera) and turned them into two trees. They regained their former form on being touched by the mortar drawn by Kṛṣṇa as a boy. (See under Nakākūbara.)

(8) It was Nārāyaṇa who told Kṛṣṇa that Śrī Kṛṣṇa was in Ambātī. He also told Kṛṣṇa about his previous history. (Bhāgasvāta, 10th Skandha.)

(9) Vyākaraṇa once asked Nārāyaṇa who amongst the Tri-mūrtis used to be pleased most easily and Nārāyaṇa mentioned Śiva. It was therefore that the asura performed penance to Śiva and pleased him. (Bhāgasvāta, 10th Skandha.)

(10) The following story occurs in the Vīṇa Purāṇa, as to how Nārāyaṇa’s Vīṇa became the musical instrument of the world. Once Nārāyaṇa was in India’s court when the latter asked Urvāṇi to give a dance performance. She did so and in the course of the dance saw Jāyanta, son of Indra seated before her. She was swept over by a passion towards Jāyanta as a result of which some mistakes were made by her in dancing. Nārāyaṇa, who was playing his Vīṇa called Mahāśī, also committed some mistakes. Nārāyaṇa did so to attract the attention of the audience to Urvāṇi’s mistakes. Noticing the mistake Agastya, who too was present on the occasion, cursed Urvāṇi to become a bamboo. He cursed that Nārāyaṇa’s Vīṇa should become the Vīṇa of the world (Vīṇa Purāṇa).

(11) Nārāyaṇa’s curse was also one of the causes for Rāvana’s death. Rāvana once requested Nārāyaṇa to explain to him the meaning of ‘Oṁ’, and when Nārāyaṇa refused to oblige him he threatened to cut Nārāyaṇa’s tongue. Nārāyaṇa in return cursed that the ten heads of Rāvana would be cut. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kānda.)

(12) During one Kalpa, Nārāyaṇa was born as a Devagandharva as the son of Kaṭavaya by his wife Muni. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1 and Svarga-rōhana Parva, Chapter 5.)

(13) On one occasion Nārāyaṇa received Mahābhārata, which included three lakhs of slokas. (Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 1; Svarga-rohana Parva, Chapter 5.)

(14) Since he imparted Śākhyā wisdom to the sons of Daśa they renounced the world and departed for different places. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 7.)

(15) He was present at the birthday celebrations of Āriṇa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 57.)

(16) He also was present in the company of Devas and women, who attended Pāñcālī’s Svayamvara. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 186, Verse 7.)

(17) After Pāñcālī’s Svayamvara be once went to the Pāñčālavas at Indraprastha and advised the five brothers not to quarrel over Pāñcālī. It was he, who told them the story of the Sundopasundas. He also arranged that Pāñcālī should live by turns of one year each with each of the five Pāñčālava brothers. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 207, Verse 9.)

(18) It was he who consorted and sent the apsaras called Vargā, who was in the grip of a curse, to the south. (See under Vargā.)

(19) In the form of a createch he gave advice on various topics to Dharmaputra. (Śabhā Parva, Chapter 5.)

(20) When proposals for building a palace at Indraprastha for the Pāñčālavas were under discussion Nārāyaṇa went there and gave descriptions of the courts of Indra, Yama, Varuna, Kubera and Brahmā. (Śabhā Parva, Chapters 5-11.)

(21) He related the story of Harīcandra to Dharmaputra. (Śabhā Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 27.)

(22) It was he who conveyed the information to Daśaratha that Kṛṣṇa’s grandson Aniruddha was imprisoned in the house of Bāga. (Śabhā Parva, Chapter 38.)

NĀRADA II One of the Brahmāvāḍī sons of Vāivāmitra (Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 53). NĀRĀDĀGAMANAPARVA A sub parva of Āśramaṅgika-parva, Chapters 37-39.
NARADI. One of the Brahmavâdi sons of Viśvāmitra. (Anuśâsa Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 59).

NARADAYA PARVA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. (See under Purāṇa).

NARAKA I. (NARAṆĀṢURA). A valiant Aṣura. 1) Birth. Once the Aṣura Hiranyakṣa was amusing himself by wading through the ocean and beating at the waves with his club. Varuṇa, the god of water, was alarmed at this and ran to Mahāvīruṇ and told him every thing. Hearing this Mahāvīruṇ got up to kill Hiranyakṣa. Hiranyakṣa, who had conspired at the time of a Boar carried the earth on his tusks and ran to Pātañl. As the goddess earth had come into contact with the tusks of Hiranyakṣa she became pregnant and gave birth to an aṣura infant of immense might and power. That infant was Naraka. Naraka, born from impurity the sad aṣura Hiranyakṣa and requested him to save the child somehow. Mahāvīruṇ pitied him and said Naraka! So long as this weapon is with you, nobody but me could kill you." Saying this he disappeared. (Bṛhadāvatā, Skanda 10).

2) Administration. Naraka ruled over the aṣuras as their emperor for a long time, all the while terrorizing the Devas. Once this aṣura raped Kātreṇḍrīya daughter of Tvaṣṭṛ. He brought sixteen thousand and one hundred maidens from the women of the earth and the world of gods. He made them captives at Audaka on the top of the mountain Mandīgarvī. He appointed four mighty and fearful aṣuras: Hayagrīva, Naurodā, Pahasanu and Mahāvīruṇ as gate-keepers of Pragjīotis. At Audaka he built a wall blocking the way up to Devayāna, nobody dared to enter Pragjīotis. The ten sons of Naraka guarded the harem. At the boundary of the country Murāṣura had tied six thousand ropes with a sword at the end of each. So enemies dared not come near the boundary. When Sungrīva gave instructions to the monkeys who were then好消息 of Śrī, about how to follow, he had mentioned about the city of Pragjīotis. Mention is made in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Kishkindhī Kāṇḍa, Sarga 42 that Sungrīva had given them special instructions to search for Sītā in Pragjīotis. (M.B. Viṣṇu Parva, Chapter 53).

3) Famous birth of Naraka. Long ago a king who was the father of sixteen thousand daughters, ruled over a country. While the father and daughters were sitting in the palace Mahāvīruṇ came there as a hermit. The sixteen thousand damsels gathered round the hermit. Their father got angry and cursed them. The daughters shed tears and entreating their father for liberation from the curse. He gave them remission and said that in the next birth he would become one of Mahāvīruṇ. Another version of this story says that the damsels had requested Brahmā for liberation from the curse according to the advice of the hermit Nārada, and that Brahmā had given them liberation from the curse. In some versions it is stated that Nārada himself gave them liberation from the curse.

It was this thing that was the father of the sixteen thousand damsels, who took birth again as Naraka. Those sixteen thousand damsels who had been born as princesses in different places were taken captives by Naraka and were kept in Audaka. (Bṛhadāvatā, Skanda 10).

4) Death. Naraka who had been causing devastation and terror in the three worlds entered the world of the gods once. The gods were not able to withstand the fury of Naraka, who carried away the ear-rings of Aditi, the mother of Indra, and the large white royal umbrella of Indra to Pragjīotis. Indra went to Devrākha and told Śrī Śrīna of the molestation he had received at the hands of Naraka. Śrī Śrīna rode on his Garuda with his wife Satyabhāma to Pragjīotis. They flew over the city and understood the lay-out of the city, and the precautions taken by Naraka. The battle began after this reconnaissance. Śrī Śrīna, Satyabhāma and Garuda fought with the aṣuras. The mighty aṣuras such as Mura, Tava, Antardīka, Śrīvaṇa, Vasi, Vibhāvatū, Nabhavāva, Aruna and others were killed. At last Naraka himself entered the battlefield. A fierce battle ensued in which Naraka was killed. The divine weapon Narayanāṣura of Naraka was given to his son Bhagadatta. After the battle Śrī Śrīna and Satyabhāma went to the world of the gods and returned the ear-rings to Aditi and the umbrella to Indra. (Bṛhadāvatā, Skanda 10).

NARAKA II. Mention is made about another Naraka who was born to Prajāpati Kasyapa by his wife Daśamukha in Mahāvīruṇa. (Śrī Parva, Chapter 63, Stanza 28). Once Indra defeated this Naraka. It is seen in Mahābhārata, Sāhā Parva, Chapter 9 that this aṣura after his death, stayed in the palace of Varuṇa worshiping him. NARAKA III. Bhagadatta the son of Naraka ruled over the part of Pātañl called Naraka, and being the ruler of Naraka, Bhagadatta seems to have been known by the name of Naraka also.

NARAKA IV. See under Kāla I.

NARANĀRĀYANAŚ. Two hermits Nara and Narāyaṇa. These two hermits had spent many thousands of centuries in Badayuvarta doing penance. Arjuna was the rebirth of Nara and Śrī Śrīna was the rebirth of Narāyaṇa. (For more details see under Nara and Narāyaṇa).

NARĀNTAKA I. A captain of the army of Rāvana. It is stated in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 10 that the captains of Rāvana, viz., Kumbha, Nukunjha, Mahārākṣa, Mahodara, Mahāppāṭa, Matta, Umattā, Pragbha, Pāṣaṇkaṁ, Virāpaka, Devanta, Narāntaka, Trīśiras, Aśīkṣa and other Rakṣasas fought on the side of Rāvana against Śrī Śrīna and that all of them were killed. Of these Devanta, Narāntaka were mighty and valiant warriors. Aśrīda killed Narāntaka after a fierce battle. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Chapter 69).

NARĀNTAKA II. Son of Rudraketu, an aṣura. This aṣura terrorized the three worlds by his wicked and cruel deeds. When the wickedness and cruelty of this aṣura became unbearable Gaṇapati incarnated in the house of Kāśya to protect the three worlds. Knowing this Narāntaka resorted to various means to kill Gaṇapati. But his attempts were futile. Finally he was killed by Gaṇapati. (Ganeśa Purāṇa).

NARĀSTRĀ. A kingdom of ancient India. In Mahābhārata, Sāhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 6, it is mentioned that Sadhava one of the Pāṇḍavas, conquered this country.

NARASIMHA. See under Avatāra.
NARAYANA. One of the two Rāis famous as Naranārayana.

1) Birth. Dharma, son of Brahmā was Nārāyaṇa’s father. Dharma married ten daughters of Dakṣa, and four sons, i.e., Harī, Kṛṣṇa, Nara and Nārāyaṇa were born to him of them. Of the four, Nara and Nārāyaṇa were incomparable, surpassing all in life, beauty and charm. It is said that they did tapas on the slopes of the Himalayas to please Brahmā for a thousand years.

2) Nārāyaṇa’s tapas. The whole world was, so to say, burnt by the intense tapas of Naranārayana. Indra was alarmed. Believing that their tapas was for the attainment of Indrahood and fearing his own displacement Indra went to Badarikāśrama mounted on Aśva to break their tapas, and told them thus: “Oh ascetics, who shine like the rising sun, I am pleased with your tapas. You may choose any boon you like.”

The Naranārayanas did not even recognise the thunder-like voice of Indra; nor did they answer him. This increased Indra’s alarm, and he decided to disturb them with Máyā, productive of fear, desire etc., and thus break their tapas. Indra transformed himself into a woman by the curse of Indra, gave birth to an extra-ordinarily beautiful girl. (For detailed story see under Kalīgāmaṇī.) That child was named Madanamājukā. Even in infancy she was surrounded by a halo of unearthly beauty. Hearing of this child, Vāsavadattā brought Kalīgāmaṇī and the infant to the palace. To the wonderment who was a lover of God, and had never seen each other and they were not satisfied how sooner long they looked at each other. The king and his wives understood this perfectly well and at the proper time their marriage was conducted.

Naravahanadatta was anointed as the Heir-apparent. Once he was playing in the garden in the spring season, with his ministers Gomukha and others, when the most beautiful Ratnaprabhā came there. (See under Ramaprabhā.)

Once Naravahanadatta went for hunting with his minister Gomukha and retinue. Somehow or other he was separated from Gomukha and army in the deep forest. Then he heard a divine song and sound of a heaz only lyre. He went in the direction from which the music came, and reached a Śaiva temple. Getting in, he saw an exceptionally beautiful damsel standing in the midst of her attendants and companions singing and playing on a lute, in praise of Śiva. At this time a grown-up Vidyādharā woman came down from the sky and getting near the damsel, gave her to Naravahanadatta. The name of the Vidyādharā damsel was Alankāravatī. (For other details see under Alankāravatī.)

As Naravahanadatta was spending his days, enjoying the pleasing company of his wife Alankāravatī, once he went for hunting, with his army. Being very tired they went in search of water, and entered a thick forest. There they saw a lake full of golden lotus flowers and fourmen plucking flowers. Naravahanadatta approached them. They said that they had been plucking flowers to worship Viṣṇu. Naravahanadatta followed them to the presence of Viṣṇu. Mahāvīra was greatly pleased at Naravahanadatta who was standing with folded hands singing praises of Viṣṇu in intense devotion and blessed him to become the emperor of the Vidyādharas. (Kathāsātrasūtra.)

NARĀYANA. A Kṣatriya King who had obtained remission of the sin of Brahmāśāya (slaughter of Brahmā) by the performance of Vaiśākha-vratas.

This man, who was a Kṣatriya of Pāṇḍāla once happened to kill a Brahmin with an arrow. To get remission of this sin, he discarded his Sacred thread, mark on the forehead and forehead and had been wandering here and there when he met a Brahmin named Mānabrāhmaṇa. Naravahanadatta told him this story. The Brahmin told him regarding the importance of the Vaiśākha fast. By taking this fast the King obtained remission of sin. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 88.)

NARAVĀHANA. A famous Vidyādharā. Udayanā the King of Vaiśākha had been spending his time in play and pleasure with his wives Padmāvatī and Vaiśāvatā, when once Nārāda appeared before them. The king greeted the hermit and showed hospitality. The king and the queens were childless. Nārāda told them: “Hear, oh King. Your wife Vaiśāvatā is the incarnation of Kāḍidevi blessed by Śiva. The son born to her would become the emperor of the Vidyādharas. Not long after this Vaiśāvatā conceived and gave birth to a radiant son. He was named Naravahanadatta. At that time Kāḍidevi, with a curse transformed him into a woman by the curse of Indra, gave birth to an extra-ordinarily beautiful girl. (For detailed story see under Kalīgāmaṇī.) That child was named Madanamājukā. Even in infancy she was surrounded by a halo of unearthly beauty. Hearing of this child, Vaiśāvatā brought Kāḍidevi and the infant to the palace. To the wonderment of those who were a lover of god, and had never seen each other and they were not satisfied how sooner long they looked at each other. The king and his wives understood this perfectly well and at the proper time their marriage was conducted.

NARMADA

(iv) Narmada is the origin of Agni (fire). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 224, Stanza 21).

(v) It is a king named Durvyodana, who ruled over the city called Mahishmati on the banks of the Narmada once married Devi Narmada. A daughter named Sudarshanā was born to them. She was extremely beautiful. (M.B. Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 18).

(vi) He who observes fast for two weeks bathing in the waters of Narmada will be born as a prince in the next birth. (M.B. Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 50).

(vii) Once Narmada took Purukutsa, the son of Māndhātā, as her husband. (M.B. Āśrama-vāsika Parva, Chapter 20, Stanza 12). For the importance of Narmada, see under Prakrāti.

NARMADA II. See under Puspokāri.

NARMADA III. Wife of Purukutsa, the son of Māndhātā. (Vīru Parāśa).

NARYA. A king of the age of Rgveda. It is mentioned in Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 10, Sūkta 54, that Devendra had rescued the Kings Narya, Turvasu and Yadu.

NASAYA. One of the Āśvinikumāras. (Mahābhārata, Sānta Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 17).

NĀKA. The grandson of Lomāśā. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

NĀṬAKEYA. A particular region in ancient India. (Sābha Parva, Chapter 38).

NĀṬOTINĀKA. A kind of dramatic performance in ancient Kerala. (See Tārāyāṭam).

NĀṬOTIPĀṬTU. (FOLK-SONGS). Every literature has a section known as a gum or folk songs). In Kerala (Mahāyālam) literature the period of folk songs was a golden era. Worship of deities, honouring heroes, entertainments, philosophy, science, case-professions, morals, ethics, etc., generally formed the themes for folk songs. There are a number of folk-songs in Malayalam called Thulāvarakkali, Tiyatti, Ollappākkātu, Ezhamu Kali, Kaniippattu, Nāṭippattu, Vāṭiapattu, Chakkampottu, Adayappamottu, Palavappamottu, Nizhalkkottippattu, Bhadrakkalippattu, Thirattippattu, etc. All these songs are reflective of the spiritual thoughts and ideas of the masses. Also, there is a special series of folk-songs called Vāṭakkanpattu (songs of the north). All the Vāṭakkanpattu are heroic songs. They are folk-songs eulogizing the heroic deeds and achievements of certain heroes and heroes of exceptional courage and prowess who flourished in olden days in north Malabar. Though there are more than four hundred such songs, only thirty-five of them have been printed and published yet. These songs, which call for no special training or gift for their singing or require any special knowledge in music for their appreciation, take their roots in the hearts of the common people. Almost all these songs are connected, with Kalaris (schools where gymnastics are taught), Ayava (strategic feats of the duel fight), Payattu (physical training) and Aikkam (fight). Descriptions of the challenges by heroes, clashing of arms and the way how youngsters get out of danger by their intelligence and prowess are really exciting and exhilarating to read.

Most of the heroes in the Vāṭakkanpattu lived either in Kaṭattanādu or its suburbs. A good majority of the songs sings the praises of two powerful families Purūramids house and Taccolimāṇipattu, the former a Tiya and the latter a Nāyar family. Taccolimāṇipattu house was at Meppa in Puttappanam village near Vajika in Kaṭattanādu, and most of the songs relate to the great hero Otenakkuruppu of this house. Otenakkuruppu was born in 1589 A.D. and lived for thirty-two years. Therefore, the Vāṭakkanpattu may generally be placed in the 16th and 17th centuries A.D. Āramalekavar, Āramaluni, Ātinkunnam Ātunyārēca, Taccoll Oten, Taccoll Candu, Palāṭu Komappam, Bambāy Xākti, Purāṭum Kela and Kalparanpi Katham are the chief characters in the pāṭus. Especially the song about Uniyārēca is thrilling. Brief notes about the heroes and their families in the pāṭus are given below.

1) Purūramid Vitu. (Purūramid House). Āramal Cekavar, Ātinkunnam Ātunyārēca and Āramaluni were the son of Āramalakavar and mother of Āramaluni whose father was Kaṅnanpānu. It may be understood from the song pūthramya Vaika that Āramalekavar was born to Kaṅnanpānu when he was forty-two years old. One or two songs about Āramalekavar are extant, one about his playing a game of dice and the other about his fighting the 'pūthramya Vaika'.

After the game of dice, Āramalekavar went to his uncle at Mākavā Milsaccerritavittam; an expert in the game of dice—to study the art. There he spent a night with his uncle's daughter Tumplārēca, who became pregnant by him. Though people ridiculed her at this development Āramal cekavar took her as his wife when she delivered her child. Āramal Cekavar had also another wife Kāthunūlled of Alātūr house.

With regard to the pūthramya Vaika, Āramav as the Cekavar (Svākam, one who served) of Umukkōrēca, once went to fight with Aṁtākār Candu, his father's nephew, accompanied him as his assistant. Candu hated Āramav from the day the latter stood in his way of marrying Umukkōrēca.

Aṁtākār brought over to his side Candu, assistant of Āramav. Āramav killed Aṁtākār in combat and on his way home he slept living on the lap of Candu weary after the combat when the treacherous Candu thrust heated handle of the lamp into a wound in the stomach of Āramav who managed to reach home only to die there.

2) Ātinkunnam Ātunyārēca. Umukkōrēca, overruling the opposition of her father-in-law and mother-in-law, one day went with her husband Kaṁjunāram to witness Kūttu in the Allúmar temple. When they came to Āvaṭtām market after passing Tāṇīr market certain ruffians confronted them. The coward that he was, Kaṁjunāram trembled before the ruffians, but Umukkōrēca routed them with her skill in combat.

3) Āramalunā. Āramalunā, who as a youth heard from his mother Umukkānēca the story about the treacherous killing of his uncle, Āramal Cekavar, by Candu rushed to Kolattanūlo and killed the latter in combat.

4) Taccoll Oten. Otenan was a powerful Nāyar (Kuruppu) born in Taccoll Māṇikkattu house. His father was a nāyar chief well-known both as Purūraṭuvānnumur and Ātinnambū Tānsil. His mother was Uppāṭi, daughter of a woman called Tejī. He had an elder brother called Komappan and a younger sister called Uppicīrrū (Uppicīrrū). Otenan's father begot a son (Kanṭācceri Ĉāppan) of Mākkūm, the maid-servant of Uppāṭi. Ĉāppan grew up to be a constant companion of Otnan. Komappan (Komakkuruppu) brother of Otnan was a peace-loving, sedate person. Otnan mastered all the tricks of Karippayattu at the gymnasium of Matiloor Gurikkal. Otnan had also mastered the use of the Urumi (a thin sword). He was such a master in the use of the Urumi that he could, by one sweep of it, graze the throat of a man without cutting and sheathing a drop of blood. He was an expert in necromancy also. What could not be managed by the physical strength of Otnan, Čappan used to manage with his intellectual powers.

Otnan was born on the slope of a hill at Megpa one mile east of the present Vatakura railway station. Relics and remnants of Māṇikkattu family are there yet to be seen. Many songs have been composed about Otnan. One of them is his going to receive presents of cloth on Oman day from a stingy chief who, after the death of Otnan’s father, had become ‘Putuppannu Vāzhunvarav.’ Another song relates to his collecting taxes from Kotumala Kuvēkkampel on behalf of Rajā of Koṭayam. Yet another song is about his putting down the constrict and pride of Kuvēkkam of Kekki house. And, another song is about his killing Kālevi Otnan Nambyār. His fight with the mā/ppilas on behalf of the Rajā of Čirkkal forms the theme of yet another song. Another interesting song is about his making Koṭayakkal Kuvēkkal Māṇikkai, who was a bosom friend of his, though a philander put on the attire of a female and thus teaching him a good lesson in life. Another song describes the escape of Otnan, who went to see the construction of the Karimala fort, with the help of Čappan. There are also many other songs about Otnan.

The very marriage of Otnan is an interesting story. Māṭeviamma of Kāvijum cōctottu had a daughter named Čiru. Māṭeviamma went to Māṇikkattu house and requested Otnan to marry her daughter Čiru. Otnan refused to oblige her. But, Čiru grew up to be very beautiful girl, and Otnan, who saw her in that state felt a great passion for her. He sent Čappan to her for a pan (betel leaves for chewing) which she also refused. At last Čappan took Otnan disguised as a blind person to Čiru’s house. Čiru and Otnan got married without the knowledge of Čiru’s mother, who cursed them when she knew about the marriage.

There is another story about Otnan and Kattattanattu (Kattattanattu) Kuvēkkammi, the only daughter of the Rajā of Kattattanattu. A rowdy called Kēkkamp of Ponnāpurum fort forcibly carried off her. The Rajā, who tried to bring back his daughter had to return wounded. Otnan came to know that Ponnāpurum fort had once been given as dowry to his family and Kēkkamp was in illegal and forcible occupation of it. Otnan along with Čappan went and captured the fort. He released Kuvēkkammi from captivity and took Kēkkamp captive. The Rajā of Kattattanattu was very much pleased with this exploit of Otnan and married Kuvēkkammi to him.

There is also a story about Otnan fighting with the mā/ppilas of Čirkkal. The mā/ppilas did not honor the Rajā of Čirkkal during one of his tours, and the Rajā asked Otnan to put down the haughtiness of the mā/ppilas, and he did so. Kotumala Kuvēkkammi, the Rajā Pulikku, Matiloor Gurikkal and others are referred to in this story.

Katirū Gurikkal was a very powerful enemy of Otnan. The Gurikkal one day kept his new goat leaning against a jatropha fruit tree, and Otnan, in derision, commented about it thus: “Who is it that has kept the spear made of earth leaning against the tree on which usually spear made of gold is kept so?” The Gurikkal, angry at the insult challenged Otnan for a combat within three months from Wednesday, the ninth of Kumbhāla. On the appointed day Otnan went to Gurikkal’s combat field andutilus him, Pottuottukkattu and others. On his way home after the victory, Otnan remembered that he had forgotten his dagger on the platform of the peepal tree, and paying no heed to the advice of his friends he returned to the combat field and got killed there.

6) Yacondu Candu. Candu was Otnan’s nephew and was respected for his great prowess. Māṭu of Tākkattu was his wife. One day she went for worship in the Omallur temple where Kandar Menon of Tulunātum fort abducted her into his court. Candu was at the time, twenty-two years old. On hearing about his wife’s misadventure, he disguised as a Sannyāsin, entered the fort and fought single-handed against Menon and his army of 400 soldiers.

7) Pāṭiṭu Kaman. Koman Nāyar, another nephew of Otnan, son of Kuvēkkammi of Kappilippalētu, famous under the name Komappan. The family feud between the Gurikkals of Yom multitum and the Nāyars of Pāṭiṭu was a long-standing affair. There were seven Gurikkals during the days of Koman, and they had two sisters named Uninciranta and Unniamma. Koman felt a great passion towards Unniamma, who was bathing in the tank, and her brothers rushed to kill Koman. But Koman outlived all obstacles created by the seven brothers of Unniamma and the tale bearing Uninciruta because of the cleverness of the very intelligent Unniamma. Koman also got settled by Otnan the forty-two items of family quarrels and married Unniamma.

8) Pāṭiṭu Čakkuttu. In the song about Ādīṣṭa it is said Ālkkutti, an expert in the science relating to elephants, was invited for help when the seventh elephant of the Rajā escaped back into the forest. Ālkkutti hailed from Bombay. According to the song under reference Ālkkutti brought back the elephant from the forest to the Rajā, who, greatly pleased, gave his daughter, Kuvēkkammi, in marriage to him.

9) Purukkolattu Candu. Candu married a woman named Māṭu. One Vattéli Menon became Māṭu’s paramour by bribing her with a golden chain worth three thousand rupees, and she got her husband killed by this paramour. Candu had two dogs called Māti and Cokkam, and one of them kept guard over Candu’s dead body while the other went and informed Candu’s death. Kelu in great rage, rushed to the place, saw the golden chain presented to Māṭu by Menon and blinded one of her eyes.

10) Kurippamπu Kaman. This Čiva youth had a very chaste wife called Čāρu. One day when Kaman was away from home for tapping coconut palms for toddy Pottukollattu Čaja saw Čāρu, and having felt a great passion for her he presented her one night four pieces of silk and a gold ring. The next day Čāρu dressed her husband as a brahmin with the sacred thread on, and deputed him to return to the Rājā’s wife the presents made by her husband to her (Āryā) Kapanas succeeded in his mission, but the revengeful Rāja ordered him to be executed. Āryā went to the Rājā and after various discussions with him returned home.

NAUBANDHANA. A peak of the Himalayas. The peak came to be known by this name on account of the following cause. Once upon a time Hranyakasipu stole the Vedas and with them hid in the bottom of the ocean. Mahāvīra incanted himself as fish to restore the Vedas. The word then was submerged in water and the mahārāja escaped in a boat attached to the horns of the Makara fish. On earth flood rose up to the peaks of the Himalayas. The Sapiṇḍas attached their boat to a peak of the mountain and that came to be known as Naubandhana (nau-boor; bandha=tie). (Vana Parva, Chapter 187, Verse 50).

NAUKARSI. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 29).

NAVAGYA. The Navagyas are a group of the Angiras. In Ṛgveda, mention is made about them in several places.

NAVAKANYAKĀ(Ś). An important item of navaratri-pūja (A festival of 9 days, as observed by Saṅkti worshippers) is the worship of virgins. There are two kinds of virgins (from two to ten years in age) thus worshipped are called Navakanyakās (nine virgins). (See under Kumārīpūja).

NAVAMIVRATA. (Fast on the ninth lunar day). This is a special fast taken in the month of Tūlām (October–November) with a view to obtain ‘Bhukti’ (enjoyment or possession) and ‘Mukti’ (emancipation). The important rite of this worship is to eat fast on the ninth night of the bright lunar fortnight in the month of Tūlām and worship goddess Gaṇī. The navami is also called Gaṇinavami. Another name of this navami is Piṣṭakā navami. This name is given because on that day Piṣṭam (ground rice) is eaten and the goddess is worshipped. In the bright lunar fortnight of the month of Tūlām (Āśvinī), on the eighth night when the star is Mula and the Sun is in the zodiac of Kanya if there is the touch of Naumam it is called Aghārdanānavamī or Mahanavami.

Worship could be conducted on the days mentioned, by consecrating the goddess Durgā in nine temples or in one temple only. When the goddess is consecrated in nine temples they are meditated upon at nine separate places. In such cases Goddess Durgā should be consecrated with eighteen hands and the rest of the goddesses with sixteen hands. Of the eighteen hands one should be holding Ambā and damaru (a small drum shaped like an hourglass), and the remaining sixteen hands should hold weapons that the other goddesses hold. The nine goddesses to be worshipped are Rudrā, Ānandī, Pracāndī, Ānangī, Chandaśī, Candaśi, Candaśi, Candaśi, and Candaśi, and in the middle of these eight beings the great goddess Durgā who is Ugracandra and the slayer of Mahāśaana. Durgā is addressed with the spell ‘Om, Durgā Dur-gechāŚiva.’

Adoration, offering to ancestors and exaltation in sacrifice (Namaskāra, Svadānōkāra) and Vasākāra should be denoted by six words and the Aṅgas (organs) beginning with heart also should be imagined. This root-spell should be repeated resting the organs such as heart etc. on the fingers. He who repeats this secret spell of goddess, will never be troubled by enemies.

The goddess should be worshipped by meditating upon her as carrying the weapons such as Kapīla (skull), Khetaka (shield), Čhanta (bowl), Mirror, Tsariṣā, bow, divāna (flag), rāmaru (drum) and pāda (rope) in the left hand and Sakti (dart) Mūdāgha (trident), vajra, sword, spear, couch, wheel and Sālā (antimony) in the right hands. These weapons also should specially be worshipped.

In the worship of the goddess, a cow (sacrificial animal) should be beheaded with a sword repeating the spell Kāli Kāli and the blood and flesh of that cow should be offered as oblation to the goddess Pītā Mahā Kāli as Kāli Vajpeśvarī, lauhačāyayi namā. ’Offering to Pītā Mahā Kāli as Kāli Vajpeśvarī, lauhačāyayi namā.’ In the same way offerings of blood and flesh should be made to the goddesses Pāparakāśa in the North West corner, Cāraki in the North East corner and Vidārī in the South East corner. The same form of offerings should be made to the god Mahākāli in the South East corner. The King should bathe in front of this god Mahākāli and making an image of his enemy with rice flour, should break it. Then he should bathe with rice flour as oblation to the gods Skandā and Viṣṇu and worship the female ancestors such as Brāhma and such others in the night. As ordained in the Vedas, the Devi should be bathed in Paunārta (milk, curds, butter, honey and water) and then worship before her, uttering the spell ‘Jayanti-maṅgala Kāli, Bhadraṅkā Kapālinī, Durgā Śiva Kāśmīrī Bhatrī Śivā Śivā Namsu te.’ (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 185).

NAVARĀTRI. (The nine precious jewels). The nine precious stones are pearl, ruby, Chrysoapras, beryl, diamond, corail, jacinth, emerald and sapphire.

Mukta - mānīkya - vaisūryā - gomeda vajra-vidrumā/Padmarāga maratāśā milaśči yudhakāramma.

NAVARĀTRI. Legend says that there were nine scholars who handled philosophy and theology in the palace of the emperor Vikramāditya. These nine scholars were known by the name Navaratnas (the nine jewels). They were Dharavantari, Kapanakuta, Amarasthita, Saṅku, Veśānātha, Ghatakapara, Kalidāsa, Varāhānūra and Vararuci.

NAVARĀTRI. Navarātrīpūjā (nine nights’ worship) is done to goddess Durgā. Though this is observed throughout the whole of India, it is more prominent in North India than anywhere else. (To know the details regarding the origin of this worship, see under Sudarśana, Śivaśākha and Vijayādāśa).

As ordained in the Vedas, the Nine nights’ worship is to be made in the seasons of spring and autumn. These two seasons are called Kålaadhunīthin (the make of seasons). Diseases and deaths occur in these seasons in excess, and so it is ordained that this fast and worship should be conducted in the months of Mēṣha (Mēṣha) and Tūlām.

Vyāsa has ordained that navarātri worship should be conducted as follows. The things necessary for the worship and oblations should be collected on the new moon day. Only clarified butter could be eaten on that day. An open temple could be erected with pillars and flag-posts in an open flat place which is pure. It will be good if the shed has a circumference of sixteen cubits. There should be sixteen pillars. The shed should daughter. Nikumbhā was carrying since he had married her. As soon as he heard Śūrya’s words Sujihiva cursed his daughter thus: “Since the child in your womb is enveloped by fire the child born to you will be despised and rejected by people.”

Then Śūrya went to Nikumbhā and told her that though her child might be despised he would be a scholar, very well-bred and eligible for the worship of Agni. As years passed many children were born to her Śūrya. While she was living in the Sāka island Sāmbha, the son of Krāṇa, departed, she performed rites in the Śūrya temple at Śaṁbhupura. Nikumbhā’s sons were married to girls born in the Bhuja family.

NIKUMBHĀ I. A very mighty Rākṣasa. Son of Kumbhakarna (Rāvana’s brother) by his wife Vajramālī. He had an elder brother called Kumbhā. When Kumbhā was killed in the Rāma-Rāvana war Nikumbhā rushed to the front line and fought fiercely, and he was killed by Hanūmān. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Yuddha Kānda, Canto 77).

NIKUMBHĀ II. Third son of Prahlāda. (Adi Parva, Chapter 62, Verse 19).

NIKUMBHĀ II I. An asura born in the dynasty of Hiranyakasipu. Sundā and Uparasunda were his sons. (Adi Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 2).

NIKUMBHĀ IV. A warrior of Subrahmanyas (Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 58).

NIKUMBHĀ V. A king born in the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was the son of Haridva and the father of Sārṇhitakva (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 1).

NIKUMBHĀ VI. An asura born in the dynasty of Gaṇapati. The following story about him in the Nikumbhā state is told in Vāyu Purāṇa.

Sayaḍā, wife of Divodāsa used to worship in the Nikumbhā temple of Vārāṇasī for the sake of a child. As the worship did not yield the desired effect, Divodāsa smashed the idol in the temple into pieces. Then Nikumbhā cursed that Vārāṇasī should decline. As a result of the curse the Hēhayas like Tājānākha and others destroyed Vārāṇasī and drove Divodāsa away from there. At last the Nikumbhā temple was rebuilt and Vārāṇasī became prosperous again.

NIKUMBHILĀ. A particular spot in the forest outside Landkāpurī. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

NILA. A prominent nāga born to Kaśyapa Prājyā-yājñī of Kadrī. (Adi Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 7).

NILA II. 1) General. A King born in the Hēhayas dynasty. His was a rebirth of the asura called Krodhavaṇa. Nila was called Durudodhana also. Mahāmati was the capital of his kingdom. He attended the Śvaṇarvīrava of Draupadī. (Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 61).
  2) Other Information
    (i) Once he fought a fierce battle with Sahadeva, but Ultimately yielded to the latter at the instance of Agniyodeva. (See under Agni, Parā 8).
    (ii) He gave his daughter Sudarśanā in marriage to Agniyodeva. (See under Agni, Parā 8).
    (iii) During his triumphal tour, Karna defeated Nila. (Maṇḍūkya, Chapter 254, Verse 15).
    (iv) In the battle of Kurukṣetra he fought on the side of the Kauravas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 23).
    (v) He was reckoned as one of the mahārāṣṭras on the side of Durudodhana. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 164, Verse 4).

NIKUMBHĀ. A daughter born to Nārāṇā. (Amśūṭaka Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

NILA III. A monkey-chief, who was a dependant of Śrī Rāma. He was Agni’s son. Nila, son of Pāvaka (fire) shone forth like agni (fire). He stood foremost among the monkeys in the matter of effulgence, reputation and prowess. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bālākāṇṭha, Canto 17).

This monkey-chief was also included in the set of monkeys in the Rāma-Rāvana war Nila killed Pṛamāṇī, the younger brother of the Rākṣasa called Dūṣāṇa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 287, Verse 27).

NILA IV. A warrior who fought on the Pāṇḍava side. He was king of Anuṣpadeta. He fought against Durñaya and Ādvaṭhāmā and was killed by Ādvaṭhāmā. (Drona Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 28).

NILA V. A famous king in northern Pāḍālka. The Purāṇas refer to sixteen famous kings of this royal dynasty from Nila to Pratānī.

NILA. A daughter born to Kapiṣa of Kesīni. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 3).

NILA II. A Gopika. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was one day picnicking in Vṛndāvana with the Gopi women, and it was proved that he was not one of them. To dispel their pride Kṛṣṇa disappeared abruptly from their midst and sported with the woman called Nīla. Then she also became proud that Kṛṣṇa loved her more than the others, and she asked him to carry her on his shoulders. He stood there ready stretching his neck to carry her. But, when she stood with her legs parted to mount on Kṛṣṇa’s neck and looked for him he was missing; he had already disappeared. The Gopikās ultimately shed their pride and then Kṛṣṇa appeared before them. (Cevuśeri’s Malayalam Epic Kṛṣṇ Gathā).

NILAGIRI. Name of a mountain in the region called Līlavya of Jambū island. In Līlavya there are three chief mountains called Nilagiri, Śvetagiri and Śrīagāvan, and in their middle three Vārāṇas (regions) called Kamvakya, Hīrāmaya and Kuru. (Devī Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha).

NILAKANTHA DĪKṢITAR. A Sanskrit poet who flourished in the 17th century A.D. He was the court poet of King Tirumalā-Nāyaka. He has written works in all the branches of literature. His more important works are Śivallākṣyava, Gāṅgāvatarama, Nīlāṅkhanjavījaya, Cauṃḍī, and Kūkāvījāvījaya. Śīvatārtakavāna contains twenty-two cantos. Its theme is the sixty-four bhāṣā Divine sports) of Śiva installed at Madura. (South India.) Gāṅgāvatarama is a poem in eight cantos which describes the story of Bhagiratha bringing Gāṅgā down to the earth. In the first canto of Nīlāṅkhanjavījaya, A.D. 1638-39 is referred to as the period of its composition, and this reference helps us to determine the date of the poet.

NILINĪ. A wife of Suṇārāṇpa. A daughter called Śrīnī was born to him of Nīlī. (Adi Parva, Chapter 278).

NIMEŚA I. A son of Garuḍa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 104, Verse 10).

NIMEŚA II. See under Kālāmāṇa.

NIMI. A famous emperor who was the son of Ikṣvāku.
1) Genealogy. Descended from Visuṭu thus: Brahmā—
Marici—Kayāna—Vivavāna—Vaivasvata Muni—Ikyāku—Nimi.
Among the sons of Ikyāku, Daṇḍa, Viṅkuśi and Nimi became famous.
2) Vasiṣṭha's curse. Emperor Nimi was very generous with his gifts. He was interested in performing yajñas.
The feasting hall that can be seen even today near the ārama of Gauṭama Mahāarāja was built by emperor Nimi.
The emperor, a person of rājasic nature, decided to conduct a Yajña which would take a long time to end and which required much money for gifts, and he got his father Ikyāku's permission for it. Arrangements were made for the Yajña, and Rais like Bhṛgu, Aṅgiras Vamadeva, Pulasti, Pulaha and Rekha who were commander to perform yajña and great scholars in the Vedas were invited for the Yajña. Lastly he met his family preceptor Vasiṣṭha and told him thus: "Oh preceptor!
I have made all arrangements for a Yajña, which is my desire should last for five hundred years.
You would also come with me and see that the Yajña is duly performed."
Vasiṣṭha listened to Nimi's request with great attention. But, he had already been invited by Indra to conduct a Yajña which would last for five hundred years, and he would be able to oblige Nimi only after that period of time. So Vasiṣṭha asked the emperor to postpone his proposed yajña by five hundred years.
Nimi returned disappointed.
Nimi had no patience to wait for five hundred years.
So he started the yajña. Gautama as his preceptor.
After Indra's Yajña for 500 years was over, Vasiṣṭha came to Nimi's Yajña hall. Nimi, at the time, was in the inner apartment of his palace. Though his servants went to him to tell him that his preceptor Vasiṣṭha had come, they waited outside his chamber as he was sleeping then. Within a few moments Vasiṣṭha was able to wake up Indra. He raised his hands and said to Nimi thus: "Oh Nimi! you have insulted me, your preceptor. You disobeyed my injunction and began the Yajña. Therefore, let your body be parted from the soul and fall on the ground."
This curse of Vasiṣṭha alarmed the servants of Nimi so much that they roused him from sleep and told him all about the affair. Nimi hurried to Vasiṣṭha and prostrated at his feet. But, he did not shed his anger. This made Nimi also angry. He also raised up his hands and cursed Vasiṣṭha thus: "Oh muni! you who got angry without reason are worse than a Candāla. Therefore let your body also be parted from the soul and fall to the ground."
Vasiṣṭha got alarmed at the above curse. He ran up to and submitted his grievance to Brahmā, who told him thus: "My son, your action was really fool-hardy.
Yet, I shall advise you a way out of your troubles. You dissolve yourself in the effulgence of Mitra and Varuna and remain there permanently. After sometime you will be able to be born without being present in the womb of a woman. Then you will remember everything about your previous birth will acquire sense of righteousness and knowledge of the Vedas will become respected by all and will be omniscient.
The soul of Vasiṣṭha parted from his body on account of the curse of Nimi, saluted Brahmā, went to the ārama of Mitravārūṇa, and got mixed with their effulgence. Meanwhile Urvashi one day came to the ārama of Mitravārūṇa, who had seminal emission at her sight. The semen fell into a pot. The pot duly burst open and there emerged from it Agastya and Vasiṣṭha.
Nimi returned to the Yajña hall and told the munis about the curse on him of Vasiṣṭha. While the munis were helplessly looking on, Nimi's body got separated from the soul and fell down. The munis placed the dead body in an uncovered coffin, kept it free from putrefaction with the help of medicines and mantras and continued with the Yajña. At the close of the Yajña the Devas appeared and asked Nimi which did he prefer to have, a human body or of a Deva. He preferred to have a Deva body, and accordingly accepted to Svarga along with the Devas.
As Nimi had no sons to perform his obsequies the munis began churning the corpse repeating mantras and there arose from it an ideal person as glowing as Nimi. As he was created by 'māthana' (charming) the munis named him Mithi. Again, as he was created from a dead body he came to be known as Janaka also.
Further, as he was born from a Deva body from which the soul had departed he was called Videha also. The famous kingdom of Mitilā on the banks of the Gaṅga was founded by this Janaka.
Janaka, the father of Śūra, was a King born in this dynasty. To all the Kings born in this dynasty the surname 'Janaka' came to be applied. This dynasty is known as Janakavāsaṇa and Videhavāsaṇa after emperor Mithi. (Devī Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

NISA. The third wife of the Agni called Bhamu. To the couple were born seven sons called Agni, Soma, Vaśvānara, Viśvapatī, Sanjñitā, Kapiṣa and Āgraṇ, and a daughter called Rōhiṇī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 211).

NISĀDA I. A forest dweller. The grand sire of the Niṣāda tribe living in forests was Nisāda. Those forest-dwellers came to be known as Niṣādas as they were the descendants of this Niṣāda. The Purāṇic story about the origin of Niṣāda is as follows:—

Once upon a time there lived a King called Vena. A very immoral ruler, he was hated by the people. As dharma declined in the country due to the misrule of Vena the maharājas killed him with darbha grass sanctified by maṇḍras. Then the maharājas saw dust rising up everywhere and people told them that the poor people, in the absence of king, had turned into thieves and the dust was formed by the onrush of the thieves. To remedy the problem thus created the maharājas charged the thigh of Vena, who had died childless, for a son, and from the thigh was born a male child, dark in colour, dwarfish and with a compressed face. Sadly he asked them what should he do. They asked him to sit (ṣīrde) and hence he became Niṣāda (forest-dweller). His descendants settled down on mount Vindhyā and they by their sinful lives divested Vena of his sins. Vena was absolved of his sins through the Niṣādas, and thus the Niṣādas became responsible for the ending of Vena’s sins. (Vīṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 13).

NISĀDA II. A particular region in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 51).

NISADHA II. A King of Bharata’s dynasty. Nisadhā was the grandson of King Puru and the fourth son of Jana mējaya. A great humanitarian, Niṣadhā ruled the country to the satisfaction of everybody. (Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 56).

NISADHA III. A river near Mount Meru. During his triumphal tour, Arjuna defeated the people of this region.

NISĀKARA I. A mahārāja. Honoured even by the Devas he lived in his āśrama on the heights of Mount Vindhyā. One of those days Ṣaṭya and his elder brother Sampāti, under a bet, flew up to the Sun’s sphere. In his attempt to shield Ṣaṭya, who flew with great speed and neared the Sun’s sphere, from the scorching heat of the Sun, Sampāti’s wings got burned and he fell down on the heights of Vindhyā where he lay unconscious for six days.

Niṣākara mahārāja heard Sampāti crying and he saved the bird, which lived there for many years as the mahārājā’s slave. The mahārājā, who could foresee things told Sampāti about Śrī Rāma’s incarnation which was to happen in the future. He entered Śamādhi after finally telling Sampāti that monkeys would go there then in search of Śiśu, that Sampāti would point out to them where Śiśu was and that on that day his wings would automatically reappear and his legs would become strong. Afterwards for eight thousand years Sampāti led a solitary life in the āśrama. It was during this period that monkeys, in the course of their search for Śiśu got information about her from Sampāti. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa; Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa; Kiṃkhīṭha Kāṇḍa, Canto 60).

NISĀKARA II. A great munī, who attained Svarga after passing through many lives. His story is given below—

There was a great ascetic and erudite scholar in all branches of knowledge called Koṭakāra, son of muni Mudgala. Koṭakāra’s wife was Ḍharmiṣṭha, daughter of Vaiśēṣika. To them was born a son, an idiot and a deaf and dumb child, whom they foresaw at the gates of the mother’s house. At the same time an evil-minded Rākṣasa woman called Śūpākṣa, who was in the habit of lifting children came there with a lean child. She replaced Ḍharmiṣṭha’s child with the lean one and returned with it to the Śalabhanparvata where her blind husband asked her what she had brought for his food. She told him about the changelling child with her when he said as follows “Return the child at once to where it was found. The child’s father is a great man of knowledge and wisdom and when he hears about your action, he will curse us. So, return the child and bring the child of some one else.” As soon as she heard these words of her husband she rose up in the sky in great alarm. Hearing the cries of the Rākṣasa child left at their gates Ḍharmiṣṭha and her husband came out, and the child which, in its colour and shape resembled their child exactly, Koṭakāra said thus: “Oh! Ḍharmiṣṭha! this must be some ghost. Some one is lying here in the same form as our child to hoodwink and cheat us.”
Saying so he tied the child to the ground by chanting mantras with darbha grass in his hands.

Meanwhile Sarpaksi came there in invisible form. She threw Dharmaśīkhā's child from a distance into the courtyard. Kośākāra took his child. But all the attempts of the Rākṣasī to lift her child from the ground failed. The grief-stricken Rākṣasī reported the matter to her husband.

As soon as Sarpaksi left the place the magnificent Koleśa handed over the Rākṣasī child to his wife. He brought up his own child by feeding it cow's milk, curd, juice of sugar-cane etc. Both the children grew up to seven years of age. The Rākṣasī boy was named Divākara and the other child Niśākara. Both the children were invested with the sacred thread in due course of time. Divākara learned the Vedas, but Niśākara did not, and he was despised by all. His father pushed him into a neglected well and covered its mouth with stone.

Niśākara lived in the well for many years. The fruits of a cluster of plants in the well served as his food. Some ten years afterwards when Niśākara's mother found the mouth of the well closed with a big stone she asked as to who did so, and from the well came the answer, "I am the child you expelled from the well."" Alarmed at this the mother asked who was within the well, and she was answered, "Your son, Niśākara." Then she argued that her son was named Divākara and that she had no son called Niśākara. But, Niśākara told her about his past life and what had happened to him during the present life, upon which the mother roiled off the stone and Niśākara came out of the well and prostrated himself before his mother. He then went home with his mother. Questioned as to how and why these things happened by Kośākāra his son Niśākara described his previous life as follows:

Father, you would please hear about the reason why I became dumb and idiotic. In my previous life I was born in a noble family, my father being called Vrākṣapī and my mother called Vrākṣapī. My father was a king. He taught me all the Sāstras and the Vedas. I became convinced of my unique learning and erudition and began doing evil acts. Convinced of avarice, and I lost all my scholarship. I became indiscet. Having thus become a fool, I began committing sins. I had to hang myself to death on account of my association with others' women and stealing others' money. I therefore, fell into the Raurava hell. After a thousand years some sin remained attached to me as a result of which I was born as a tiger, and a King trapped and took me to his city. When I was caged Śastras about Dharma, Artha and Kāma came up in my mind.

One day the King went out wearing only one piece of cloth on his lower body. Then his wife Ajīti, a unique beauty came to me, and because of my taste in my previous life sexual desire arose in my heart. I told her about my feelings. She also felt like me. So, she unchained me and I approached her in great passion and seeing me thus the King's servants tied me to a peepal tree and thrashed me to death.

My soul again returned to hell. After a thousand years I was born as a white as in the house of a brahmin named Agnivesya, who had many wives. Then all knowledge and wisdom were reflected in my mind. My duty was to carry the brahmin women on my back. One day the brahmin's wife Vimāṇa of Navarāṣṭrā started for her father's home mounted on my back. Half-way home she got down and went to a stream to bathe. The exquisite beauty of that lady with wet clothes upset me, and I ran up to her on the stream, pushed her into the water and myself fell upon her. Then a person came and tried to tie me down. I escaped from his grip and ran southwards. While thus running the saddle slipped into my mouth and I fell down. And within six days I died thinking about her. Thus I fell again into hell. My next birth was as a pauper. A hunter caged me in the forest and he sold me to a Vāsya merchant, who put me up in the women's quarters. The young women fed me on rice and fruits. One day the wife of the Vāsya merchant hugged me to her breast and petted me. Her touch kindled my sexual feelings and I embraced her with my wings. In my hurry about the affair I slipped down and got crushed between the doors. Thus I fell again into hell.

Afterwards I was born as an ox in a camp of a Chandala. One day he yoked me to his cart and started for the forest in it with his wife. On the way the song a song, and mentally excited by it I looked back. At once I slipped my feet, fell down and died. Again I returned to hell. After another one hundred years I was born as your (Kośākāra) son in this house. All facts about my previous lives linger in my memory and now I am free from evils and am a virtuous person. I am going to the forest for tapas. Let the good boy, Divākara live here as house-holder. Niśākara thus did tapas for many years and attained Vaiṣṇava (Viṣṇu Parāśara, Chapter 91).

There is no definite evidence in the Purāṇas to establish that the Niśākara, the protector of Sampāti and the Niśākara mentioned above were the same person.

Niśāgī. A son of Dhrū vara. He was killed in the great war by Bhimaśena. (Kṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 4)

Niśātha I. A prince of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty; son of Balabhadrā born of Revati. (Harivansha). Niśātha also had participated in the usavā celebrations held at Raurava mountain by the Vīśṇavas. It was Niśātha who went to Kṛṣṇa's vāsapastrī with the dowry of Subhadrā. He was present at the Asvamedha and Rajāmena of Vāsudeva. After death he was absorbed into the Viṣṇava (Śrī Parva, Chapter 238, Verse 20; Śāhā Parva, Chapter 34; Asvamedha Parva, Chapter 66; Svargaśloka Parva, Chapter 5).

Niśātha II. A King of ancient India. After death he lived in the court of Yama worshipping him. (Śāhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 11).

Niśīrā. A river glorified in the Purāṇas. It is well known in all the three worlds. A bath in the river is as good as performing an asvamedha yajña. Those who bathe in the confluence of Niśīrā will attain Indraloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 138).

Niṣcyavana. Second son of Bhṛgpāti. He was sinless, pure and holy. (Vana Parva, Chapter 205).

Niṣṭhā. A King of Druva's dynasty. Puspāma was the son of Ukala, the son of Druva, and Niṣtha was Puspāma's son by his wife Prabhā. Niṣtha had two brothers, Pradosa and Vyūsa. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

Niśka. One palam (about one-sixth of a pound) of god. (Manusmriti, Chapter 8).

NIŚKRṬI. An agni (fire). A son of Śrīpata, he came to be known as Niśkṛṭi as he redeemed (Niśkrṭam) people from unhappiness. (Vana Parva, Chapter 229, Verse 14).

NIŚKUMBHA. A great asura. A dependant of the asura called Vyra-parvan, Niśkumbha, took part in many Deva wars. (Bhārata Parva, Chapter 59).

NIŚKUTA. An ancient region in India. The people of the region were defeated once by Arjuna. (Śabha Parva Chapter 27, Verse 29).

NIŚKUTIKA. A female attendant of Subrahmanyam. (Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 12).

NIŚṬĀNAKA. A prominent nāga (serpent) begot by Kaśyapa-prajapati by his wife Kadrā. (Aśvī Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 9).

NIŚṬHURAKA. A very prominent King, who lived in ancient times in South India. Once he had to depend on Śrīdatta, a King of North India. (See under Śrīdatta).

NIŚṬHURAKA I. A nāga born in the Kaśyapa dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 12).

NIŚṬHURAKA I. A nāga. Two of the sons of Kaśyapa-prajapati by his wife Diti became notorious fellows called Sumbha and Niśumbha. They were born and brought up in Pāṭāla. But as young men they came to the earth and began rigorous tapas taking neither food nor drink. After ten thousand years Brahmā appeared and asked them to choose their boons. They requested for Sumbha and for Brahmā to grant that boon. Thence they thought of another boon, which would in effect be as good as the first one; they wanted death to come, but to come in a manner impossible to happen. So, they requested Brahmā as follows: "We shall not meet with death at the hands of males among Devas, human beings as also by birds, animals etc. In short we should be killed only by women, let women kill us not." Brahmā granted them such a boon and they returned to Pāṭāla. There they lost their head over the boon and appointed Sukra as their preceptor. Sukra was so pleased at this that he made Sumbha sit on a golden throne and crowned him King of Dāiyas. Following this, lesser Kings began coming to salute the great King and pay tributes. Great dāiyas like the Candra, etc. Bhūmās, and Raktabija etc., became attendants of Sumbha and Niśumbha.

At this having established the power of the dāiyas thus Sumbha-Niśumbha gradually turned their attention towards extending the boundaries of their kingdom. The whole earth they subjugated. Then Niśumbha with great army marched to Devaloka to conquer Indra. A Deva war started. In the fight all the Dīkṣālikas were on one side and Niśumbha alone on the other side; the latter side was slightly defeated. Smitten by Indra's Vajrāyudha Niśumbha fainted; his army was also broken. As soon as news about the defeat of his brother was reported to Sumbha with the remaining Dīnavas hurried to Devakot. In the battle that ensued the Devas were routed. Sumbha assumed Indra's hood by force and the standard (flag) of the dāiyas was hoisted on the flag-staff of Sudharmā, the prince of Indra. Sumbha captured Kanadhitana, Ātriavana, Uccāśkrēsya, etc. The Nandana garden and the shades of the Kalpaka tree were turned into resting places of the dāiyas. Fragrant flowers of the Kalpaka tree adorned the hairs of dāiyas women. Sumbha drove away Kubera and took over Alakāpūri also from him. As Yama ran away from the kingdom, Kālpapūri also came under Sumbha. All the Dīkṣālikas took refuge in forests and caves. Thousand years rolled by thus. By then the Devas worshipped Mahādevi, who appeared before them. Kaśā with the help of Mahādevi stood before the Devas. As Kaśā was dash in colour she came to be known as Kālīkā also. Mahādevi, along with Kālīkā started for the capital of Sumbha-Nīśumbha. At the capital they ascended a mountain and sat on two rocks. Mahādevi sang such a melodious song that birds and animals lost themselves in its sweetness and stood motionless. The Caṇḍamānas, who were at the time passing that way were also attracted by the music. Having understood what it all meant they hurried up to Sumbhāsura and gave him a description of the supreme beauty of Mahādevi and Kālīkā. The description kindled great interest in Sumbha and Niśumbha about the devils and then they inquired their minister Suṣrūva to bring the devils over to them. Having heard Suṣrūva's mission the devils said as follows: "We do not have any objection to becoming the wives of your masters but, in the matter of my marriage there is a special problem. While playing with my friends as a child I had accidentally taken a vow. I was at that age a bit proud about my capabilities and strength, and the vow I took was that I would marry only someone who was stronger than I am. My friends called me a fool and ridiculed me about the vow. That only hardened my stubbornness and I stand by my vow even now. Therefore, please tell Sumbha first to defeat me in fighting." When Suṣrūva carried this information to Sumbha, and Niśumbha, they felt amused that a woman challenged them to fight. But, they had no alternative but to fight. So they deputed the mighty dāiya Dīṁārakasa with an army to fight Devi, and there ensued a fierce fighting between Devi and Kālīkā on one side and the big dāiya army on the other side. The whole army and finally Dīṁārakasa too was killed. Devi then retired from the battlefield to a place nearby and blew the conch. Sumbha-Nīśumbha heard the sound from it, and the next moment a messenger came and told them about the fate of the army and of Dīṁārakasa. They then sent a much greater army under Caṇḍamānas against Devi. But Kālīkā devoured them all. Raktabija, who next encountered Devi with a great force, also became food for Kālīkā. Then Sumbha-Nīśumbha entered the battlefield and they too were killed. Deva thus victorious regained Svaragā. (Devi Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

NIŚUMBHĀ II. The Mahābhārata mentions another Niśumbha, a dependant of Narākiṣa. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed this asura who towered up the path of the devas (devayāna) from the earth. (Śabha Parva, Chapter 38).

NIŚUNDA. An asura killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 12).

NIṬṬAMBH. A great mahārāja. He too was present in the company of the muni, who visited Bhīma on his bed of arrows. (Amaṭāśana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 8).
NITHA. A king born in the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. (Vana Parva, Chapter 120, Verse 9).

NITIGOTRA. A king born in the Bhrigu dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

NIVĀTAKAVACA(S). A sect of Dāityas.

1) Birth. Dāityas were the off-springs of Kaśyapaprajāpati by Diti. Two sons called Hiranyakāśi and Hiranyakasipu and a daughter called Sīhikā were born to the Prajāpati of Diti. Sīhikā was married by Viśvāsī and to them were born Rāhu and others who became famous as the Sāṁhikayās. Hiranyakasipu had four famous sons called Anuḥlāda, Hādha, Prahlāda (the great devotee of Viṣṇu) and Sāmhlāda. (Some texts refer to them as Anuhrūḍa, Hṛdā, Prahrūḍa and Samhrūḍa). Hādha’s son was called Rāda, Sāmhlāda’s sons were called Auyumān, Sībi and Bārāda, and Prahlāda’s son was called Virocana. Mahābali was Virocana’s son and Bāna was the eldest of the hundred sons of Mahābali.

Four of the sons asuras called Nivātakavacos were born in the family of Prahlāda. The army of the Asuras, which routed the Devas many a time, was formed by the Nivātakavacos and Kālikayās. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

2) Fight against Rāvana. After securing boons from Brahmā Nivātakavaco lived in the city of Mahāpuruṣa and they were a terror to the world. Rāvana longed once to defeat them and so besieged their city with his army. The two sides fought fiercely for hundreds of years. At last Brahmā intervened and conciliated them. From that day onwards the Nivātakavacos became friends of Rāvana. (Uttara Ramāyana).

3) Asmitā. The Nivātakavacos in company with the Kālikayās attacked Devaloka. Indra, who could not withstand the attack, sent his charioteer Mātali to Arjuna and brought him down. Most of the Nivātakavacos and Kālikayās were killed in the fight by Arjuna. (See under Kālikayā).

NIVĀTAKAVAYUDDHAPARVA. A sub Parva in Vana Parva of Mahābhārata comprising of chapters 165 to 175.

NIVAT. A mantra or hymn. ‘Uktha and Nivit are recited after the offerings in a yajña. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 14, Sūkta 86).

NIVITA. Brahmā’s wearing upper cloth or the sacred thread on the left shoulder and under the right hand is called Upavita; the same on the right shoulder and under the left hand is called prācinavāta and the same worn as a garland around the neck is called Nivita.

NIVRITTI. A king of the Yāsā dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

NIYATAYU. Son of Sruṣṭi. He was killed by Arjuna in the great war. (Drona Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 29).

NIYATI. A daughter called Lākṣmī and two sons called Dhātā and Vidhātā were born to mahaṛi Bhrigu of his wife Khyāti. Dhātā and Vidhātā married Ayati and Niyati, daughters of Men. A son named Prāna was born to Vidhātā, and this Prāna became father of Māyānandu and grandfather of Mārkaṇḍeya. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 10).

Niyati after her death became a Devi, and she continues to worship Brahmā in his court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 43).

NIYOGA. During the Vedic period there prevailed a system or custom which permitted either the husband or the wife who had no child by his wife or her husband to procreate a child in another woman or beget children by another man. That custom, called Niyoga fell into disuse after the Vedic period. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 256).

NODHIAS. A muni who lived in the Vedic period. He achieved all his desires by praising the Devas. (Rgveda).

NIKARUS. A king of the Yāyati dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

NIKAG. A king born in the dynasty of Vaivasvata Manu. 1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Brahmā—Marici—Kaśyapa—Vivasvān—Vaivasvata Manu—Mahābhārata—Pratāpika—Kṛṣṇa—Nikag. Nīka was the younger brother of Ikṣvāku. From Nīka was born Sumati, from him the king called Jyestha, from Jyestha Vasu and from Vasu Pratāp.

2) Nikag became chameleon. Nikag was an extremely righteous and generous King. Once, at Purkara he gifted away thousands of cows to brahmans. There was a brahmin called Parvata living near Purkara. He too was given a cow and it was after that the brahmin named Anāraka came. By then there remained no cow to be gifted. Anāraka came after Parvata had gone into the forest after leaving the cow at the pond (Purkara). Nikag had forgotten the fact that the cow had already been gifted away to Parvata and finding it there owner-less he gave it to Anāraka, who went away with the cow very much pleased. The King and his ministers also returned to the palace.

A very short time afterwards Parvata returned to the pond and felt very sorry to miss his cow. He searched for it here and there and at last found it at Anāraka’s house. Quarer ensued between the two, Parvata alleging that Anāraka had stolen his cow while the latter contended that it had been given to him by the King. Now, it was decided that the question should be submitted for arbitration to the King, and the contending parties went to the capital to see the King. At the palace they asked the gatekeepers to tell the King about their arrival. But, they did not tell the King, nor did he come.

Angered at this the brahmans cursed that Nikag be converted into a chameleon and live as such for a thousand years. The King heard about the curse and ran up to the brahmans and requested for absolution from it. The brahmans then said that after a thousand years Mahābhārata would incarnate as Śrī Kṛṣṇa and that as his touch Nikag, the chameleon would resume his former form as King. According to this curse Nikag was born as a chameleon in a neglected well at Dvārakā. One day Śāmba and others who happened to go near the well tried their best to take the chameleon out of it, to no purpose. At last Kṛṣṇa with his attendants came and took it out of the well. At Kṛṣṇa’s touch it resumed its form as King Nikag, and related the story of his curse to the onlookers, who stood there wondering.

3) Other information.

(i) After his death Nikag lived in Yama’s court worshiping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 8).

(ii) Nikag once conducted a yajña on the banks of the river Payuṇa in Varāhātipatha where Indra drank soma so much as to get intoxicated, and the brahmans danced with pleasure at the very liberal gifts made to them. (Vana Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 5).

(iii) Nrga was a King very dear to Indra. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 7).

(iv) Krsna granted salvation to Nrga who changed, at his touch, from chameleon to his former form as King Nrga. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 70, Verse 29).

(v) He did not eat flesh. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 70, Verse 29).

NRSAD. A mahārāja, who was the father of sage Kṣapa. (Rgveda, Mandala 10).

NRESAR. A Rsi, who lived in the Rgvedic period. His son was deaf. (Rgveda, Mandala I, Anuvāka 17).

NYAGRODH. A son of Ugrasena. When Krsna killed Karna Nyagrodha fought with Kṛṣṇa and others and was killed by the blow of Bahubhirā's shield. (Bhāgavata).

NYAGRODHAṬRTHA. A holy place on the banks of the ancient river Ṛavipravati in North India. (Vana Parva, Chapter 90, Verse 11).

O. This sound signifies Brahman. (Agni Purāṇa; Chapter 346).

ODRA (M). An ancient province of Ina, Mahābhirāja, Sāthā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 23 says that the King of this province had come to Dharmaputra with presents.

OCHARATHA. Son of the King named Oghavān. (M. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 38).

OGHAVĀN I. Grandson of King Nrga. He had a son named Oghavān and a daughter named Oghavāni. (M. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 2).

OGHAVĀN II. A warrior on the side of the Kauravas. (M. Karna Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 42).

OGHAVĀTĪ I. The King named Oghavān. There are seven Sarasvatī rivers in the world. These are Suprabhū, Kārīnāsūrī, Visālī, Manorānā, Sarasvatī, Oghavān, and Sūryen. In the Mahābhārata, Sālīya Parva, Chapter 38 we find that Oghavān was invited and brought to Kuruksetra. It was on the bank of this Oghavān that Bhismam fell and lay on the Saralāyā. (Bed of arrows). (M. Bāṣa Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 5).

OGHAVĀTĪ II. Daughter of the King named Oghavān. She is the son of Agni married her. (M. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 2).

OM. This sound is a combination of the three letters — A, U, and M. The A-sound signifies Viṣṇu. The U-sound signifies Śiva and the M-sound signifies Brahmā.

Akkro Viṣṇuruddhiṣṭa
Ukṣabramahavaraḥ
Makrāstusmitrambhirām
Pravaciṣṭātvasāmanāḥ](Vāyu Purāṇa).

The sound “Om” is called “Pranava” or “Brahman.” All mantras begin with the sound “Om.” Because of its sacredness, Śūdras and other low-caste people are not allowed to utter it or to hear it. They may pronounce it only as “Aum.” This sound includes all that has happened and all that is to happen. (Mādhyāmyamandita).

OMPĀTU. (Malayalam word for nine).

Nine grahas (nine planets), Sun, Moon, Mars, Budha (Mercury), Guru (Jupiter), Sūkra (Venus), Sāni (Saturn), Rahu and Ketu.

Nine Daivas, Gulkia, Vīṣṇu, Gandāntam, Visṇa, Uṣṇa, ekārjala, Sarpaśīras, ātman and Vaiḍūryam.

Nine Karmādāsīṁḥ. Sūrya, Ānanda, Yama, Kāla, Āka, Vāyu, Agni, Jāta and Bhūmi.

Nine Dīya. Dīya, Dīya, Dīya, Ācīr, Dīya, Sārī, Ācīr, Dhīravī, Pratśrīvānī, Lītā, Silpaśī and Svāmī.

Nine Togats. Kavi, Hari, Antariksa, Prahuśabda, Pippaliśa, Avibutra, Dharmiṣṭa, Camada and Kāra-hṭāna.

Nine kinds of Rāja. Sārvabhauma, Adhirāja, Narendra, Pārśna, Paśupātī, Mandhata, Bhaṭṭabhaṭṭa, Bṛhadvakra and Somavān.

P. A garden. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 346).

PADAPĀTHA. An ancient system of studying the Vedas. (See under Gṛhāṇa).

PADĀKTRA. See uktah Padakaṅṭha.

PADĪ. One of the eight sons of Janamejaya, a King of Kuruvanta. The others are Dhrūvarṣa, Pāṇḍu, Bāhika, Nāmaka, Jāmbiadvana, Kṛṣṇodara and Vasita. (The Pāṇḍu and Dhrūvarṣa mentioned here are not the fathers of Kuruvapādavaṃśa.)

PADMA I. A serpent born to sage Kṣatapa of his wife Kesi. (Śloka 10, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva).

PADMA II. A King, This King shines in the court of Yama. (Śloka 10, Chapter 35, Śaḥb Parva).

PADMA III. A soldier of Subrahmanda. (Chapter 45, Śaḥb Parva).

PADMA IV. A nīdi (treasure). This nīdi belongs to Kubera. (Śloka 39, Chapter 10, Śaḥb Parva).

Saṅkhuṇidhi, Padmapādhi and a Puspakavīṇī were presented to Kubera by Bhrāmaṇa. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa.)

PADMĀKARA. A character in the story in Svāyapīni describing the greatness of a Śivapīti. (See Rasabha).

PADMAKETANA. One of the children of Gaurḍa. (Chapter 101, Udyoga Parva).

PADMAKUTA. The palace where Suprābhā, wife of Śri Kṛṣṇa used to reside. (Dāksāniyā Pāta, Chapter 36, Śaḥb Parva).

PADMANABHA I. One of the hundred sons of Dhrūvarṣa. (See under Kauravas).

PADMANABHA II. A serpent. This serpent resides on the shores of the river Gomati which flows through Nārāyaṇa. This serpent once went to Bhīma and talked to him about Dharma. (Chapter 355, Śaḥb Parva).

PADMAPURĀNA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. (See under Purāṇas).

PADMARĀGA. See under Navarcatas.
PADMASARAS. A lotus pond of Utsara Bhārata. The Pāndavas on their way from Khāndavaprastha to Girivraja met Śrī Kṛṣṇa at this place and talked with him for a long time. (Chapter 20, Saḥā Parva).

PADMASANGHIKA. A lotus pond situated near Cediṣa. During the period of the Mahābhārata a company of merchants were attacked by wild elephants at this place. This is very nicely described in Chapter 55 of Vana Parva of Mahābhārata.

PADMASEKHARA. A Gandhiva King. Padmāvati of whom many stories are told in Kathāsīrīgāra was the daughter of Padmāvekha. Padmāvatī, the daughter of Padma, the said book is entirely devoted to stories about Padmāvati.

PADMAVATI I. A river which is the incarnation of Mahākali. (See under Gaṅga).

PADMAVATI II. Wife of Emperor Udayana. (See under Udayana).

PADMAVATI III. Wife of Gandhagupta son of Sahasarmanuvaṇa. (See Sahasraṃuvaṇa).

PADMAVATI IV. A female follower of Subramanya. (Chapter 46, Salya Parva).

PADMAVATI V. Daughter of Satyakesu, King of Vidarbha. Ugrasena married her. After marriage she went and stayed once in her father's house for a short period. During that time through illegal intimacy with a messenger from Kubera named Gebbila she became pregnant. She started to fear the hostile criticism from inside a voice said "I am being born to wreak vengeance on Mahāvira for killing Kālanemi." The son born thus was Kanasa. (Śrīśikhaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

PADMAVATI VI. Wife of Vaikṣya named Prajādi. Once Prajādi went to a nearby village in search of trade. Padmāvati and her companions were one day bathing in a river nearby when a Śūdra passed that way. Attracted by her dazzling beauty he remained there talking to her. The Śūdra named Dharmadhvaja was greatly enamoured of her and the companions of Padmāvati, noticing that, just to make fun of him said "If you abandon your life at the point where the rivers Gaṅga and Yamunā meet you can attain Padmāvati." Without any hesitation, thinking that what they said was true, he went and ended his life at the place suggested. Immediately he became a replica of Prajādi and stood before Padmāvati. The real Prajādi also came there then. Padmāvati was in a fix to choose the real husband. Mahāvīra appeared before them then and asked Padmāvati to accept both of them as her husbands. Padmāvati pleaded it was forbidden for women of her community to accept more than one husband and then Mahāvīra took all the three along with him to Vaiṣṇavīśī. (Kriyā Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 4).

PAHLAVA. A place of human habitation of ancient India. This is situated in the western zone. (Śloka 60, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PAJIHAVANA. A 42da. This 42da conducted a grand Yajña similar to Aṅgāragyaśīva and gave as fees to priests a lakh of gold vessels. (Chapter 6, Śānti Parva).

PAILA. A disciple of Vyāsa. It was the five disciples of Vyāsa named Sumanu, Jaimini, Paila, Suka and Vaiśampāyana who gave publicity to the original Mahābhārata. (See under Gṛuparaṃparā).

He was the son of a person named Vasa and attended the Rājasya of Vadhīpira. (Śloka 35, Chapter 33, Saḥā Parva). Pails was also one among those who visited Bhīma while he was lying on his bed of arrows. (Śloka 6, Chapter 17, Śānti Parva).

PAILAGARGA. An ancient sage. Ambā, daughter of the King of Kaśi, once practised austeritys in the Āśrama of this sage. (See under Ambā).

PAIṢĀGA. A kind of marriage. (See under Vīvaha).

PAIṬHAKA. An asura. This asura was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 38, Saḥā Parva).

PAKA. A mighty asura. Once this asura gathered a big army and went to fight against Indra. A great battle which lasted for several days took place in which the asura army was destroyed and Pāka killed. Indra got thenceforth the name Pākasāna. (Chapter 70, Vaiśu Purāṇa).

PAKAL. Malayalam word meaning Day. A story about the origin of day, night, dawn and dusk is contained in Vaiṣṇu Purāṇa. At the time of the great Deluge everything from gods down to the insects and the earth were lodged in Parabrahman (Supreme being). Brahmā sat in meditation to initiate what he termed as Jagatī, the four species of living beings like the devas, asuras, pitras and men. When the meditation proceeded, the Tamoguna in Brahmati became prominent and so first and foremost of all, the asuras were born from his waist. Then Brahmā discarded his Tamoguna and the manifestation of the discarded Tamoguna became Night. Brahmā sat again in meditation and from his face sprang out the devas, who were embodiments of sattvaguna. Brahmā discarded the sattvaguna and it then became Day. That is why asuras are powerful at night and devas by day. Then another manifestation with sattvaguna predominating sprang out from Brahmati and it was called Pitṛ. Brahmati discarded that also and it became Dusk. Brahmā sat again in meditation and then were born men who were a manifestation of Rajoguna. Brahmā discarded that also and it then became Dawn. That is why men are strong at dawn and the pitṛs strong at dusk. It is because of these that it is said that day, night, dawn and dusk are bodies of Brahmati. All the above four are an asubha of the three gunas.

Night is called Usā and day, Vyūsti. Sandhyā (dusk) is the time between Usā and Vyūsti. When the fierce and terrible Sandhyā commences, a set of ferocious demons called Mandeṣas desire to eat the Sun. A fight ensues then between the Sun and the demons and by the curse of Prajāpati the demons die daily though their bodies never perish. At that time the best of Brahmans with the sound of ‘OM’ vibrating recite the gāyatri and throw water upwards. That water transforms itself into Vajrāyūṣa and burns to death the wicked demons. The first oblation to the sacrificial fire is performed reciting the mantra which begins with “Śūryojyotiḥ”. “OM” is but Bhagavān Viṣṇu, lord of the Vedas with the luṣtra of Kṛ, Yajus and Śāma. The very utterance of the word ‘OM’ therefore, destroys the demons Mandheṣa. (Chapter 8, Aṣṭā 2, Chapter 6, Aṣṭā 1, Vaiṣṇu Purāṇa).

PAKHANDA. An ancient place of habitation in Dakṣiṇa Bhārata. Sahadeva one of the Pāndavas sent his messengers and subdued the country. (Śloka 70, Chapter 31 Subha Parva).
PAKKANÂR. Vararuci, the celebrated astronomer, got of a Candâli wife twelve sons. They were called "Paraça pêtta partikulam" (The twelve sons born of a Candâli). They were

(i) It was usual for all the sons of Vararuci excepting Vâyâlimâmânâlpan to assemble at the house of Agnihotri for the sridha of their father annually once. Once after the sridha, all of them sat together for their meals and the antarjâmâ (wife) of Agnihotri refused to serve an assembly consisting of Pâkanâr, a Candâli. When Agnihotri compelled her to do it she came to the place hiding her face with an umbrella. Pâkanâr enquired about the purpose of the umbrella and Agnihotri replied that it was the duty of chaste and devoted wives to hide their faces from other men. Then Pâkanâr asked that still the brahmin wife who hid her faces were lacking in devotion and chastity and the Candâli women were the only class of women who were chaste and devoted to their husbands. Everybody present there joined sides with Agnihotri and opposed the argument of Pâkanâr. To demonstrate the devotion of Candâli wives Pâkanâr took Agnihotri to task. On Parâcâgattan. 12. Pâkanâr, called his wife and asked "How much paddy do you have here?" "Five measures", she replied. "Pound half of it and bring it to me", Pâkanâr instructed. The dutiful wife pounded the paddy, cooked the rice and brought it to Pâkanâr. Pâkanâr asked her to throw the rice into the drain. She did it without the least hesitation. Pâkka nâr then asked his wife to pound the remaining paddy and bring the rice cooked as before. She did so and when she brought it before Pâkanâr he asked her to throw that also away into the drain. She instantly obeyed. That day both of them went without meals. They were so poor.

The next day Pâkanâr along with Agnihotri went to the tâla (house) of Agnihotri. Pâkanâr then asked Agnihotri to make his wife do exactly like what Pâkanâr's wife was made to do. Agnihotri immediately called his wife and asked her to take two and a half measures of paddy, pound it, cook it and bring it to him. "There is rice here ready in stock and so why should we pound paddy now?" Agnihotri's wife questioned. But Agnihotri insisted and so surrendering to the compulsion, she did as she was instructed. When she brought the rice before him cooked, Agnihotri asked her to throw it away into the drain. She hesitated first but when Agnihotri insisted she did so very reluctantly. Then Agnihotri asked her to take another two and a half measures of paddy, pound it and bring the cooked rice once again. The antarjânam (wife) flew into fury and showered on her husband a heap of abusiveness and hid inside and despite repeated requests from Agnihotri she never showed her face out again. Agnihotri admitted defeat and accepted Pâkanâr's view that a Candâli woman was more chaste than a brahmin woman.

(2) Once Agnihotri came to the hut of Pâkanâr. Pâkanâr called his wife to bring a 'pâlaka' (a wooden plank used for sitting) for Agnihotri to sit on. She was at that time drawing water from a well and the bucket was midway in the well with water. The instant she heard her husband call her she left the rope on the rope and rushed to the side of her husband. She did what was asked of her to do and then returned to the well. Pâkanâr followed her taking Agnihotri along with him. When they reached the well Agnihotri was dumb-founded. The bucket with water was staying in mid-air in the well exactly at the position at which Pâkanâr's wife had left it. The power of the chastity of the woman. (See under Vararuci.)

PALSA. See under Kâlamâna.

PAKSA. A female follower of Subrahmanya.

PAKSVAMSA. The Purânic version of the origin of birds is given below:

Descenting in order from Viṣṇu came Brahmâ—Marici—Kâtyâyaprajapati. The latter got of his wife Trâma (daughter of Dukha) five daughters named Kruñci, Bhûti, Sûyâ, Dhârrâjâ and Kâlki. From Kruñci were born the Uûkas, Bhûti gave birth to Bhûsas, Sûyâ to Kâmakshis and Dhârrâjâ to swans and geese. From those originated the entire bird family of the world. (Chapter 6, Aranyâ Kânda, Vâlmiki Ramâyana.)

PAKTHA. A King of Vedic times who was a protege of the Aśvins. Indra was kind to this King. In the Dâśarîthâ battle Paktha fought against Sudâs on the side of Trasadanyu. (Mândala 7, Âryâvarta.)

PÂLA. A measure of ancient times. (See under Trasara.)

PÂLA. A serpent born of the race of Viṣṇuki. This serpent committed suicide at the Sarpasatra of Jana-mejaya. (Mândala 35, Chapter 37, Adi Parva.)

PÂLAKA. A son born to the King Cândamahâsena of his wife Angâravati. Angâravati got two sons. The other son was named Gopilâka. (Kâthâmukâlalambaka, Kâthâkathâdigâra.)

PAKAVYÂ. The author of the famous book 'Hastây- yuvredasamihita'. This book contains 160 chapters dealing with Mahârâgasthana (great diseases), Kudâra- râgasthana (minor diseases), Sâlâyasthana (extractions of extraneous matter from the body) and Uttarasthana (diseases of the head). Pâlakavya taught this Ayurvedasamihita to Râmâyana, King of Angadêsa. (Agni Purâna.)

PÂLAL. One of the seven mothers of Subrahmanya. The other six are: Kâki, Halmâ, Brahmuikâ, Mâlinâ, Aryâ and Mitrâ. (Mândala 10, Chapter 228, Vana Parva.)

PÂLASAVANA. A sacred forest. Once the sage Jamadagni performed a sacrifice in this forest. On that occasion all the rivers in the world were present there carrying their water. The sage at this Yâga gave wine to all the other sages to their heart's content. (Mândala 15, Chapter 94, Vana Parva.)

PÂLT. A corrupt form of Sanskrit.

PÂLITA. A rat, a character in 'Bidâlapârâbhâ'. This rat held a conversation with Lomaśâ, a cat. (See under Bidâlapârâbhâ.)

PÂLITA. A female follower of Subrahmanya. (Mândala 30, Chapter 46, Sâlyâ Parva.)

PÂLLANYU. The name of the devotional songs sung by the Tarni devotional poet, Vînceslîtar.
According to Nyāya Vaiśeṣika-sūtras there are seven Padārthas and they comprise nine kinds of Dravyas which are the Pāṇačāhitas (five elements), Kāla (time), Dīk (space), Ātmā (soul), and Manas (mind). They are described below:

1) Prthvi (earth). The characteristic of this padartha is smell. Prthvi is of two kinds, Nitya (eternal) and Aṇiṣṭya (perishable). Nitya is in the form of atom, paramaṇa and amīti in the form of Kāraṇa. They are classified into body, sense organs and objects.

2) Jalā (water). Jalā has a cold touch. It is of two kinds Nitya and Aṇiṣṭya. Nitya is in the form of paramaṇa and Aṇiṣṭya in the form of Kāraṇa.

3) Agni (fire). It generates heat. It is of two kinds, Nitya and Aṇiṣṭya. Nitya is in the form of paramaṇa and Aṇiṣṭya in the form of Kāraṇa. There are four kinds of Agni: Fire of the earth, fire of the sky, fire of the stomach (digestive power) and the fire commonly used.

4) Vāyu (air). It is without form but with the sense of touch. It is also of two kinds. Nitya in the form of paramaṇa and Aṇiṣṭya in the form of Kāraṇa.

5) Akāra (ether). This is the carrier of sound. It is single and eternal.

6) Kāla (time). It is eternal cause for all actions embracing the elements. It is also single and eternal.

7) Dīk (space). Places like north, south, east and west which are eternal.

8) Ātmā (soul). It is related to knowledge and is of two kinds, Jīvamāṇa and Prāṇamāṇa.

9) Manas (mind). It is the sense-organ to enjoy pleasures. It is in the form of paramaṇa and eternal.

To know the views of Manu on the origin of the Pāṇačāhitas see under Srṣṣī.

Pāṇačābrahma-māśana. This is a divine cow with Brahman, Viṣṇu, Rudra and Śiva as its four legs and Nāḍāiva as the couch. Devī rests on this cow always.

7th Sandha, Devī Bhāgavata.

Pāṇača-cūdā. A nymph. Once Suka, son of Vyāsa by his magic powers entered the Akāra. Then a host of celestial maidens led by Pāṇača-cūdā stood watching him in admiration. (See under Suka).

Bhāma once told Dharmaputra that women were fickle-minded and the cause of evils. To explain his statement he pointed out to the conversation between Narada and Pāṇača-cūdā. Narada once conducted a world tour during the course of which he met Pāṇača-cūdā and asked her the characteristics of women. She replied thus: “Even beautiful, venerable and noble ladies would stoop to folly. It is not the habit of women to leave away charming men of wealth if they get them conveniently. Any woman can be tamed if you please her in the proper way. If women remain faithful to their husbands.

1 Pāṇača. One of the six principal dieties or systems of Philosophy founded by Kanādā.
2 Padārtha Anything which can be named or a category.
3 Dravya An elementary substance, the substance of properties.
4 Vaiśeṣika A characteristic or property of all substances.
5 Gunas. Motions, actions.
6 Sāmānyas. General characteristics.
7 Prakṛtis. A peculiar attribute, the eternal distinguishing factor of each of the nine dravyas.
8 Samenadi. Intimate union, inseparable inherence of existence of one thing in another.
9 Abhāsa. Nullity or negation.
10 Saṁkhya. Followers of the Saṁkhyā philosophy.
11 Vaiśeṣika. Followers of the Vaiśeṣika philosophy.
12 Pāṇačadā. The supreme being.
13 Ātmā. The individual soul contained in the body.
14 Vaiśeṣika. Brokhus.
it is because they are afraid of scandal. They will enjoy men without looking into their age or figure. The desire for men in women can be compared to that of Antaka (god of Death) for the lives of men. This is the secret of womanhood." (Chapter 38, Anuśāsana Parva).

PAñcadevis. Durūga, Rādhā, Laksunī, Saravati and Sāvitrī are the Pañcadevis. They are different forms of nature. (See under Devī and Prakṛti).

PAñcadhanus. A King of the race of Pāru. He was the son of Sṛṣṭiṣaya and the father of Somadatta. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 276).

PAñcagaina. An ancient kingdom of Uttarā Bhārata. During the time of the Pāndavas this country was prospering and Arjuna once conquered the ruler of this country. (Ugā 12, Chapter 27, Sābbhā Parva).

PAñcagaina. A sacred place of Uttarā Bhārata. The god of Death once sat at this place and practiced penance. From then onwards the place was considered holy. (Ugā 23, Chapter 34, Droṇa Parva).

PAñcaguni. Rohini, a daughter and Soma, a son, were born to Niśa the third wife of Manu, an Agnī. Besides them they got five sons in the form of Agnī: (fire) and those five are called Pañcaguni. They are Vatsarāma, Viśvāśrama, Sāmbhita, Kāpila and Agraṇī.

PAñcāja I. (PAñcājana). A mighty asura. This asura lived inside a conch. Sri Kṛṣṇa killed this asura. Sri Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadrārama were having their education in the Āśrama of the sage Sāndijopya. On the eve of their completing their education an asura named Pañcāja carried away the son of the sage while the child was bathing in the Prabhasāṭ烩rīta and kept him inside a conch where the asura lived. The sage, greatly grieved, asked his disciples to get him back his son as his Gurudaksinata (sees for the preceptor). Accordingly Sri Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma went to the banks of the river and prayed to Varuṇa. Varuṇa appeared before them and then they told him about the mishap. With the help of Varuṇa they killed the asura Pañcāja and got back the son of their guru. The conch in which the asura lived was taken by Kṛṣṇa. Because the conch belonged to Pañcāja the conch got the name Pañcājanyā. (10th Sandhyā, Bhāgavatī).

PAñcājaya II. Sagara of the solar race got a son named Ananatājaya of his wife Kesā. He became famous as Pañcājaya. He was the father of Ammu and grand-father of Dilipa. (Chapter 15, Harivansha).

PAñcājana. A Prājapati. He gave his daughter Pārva (Asita) in marriage to the great sage and law-giver Daksā. (5th Sandhya, Bhāgavatī).

PAñcājanas. Brahunīs, Kṣatriyas, Vaśyas and Śudras are the four castes. Nīdāsas form the fifth caste. All these five are collectively called Pañcājanas. (Sukrā 80, Anuwākā 14, Māndala 1, Rgveda).

PAñcājanya. A beautiful Lādangā of Viṣvarūpa. King Śrīvastra of the lunar race married this girl and they got five sons named Sumati, Rāstrabhrī, Sudarśana, Āvaraṇa and Dīmārakutu. (5th Sandhya, Bhāgavatī).

PAñcājanya I. The conch of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (See under Pañcāja).

PAñcājanya II. A forest near the mountain of Raivataka. (Dāśāityā Pātha ; Chapter 38, Sābbhā Parva).

PAñcājanyā. III. An agnī (fire). It was so called because it was born of the parts of five ages. It was called Tapa also. (Chapter 220, Vana Parva).

PAñcāka. One of the two soldiers presented to Subhrāmanya by Indra for the battle between the devas and asuras. The other was named Ukritra. (Sukrā 35, Chapter 45, Sālīya Parva).

PAñcākaraṣavatsāyana. A Vedic preceptor. Because Pañcākaraṇa was born in the family of Vatsyā he got the name Vatsāyana.

In the language of Yogic treatises the seven life-winds in the human head are called the 'Saptasāvāras' (seven airs). Pañcākaraṣavatsāyana had a clear knowledge of these Saptasāvāras and has given a vivid description of them. (Taittirīya Aranyaka).

PAñcākaraṇa. An ancient county of western Bhārata. Nakula, one of the Pāndavas, conquered this country. (Chapter 32, Sābbhā Parva).

PAñcākṣaramahātmya. Namāsīvīya composed of five letters (Na māḥ—i—va—ya) is called the mantra of Pañcākṣara. There is a story in Śiva Purāṇa about the powers one can acquire by uttering this mantra. (See under Kālayāda).

PAñcāla I. An ancient village of Bhārata. (Chapter 38, Śrīma Parva).

PAñcāla II. A sage. He worshipped God according to the doctrines laid down by Vāmanda and by the blessing of God attained the Kramavibhāga in the Vedas. (Sukrā 102, Chapter 342, Śānti Parva).

PAñcāla III. An ancient county of Bhārata. Draupadi, wife of the Pāndavas, was the daughter of Drupada, King of Pañcāla. (See under Drupada).

PAñcāla I. Draupadi, wife of the Pāndavas. 1) Pātiscāla. Pañcālī had many previous births. During all these births many gods blessed her saying that she would have five husbands when she was born as the daughter of Drupada. Stories about her previous births lying scattered in the Purāṇas are given below:—

1) Māyasītā. When Rāma and Lakṣmāna were in exile in the forest with Śītā, Agni came to Rāma once and told him in private thus: "Oh Rāma, you have incarnated on earth to kill Rāvaṇa. The time for that is drawing nigh and ere long Rāvaṇa would carry away Śītā. It is not proper that Śītā, the incarnation of Lakṣā, should be touched by Rāvaṇa. Therefore I shall keep Śītā safe with me and I am giving you a phantom Śītā to be with you in her stead." Śrī Rāma took the Māyasītā from Agni without even Lakṣmāna knowing it and handed over the original Śītā to the custody of Agni.

While thus Śrī Rāma, Lakṣmāna and Māyasītā were living together in their hermitage a golden deer was seen one day in the precincts of their Āśrama. Śītā was enamoured of the beautiful deer and wanted it. So Rāma keeping Lakṣmāna to watch over Śītā went in search of the deer. Śītā Rāma tried his best to capture the deer alive. But all his efforts failed and by that time he had come far from the Āśrama following the deer. So he discharged an arrow and killed it. While falling dead the deer raised a cry imitating that of Rāma's and called Lakṣmāna for help. The deer was none other than Mākas, the uncle of Rāvaṇa. On hearing the call for help Lakṣmāna rushed to the spot from where the sound came and Śītā was left alone for some time. Rāvana came to the Ārāma at that time and took the Māyāsīta away to Lākṣā. Rāma and Lākṣāmaṇa went to Lākṣā with an army of monkeys and after killing Rāvana took back Śītā to Ayodhya. Then Rāma in deference to public opinion put Śītā into the fire to test her purity. At that time god Agni taking back Māyāsīta gave the real Śītā to Rāma, unscathed by the fire. Then, when Māyāsīta was thus abandoned by Rāma she bowed down before Śrī Rāma and Agni and asked them thus “What am I to do now? Where should I go?” They advised her to go to Puskara and do penance there and blessed her saying that at the successful end of her penance she would become Svaragalkasi. Paripānavi was pleased by her penance and appearing before her asked her what boon she wanted. Māyāsīta who had become Svaragalkasī by then requested Śiva to give her a husband. She repeated the request ‘Pātān dehi’ (Give me a husband) five times and Śiva said that she would have five husbands in her next life as the daughter of the King of Pāṇḍava with the name Kṛṣṇa. (9th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

ii) Nālāyant (Indra’s wife). Once there was an aged sage named Maudgalyā. Nālāyant alias Indrasī was the wife of Māudgalyā. Even though the wife was young and the husband old, Nālāyant was very chaste. The sage became very old, grey-haired and ruggos, skeleton-like with a foul smell emanating from his body. He was always in an angry mood. Still Nālāyant stuck to him as a chaste, loving and dutiful wife. As time passed on Māudgalyā became a leper. One day while the sage was eating, a finger of his broke and fell into the rice. With great calmness and devotion Nālāyant removed the finger from the rice and ate the rice. Greatly pleased at this act of hers the sage asked her what boon she wanted and she replied she desired to have an amorous life with him as Pāṇḍarā. Māudgalyā granted her the boon and they both travelled the world together living an amorous life. Wherever the sage took the form of a mountain Nālāyant became a river and when the sage took the shape of a flowering tree she became a creeper on it. They spent thousands of years like that and then Māudgalyā became tired of a sexual life and returned to the ascetic life. Even after such a long period of erotic life Nālāyant was still lustful and she shouted the decision of her husband to go back to the life of a hermit. She begged her husband to continue the same life for some more time. Māudgalya got cross when she thus caused hindrance to his penance and cursed her saying that she would in her next life be born as the daughter of the King of Pāṇḍava when she would have five husbands to satisfy her lust. Greatly grieved at this curse the practiced severe austerities standing in the midst of Pāṇḍarā. Pleased with her penance Śiva appeared before her and blessed her saying that she would be born in her next birth in a very noble family and she would then have five husbands, good-natured, doing godly work and equal in value to Indra. She then pleaded that she should be granted the boon to remain a virgin during the coitus with each of her husbands. Śiva granted that wish. Then Śiva sent her to the river Gaṅgā, and asked her to fetch a beautiful young man whom she would be seeing there. Accordingly she went to the river to do as she was directed.

At that time all the devas joined together and performed a Yāga at Naimiṣārṇya. Kāśī, the god of Death, was one of the chief priests for the function. The Yāga lasted for a long time and since Kāśī was consecrated for the Yāga he did not attend to his duties as the god of Death. Death came to a dead stop and then increased in alarming numbers and the devas were perplexed. They went to Brahmā and acquainted him with the frightening situation. Brahmā sent them to Naimiṣārṇya. They went there and were talking to Kāśī when they saw a few golden flowers coming down the river. Getting curious Indra walked up the river to locate the origin of these flowers. When he reached the place of origin of Gaṅgā he saw Nālāyant there. Nālāyant took the beautiful young man to Śiva. Śiva was at that time engaged in a game of dice with Pāṇḍava and Indra did not then recognize Śiva. Indra in his arrogance argued that the whole universe belonged to him. Śiva jumped up enraged and ran after Indra who ran to the mouth of a cave. Śiva caught him and said that he would show him four Indras inside that cave. Both of them entered the cave and to the amazement of Ādhiput this four other Indras sitting inside the cave. They were all the creation of Śiva and with the original Indra the number of Indras came to five. Then addressing Nālāyant who had followed them Śiva said, ‘Oh beautiful girl, do not be worried. All these five are your husbands. You will be born as the daughter of the King of Pāṇḍava. Then all these five will be born in the lunar race and will marry you.’

The Indras agreed to be born on earth and do the work of God. After that they all went to Mahāviṣṇu and requested him to give them mighty accompaniments to fulfill their mission. Then Mahāviṣṇu plucked two hairs from his body, one white and the other black, and dropped them on the ground. The black hair was born as Śrī Kṛṣṇa, the white hair was born as Balarāma, to help the Pāṇḍavas later. Pāṇḍali’s two previous births can be explained thus: Agnideva created Māyāsīta who in turn became Svaragalkasi to be born as Pāṇḍali. Sāyant was a part of Mahāviṣṇu and so also Nālāyant who became Pāṇḍali was a part of Lākṣā. Pāṇḍavas are known to be the sons of five gods and they used for the precease four the Pāṇḍavas Indrasīna (part of Indra) thus making them all Indras. (Chapters 197 and 198, Adī Parva).

2) Birth of Pāṇḍali. Pāṇḍali was born in the palace of Drupada, King of Pāṇḍava. She had a brother named Dhyātadyumna. There is a story about their birth in the Purāṇa:

Anusho Sivasānta insinuated Droṇa his classmate in the Gurukula and Droṇa kept in mind the intent to wreak vengeance on Drupada. Drupada, therefore, wanted a son to be born who would defeat Droṇa in a battle. Brahmās advised him to conduct a Yāga for that purpose. He decided to conduct one on a large scale and went about in search of a Yāja (one who performs sacrifices according to Vedic rites) and searched Kaltamārṣapin on the banks of the river Gaṅgā. There he saw a brahmin’s house where lived two sages named Yāja and Upāyāja. They were in figure and nature alike. At first Drupada went to the younger of the two, Upāyāja. He went near him and after massaging his feet and legs requested him to officiate in a Yaga aimed at getting for his son a son to conquer Draupáda in a battle. He promised to give him ten crores of cattle for that and anything else the sage wanted. These promises did not make the sage consent to conduct the Yaga and to the King started at the śramaṇa serving the sage. A year went by and one day the sage appeared cheerful and told Drupáda thus: "Oh my brother who was walking one day in a stream saw a fruit lying on his way and ate it without ascertaining whether the fruit was pure or not. Again, I have seen him taking food from others freely and eating it. I think he is sinful about wealth and, perhaps, if you approach him he may help you."

Drapapáda went to Yaja and after serving him to please him made his request promising him much wealth. Yaja was ready to perform the Yajña. Upáyája came to them at that time and Yaja consulted his brother before going to perform the Yajña. The Yaga was successfully conducted and at the end the priest Yaja called the wife of Drupapáda and gave her hāvyā (clarified butter). Because the hāvyā was prepared by Yaja and was offered by Upáyája the sage said that the woman would get men children. While Yaja was offering oblations to the sacrificial fire a boy with a crown on his head and bearing a sword and a bow in his hands emerged from the fire. The two present there then said that, that boy would kill Draupáda. He was named Dhṛṣṭadyumna. Then from the dais of the Yaga fire emerged a beautiful lady of dazzling brilliance. Immediately a voice from heaven was heard: "Oh Yaja! You have destroyed Draupáda. He was the grand-daughter of Prásadal and Drupapáda because she was the granddaughter of Prásadal and Draupáda because she was the daughter of Draupáda and Páncālī because she was the daughter of the King of Páncāla, Páncālī grew up in the palace of Drupapáda. (Chapter 167, Adi Parva).

3) Marriage. After escaping from the lap of the Pandavas reached a village named Ekacakra after walking a long time through the forests. There they stayed in a brahmin's house. Every morning they would go in disguise for begging and return with the money in the evening. This was their daily routine. On one day while they were in their daily round they saw a group of brahmins and they said they were going to the Swayamvāra of the daughter of the King of Páncāla. The brahmins invited them also to come along with them describing in detail the beauty of the girl and the elaborate and festive arrangements made for the marriage. The Pandavas went to Páncāla along with the brahmins. On the way they met Vedavyāsa and receiving blessings from him they went to the capital city of Páncāla and took their abode in the house of a potter. Nobody knew who they were. Drupapáda placed a very costly base in the marriage hall. When all the distinguished guests were seated in the marriage hall, the King announced that his daughter would be given in marriage to him who bent the steel bow and with it shot a steel arrow, through the central aperture of a revolving disc, at a target placed above. Many valiant princes from all parts of Bharata including the Kauravas had gathered there. When it was time for the ceremonies to begin Páncālī clad in beautiful robes with a bewitching charm which excited the royal assembly entered the hall with a garland in her hands. Then Dhṛṣṭadyumna brother of Páncālī said "Hear ye, oh princes, seated in state in this assembly, here is the bow and the arrow. He who sends five arrows in succession through the hole in the wheel and unerringly hits the target shall win my sister."

Many noted princes rose one after another and tried in vain to string the bow. It was too heavy and stiff for them. Then Arjuna rose and meditating on Nabāyana, the Supreme God, strung the bow with ease and hit at the target. Páncālī then put the garland on Arjuna's neck and accepting him as her husband went with him and stayed that night at the house of the potter. Drupapáda that night went to the house of the potter to make enquiries about his daughter and son-in-law. His joy knew no bounds when he learnt that his son-in-law was none other than the celebrated Arjuna. The Pandavas then took Páncālī to their home in Ekacakra and as soon as Kuntīdevī heard the footsteps of her sons outside she said from inside asking them to share that day's alms among themselves little knowing that it was a bride that had been brought by them. Thus Páncālī became the common consort of the five Pandavas. Then the marriage of Páncālī was ceremoniously conducted after inviting friends and relatives. The Pandavas then built a new palace at Indraprastha and lived there. (Chapters 193 to 220, Adi Parva).

Śrī Kṛṣṇa was present there along with the leading members of the clan of Vṛśali. He could recognize the Pandavas in spite of their disguise. Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to the potter's house and visited them. He gave them valuable presents on the occasion of their marriage.

4) Making Draupadī naked. Once Duryodhana challenged Dharmaputra to a game of dice. Dharmaputra lost all and in despair pledged Draupadī and lost her. Immediately Duryodhana asked Vidura to bring Draupadī to his palace and make her serve as a servant maid. Vidura did not consent to that. Then Duryodhana asked Pārīkṣikā to bring her. While entering the palace of Draupadī, Pārīkṣikā was as timid as a dog about to enter the cage of a lion. He informed Draupadī of his mission. Draupadī sent him back and then Duryodhana sent another messenger. Draupadī went with him to the court of the Kauravas. As soon as Duṣṣāsana saw Draupadī he jumped at her and caught hold of her hair and dragged her to the centre of the assembly. When Duṣṣāsana dragged her thus she said in piteous tones "I am in my monthly period and I have only the lower garment on me. Please do not take me to the assembly."

Duṣṣāsana was not moved by these pleadings and he dragged her still. Kṛṣṇa could not hold himself calm against this atrocity any longer and in a roar of wrath he abused Dharmaputra for pledging Pāncālī thus and losing her. Arjuna however remained gentle with Bhima. Then to the consternation of all, Duṣṣāsana started his shameful work of pulling at Pāñcālī’s robes to strip her of all the clothes. All earthy aid having failed, Draupadi in utter helplessness implored divine mercy and succour. Then a miracle occurred. In vain did Duṣśāsana toil to pull the garments completely and make her naked. As he pulled off each, fresh garments were seen to come from somewhere and cover her nudity. Duṣśāsana retired from his work exhausted and disappointed. Then Kuru ordained that Draupadī should be sent to the palace of Duryodhana as a servant-maid. Hearing this, Duṣśāsana once again started dragging her. Draupadi wept. Bhuja roared in fury and said that if his brother, Dharmaputra, gave him permission he would at that instant smash to death the Kauravas just like a lion killing the animals. Bhuja and Droṇa interfered and pacified him. Duryodhana stood up and striking his right thigh with his right hand challenged Bhuja to a fight. Bhumisena did not like Duryodhana exhibiting his naked thigh in front of Draupadi and angrily Bhuja declared that he would in a battle break Duryodhana’s thigh with his mace. Dhrūtarāṣṭra came to the scene and pacified both of them and turning to Duṣśāsana he said to his son, “You have not given your consent to me. I have asked you for the hand of Draupadī. In order that my son, Prativindhya, should not be called a ‘disaputra’ (son of a servant) his father Dharmaputra should be released from his servitude.” The boon was granted. Then she requested that all the other Pāṇḍavas should be set free. That was also allowed. Dhrūtarāṣṭra then asked him to name a third boon. Pāñcālī then said that all Kaurava women were entitled only to two boons and so there was no need for a third. Then Draupadi took a vow that her hair which was let loose by the wicked Duṣśāsana would be tied properly only by a hand tainted by the blood of Duṣśāsana. After that in strict obedience to the conditions of the wager the Pāṇḍavas started for the forests with Draupadi to spend twelve years in the forests and one year ignicot. (Ten Chapters from Chapter 68, Sāthā Parva.)

5) Vanavāsa of Pāñcālī. (Life in the forests). During the exile of the Pāṇḍavas in the forests Pāñcālī was involved in many events of which a few important ones are given below:

(i) Kīrmā’s attack. When the Pāṇḍavas were in the Kāanyakavāna, Kīrmā, the brother of Baka, came to the ārāma where Pāñcālī was taking rest. The demon was such a fierce-looking giant that Pāñcālī was forced to shut her eyes by fright and she became wearied like a river in the midst of five hillocks. Bhumisena immediately ran to her rescue and killed Kīrmā. (Chapter 11, Vana Parva.)

(ii) Pāñcālī comforted Dharmaputra by her soothing words. (Chapter 27, Vana Parva.)

(iii) Once when her woes became unbearable she condemned the devas. (Chapter 5, Vana Parva.)

(iv) While the Pāṇḍavas were on the mountain Gudhamādī, Pāñcālī persuaded Bhuja to bring for her the Saugandhikā flower. (See under Bhuja.)

(v) While the Pāṇḍavas were living in the Bādrikāśrama waiting for the return of Arjuna who had gone on a year’s pilgrimage, Pāñcālī was carried away by Jātāsura. (See under Jātāsura.)

(vi) After she was rescued from Jātāsura, Pāñcālī along with her husband dwelt in the hermitage of Arṣūsiṇa. (See under Arṣūsiṇa.)

(vii) Once Draupadī gave instructions on the duties of a wife to Sā)yāhbhamā who came to the forests along with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 233 and 234, Vana Parva.)

(viii) Once Duryodhana with his disciples came to the forest as the guests of the Pāṇḍavas. They came late and Pāñcālī had taken her food already. The Akṣavāya (the never-empty pot) could not be invoked to produce anything that day and Pāñcālī was greatly agitated and worried. She prayed to Śrī Kṛṣṇa for succour and Śrī Kṛṣṇa also coming hungry searched in the pot for something to eat and finding a bit of spinach stirring to the sides of the pot grabbed it with avidity and ate it. The guests felt as if they had enjoyed a sumptuous feast and left the place well pleased. (See para XII under Duryodhana.)

(ix) Jayaḍratha carried away Pāñcālī from the forests once. The Pāṇḍavas rescued her. (Para 4 under Jayaḍratha.)

6) Life ignicot. After their twelve years of exile in the forests the time for living in disguise for a year came and Dharmaputra and his brothers with Pāñcālī spent that period in the palace of the King Virata. Each assumed a new name and accepted different types of service under the King. Pāñcālī took the name of Sastrapriya and served as a companion and attendant to the princess. One day Kīcaka, the mighty brother-in-law of the King, tried to molest Pāñcālī and Bhumisena killed him. (See under Kīcaka.) It was at the time when the ignicot life was coming to an end that the Kaurava army was defeated by the King’s army. The King was present from the palace at that time and the prince, Uttara, had not the guts to go and attack the Kaurava army. It was Pāñcālī who then suggested sending of Bhrāntiratha of the palace (Arjuna) to serve as charioteer of Uttara. (See under Arjuna, Para 24.)

7) Subsequent events. The thirteen years of life in exile and ignicot came to an end. But the Kauravas were not prepared to give half of the kingdom to the Pāṇḍavas. The differences between them increased and it led to a great war. Śrī Kṛṣṇa agreed to go as a messenger to the court of Dhrūtarāṣṭra and ask for the share of the Pāṇḍavas. Before leaving he asked each one of the Pāṇḍavas what he should say at the court of Dhrūtarāṣṭra. Pāñcālī then approached Kṛṣṇa in private and said she desired for a war to defeat the Kauravas. She then reminded Kṛṣṇa of a vow taken by Bhumisena that he would tie her hair with his hands smeared with the blood from the thigh of Duṣśāsana. The peace-mission of Kṛṣṇa failed and the famous Kurukṣetra battle started. Many valiant warriors on both sides were killed. When Abhimanyu was killed Subhadra wept bitterly and Pāñcālī who went to console her fainted. Śrī Kṛṣṇa revived her. Pāñcālī asked Bhumisena to bring to her the inborn jewel on the head of Āstvatārama, son of Droṇa. She wanted to take revenge on him for killing her brother Dhrūtarāṣṭra.
After a fierce battle for eighteen days the Kauravas were defeated and their tribe annihilated. Pândavas took hold of Hastinápurá and Påñcákí was one among those who persuaded Dharmaputra to take charge of the administration of the state as its ruler. Dharmaputra performed an Ásvamedha-yajña and Påñcákí gave presents to Utirángáci and Usha; who were present for the function then. After the Ásvamedha Draupadi lived in Hastinápurá serving Kuntí and Gándhári alike for a long time. It was at that time that Dháparástra, Kuntí and Gándhári went to the forest and Draupadi expressed her desire to go along with them to be of help to them. But they did not allow her to do so. While the Pândavas were living in Hastinápurá as the rulers of the country eminent rishis from different parts of the country visited them and some of the Siddhas (realised souls) among them saw Påñcákí as the goddess Mahálaśtri herself. (Sloka 9, Chapter 25, Ásvamárama Parva).

8) Death of Påñcákí. At the end of their life the Pândavas crowned Pariksit as the King of Hastinápurá and started on their Mahápragyána. They travelled through the Himalayas and reached Mahámeru. At that time Påñcákí fell down dead. Yudhishthira asked Yudhishthira why without any particular ailment Påñcákí died. Yudhishthira replied that it was because she showed special interest in Arjuna The Pândavas walked on and all of them excepting Dharmaputra died on the way one by one. Even before Dharmaputra entered Svarája Påñcákí and the four brothers had reached there. (Chapters 1 to 4, Mahápragyána Parva).

9) Sons of Påñcákí. Påñcákí had five sons one each from each of the five husbands. She got Pratávidhánya of Yudhishthira, Shrutahsana of Bhimasena, Shrutakrti of Arjuna, Saññikála of Nakula and Shrutakarma of Sahadeva. (Sloka 75, Chapter 95, Adi Parva).

PÅNCÁLIKA (PÅNCÁLÍKESA). A Yaksá who was a son of Kubera. In some parts of Bhrátra this Yaksá is worshipped as a deity. It is believed that Siva had given Påñcálíka a boon that he who worships him whether he be man or woman, young or old, would become intoxicated with vigour. There is a story behind Påñcálika obtaining this boon: —

When Sáti who was insulted at the Daksáyána was consumed by fire a bereaved Siva sat inactive and moody: a lonely place. When this continued for a long time Kámadéva (god of love) at the request of the other devas sent arrows against him and made him lustful. Siva then started running passionately calling the name of his wife and finding her nowhere jumped into the river Kálandi to commit suicide. (The waters of Kálandi became black from that time onwards). Kálandi was unable to bear the burden of the soul of Siva and so he had to get out to the shore and run again. At this time Kámadéva sent another arrow, unmádastra (arrow of intoxication) also against Siva. Siva could not bear the impact of the two arrows together and he laboured under great strain. Just then he saw Påñcálika son of Kubera coming that way. Siva then made him understand his difficulties and requested him to take charge of the force of the arrows from him. Påñcálika did so and saved Siva from his toil. Please at this Siva blessed him. He said that Påñcálika will be worshipped by people in the month of Cátuра and all those who do so will be invigorated. He added that henceforth he would be known as Påñcálíkesa also.

PÅNCALYA. An ásrama of ancient Bhrátra. This was the place where Nyagrodha, King of Påñcákí, performed penance for a long time. (Sloka 11, Chapter 90, Vana Parva).

PÅNCAMÁHYAJÁNA. For a Grahasthá-ráni (householder) the following five apparatus are unavoidable: A stifter, a grinding stone, a broom, a wooden mortar and a water-pot. It is believed that a sin is committed when each of these is used and to remove the sins thus committed the ancient sages have prescribed five yajñas and these five yajñas are called the Påncamáhyajás. They are the Brahmáyajña, Pítyajña, Deváyajña, Bhrámyajña and the Manúyajña.

Reciting of Vedas is Brahmáyajña. Pleasing the manes by offering rice or libations of water is called Pítyajña. Giving offerings to the demi-gods in the sacrificial fire is called Deváyajña and religious offerings of rice to the cows is called Bhrámyajña. Giving food for the guests is called Manúyajña. One who does not do the Påncamáhyajás is worse than dead. Some scholars have classified the Påncamáhyajás as Huta, Prahu, Bráhmyaka, Práśita and Ahuta.

Japo huto huto lorton //
Prahu bhautilo bali //
Bráhmyaka hutau dvijjñyarnaca //
Práśita pítryapraman //
Ahuta is Brahmáyajña, huta is deváyajña, prahu is bhármyajña, brahmyakha is manúyajña and prasita is pítyajña. Even if at times one finds it not possible to do manúyajña one must perform daily brahmáyajña and deváyajña. The offerings given to gods in the sacrificial fire go to the Sun. The Sun sends rains to the earth which in turn make the plants flourish. Vedas say that thus living beings increase. Just as all animals and objects depend on life-breath for living, a Brahmacári, a Vánaprastha and a Sannyásí depend upon a grahastha for sustenance. Therefore, the Grahasthárama is the best of all ásrámá.

PÅNCAMI. An ancient river of Uttara Bhrátra. People used to drink water from this river. Chapter 9, Bhíma Parva.

PÅNCANÁDA I. A land of the north-western side of Bhrátra. This is at present called the Punjab. When Nakula conquered the western states he conquered Páncanáda also. (Sloka 11, Chapter 32, Mahábhárata). Five rivers of name Vipátha (Vyátha), Satadru (Sultej), Irávati (Ravi), Undrabhrágha (Chenab) and Vátasá (Jhelum) run through this place and that is why the place is called Páncanáda.

PÅNCANÁDA II. A sacred place in Kuru-ksetra. If one bathes in the holy pond of Kôjüritthá there, one would get the benefit of performing an Ásvamedha. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva).

PÅNCAPRÁNAS. The five púrañas (life breaths) of any living being are Prána, Apána, Váyána, Samána and Udána. There is a story in Devi Bhávaváta regarding the origin of the Påncapránas.

Once Sri Kṛṣṇa met Bhráhadévi at Rámañjandala and in exclusion they spent in sexual sport the period of one day of Brahmá. Then Kṛṣṇa selecting an auspicious time dropped his vital fluid into her womb at the end of the sexual sport. Tired by the prolonged carnal sport and shaken by the impact of the hot semen Radhādevī per- sired profusely and the exhaustion produced deep and long breaths. The whole universe was covered with her sweat and her sighs became the goddess of the life-giving breaths of all created animals. From the left side of goddess was born Vāyupati and to her born were the Paścāpāstras. Besides these, another five smaller prāṇas were also born. For the sacred Brahma was born Varuṇa and from the left side of Varuṇa was born Varuṇāṇi (9th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

Maṇḍūkyaopanisad gives the following details regarding the working of the Prāṇas in the body:—Prāṇa was first used in the sense of breath. Later it got the meaning of life. Life is in fact breath to all living beings. Only when a man is awake, his mind and sense organs are active. But Prāṇa is active always both in the state of wakefulness and sleep. Therefore Prāṇa is the vigour of life. It may be said that when a man is asleep his senses merge with his mind and his mind with the prāṇa. The five factors of Prāṇa are the Paścāpāstras. The first of the five is called Prāṇa itself. It is called Maṇḍūkya-prāṇa or chief prāṇa. Just as a king appoints his ministers different places to do specific jobs, the chief Prāṇa posts the other prāṇas at different points in the body with specific purposes of their own. Prāṇa is seated in the heart and does the work of breathing. Apāṇa is seated in anus and directs the organs of excretion of the body. Vyāna is spread throughout the body and it is this life-wind which keeps one alive even when death is very near. The second prāṇa is called Āśāstrāy one by one. It will not only be unpleasant but also take a long time to complete. If we can mix all the Āśāstras cleverly and make it palatable like sweetmeats the children would take it easily. There is a suitable man also for this work in our state. He is Vīṇāśarmā, a kind-hearted scholar who is not only well-versed in all the Āśāstras but also an adept in the art of the up-bringing of children. I am sure he would make your children healthy and learned."

When the emperor heard this he sent for Vīṇāśarmā and told him everything. After understanding well the nature of his would-be disciples and the ambition of their father, Vīṇāśarmā took charge of his wards and within six months he taught the sons of the emperor the science of government. The stories which he used to teach them have since been compiled into a volume called Paścāpāstra.

2) A general idea of the book. The book contains five divisions each division illustrating one tantra (fact, diplomacy) by several stories. It contains prose and verse. The first tantra is called Mitarrabheda. Stories under this head explain the philosophy of "Divide and rule" in politics. The main characters in these stories are the two foxes named Karatāka and Damanaka. Stories under Mitarrabheda relate to how these sly foxes enjoy themselves in breaking the intimacy between a lion and an ox using slander against each other. Mitarrabha is the theme of the next tantra. It is an advice that you should select your friends with care selecting them only after studying them in detail.

The author has selected the characters in his stories for this purpose a tortoise, a deer, a crow and a rat. The third tantra is called Kakośkhyta. This deals with the evils behind an intimacy between born enemies. The main characters in the stories relating to this are a crow and an owl. The fourth tantra is called Labdhisraṇākṣa. It describes how a man loses what has come into his possession by his foolishness. A monkey and a crocodile are the characters in this story. The fifth tantra is Aparatsaṅkāsakā. It deals with the bad side of not looking into all the possible aspects of what you hear. Several stories are there to illustrate this point.

3) Popularity of the book. Though no correct records are there in history in support of the belief, it is believed that Amarasūtra was the ruler of Mahārājapura in Deccan and that Pañcatantra must have originated from there. But Pañcatantra received a global popularity and popularity and was translated from Sanskrit into many other languages. Directed by King Kosru Amuśka, a Persian poet named Burzoe translated it into the Persian language during the period 531-575 A.D. That translation is not available at present. In the year 570 A.D., it was translated into the Syrian language by a poet named Bud. A scholar named Abdulla Ibaal Magalla in the year 750 A.D. translated it into the Arabic language. It was from this Arabic translation that the modern Arabic, Persian, and some other languages of the Greek translation appeared in the year 1080 A.D., Hebrew in 1100 A.D., Latin in 1270 A.D., German in 1480 A.D., Italian in 1582 A.D. and French in 1678 A.D. Next to the Bible this is the book which has received the greatest publicity and popularity. The great linguist Herzel says that Pañcatantra has appeared in about 200 translations in fifty different languages.

4) Period of composition. Because the translation into the Syrian language appeared in the year 570 A.D. it must have been composed earlier than that date. Again, since it takes at least two centuries for a work to get popular enough to be translated into a foreign language, the composition must have been done early in the fourth century A.D. Some believe that the work was done in Kāraṇṭhavaradsan, and others assert that it was written in Magadhā. The original title of the book is believed to be 'Kāraṇṭhavaradsan and Damanaka' by a few.

5) Two editions. Two different editions of the book are now found. One edition popular in Kashmir is known as Tantrākāsikā. The other is in the form found in Kāśīśaraṅga and Bhāratikāśīramājī. The original Sanskrit work is very rarely found. There are several editions of this in Dakśina-Bharata. Changes in the stories according to the time of the edition are also noted. (History of Classical Sanskrit Literature).

1) Coments (Stories).

1. Mitraḥkṛddha. There was once a very good merchant in the land of Mahārājapura called Vardhamāna. He was once travelling in a bullock-cart. One of the bullocks drawing the cart was named Sarīlīvaka. The leg of Sarīlīvaka broke on the way striking against a stone. Leaving the bullock to the charge of four of his attendants Vardhamāna continued his journey. When night came the attendants were frightened by the surrounding forests and so, leaving the bullock to its fate the attendants left the place. The bullock got well and it hummed about in the forests bellowing loudly. The King of the forests, Pīḷaṅgala, the lion, was frightened by the bellowing of the bullock. The lion remained in the forest without stirring out from its cave. The minister of the lion was a fox. That fox had two sons named Kāraṇṭhavaradsan and Damanaka. Damanaka wanted to know what made the lion worried and told his brother about it. Kāraṇṭhavaradsan advised him not to interfere unnecessarily with the affairs of others and told his brother Damanaka a story to stress his point.

A group of sawers were sawing wood near a temple for its construction. At lunch time one of the sawers placed a wedge on a half-sawn timber and went for his midday meal. One of the men was resting on the branch of a tree near the temple jumped on to the half-sawn timber and pulled out the wedge. His tail had fallen without his knowing into the space between the planks and when the monkey later jumped out from the timber his tail was wedged between the planks and the tail got crushed. If you poke your nose into the affairs of others without any purpose such dangers are sure to happen.

Hearing that, Damanaka said, “Brother, are we serving the lion, our master, just for our food? If we want only our food what difference is there between ourselves and the dog? Have you not seen the uproot the dogs make when they see food? A dog has no modesty, humility or self-control. Some men are as dogs. But some others are not like that. Look at the elephant. It never makes an exhibition of its happiness when it gets its food. Its majestic stand, look and gestures are worth noticing. The best of men are also like this. Everybody should keep this in mind. He who earns his livelihood without depending on others but does it by his own wit and efforts is the most revered of men. But food is not enough. As we grow older, we have to do more. So even though we are children we must try to remove the worry that hangs over our lord, the lion.”

The brother was not moved by this philosophy of Damanaka and so he said again, “Anywhere and in any venture success is difficult to achieve and failure is very easy. It is difficult to rise up but it is easy to fall down. It is a very hard labour to roll a stone up a mountain but to push it down from the top is very easy. He is blessed who can read correctly the thoughts of other people. I have, looking at the face of our King, understood that something big is worrying him.”

Kāraṇṭhavaradsan said, “Admitting what you say to be correct how are we to know the thing that worries the King? It is a dangerous task.” Damanaka said “Regarding the achievement of success, there are three kinds of people, namely, the Uttama (best), the madhyama (mediocre) and the adhama (worst). The adhama type will never start a venture fearing failure. The madhyama type would start his endeavour but would turn back at the sight of obstacles. But the Uttama type would never turn back without achieving success. They are the desirable type of men in this world. The Uttama would act according to the circumstances of the situation. If he wants to talk to another and obtain a favour from him he would not go to him at random without looking into the time, place and opportunity to do so. Even Bhrastrapi has his moods. In fact, there is nothing impossible in this world. Disappointment and failures are due to want of experience and lack of endeavours. The great ocean with its huge waves gives one a fright at first sight. But if he starts bathing in it for a long time he finds it not so unapproachable or ghastly.”

When Kāraṇṭhavaradsan heard these moral preachings of his brother he allowed him to do what he wanted to do. Damanaka went to the cave of the lion. Far from the cave itself, Damanaka started walking humbly with his head bent down. The lion saw Damanaka walking thus to him and was immensely pleased. The King of the beasts asked him thus “Damanaka, it is a long time since I saw you and your brother. Why is it that you both, sons of my minister, do not come and see me as often as your father?”

Damanaka replied very humbly “Oh mighty King, of what use can we insignificant creatures be to you? Yet, if one thinks over it, even little things can also be of use at times to great people.” Damanaka then recited to the King a poem in which substance was thus: “Even grass over which we tramp while walking, is of use as fodder to the cattle. Some are used for cleaning the teeth and still some, dry and brittle, to tickle the ear when it itches badly. Great men retain their greatness even when they fall. A burning torch would send its flame only upwards even when you keep it upside down. Similarly all things will shine only in their proper places. An ornamental waistbelt would shine round a neck nor would bangles shine on one’s ears. Anyhow let me ask your highness one question. Is it true that when your highness went to drink water something happened to make your highness worry?”

Pūgalaka the lion said: “What you say is correct. When I went today to drink water in the river I heard the horrifying bellow of a fierce animal and was frightened. I am thinking of leaving this forest and going to some other place.”

Damanaka said: “Oh lord, be not frightened. Appearance are often deceptive and cannot be believed. I shall tell you the story of a fox who mistook an ordinary drum for an animal with good flesh. Once a fox saw a drum lying in a battlefield. It was making a sound when the wind blew over it. The fox mistook it for an animal with plenty of flesh and blood. Rejoicing at the prospect of having a hearty meal the fox muttered encouraging words while he cut it open and ate its flesh. Only then could it understand its blunder.”

The King liked the story very much. So he sent Damanaka to enquire where the bellow came from. Damanaka found out Satījivaca, the ox and told him everything and added that he had been sent by the King to fetch him to his presence. Satījivaca was at first afraid to go but the consoling words of Damanaka gave him courage and it went to the lion. The lion and the ox became great friends and gradually the intimacy developed to such an extent that the King of the beasts started becoming indifferent to the welfare of the other beasts in the forest. The subjects of the King Pūgalaka were in trouble.

Feeling sorry for his own actions Damanaka went to his brother and said, “All this happened because of my own fault. I shall tell you a story about a self-made calamity. Once an ascetic named Devasaṃmaññā was afraid of robbers. So he stuffed into his robes all the money he possessed. Somehow a robber named Āśādhabbhūti came to know of it and he made friends with the ascetic and acted as his servant pretending to be very faithful. Devasaṃmaññā got confidence in him and one day he went to bathe hanging over all his guarded wealth into the hands of Āśādhabbhūti. On his way back from the river after his bath Devasaṃmaññā saw two goats fighting against each other. Blood was flowing from the heads of both the goats and still the fight continued. A fox came there to drink the fresh blood flowing from their heads and he went and started licking the blood that had dropped between the two fighting goats. The goats came again and hit against each other with force and the fox that was standing between the two and licking the blood greedily was crushed to death. When he returned after witnessing the fight the ascetic found that his servant had fishes away with his gold. Karatapaka liked the story very much. They then discussed ways and means of getting out of this calamity. Damanaka said that any object can be achieved by cleverness and told his brother a story to illustrate his point. He said: “Once a crow made his abode on a tree with his wife and children. After some time his wife began to lay eggs but all of them disappeared one by one. They made enquiries and found that the culprit was a big cobra living beneath the same tree. They were no match to the cobra and so they sought the advice of their friend, a fox. The fox said, “I shall suggest a way to get out of the danger. Have you not heard the story of an old fish who got his food by catching flies. The flies went to the banks of a pond feeding hungry. There were plenty of fishes in the pond. The stork stood still on the banks pretending to be sad. A crab seeing the sad-looking stork came and enquired the cause of his grief. The stork said: “You well know that we storks live on flesh, and fish. I now understand that a fisherman has planned to catch all the fish in this pond. This is the cause of my worry.” The fox then overheard this conversation between the crow and the stork before the stork frightened and requested him to save them from the fisherman somehow. The stork said: “I am not strong to fight the fisherman. But I can do what little help I can give you. I shall every day remove one by one from this pond to another one without the knowledge of the fisherman.”

The poor fishes agreed to the proposal and the stork carried away one fish everyday from the pond and ate it at a place hidden from the view of the others. This went on for one or two months without break and somehow the crab got suspicious and he requested the stork to take him also to the other pond. The stork carrying the crab reached its usual place and the crab was horrified at the sight of the fishes eaten by the stork. The crab knew its death was sure even if it did not fight with the stork and so started a fight and in the end killed the stork by crushing the neck of the stork.”

The crows crew hilariously when they heard the story of the fox. They thought there was no place to play. “When any of those who come to bathe in a pond nearby removes the necklace and places it on the shore you are to pick it up and hang it on a branch of the tree.” The crows did like that and pedestrians going that way saw the necklace hanging from the branch and took it after killing the cobra in the hole beneath the tree.”

On hearing the story told by Damanaka the idea of planting the lion heart be renewed. A fox is in Karatapaka’s mind. To confirm the idea in his brother’s mind Damanaka told another story. Damanaka said, “Once there was a lion named Madatoka. He lived in a forest harassing all the beasts that lived there,
All the subjects of King Madoukata joined together, went to him and represented to him that they would go to his cave one by one every day to be killed and eaten by him. The lion agreed to that and the beasts one by one went to his cave each day. One day it was the turn of a clever hare. The hare walked slowly and reached the lion's den late. The King was very cross at this and asked him to explain why he was late. The hare replied, "Oh, my way another lion accorded me and I had to take a round-about route to get away from that lion." The lion got angry and asked the hare to take him to the other lion who dared to come to that forest and question his authority. The hare took the lion to a well and asked his ford to peep in. When Madoukata did so he saw his own reflection in the still waters of the well and mistook it for another lion. It jumped into the well and was killed.

Karažaka had implicit confidence in Damanaka after hearing all these stories and he sent his brother to the King to create a rupture between the lion and the ox. Damanaka went to the King Píŋgala and apologised for the mistake he had committed. Then the King enquired what the mistake was. Damanaka said that the ox Śahīvakka was not such a simpleton as he took him to be. He was ambitious and wanted to snatch away the kingdom from Píŋgala. It was unwise to keep one single minister always. "After all what can an ox do? He can plough the fields. I have come to inform you all these out of my regard for you." Damanaka said.

Even saying all these, Píŋgala did not have the heart to abandon the ox. Píŋgala asked what a poor bullock could do against a lion. Damanaka then said that one would come into grief if one believed too much in any body. "Have you not heard the story of the house which believed the bug?" Damanaka asked. Then he narrated a story. "Maśadavipārśini was a house which was living happily on the silken bed of a King. A bug entered there and made friends with the house. The poor house believed the bug to be harmless and allowed it to stay that night with him. The bug said that it was very greedy to suck the blood of the King. At night the bug bit the King. The King woke up and ordered his servants to search for the thing that bit him. When lights were brought the clever bug slipped away. The royal servants conducting the search found out the house and killed it." Thus the lion liked the tale very much and yet was reluctant to dismiss the ox. The lion wanted proof that the ox was at fault. So Damanaka went straight to the ox in his house and said "We are all small people. What does the master do for our welfare? If small people seek the friendship of big people the small ones will always suffer." The ox endorsed the view and told a story to illustrate the truth. "A lion named Madoukata had a tiger, a fox and a crow as his ministers. When the ministers were once walking in the forest they saw a camel. They had never seen a camel before and so they were wondering at the animal. They went and talked with it and gathered that the curious animal had brought a load which had been carrying loads for a merchant. It had now escaped from the merchant because of the heavy work it had to do. The camel wanted to remain in hiding. The ministers took the new animal to the lion. The lion liked the camel very much and soon they became good and intimate friends. The intimacy increased and soon the King lost all interest in his other subjects. At this stage the ministers found out a plan. They advised the King to kill and eat the camel but the King refused to do so. Then the crow went before the King and requested the lion to kill and eat it. But the crow was so small a food for the lion and so it refused to kill the crow. Then the fox made a similar offer but the lion refused to kill the fox also. Then came the tiger with the offer and the lion refused to kill the tiger also. Seeing all this the camel also made a similar offer and the moment his consent was out from his mouth the fox and the tiger together killed the poor camel and ate it. So one should be careful in believing others. In my case I am sure some wicked person must have advised him against me and that is the reason why the lion is angry with me. But I will always work true to my conscience. There is no harm in fighting either for self-protection or for destroying one's enemies. So if it is necessary I will fight the lion." Hearing this Damanaka said "To go to war without knowing the strength of the enemy is foolish. Once upon a time a wise friend used to watch the crow. The crow was as big as the crow. The water fowl was living happily on the shores of an ocean with his mate. They ate the worms that lived on the shores. The fowl got pregnant and when it was time to lay her eggs she asked her mate to show her a safe place to lay the eggs. The male mate asked her to lay the eggs on the shore itself. But the she-fowl said that the waves would wash them away and so it was not wise to do so. The male fowl assured her that the ocean was not bold enough to do anything against his interests. But the she-fowl still hesitated. Then the male fowl said "I am the nearest relative responsible for your protection and welfare. If one does not heed the words of a relative one will fall into danger. I shall tell you the story of a tortoise which came to grief by not obeying the words of his friend. In olden times there lived on the banks of a pond a tortoise who had two swan-friends in the lake named Sańkāra and Vikaśa. Once the lake became empty of water and the swans decided to go to another lake with water. They never wanted to part with their friends the tortoise and so decided to take the tortoise also along with them. But the tortoise could not fly and so they found a plant to carry the tortoise to the other lake. They brought a stick and the tortoise was asked to hang at the middle of the stick clutching the stick tightly with its teeth. The swans then took the stick by its two ends each holding one end in its beak. The swans gave strict instructions that the tortoise should not open its mouth and then they rose up into the air and flew towards the other lake. On the way some children saw the funny sight in the air and so hooted and howled. The tortoise got angry and abused the children. The moment it opened its mouth it lost hold on the stick and fell down to the ground. This happened because the tortoise did not heed the words of its friends." The water fowl continued "It is cowardice and foolishness to remain sad and exposing dangers in future. Just hear this story" he said. Once in a pond there were three fishes named Anāgata, Utpannamañi and Yadhāvīya. Hearing that fishermen were coming to fish in that pond Anāgata warned them and suggested going to another pond to escape from the fishermen. But Utpannamati and Yadhavakya did not care. They said that some plan could be found out when the danger came. But Antagata felt difficult and so he went away to another pond. Soon the fishermen came and spread their nets. Utpannamati lay still pretending to be dead. The fishermen took it and deposited it on the shore and started to fish again. The moment the fishermen turned their heads Utpannamati slipped into a mud pit nearby and remained there till the departure of the fishermen. But poor Yadhavakya could not think of any plan and so was caught and carried away by the fishermen. So just like Utpannamati I will also come across some plan when the danger comes and so you do lay your eggs on the shore of the ocean itself.

Hearing the assuring words of her husband the shrewd fowl laid her eggs on the shore. But very soon waves came and carried them away. She complained to her husband. The water fowl called a conference of all the birds living there and explained to them his mishap and all of them went on a deputation to Garuda, the best of the birds and requested him to End out a remedy. Garuda represented the matter to Mahavirsha who then sent Varuna to him side and ordered him to give back the eggs to the fowl.

After telling this story Damanaka went to the lion and told him many misleading lies about the ox. Gradually the lion and the ox became enemies. Damanaka then triumphantly went and informed his brother Karajaka of his achievement. But Karajaka said "Brother, you have done a very unjust thing. There are four methods to achieve your object namely Sama, Dharma, Danda, and Dharma. Of these Dharma is to be used only last of all. I shall tell you a story:

Once a chetty (Merchant) had two sons named Dharmabuddhi and Dusabuddhi. Once they were both traveling through a forest when Dharmabuddhi got a treasure from a hole at the base of a big tree. Dusabuddhi advised his brother not to take the treasure to the city as it was dangerous to do so and made him bury it at a place beneath the same tree. That night itself Dusabuddhi went and dug out the treasure and got it buried in his own room. After some days both of them went together to see the treasure and found the place empty of the treasure. They accused each other of stealing the treasure. Both of them complained to the King. The King asked them whether they had any witnesses and they replied that only the tree was there as a witness. The King decided that both of them should go beneath the same tree and dip their hands in burning oil to prove their innocence. Dusabuddhi went to his father and requested him that he should hide in the hollow of that tree and say that it was Dharmabuddhi who had stolen the treasure. Hearing this the father said "Child, when you think of a trick you must also think of the danger involved in it. Once there lived a stork with his wife on a tree. A serpent living in the same tree began to eat the young ones of the stork and the stork complained to his friend fox about it. The clever fox suggested to him a plan. There was a mongoose living in front of the hole of the mongoose and continue dropping fishes in a line leading to the abode of the serpent. The mongoose would thus be led to the hole of the serpent. The stork did so and when the mongoose reached the hole of the serpent it saw it and killed it. I cannot do such cruel things." But with Dusabuddhi insisted, the father half-heartedly agreed to it. Dusabuddhi hid and sat in the hollow of the tree. Next day the servants of the King came to the foot of the tree with burning oil. They asked the tree to tell the truth regarding the theft. Then there came a voice from the tree denouncing Dharmabuddhi as the culprit. Dharmabuddhi then said there was no truth in the wordless voice and requested them to fumigate the tree from above. The royal servants did so and then the father came out and confessed everything. The servants of the King nailed Dusabuddhi on a spike and killed him.

After having told the story Karajaka tried to dissuade his brother from his devious intentions. Karajaka said:— "Pitaka and Saif Sarkar are kind-hearted and simple people. There need be no treachery with them. Treachery is allowed against wicked people. I shall tell you the story of a merchant:

This merchant had as his entire wealth a thousand pounds of iron and one day he went on a pilgrimage after entrusting his entire wealth to a friend and neighbour of his on the understanding that the latter should return it on his return after the pilgrimage. After ten months the merchant returned but the friend did not give back the iron. He regretted that all the iron was eaten by rats in which his house abounded. The merchant knew that his neighbour was speaking falsehood but kept silent over the matter. After a few days the merchant somehow entered the only son of his neighbour to his house and locked the young boy in a room. The friend went in to the room and asked the merchant what had happened. The merchant said that he could not be trusted and gave the same reply he gave his friend. The king was surprised and asked the merchant whether it was believable that a boy aged eighteen would be carried away by a kite. The merchant very coolly replied that such things could happen in a country where rats can eat a thousand pounds of iron. The king asked the merchant to explain this to him. The merchant said that the merchant gave him the same reply he gave his friend. The king ordered the friend to return the iron and the merchant got back his wealth. Karajaka after telling this story added that deceit in return for deceit was no sin. Damanaka stuck on to his plan and made the lion and ox fight each other. The poor ox was killed and the lion became his old self again.

2) Subhatha. (Gaining friends). Once there lived on a tree a crow named Laghupatana. The crow saw a hunter coming and spreading a net beneath the tree. A flock of doves coming that way was caught in the net. But the doves flew up in a body and the net was carried from the ground freed of the pegs that held it. The crow followed them and when they were safely landed at another place Citravira the leader of the doves, told the crow thus "I shall now show you the benefit of gaining friends." Citravira and his doves flew again with the net and landed before the hole of a rat named Hirayuka. The rat was a friend of Citravira.
On hearing the voice of Citragupta outside, Hiranyaka came out and felt sorry for the plight of the doves. The rat pointed out that nobody should oppose fate and proved it with illustrations. He added:—“Though elephants and cobras are mightier and fiercer than men, it is because of fate that they are being controlled by smaller people than they themselves. Hiranyaka cut to pieces the threads of the net and set the doves free.

Next day the deer did not return and the crow also belonged. But the rat narrated that gratitude was a quality which was rare among any living being and generally harm was the reward for any favour done. The crow was greatly grieved to hear the words of Hiranyaka and told him that he (crow) would commit suicide if the rat did not take him as his friend. At last the rat took pity on the crow and they became friends. Time passed on and then there came a famine in the land. The crow decided to shift his abode and told the rat about it. He said he was going to a lake on the banks of which lived a friend of his, a tortoise. The tortoise, he added, would fetch him from the lake plenty of fish to eat. The rat was also affected by the famine and he also decided to accompany the crow. The crow took the rat in his beak and flew away to the lake without seeing the tortoise named Manthara. The crow introduced Hiranyaka to the tortoise and the tortoise asked him the reason why he left his previous abode.

The rat said:—“There was a bhikku (one who lives on alms) named Cudakarna living in a house in my place. He used to eat only what was required to maintain life in him. He would cook his own food and keep the remnants everyday in his kitchen. I used to eat that food and live. Then one day another Samysakam named Brhatshapi (Vindakarna) came to this house. Every night Vindakarna used to read the Puranas to Cudakarna. Cudakarna would sit and make a sound on the bowl kept nearby to drive me away. The first time he did so Vindakarna who was reading resumed the interruped sound and asked Cudakarna why he made it. He then explained that it was intended to drive away the rat coming to steal the food. I was forced to start and became lean and weak. Even rivers would go dry if there were no rains. Only those with wealth would have friends. Begging is a nuisance to others. Everywhere it is important to acquire good and faithful friends. When a good man is in danger only good men rush to help him. When an elephant falls into a pit it is always another elephant which comes to its rescue. Therefore I desire to make friends with you.”

All the three, the crow, the rat and the tortoise lived together happily. Then one day a deer named Citragupta escaping from a hunter came frightened to their midst and started living with them. One day the deer which had spent much time in search of food died and the tortoise returned even after dark and the crow went in search of the deer and found it trapped in a hunter’s net. The crow informed the rat about it and the rat immediately came and started gnawing at the strings of the net. In the meantime the tortoise desirous of knowing the plight of Citragupta crawled to the place of accident. The rat had already torn to pieces the net and the crow and the rat said that it was unwise of Manthara to have come so far crawling as there was danger from the hunter coming to the place soon. Before the deer could endorse the views of his friends the hunter came to the scene. The deer, the crow and the rat escaped. The hunter saw the crawling tortoise and caught it. Binding it with a string, the hunter placed it on the ground. In the meantime the friends of Manthara who had escaped his upon a plan to rescue the tortoise. The deer lay down pretending to be dead at a place far away from the place but within the sight of the hunter. The crow sat perched on its body as if pecking at its flesh. The hunter saw it and went to take the dead body of the deer. The moment the hunter turned away from the tortoise the rat went and cut the string binding the tortoise and set it free. Before the hunter reached the deer it ran away. So all were saved. This is the benefit of having good friends.

3) Sandhyavandana (Peace and war). We must make friends with people only after knowing them well. There was once a big banyan tree in a forest which was inhabited by many crows. Their leader was a crow named Meghavarpa. About three kilometres away from this tree was another banyan tree on which lived a number of owls. Their leader was an owl named Amardana. The crows and the owls were great enemies.

One day Amardana king of the owls with a large army of a lakh of his subjects attacked the crows at night. The crows could not see at night and so all the crows excepting a few of the top ones were killed. Meghavarpa, the king and his ministers, Udhipaka, Sandhipaka, Anudhipaka and Ciraftiji and a few other subjects were the only ones who escaped from there somehow. They sat in council at a place and thought of the ways and means to wreak vengeance on the owls. It happened that when the strength of the enemy was great it was advisable to move away to another place, or to seek the aid of mighty people or to surrender to the enemy. It was the nature of dogs to leave one’s place and go to another place. Sandhipaka said. Others also were of the same opinion. Ciraftiji alone did not express any opinion and so the king asked him why he was silent.

Ciraftiji said:—“Oh King, we became enemies of the owls because of our bad tongue. I shall tell you the story of an ass which met with its death because of its bad words. Once a washerman had a donkey to carry his load of clothes to and fro. The poor washerman did not have sufficient earnings to feed the donkey well and so he let it loose to go and eat of its own accord to appease its hunger. The donkey started going to the fields of other people and eating their grains. People started hurting the donkey and so the washerman did a clever thing. He covered the donkey with the hide of a tiger and let it loose. People mistook it for a tiger and did not dare to go near and hurt it. Then one day a farmer keeping watch over the fields at night felt suspicious of the fake tiger and covering himself with a blanket and with a bow and arrow in his hand stealthily approached the donkey. The poor donkey mistook the farmer for a she-donkey and brayed and approached him with amorous movements of its body. The farmer knew from its voice that it was a donkey and so removed his disguise and stood before the donkey. The be-fool ed donkey got angry and abused the farmer using very vulgar language. The farmer got angry and killed him with an arrow.

Cirajñí continued:—Once upon a time a few birds joined together and decided to elect their leader. The owl was the bird selected to lead them. An aged crow condemned it. The crow said, "Are you making this ugly bird which is blind all day your leader? If only you make a worthy creature your leader you will be respected. I shall tell you a story to illustrate my point." He then narrated the following story:

Once upon a time there came a period of twelve continuous years without any rain at all on the earth. Wells, ponds, lakes and rivers were all empty. A huge herd of elephants walking in the forests represented to its leader the grave situation and the leader sent messengers to all sides to find out watering places with water. One of the messengers came back and reported that he had found out a beautiful lake full of water and that on its banks lived a number of hares. The elephants immediately went to that place and started enjoying swimming and bathing in the waters of the lake. Many rabbits on the bank of the lake died when trampled upon by the elephants. The aggrieved rabbits sat in a council to consider the steps to be taken to stop this deadly nuisance of the elephants. One of the hares, Vijaya by name, promised to handle the matter by himself. He knew it would be unwise to go anywhere near the elephants. So Vijaya climbed on to the top of a hill near the lake and when he saw the elephants coming to the lake as usual halted them from the top of the hillock. When the elephants turned their heads to the place from where the sound came they saw a hare speaking to them. The hare bawled out thus: "We are all servants of Candra, the moon-god. This lake has been given to us by him. Candra Bhagaván has deputed me to verify a report which has reached him that some elephants are making the water of the lake muddy. If you will surely be cross with you if you again enter the lake. So it is better for you to go away from this place." The elephants were frightened and they all left the place. Cirajñí added that this happened to the elephants because of the lack of a wise and proper leader.

The aged Cirajñí continued: "It is unwise to place confidence in small people. I had an experience. Near my abode on a tree there lived a bird called Kapitíjala. We became friends. One day Kapitíjala did not come home as usual. Taking advantage of it a rabbit came to Kapitíjala's abode and started living there. I did not like it and I told the rabbit about it. But the rabbit did not mind it. After four or five days Kapitíjala returned home and on finding a rabbit in his nest got angry and asked him to leave the place. The rabbit refused to go and an argument ensued. The rabbit said that lakes, rivers and trees were for all and did not belong to any particular individual. "He who has possession of it is its owner," the rabbit argued. So they decided to take the case for arbitration and for that purpose approached a cat named Dadhikarna doing penance on the banks of the river Yamuná. I followed them curious to know the decision of the ascetic cat. They did not see me. Both of them on approaching him started presenting their case before the cat. The cat pretended to be deaf and asked both of them to come nearer and talk into his ears. They moved nearer and the cat caught hold of them both and ate them. Those poor beings lost their lives by placing too much confidence in the aged cat. That is why I say that we should not select a small being like an owl as our leader.

On hearing the story of the crow the birds withdrew from their first decision of selecting an owl as their leader. The owl was offended and felt insulted and roared that his community would one day wreak vengeance on the crow. A wound made by an arrow would heal in due course and a tree would grow even if its branches are cut but any wound on the pride of an individual is never healed.

Cirajñí continued: —"This is how the crows and owls became enemies. We have to fight the owls. It is impossible to serve mean people. I shall tell you a story of what would happen if one believes in mean people:—

Once a brahmin decided to perform a Yajña to increase the prosperity of the land. He wanted a goat for the same and some wicked young people knew that he was going to buy one. They worked out a plan to deceive the poor brahmin. They sat hiding at different places on the way the brahmin was returning with the goat. As he came near the first of the wicked young men accosted the brahmin and asked him where he was taking the dog. The brahmin was surprised that the young man mistook his goat for dog and went his way. When he walked some distance more the second of the group came to him and put the same question. This time the brahmin was a bit perplexed that two people should have put the same question which he thought was absurd. When a third man put this question again he became worried and when this same question was repeated two more times the brahmin got mad and left the goat on the road and went his way. The wicked youngsters took the goat cooked it and ate it.

After narrating several such stories and maxims Cirajñí said he would lead the owls into a trap and come back. Cirajñí then went to the owls and their friends on the top of Rayáriça. Cirajñí shaved his head and smearing the blood of the dead crows on his body went and sat alone on a branch of their former abode, the banyan tree. When night came the owls came and surrounded the tree. Cirajñí made some pitiful groans and the owls took him before their king. The king questioned Cirajñí and he said thus:

"I am Cirajñí the minister of Meghavarna. Once I praised your greatness before my king and he shaved my head and dismissed me from his service. "The king of the owls asked his minions what should be done with Cirajñí. The minister of the king of owls Baka, immediately jumped from his seat and said:

"Once a fox went to steal the cow of a brahmin. On his way he met a Brahmarákṣacak and they became friends. The Brahmarákṣacak was going to kill and eat the brahmin. Both exchanged their ideas and when they reached the gate of the house of the brahmin the fox said be would go first and eat the goat. But the Brahmarākṣasa said he would enter first and eat the brahmin. The quarrel developed into a noisy one and hearing the sound outside the brahmin came out. The fox accused the Brahmarākṣasa of having come to eat the brahmin while the Brahmarākṣasa accused the fox of having come to eat the goat. The brahmin was glad that he escaped from a danger and pardoning them sent them both with presents. This is the benefit of a split among the enemies.

The king of the owls gave refuge to Cīrāṭjīvi and the latter expressing gratitude for the favour done took a vow that he would wreak vengeance on the crows after getting himself born as an owl in his next birth. At once the king said, “Oh Cīrāṭjīvi, it is not wise to change one’s clan. Once a kite picked up a girl rat and flew up. On the way the young rat slapped from the beak of the kite and fell down into the open palm of a sage doing his sandhyāvyānam. The sage by his yogic powers made it into a beautiful girl and presented her to his wife. The girl attained womanhood and the sage was anxious to get her married to a suitable person. He first invited the Sun and the Sun replied, “You are in search of a powerful husband. Megha (cloud) is more powerful than myself: since at any time it can cast a shadow over my brilliance. So go and ask Megha about this.” The sage went to Megha and Megha said that wind which could carry him away at his will was more powerful than himself and so directed him to the wind. The sage approached the wind and it said that the wind could not grant this wish.

The mountain said that the rat which could make holes in him was more powerful and so finally the sage went to the rat. The rat agreed to marry her but asked how it could keep her in the hole which was his abode. The sage said that it was easy and changed her into a rat. This is how a girl’s name came a girl rat again. So do not change your clan by being a crook and live with me.”

Cīrāṭjīvi from that day onwards started living with the owls. During day time when the owls slept, the old crow would fly up and thither and thither and collect such easily combustible materials as hay, dry grass and cotton and stock them beneath the tree covered with dry leaves. Two months went by like this and one day when the owls were sleeping Cīrāṭjīvi set fire to the stock of dry materials beneath the tree. The owls were all burnt to death Meghāvarna and his friends congratulated Cīrāṭjīvi on his success. Cīrāṭjīvi said: To obtain difficult portions great men pass through difficult situations. If one is prepared to suffer hardships any object can be achieved. Once a cobra began to starve for want of food. It went to the land of frogs and told the king of frogs thus: “Friend, I am in difficulties. I happened to bite a brahmin boy and that boy died. The boy’s father cursed me. I asked for forgiveness and then he said:— “You must carry your enemies, the frogs, on your back from one pond to another pond and live on the food they give you.” The king of the frogs believed him and allowed his subjects to be carried away to another pond from the one in which they were then staying. The cobra ate all the frogs on the way and at last the king also was eaten. Thus to destroy the enemies one will have to carry them on one’s back sometimes. The crows were happy their enemies the owls were destroyed and they lived more happily and peacefully than before.

4) Labdhadāsa. (Taking what you got). Once a monkey named Bhalumukha separated himself from his group and came to a fig tree on the banks of a river. When he jumped from branch to branch on the tree a great many ripe figs fell into the river. Seeing this a crocodile named Sīntumāra came to the foot of the tree and started eating the fruits. This went on for a few days and then the crocodile and the monkey became good friends. One day the crocodile sat chatting with the monkey and eating fruits and did not go home. The wife of the crocodile got worried on not seeing her husband back at home and sent a maid of hers to go and enquire what happened to her husband. The maid came and reported that the crocodile was spending his time with a she-monkey. The wife of the crocodile was very sad and angry to hear this and the sent word through her maid that she was seriously ill and if he wanted to see her alive he must return to her immediately. The crocodile returned home immediately and he called a doctor to examine her. The doctor who had been previously bribed by the crocodile’s wife said that she should be given the heart of a monkey if the were to save from her the evil of blindness. The crocodile could not find a monkey in a fix. He weighed in his mind the lives of his wife and friend and then decided to take the life of his friend to save the life of his wife. The crocodile went to its place near the fig tree as usual and the monkey made enquiries about his family. Then Sīntumāra said that his wife wanted to see the monkey-friend and had asked him to come to him home. Then the crocodile came and said thus:— “Dull-witted crocodile, I am not an ass like you. Have you not heard the story of the foolish ass?” The monkey then narrated the story of the ass thus:— “Once a lion calling his minister, the fox, to his side said that he wanted to eat the flesh of an ass as a remedy for the stomach trouble he was having by drinking too much of elephant’s blood. The minister started in search of an ass and found one in the house of a washerman. The fox said that he was surprised that the ass was doing such heavy work daily with a washerman when a happy life in the palace of the lion was easily available. The ass was tempted and it went to the den of the lion. When it reached there it got frightened and taking the opportunity of the absence of the lion for his evening worship left the place in a hurry. The lion sent the fox again to fetch the ass. The fox came and laughed at the timidity of the ass. He said that the lion was of a loving nature and last time when it approached the ass to embrace him out of affection he ran away like a fool. The lion knew that the asses were as a class good musicians and the lion himself a great lover of music was anxious to hear the ass sing. The poor ass believed the story and went to the lion along with the fox. When the ass reached the lion's den the lion was waiting for him and the ass in all simplicity bowed before the lion. The lion with one stroke killed the poor beast and leaving the carcass to the care of the fox went for his Sandhyavandanana. When the lion returned the fox had already eaten the heart of the ass. The King of the beasts not finding the heart in its place questioned the fox and the fox replied that the asses do not possess either a heart or neck.

When the monkey concluded his story by adding that never again would he be trapped like this, Simismara, the crocodile, went its way. Labdhahaana is the art of losing what came into your possession once.

3) Aapiradhayakara. This is a tale which explains the danger behind doing things adventurously without properly studying the pros and cons of an issue.

Once upon a time there lived in Gauḍadāśa a brahmin named Devaśarman. His wife Yajñāṣeṣā became pregnant. The father started saying that the son to be born would be a very fortunate boy. One day the wife of the brahmin told him thus:—“It is not good to build castles in the air. Once a brahmacāri walked home carrying the dried grain he got as his dakṣina in a pot on his head. He started thinking thus:—‘I will sell this dried grain and with the money will buy a lamb. The lamb will grow and give birth to two kids. I will then sell the goat and the kids and buy a cow. The cow will give birth to calves in a short time. I will buy some land to raise paddy. After selling the paddy I will restore my old house and then I will marry. She will deliver a beautiful son. I will name the child Somapārma. At times leaving the child alone my wife will go to milk the cow and then I will hit her like this.’” So saying the brahmacāri hit with his stick the mud pot on his head containing the dried grain. The pot broke and the whole thing inside fell on the road.

Devaśarman on hearing the story of Yajñāṣeṣā became pensive. After five or six days Yajñāṣeṣā delivered a son. Days went by and one morning Yajñāṣeṣa went for her bath in the river nearby entrusting the child to the care of her husband. Some moments later a messenger came from the palace asking him to go over there. The brahmin was in a fix. There was nobody around to whose care he could leave the child. He had a mongoose. The brahmin asked the mongoose to look after the child and went to the palace. Some time later a big cobra came creeping towards the child. The mongoose jumped at it and killed it. The mongoose was smeared with blood after that. The brahmin returned hurriedly from the palace only to see the blood-smeared mongoose waiting at the doorstep. Thinking that the mongoose must have killed his son the brahmin thrashed the poor mongoose to death. But on entering the room the brahmin found out his mistake, for there near the child was the dead body of a deadly cobra. The brahmin regretted his foolish act of doing a deed before knowing things well, when Yajñāṣeṣa came back after her bath and was greatly disturbed by the foolish deed of her husband. She said:—“Once there was in a place a very poor brahmin boy. He was an orphan with nobody to help him and he suffered from hunger daily. One night the boy had a dream. He was told that at midnight next day three beggars would come to his place and if he slew them they would turn themselves into treasure jars and that the boy could become rich by using the weight so received. Next day the brahmin boy was having his head shaved when as predicted in the dream three beggars entered his house. The brahmin boy ran away from the barber and taking a stick thrashed the three to death. All the three turned into treasure jars. The barber was astonished. The brahmin boy gave the barber a sovereign taken from the jar as his wages. The barber thought that beggars would turn themselves into treasure jars if they were thrashed to death. So he waited daily in his house for beggars to enter his house. One day after a long waiting three beggars entered his house armed with a stick which he had kept ready to start thrashing the beggars. The beggars shrieked and shouted and ran away abusing the barber. Servants of the King came on hearing this and took the barber away and by the command of the King killed him and threw him to a spike. Yajñāṣaṇa concluded by saying that even death would be the result if one does anything without properly understanding things.

PANCATIRTHA. A holy place. There is a pond at this place. Once a nymph called Vargā with her four companions lived in this pond as crocodiles as a result of a curse. Arjuna came to that pond and rescued them from their curse. From that day onwards the pond came to be known as Pañcarātra or Saubhadraśīrtha (For details see under Vargā and Saubhadraśīrtha).

PANCAVAKTRA. A soldier who fought bravely against the asuras on the side of Subrahmanyā.

PANCAVATTI. The sacred place where Śrī Raṁa built an ārāma and lived for some time with Śīfā and Lakṣmaṇa during their exile in the forests. There is a story about Pañcavattī in the Kaṇṭha Raṁyāna. Pañcavattī is on the southern bank of the Godāvāri. Five Vaiḍavaśyās (banyan trees) stand here in a circle and therefore, the place got the name Pañcavattī. There is a legend about these banyan trees. Once five Gāndharva youths encircled the sage Agastya in the forest as a sport and prevented him from moving towards any direction. The enraged sage cursed them to stand in the same position as banyan trees. Thus by obstructing the movements of a divine man they were forced to remain without movement as trees. Before they took the form of trees they begged the sage for deliverance from the curse. Agastya said, “One day Śrī Raṁa, with his wife and brother will come and stay in an ārāma built in your midst. Their holy presence will give you salvation from my curse.” Śrī Raṁa and Lakṣmaṇa when they came to that forest decided to build an ārāma in the centre of the circle formed by the five banyan trees. Lakṣmaṇa started to build the hermitage. At first he cut down one of the trees standing tall and straight and to the surprise and astonishment of all the fallen trunk of the tree disappeared and there in its place lay the dead body of a demon youth. It was the body of Śambhukumāra, son of Śūraśakī. He was doing penance there when Śrī Kāma came there with Śītā and becoming lustful at the sight of Śītā he stood there as a tree. It was he who was cut down by Laksmana.
Śrī Kāma understood the thing that happened. He then explained to Śītā and Laksmana many things about the fruqds and deceits of the demons. After that they built her hermitage there and dwelt there for a long time. (Aranyaka Ṛg. 4, Kamba Ramayana).

PANCĀVIRA. A Sanskrit Vāivādeva (one of the ten duties supposed to be the sons of Vāiśa). (Chapter 91, Arāṇāsana Parva).

PANCAYAJNA. A sacred place of Bhūrata. He who visits this place would get mokṣa. (Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

PANCAYĀTANA. An idol of Śiva in Kāśi. This idol is called Oukārā also. Bhagavān Paramesvara who gives mokṣa to men dwells in this idol in the form of Pānchiyātana. The five souls of Śiva are the five āyatana.
They are Sāmi (tranquility), Aśtha (advanced beyond tranquillity), Pārāparāvīdaya (Greater and small knowldge), Pratiśthā (celebrity) and Niyutā (Repossession).
Because these five āyatana dwell in the idol of Śiva at Kāśi it got the name Panchāyatana. (Chapter 34, Padma Purāṇā).

PĀNDA. One of the sons born to Kṣaya of his wife Āryavatī. He married Satyaśattiputra and begot sevten sons. They all became in the future originators of races. (Pratisargamatiḥ, Bhāvīrya Purāṇā).

PĀNDA. A serpent born by the race of Āriāvatī. This serpent was burnt to death at the sarpasatra of Jana-jaya. (Sloka 11, Chapter 57, Adi Parva).

PĀNDAVAS.

1) Origin. Śantana, a celebrated KIng of Chandravāmśa
(lunar dynasty) had two wives, Gaṅgā and Śatyanvati.
Bhīma was the son of Gaṅgā. After the birth of Bhīna Gaṅgā his mother went to heaven. After that Śantana married Satyavati, mother of Vyāsa. Satyavati got two sons, Citrāngada and Vicitrīrya. Even while a bachelor, Citrānga was killed by a Gaṅdhara of the same name. So Vicitrīrya became King on Śantana’s death. Bhīma forcibly brought the three dughters of the King of Kāśi named Ambā, Ambikā and Ambalākī for Vicitrīrya to marry. But knowing that Arjuna was in love with the King of Gaṅgā, Bhīma let her off the way. Ambikā and Ambalākī became the wives of Vicitrīrya. But for a long time they had no issue.
At a later time Satyvati, mother of Vicitrīrya, sent for Vyāsa her eldest son and asked him to beget sons of Ambikā and Ambalākī. Ambikā got Dhrītarāṣtra of Vyāsa and Ambalākī, Pāṇḍu, father of the Pān davas. Dhrītarāṣtra was born blind and he married Gāndhārī.
Pāṇḍu was born pale-white in colour and he married
Kuntī mother of the Pāndavas.

Kuntī was the sister of Vasudeva, father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.
The real name of Kuntī was Pṛthī. Sūrāśena, King of the Yādavas, was the father of Kuntī and Vasudeva.
Because Kuntībhīma, King of Sūrāśena’s sister, a perace had no issue Kuntī was sent to the palace of Kuntībhīma and she grew up there. Pṛthī got the name of Kuntī because of that. Besides Kuntī, Pāṇḍu had another wife named Mādri.

While she was living in the palace of Kuntībhīma the sage Durvāsā came and stayed in the palace for a long time as the king’s guest. Kuntī was a little girl then and yet she served the sage with such care, patience and devotion that the sage was greatly pleased with her and gave her a divine mantra. He said: “If you call upon any god repeating this mantra he will manifest himself to you and bless you with a son equal to him in glory and valour. You can use this only five times.” The impatient curiosity of youth made Kuntī give a test to the power of the mantra and though unmarried she invoked the Sun. The Sun immediately presented himself before her and by his grace she conceived and got a son whom she secretly set afloat in a river. A childless chariot named Adhiratha happened to see the child and he took it home and brought it up. When he grew up he was sent to Hastinapura and the sons of Dhrī-trāṣtra took him in their service. He was Karna, the celebrated warrior of the Kauravas. Kuntī married Pāṇḍu after the birth of Karna.

Dhrītarāṣtra got of Gāndhārī a hundred sons and a daughter named Dusālā. The children of Dhrītarāṣtra were known as Kauravas or Dhārtrāṣtras. Pāṇḍu had a curse that he would die the moment he entered into sexual sport with his wives. (See under Kindama).
So under instructions from her husband Kuntī invited
Dhārma, Vāyu and Indra and got the sons Vuddhūrīga, Bhīmasena and Arjuna. She gave the remaining one choice to Mādri and Mādri invited the two Śvinideva, Nāsīyā and Daśā and got two sons named Nakula and Sahadeva. All these five were accepted as the sons of Pāṇḍu and so they got the name of Pāndavas. (Upto Chapter 129, Adi Parva).

2) Life in Hastinapura and the lac-palace incident. After the birth of the Pāṇḍavas, Pāṇḍu with his wife and children spent a very long time in the forest of Satāṣṭriṇ. Kāya Ya, the royal priest of Vasudeva, performed the Upaṇayana (investiture with the sacred thread) and such other religious ceremonies ordained for boyhood.
They were educated under the sage Sūka. One day in the Spring season Pāṇḍu’s resolution broke down under the exhilarating influence of the season and he called hold of Mādri and embraced her despite earnest and repeated protests from Mādri. At once the curse of the sage took effect and Pāṇḍu fell dead. It was the custom then that the wife should end her life in the funeral pyre of her husband and so Kuntī and Mādri came forward to do so. But Mādri said that one of them should live to take care of the children and so entrusting her children also to the care of Kuntī, Mādri jumped into the funeral pyre and ended her life. The curse of the Satāṣṭriṇ forest took the children and Kuntī to Hastinapura and handing them over to the charge of Dhrītarāṣtra came back.
The Pāṇḍavas grew up in Hastinapura along with the Kauravas. But there was no real affection or intimacy between them. The naturally strong Bhīma found it a sport to tease and torment the Kauravas whenever he got an opportunity. Gradually as the teachings of Bhīma became unbearable a wicked thought of somehow putting an end to Bhīma’s life found place in the minds of the Kauravas. They once poisoned Bhīma and binding him tight with ropes threw him into the ocean. But Bhīma went to the world of the Nāga and came back.
unseathed with added Siddhis (acquired power). This annoyed the Kauravas. It was at this time that Droṇa, a renowned preceptor in archery, came to Hastinapura. Bhīṣma enrolled the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas as disciples of Droṇa. Arjuna became an extraordinarily brilliant bow-man. This came off as another reason for the Kauravas to drift away from the Pāṇḍavas. After the end of their course of education a contest was held in which Arjuna ranked first. The title became Droṇa's but he, 'to be fair in bulk at the end of the studies to a preceptor', Droṇa asked his disciples to bring king Druḍapada bound hand and foot before him. The Kauravas failed in that mission and the Pāṇḍavas under the leadership of Arjuna fulfilled the demand of their Guru. When the training and Gurudakṣaṇa were over, Droṇāraṇya crowned Yudhiṣṭhīra as the heir-apparent and this increased the power and status of the Pāṇḍavas in Hastinapura. The jealousy of Duryodhana knew no bounds when he found the Pāṇḍavas in the pinnacle of power and popularity. He decided to kill them. He therefore, built a new palace in a place called Vāranaśvam and with the permission of Droṇāraṇya made them change their residence to the new building. This palace was very large but was made up of a single wall built of lime and other combustible material. The wise and intelligent Vidura knew this deceit beforehand and so he had warned the Pāṇḍavas of the danger through a messenger named Kukak. The Pāṇḍavas had, therefore, made ready a secret passage by underground to escape from the building when an emergency arose. The passage was so well dug and concealed that they were not discovered. One night Parochna, a minister of Duryodhana, came stealthily and set fire to the palace. The Pāṇḍavas with their mother Kunti escaped from the palace to the forest nearby. That night a huntress and her five sons were sleeping in a part of the building and they were burnt to death. They were all sleeping, fully drunk and so could not escape from the building. Parochna also was burnt to death. Thus the Pāṇḍavas had to go away from Hastinapura for a brief period.

3) The Exile and its end. The Kauravas thought that Pāṇḍavas died in the fire and in that belief conducted the funeral rites of their brothers. The Pāṇḍavas after their escape from the fire walked a long distance through the forests and came to the banks of the river Gāḍāga. On their way a demon named Himibha attacked them and Bhīma killed him but at the request of Dharmaputra married his sister Hidimbi. After that while they were continuing their journey crossing the river a Gandharva of name Gītaratha attacked them. Gītaratha was defeated in a battle and he later became friendly with the Pāṇḍavas. He gave them many valuable presents and also narrated to them the story of Tapat-sainavāna. Then they went and stayed in the house of a brahmin in the village of Ekaṅkra. It was at that time that the Savyavās of Pāñcaḷi was held. The Pāṇḍavas went for the Savyavās and married Pāñcaḷi. The news then spread that Pāṇḍavas were not dead but still alive. Dīrrarāṣṭra then sent for them and the Pāṇḍavas returned to their palace in Hastinapura and Yudhiṣṭhīra was crowned as King of half of the country and he built his palace in a place known as Khāṇḍavaprastha. The palace was designed and built by a demon named Maya with beautiful Crystals and costly diamonds. When the Pāṇḍavas were living there Nārada went to them once. He suggested that Pāñcaḷi should remain as wife to the Pāṇḍavas in turn, one year each to one of them. They accepted the suggestion and started living like that. Yudhiṣṭhīra married Devikā, daughter of King Śibi, also. (Sloka 76, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva), Bhīmasena and Arjuna with the help of Śri Kṛṣṇa slew Jāranadha. After that they conducted a victory march over the country and established their own rule by conducting successfully a great battle against the Kauravas. Duryodhana and his brothers once visited Indraprastha, the palace of the Pāṇḍavas. They were fooled at the palace and this enraged them. Duryodhana invited Dharmaputra for a game of dice and the latter lost everything. Yet Dīrrarāṣṭra gave them back everything and sent them to Indraprastha again. Before Dharmaputra reached the palace, Duryodhana again challenged him for a game of dice. Despite protests from all sides Dharmaputra went and played and lost again everything. To fulfil the conditions of the game Yudhiṣṭhīra went to the forests with his brothers and wife to spend twelve years in exile and a year incognito. At that time Kunti lived with Vidura. It was during this period of exile that the Pāṇḍavas got the Ayākapatha (sacred prayer) put from the Sun. They dwelt first in Dvārapāla and then in Kānwakava. Then they went to the mountain of Gandhādāna and from there to Baddarikāśrama. From there they came back again to Kānwakavana and while they were living there Duryodhana and his men went to that forest to see the sufferings of the Pāṇḍavas and gloat on their condition. But when Duryodhana and his men came to the forest the Pāṇḍavas, who were living there, started teasing them. They were living there for a period which Duryodhana and his men could not handle. Duryodhana went to Āravās to tease Dharmaputra but the latter was sent back after being received duly and well-attended to earn his blessings. During their stay in that forest Jayadrathā kidnapped Pāñcaḷi but the Pāṇḍavas rescued her immediately. They went from there again to Dvārapāla. While they were living there the Pāṇḍavas were relieved after successfully fulfilling the conditions of the game. Duryodhana showed obstinate reluctance to part with even five pin-points of land in favour of the Pāṇḍavas. A peace mission of Śri Kṛṣṇa from the Pāṇḍavas to avoid a war and settle matters amicably to Dharmaputra failed and the stage was set for a great battle between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas.

4) Ascension to Heaven. A great and grim battle was fought at Kurukṣetra between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas lasting for eighteen days. Śri Kṛṣṇa neither fought nor took arms even once against the Kauravas but acted as the charioteer of Arjuna. When the war came to an end the Kauravas were completely annihilated. Yudhiṣṭhīra became King. He performed an Atva-medha Yāga. After a few years of reign the Pāṇḍavas crowned Parīkṣit, son of Abhimanyu, as the King and started for their Mahā-prastāhāna (departing their life). They walked in a line in the order of their age, Dharmaputra leading and Pāñcālī following last. At first Pāñcālī fell dead, but nobody turned back. Then Sahadeva fell and nobody worried. This continued thus till Dharmaputra was left alone. A dog which followed them from their very start also remained alive with Dharmaputra. The dog was none other than Dharmadeva, father of Dharmaputra. When Dharmaputra reached the top of the Himalayas Indra was there ready with the divine car to take him to heaven. But Dharmaputra said that he would not come to heaven leaving his brothers and wife elsewhere. Then Indra informed him that they were already in heaven and so Dharmaputra went to heaven with Indra. [Only a general and succinct history of the Pāṇḍavas is given under this head. For details see under the heads of each of the Pāṇḍavas as well as Pāñcālī, Kunti, Bhīṣma and Vidura.]

PĀṆḌAPRAVEŚAPARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of Viśāṭa Parva. This includes chapters two to eighteen of Viśāṭa Parva.

PĀṆḌITAKA. One of the hundred sons of Dhrtrāśura. He was killed in the great battle by Bīma (Bīma Parva).

PĀṆḌU I. Father of the Pāṇḍavas.

1) Genealogy. Refer to the genealogy of Arjuna.

2) Birth. Śantana, a King of Candravanśa, had two wives, Gaṅgā and Satyavati. Even while Satyavati was a maiden she got the gift of the sage Parāśara a son named Vyāsa. But because of the blessing of the sage Vyāsa did not lose her maidenhood. She got of Śantana two sons, Cīrāṅgada and Vīcitrāsva. Cīrāṅgada died young. Vīcitrāsva married the two daughters, Ambikā and Ambalīkā, of the King of Kasi. Vīcitrāsva died after some years. According to Dhrtrāśura was born to Ambikā of Vyāsa and Pāṇḍu to Ambalīkā. (Chapters 63 and 105, Adi Parva)

3) How Pāṇḍu got his name. Vyāsa came to Hastināpura by the command of his mother to beget sons of Ambikā and Ambalīkā. Vyāsa was an ugly sage with matted hair and he was dressed in garments of bearskin. Satyavati that night called Ambikā to her side and commanded her to go to Vyāsa and lie with Vyāsa. She was reluctant to have a sexual union with that old and ugly sage Yet believing the orders of her mother-in-law she did so shutting her eyes during the whole period. The result was she got a child born blind who became known later as Dhrtrāśura. The next day Satyavati ordered Ambalīkā to go and lie with Vyāsa. Ambalīkā on entering the bed chamber went pale on seeing the ugly Vyāsa and the result was she got a child that was pale white in colour. That child became known as Pāṇḍu. The third day Satyavati asked her servant-maid to go and lie with Vyāsa. She did it with pleasure and she remained happy and cheerful during the whole period. The result was she got a beautiful child who became an intelligent scholar of great wisdom. He was known to her as Vidura. (Chapters 1, 63, and 105, Adi Parva)

4) Boyhood and kingship. Bhīṣma took care of Dhrtrāśura, Pāṇḍu and Vidura as his own sons. Bhīṣma taught them all the Vedas including Dhanurveda, and all warfare like mace-fight. They were trained in the use of elephants also. Bhīṣma taught them law and acquainted them with the ways of the world. Pāṇḍu became second to none in archery. The people were all happy. When the boyhood was over Pāṇḍu was crowned as Yuvāraja. Pāṇḍu was the most eligible of the three to become King, for Dhrtrāśura was a born blind man and Vidura was the son of a servant-maid. (Chapter 109, Adi Parva).

5) Marriage. One obeying the behest of Bhīṣma, Pāṇḍu married Pāṭhi, daughter of the Yādava King Śārasena. She was the sister of Vasudeva, father of Kṛṣṇa. She got the name Kurī because she grew up in the palace of King Kuntibhoja. While Kunti was staying in the palace of Kuntibhoja Durvāśa came and stayed in the palace as a guest of the King. Kunti then served the sage with such devotion and patience that Durvāśa at the time of his departure held in high esteem of Kunti and gave her the divine mantra for begetting children. The mantra was to be used only five times. If she called upon any god repeating that mantra, that god would manifest himself before her and bless her with a son equal to him in glory. Out of impatient curiosity of youth Kunti tried it before getting married. One morning, seeing the beautiful and brilliant sun in the sky she invoked him by the mantra and instantly the Sun stood in all bewitching brilliancy before her and she got of him a son who was known as Kanu later. Unmarried as she was, Kunti sent the child afloat in the river nearby. Even after a child-birth Kunti remained a virgin by the blessing of the Sun and so got married as a virgin. Many Kings were pressed for the Suyaśavrāma of Kunti and she put the wedding garland round the neck of Pāṇḍu. Once Bhīṣma went to the country of Madra. The King of Madra received Bhīṣma with respect and Bhīṣma took Mādrī daughter of Madra as a bride for Pāṇḍu. He brought her to Hastināpura and married her to Pāṇḍu. Pāṇḍu lived with his two wives happily and ruled the country well. Once the King Durvāśa came with a huge army and defeated him. Later he defeated Drīgā, King of Māgadhā. Then he conducted a victory march capturing many kingdoms like Kasi, Mithilā, Sūrma and Punja. Thus many of the Kings of Uttrārā Bharata became feudatory princes of Pāṇḍu. In conjunction with his brother Dhrtrāśura, Pāṇḍu gave all the wealth he got by his might to Satyavati and Bhīṣma. He gave enough riches to Vidura also. Then Pāṇḍu went and stayed with his wives in a forest to the south of the Himalayas. (Chapters 110 to 114, Adi Parva)

6) Curse of a sage. While Pāṇḍu was once walking with his wives in the forest he saw a couple of deer playfully running about. In his anger in him made him send an arrow against one of them. The deer was none other than the sage Kindama who in the guise of a deer was having sport with his mate. While falling dead Kindama cursed Pāṇḍu thus "Oh wretched King, you will fall dead the moment you touch your wife in amorous sport." From that day onwards Pāṇḍu could not touch his wives. (For details see under Kindama).

7) Sannyāsa and death. With the death of the innocent sage Kindama there occurred a great change in the life of Pāṇḍu. At first he thought of committing suicide.
But he changed that decision and started for the Himālaya to perform penance there. Kunti and Madri accompanied him. They gave away all their jewels and ornaments as gifts to brahmins. People followed them to the border of the forests and returned to the country weeping. Pandu and his wives visited such holy places as Nāgāpatidāri, Caimaratha, Kālikūṭa, Himālaya, Gandhamadāśa and the lake Indrayūnam. Then they went to Sāstāngā and started performing penance. Pandu and his wives visited the holy places at Nāgāpatidāri to attend a Vāyiga there. The long travel tired them much and on the way Pandu wept thinking of his pitiable state of having no issue. Then Pandu told them of his helplessness in the matter because of the curse of the sage Kindama hanging over him. Then Kunti confided in him the secret of the divine mantra in her possession. Pandu was extremely pleased and with his permission Kunti got three sons, Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīma and Arjuna. She gave one chance to Madri and she got two sons out of it named Nakula and Sahadeva.

Pandu was living happily with his children in Sāstāngā when spring time arrived in the forest with all its blooming flowers and fragrant coniferous trees. Madri, one day walked alone with Madri enjoying the sight of the flowering plants and trees. Bees and butterflies humming around the flowers and on the branches sat the Cuckoo singing. There was a seductive fragrance all around and Pandu was excited beyond control. The resolute Pandu broke down under the exhilarating influence of the season and despite repeated protests from Madri, Pandu caught hold of her and embraced her. The curse of the sage took effect instantaneously and Pandu fell down dead.

The inhabitants of Sāstāngā assembled there weeping. In the presence of a huge crowd including the relatives who had come down from Hastinapūra the dead body of Pandu was cremated according to religious rites. Both the wives came forward to end their lives in the funeral pyre of Pandu. But Kunti was asked to remain to take care of the children and Madri leaving her children to the care of Kunti jumped into the funeral pyre and ended her life. It was the sage Kalāyapa who performed the funeral rites of Pandu. (Chapter 115 to 125, Adi Parva).

8) After the demise, Pandu’s soul is shining in the court of Yama. (Sloka 25, Chapter 7, Sahā Parva). Pandu sent a message to Yudhiṣṭhira from Devlok that Yudhīṣṭhira should conduct a Rajasāya Yajña. The message was conveyed by Nārada. (Sloka 24, Chapter 12, Sahā Parva). He lives in Indraloka with Madri and Kunti. (Sloka 15, Chapter 5, Svaragārhaṇa Parva).

9) Synonym of Pandu. Pandu is known under the following names: Bhārata, Bharatārsabha, Bharatāsattama, Kaurava, Kauravāṇandana, Kauravārasabha, Kauravya, Kauravyādyāda, Kauśalyāṇandavairābhana, Kurāvadya, Kurukuladvayā, Kuruvāṇandana, Kurupati, Kurupavrātra, Nāgarudāpīha and Nāgarudāpaṇa.

Pāṇḍu II. The second son of Janamcayya. (Chapter 94, Adi Parva).

Pāṇḍura. A soldier of Subrahmanya. (Sloka 73, Chapter 43, Sāla Parva).

Pāṇḍurastra. A place of habitation in ancient Bharata. (Sloka 44, Chapter 9, Bhīma Parva).

Pāṇḍya A. I. A King of Vidarbha who was a great devotee of Śiva. One day while he was performing Śiva-puja at dusk he heard a loud noise outside the city and before completing the worship he went out and faced the enemies who were attempting to enter the city and killed its leader. He returned after the fight and without completing the worship took his meals. It was a sin to do so and the King was therefore born in his next birth as Satyaratha, a King, and was killed by his enemies. (Satarudrasamhitā, Śiva Purāṇa).

Pāṇḍya II. (A Talmíyan dynasty of Kings.) A place of Purāṇa fame in Dakṣīṇa Bharata. The three states Cera, Cola and Pāṇḍya were from early times renowned states of Dakṣīṇa Bharata. Historically and Purāṇically Pāṇḍya was a state of eminence.

(A) Historically, The Pāṇḍya dynasty of Kings is very ancient. The exact period of its beginning is still unknown. Megasthenes who lived in the fourth century B.C. has made mention of the Pāṇḍya dynasty in his diary, Julian, an emperor of Italy, who lived in 361 A.D. is stated to have received a letter from Pāṇḍya-dēva. The Pāṇḍya dynasty was strong and elevated under the leadership of Kurukantha the 7th century A.D. From that time till the 16th century Madura was the capital of Pāṇḍya-dēva. The Uccāti dynasty which was ruling the place to the south of Tungabhadra during the period from 9th century to 15th century A.D. is believed to be a part of the Pāṇḍya-dēvam which had gone from Madura. A continuous history of the Pāṇḍya line of Kings is not available. Many Kings bear names like Jātavarnā or Māravarnā. The Pāṇḍya Kings were devotees of Śiva even from the period of the Jainas. At times they have ruled over the combined kingdoms of Cera and Cola. During the period from the 12th to the 14th century A.D. Pāṇḍya was ruled by five of the most valiant rulers and at that time the Pāṇḍyadēva included all the ports in south India up to Nellore. But the power of the Pāṇḍyas waned when the power of the Sultans who ruled Delhi spread to the south. After 1370 A.D only on rare occasions has the power of the Pāṇḍyas spread to the north of river Kaveri. In 1512 A.D. Kerāla got herself free from the hold of the Talmíyan Kings. (Pāṇḍyadēva).

(B) Purāṇic fame. The statements found in Mahābhārata about Pāṇḍya-dēva are given below —

(i) Śri Kṛṣṇa once slew a Pāṇḍya King who was the father of Malayaśvāja. Malayaśvāja who was a very valiant archer started for Dvārakā to kill Kṛṣṇa to avenge the death of his father. Friends dissuaded him from his attempt and so he dropped the idea. During the time of Mahābhārata Malayaśvāja was the King of Pāṇḍya. (Chapter 29, Droṇa Parva).

(ii) Malayaśvāja, King of Pāṇḍya was a frequent visitor to the court of Yudhīṣṭhira. (Sloka 24, Chapter 4, Sahā Parva).

(iii) The King of Pāṇḍya presented gifts at the Rajaśuya of Yudhīṣṭhira. (Sloka 35, Chapter 52, Sahā Parva).

(iv) In the Kurukṛṣṭa battle the Pāṇḍya King fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas with a large army. (Sloka 9, Chapter 19, Udvyoga Parva).

(v) On the chariot of the Pāṇḍya King flag bearing the insignia of ocean flew. The Pāṇḍya King wounded Droṇa. (Sloka 72, Chapter 23, Droṇa Parva).

(v) The King of Pāṇḍya fought against Vṛṣṇesuva and Āṣvathāmā. (Sloka 46, Chapter 20, Karna Parva).

PĀṆI (S). A tribe which opposed the Aryan during the time of Rṣiṇe, Yaska’s Nirūṭa states that their profession was trade and commerce.

PĀṆIKHAṬA. A holy place on the border of Kuru-Ksetra. It is situated near the sacred pond there and performs worship of the Manes one will get the benefit of conducting the three yājñas, Agniṣṭoma, Ātrikāra and Rājasya. (Sloka 39, Chapter 13, Vana Parva).

PĀṆIKEKÇA. A soldier of Subrahmanya. (Sloka 76, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PĀṆINĀ. A serpent. This serpent is a member of the court of Varuṇa. (Sloka 10, Chapter 9, Śabha Parva).

PĀṆIṆI. The author of the Sanskrit Grammar, Pāṇiniya.

1) General information. There is nowhere else in this world a grammar so scientific and so complete as Pāṇiniya. The book contains about four thousand aphorisms. Pāṇinī has given the grammar and got his knowledge from Śiva. It has not been possible to gather much information about the life of such a celebrated grammarian. Patañjali believes that he was the son of Dīkṣi. He addresses Pāṇini as Aśṛya, Bhaṭṭavān and Mahārṣi. The Chinese traveler, Huen Tsang says that the grammar of all the languages in this world has its origin from Pāṇinīya. Rāmāntadradikṣaī states that Pāṇini is the author of the Sanskrit language.

2) Life period. There is difference of opinion regarding the period during which Pāṇini lived. Dr. Goldstucker and Bhandarkar believe that Pāṇini lived before 500 B.C., while Vincent Smith and Belvæiar fix the period in 700 B.C. Patañjali, the author of the celebrated ‘Mahabhyāṣya’ (commentary on Pāṇiniya) lived in 250 B.C. Patañjali has contradicted many of the views criticism made by Kātyāyana about Pāṇiniya. So Pāṇini must have lived before Kātyāyana. Pāṇini has made no reference to Buddha and so he must have lived before Buddha. Pāṇini has shown great grasp over the laws of Śrīmṛti and so he must have lived after Manu. Considering all these facts together it will be proper to fix the period of the end of the sixth century of the beginning of the seventh century B.C.

3) Birth evidence. Evidences are lacking to correctly fix the birth-place of Pāṇini. Many pandits believe that Pāṇini was born in the village of Śaḷatūra in the country of Assāco in the state of Ganderā. But Pāṇini has spent the major portion of his life in Pāṭaliputra. So some pandits are of opinion that only the ancestors of Pāṇini belonged to the village of Śaḷatūra and Pāṇini was born and brought up in Pāṭaliputra. Jainini and Bharhari have stated that Pāṇini was a Śiṣṭa. Śiṣṭas were brahmans well-versed in the Sāstras and devoid of earthly pleasures who inhabited the area surrounded by the Himālayas in the north, Kālikāvana (Bengal) in the east, Vindhya mountains in the south and the Adāra (Aravalli mountains) in the west.

4) A legend. There was a preceptor named Varṣa in Pāṭaliputra and Pāṇini had his education under him. Varṣa gradually acquired a large number of disciples and Pāṇini was the most dull-witted among them. But he was greatly devoted to his Guru and this pleased the wife of the Guru and she took great interest in Pāṇini. One day she called Pāṇini to her side and advised him to go to the Himālayas and do penance to propitiate Śiva to get knowledge from him. Pāṇini obeying instructions went and performed penance. Śiva was pleased and he granted him knowledge about a new grammar. By the time Pāṇini came back from the Himālayas with his grammar another disciple of Varṣa, Vararuci by name, had come down with a grammar from India. Pāṇini challenged Vararuci for a polemical contest. It took eight days and on the eighth day Vararuci defeated Pāṇini. At once there was a great humming sound from the sky and the grammar book of Vararuci was destroyed. After that Pāṇini defeated all his co-disciples in polemics and emerged as the greatest grammarian of the world. (Kāśībhaṭambaka, Kāśībhāṣyottara, Tārāgī 4).

5) Birth of Pāṇiniya. When Pāṇini was doing penance to propitiate Śiva the latter appeared before him and started dancing. He sounded his musical instrument jhākkā (a large double drum) fourteen times. Each of it produced a different sound as follows [1] Ṛṅ (2) Ṛ guarded Fund (3) Hā tre Kā (5) Hayavat (6) lan (7) nāmāntanam (8) jhala (9) Gadhā (10) Jāgadadāś (11) Kāphachathitācata (12) Kapay (13) Sasaśr (14) Hā. Pāṇini accepted these fourteen sounds as fourteen sūtras (aphorisms). They are called Pratyāhārasūtras. (The comprehension of several letters or affixes into one syllable effected by combining the first letter of a Sūtra with its final indravyā letter). These Sūtras are now known as Mahāvārasūtras.

Pāṇini’s grammar contains eight chapters and each chapter has got four pādas and each pāda contains many sūtras. He has taken examples from worldly and spiritual texts in literature. He has dealt with the origin of sound, the connection between two words and all such etymological details. Pāṇini’s grammar is not a mere grammar book. It is a science of language in itself.

PĀṆIṆIṆA. One of the two pāṇīs presented to Subrahmanya by a deva named Pāṣa. The name of the other pāṇīs was Kālika. (Sloka 43, Chapter 45,Śalya Parva).

PĀṆAṆIṆIṆA. A deva who fought bravely against the asuras along with Subrahmanya. (Sloka 68, Chapter 45,Śalya Parva).

PĀṆIṆAṆIṆI. Son of Garuda. (Sloka 10, Chapter 101, Uddoga Parva).

PĀṆAṆODHANA. A sacred place of Bhārata. Indra had constructed a temple there. (Tārāgī 6, Kāśībhāṣyottara).

PĀṆAṆIṆAṆI. An ancient King of Bhārata. (Sloka 234, Chapter 1, Adi Parva).

PĀṆAṆIṆAṆI. Another name for Kauśika river. (Sloka 32, Chapter 71, Adi Parva).

PĀṆABRAHMAN. The Supreme Spirit.

1) General information. Brahman is the root cause of this universe. From Brahman, originated Ākāśa (sky). From sky came air, from air came Āgni and from Āgni came water and from water was born this earth. (Chapter 377, Āgni Purāṇa).
2) General characteristics. Brahman is such that he says he knows it does not know it and he who says he does not know it, knows it. It is beyond the experiences of time and space. The chief attributes of Brahman are Sat, Cit and Ananda. Sat means existence, the really existing truth. The one and undivided existence. There are pandits who say that it was undivided, Nāstītiva (non-existence) that was at the beginning of the Universe. Since nothing can be born from ‘nothing’ the world should have started from nāstiva (existence). There is a saying in Rigveda explaining the position thus: ‘There was neither Astītiva nor Nāstītiva (existence or non-existence) at the beginning.’ It is a matter to ponder how strongly conscious was the Rśi who made the above statement about the Parabrahma’s Nirguṇa (void of attributes) and how clearly he tries to make it understandable to those who have not experienced the idea. Cit means knowledge, splendour, consciousness. Ananda means bliss. Paul Deussen writes that the ancient Upaniṣads do not include in the definition of Brahman the term ‘ananda.’

3) The two forms of Brahman. Brahman has two forms—Parabrahma and Aparabrahma. Parabrahma is Amūrtta (formless, incorporeal) and Aparabrahma is Mūrtta (embodied, corporeal). The Amūrtta Brahman is known by such names as Parabrahma, Paramātma and Nirguṇabrahma. The corporeal or material Brahman is Aparabrahma and thus this whole world is Aparabrahma.

4) The Upaniṣads about Brahman.

Aśādhiṣṭānantaṁ śaṁśaya

(SATKARASĀRYA)

The sublime Truth (Brahman) is beyond time, place and attributes. Brahman is one, (not many) and it is Sat (existent) but for the dull-witted, ignorant people it is Aṣat (non-existent).

(CHANDOGYA)

PĀRADA. An ancient place of Bhārata. Those who resided there were called Pāradas. The descendent of these people live in north Baluchistan. Pāradas gave Dharmaputra many valuable presents (Chapter 51, Sahā Parva). They followed Bhīma. (Chapter 87, Bhīma Parva).

PARAHAN. A king of ancient Bṛhātra (Sloka 238, Chapter 1, Adi Parva, Mahābhārata).

PARAMAKAMBOJA. A place of habitation situated on the northwestern side of Bhārata. Arjuna conquered this land. (Sloka 25, Chapter 27, Sahā Parva).

PARAMAKRODHI. One of the Śivadevas who are worthy of accepting a share of the obesquial oblations. The others are: Bālanḍī, Viśāpī, Puṇyākṣa, Pāvana, Pārashīcyama, Sāmīkī, Dīyaśānīn, Vīvāvan, Vīryavān, Hīrānī, Kriśnān, Kṛṣṇa, Śukrān, Vīryavān, Dīyaśānīt, Anukṣarman, Prati, Pradātī, Amūrtman, Sālābhī, Dīroṣī, Bhūpā, Sājja, Vajjivāri, Vīvāvan, Somāvācas, Sarvāc, Sāyāṣā, Somāṇa, Sūryāsmin, Dātūtā, Puṇḍarīyaka, Ugrākshā, Nākoda, Vīvāvan, Dīpi, Camūhara, Surela, Vīmāni, Śaṅkara, Bhavā, Ās, Kārtū, Kri, Dāka, Bhūvā, Dīyaśānīt, Gopī, Pāraśīcy, Adiṣya, Rāmaṇa, Saptārī, Somāvācas, Viśve, Kavi, Amogha, Sugpōta, Nātī and Śīvara. (Chapter 91, Amūfāsana Parva).

PARAMĀN. See under Trasarenu.

PARAMĀTMA. The Supreme Spirit. The vitality behind Jīvātmā (soul). (See under Jīvātmā and Brahman).
PARAMEŚTHI I. A king of Chandravansi (Lunar race). He was the son of Indraditya and the father of Praiñhara. (Chapter 1, Anuśaṇa I, Visnu Purāṇa.)

PARAMEŚTHI II. A Vaidikasūkṣmastra. He was a disciple of Brahmag. (Rudhravarmakopa Upānisaḍ). According to Jainini Brahmāna Parameśthi was the disciple of Praiñhara.

PARAMEŚTHI III. A king of Pāñcāladeśa. He was born to Ajanmika of Nīlī. Parameśthi and the sons of Dusyanta, his brother, are known as Pāñcālas. (Aḍī Parva, Mahābhārata.)

PARANTHA A place of habitation of ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 47, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva.)

PARAPURĀÑJAYA A prince of the Heśaya race. He once sent an arrow against a sage mistaking him to be a wild animal. (See under Aṛṣiṣṭen.)

PARASARA I. 1) Geology. Descending in order from Viṣṇu—Brahmag—Vasiṣṭha—Sakti—Parāśara. 2) Birth. Sakti, son of Vasiṣṭha begot of his wife Adryānti the son named Parāśara. Even at the time of his birth he was a scholar. (For details regarding birth see under Aṛṣiṣṭen.) 3) Rākṣasa. Even before the birth of Parāśara, Kaimāṇapāda in his demonical form ate his father, Sakti. Therefore Parāśara nurtured an obstinate hatred against the Rākṣasas. So he performed a Yāga to kill all the rākṣasas. Thousands of rākṣasas were burnt to death at this yāga and Vasiṣṭha, grandfather of Parāśara, expiated the sin of rākṣasas. He approached Parāśara and said “Son, do not give way to such anger. Abandon this wrath. What harm have these poor rākṣasas done? Death was in the destiny of your father. Every one has to suffer the result of his own deeds. Anger destroys the fame and austerity which one has attained by years of toil. Therefore abandon your anger and wind up your yāga.” Parāśara accepted the advice of his grandfather. Vasiṣṭha was pleased with his grandson and at that time Pulastyaśarvasi son of Brahmag also came there. Vasiṣṭha gave arghya (water and flowers) and received him. Then Vasiṣṭha and Pulastya jointly blessed him and said he would be the author of Pañcarāṣṭra. Thus Parāśara became the best of the Gargaparāmbā (spiritual line of preceptors). (Chapter 1, Anuśaṇa I, Viṣṇu Purāṇa.) 4) Birth. Parāśara begot a son of a fisherwoman named Satyaśāla and the boy became later the celebrated Viṣṇa.

PARASARA II. 5) Other details. (i) He got the name Parāśara because even from the womb of his mother he consoled Vasiṣṭha when his son Śakti, father of Parāśara was eaten by the demoniac form of Kaimāṇapāda. (ii) See under Gargaparāmbā the status of Parāśara in that traditional line of Gurus. (iii) Among the Sūkas, Sūka 65, Anuvāka 12, Mānudā 1 of Gṛba was sung by Parāśara. (iv) Parāśara was one among the several sages who visited Bhīṣma lying on his bed of arrows. (Chapter 47, Śantī Parva.) (v) Once Parāśara visited king Janaka and talked with him on Adhyātma topics (spiritual matters). (Chapter 290, Śantī Parva.) (vi) Chapter 150 of Anuśaṇa Parva mentions Parāśara as describing the power of Śavitrīmantra to an audience.

PARASARA II. A serpent born of the family of Dhyrārātra. This was burnt to death at the sarapatha of Janamejaya. (Śloka 18, Chapter 57, Aḍī Parva.)

PARASARA I. Viṣṇa, son of sage Parāśara. (See under Viṣṇa.)

PARASARA II. This sage is different from Viṣṇa. This Parāśara was a member of the court of Yuddhishṭhira. (Śloka 13, Chapter 7, Sāthaka Parva.) He was a member of the court of Indra also. Śri Kṛṣṇa once met him while he was going to Hastināpuram from Dwārakā. (Śloka 64, Chapter 83, Udyoga Parva.)

PARASAVA A child born to a brahmin of a śūdra woman. Viṣṇu was a son born to Viṣṇu of a śūdra woman and was therefore called Parasava. (Śloka 25, Chapter 161, Aḍī Parva.)

PARASIKA A place of human habitation in ancient Bhārata. (Śloka 25, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva.)

PARASURĀMA An incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu, as man. 1) Geology. Descending in order from Mahāviṣṇu—Brahmag—Bṛgū-Cyavana—Urvā-śeika—JamadagniParasurāma.

2) Cause for incarnation. Once god Agni went to Karta- vīryārjunā and begged for food. The king allowed him to take from his vast territory as much food as he wanted from anywhere he liked. Agni started burning forests and mountains and consuming them. Deep inside one of the forests a sage named Apava was performing penance and the fire burnt the Ārama of Apava also. Enraged at this the sage cursed thus: “Kartavīryārjunā is at the root of this havoc. The arrogance of Kṣatriyas has increased beyond limits. Mahāviṣṇu would therefore be born on earth as Parasurāma to destroy this arrogance of the Kṣatriyas.” Accordingly Mahāviṣṇu was born as Parasurāma in the Bhārata race. (Chapter 40, Harivaṃśa.)

3) Birth. Parasurāma gives another version: Viṣṇu promised Bhūmideva (mother earth) that he would be born on earth as Parasurāma when Bhūmideva went to him in the form of a cow and complained to him about the atrocities of the wicked Kṣatriya kings.

4) Birth. Parasurāma was born as the son of sage Jamadagni of his wife Renukā. Their ārama was on the shores of the Narmādā river. Renukā, mother of Parasurāma, was the daughter of King Praeṣeṇajit. She had four sons even before the birth of Parasurāma (Chapter 38, Brahmagadha Purāṇa.)

4) Boyhood and education. Parasurāma spent his boyhood with his parents in the ārama. An important event in his life then was his slaying his mother at the behest of his father. (See under Jamadagni, Parva 6.) Though Parasurāma was a brahmin there is nothing on record to show that he did study the Vedas. Perhaps he might have had the Vedic instructions from his father during his life with him. He had even from the beginning shown an interest in learning Dhanurvidyā (archery). For obtaining proficiency in archery he went to the Himālayas and did penance to please Śiva for many years. Please at his pensation Śiva on several occasions extolled the virtues of Parasurāma. At that time the asuras (demons) acquired strength and attacked the devas. The devas complained to Śiva. Śiva called Parasurāma and asked him to fight with ard devat Parasurama was without weapons and he asked Siva how he could go and fight the demons without weapons. Siva said: “Go with my blessings and you will kill your foes.” Parasurama did not wait for a moment. When Siva thus assured him of success, on he went straight to fight with the demons. He defeated the asuras and came back to Siva when the latter gave him many boons and divine weapons.

Till that time his name was only Rama and he became Parasurama because among the weapons given to him by Siva was a weapon named Parasu (axe). There is a story behind this weapon Parasu. Once Siva was not invited for a Yaga conducted by Daksa. An angered Siva threw his spike into the Yagaśilā (sacred hall). The spike spoiled the Yaga and smashed the hall and after that roamed about aimlessly for some time and then turned towards Badarāyana where at that time Nararāyana were engaged in penance. The spike went straight to the heart of sage Nārāyaṇa. Nārāyaṇa made the defiant sound “hurum” (hurūmā) and the spike turned away. Siva felt angry for thus showing disrespect to his spike and he attacked the sage. At once Nārāṣi plucked a grass and reciting a mantra threw it at Siva. The grass became a Parasu (axe) and it attacked Siva. Siva broke it into two. Then Nara-Nārāyaṇa bowed before him and worshipped him. Thereafter the two pieces of the Parasu remained with Siva. It was one of these that Siva gave to Parasurama.

When Parasurama was returning happy and glorious with boons and weapons he got on his way a disciple named Akṭavraja. (See under Akṭavraja). Guru and disciple lived in an Ārama and Parasurama became a noted Guru in dhanurveda (archery). (Chapter 34, Karna Parva; Chapter 40, Śānti Parva and Chapter 18, Anuśāsana Parva).

5) Instructions in archery. According to Purāṇas Parasurāma did not spend his life as an instructor in archery. There are statements, however, mentioning that Karna and Drona took instructions from him.

 Pretending to be a brahmin Karna commenced taking instructions in archery from Parasurama. When his education was complete Parasurama taught him Brahmāstra. One day after a long walk in the forest Parasurama took rest placing his head on the lap of Karna and soon fell asleep. At that time a beetle came and started sucking blood from the thigh of Karna. Karna remained still, bearing the pain, lest any movement of his body should disturb the sleep of his Guru. Blood was oozing from his thighs and it slowly made the body of the Guru also wet. Parasurama woke up and noticed the bleeding thigh and the calm demeanour of Karna raised doubts in him. He questioned Karna saying that no brahmin could ever bear such a pain with such calmness and Karna had to tell the truth. Then Parasurama corrected him for deceit against his Guru saying that he would never be able to remember the Brahmāstra when the time to use it came.

There is a story behind Alakā, the beetle that bit Karna. This beetle was in his previous birth a demon named Daśaśā. Daśaśā once tried to molest the wife of the sage Bhrigu. The Mahārāṣṭra cursed him and made him into a beetle. On his request for mercy he said he would get release from the curse by Parasurama. So the beetle became the Bṛhaspati again and left the place. Karna took leave of Parasurama and went to Hastinapura. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 3).

Another famous disciple of Parasurama was Drona. There is a story behind Drona getting Dhanurveda from Parasurama. After travelling throughout the world exterminating the Kṣatriya race Parasurama gave all his wealth to Kṣatriyā. On hearing that Parasurama was giving away all his riches as gifts to brahmins Drona rushed to Mahendraparvata to see Parasurama. By then Parasurama had distributed all his wealth excepting Dhanurveda. Parasurama called Drona to his side and said that only two things remained with him, his body and Dhanurveda. Drona, he added, could take anyone of the two and then Drona took Dhanurveda from him. After that Parasurama went to Mahārāṣṭra for the sake of penance. (Chapter 130, Ādi Parva).

There are some apparent inconsistencies in the above stories: it is said Drona taught Dhanurveda to Karna. Drona was the last person to receive Dhanurveda from Parasurama because the latter, surrendering his Dhanurveda in entirety, left for the forests for doing penance. Then, when did Karna learn Dhanurveda from Parasurama? Could it be before Drona went to Parasurama? Then it must be accepted that Drona had not studied under Parasurama when he was teaching the nṛ-pādas and Kaurava. He learnt it from somewhere before he became the preceptor of the Pandavas. Karna after studying under Drona for some time went to Parasurama for higher studies and Drona approached Parasurama after Karna had left him.

6) The destruction of the Kṣatriyas. The most important event of his life was the total extermination of the Kṣatriya race. The Purānic belief is that he went right across the world eighteen times to massacre the Kṣatriyas.

In many places in the Purānas it is stated that Parasurama fought against the Kṣatriyas eighteen times. But in chapter 29 of Avatāravī Parva it is stated that Parasurama fought against the Kṣatriyas twenty-one times. So it is to be surmised that Parasurama fought eighteen big battles and three minor ones.

There are some old stories to explain this revengeful enmity of Parasurama towards the Kṣatriyas.

(1) Family enmity. The Ṛṣeya dynasty was the most powerful kingly race then. Parasurama was a descendant of Bhrigu, a brahmin sage. That is why he gets the name Bhriguva. Also the Bhriguvas were the family preceptors of the Ṛṣeya kings. Taking advantage of their supreme position in the royal palace the Bhriguvas accumulated great wealth at the cost of the royal riches. Gradually the Bhriguvas rose in prosperity in inverse proportion to the decline of the Ṛṣeya wealth. It was at the time of Relka, grandfather of Parasurama that they touched the rock-bottom of their wealth and they found funds lacking even for the day-to-day administration of the state. In despair they went and requested the Relkas to lend them some money. But they hid their money and refused to give them anything. The Kṣatriya kings got angry and killed the brahmans. What stock was left of them went to the base of the Kṣatriyas. The wife of Relka who was pregnant then kept the child in her womb for twelve years afraid to bring forth the child. After that the child came out breaking open the thigh (ūru) and so the child was called Auru. Even at the time of his birth Auru shone like a brilliant torch and not only that; the child cried aloud "Oh, wicked Kṣatriyas, I will kill every one of you. I heard from my mother’s womb the din of the swords you raised to kill my ancestors. I will never wait for another moment to wreak vengeance on you."

This frightened them from the face of Auruva burnt even Devakula. Kṣatriyas as a class came and prostrated before him. The devas came and requested him to abandon his anger and Auruva agreed. The devas picked up the fire sparks from Auruva’s face and deposited them in the ocean. From those sparks put in the ocean was born Badavāgni alias Auruva.

(ii) Cure of the sage. From Auruva was born Jamadagni and from Jamadagni was born Parasurāma. In the race of the Hēhāyas was born at that time a very valorous king named Kārttīvyārjuna. Once Kārttīvyārjuna gave a dinner to Agnihagavān. Agni began to devour all the mountains and forests in the world. The burning was so indeterminate that it burnt the Āśrama of a sage named Agni. The sage cursed Kārttīvyārjuna saying that the thousand hands of the sage would be cut off by Parasurāma born in the family of Bhārāgasvam. From that day onwards the latent feud in him against the Bhārāgasvams was roused into action.

(iii) Varuṇa’s ridicule. Kārttīvyārjuna who got a thousand hands by a boon from a sage named Dattātreyya subdued all enemies of his status and not satisfied with the gain he went to the shores of the ocean and challenged Varuṇa for a fight. Varuṇa came before him and very modestly admitted that he was incapable of meeting the challenge thrown and suggested that perhaps Jamadagni’s son, Parasurāma might accept the challenge and give him a fight. Hearing this Kārttīvyārjuna turned towards the Āśrama of Jamadagni on the shores of the Kārmrāta river.

(iv) Cause of the war (immediate). Kārttīvyārjuna went for hunting in the forests and feeling exhausted after some time went to the Āśrama of Jamadagni with his retinue. Jamadagni received them well and with the help of the Kāmādhenu (wheat-yielding cow) named Sūṣṭikā, Jamadagni gave a sumptuous feast to the King and his followers. When after the meal was over they started to take leave of the sage, Candragupta, a minister of Kārttīvyārjuna brought to the notice of the king the superior powers of the Kāmādhenu, Sūṣṭikā. The king wanted to get the cow and asked Candragupta to tell the sage about it. Though the minister told Jamadagni about the royal desire the sage refused to part with the cow. Then the minister with the help of the other royal servants took the cow by force and the sage followed the cow weeping. On the way Candragupta beat Jamadagni to death and brought the cow to the presence of the king. The king was pleased and the royal hunting party returned to the palace happy.

Jamadagni’s wife Renukā went in search of her husband and to her grief found him lying dead. Renukā wept beating her breast twentyone times and by that time her son Parāśurāma came there and he declared that he would travel round the world twentyone times, the number of times his mother beat her breast, to kill and exterminate the Kṣatriyas from this world. Then the dead body of Jamadagni was placed on a pyre and they were singing Vaisuṣṭā before placing fire on the pyre when Sukramuni appeared there and brought Jamadagni to life by invoking the art of Maṇḍava. By that time Sūṣṭikā somehow escaped from the custody of the King and came there without the calf. Then Parāśurāma vowed that he would bring the calf soon and taking with him his disciple Akṣavānaka he left for the city of Māhismati the abode of Kārttīvyārjuna. There they bought a great calf and after adorning Kārttīvyārjuna and many of his followers brought back the calf.

To avenge for the sin of this massacre Jamadagni advised his son to go and perform penance in Mahendragiri. Taking advantage of the absence of Parāśurāma from the Āśrama, Śūraena son of Kārttīvyārjuna, with his followers went to the Āśrama of Jamadagni and chopped off his head. Parāśurāma returned from Mahendragiri at once and cremated the dead body of his father. Renukā, his mother, jumped into the funeral pyre and abandoned her life. From that moment onwards started Parāśurāma’s fierce programme of mass massacre of the Kṣatriyas.

(v) Victory march. Parāśurāma’s world-tour was confined to an all-Bhārata tour. The wars of Parāśurāma are not described in detail in Mahābhārata. Information that Parāśurāma killed the Kings of Cola, Cera and Pauḍra. To stop the birth of Kṣatriyas in future Parāśurāma destroyed even the embryo in the wombs of Kṣatriya women. Then the Bhārāgasvams ancestors like Rākṣaṇa and others came to the sky and requested Parāśurāma to stop this slaughter. They said: “Oh son of Bhirā, how shall we live if you go on killing innocent Kṣatriyas?” By that time Parāśurāma had made twentyone rounds around Bhārata killing the Kṣatriyas. (Chapter 64, Ādi Parva; Chapter 30, Sābhā Parva; Chapter 116, Vana Parva; Chapter 49, Sānti Parva and 10 chapters from chapter 83 of Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

7) Samantapāñcakakṣa, Samantapāñcakaka it Kurukṣetra itself where the great battle was conducted. This is a holy place and it was Parāśurāma who constructed it. He stored the blood of the Kṣatriyas he killed in the twentyone rounds of killing in five lakes in Samantapāñcakaka. He offered blood to the Manes in those lakes. The Manes led by Rākṣaṇa appeared before him and asked him to name any boon he wanted. Then Parāśurāma said, “Revered Manes, if you are pleased with me you must absolve me from the sin of this mass massacre of the Kṣatriyas and declare the five lakes where I have stored their blood as holy.” The Manes declared, “Let it be so.” From then onwards the place became holy under the name Samantapāñcakaka. At the end of the Dwāpara Yuga and the beginning of Kaliyuga a great battle lasting for eighteen days took place at this holy place between the Pândavas and the Kauravas. (Chapter 2, Ādi Parva).

8) Atoneement. To atone for the sin of slaughtering even innocent Kṣatriyas, Parāśurāma gave away all his riches as gifts to brahmans. He invited all the brahmans to Samantapāñcakaka and conducted a great Yajna there. The chief Śrīvīka (officiating priest) of the Yajna was the sage Kāsiya and Parāśurāma gave away all the lands he conquered till that time to Kāsiya. Then a platform of gold ten yards long and nine yards wide was made and Kāsiya was installed there and worshipped. After the worship was over according to the instructions from Kaśyapa the gold platform was cut into pieces and the gold pieces were offered to brahmā.

When Kaśyapa was asked by Paraśurāma he said thus:—"Oh Rāma, you have given me all your land and it is not now proper for you to live in my soil. You can go to the south and live somewhere on the shores of the ocean there." Paraśurāma walked south and requested the ocean to give him some land to live. Varuṇa then asked him to throw a winnow into the ocean. When Paraśurāma threw the sieve (Sūrpa) and the ocean gave way to land for a distance where the winnow fell from where he stood. This is the place Sūrpaṇakha now known as Keralā. (Sūrpa=Winnowing basket). After giving this land also to the brahmās, Paraśurāma went and started doing penance at Mahendragiri. (Chapter 130, Adi Parva; Chapter 117, Vana Parva and Chapter 49, Śānti Parva).

9) Other exploits of Paraśurāma.

(i) Mṛtā Śrī Rāma. Śrī Rāma and Laksmana were returning to Ayodhyā from Mithilāpurī after the marriage along with the sage Vasiṣṭha through a deep forest. Paraśurāma blocked their way and addressing Śrī Rāma said: Oh Rāma, son of Dvārakā, I heard that you broke during the marriage of Sītā the great Śaiva bow of the palace of Janaka. It was a Śaiva bow and I have now come here to test your prowess. I am giving you a Vaiśāvāvā bow now. Can you string this bow?"

Vasiṣṭha tried his best to pacify Paraśurāma. But Paraśurāma would not hear it. He started describing the story and greatness of the Śaiva bow and the Vaiśāvāvā bow. (See under Vaiśāvāvā bow). Then Śrī Rāma took the bow from Paraśurāma and started to string it. The brilliance of Śrī Rāma dazzled him and he stood dumbfounded at his skill. Paraśurāma was immensely pleased and he blessed Śrī Rāma. After that he went again to Mahendragiri to perform penance.

This story is told to show that it is very hard for Rāma to break the bow of his Guru Śiva. So an angered Paraśurāma blocked the way of Śrī Rāma and challenged him to string and take aim with the mighty Vaiśāvāvā bow he (Paraśurāma) was carrying with him then. Śrī Rāma with perfect ease took the bow, strung it, and taking the missile asked Paraśurāma to give the target. Paraśurāma was astonished and was in a fix. The missile could destroy even the entire Universe. So Paraśurāma asked Rāma to aim at the accumulated tapobala (power accrued by penance) of his self and Rāma did so. Then Paraśurāma surrendered to Śrī Rāma the Vaiśāvāvā bow and arrow and the Vaiśāvāvā tejas (divine brilliance) in him. Paraśurāma after having carried out the purpose of his incarnation gave instructions to Śrī Rāma to continue the purpose of his incarnation and then after blessing Śrī Rāma went again to do penance at his holy Śrīṇa.

This same story is told by the sage Lomāsaka to the Pāṇḍavas during their exile in the forest. This story is much told in the previous portion. When the fame that Śrī Rāma was the best of Kings spread far and wide Paraśurāma once went to see Śrī Rāma. Giving him the bow and arrow with which he had done the mass massacre of the Kṣatriyas he challenged him to string it and take aim. With a smile Śrī Rāma did so and then Paraśurāma said: Rāma should do the stringing up to his elephant Rāhu. Paraśurāma got angry and then on the face, which became fierce, by his anger, Paraśurāma saw besides himself, Aditya-Vasu-Rudras, Śādhyās, Bālakhiyās, Devarśis, oceans, mountains, the Vedas and all such things of this universe. Śrī Rāma sent out his missile from the bow. The whole universe was thrown into chaos. Thunder and lightning rocked the world. Heavy rains flooded the earth. Burning stars and meteors fell to the ground. Paraśurāma then knew that Śrī Rāma was the incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu and he stood bowing before him. Ashamed of his defeat he took leave of Śrī Rāma and went to Mahendragiri. When he reached there he found he had lost all his brilliance. Then the manes appeared and advised him to go and bathe in the river Vaiḍūryā. Accordingly Paraśurāma went and bathed in the river and regained his lost brilliance. (Chapter 99, Vana Parva).

(ii) Paraśurāma and Śrī Krṣṇa. The Purāṇas describe two important occasions when Paraśurāma met Śrī Krṣṇa.

The first meeting was at the mountain of Gomanta. On Śrī Krṣṇa and Balarāma with a view to enjoying the abundances of Nature went to the beautiful mountain of Gomanta and ascended to its top. On their way they met Paraśurāma engaged in penance there. They exchanged greetings and talked to each other for some time. Then Paraśurāma requested Śrī Krṣṇa to kill Śrīla Vaiśāvadeva, King of Karavita on the base of that mountain. Śrī Krṣṇa promised to do this. He left the place carrying with him the blessings of the sage. The second meeting was when Krṣṇa was going to the court of the Kauravas as a messenger of the Pāṇḍavas. On his way Śrī Krṣṇa saw a company of sages coming and, alighting from his chariot Krṣṇa talked with them. Paraśurāma who was in that company then embraced Krṣṇa and said that he should give him the situation to the Kauravas when he was conducting his mission. The sages blessed Krṣṇa and wished Krṣṇa all success in his mission. (Chapter 83, Udyoga Parva; 10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

10) Other details.

(i) Paraśurāma along with a few other sages was present at the Sabhāpravāsa of Dharma-pratīkṣa. (Slokā 11, Chapter 53, Śānti Parva).

(ii) Paraśurāma was present at the court of the Kauravas when Śrī Krṣṇa was speaking to Dhṛtarāṣtrī on behalf of the Pāṇḍavas. When the Kauravas did not reply the questions put by Śrī Krṣṇa, Paraśurāma rose up to tell a story to illustrate the evils resulting from the arrogance of man. There was once a King called Dambodbhava who was very arrogant because of his great strength. He wanted to diffuse his energy by fighting and laboured much to get good opponents and roamed about in search of fighters. One day the brahmās directed him to Nara-nārāyaṇas and accordingly Dambodbhava went to their śrīṇa at Bodarika and challenged them for a fight. They refused the fight and yet the fight happened to be true. Then the sages took a few blades of the iśva grass and threw them at him. They filled the sky as great missiles and the King begged to be pardoned and prostrated before the sages. They sent back the be-fooled King to his palace. (Chapter 96, Udyoga Parva).

(iii) Once a grim battle was waged between Parasurama and Bhishma. (See under Aham).
(iv) Parasurama sits in the court of Yama. (Sloka 19, Chapter 9, Sabha Parva).

PARASURAMAKUNDĀ. Another name for Parasuramanāthā. Parasuramakundā comprises of five pools of blood called Samastapathaaka constructed by Parasurama on the borders of Kuruksetra. (See under Parasurama).

PARASUVANA. A forest in hell. The sinners after climbing out of Vaiśāraṇī, a river in hell in which hot blood flows, reach Asipatranva. There the bodies of the sinners are cut by the leaves of asipatra which are as sharp as a sword's edge. Leaving that they reach Parasuvana. (Sloka 32, Chapter 322, Sānti Parva).

PARATAKGANĀ. A place of habitation of ancient Bhārata. (Sloka 64, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PARAVĀHA. One of the seven forms of Vāyu. Prāṇavāyu has got seven forms: —

1) Praśāna. This vāyu makes lightning in the sky.
2) Āstaka. It is by this vāyu that the stars shine and waters of the ocean go up as water-vapour and down as rains.
3) Udāsaka. This vāyu makes movements among the clouds and produces thunder.
4) Samudra. This vāyu beats the mountains. Sarvavāyu is also engaged in shaping the clouds and producing thunder.
5) Pānaka. Preparing holy water in the sky and sprinkling on Kaśāyagāṇa stay there static is the work of this vāyu.
6) Pānaka. This vāyu gives strength to one who sits in meditation.
7) Praśāna. It is this vāyu that fans the devus to make them cool. (Chapter 329, Bhīṣma Parva).

PARAVARTANĀKĀ. One of the twentyeight hells. (See under Āśvita).

PARAVASU. Son of a sage called Raibhīya. He was the brother of Arīvasu. (See under Ārvāvasu).

PARAVATA. A serpent born in the family of Airāvata. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Sloka 11, Chapter 57, Adi Parva).

PARAVĪDAYA. See under Aparavīdaya.

PARIJATA. One of the children of Garuḍā. (Chapter 101, Udyoga Parva).

PARIJĀTADIKAS. The inhabitants of the place called Parijātadāka. The soldiers from Parijātadāka fought on the side of Duryodhana during the great battle. (Sloka 9, Chapter 51, Bhīṣma Parva).

PARIGHA I. One of the five pārsadas presented to Subrahmanya by the devo. Anīra. The other four are — Vata, Bhāma, Dahati and Dahanā. (Chapter 138, Sānti Parva).

PARIGHA II. A forest. (See under Bidalopākhyaṇa).

PARIHARA. A King of the country of Kālātjara situated near Citrakūṭa. Parīhara who was an Atharvaparāśava (devoted to the Atharvaveda) ruled the country for twelve years and during his reign he gave a strong opposition to the spread of Buddhism. (Pratitarga Parva, Bhīṣma Parva).

PARIHYAÑGĀ. A mahāśi. One of the sons born to Rṣi Marici of his wife Urā. There were six sons and the five others were — Smara, Udghita, Kṛudrabhy, Agniprānta and Ghrū. In his next birth he was born as one of the relatives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and was killed by Kamsa. (10th Skanda, Bhāgavata).

PARIJĀTĀ I. The sage who came to the court of Maya along with Nārada. (Chapter 5, Sabha Parva).

PARIJĀTĀ II. See under Kalpavṛkṣa.

PARIJĀTĀ III. A serpent born in the family of Airāvata. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Sloka 11, Chapter 51, Adi Parva).

PARIJĀTAKA. A sage who was a brilliant member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sloka 14, Chapter 4, Sabha Parva).

PARIKŚIT. 1. A brilliant King of Candranamī. He was the grandson of Arjuna and son of Abhimanyu. (For genealogy see under Abhimanyu).

1) Birth. Parīkṣit was the son born to Abhimanyu of Uttarā. This was a still-born child and it was Śrī Kṛṣṇa who gave it life. There is a story in Mahābhārata about this:

Uttarā, wife of Abhimanyu, was pregnant when the war between the Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas started at Kurukṣetra. Āvathāmā, son of Drona, entered the camp of the Pāṇḍavas at night and slew Īrṣyādyaūnā. He then sent the most fierce Brahmāśāstra (missile of Brahma-śāstra) to exterminate the Pāṇḍavas. To face it and oppose it Arjuna who sent an equally fierce Brahmāśāstra. The sight of two such powerful weapons opposing each other made all the sages anxious and they led by Vīśva entered the field and requested them to withdraw their missiles. It was in vain. The missile of Āvathāmā went and struck the womb of Uttarā.

Once when the Pāṇḍavas after their exile were staying in the village of Upāplavā a brahmin had predicted to Uttarā that at the frugal life of the life of the Pāṇḍavas Uttarā would bear a son who would be tested even while in her womb and that the child should be named Parīkṣit. (Parīkṣit = test).

The child in the womb died when the missile struck it. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was greatly agitated by this wicked act of Āvathāmā and he said thus: — "Oh Āvathāmā, the child now dead in its womb would surely come to life again. You will be called a sinner because of this infanticide. Because of this you will roam about on earth for three thousand years and during that time nobody will mingle with you. You will not get a seat anywhere. All diseases will find an abode in your body. But this infant would grow up into a king and rule the country for sixty years. He would become celebrated as the next Kururūja." (Saṃśīka Parva, Mahābhārata)

When the Bhāratayuddha came to an end Dharmaputra performed an aśvamedhayāga. Many prominent persons including Śrī Kṛṣṇa assembled at Hastināpurā for this purpose. Vidura received them all. At that time they were informed that Uttarā had delivered a still-born child. Parīkṣit was born when the embryo was only six months old (Sloka 82, Chapter 85, Adi Parva). Everybody assembled there was sad and depressed when they heard this news. Śrī Kṛṣṇa went in and saw the dead infant. Uttarā wept bitterly and everybody asked Śrī Kṛṣṇa to give life to the infant somehow. Śrī Kṛṣṇa did so and the child was named Parīkṣit remembering the prophetic words of the bīhmapa.

2) Marriage. Parīkṣit married a princess named Mādhavatī and got of her four sons named Janamejaya, Śrutatasena, Ugrasena and Riksheng. Chapters 3, 4, 5, Adi Parva).

3) Curse of a sage. Parikshit was greatly interested in hunting. Once he went to a big forest with his large retinue to hunt. While hunting he followed a deer which the king had struck with his arrow and he separated from the rest and went a long way deep into the forest. It was midday and the king was tired. Then he saw a sage sitting there and the king went in and asked him about the deer. Parikshit, engrossed in his meditation did not hear that. The king mistook his silence to be arrogance and taking the dead body of a cobra lying nearby with the tip of his bow threw it round the neck of the sage and went his way. The sage did not know even that. The king returned to the palace after the hunting.

The sage had a son named Gavijita (In many places the name Sriji is used for Gavijita). He was playing with the sons of other sages. One munikumara (son of a sage) said, "Oh Gavijita, your father is equal to Siva. Both have a serpent round their necks. But there is only one difference. The serpent round your father's neck is a dead one." Gavijita was greatly disturbed by this jeev and he immediately went to the Shrama to make enquiries to learn how an unknown person had done that foul deed. He took water in his hand and said "Whoever be the person who put this dead snake round the neck of my father will die being bitten by the fierce cobra Takshaka within seven days." Only after pronouncing this horrible curse did he find out that the perpetrator of that crime was none other than the most noble king. Parikshit, Gavijita repeated the curse and immediately sent word to the king about his curse through Gaurumukha, a munikumara. The king was a bit frightened first but then he started thinking about the way to escape from the curse. (Chapter 40, Adi Parva, and 2nd Shandha, Bhagavata).

4) Takshaka gets ready. As soon as the messenger Gaurumukha departed from the palace Parikshit called the ministers to tell them that they must find a way to escape from the cobra Takshaka. They built a building on a huge pillar and gave all protections to the building. Brahmin well-versed in all the mantras and Visvavadya (physician in the treatment of snake-poisoning) of fame were asked to sit around the pillar and the place was well-guarded. The King sat in a place and lo! the tree stood in place. On the seventh day the celebrated Visvavadya Ka yapamaharaj was on his way to the palace as the summons of the king. Takshaka was also on his way to the palace in the guise of a brahmin. They met on the way and though Ka yapa did not know him first Takshaka introduced himself when he knew that Ka yapa was going to the palace to treat the king if anything happened. He said "Oh Ka yapa, I am Takshaka and none of your arts would be able to fight against the effects of my poison. If you want to know it we shall make a trial." Saying so Takshaka went and bit a big banyan tree standing nearby, and lo! the whole tree was burnt to ashes by the strength of the poison. Ka yapa smugly recited the Visvahika mantra and sprinkled some water on the ashes but the tree stood in its place again with not a single mutilation anywhere. Takshaka was astounded. He then bribed Ka yapa. He said he would give him more than what could be expected of the king and requested him to return home. Ka yapa returned and Takshaka went to the palace.

5) Death of Parikshit. Takshaka went and inspected the palace of Parikshit. There was no way to step in and Takshaka was astonished at the perfect protection given to the king. Takshaka called all his relatives to his side and asked them to go to the King in the guise of brahmins carrying various kinds of fruits as presents. Takshaka crept inside a beautiful fruit in the shape of a worm and was carried along with the fruits taken to the king. The King, the servant of the king, the fruits brought by the brahmans to the king and the king struck by the size and beauty of a fruit among them took it and cut it open. He saw a worm inside red in colour with two black spots as eyes. The King took it in his hand and at that instant it changed into Takshaka and bit the king. After that it rose up into the air and disappeared. (Chapters 42 to 48, Adi Parva and 2nd Shandha, Devi Bhagavata).

6) Parikshit as a king. Many researches have been made to fix the period of the reign of Parikshit. "Saptarasayama maghayuktah Kalale Parikshite shavanah to tu Parikshit kala

Maghavaran dvijotamah." (Chapter 271, Matsya Purana)

Following these statements in the Puranas, astronomers and astrologers searched for the year or years in which the Saptarashi mandala (the constellation of a group of seven stars) and the moon of Magha came into the same zodiac. It came in B.C. 3077 and then in B.C. 477. This would again occur in 2902 B.C. It was this Janamejaya who conducted the famous Asvatthama.

7) Parikshit attacked Svarga. Parikshit did not enter heaven as soon as he died. So Janamejaya at the advice of Narada conducted a yaga called Ambasya for the salvation of the spirit of his father. It was during the navaratris period that this was done. Many eminent sages took part in the ceremony. All were received well and given gifts in plenty. He made pure brahmans read the Devibhashagita with devotion in the presence of the deity to please Jagadeeswari (mother goddess), queen of all queens (Rajasee varat). When it was over, a divine brilliance like burning fire was visible in the sky and Narada appeared before Janamejaya and said "Oh Janamejaya, King of Kings, your father was lying bound by the shackles of his life on earth. But today he acquired a divine form and wearing divine apparel and ornaments went to the divine seat of Devi in a sacred Vimana from Indrapura while Indra, devas and the celestial maidens stood praising him (Skandha 12, Devi Bhagavata).

8) Other details.

(i) Parikshit ruled the country for sixty years, with all virtues and goodness. (Chapter 49, Adi Parva).
(ii) After the great battle, one day at the request of a few, Vyāsa by his yogic powers arrayed all the dead great ones of the Pándava-Kaurava company. Parīkṣit was also called then to the Gāndā where it was arranged and Janamejaya who was present to witness the show then gave an Avahāra (aubution after a sacrifice) to his father. Parīkṣit disappeared after that. (Chapter 35, Āṣrayavātikā Parvā).

(iii) The synonym of Parīkṣit are (1) Abhimanyuśuta (2) Bhāratasreṣṭha (3) Kṛiṣipālanaśayana (4) Kuruśreṣṭha (5) Kurunandana (6) Kururāja (7) Kuruvardhana (8) Pāṅgavaya.

PARĪKṢIT I. There is a story about another Parīkṣit belonging to the Ikṣvāku dynasty of kings in chapter 192 of Vana Parvā.

Once this Parīkṣit went after a deer while hunting in a forest and he traversed a long distance following it. On the way he felt tired by hunger and thirst. He saw a green grove and a river running still by its side, then. The king entered the waters of the river with his horse and after quenching the thirst of the horse and drinking some water to quench his own thirst, he found the little village on the other side of the river near the grocery. Then he heard from somewhere a melodious song. The king raised his hand and enjoying the music, waited to see the origin of it. Then a beautiful damsel appeared before him and the king talked with her and their conversation ended in the king requesting her to be his wife. The beautiful maiden consented on one condition that she should not be made to touch water. The king agreed and by that time the king's followers came and the king took her to his palace in a decorated palanquin followed by his retinue. The king took her to a secret chamber and stayed with her allowing nobody to enter the room. The chief minister came to the palace and enquired what was happening there and the maidens attending on the queen said that it was strange. The son was not visible. Then the minister arranged a garden with beautiful flowers and fruits with no water anywhere and a pond in the middle in which water was not visible from outside. He then went to the king and told him of his arrangement and the king took his wife into the garden and started having amorous sport with her there. After some time they reached the pond; water was not visible and so they entered the pond. The moment they entered the pond they touched water and the queen disappeared in the water. The king asked the water of the pond to be emptied and then he saw a frog sitting at the bottom. The king accused the frog of having eaten the maiden and he started killing all the frogs of his state. The frogs became frightened and they went to their king and complained. The frog-king in the garb of a māraṣi went and requested the king to stop this massacre of frogs but the king refused to yield saying that a frog had eaten his wife. Hearing that, the sage was shocked and revealing his identity said "Oh King, be pleased with me; I am Ayus, the king of the frogs. Your wife was my daughter. She is called Suṣobhanā and she was loved by a young girl. Even from times of old she has cheated many kings like this."

Hearing this the king pleaded to the frog-king to give him back Suṣobhanā. He gave Suṣobhanā to Parīkṣit. But he cursed his daughter that she would wear misbehaving children because of her cheating many kings before. Ayus disappeared then. Parīkṣit became the father of Suṣobhanā three princes named Svāla, Bala and Dala. When Svāla grew up Parīkṣit crowned him as king and left for the forests for doing penance. (Chapter 192, Vana Parvā).

PARĪKṢIT III. He was the son of Avikṣit, a king of the Kuru line of kings. Parīkṣit was the eldest son and he had six sons named Kṛṣṇacana, Ugrasena, Cīra, Indrasena, Sūcepa and Bhīmasena. They were all virtuous scholars and Jñānins. (Chapter 94, Ādi Parvā).

PARĪKṢIT IV. Son of Amaśvā, a king of the Kuru line of kings. His mother was Aṃśik. This Parīkṣit beget of his wife Suyāṭa a son named Bhīmasena, (Sloka 41, Chapter 95, Ādi Parvā).

PARĪKṢIT V. A king of the Kuru line of kings. (Chapter 150, Śānti Parvā).

PARĪPLA. A king of the race of Bhārata. He was the son of Nṛasya and the grandson of Nala. Parīplava got a son named Medhāvi. (10th Skanda, Bhāgavata).

PARĪPLA V. A holy place situated on the border of Kuruksetra. If anyone visits this holy place he would get the benefit of conducting an Agrajnīṣṭha Yajña and an Atriṣṭha yajña. (Sloka 12, Chapter 85, Vana Parvā).

PARĪṢRTA. A soldier of Subrahmanyā. (Chapter 45, Sāya Parvā).

PARĪVAHA. A Vāyu (wind). (See under Parīvaha).

PARĪVAYDA. One of Pushya, who lived in the western regions of Bhārata. The others were: Uṣūgī, Kuruṇa, Dhaunyā, Suṣravāṇa, Ikara, Dvīta, Tīra and Sāravatvā (Chapter 208, Śānti Parvā).

PARĪYATRA. A mountain of Purānic fame. The deity of this mountain Parīyatra was a member of the court of Kubera. The āśrama of the celebrated sage Gāṅgānātha, was on this mountain. The sage Mānirṣeṣya once saw this mountain in the belly of Bāhuṇakunda. This mountain is situated on the western side of Mahāmeru. (Sloka 115, Chapter 188, Vana Parvā).

PARJANYA. A deva. See under Devasvatī.

PARŚĀDA I. An ancient sage of Bhārata. He was a member of the court of Yuddhīśṭhīra (Sloka 18, Chapter 4, Sahā Parvā).

PARŚĀDA II. A brahmin of the country of Vidarbha. It was Parśāda who was sent out to know whether Nala was alive and he found out Nala living in disguise under the name of Bāhuka and after collecting all information about him returned to Vidarbha. (See under Damayantī).

PARŚĀDA III. A sage who acted as priest for a yāga conducted by a brahmin named Sāya, who lived in the country of Vidarbha. (Sloka 6, Chapter 275, Śānti Parvā).

PARJĀṢA. A river of western Bhārata. This river sits in the court of Varuṇa in the form of a nymph. (Sloka 9, Chapter 1, Sahā Parvā, Śrūtādyudhā, a valiant soldier who fought against Arjuna in the great Kuruksetra battle was the son of Parjāṣa. Varuṇa was the father of Śrūtādyudhā and at the time of the birth of a son for her she requested Varuṇa to grant her a boon that her son would not be killed by anybody. Varuṇa while granting her the boon gave the son a mace. That mace had a peculiarity. If the mace was used against anybody who was not fighting, the mace would turn back and kill the user. With the help of that mace Sruṭāvyūda gave Arjuna a fierce fight and in the midst of the heat he forgot the condition stipulated by Varuna and used it against Śrī Kṛṣṇa who was standing nearby watching their fight. The mace turned back and killed Sruṭāvyūda. (Chapter 92, Droṇa Parva.)

ARYAŚĀLA. A Village situated in the valley of the mountain Yāmuna. This mountain stands between the rivers Gaṅgā and Yaṁunā. During the period of Mahābhārata this village was the abode of a great number of eminent scholars. Once there lived in that village a brahmaṇa of Agastya-gotra, well-learned, named Sarmī. One day the messengers of Kāla (god of death) came to that village and by mistake took Sarmī to Yaṁaloka. It was only when they reached there that they understood their folly and Kāla then asked his men to carry him back to earth. Then Sarmī said he would spend the balance of life due to him in Yāmuna-loka itself. But Yāma did not allow that. Kāla then told Sarmī the greatness in giving as gifts Til and Vastra (Gingelly and clothes) and sent him back to earth. (Chapter 68, Anuśāsana Parva.)

PĀRNA. A demon of Ṛṣīvedic times. He had two friends named Kāla[yā] and Vaiguṇḍa. They attacked the two Kings belonging to the group of Aryan named Anuvāka and Rāja. The asuras were defeated because of the help sent to the kings by Indra. (Sukta 54, Anuvāka 10, Mandaḷa 1, Rgyveda.)

PARKOṢA. A King of Candravānḍa. (9th Skandha, Bhāṣāvata.)

PAPOPARAṬI. See under Kāmaṭeṣṭaḥ.

PĀṢṬIKSEMA. A Viṭuvadeva. (Sloka 30, Chapter 91, Anuśāsana Parva.) (Viṭuvadevas are a particular group of deities, ten in number, supposed to be the sons of Viśvā.)

PĀṢṬVAMAULI. Another name for the demon named Maṭicaraka. There is a story behind this demon getting the name of Maṭicaraka. (See under Maṭicaraka.)

PĀṢṬVAROMA. A place of human habitation of ancient Bhārata. (Sloka 56, Chapter 5, Bhīṣma Parva.)

PĀṬHA. Son of Prthū (Kuntī). (See under Kuntī.)

PĀṬUCHEPA. A sage of Vedic times who was a Sāktadraṣṭā. He used some sounds too often in his talks. Nṛmedhas and Pāṭucheapa vied with each other in their māntric skill. One day Nṛmedhas, in great pride produced smoke from wet firewood without igniting it and then Pāṭucheapa produced fire without firewood. Nṛmedhas admitted defeat. (Taittirīya Śaṅhitā.)

PĀṬUŚTHA (PĀṬUŚTHA). A King exalted in the Rgyveda. (Mandaḷa 1, Rgyveda.)

PĀṢU. A Rākṣasa (demon). He was one among the twelve demons who supported Kharṇ when the latter fought against Śrī Rāma. (Sarga 26, Aranyā Kanda, Vālmīkī Rāmāyaṇa.)

PĀṬAṢA (S). A company of rākṣasas and devils. Parvaṇgas, Patanaṇis, Janaṇas, Kharas, Krodhaṇanas, Haris, Prāṣjas, Arūjas and Praghaṇas belonged to a group of invisible demons and they fought against Śrī Rāma on the side of Rāvṇa. (Chapter 283, Vālmīkī Rāmāyaṇa.)

PĀṬVASAṆGARHAṆAṆ ṚṇVARA. A subsidiary Parva of Ādi Parva. Chapter twenty is included in this Parva.

PĀRVATA I. A sage who was the nephew of Nārāda.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Viśv-Brahma-Śiva-Matīcara-Paurava-Pārvatī.

Prajāpati Matīcara got his wife Sambhūtā a son, named Paurava. Paurava got two sons, Viṇajas and Pārvatī. Pārvatī's mother was the sister of Nārāda. (Chapter 10, Anuśāsana 1, Viśv Purāṇa.)

2) Nārāda and Pārvatī. These two sages lived for a long time as inseparable friends. Once they travelled on earth in the form of human beings. They decided that each should speak out what he felt without reserve and if anybody broke the arrangement the other had the right to curse him.

During their travels they reached the palace of a King called Śrījaya (Śrījaya) and they stayed there as his guests for a long time. Damayantī (Madayantī), daughter of the King served them both and Nārāda fell in love with her. Nārāda hid this fact from Pārvatī and within a few days Pārvatī came to know it and he according to the agreement went to Nārāda to take the form of a monkey. Nārāda gave a counter curse disabling Pārvatī from attaining Sārga. Both separated from there and after some time both lost their bitterness against each other. Pārvatī met Nārāda in his monkey form in a forest. Both were sorry for their curses then and each withdrew his curse and Nārāda got his original form. He married Damayantī and started living together and Pārvatī went to Sārga. (Chapter 50, Śrīlī Parva.)

3) Other details.

(i) Pārvatamuni was a member of the assembly of sages at the Sarpaṇa曲a of Jammejaya. (Sloka 8, Chapter 53, Ādi Parva.)

(ii) Nārāda and Pārvatī were present for the Draupadiyayavanmitva (marriage of Draupadi). (Sloka 7, Chapter 156, Ādi Parva.)

(iii) Pārvatī and Nārāda were members of the court of Yudhishtīra. (Sloka 15, Chapter 4, Śabha Parva.)

(iv) This uncle-nephew combination was present in Indraasāḥ also. (Sloka 10, Chapter 7, Śabha Parva.)

(v) They were members of Kuberaasāḥ also. (Sloka 26, Chapter 10, Śabha Parva.)

(vi) When the Pāṇḍavas were living in Kāṃṣakavana, Pārvatī went there and advised them to conduct a pilgrimage. (Sloka 18, Chapter 93, Vana Parva.)

(vii) Pārvatī showed the Pāṇḍavas daylight at night one day when the great battle was going on. (Sloka 15, Chapter 163, Droṇa Parva.)

(viii) Pārvatī swore that she was not a party to the theft of the lotus of Agastya. (Sloka 34, Chapter 94, Anuśāsana Parva.)

PĀRVATA II. It is believed that in Kṛṣṇa-yuga all mountains had wings. They flew all over the world with the swiftness of Garuda or Viṣṇu. All beings including piṣ and devas lived in a state of suspense since at any moment any mountain might fly and land down on their heads. They complained to Indra and Indra asked the mountains to remain at one place which they flatly refused. Indra got angry and started cutting down the wings of the mountains with his Vajrayudha. No mountain was able to escape from this punishment; but Viṣṇuḥkasyavan carried away his bosom friend, the mountain Mainika, and put it in the ocean without anybody noticing it. So Mainika alone did not lose its wings. It was this Mainikā which rose from the ocean and gave a resting point to Brahman when he taking the raiment of Vāyu, when he took a leap from the shores of Bhārata to Lakhī. This was but an expression of gratitude to Vāyu whose son Hanumān was, for the help he had given when Indra was cutting off the wings of all mountains. (Sarga 1, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Vālmiki Rāmāyana).

PĀRVATESVARA. A King of Vindhyadeśa. He tortured his people because of his greed for money and Yama sent him to hell when he died. In his next birth he was born as a monkey. At that time a priest of the King had taken life as a Śāra bird. One day the monkey tried to catch the bird and then the bird (priest) reminded him of his previous birth and told him that in their next birth both of them would be swans and in the birth after that they would become men again. (Uttara Khand, Padma Kīrāṇa).

PĀRVATĒYA. A rājasi (A King who is also a rāj). He was born of the species of a demon named Kāpīṭa. (Śloka 30, Chapter 67, Adi Parva).

PĀRVATĪ. Wife of Siva.

Pārvatī is known under different names and worshipped in different forms. Ṣaṃkrut (Sanskrit lexicon) gives the following synonyms for Pārvatī:

Some of these names refer to the various dispositions of Pārvatī, while a few are the names in the various incarnations of Pārvatī. The origin of Pārvatī and her other prominent births are given below:

1) Incarnation of Sati. Sīva was born from Brahmā. To make Sīva active, Sati, an aspect of Mahāmāyā, was born as the daughter of Dakṣa, one of the Prajāpatis. The 9th Skanda of Devī Bhāgavata gives the following story about the incarnation of Sati:

While Brahmā was engaged in creation a few dāityas named Hālākhas were born. They were very valiant and ferocious and they did penance to propitiate Brahmā and after obtaining boons from him conquered the three worlds and asserted their supremacy in all the three worlds. They dethroned the Trimūrti (trio of Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Sīva). Sīva and Viṣṇu in despair went to war against them. The war continued for sixty thousand years and both the dāityas and Devas were exhausted. Viṣṇu and Sīva refused to attend to their duties. Brahmā understood the situation and taking into his hands the work of Sīva and Viṣṇu also and calling his sons, Śanaaka and others to his side said "Oh sons of Śiva and Viṣṇu, you are capable of doing their work now. I have therefore, taken upon myself the charge of their duties also and hence I do not find time to do penance. You must therefore, do penance to propitiate Mahāmāyā. Let her be pleased and when she incarnates in this universe the world will be happy."

As soon as they heard this the Prajāpatis headed by Dakṣa went to the forest on the side of the Himalayas. They started doing penance within the mantra of Mahāmāyā. The penance lasted for a hundred thousand years and then the goddess was pleased. She graciously appeared before them with three eyes and four hands bearing paśa, adikūṭa, vara and abhīti. Dakṣa and others praised her and she granted them boons. She did also promise to be born as the daughter of Dakṣa. Dakṣa and others returned happy.

Mahāmāyā incarnated as Sati in the house of Dakṣa. Sati blossomed into a beautiful maiden and all the Prajāpatis joined together and made Sīva marry her. The bride and bridegroom lived in the bride's house.

At that time the sage Durvāsā worshipped Jagadānubākha seated at Ājmūṇāda meditating on her and reciting the māyahāja mantra. The devī was immensely pleased and appearing before him gave him the divine garland lying round her neck. The garland was highly perfumed. Honey flowed from it always. Wearing that garland the sage travelled through air and reached the palace of Dakṣa, father of Sati, and gave that garland to him. Dakṣa received it with great delight and took it to his bed-room and placed it there. That night Dakṣa inhaled the perfume of the divine garland and enjoyed an amorous sport with his wife. This act made the garland impure and the latent curse in it made Dakṣa hate his daughter Sati and her husband Sīva. After that Dakṣa conducted a Yāga and insulted Sīva by not inviting either him or his wife. Sati, however, attended the Yāga uninvited and she was insulted. Unable to bear the insult Sati leapt into the fire and committed suicide. From that day onwards Sīva roamed about in the world crying "Sati, Sati."

2) Sati, Pārvatī (Kāṭī). During that time a son named Vajrāṅa was born to Kāyapa of his wife Diti. This virtuous asura practised austerities for a thousand years and when he opened his eyes after his long penance he did not see his wife. Vajrāṅa started in search of her collecting fruits and roots for his food on the way. Then he came across her standing underneath a tree weeping and she said: "All the time you were doing penance, Indra was teasing me. I was living without food on the banks of the river keeping a vow of silence. Indra came there in the form of a monkey and threw away all my articles used for worship. Then he came in the form of a lion and frightened me. Then again he came in the form of a serpent and bit me. Oh lord, am I, your wife, an orphan?" Vajrāṅa got angry and decided to do penance again to find a remedy for this unjust act of Indra. Then Brahmā coming to know of the fierce decision of Vajrāṅa appeared before him and said "Why do you go in for penance again? Ask me what you want and I shall grant you." Vajrāṅa said "Oh Lord, I did penance all those thousand years to get rid of the demonic disposition of mine. But when I was engaged in meditation Indra tormented my virtuous wife very much without any reason. If you will bless me I must get a son named Tāraka to kill all the devas including Indra." Brahmā granted the boon.

Vārāghī became pregnant and after twelve months was born a son to her named Tārakāsa. Tāraka did severe penance sitting in the midst of Pañcāgni (five fires) for a long time and Brahmā was pleased and appeared before him. Tāraka then said: "If I were to die I must die at the hands of a seven-day-old babe. You must grant me a boon like that." Brahmā granted the boon. Tāraka became arrogant with that boon and joined hands with such fierce demons as Praśena, Jambha and Kālanemi to create havoc in the three worlds of Śvarga, Bhūmi and Pāthśāla. They blessed the wicked and killed the virtuous. It was the time when Śiva was sojourn roving about in search of his lost wife Sāvatī. All the devas headed by Indra went and complained to Brahmacārya. Brahmacārya said:—“After all, this calamity is not without remedy. There is an escape from the boon I have given him. Tārākāsura himself has allowed him to be killed by a seven-year-old babe. If there should be such a babe it should be from the virility of Siva. Tārākāsura thinks that since Siva is observing Brahmacharya after the death of Sāvatī there is no chance of his wife being born to him. That was why he was prepared to allow that clause in that boon I shall therefore suggest a plan. Sāvatī herself should be born as the daughter of Himavān and Menā in the name of Kāli. Kāli should do great penance and break the vow of celibacy of Siva. If Siva accepts her as his wife and a child is born to them we can proceed further in the matter,” Bhṛṣpati said:—“No obstacle would come ever to any act of the devas. Himavān was doing penance for a long time to obtain a child and by the grace of Siva, Sāvatī has already been born as the daughter of Himavān (Śīlanda Purāṇa in its Sambhāva Kāṇḍa states thus about the birth of Sāvatī as Pārvatī). Sāvatī before jumping into the fire mediated on Śiva and prayed that she should be born in her next birth as his wife. Siva granted that request. It was at that time that Himavān along with his wife Menā went to the vicinity of Amṛtasāras and started doing penance to get a child. One day when Himavān and his wife were bathing in the saras they saw a gem of a girl in the waters and they took it. Then they found the child with four hands and asked the divinity of goddess on her. They prayed her with verses from Veda and soon the divine images faded away and Himavān gave the child to his wife.”

Brahmacārya never wanted Tārākāsura to know that the child was an incarnation of Devi and so he made the babe black by sending Nīśa to do so. Nīśa entered the womb of the pregnant Menā while she was sleeping with her mouth open. One day, the child was born in the form of a sapphire idol. Himavān was surprised to see the child. The child will do severe penance and obtain Siva as her husband, Siva and Sāvatī will never be separated in any of their births. Oh Indra now go and try to get Siva interested in a married life."

Himavān and Menā had three daughters and a son. The devas were stewing whether among the three—Rāgini, Kuṭiś and Kāli—would become the consort of Sāvatī. All the three were interested in penance. The devas took Rāgini to Brahmatikā and showed her to Brahmacārya and the latter declared that Rāgini was incapable of bearing the virility of Siva. Rāgini got angry and Brahmacārya cursed her and made her into Śundhīrājā and she took her place in the sky. Then the devas took Kuṭiś to Brahmacārya and the latter said that she was also incapable of being a mate of Siva. Kuṭiś also got angry and Brahmacārya made her into a river and kept her in Brahmatikā. Menā was greatly distressed at the loss of her two daughters and so she advised Kāli, her third daughter to go home, discontinuing the penance. She at first sojourned in Kālīś, musty-derelict, and so she got the name Pārvatī (mountain-girl) also. Kāli later went home. But after some time the natural inclination in her led her to start a severe penance again.

The young Kāli, who was only a small girl then, accompanied by two of her girl companions went to the shores of a river deep in the forests and there Siva was doing penance austerities. In summer she would sit in the midst of Paṛchāgī (five fires) and, in the rainy season she would sit in water and do penance. The penance lasted for a thousand years.

Siva who was roaming about in search of Sāvatī went once to the palace of Himavān. Siva agreed to stay there for some time at the persistent request of Himavān. During his stay there Siva understood that one of the daughters of his host was doing penance meditating on Sankara. Curious to know more about her, Siva one day went to the āśrama of Kāli. Kāli saw Siva and she stood up bowing before him. Siva was pleased with her. But before Kāli could have another look at Siva, he vanished from there. Kāli was disappointed and continued her penance again.

Years went by and one day there came to her āśrama a Vatū (a Brahmin brahmachāri). Kāli and her companions stood up and worshiped the Vatū who looked brilliant with ashes on his body and wearing rudrākṣa and aksamālā (berrry of a tree and rosary made of it) and carrying in his hand a danda (stick) and a Kamandalu (water pot). After formal introduction Kāli asked Kāli the purpose of her penance and Kāli told him all about it. Then the Vatū asked her in tones of surprise why such a beautiful girl like herself born to be the wife of a king, should go after a crudely dressed sgan man like Siva who goes on the back of a bullock always. Pārvatī recounted the statement of the Vatū and got angry with him. Then Siva appeared before her in his real form and married Pārvatī (Kāli alias Umā) in the presence of devas and mahanmātras.

3) Pārvatī changes into Gaurī. Siva and Pārvatī spent their honeymoon travelling throughout the world. Years went by like that. One day Siva in a spirit of sport called Pārvatī Kāli, Kāli. Kāli meant black one and Pārvatī was a black as sapphire. Pārvatī misunderstood Siva addressing her thus two times and thought, perhaps, Siva did not like her black body and trembling with grief said “If a wound is made by an arrow it will heal in due course; if the top of a tree is chopped off it will again blossom when the season comes; but the wound in the minds of others by harsh words is never healed. It was not my fault that I was black and I was black again come near you with this black body. I am going.” Saying thus with a firm determination she rose up into the air and travelling for some time reached a big forest. She created by her reciting the mantra of four attendants for her named Somaprabhā, Jayā, Vījāyā and Jayantī and started doing penance there. She practiced severe austerities standing on one foot for a hundred years and then Brahmacārya appeared before her and sought the reason why Pārvatī, wife of Paramāśvara should do such severe penance and then she narrated to him all that had happened. Brahmacārya after hearing her story told her thus:
“Virtuous woman, from today onwards, your black complexion would change into one of the hue of a lotus petal. Because of that ‘gaurî’ hue you would be called ‘Gaurî’.” By the time Brahman finished blessing her the colour changed into the one described by Brahman.

4) Gaurî changes into Kâtyâyani, Vindhyaśankâ, Çâjñâka and Kâmagûdha. When Devi became Gaurî her superficial skin peeled off and dropped down, it is said.

As the harem-mistress, when twanged at devas called Rambha and Karambha. They had no sons and they started severe penance. Karambha was doing penance standing in deep waters and a crocodile swallowed him. The crocodile was none other than Indra. Rambha did penance standing in the midst of fire and finding no result even after a long time decided to sacrifice himself into the fire. Agnidhara then appeared before him and blessed him thus: “Oh Rambha, you will get a mighty son of the woman you love.” Rambha stopped his penance and returned home with the boon. On the way he saw a beautiful she-buffalo and passion rose in him and he made contacts with the buffalo. The buffalo became pregnant and in due course delivered a child which later on became the notorious Mahishâsura. In the meanwhile, Rambha loved him as his mother and it attacked Rambha and gored him to death. The Yaksas burnt his dead body in a funeral pyre and the she-buffalo jumped into the pyre and abandoned her life. From that pyre there arose then another demon and he was the notorious Raktabija. Mahishâsura became the king of demons and Raktabija, Çâjñâ and Munḍa bathed his body in the river. They also decorated him with crowns and bells and drove him to exhaustion. The devas took refuge in Brahman to think of a plan to kill those asuras. Vîșnu, and Sîva took part in the conference. Vîșnu the eternal, got angry along with Sîva and became fierce like the fire of death. Brahman and the devas also became angry and from the face of everyone a brilliance emanated and all these briliances joined together and reached the holy fire. Yama, Varuna, Çandra, Sûrya and Indra emitted huge also sent out a brilliance. The ascetic brilliance joined with the divine brilliance and the combined brilliance shone like a thousand suns. Then this superior brilliance entered the pecked-off skin of Kâlî to produce the fierce and divine form of a goddess named Kâtyâyani. Each limb of the new form was made up of the brilliance from a particular god as follows: From the brilliance of Mañendra was formed the face; from Agni, the eyes; from Yama, the hair; from Vîșnu, the eighteen hands; from Indra, the central part; from Varuna, the hip and the thighs; from Brahman, the feet; from Sûrya, the toes; from Prajâpati, the teeth; from Vasû, the fingers of the hands; from Yaksas, the nose; from Vîșnu the ears and from the ascetic brilliance, the erotic eyebrows. Thus Kâtyâyani alone in the world with a figure formed with distinctive perfection.

All the gods and devas presented Kâtyâyani with gifts:—
Siva gave her a trident (trikâla); Vîșnu a discus; Varuna, a conch; Agni, a javelin; Vîșnu, a bow; Sûrya, a never-empty quiver; Indra, Vajraghâna; Yama, a danda (trick); Vaishravana, a mace; Brahman, a rosary garland; Kâlî, a sword and shield; Çandra, Ganges, white brûsh-like sin and a pearl necklace; Ocean a garland; Himavan, a lion; Vîvâkarna, a moon-discued Çûdâmaṇi, earrings and a dagger; the King of Gandharvas, a silver-plated drinking cup; the King of nágas, a nágâhâra; and the Rûṣ (seasons), never-fading flowers. The three-eyed Kâtyâyani on getting all these was highly pleased and made a roaring sound. Devi, thus worshipped and adored by all, mounted on the lion and went to the topmost peak of the Vindhya. Indra and Agni went and served Kâtyâyani thus living there. Vîșnu called Devi, Kâuśika and Agastya called her Durgâ.

Mahishâsura once went to the Vindhya after conquering all the three worlds. He was accompanied by his ministers, Raktabija, Çâjñâ, Munḍa, Gîksura and Naraka. They met there the goddess Kâtyâyani. Mahishâsura fell in love with the beautiful and well-figured Kâtyâyani and he sent Dundubhi as messenger to the goddess to make her know his desire. Dundubhi approached Kâtyâyani and told her to become the wife of Mahisâsura, the emperor of all the three worlds. Devi replied that she would accept as her husband one who defeated her and that was the custom also in her case. Mahishâsura with a huge army and heavy equipment went to war with her. But Kâtyâyani entered the field alone mounted on her lion and the devas watching her enter the battlefield without wearing even an armoured helmet. Dundubhi went forward reciting the mantra of Vîșnupâlâcikâsura given to her by Sîva and lâksâ and lâksâ of demons were killed by the adroit sword-swinging and the dinning roar of Kâtyâyani. Mahisâsura and his ministers surrounded her and Devi stepping down from the lion started to dance wielding her sword. Swinging her sword to the rhythm of her dance-steps Devi picked up the leading demons one by one and killed them. Seeing that, Mahishâsura approached her, burning with rage like the palaśâyugi. All the attendants of Devi fled. Those who remained were trampled to death by Mahishâsura. Devi at first killed the ministers and then faced Mahishâsura. Mahisâsura became an elephant and Devi cut off its trunk. The elephant became a buffalo then. Devi sent a spike and it broke. Even Devi’s arrows were also blunted but when it hit the rock-like body of Mahishâsura. Varunapâsâ, Yamâdanda and Indrâvâra were all alike fruitless against the mighty Mahishâsura. Angered Devi jumped on the buffalo form of the demon and drove it to exhaustion and when at last its power of resistance had failed, Devi plunged her spear into the ears of the buffalo and threw it down dead. Many years went by. Kâtyâyana begot of his wife Danu three great sons named Sumbha, Sûmbha and Nâmuci. All were fierce demons. Nâmuci attacked Indra but they soon came to a compromise. But Indra hid in the form of the ocean which entered the ears, nose and mouth of Nâmuci while he was playing in the ocean. Indra used his Vajrâyudha from inside and killed him. Sûmbha and Sûmbha were angry and they entered swargas and defeating everyone there, carried all the riches from there to the earth. They met Raktabija and he said “Oh Lords, I am Raktabija, minister of Mahisâsura. Kâtyâyana Devi killed virtuous Mahisâsura. His two ministers Çâjñâ and Munḍa are hiding inside the ocean afraid of Kâtyâyana devi.” While he was speaking thus Çâjñâ and Munḍa also came there. When they all exchanged ideas Sumbha called one of his men and said “Bho: Sugrivâsura, go and tell Kâtyâyana to be my wife.” Sugrivâ went to Kâtyâyana and returned disappointed and said “Lords Sûmbha and Nâmuci,
I told Devi your message and she only laughed. She said that Sumbha and Niśumbha might be mighty lords from only those who defected her could marry her.”

Enraged at the arrogance of Kātyāyani, Sumbha sent Dhumrakṣa to drag Kātyāyani down to him. Dhumrakṣa, with six Akṣubhins of soldiers went to the seat of Kātyāyani and challenged her to a fight. Devi stepped down from her seat and stood before Dhumrakṣa and the latter leaped forward to catch hold of her. But Dhumrakṣa was burnt to death by the ṛakṣaka fire of the goddess. Not only that, the ālāṅkāra sound reached the ears of Sumbha. Sumbha felt small by this prowess of the Devi but his rage increased. Sumbha then sent Cauḍa, Mṛṇḍa and the great demon Ruru also with an army of a hundred crores of demons to face Devi Kaustubha. When the enemies reached Vindhyā, the bhūtās of Devi made loud and shrill noises. The lion of Kātyāyani roared and she leaped into the midst of the army sword in hand. Lakṣha and lakṣha of asuras fell dead by the sword of the goddess. Devi once opened her mouth and lakṣha of asuras entered it and then she shut her mouth keeping in her stomach the asuras till they all died. Devi beat the demon Ruru to death. Devi plucked her matted hair and struck it on the ground and from there arose the fierce form of Cāmūṇḍi. Cauḍa and Mṛṇḍa fled but Cāmūṇḍi followed them to Pārāśara and catching hold of them chopped off their heads and presented them to Kātyāyani. Then Devi, Cāmūṇḍi and the bhūtās together tore to pieces all the remaining asuras and stored them all in their stomachs. Hearing this Sumbha made no bound and he started with an army of thirty crores of men. The army swept on like an ocean and finding it moving forward Cāmūṇḍi roared. Kātyāyani made a sound like a lion’s roar. Brahmā holding high the dagger jumped down to fight. Māheśvarī with snakes and the spike, with the three eyes open got down in fits of anger. Kaumārtī with the javelin hanging round her waist and bright eyes came on the field. Vaiṣṇavi swinging her sword and whirling the mace with many weapons rushed to the field. Vāraṇa breaking open the earth with its tusk and bearing a large wooden peice came to fight. Indrāni with diamond on her sides came to fight. Nārubhī with brushing the manes on her breast, shaking the stars and whirling the planets and making a fierce appearance came on the field. (Cāmūṇḍi, Brahmā, Māheśvarī, Vaiṣṇavi, Vāraṇa and Nārubhī are the different forms of Kātyāyani. They are called Satpratīs (seven mothers). These satpratīs were born when Kātyāyani in her wrath beat the earth with her matted hair). Cāmūṇḍi roared. The world became dark. Hearing the roar Śiva descended to the field. The asuras surrounded the Devi again. But they all fell dead with blood flowing in a stream. The dead bodies of the asuras became heaped up and in despair Sumbha and Niśumbha wept. Seeing that, Rakṣabha got angry and rushed at Devi. The Satpratīs shouted and Cāmūṇḍi opened her mouth. The lower jaw of Cāmūṇḍi touched Pārāśara when she opened her mouth from the sky Rakṣabha, wounded and bleeding by a dagger stroke of Cāmūṇḍi, fell into the mouth of Cāmūṇḍi and disappeared. Then Niśumbha interfered and the fight became one between Niśumbha and Devi. The fat and sturdy hands of Niśumbha and the mace he was carrying fell by an arrow shot by Devi. Then Devi struck him with her spike and Niśumbha was killed. Both Sumbha and Niśumbha who came to wreak vengeance on her were thus killed. (See under Lāṅkālaksana to know how Parvati became Lāṅkālaksana).

5) Parvati takes the forms of Elephant and monkey. Śiva and Parvati went about enjoying amorous sports in the forests. Śiva turned himself into a tusker and Parvati became a she-elephant then. Gāyapati was born as a result of that sport. Śiva became a monkey and Parvati became his mate and Hanumān was born as a result of that sport. (See under Gāyapati and Hanumān).

6) Parvati became Śīta. This happened when Rāma and Lakṣmanā along with Śīta were in the forest. One day Śīta went to the Gāndhāra river nearby to bring water to the Āśrama and she stayed for some time watching two swans playing in the midst of lotuses in the lake there. Hearing a sound she looked into the river and saw Śrī Rāma bathing there. She was surprised. When she left the Āśrama Rāma was sitting there. At the same time another thing happened in the Āśrama. Śrī Rāma found Śīta coming to him and when he arose to receive her she the figure disappeared. Then Śrī Rāma found bathing by Śītādevī also disappeared. When an astonished Śīta reached the Āśrama she found an equally astonished Śrī Rāma sitting there. They then told each other their experiences and Śrī Rāma on meditation understood that in the guise of Rāma and Śīta Śiva and Parvati had come from Kailāsa to know about the welfare of the princes in exile.

7) Parvati, Viṣṇu and Jālandharī. See under those names.

8) Other details.

(i) Parvati shines in the court of Brahmā. (Śloka 41, Chapter 11, Sahābh Parva).

(ii) When the Pañcāvanas were in exile Parvati guarded Arjuna always. (Vana Parva, Chapter 37, Śloka 38).

(iii) Once Parvati appeared in person and blessed Dharmapītya. (Chapter 6, Virāṭa Parva).

(iv) Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa pleased Parvati and she granted Kṛṣṇa boons. The first was that he would have sixty thousand wives. The next was a beautiful form for Kṛṣṇa and the next was love of his relatives. Another boon was that Kṛṣṇa would have the prosperity to be able to give food for seven thousand travellers daily. (Śloka 7, Chapter 15, Anuśāsana Parva).

(v) It was because of a curse of Parvati that devas do not get sons by their own wives. There is the following story behind that.

Śiva and Parvati went to the Himālayas after their marriage and started living there. Śiva and Parvati were so much engrossed in their amorous sport that they were oblivious of the happenings outside. After a long time when their sport continued without a break the devas went in and informed Śiva that the whole universe was trembling by their sport and if Śiva produced a son the world would be incapable of bearing it and so he should withdraw from the act of producing a child. Śiva agreed and drew his virile strength upwards. Parvati did not like that and she cursed the devas that they would never have sons of their own wives. (Chapter 84, Anuśāsana Parva).

(vi) Parvati once taught Gaṅgadevi the duties of women. (Śloka 33, Chapter 146, Anuśāsana Parva).

(vii) Parvati resides in the mount of Muṭhjavān in Kailāsa with Parmāṇavī. There is a mount called Muñjavan in the Himalayas. Bhagavān Umāpati (Śiva) shines there on treetops, underneath the trees, on the mountains and in caves. (Chapter 8, Advamedha Parva.)
(viii) The Mahābhārata uses the following synonyms for Pārvati: Ambikā, Āryā, Umā, Bimbā, Šālāputri, Śa nasalā, Śikambhari, Sarvājī, Devī, Durgā, Gaurī, Grīśudā, Grīśudāmāja, Kālī, Mahā bhūmi, Mahādevī, Mahākāli, Mahākāṣṭī, Pārvataṛāja, kāṇḍā, Kṛiṣṇa, Kṛiṣṇapati and Tribhuvanevari.

PĀŚAŚI, An ancient river of Bhārata. (Śloka 22, Chapter 9, Bhūma Parva.)
PĀŚA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Bhima killed him in the great battle. (Śloka 5, Chapter 94, Kaṛṣṇa Parva.)
PĀŚIVĀTA. A place of habitation in ancient India.
(M. B. Bhūma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 64.)
PĀŚUHOMI. The country of Nepal. The place got the name of Paśubhumi because it is located near the birthplace of Pārśva (Śiva). (Chapter 30, Śloka 9, Sauśā Parva.)
PĀŚUDĀ. A female follower of Subrahmanya. (Śloka 26, Chapter 45, Saśy Parva.)
PĀŚUPATA. An aged brahmin. (See under Virūpākṣa.) PĀŚUPATA II. The missile of Śiva. Arjuna during his exile in the forest performed penance to propitiate Śiva and got this missile from him. Śiva has a bow named Pināka. Pāśupata is the arrow that is used on that bow. Pināka is a serpent with the colours of a rainbow. It has seven heads and has canine teeth. Poison flows from them always. Thething of the bow is wound round the neck of Śiva. The arrow, bright like the sun and equal to the fire of death, is the Pāśupata. It will burn all that it touches.
Neither Nārāyana, Bhakta Virūpākṣa, Agnayātra nor Vārūpāstra can stand against this. In times of old Śiva burnt the Tripuras (three cities of the notorious three demons) by this arrow. Even Brāhma and Viṣṇu could be killed by Pāśupata. (Chapter 14, Anuśāsana Parva.)
Devotes worship Pāśupata as a deity. If the Pāśupata mantra is recited once it will remove all obstacles from the way and if recited a hundred times it will end all your calamities and bring success in any war for you.
PĀŚUPATA S. The bhūtāngas (Spirits and devils attending on him) of Śiva as a class are called Pāśu-patas. (Chapter 67, Vāmana Purāṇa.) PĀŚUSAKHA. Husband of Gajā, servant-maid of the saptaśrī. (See under Saptarṣī.)
PĀṬACĀRA. A place of habitation in ancient Bhārata. During Purāṇic times the people of this place migrated to south India because they were afraid of Jañsandha. (Chapter 14, Sauśā Parva.) Sahadeva, one of the Pandavas during his victory tour of the south, subdued the people of this place. The pājaccaras fought against the Kauravas on the side of the Pandavas.
(Chapter 31, Saśkha Parva.) It was an architect who stood at the back of the Kramdo Vīsha constructed by the Pandavas. (Chapter 50, Bhūma Parva.)
PĀṬAKI. A soldier of the Kaurava army. Duryodhana gave instructions to Śrāni to attack Arjuna taking Pāṭaki along with him for help. (Chapter 156, Droṇa Parva.)
PĀṬALA. A monkey. This monkey met Śrī Rāma at Kīrnandha when the latter was going to Lankā to meet Viśvānātha. (Chapter 88, Śṛṇi Kṛṣṇa, Padma Purāṇa.)
PĀṬALA. The last of the seven regions or worlds under the earth said to be populated by Nāgas. The seven regions one below the other are: (1) Atala (2) Vītāla
(3) Sutala (4) Taśa (5) Rasāśa (6) Mahāsūta and
(7) Pāṭala. In all these regions there are nāgas-who are the accurs who built the Maya, the great architect.
The nāgas, dānavas and nāgas live in these regions.
Pāṭala is seventy thousand yojanas high each division being ten thousand yojanas high. The earth in these regions is of different hue like white, black, red and yellow. It is filled with rubbles, black granite and gold. Once Nārada on his return to Svarga from Pātāla said that Pātāla was more beautiful than Svarga. The ornaments worn by nāgas are profusely studded with shining diamonds. Daytime is lighted by the Sun and the night by the Moon. There is neither heat nor cold there and the happy nāgas living contentedly do not feel the passage of time.

Under the Pātāla is Adiśeṣa, a tāmāsī form of Mahāviṣṇu, known to the Siddhas as Ananta. He has a thousand heads and SVanśa as his badge. Holding in one hand a plough and in the other a wooden pestle he sits worshipped by Śrīdevi and Vāruṇidevi. At the time of the end of the world the Saṅkarṣaṇaḥ, Rudra, is born from the face of Adiśeṣa shining brightly like poisonous fire and it consumes all the three worlds. Adiśeṣa worshipped by all gods bears this earth on his head like a crown and sits in Pātāla. When Ananta yawns the world begins to quake along with its oceans, rivers and forests. Nobody has seen an end of his qualities and that is why he is known as Ananta (no end). It was by worshipping this Ananta that the ancient sage Garga learned the truth about the results of Nimittaśāstra (predictions by omens) a division of Jyotisaśāstra.

The distinguishing characteristics of each of the seven divisions of Pātāla are given below:—

1) Ātala. The first region of Pātāla. Here lives Bala, the celebrated son of Maya. He has created nineteen kinds of magical arts capable of giving everything one desires. Those interested in magic are even now using some of these. When Bala yawns three kinds of women will come out of his mouth. Purāññalī (harlots), Svairīpas (adultresses) and Kāminis (lustful maidens). These women have a charm called Hājaka to tempt all who enter Ātala. This Hājaka is a rāskṣaṇa which will excite sexual passion in men so that the women can enjoy a sexual life with them for a prolonged period. These women after enticing the men would live with them enjoying a life of bliss produced by bewitching side glances, charming smiles, erotic embraces and exciting amorous talks. The men who live with them will be in such a state of bliss that they would say with pride “I am perfect, I am god. I am one with the might of ten thousand elephants.”

2) Vitala. This is the abode of Hājākevāra who is none other than Paramāṣīva. This god accompanied by Bhāvānidevi and surrounded by pramāthāganas (prominent demigods who attend on him) and worshipped by devas, presides over this place increasing the prajñās created by Brahmi. The semen virile of Pārvatī-Paramāṣīvaras flows there as the river Hājaki. The gold named Hājaka is what is vomited by the wind-blown Agni after drinking the rasa of that river. The wives of dāiyas wear ornaments made of this gold.

3) Sutala. This is the abode of Mahābali. Here lives Mahābali meditating on Mahāviṣṇu with more glory and grandeur than Indra. To please Indra, Mahāviṣṇu once went to Mahābali on earth and by deceit took all his possessions and binding him with Varuṇāpāśa pushed him to Sutala through a hole made on earth. Later Mahāviṣṇu felt he did a wrong in thus sending away Mahābali from earth by deceit and to remedy the sin committed he even now acts as a gatekeeper to Mahābali in Sutala. Once Rāvaṇa went to Sutala to attack Mahābali and then Mahāviṣṇu keeping watch over the palace-gate in the form of Vāmana gave Rāvaṇa a kick and sent him back.

4) Tātala. This is the place where Maya lives. This Maya is a mighty magician among demons. After the Tripurārādhana (burning the three demon tribes) Śiva blessed Maya and the latter is living at Tripurārādhapi (chief of Tripura) in Tātala. Maya is the preceptor of all demon-magicians and many fierce-looking demons worship him always.

5) Mahātala. This is the abode of Kādāraya. They got the name because they are all children of Kādṛi, the cobra. All these cobras are fierce-looking multi-headed ill-tempered ones. The prominent ones among them are Kūtaka, Taksaka, Suseṇa and Kālīya. All these are long lean serpents possessing big hoods and great strength. These bad-tempered cobras live with their family terribly afraid of Garudā.

6) Rātala. This is the residence of the notorious Nīvatākavaṇa-Kālakaṃs. They were enemies of the devas and they tormented them in many ways. The majestic authority of Mahāviṣṇu decreased their virility. They are now living in Rātala frightened by the threats and beatings with a magic wand of Saramā, a mantrārūpini (a sacred chant incantary) deputed by Indra.

7) Pātāla. This is the abode of serpents. The nāgaśākhiḍipati (chiefs of the serpent world) like Vāsu, Saṅkha, Guliṣa, Sveta, Dhanaṃjaya Mahātiha, Dhruatrastra, Saṅkhaṭhūḍa, Kambala, Alvadhara and Devadatta live here. These are all strong, long-bodied, greatly poisonous snakes with very bad temper. They all possess hoods varying in numbers from five to hundred and the lustre of the diamonds on their hoods keeps the region of Pātāla always illuminated. At the base of this Pātāla-world is a place, separated from the rest, thirty thousand yojanas in area. It is here that the tāmāsī Viṣṇukalā resides under the name Ananta. Adiśeṣa or Ananta is the manifestation of this Viṣṇukalā. Sri Ananta has got a name Saṅkarṣaṇa meaning one who proudly and arrogantly pulls at every thing that is seen and unseen.

It is well-known that all the worlds are being borne on his head by the thousand- hooded Adiśeṣa. When, while bearing the worlds like this, he feels that he should destroy the animate and inanimate objects of the worlds, he brings forth from his forehead Rudra named Saṅkarṣaṇa along with eleven demigods and weapons like trividha (trident). Ananta is very beautiful with divine brilliance. Other serpent chiefs prostrate before him and at that time they see their reflection on the diamond-mirror-like nails on the toes of Ananta and for some time the serpent chiefs lie there pleasantly looking at the reflection of their own faces in the nails. The earrings of dazzling brilliance of serpent chiefs reflect on their cheeks and the serpents feel extremely happy when they see the reflection of their faces on the nails.

The daughters of the serpent kings are all beautiful damsels with fair, spotless and lustrous bodies. They smear their bodies with fragrant pastes made from Aloe, Sandal and Saffron. They then stood around Aḍīṣeṇa who blessed them with his movements of their bodies accompanied by erotic side glances expressing their carnal desires. The mighty, virtuous, celebrated Aḍīṣeṇa sat there surrounded by serpents for the welfare of the world. He sat there worshipped by Devas, Siddhas, Gandharvas, Vidyutakṣas and Maha-ras, bearing the divine garland ‘Vajrayanta’, and wearing fragrant flower garlands, blue apparel and ornaments in ears and neck and holding in his hand the Bājipūda. Suppressing his anger and keeping calm and serene he lectures all around with his pathetic look.

(From Skandha, Devī Brāhṇavata).

PĀṬALAKETU. A demon. This demon once carried away Mādālaśa, daughter of Vīravāna to Pāṭāla. Rādhvajārāja defeated Pāṭaliketu and rescued Mādālaśa from Pāṭāla. (See under Rādhvajārāja).

PĀṬALARĀVANA. A leader among the demons, Rāvana, the lord of Lankā, and Pāṭalārāvana are different. Pāṭalārāvana was the son of the sister of Māvyāvan. Hei, son of Brahmā, begot of his wife Bhayā a son named Vidyutakṣa. Vidyutakṣa married Śilakāṭakā and got of her Sakeśa. Sakeśa made a married Devavati and got of her three sons, Māvyāvan, Sumāki and Mālā. Of these Sumāki got Prahatya and others who were the ministers of Rāvana. Pāṭalā-Rāvana was the son of Māvyāvan's sister.

A set of demons afraid of Mahāvīra, the destroyer of demons, fled to Pāṭāla. Their leader was Pāṭalārāvana. On reaching Pāṭāla he became their leader and emperor and got the name of Pāṭalārāvana from then onwards. Pāṭalārāvana performed severe austerities to propitiate Brahmā and got from him three extraordinary boons:—

1) To travel freely in all the worlds without the use of any vehicle.
2) To be well-endowed in all magical arts.
3) To be alive till the beetle-shaped blue diamond in his possession is broken into two pieces.

Pāṭalārāvana used all these boons for the welfare and emancipation of his own people. He was interested in teasing his enemies by the power of his boons. Rāvana, king of Lankā, had an alliance with Pāṭalārāvana.

Pāṭalārāvana had a cruel and huge brother named Kumbhodara who was an adept in magic. This brother always helped Pāṭalā-Rāvana in all his activities.

The Rāma-Rāvana Yuddha was going on and Rāvana began to suffer defeat after defeat in quick succession. Rāvana then sent for Pāṭalārāvana and his brother Kumbhodara. Pāṭalārāvana felt sorry at the pitiable plight of Rākṣas and both the Rāvans sat together to discuss future plans. Though they had lost a major portion of their army, Rāvana suggested they should fight with the rest of the army and kill Rāma. Pāṭalā-rāvana was to kill Rāma and Lankā-Rāvana was to marry Sītā. Pāṭalārāvana said that it was unwise to continue the fight with a small army but promised he would make a trial by using his magic powers.

Pāṭalārāvana and Kumbhodara on leaving Lankā made themselves and travelled above the camp of Śri Rāma to investigate the strength and manoeuvres of the Rāma-army. It was night and the whole place was lit by moonlight. The monkey soldiers were taking rest in different places. Vībhīṣaṇa and Sugrīva were talking in secret about grave matters. Śri Rāma was lying resting his head on the lap of Laksmaṇa and Laksmaṇa was wildly masses by the movements of his body. Hanumān was sitting on a big dais created by his tail and keeping watch over the whole camp. Pāṭalārāvana knew from what he saw that any attempt to carry away Rāma from the surface of the ground was impossible and so he returned to Pāṭāla. From there they made a tunnel up to the base of the seat of Hanumān and from there to Rāka. There they took Hanumān and they carried Rāma and Laksmaṇa to Pāṭāla before anybody could find it out by making them smell a sam-medivadivayusadhī (divine medicine causing unconsciousness). They brought them to a temple of Mahākāli with the intention of offering them in a sacrifice to the deity the next day morning. They made all preparations for the same. Hanumān used to inspect the camp often and got back at midnight he looked at the place where Rāma and Laksmaṇa were sleeping and could not find them. He immediately woke up all and made a search and they found the big hole of a tunnel near the place where Rāma and Laksmaṇa were sleeping. All the leaders including Sugrīva and Vībhīṣaṇa assembled there and then Vībhīṣaṇa told them what had happened. He then took Sugrīva, Hanumān, Jāmbavān and Anjāna and a big army to Pāṭāla and went straight to the Mahākāli temple. There Pāṭalārāvana had already started the ceremonies for the sacrifice.

Vībhīṣaṇa then asked Hanumān to go and get the scorpion-shaped diamond of Pāṭalārāvana from a secret place in his bed chamber. He went there without Hanumān and kept it in his mouth and attacked Pāṭalārāvana who came running to slay him. Pāṭalā-Rāvana faced Hanumān in a very indifferent manner and a fight ensued. After sometime Hanumān lost patience and cracked the diamond within his mouth and the moment it cracked Pāṭalā-Rāvana fell down dead. (Yuddha Rākṣas, Kamba Rāmāyana).

PĀṬALĀVATI. A holy river of Uṭḍara Bhlāṭra. (Sloka I, Chapter 9, Bhūma Parva).

PĀṬALIPUTRA. An ancient city of Purāṇic fame in Uttrā Bhlāṭra. The former name of this city was Pāṭaliputra. There is a story behind the city getting this name:

There was once a sacred pond named Kanakbha on the banks of river Gaṅga. A brahmin from Dakṣiṇa-bhlāṭa along with his wife came to this pond and started practising severe austerities there. He got three sons while living there. After some time the parents died. The three sons went to a place named Rājaṅgha and studied there. The three were very poor and they went from there to perform penance to propitiate Subrahmanya (Kumāra uṇāi). On their way they entered the house of a brahmin named Bhojika living on the sea-coast. Bhojika had three daughters and the brahmin after knowing all details about them gave his daughters in marriage to them along with all his wealth. The brahmin went to perform penance and the three brahmin boys with their wives lived in that house. Once there occurred a famine and the three brothers left their home leaving their wives alone. The second girl was pregnant at that time and she and her sister went to the house of a friend of their father named Yajñadatta. In due course she delivered a son and all the three women looked after the child as their common son.

Śiva and Pārvati were travelling by air once and seeing this child Śiva said thus:—"I am blessing this boy. This boy in his previous birth jointly with his wife worshipped me with great devotion. They are now born again to enjoy life. His wife in his previous birth was born as the daughter of King Mahendra. Her name was Pāṭalī and she would again be the wife of this boy in this life."

That night Paramāśīva appeared before the mother of the boy in a dream and said "You must name this boy Putraka. Everyday morning when he rises up a lakṣa of small gold coins will fall to the ground from his head."

They therefore, named the boy Putraka and every morning they would collect and store the gold coins falling from his head. When Putraka grew up he was immensely rich and started giving away his riches to brāhmaṇas as gifts. The news of this spread far and wide and brāhmaṇas from all sides began to flock to his house.

One day among the brāhmaṇas who flocked to his house were his father and his two brothers. The fathers felt envious of the extraordinary progress in wealth and fame of his son and they cleverly took the son to a lonely place in a temple in the heart of the Vindhya mountains to kill him. After engaging some murderers to kill him they left the place. Putraka bribed the murderers with his costly dresses and ornaments and escaped from there. There was a great storm then and Putraka walked through it. On his way he met the two sons of Mayāraṇa quarrelling for the three things left over to them by their father. The paternal property consisted of a stick, a pair of sandals and a pot all of which had some strange powers. If you draw on the ground with the stick you will have at that spot anything you desire. If you wear the sandals you can travel in the air. If you dip your hands into the pot you will get plenty of food.

Putraka immediately hit upon a plan and addressed the quarrelling brothers thus:—"Why do you fight like this? It is better you decide it by a competitive race. He who wins the race should have the right to get the things."
The two brothers agreed to it and leaving the things with Putraka started running. When they had gone a long distance away from the spot, Putraka put on the sandals and taking the stick and pot with him rose into the air. He landed at a city far away from the spot and started living at the house of an old woman. The King of that country had a daughter named Pāṭalī. When the old lady described to him the beauty and good qualities of Pāṭalī, Putraka wanted to marry her. So at night when everybody in the palace was asleep Putraka put on his sandals and entered the room of Pāṭalī through the windows. Pāṭalī woke up; she liked Putraka and they were married according to Gāndharva rites. Then they both went out of the palace by air with the help of the sandals and landed at a place on the shores of the Gāṅgā. Then at the request of Pāṭalī Putraka made a city there with the help of the stick and they named it Pāṭaliputra.

Pāṭalī, Pāṭalī, Pāṭalī (Kathāpithālambaka, Kathāśāriśāgūra).

PATAṆGA. A mountain. There are twenty small mountains around Mahāmuru and Pataṅga is one of them.

PATAṆJALI. A celebrated commentator in Sanskrit. Pataṅgi is one of the best commentators of Panini's Vyākaranārūtra. Pandits are of opinion that he got his name Pataṅji to mean that people should worship atjali (at his foot (pāda)). He was such an adorable person. Pandits believe that Pataṅji is the author of Yogāsūtra and Carakasaṁhitā. A few believe that Pataṅji was the incarnation of Ādīśe. But modern scholars are of opinion that Pataṅji; the commentator and Pataṅja the author of Yogāsūtras are two different persons.

In his book on Pataṅjali-caritra, Rāmābhadrāditya writes about the birth of Pataṅji:—"Once Gomikā, daughter of a sage, prayed to the Sun-god for a son. At once Ananta, King of the serpents, fell on her palm in the form of a snake. The ecstatic girl brought up that snake as her son. After some years the snake went to Cidambara and prayed to Śiva to bless him with enough knowledge and wisdom to write a commentary on Kāvyājana's Vyākaranavarttika (explanatory rules on Pāṭalīśāsūtras). Śiva blessed him and the snake wrote the commentary. Many disciples went to him to learn the commentary and the sage accepted them all as disciples and promised to teach them provided they would abide by a condition, namely, that nobody should remove a curtain he would place between him and the disciples while teaching. The teaching went on for some time. He would reply to their doubts but the replies were peculiar and ambiguous and the disciples getting disappointed, removed the curtain one day. The sage cursed them all. One of the disciples was away from the place then and the sage cursed him for leaving the place without permission during the course of study. He begged for relief and the sage was pleased. The Guru said if he could teach his commentary to one who would say logically that the Bhātākarmavacayakdanta (past participle of a verb) of the root 'Pat' was 'Pakva' he would be released from the curse. Candragupta who came from Ujajinī gave the correct answer and he was taught the Mahābhāṣya. Bhartrihari was the son born to Candragupta of a Śrīder woman. Pataṅji, according to Professor Goldstuecker, was a courtier of King Pushyamitra and was alive when Menander attacked Sākteta. This would mean that Pataṅji lived before B.C. 150.

PATAŅĀ (S). A company of devils. (Chapter 285, Vana Parva).

PATATRI. A valiant warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas in the great battle. He lost his chariot in a fight with Bhamasena. (Chapter 48, Karna Parva).

PATOMAŚAKA. A serpent belonging to the race of Dṛṣṭarākṣa. This serpent was burnt to death at the sarpaśaatra of Janamejaya. (Chapter 57, Aśv Parva).

PATARHARAN. A raja well-possessed in Rggveda. (Śiṣka 112, Mandala 1, Rgveda).

PATAVY. A great preceptor in the tradition of ancient Gurus (See under Gurusaparampara).

PATHAKRTA. An agni. If a Yaga comes to a stop during its course this Agni is to be worshipped. (Chapter 221, Vana Parva).
PATINETTARAKKAVI (S). (Eighteen and a half wise men).

Mānāvikrama, the zamūrin who ruled the old state of Kozhikkoṭu in the beginning of the seventh century (Malayalam Era) was a talented man well-versed in all arts. He kept in his court a company of nineteen wise men whom he called by the widely known name Patinettpakkavikai meaning eighteen and a half kavis. The kavas of the zamūrin were the same Pattrakai of Payyor, the five Nambūtiris of Tiruvellarppura, Mullappalli Namūtiri, Uddanāśāstiri, Kākāśāstiri Bhāṣāstiri, Cennūs Nambūtirippādu and Punam Namūtiri. Of these eighteen were scholars in Sanskrit and the nineteenth, Punam Namūtiri was a vernacular poet and so the then zamūrin gave only half a unit value to the vernacular member and thus named the assembly as a company of eighteen and a half members.

There is another explanation given to the word ‘arākāvī’. ‘Ara’ means ‘half’, but modern pandits say that ‘ara’ was a prefix to show a sign of royalty as it is found in the words ‘araṇāma’ meaning royal man or palace of the King. So ‘arākāvī’ would mean a Kavi attached to a King. Then the question comes, which of the Kavis was not included in the original company to reduce the number to eighteen. We can leave the matter for further research.

Payyor Arcan Bhāṣaṭāippādu, the top-most of Kerala pandits, was the president of the council of Patinettpakkavikai. The illum (house) of this Bhāṣaṭāippādu belonged to the Kunnākkulam taluk near Guruvāyur of the present time and was not included in the original company to reduce the number to eighteen. Kākāśāstiri Bhāṣāstiri was born to defeat the invincible Uddanāśāstiri. Cennūs Nambūtiri was the author of Tantrasāmacchayā. Many poets and pandits were born in the family of these Kavis after their deaths. PAYYARATTAMAHATMYAPARVA. A subsidiary Parva of Vana Parva of Mahābhārata. This comprises six chapters commencing from Chapter 293 of Vana Parva.

PATRȘVARA. A sacred place. This is situated on the northern shore of the river Narmada. If one bathes in the tirtha (pond) there, one will be able to enjoy the company of celestial maidens for five thousand years. (Chândogya Upanishad 17, Padma Purâṇa)

PATṬṬṆAṆA. This was a custom which was in force in the ancient temples of Kerala from the 9th century A.D. Paṭṭa means a ‘Sanskrit pandit’ ‘Paṭṭa’ is used as its plural. To give instructions in śāstras and upaniṣads to the three upper classes and to read in public at fixed times the Purāṇas, to make people more and more religious minded, it was the custom to appoint Paṭṭas in temples in ancient Kerala. This position which was the loiest that could be attained by a pandit of those times was called by the name Paṭṭattāna. From the 9th century A.D. references are found about Pattattāna in official records. In all important temples a māvāratapatta was used to be appointed. His duty was to read and explain Mahābhārata to people. Usūlār who introduced the day to day administration of the temples and the Kollākkāri who represented the supreme authority, and the King, jointly granted the Paṭṭattāna to deserving people. Pandits used to come to temples and engage themselves in religious polemics to make themselves worthy of the grant of Paṭṭattāna. The Paṭṭas were entitled to some profits from the temples. Records of the 3rd century Malayalam Era regarding the routine expenditure in the Tiruvallūra temple mention about five nāṭkhas of rice to be given to each of the Paṭṭas within the temple. Paṭṭas also were given many lands free of tax as were given to Brāhmins. In the Manakkara order of 1236 A.D. and the Padmanābhasarma order of 1237 A.D. mention is made about these grants. Paṭṭattānas and Uraṣmattānas became hereditary after some time and began to decline in importance.

Even the meaning of the word Paṭṭattāna underwent a change. In Cochin it meant the ceremony of giving feasts followed by money-bags to invited Brahmins by the Kings to obtain punya for the dead members of the royal family. The zamūris of Calicut meant by Paṭṭattāna the act of giving fifty-one bags each containing fiftyone rupees to the successful candidates in sāstrīrthā contests held at the Tali temple during the period between Revati and Vaiśākha (Ardrā) in the month of Tulāṁ. There is a difference of opinion regarding the number of money-bags and the amount in each. Ulūr S. Parāketty’s views in his Kaṭṭappikai (page 148) states that the number of bags were 46 and the money in each was two hundred rupees. Of these, twelve bags each were sanctioned for Prabhākara Māmāṣa and Bhāṣāṣāṃūsā, nine for Vyākaraṇa, and thirteen for Vedanta. According to certain records 48 bags were given in the year 1679 A.D. Contests in Prabhākara Māmāṣa were held on the southern temple-tower gate of the Tali temple and in Vyākaraṇa on the southern platform of the northern temple tower gate of the same temple. The custom of giving hundred and one rupees each to one hundred and eight scholars in Śrī Padmanābhaśavānti temple of Trivandrum is also called Paṭṭattāna.

PATTHORA. A division of the army. (See under AṆkaṭhālai).

PATTORṆA. A Kṣatriya King. He brought gifts for the Rājaśūya of Yudhīthira. (Slokā 18, Chapter 52, Sābhā Parva).

PATTU (TEN).

Q. Rūpāsas (dramatic compositions). There are ten classes of rūpakas: (1) Nākha (drama). The chief sentiment in a drama should be one of the following rūpakas: (1) Viraraka (sentiment of heroism) (2) Šrīgarāra (sentiment of love) (3) Kārutaraka (pathos). There should be five to ten acts. The singer should be a famous one. It must have Pāticasandhis (five junctures). Saṅkunala and Uttarārākṣa are perfect Nākhas. (2) Prakārana. In this kind of drama the plot is invented or fictitious and deals with the social life of the day. The hero of the play can be either a hero or a meek person. The heroine can be a noble lady or a harlot. The main sentiment should be Śrīgarā (love). Mālānādhava, Mṛcchakāti are examples of Prakāranas. (3) Bhūka. There is only one character and one Act in this species. The plot is fictitious and the hero is an expert humorous libertine. Lilāmādura and Mahāśīla might be examples. (4) Prakārana. This is a fictitious plot and is a satire on a low comedy. Satire is the chief sentiment of this species. (5) Dīma. This has got four Acts. The plot will be famous and the chief sentiment will be one of wrath and fiercesseness. There will be no Visakambha (interlude between Acts to give connection to the story between Acts) or Pravesaka (introducer explaining portions of the plot which may not be put on stage but an understanding of which is necessary to follow the story). There must be sixteen saudhan and excotic characters like a Deva, Gandharva, Yāka and Rākṣas. Tripurārādhana is an example. (6) Vyāsa. Female characters will be rare in this kind of drama. There will be only one Act. The sentiments of satire or love or calmness should not be predominant. The hero should be a famous divine sage. Saug-amādkarana is an example. (7) Saṃsāvādkāra. The plot should be based on a story of the devas and asuras. There will be three Acts. There must be twelve brave heroes in it. The chief sentiment will be heroič. The tenure of a city, declaration of war or a big fire should be part of the play. Sunudrammathana is an example.
8) Vithi. This will have one Act and one actor. Any of the sentiments can be portrayed. The story must be completed by Ākāshabhāṣita (speech to which reply is given on the stage as if spoken from the sky) Candrikā is an example.
9) Aśa. This has only one Act. The heroes should be people of the prākṛta type. Pathos is the chief sentiment. This should contain the pathetic wail of many women. This is called Uṣṭṭhikāka also. Šarmištā-śayati is an example.

T. Upāś. There are ten articles of worship: (1) Arghya (oblation of valuables) (2) Pāḍya (water for washing feet) (3) Acamana (water for cleansing mouth) (4) Madhuparka (a mixture of honey with four other sweet articles) (5) Paunaracanama (water for cleansing mouth again) (6) Gandha (sandal paste) (7) Puspā (flowers) (8) Dhūpā (frankincense) (9) Dīpa (light) (10) Nivedya (articles of food offerings).
U. Upās. There are many Upāṇisads of which only 108 ones are in print; of these the most important are ten in number and they are the following: (1) Īśavāya (2) Kena (3) Katha (4) Prāṇa (5) Mundā (6) Māṇḍūkya (7) Chāṇḍogya (8) Taittirīya (9) Āita-ṛaya (10) Bhṛdaśa-asya.

Pataśa. A demon. During the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle this demon fought against Panasa a monkey warrior on the side of Rāma. (Chapter 205, Vanu Parva).
Paudanya. An ancient city of Bhārata. The founder of this city was Alva-ka son of King Sādhuśrava. Pandira believe that the present city of Paithan on the northern bank of river Godāvari was the old Paudanya.
Paulaśi. The demons born in the race of Pulaśi are called Paulaśi. They were born like the brothers of Duryodhana. Rāvaṇa born in the family of Pulaśi is also called Paulaśi. (Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).
Paoloma. A tirtha (holy place). Another name of Paudanya.
Paolomas. The sons of the demon named Pulomā.
Paolomarva. A subsidiary Parva of the Ādi Parva of Mahābhārata. (See under Bhārata).
Paolomi. Sadhavi, wife of Indra. (See under Sad).
Paunartheva. See under Bandhudyāya.
Paundra I. One of the barbaric tribes of men who had originated from the race of Nandī. (Śloka 37, Chapter 174, Ādi Parva).
Paundra II. A resident of the state of Paundra. This state was in existence during the Mahābhārata period. The king of the state was also called Paundra. Paundra was present for the marriage of Pāṇḍālī. (Chapter 186, Ādi Parva). Paundra was also present for the Rājanūya conducted by Dharma-pura. During the big battle the Paundra fought against the Kauravas constructing a Kraucaśayōha (a battle array in the shape of a store). (Chapter 50, Bhīmata Parva). Kṛṣṇa and Karna on two different occasions conquered this country. (Śūnta Parva, M. B.). The Paundra were Kṣatriyas once. But the brahmans cursed them and changed them into Śūdras. (Chapter 83, Anuśāna Parva).

Paundra III. The cousin of Bhimasena. He blew his horn at the beginning of the Mahābhārata battle and also at the time when Duryodhana fell down dead. (Chapter 61, Śāya Parva).
Paundra I. A son of Nukumha. When during the Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle Nukumha died, his son Paundra took up the fight against Rāma and was killed. (Ananda Rāmāyaṇa).
Paundra II. (Paundra-kvāsudeva). A king of ancient Kāraṇā. Once he sent a messenger to Dvārakā and told Kṛṣṇa thus: “Oh Kṛṣṇa, I am the real Vāsudeva. Therefore put down all your royal emblems and robes and come and worship me at my feet.” As soon as Kṛṣṇa heard it he got angry and moved to Kāraṇā with a large army and killed Paundra-kvāsudeva. 10th Skanda, Bhāgavata).
Paundra III. The name of the buffalo which is the vehicle of Vama. (Chapter 9, Vāmana Purāṇa).
Paundra-māraṇa. A Kṣatriya king. He was the son born to the demon Vira of a woman named Danāya. (Śloka 43, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).
Paundra I. An ancient Kāraṇā. He became Parvatsarja when he grew up after being born of the species of the deity, Śrīārāṇa. Once Arjuna defeated this king. The Pāṇḍavas invited him for the Mahābhārata battle. But he did not accept it but joined sides with the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas. Paundra was considered a prominent commander in the Kaurava army. In the Kurukṣetra battle he at first fought against Dṛṣṭaketu and then was wounded when he fought Bhīma. It was Arjuna who killed him in the end. (Chapter 67, Ādi Parva; Chapter 27, Śāhī Parva; Chapters 4, 128, Udyoga Parva; Chapter 116, Bhīmata Parva; Chapter 14, Droṇa Parva; Chapter 5, Kṛṣṇa Parva).
Paundra II. Those born in the Puru line of kings are as a class called Paundra. Both Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas have been mentioned as Paundra in the Puruṣas. (Chapter 172, Ādi Parva).
Paundra III. An ancient king of the kindom of Aitva. This Paundra was also one among the kings who gave money to king Śrījaya when he conducted an Avasamedha. (Chapter 57, Droṇa Parva).
Paundra IV. One of the Brahmanādī sons of Viśva-mitra. (Śloka 35, Chapter 4, Anuśāna Parva).
Paundra. A Kṣatriya tribe. These people fought against the Kauravas joining the Kaucaśayōha constructed by Dharma-pura in the great battle. (Chapter 50, Bhīmata Parva).
Paundra I. Wife of Vasudeva, father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. He had many other wives. (9th Skanda, Bhāgavata).
Paundra II. Wife of Yudhiṣṭhira. Yudhiṣṭhira begot a son named Devaka of Paundra. (9th Skanda, Bhāgavata).
Paundra. A demon who travels along with the sun in the month of Jyesṭha. (June), 11th Skanda, Bhāgavata).
PAURIKA. A king of the ancient country Purikānagari. He was such a sinner that he was born as a jackal in his next birth. (Chapter 111, Sānti Parva.)

PAURNAMĀSA, Son of Marci. His mother was called Sambhūti. Paurnama had two sons named Viraṇa and Parvata. (Chapter 10, Aṣṭāda, Vīśṇu Purāṇa.)

PAUṢAJĪ. One of the sages belonging to the tradition of the disciples of Vīśṇa. (See under Gurruparamparā.)

PAUSĀMĀSA. The month of Pausa (January). During this month, on the full moon day the constellation Pausa and the moon join in a zodiacal sign. He who takes food only once a day during this month will get beauty, fame and prosperity. (Chapter 106, Anuśāsana Parva.)

PAUṢIṢIṆI. A sage belonging to the tradition of the disciples of Vīśṇa. (See under Gurruparamparā.)

PAUṢṬI. Wife of king Puru. Puru begot of Pauṣṭi three sons named Pravīra, Daṁra, and Raudraśa. Pauṣṭi is called Kauśalya also. (Śloka 111, Chapter 9, Adi Parva.)

PAUSYA I. A Kauriya king. The queen of this king gave her earrings as a gift to a sage called Uttanka. (See under Uttanka.)

PAUSYA II. Son of Pauṣṭa, king of Karavītra. Pauṣya had three wives and yet was not fortunate enough to get a son. At last by the grace of Śiva, he got a son named Candrakēhara. The palace of Candrakēhara was in Karaviranganagari situated near Brahmapur in the banks of the river Dṛ̸vaḍvatī. (Kālika Purāṇa, Chapter 49.)

PAUSYAPARVA. A subsidiary Parva of Adi Parva. Chapter three is included in this.

PAUSYĀṆJī. A preceptor of the tradition of the disciples of Vīśṇa. (See under Vīśṇa.)

PĀVAKA. A son of Agni. Agni got of his wife Svāhī three sons, Pāvaka, Pāvamaṇa and Suci. These three brilliant sons got together 45 sons and they were also called Agni. Thus there were 49 Agnis made up of the father, his three sons and their 45 sons. Pāvaka had another name also—Mahān (Chapter 219, Vana Parva.)

PĀVAMAṆĀ I. An Agni (fire). The eldest son of Brahmā, Agni, got of his wife Svāhī three sons, Pāvaka, Pāvamaṇa and Suci. These three got forty-five children and they are called Agnis. Thus, father, three sons and their forty-five sons constitute the 49 Agnis. (Chapter 10, Aṣṭāda I, Vīśṇu Purāṇa.)

PĀVAMAṆĀ II. A mountain. This mountain is situated near Meru. (8th Sandha, Devī Bhāgavata.)

PĀVAMAṆĀ III. One of the three sons of Vīṣṇu. He was in his previous birth an Agni but was cursed by Vasishtha to be born on earth as a man. (4th Sandha, Bhāgavata.)

PĀVANA I. Vāserdeva (one of the ten sons of Vīṣṇu). (Śloka 30, Chapter 91, Anuśāsana Parva.)

PĀVANA II. A son born to Kṛṣṇa of Mitraśvānda. (10th Sandha, Bhāgavata.)

PĀVANA III. A sacred place situated on the border of Kurukṣetra. If one worships the Devas and Manus at this place one would get the benefit of conducting an Āsvamedha. (Chapter 88, Vana Parva.)

PĀVANIRĀMA. A murmura drīha (a sacred pond) situated on the border of Kurukṣetra. If one bathes in this one would attain Vīṣṇu-loka.

PAVITRĀROPAṆA. A Puḻjividhi (a mode of worship). If you perform a Pavitropana worship you will get the benefit of worshipping Vīṣṇu for a year. This worship is to be conducted in the months of Āśāha (July), Śrāvaṇa (August), Pratikāsa (September), Āśā (October) and Kārtika (November). A sacred Pavitra (sacred thread or ring of Kūṭa grass) is to be prepared either in gold, silver, copper, cotton or silk. A specially purified cotton thread is also enough. The Pavitra is to be made of three threads woven together. The Pavitra is to be made holy by reciting 108 times the Gāyatrī mantra or even half of that number is enough. Reciting 108 times or more is considered to be Uttama (best); half if it is considered Madiyama (tolerable) and less than it is considered adhama (worst). The Pavitra should then be tied to maṇḍalas and the mantra to be recited at the time of tying it, is this:

Om Nārāyaṇya vidmahe Vāsudevaḥ Dhīmahe tanno Vīṣṇuḥ pracoṇayāt.

(Chapter 34, Agni Purāṇa.)

PĀVITRĀṆI. A sage who spoke in the courts of both Indra and Yudhiṣṭhīra. (Śloka 15, Chapter 4, Sābhī Parva.)

PĀVASYA. Son of the sage Agirū. He had eight sons named Varunās. They were—Bṛhaspati, Utān, Paivasya, Sānti, Ghotra, Viṃula, Saṁvarta and Dvāna. (Śloka 130, Chapter 85, Anuśāsana Parva.)

PĀYODA. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā. (Śloka 28, Chapter 46, Sāiya Parva.)

PĀYOSIA. A holy river. This river starts from the Vindhyā mountains and flows to the west. Nala and Dāmāyanti walked through the banks of this river. (Chapter 61, Vana Parva.) Those who bathe in this river will get the benefit of doing a thousand godānas (gifts of cows). There is a sacred place on the shores of this river called Varāhatīthra. King Nṛga performed a Yāga at this place at which Indra came and had Sunapāna and the brahmans received dakṣina (fees) and got drunk. (Chapters 88 and 121, Vana Parva.) Even the mere contact of water-drops of Payosia river would absolve one of all sins. The musical instrument Śrīga of Śiva is in this river. Dharmaputtra once came to this river and stayed there for some time drinking its water. (Chapter 120, Vana Parva.) On another occasion Gaya son of King Agirūtāras conducted seven Āsvamedhas at this place and pleased Indra. (Chapter 21, Anuśāsana Parva.)

PĀYANNŪR PĀṬṬU. This is a work in Malayālam written during a very ancient period of Malayālam literature. A complete edition of the same has not yet been received. The plot as could be gathered from records available is the following:

Nilakačā, a woman born in a very noble family in Trivātpurin did not have any sons though she accepted many husbands for the sake of progeny. At last she decided to perform penance. She left her place alone on a pilgrimage and reached Kaccīla, a famous trading centre near Esamalā. There lived a merchant named Namboccety alias Comboccety who was the chief man of the place. He talked with Nilakeś and accepted her as his wife. She bore a son of him named Nambo∪ri Aran. Pleased at the birth of a son the parents gave a grand feast at the big Payannūr plains. At that time the brothers of Nilakeś reached the place in a ship. They climbed the fort-walls and tried to enter the grounds. Some people objected to it and at that time Nambucery came there and beat them to death. On hearing about this Nilakal left everything behind including her son and went again on a pilgrimage. When the son grew up the father taught his son everything about trade and ships. The father gave him a new ship for trading and the son taking along with him Pândyas, Jonakas, Goliyas, Páppavas and a Yavana and a huge stock of goods put the ship into the sea and fearlessly went for trading. After passing through many ports and crossing another ocean he reached Ponnal (the mountain of gold) and bartered his goods for a heap of gold. He came back to his own land and was one day playing chess with his father when a Sannyásini (female ascetic) came there. When she was given alms she requested to be allowed to talk to the young merchant. The Sannyásini was none other than Nilakal; the mother of Nambusuri Aran, the young merchant. She requested him to come to Payyanur for a feast conducted by a woman there and he agreed to that. But the father objected to it. But when the son persisted in going, the father sent him with the sons of the ferry, a few people from Manigráma and a huge stock of goods for trade. The poem ends there thus with 104 verses.

There are different opinions about the story among literary critics and historians. Gundert writes about it thus: "This is a piece of Malayalam work most ancient of all that I have seen. This is a creation in Malayalam before that language became diluted with meaningless indescribable Sanskrit words."

According to Gundert this poem was written before the poem Rámakīrti was written and thus in the 3rd century M.E.

PEDU. A Rājārsi otherwise named Aulāvava. (Maṇḍalaj 1, Rgyveda.)

PERIYALVAR. Viṣṇuśīla, father of Aṇḍal. (See under Viṇṇatīṭār.)

PERUKA. A King of Vedic times. He was the śtraya-sūri of the rājadeva (ruler) of Bharadvāja. (Anuśvaka 63, Maṇḍalaj 9, Rgyveda.)

PFA. This letter means Jharjhaḷīva. Pha is phūṭka, a sound resembling hissing and means 'useless' also. (Chapter 348, Aṇīr Pūraṇa.)

PHALATAKSHA. A Yaks. This Yaks was a member of the court of Kubera. (Slōka 16, Chapter 10, Sābhā Parva.)

PHAI. ŚIKVANA. A sacred place. Once the devatās started practising severe austerities at this place and it lasted for a long time extending to thousands of years. From then onwards this became a holy place. (Chapter 153, Vana Parva, Slōka 86.)

PHALADAKA. A Yaks. This Yaks lives in the court of Kubera. (Chapter 10, Sābhā Parva.)

PHALGUNA. A holy river. If one visits this place one would get the benefit of doing an Aśvamedha. (Slōka 98, Chapter 83, Vana Parva.)

PHALGUNA. Another name of Arjuna. Arjuna was born in the Uttrārāghavāṇi constellation in a mount of the Himaśya. So he was called Phalgunu and also Phālguna. (Slōka 9, Chapter 44, Viṇīrā Parva.)

PHALGUNA. A month (March). It is so called because the phalguniakrṣṇa yuga occurs in that month. He who gives away as gift his meal for a time of the day will become more loved by his wife.

Not only that, the Purāṇas declare that such a man would attain Čandraloka. (Chapter 109, Anuśāna Parva.)

PHALGUTANTRA. The father of Sāgara. During the old age of Phalgunatana the Hālayas led by Tāḷaṅkhas attacked Ayodhyā and drove out the royal family from the palace. Phalgunatana fled from the palace with his wife and stayed in the śīrṣa of Auruva. The King died before long. The queen who was pregnant then delivered a son in due course and he became the celebrated Sāgara. (Chapter 3, Brahmaṇḍa Pūraṇa.)

PHALODAKA. A Yaks of the court of Kubera. (Slōka 16, Chapter 10, Sābhā Parva.)

PHENA. A King of the race of Uśinara. His son was Sutapas and his grandson Aśvinara. (Harivarṣa 1, 31, 32.)

PHENAPA. A gotra-maker of the Bhojan family. Phena is meant for the content of desirability to Yuddhisthira the greatness of cows. Phena's original name was Sunmitra. He lived on the shores of the river Kala in the mountain of Tṛīkṣuhrā drinking the foam of cow's milk alone and thus getting for him the name Phena. (Phena - foam; Phā - drink) (Anuśāna Parva, M.B.)

PIGHALA. A serpent born in the family of Vāsuki. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Slōka 6, Chapter 57, Ádi Parva.)

PICGILHA. A river of Purāṇic fame which runs through Uttarā Bharata. (Slōka 29, Chapter 9, Bhitam Parva.)

PİNWAKA. The bow of Śiva. Pīnākā was formerly the three-forced spike of Śiva. Once it fell down from the hands of Śiva and on falling down took the shape of a bow. From then onwards it was used as a bow. See under Paupaśa. (Chapter 36, Sābhā Parva: Chapter 141, Anuśāna Parva; Chapter 283, Sānti Parva.)

PINAKI. One of the eleven Rudras. He was the grandson of Brahma and the son of Śtānū. Pinakhī attended the Jaṁmoṣṭhya of Arjuna. (Chapter 66, Ádi Parva; Chapter 208, Sānti Parva; Chapter 122, Ádi Parva.)

PINATI. Śiva got this name because he wields the bow named Pinakī.

PINDAHAKA. I. A serpent born in the family of Kāśyapa. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Slōka 17, Chapter 57, Ádi Parva.)

PINDARAKA II. A sacred place situated near Dvāra-kā in Saurāstra. He who bather in a holy river there would get immense gold. The place is worshipped by the sages. He who stays there for one day bathing in that river would get the benefit of conducting an Agnumoṣṭhya. (Chapter 82, Slōka 62, Vana Parva; Slōka 21, Chapter 68, Vana Parva; Slōka 57, Chapter 25, Anuśāna Parva.)

PINDEXHAKA. A serpent of the race of Tākṣaka. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Slōka 8, Chapter 57, Ádi Parva.)

PINĐIKĀ. A stool to install idols. The length of this stool should be equal to that of the idol. The breadth should be its half and the thickness equal to that is the breadth. The exact place where the idol is fixed of called Mehhala and the hole in the mehhala should Sita on hearing this cursed Píngalá. She said "Oh beautiful woman who has approached my husband with amorous intentions, you will have three bends in your body when you are born next as the servant maid of Krsna." Píngalá, weeping bitterly craved for pardon and then Sita said that Krsna would make her perfect. (Víśāla Kúnda, Ándana Ramáyana).

Píngalárāja. A Yáska who lives in cremation grounds. He always acts as a pilot to Síva in his travels. (Siloka 51, Chapter 231, Vína Parvá).

Píngatīthā. An ancient holy place. (Chapter 62, Vína Parvá).

Pínila. A river of Purúṣa fame. The greatness of this river is described in Siloka 27, Chapter 9, Bhíma Parvá.

Pínjara. A son born to the sage Kátyápa of his wife Káfrú. (Siloka 9, Chapter 35, Ádi Parvá).

Píppala I. The youngest of the three sons born to the dáitya named Mítra of his wife Revati. (Bhaiyáva Puráṇa).

Píppala II. A brahmin born of the race of Kátyápa. Píppala did severe penance and became arrogant of the power acquired by it. Once he happened to see the eminent sage Sukármá serving with devotion his own mother and father and that made his arrogance fade a bit. (Bhúmi Kandá, Padma Puráṇa, Chapter 61).

Píppala. An ancient sage belonging to the tradition of preceptors. (See under Guropapárpak). It is said that this sage got that name because he was in the habit of eating Píppalá in large quantities daily. Pránapámarádfá tells a story of how the sage Súkhashá, Súbha, Sátakáthā (Kátyápa), Káukála, Bhaúga and Kábanáda went to Píppaládá seeking Ánámatá (spiritual knowledge) and how he gave them instructions on the same.

Píppaládá. Padma Puráṇa gives the following information regarding Píppaládá: "Once Kúrdalá, a brahmin residing in Kuruksetra, got a son named Sukármá. Sukármá's parents were old and Sukármá spent most of his time looking after his sickly aged parents. Kúrdalá taught his son all the Vedas and Sárvtas. At that time in the gona of Kátyápa was born a brahmin named Píppaládá. Controlling his senses and abandoning all passions he did severe penance in a forest called Daśákánya. The greatness of his penance made the animals of the forest leave their mutual enmity and live in perfect peace. Even the devas were astonished at the power of his penance. Píppaládá did penance sitting as majestic and motionless as a mountain for a thousand years. Ants made a sand-heap over him like a mole-hill. The sage sat inside without any motion; poisonous black cobras circled round him and yet the sage made no movement. Three thousand years went by like that and then the devas showered flowers on him. Braháma appeared and gave him the boon 'Sarvakámasváthá' (getting all that is desired) and by the blessing of Braháma he became a very learned person also.

Píppaládá became arrogant with the boon of 'Sarvákámasváthá' in his possession. One day while he was sitting on a river-bank a swan appeared before him and in clear tones said - "Píppaládá, why are you so proud of your greatness? I do not believe you have that power of universal attraction. This art is aravâna (modern: pyâra) you do not know Prâcina because you are illiterate. You take pride unnecessarily for having done penance for three thousand years. Do you know Sukarmâ, the wise son of Kuḍâla? He is the man who has acquired this power of attraction. There is no mahâjana (one possessing spiritual knowledge) like him anywhere else in this world. Sukarmâ has given no gifts, he has not practised meditation, he has not received Prâcina's grâma as protection. He has been a pilgrim. He has not done any of these virtuous deeds and yet he is well-versed in all the śāstras and Vedas. Even though he is a child you do not possess enough knowledge to equal his. Why? Because he is always engaged in the care and welfare of his parents. You take pride in your achievements without reason.

Hearing that Pippalâda went and met Sukarmâ, Pippalâda knew that the bird was none other than Brahmarâma himself. They talked to each other for a long time and then Pippalâda admitted that Sukarmâ was a greater man than himself. (Chapters 60-62, Padma Purâṇa).

PIPPALÂDA. A division of land is joined to the Jambuddvîpa. (Sloka 37, Chapter 6, Bhishma Purâṇa).

PIHÂLÂ. One of the nine sons born to Bhâbadeva of his wife Jaya. Pippalâya was a very pious king. (4th Skandha, Bhâgavata Purâṇa).

PIŚÂCA I. (Devil, Satan)

1) Ongi. A malevolent being which is the very manifestation of evil. Everybody, everywhere in the world, from the very birth of this universe believed in the presence of such a wicked soul. According to Hindu belief Pâl is the creator of such spirits. Pâl has created the eight classes, which are called 'devils'. This word is derived from the Greek word 'diabolos'. People of the West and East equally believe that Piśâca (Satan) is an enemy of men and gods alike.

2) Bible and the Piśâca. It is not clearly stated in Bible how Satan was born but it is being referred to as several places as a wicked soul which leads men to evil.

3) The Bhûratya Saṃkalpa. Piśâca, the creation of Brahmarâma, has taken important roles in the Purânic stories. Though Piśâca is the instigator of all evil, its main manifestation appears in many contexts in the Purânas.—(i) Piśa lives in the court of Kâbra and worships him. (Sloka 16, Chapter 10, Saḥbhâ Purâṇa).

(ii) Piśa lives in the court of Brahmâ and worships him. (Sloka 49, Chapter 11, Saḥbhâ Purâṇa).

(iii) Piśa lives in the Gokânpattirîha and worships Śiva. (Sloka 25, Chapter 63, Vana Purâṇa).

(iv) Piśa is the head of all evil spirits. Marici and Angirases like him have created many evil spirits. (Sloka 46, Chapter 272, Vana Purâṇa).

(v) The bhûtras (evil spirits) made Râvana their king. (Sloka 88, Chapter 275, Vana Purâṇa).

(vi) The food of Piśa is flesh and its drink, blood. (Sloka 9, Chapter 50, Drona Purâṇa).

(vii) In the battle of Bhûrata, the horses attached to the chariot of Ałambusa were Piśâcas. (Sloka 36, Chapter 107, Drona Purâṇa).

(viii) The Piśâcas fought Karna acting as helpers to Ghatotkaca. (Sloka 109, Chapter 175, Drona Purâṇa).

(ix) Arjuna conquered the Piśâcas at the time of Khaḍgavâadanâ. (Sloka 37, Chapter 37, Karna Purâṇa).

(x) The Piśâcas were present during the fight of Arjuna with Karna (Sloka 50, Chapter 87, Karna Purâṇa).

(xi) The Piśâcas worship Āravati and Paramesvâra doing penance on the top of the mountain Muñîjvana. (Sloka 5, Chapter 5, Āravâdana Purâṇa).

(xii) During the time of Mahâbhârata many Piśâcas incarnated as kings. (Sloka 6, Chapter 31, Āsravâdana Purâṇa).

PIŚÂCA II. A Yakṣa. (Sloka 16, Chapter 10, Śaṅkha Purâṇa).

PIŚÂCA III. An inhabitant of the country of Piśâca in ancient Bhûrata. These Piśâcas fought against the Kauravas on the side of the Pâñjâvas during the great battle. It was these piśâcas that stood on the southern side of the Kauśamaṇthinâ of Yudhishthira in the great battle. (Sloka 50, Chapter 50, Bhishma Purâṇa). A few of these piśâcas were with Bhagadatta in the army of Duryodhana. (Chapter 87, Bhishma Purâṇa). Śrî Kṛṣṇa cured the piśâcas. Chapter 11, Droṇa Purâṇa).

PIŚÂNGA. A serpent born of the family of Bhûtarâ. The serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpastra of Janamejaya. (Chapter 57, Ādī Purâṇa).

PIŚÂKĀVALI. See under Nâyâvâdana.

PIŚÂMANASÅRA. A sacred place in the base of the Himalayas. If one bathes in the holy pond there one would get the benefit of doing an Agniśoṭa. (Sloka 149, Chapter 94, Vana Purâṇa).

PIṬHA. A demon. He was killed by Śrî Kṛṣṇa. (Sloka 5, Chapter 11, Droṇa Purâṇa).

PIṬHÂRA. A demon who was a member of the court of Varuna. (Sloka 13, Chapter 9, Saḥbhâ Purâṇa).

PIṬHÂRAKA (PIṬHÂRAKA). A prominent serpent born in the family of Kâśyapa. This was burnt to death in the Sarpastra of Janamejaya. (Sloka 15, Chapter 57, Ādī Purâṇa).

PIṬRA (S). Piṭras are a set of demigod. From Manu-purâṇa, son of Brahmâ, were born the Saptarâja like Marici and they in turn created the Piṭras. Besides Marici and his set many others like Virât Pûrâṇa and Brahmâ have created Piṭras. Some Purânas state that Piṭras are daily creation. Brahmâ in the beginning created three sets of Piṭras with form and four with brightness making thus seven sets. The three sets of bodid piṭras are Agniyâstas, Barhiṣadas and Somâs and the four bright ones are Yama, Ananta, Soma and Anymår (10th Skandha, Devi Bhâgavata).

"Manor hairanyâgarbhânya ye marîjvâdayâbh samâti Teśāratha sarveśān pûrâṇâpitṛghâsa smârtâtya" (Sloka 194, Chapter 6, Manusmrti).

Piṭras (manes) are classified into two types: The Agniyâstas and Barhiṣadas. Of these the Agniyâstas do not perform Yâgas and the Barhiṣadas are those who perform yâgas. Besides these two major divisions they are classified into many other groups as follows:

1. Somasadayâs (S). Virât Pûrâṇa is the creator of these Piṭras. Somasadayâs are the Piṭras of Sâdhayadvas.

2. Agniyâs (S). They are the piṭras of devas.

3. Barhiṣadas. These Piṭras are the creation of the sage Atri. They are the manes of daivatas, dânavas, yakṣas, gandharvas, uragas (serpents), râkṣasas (demons), suvarpas and kinnaras.
4. Samapā (r). They are the sons of the sage Bhṛgu and are the manes of brahmans.

5. Rāmākhā (r). The sage Aṅgiras is the father of these Pitṛs who are the manes of Kṣatriyas.

6. Ājapā (r). These are the sons of the sage Pulastya and are the manes of Vaiśyas.

7. Śukālika (r). Sons of the sage Vasiṣṭha, these Pitṛs are the manes of the Śūdras.

To the seven sages like Marici were born the pitṛs and to the pitṛs were born the devaiaus (devas and asuras) and to the devas were born everything else in this universe, animate and inanimate. (Chapter 3, Manusmṛti).

Performing a Śradhā (offering obsequial oblations to the departed) is just like a yajña. The oblations should be offered in either silver or silver cum copper pots. Vīśvadevas are the guardians of the pitṛs. Therefore the oblations should be offered after worshipping the Vīśvadevas first and then the pitṛs and then Vīśvānu. (See under Śradhā).

PITRĪTHRĀ. The Kumbhikāpaka is one of the lands in the manes that is called Pitṛīthrā. There is a story about this in Devī Bhāgavatā:

Once the sage Durvāsas with his body smeared with ashes and wearing sacred berries went to Pītiśkā muttering “Sīvānākā sārāvātām bhūvanātvān vīriṣāt”. The lord of the Pītiśkāa received him with respect and worshipped him. While they were talking, Durvāsas heard cries of agony from somewhere and the sage then asked Pītiśkā thus: “Oh lord of the pitṛs, I have heard you described as a very virtuous man. How can such painfull cries of distress be heard from here? “Oh, I am dying beaten”, “Oh, I am being killed” “Oh, I am dying” and “Oh, I am being burnt” are some of the woeful shrieks I hear. What is the reason for this?”

Hearing this Dharmarāja said: “Great sage, this is in fact a land of virtuous. Nothing but righteous things are done here. I can tell you from where you hear that wail. The Yamapuri named Sānyamani is nearby. There Yama sits to punish the sinners. Yama is a dispenser of justice and he has got several cruel and mighty servants to carry out his orders. There are eighty-six halls to punish the sinners and of these Kumbhikāpaka is the most horrible. Great sinners like those who insult the gods, fornicators and those who insult their parents are put in this hall and punished. You are now hearing the cries of such sinners from that hall.”

Durvāsas was curious to see the hall and the lord of the Manes gave permission and asked his servants to show Durvāsas the Kumbhikāpakanaka. The hall was found to cahinge into a heaven. The residents were laughing, singing dancing and doing such acts of happiness. The servants of Yama were astonished and they went and reported to Yamarāja this sudden change. Yamarāja was also amazed to hear the news. He immediately rode on his vehicle, the buffalo, to the hall to learn the details personally. He could not find out the cause of the change. The place looked like the Svargeloka of Indra. King Yama sent a messenger to Indra with the news and Indra at first thought that it must be due to some māyā and so came to the place swiftly on his Airāvata. The news spread and one by one Brahmā, Viśnu, the Aṣṭalakṣaṇas (the eight guardians of the quarters) and all such people came to Kumbhikāpakanaka. Nobody could find an explanation for this change and so Mahāviṣṇu accompanied by a few devas went to Kālīśa and reported the matter to Śiva and Śiva said unusually “Oh Viśnu, all this happened because of the greatness of the holy ashes. When the sage Durvāsas bent down to have a good look at the hall, particles of ashes from his body fell into the hall. From that moment onwards Kumbhikāpakanaka became a holy place for the Manes. This hell will henceforth be known as Pitṛīthrā and those pitṛs who bathe in the holy pond there will become virtuous people. Do install on the shore of this pond an idol of mine, a Śivālinga, and by my side the idol of Umā, which is my power in an embodied form.” The devas returned and did as they were directed.

PITKVARITI. See under Brahmadātta I.

PĪVĀRĪ. Wife of Sukabrahmari, son of Vyāsa. Sukā got of Pīvārī four sons named Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprabha, Bhūri and Devarūtra and a daughter named Kīrti. (See under Sukā).

PLAK’SADVPA. One of the seven tīvras (islands). (See under Sapatvīpa).

PLAK’SĀJĀṬA. A tributary of river Ganges. It is believed that this river is an incarnation of Sarasvati and that the sins of those who drink the water of this river will vanish. (Chapter 169, Ādi Parva).

PLAK’SĀPRASRAVANATIRTHA. The place of origin of the river Sarasvati. This is a very holy place. (Skōla 11, Chapter 54, Sāyu Parva).

PLAK’SĀVATARASA. A sacred spot at the place of origin of Yamānā. The ancient people of Bhratā used to worship this place as a gate of Heaven. (Skōla 4, Chapter 90, Vana Parva).

PLAK’SĀVATI. A river. This is referred to as a holy river in the Purāṇas. (Skōla 25, Chapter 165, Anuśāsana Parva).

PLAK’SĀYANA. A Vaiśvākaraṇa (grammarian). His opinion on Vīra agastya (a point in grammar) is described in Taititreya-pāthasāka. POTAKA. A serpent born of the family of Kaśyapa. (Skōla 13, Chapter 103, Udyoga Parva).

PRABHĀU. A brave soldier who fought against the Panḍavas on the side of the Kauravas in the great battle of Kurukṣetra. He showered arrows on Abhimanyu. (Chapter 37, Droṇa Parva).

PRABALAK’A. A Yaka. This Yaka sat in the court of Kubera and worshipped him. (Skōla 17, Chapter 10, Śānti Parva).

PRABHĀ I. A devil. This devil sits in the court of Brahmā worshipping him. (Chapter 11, Śānti Parva).

PRABHĀ II. A celestial maiden of Alakṣāpuri. Once when the sage Aṣṭalakṣaṇa went to Alakṣāpuri this maiden gave a dance performance in his honour. (Skōla 45, Chapter 19, Aṇuśāsana Parva).

PRABHĀ III. Daughter of a dānavas called Svarbhū. She was married to king Aṣvas and Aṣvas begot of her sons like Nāhuṇa and others (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3—6—26).

PRABHĀ IV. One of the two wives of King Purpāra. (4th Skandha, Bhaṅgavata).
PRABHADRĀ. Wife of the son of Karna, King of Aṅga. She is called Bhadrāvati also. (Jaimiti Bhārata, Amarendra Parva, Chapter 63.)

PRABHADRĀKA. A special division of the army of Panḍavāra. This division comprises of Krśtavyas only. Dhṛṣṭadumna and Śiṅkhaṇḍi were its leaders. During the Kurukṣetra battle Śaiva slew many of the Prabhadrākas. The rest of the Prabhadrākas were killed by Aśvatthama while they were sleeping. (Chapter 8, Saupitika Parva; Chater 57, Uluktogha Parva; Chapter 10, Bhīma Parva, Chapter 11, Śaiva Parva.)

PRABHĀKARA. I. A serpent born of the race of Kāśyapa. (Skta 15, Chapter 33, Ādi Parva.)

PRABHĀKARA II. A great sāga born of the race of Atri. This sage married the ten daughters of Gṛhūḍi born of Raudrāśva (Bhadṛṣṭa) of the family of Pāru. The names of the daughters are Krodha, Sudrā, Maladā, Bhadrā, Malaho, Kalladā, Naladā, Surāsa, Gocapāli and Śrīraśtrakānja. Once when the Sun was in distress while he was being devoured by Rāhu, Sage Prabhākara said ‘Svasti’ to give salvation to the Sun and instantly the Sun came out from Rāhu’s hold and shone brightly as before. It was a result of this virtuous deed that the sage got the name Prabhākara. By his great knowledge and wisdom he kept glowing the fame of Arrukla earned by generations. Sage Prabhākara conducted a Yāga and on the occasion the devas presented him with great wealth and ten sons (Harvarman, I, 81-8, 17).

PRABHĀKARA III. The sixth division of the land of Kṛṣṇapura. (Skta 3, Chapter 12, Bhīma Parva.)

PRABHĀKARANIAI. The first son of Cīrāvīsana, king of Manjupura. Cīrāvīsana who was without a son for a long time did penance for obtaining a son. Śiva was pleased with his penance and he blessed him and assured him of a son soon. (Skta 29, Chapter 214, Ādi Parva.)

PRABHĀKARANII. A king. He performed Śiva-worship for ten thousand years and attained Ṛgpaśakāvā. The name of his son was Purāna. (Skta Parāna, 41, 13.)

PRABHĀKARANIAII. A Krśtavya king. Once this king killed a deer while it was breastfeeding its child and by a curse of the mother-deer Prabhākaranii had to live as a tiger for a hundred years. When the period of the curse was coming to an end, the tiger heard the advice of a cow called Nandā and got himself transformed into his original form of the king. (Chapter 18, Śrīši Khaṇḍa, Padra, Purāna.)

PRABHĀNU. A son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa of his wife Satyābāma. (10th Skanda, Bhāgavata.)

PRABHĀNIIA. A son born to Dharmane's of his wife Prabhā. This Prabhā is considered to be one of the astavams. Prabhā's wife was the sister of Dharmaśat. He had a widely travelled virtuous woman: renowned chastity and great yogic attainments. (Skta 17, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva; Chapter 15, Amā 1, Vīṇa Purāna.)

PRABHĀNI. The sacred place called Prabhāsātīra. This place of Purānic importance is situated in Surāstra on the west coast. This is called Somūscigiri also. Some say that this tirtha from the Purānas are given below:

(i) During the pilgrimage of Arjuna he did penance for a thousand divine years standing on one foot at Prabhā. (Skta 18, Chapter 12, Vana Parva.)

(ii) Agnideva resides in this place. One who bathes in the holy pond there would get the benefit of doing Agniṣṭoma-yajña. (Skta 58, Chapter 82, Vana Parva.)

(iii) Once Yudhiṣṭhira along with his brothers came and did penance here. (Skta 15, Chapter 118, Vana Parva.)

(iv) Prabhāsātīra is dear to Indra. (Skta 7, Chapter 130, Vana Parva.)

(v) Those who bathe in the holy pond in Prabhā are taken to heaven in Vīsūras and they then by songs of praise wake up the celestial maidens there. (Skta 9, Chapter 23, Anūṣāsana Parva.)

(vi) It was at this Prabhāsātīra that the Yādava fought against one another and destroyed themselves. (Skta 10, Chapter 3, Mauṣala Parva.)

(vii) Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balarama merged with the Supreme spirit at this place. (Chapter 4, Mauṣala Parva.)

(viii) The son of sage Śānduṣā was kidnapped by Pāchenajana while the former was bathing at this tirtha. (10th Skanda, Bhāgavata.)

PRABHĀTHA. See under Śrīti.

PRABHĀTHA. Wife of Dharmane. Dharmane begot of her two sons named Pratyūṣa and Prabhā. Both were Vasus. (Skta 17, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva.)

PRABHĀVATI I. A woman who was engaged in penance at the abode of Maṇḍara. One of the batch of monkeys that went to different places in search of Śītā met Prabhāvati. (Skta 4, Chapter 282, Vana Parva.)

PRABHĀVATI ii. The wife of Śīrveṣa. (Skta 8, Chapter 117, Udyoga Parva.)

PRABHĀVATI III. A female follower of Subrahmanya. (Skta 3, Chapter 46, Śa Parva.)

PRABHĀVATI IV. Wife of Cīraśrīa, king of Aṅga. This Prabhāvati was the eldest sister of Ruci, wife of Devavāmśa. (Skta 8, Chapter 42, Anūṣāsana Parva.)

PRABHĀVATI V. Daughter of the demon Vajrānābha. She was married to Pradyumn, son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. There was once a very valiant demon called Vajradāha. He went into the valley of Meru and performed penance to propitiare Prabhā. Prabhā appeared before him and he got from him boon such as strength to conquer and subdue all kings, the secret of leaving the body and entering that of others etc. Empowered with these boons he made Vajranābha purusha his capital. He got a daughter named Prabhāvati. His brother Śurānābha had two daughters named Candramati and Gunavatā. While he was thus living there, he set out on a campaign of victory. He conquered the whole world and then turned his eyes towards Svarga. Going to Indraloka he told this: ‘If, son of Kṛṣṇa, I am also born of Kāśyapa. Your mother Aditi and my mother Diti are both wives of Kasyapprajapati. You ruled over Svarga till this time. Now, let me rule over it for some time,’ Indra was embarrassed by this logical challenge and could not give any reply to him. Kaśyapprajapati was then performing a long Yāga and Indra replied he would find a solution to his demand when their father returned after the Yāga. From that moment onwards Indra started thinking of plans to destroy Vajrānābhha. He went and sought help from Śrī Kṛṣṇa residing in Dwārakā. Kṛṣṇa promised to help him when the time came.
After returning to Devolaka, Indra started planning to kill Vajranabha. Vajranabha was surrounded by sky-scraping fortresses and an army inside was reposed. He, therefore, called the gaily boistering swans of Devolaka to his side and told them thus: "Look here, swan—ladies. You should go to Vajranabha and see Prabhavati and then describe to her the beauty and goodness of Pradyumna. Your description should be such that Prabhavati should fall in love with Pradyumna. After that you should go to Pradyumna and tell him about Prabhavati in a sort manner. On complete your mission you should come and report to me."

Obeying the orders of Indra the swans flew to Vajranabha. They saw Prabhavati in a secluded spot and told her just what they were asked to tell her. Then they flew to the side of Pradyumna and told him about Prabhavati. After successfully completing their mission they flew to Devolaka. The marriage of Prabhavati drew near. The swans went to Prabhavati again and made her request her father to include the performances of a dramatic troupe also in the programme of marriage festivities. Vajranabha agreed and a troupe was invited. The dramatic troupe comprised among others many Yadava soldiers, Sri Krsna, Pradyumna and his brothers, all in disguise. Their performance was marvellous. The performance was superb and even Vajranabha stood amazed at their skill. The troupe was encamped in another palace and treated as royal guests. The companion maid of Prabhavati, Subhikshukhi, united her with Pradyumna during the dark hours of the night and they spent the nights in amorous sports. The daughters of Vajranabha’s brother, Candravati and Gunavati came to know of their marriage and were distressed. On completing their mission they went to Devolaka to find out suitable persons among the Yadavas for them also to enjoy with. Prabhavati introduced them to Gada and Samba both sons of Krsna. The amorous sports of all of them continued freely during the nights.

When things progressed so far, Indra and Krsna persuaded Pradyumna to kill Vajranabha. Pradyumna started a war with Vajranabha and in the great battle that ensued Pradyumna killed Vajranabha. Pradyumna and his brothers then took the demon girls to Dvarka. Pradyumna, Gada and Samba married Prabhavati, Candravati and Gunavati respectively. By this time Kalyanaprapajati returned to Devolaka after his long yaga. (Vishnu Purana, Chapters 91 to 95).

PRABHU. A soldier of Subrahmany. (Skloka 69, Chapter 45, Salya Parva).

PRABUDDHA. A king born of the line of Priyavrata, son of Manu. (4th Skandha, Bhagavata).

PRACANDA. A demon. Pracanda fought against Kirttikeya in the fight between Paramatsava and the Tripuras. (Chapter 1, Gaya Purana).

PRACETAS. The emperor Prthu, had two virtuous sons named Antardhana and Vrdh. Antardhana got a son named Havirdhana of his wife Sikhandini. Dhushan of the race of Agni became the wife of Havirdhana. She got of Havirdhana six sons named Pracinasvaris, Sukra, Gaya, Krsna, Vrdh and Gunas. (Chapter 14, Artha 1, Vrishn Purana). Pracinasvaras had ten sons named Pracetas. They were Prapedas. Daksh was born of the ten Prapedas to Darbha alias Mriika. Therefore he got the name Pracetas. (Skloka 5, Chapter 75, Adi Parva).

PRACINAVITA. Wearing of an upper apparel or sacred thread by Brahmins on the left shoulder and sacred thread by Kshatriyas on the left shoulder and sacred thread by Vaishyas on the right shoulder and sacred thread by Shudras on the right shoulder. Pracina and vice versa is called Pracinavita. It is worn as a necklace it is called Nivitra. (Chapter 2, Skloka 63, Manusytrya).

PRACINABARHIS. A prajapati. (For genealogy see under Prthu).

Prthu got two sons named Antardhana and Vrdh who were very virtuous. A son named Havirdhana was born to Antardhana of his wife Sikhandini. Dhushan born of the family of Agni became the wife of Havirdhana and they got six sons named Pracinasvaris, Sukra, Gaya, Krsna, Vrdh and Gunas. Of these Pracinasvaris became a great Prapar. He carpeted the world with darbha grass with its head turned towards the east and thus got the name (Pracina = east; barha = bed of Kusa grass) Pracinasvaris. He performed great penance and married Savarna, daughter of the oceans. They got ten sons who were called Pracetas and who were all masters of dhanurveda (archery). They all performed penance for ten thousand years lying submerged in water. Brahma persuaded Pracinasvaris to request his sons to refrain from remaining unmarried. Pracinasvaris informed his sons about Brahma’s wish. They sat in meditation in the ocean for ten thousand years as per directions from their father and sang songs in praise of Vigna. Mahavigna was pleased and he gave darshana (vision of god) to them on the surface of the ocean itself with the brilliance of blue lotus. Pracetas went into ecstasy when they saw Brahma coming to them riding on the back of Garuda and they bowed down in great devotion before him. Mahavigna asked them what they wanted and they reported they wanted a boon for the progress and prosperity of the prajapata. Granting them the boon Mahavigna disappeared and the Pracetas went back to their father. (Chapter 14, Artha 1, Vign Purana).

PRACINVAN. A king who was the son of Janamejya and grandson of Purus. His father’s name was Ananta. The kingdom conquered in one day all the countries in the east (prac) and got his name Pracinvan. He got his wife Asmaki a son named Satyayati. (Skloka 12, Chapter 95, Adi Parva). Pracinvan got a son named Manasa. (Chapter 278, Agni Purana).

PRACA. A place of habitation of Puranic fame. (Skloka 58, Chapter 9, Bhish Parva).

PRADATI. Vatsavdeva. (Skloka 32, Chapter 91, Anusa Parva).

PRADIPAKA. A character in Paanchatnra. (See under Paanchatnra).

PRADHANA. An ancient Rajarshi. A learned woman named Sulabha was born in his family and king Janaka conducted scholarly discussions with her. (Skloka 184, Chander 320, Santi Parva).

PRADOJA. The grandson of Dhruva. Puspama, son of Dhruc, begot of his wife Prabhah three sons named Pradosa, Nishta and Vyuja. (Bhagavata, 4th Skandha).

PRADVITI. Wife of Dirghatamas. (See under Dirghatamasa).

PRADYOTA I. Vrs. He was a member of the court of Kubera. (Skloka 15, Chapter 10, Santi Parva).

PRADYOTA II. The first king of the dynasty of Pradyota. He was a son of a king called Sunaka. Pradyota is referred to as Sunakapurva in Vayu Purana.
Kasamba alias Sunaka father of Pradyota was killed by Mlecchas (a barbarous tribe). To avenge the death of his father under the advice of Naraóta decided to conduct a Mleccha Yajña and for that purpose dug a Yajñasanchaila seventeen miles long and seventeen miles wide. The Yajña started and in that Yajña different kinds of Mlecchas were burnt to death. From then onwards Pradyumna got the name ‘Mleccha-bhanga’ (killer of Mlecchas). (Bhavinya Purāṇa).

PRADYUMNA.

1) General information. A son born to Śrī Krṣṇa of his wife Rukmīṇī, Pradyumna was the rebirth of Kāma-deva. (For genealogy see under Krṣṇa).

2) Birth. It was at the time when Kāmadeva and Raitdevi were living together that Pārvatī, daughter of Himavān, started her penance to get Śiva as her husband. It was a need of the devas to get a son of Śiva to kill the fierce demon Tārakāsura. The devas employed Kāmadeva to create feelings of love in the ascetic Śiva and make him marry Pārvatī. Taking instructions from Indra, Kāmadeva took aim at Śiva with his bow and arrow. Śiva was then in deep meditation and Kāmadeva broke his concentration and Śiva got angry. He opened his third eye and burnt Kāmadeva to death.

Grief-stricken by the death of her husband Raitdevi performed penance near the Himalayas to propitiate Mahādevī. Mahādevī appeared before her and consoled her thus: “Little girl, Kāmadeva would be reborn as the son of Śrī Krṣṇa of Rukmīṇī. He would then be named Pradyumna. The devas have cursed Śambara the leader of the asuras, during the battle between the demons and the demi-gods that (Śambara) would be killed by Pradyumna. So Śambara is now searching for the infant which is a rebirth of Kāmadeva. So you abandon your present body and be born again as Māyāvati to be the wife of Śambara. Pradyumna, the reborn Kāmadeva, will kill Śambara and accept you as his wife.” Devī disappeared after saying this.

Obeving the instructions of Mahādevī, Rāti abandoned her life and was born in the world of asuras. She grew up under the name Māyāvati and became the wife of Śambara.

While Śrī Krṣṇa was living as the chief of Dvārakā his first wife Rukmīṇī was yearning for a child. Krṣṇa was deeply moved by the grief of Rukmīṇī and he flew on the back of Garuḍa to Kailāsa to obtain a boon for the birth of a child for her. On the way he alighted in the āśrama of Naraṇārāyaṇa and after obtaining the blessings of the sages there, went to Kailāsa and bowed before Śiva and explained to him the purpose of his visit. Śiva blessed him and said that Kāmadeva who was burnt to death by the fire of his third eye would take birth again as the son of Rukmīṇī. Krṣṇa returned to Dvārakā well-pleased. Rukmīṇī became pregnant and gave birth to Pradyumna, a rebirth of Kāmadeva. The demon Śambara knew of this birth and coming to Dvārakā in an invisible form carried away the infant when it was seven days old.

The demon threw the child into the ocean and a great fish swallowed it. The fishermen of the country of Śambara caught this fish and following the custom prevalent there presented the king with the fish. Śambara called his wife Māyāvati and asked her to take the fish and get it cooked. When Māyāvati cut open the fish for cooking she found to her surprise a beautiful child inside it. Even from the first sight of the child Māyāvati had a great liking for it and so she took the child and brought it up as her own child.

When Pradyumna grew into a youth all the charm and beauty of Kāmadeva were found in him. Māyāvati was excited to find a resemblance in him of her lost husband Kāmadeva. One day the great sage Naraóta came that way and calling Māyāvati to his side secretly revealed to her that Pradyumna was the incarnation of Kāmadeva and was thus her lost husband. From that day onwards Māyāvati’s affection for him was gradually changing into one of passionate love he questioned her about it. Māyāvati then told him everything that happened and Pradyumna decided to kill Śambara and take Māyāvati away.

3) War with Śambara. Pradyumna waited for an opportunity to kill Śambara. One day Pradyumna went out in the usual fashion of the king and in the royal flag of the king with an emblem of the figure of a lion emblazoned on it. He dropped it down by one stroke of his arrow. Hearing of this Śambara ordered his sons to kill Pradyumna. The seven sons of Śambara, viz., Atisesa, Citraasa, Vijayaśekha, Śrutasena, Susena, Somasaena, Akkāla, Vikāla, Kumbhaketa, Sudamastra and Kesī, attacked Pradyumna. The devas came in their vāhanas and joined sides with Pradyumna. The army of the demons teased them with various kinds of weapons like javelins, arrows, spears and battle axes. But Pradyumna cut them all by his arrows and cut to pieces all the sons of Śambara. Then Śambara sent an army against him. They were also made to flee by the arrows of Pradyumna. Then Śambara himself came on the scene. The sight became terrible. The continuous flow of arrows made it impossible for even Sun’s rays to reach the earth. Then Śambara started his magical war. But Pradyumna faced that also. Śambara sent phantom lions; but Pradyumna made them immobile. Śambara then turned into a giant taurus, a lion, a reptile and various other monsters. Pradyumna then killed Śambara. Then he rushed to Dvārakā carrying Māyāvati with him. The people of Dvārakā were astounded to see them. Pradyumna went to Śrī Krṣṇa and Rukmīṇī and told them the whole story. They were overjoyed to find them and blessed them.

Aniruddha who married Uruđa the daughter of Bāna was the son of Pradyumna. ( Chapters 103 to 108, 10th Śandha, Bṛhadāvatī).

4) Prabhāvatiṭṭhāgama. Marriage with Prabhāvati. (See under Prabhāvati).

5) Other details.

(1) Pradyumna was born of a part of Sanatkumāra. (Śloka 132, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva).

(2) Pradyumna was one among those who came to Arjuna from Dvārakā with dowry for his marriage with Subhadra. (Śloka 31, Chapter 220, Ādi Parva).

(3) Pradyumna was present for the Rājasya Yājña of Yudhishthira. (Śloka 16, Chapter 94, Shāhā Parva).

(iv) Pradyumna consoled and encouraged the Yādava aruny which stood dumb-founded before the valorous exploits of King Śalva. (Chapter 17, Vana Parva).
(v) Pradyumna fainted during a fierce fight between himself and King Śalva. (Chapter 17, Śloka 22, Vana Parva).
(vi) Pradyumna slew King Śalva in the end. (Chapter 19, Vana Parva).
(vii) Pradyumna means the merging of Bhūtājīla during Pralaya. (Śloka 37, Chapter 340, Śantā Parva).
(vii) Pradyumna fell dead by the beatings of the Bhujas during the manusala fight. (Śloka 33, Chapter 5, Mauṣala Parva).
(ix) After his death Pradyumna took the form of Sānaktumāra. (Śloka 13, Chapter 5, Svarga-rūpa Parva).

PRĀGAI. A preceptor. He has expressed his views on Yajñas in the book Sāṅkhāyana Brāhmaṇa. Prāgai describes what should be done in case any of the Karmas is left out by mistake during a Yajña. (Sāṅkhāyana Brāhmaṇa).

PRĀGHAŚA. I. A rākṣas (demoness). She was one among the several leading demonesses who sat around Śiśu in Lanka to coax him into accepting Rāvana as her husband. An ill-tempered woman, this demoness tried several methods to win Śiśu to the side of Rāvana. (Rāṣṭra 25, Sundara Kīrti, Vaiśampāyana).

PRĀGHAŚA II. A female follower of Subrahmanya. (Śloka 16, Chapter 46, Śalya Parva).

PRĀGHAŚA (S). A tribe of rākṣasas (demons). (Chapter 285, Vana Parva).

PRĀGHOŚA. A son of Śṛṭ Kṛṣṇa. (10th Skanda, Bhāgavata).

PRĀGJYOṬIṢA. The palace of Narākṣura. Narākṣura was known as Bhūmikṣura also. After the death of this asura Bhagadatta became King there. After Bhagadatta Vajradda became ruler there. Prāgjyotaś was an invincible fortress of the asuras. (Chapter 23, Verses 28, Śabhā Parva; Chapter 46, Udyoga Parva and Chapter 73, Adbhuta Parva).

PRĀHĀSA I. A serpent born of the family of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. This serpent was burnt to death at the Śaptaśatra of Janamejaya. (Śloka 16, Chapter 57, Adi Parva).

PRĀHĀSA II. A soldier of Subrahmanya. (Śloka 68, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PRĀHĀSTA. A minister of Rāvana.
   The demon Suṣeṣa got of his wife Devavati three sons named Mālayāvata, Sumāl and Māl. Of these Sumāl got of his wife Ketumatt ten sons named Prāhāsta, Apanama, Viṣṇu, Kālakumāra, Bhūrnaka, Ćantā, Upārava, Sānkhāra, Prāvakā and Bākṣakara and four daughters named Vekā, Puspatēla, Kukkūra and Kumbhīna. Most of the sons were the ministers of Rāvana.

2) Other details.
   (i) Prāhāsta was the chief minister of Rāvana. (Uttara Rāmāyana).
   (ii) In the Rāma-Rāvana battle Prāhāsta fought against Vīśnūsena and was killed by the latter. (Śloka 4, Chapter 286, Vana Parva).

PRAHETI. I. A demon. Once Brahmā, the creator, became hungry and in his anger he produced some able preceptors he instructed that the boy should never mutter ‘Nārāyana ya namah’ but should on the other hand chant the name of Mahāviṣṇu. Next Prahlāda, he wiped out the name of Nārāyaṇa from the land altogether. Prahlāda stayed in the house of the preceptor and studied his lessons. One day Prahlāda went to see his father along with his preceptor. Hiranyakaśipu was drunk then Prahlāda went and prostrated before his father and Hiranyakaśipu lifting the boy up from the ground asked him what he knew. He told him all the good things he had learned so far and Prahlāda quickly repeated thus:—"I bow down to Mahāviṣṇu, the root cause of all things seen and unseen, the protector of this visible universe, who is without beginning, centre and end and who is without origin, growth and decay."

The words of Prahlāda struck his father like a thunderbolt. With his lips trembling with anger Hiranyakasipu stared with his blood-red eyes at the preceptor. The frightened Guru again and again submitted that he had never taught him any of the kind the boy had repeated before his father. Then who must have taught him those things the emperor enquired. Then Prahlāda said that all those things were put into his mind by Mahāviṣṇu himself. A hot discussion then took place between Prahlāda and his father and in the end Hiranyakasipu ordered the preceptor to take away Prahlāda and make another earnest attempt to correct him and bring him round to the emperor’s liking. Prahlāda stayed for another period with the Guru serving him with devotion and studying well. After a long time Prahlāda was again with Hiranyakasipu and the latter sat meditating on Mahāviṣṇu and the pretender Hiranyakasipu said to him:—”O dāityas, Mahāviṣṇu resides in your weapons, in you all and in me also. Since that is the real truth your weapons will not injure me.” The dāityas struck him hard with their weapons but Prahlāda did not feel pain at all. Hiranyakasipu then sent thousands of poisonous serpents led by great ones like Takṣaka. When they started threatening their venomous fangs into his body, Prahlāda stood fearlessly meditating on Mahāviṣṇu and he did not even feel the bites. On the other hand the fangs of the serpents dropped out from their mouths and the gems on the heads of the big ones burst out and all the snakes felt sorry for their action.

Hiranyakasipu then sent the asādīgģajas (the eight elephants who bear the burden of this earth). Prahlāda The huge animals bigger than the biggest of mountains threw the boy to the ground and struck him with their long and pointed tusks. Prahlāda lay meditating on Mahāviṣṇu and the tusks that hit the body of Prahlāda were broken to bits. Prahlāda was then thrown into a pit of fire. But the wind-blown ferocious fire was not able to burn him and as he lay in the firepit meditating on Mahāviṣṇu he felt he was lying on a bed of lilies.

When things progressed so far the astonished priests of the palace advised the emperor to put a stop to torturing Prahlāda. Their consoling words alleviated his rage and he sent Prahlāda again to the Guru for another period of study. He sent the latter to Greece for his studies. Whenever he got leisure he taught the other inmates of the āśrama lessons in Viṣṇumārga. Hiranyakasipu was informed of this and obeying orders from him the asuras gave poison to Prahlāda. That too was of no avail. The royal priests got angry and they created a devil as fierce as the flames of fire. The devil with fifty thunders on earth dashed towards Prahlāda and hit him on his breast with its spike. The spike broke into pieces and the devil turning back cursed the priests. Then the dāityarāja took him to the top of a mountain twenty-four miles high and pushed him down from there. The boy fell down meditating on Mahāviṣṇu and the goddess of earth received him with extended bands and prevented him from touching the ground. The father, Hiranyakasipu, became furious and sent Sambāra-Sura to kill his son. Sambāra tried many magical attacks. Prahlāda without any ill-feeling towards Sambāra sat meditating on Mahāviṣṇu and the pretender Hiranyakasipu sent his Sudārṇaka wheel against the demon and he was forced to retreat. Then by orders from Hiranyakasipu the wind god entered the body of Prahlāda. Prahlāda knew it and he sat meditating on Viṣṇu and the latter entering the body of Prahlāda drank the wind inside him. When Hiranyakasipu was defeated in all his attempts to kill Prahlāda he sent his son again to his Guru. Then the preceptor taught him everything that was needed for a king and also the science of justice written by Sukrācārya. When Prahlāda completed his education and the Guru felt the boy had become humble he took him back to Hiranyakasipu.

Once again Hiranyakasipu entered into a discussion on god with his son and dissatisfied with his continued devotion to Viṣṇu decided again to kill his son. He was thrown into the ocean bound hand and foot. With every movement of Prahlāda the ocean became turbulent and water rose on all sides. There was a duel between earth and ocean. Hiranyakasipu called the dāityas to his side and said:—"Oh dāityas, bring all the mountains on earth and create a barrier round the ocean so that my wicked son cannot get out of the ocean. Fire does not kill this boy; he is not wounded by any of the weapons; wind, poison, devils, magic, falls from heights and even the dīggajas could not kill him. So let him remain in water for thousands of years together and then he will die." The dāityas and dānavas brought mountains and dropped them over Prahlāda lying inside the ocean. The mountains lay spread over thousands of miles. Lying thus in the ocean the prince boy prayed to Mahāviṣṇu and the latter appeared before him and granted him boon. Escaping from the earth Hiranyakasipu went to his father and prostrated before him. Hiranyakasipu was astounded to see him alive and taking him in his arms embraced him and with tears rolling down his cheeks for having tortured him so far asked him "My son, you are still alive, are you not?" After that he started treating him as his son. (Chapter 20, Amśā 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

B) The incarnation of Narāśīvam. But as days went by Hiranyakasipu got wild again. He could not bear his son’s increasing devotion to Viṣṇu. He hated to hear Prahlāda’s chanting of Viṣṇu’s name and so one day... while Prahlada was repeating his chantsings of Visnu's name Hiranyakasipu jumped up from his seat with sword in his hand. (7th Skandha, Bhagvad Gita, 7) Prahlada very calmly replied that Visnu was present everywhere even in stones, trees or the pillars of the palace. Hiranyakasipu in uncontrollable rage struck the nearest pillar with his sword. Then to the shocking surprise of Hiranyakasipu Mahavaishnu in the form of a fierce man-lion (Narasimha) jumped out from the pillar. The figure was terrifying to behold. It had four eyes, a dagger-like tongue with blood oozing from it, shaggy neck with trembling eyebrows, two teeth on each side curved like the crescent moon, a black face inside a cave-like heap of manes, hairs strong and pointed like diamond needles, nails white and cup-like and a body as bright and brilliant as a thousand crescent moons. Only Prahlada could stand before the figure and look at it.

The man-lion jumped on the body of Hiranyakasipu and tearing open the belly of Hiranyakasipu took the bloody intestines out and wearing it round his neck performed a naked dance. Everything happened in no time and the Narasimha changing into the form of Mahavaishnu destroyed Prahlada and then disappeared.

When Hiranyakasipu was killed Prahlada was crowned as emperor of the demons in Patala. At that time, once Cyavana the tusk of the Bhrigu, went to Nigakulevasarita to bathe in the Narmadha. He saw Mahadev there. When he entered the waters of the river a serpent Kekarakotha by name bit him and took him to Patala. Cyavana meditating on Visnu when he was bitten by the serpent and so he was not affected by the poison of the serpent. He therefore, roamed about in Patala accepting the hospitality of the serpent maidens. Travelling thus he reached the land of the Danavas. He was worshipped by the danayyas there and Prahlada finding an ascetic of great saintliness honouring and worshipping by his people received him with respect and worshipped him and enquired about him. Cyavana said :"I came today to see Nigakulevasa and bathe in the Narmadha river. But as soon as I entered the river I was caught by a serpent and was brought to Patala. I was thus able to see you." Hearing the words of Cyavana the lord of the danayyas said :"Oh, Bhriguwans, which are the same tirthas you worship here which are in the heavens and which all in Patala? Please do enlighten us." Cyavana replied ;"Mighty king, Naimisa is the best of all tirthas on earth, Puksara in the heavens and Cakravirata in Patala."

The daiya emperor turned to the danasvas and said "Make all preparations immediately. We must go to earth to bathe in the holy tirtha, Naimisa. We can then see Pundarakkasa (lions-eyed). Visnu sitting there as Pitambara (robbed in yellow)." Hearing this danaivas with heavy equipments started from Patala with their king to the earth.

All the mighty danasvas reached the forest of Naimisa and after bathing in the holy pond there went for hunting. During their wanderings they found the river Sarasvatii, flowing with many abodes. In the midst of the same they saw a pine tree covered with arrows. The arrows were sticking to it one above another. The arrows looked like serpents and the gruesome sight roused Prahlada's anger. Near that tree sat two ascetics wearing the hide of Krsna deer and matted hair on their heads. By their side were two divine bows, Sringa and Arjuna with two never-empty quivers. Prahlada mixed with them for two fake ascetics and therefore questioned them thus :"Why are you thus falsely trading on virousness? What connection is there between matted hair and penance and weapons of such supreme quality?" Then one of the two, Narayana, said: "King of daiyas, why do you think like that? If one is powerful whatever one does will be right." Prahlada jerked and said: "When I, who have fixed limits for virtue and righteousness, am here what power can you wield?" Narayana replied: "Oh, king, our ability is really supreme. There is nobody in the three worlds to conquer us in a fight." Prahlada got furious on hearing the boasting of the rsi and took a vow thus immediately: "I will fight and win against Narayana. Then the great Prahlada binding a peacock feather to his bow and made a thundering noise with it. At once Nara took his Ajagava bow and showered arrows on Prahlada with it. But Prahlada broke them all with his gold-plated matchless arrows. Nara got angry when he found all his arrows broken to pieces so easily by Prahlada and he cast unknown kinds of arrows in quick succession. But the daisy king remained with astonishing rapidity. For one arrow of Nara the daisy sent two and the fight became grim. Nara covered the whole world above with arrows and the daisy emperor smashed them all to pieces by his gold-plated ones.

The fight then turned to one with divine weapons. The daisy chief took the divine Brahmastra and then Nara took the fierce Narayanasstra. They met in the air and fell down powerless. When his Brahmastra got fused Prahlada got wild with anger and taking a mace jumped out of his chariot and rushed at Nara. When Narayana saw the daisy chief rushing towards Nara with his mace he asked Nara to step aside and face the demon himself. Prahlada then attacked Narayana and hit him with the lance. Nara fell to the earth. The daisy chief went and picked him up. When he came near to Narayana, Narayana asked Prahlada: "Is this the reason why you came here to conquer me?" Prahlada replied: "We were the sons of Dharmadeva who were invincible by weapons. They could be won over only by devotion. Hearing that Prahlada returned to Patala and entrusting the administration of his kingdom to his cousin Andhaka, son of Hiranyaksha. Prahlada returned to Badrakarama and erecting an akshara there started a performance to propitiate Narayana. When Narayana appeared before him Prahlada requested to be pardoned for fighting against them. They pardoned him and blessed him and Prahlada returned to Patala. Even after his return Prahlada did not take back the administration from Andhaka. He constructed an Akrama away from the palace and lived there performing penance. He spent many years there as an advisor to the asura Kings. (Chapters 7 and 8, Vamana Purana)."

B) Blessings of Suka. Andhaka, son of Hiranyaksha, ruled over the empire only for a short time. At that time there was a fight between the asuras and the devas in which the asuras were defeated. After a truce with the devas Bali, son of Virocana, and grandson of Prahlāda was crowned the emperor of the asuras. Prahlāda then went to the mountain Gandhamādāna and started doing penance to increase his personal power. Bali ruled as an antagonist of the devas and so very soon a grisly battle ensued between the devas and the asuras and Mahāviśvavāma defeated them. They fled from their land and took refuge under their preceptor Sukrācārya. Sukra then told them thus: "You remain here without fear. I shall protect you by my power of mantra and medicine. I shall devolve my cogent brilliance to your advantage. It is enough if you remain here with full confidence in me."

The devas understood all these plans of the daiyās through them and they met in conference to consider their future plans. They knew that Sukrācārya was very powerful and if the daiyās attacked them with the help of Sukrācārya the defeat of the devas was sure. They feared that they might even be compelled to flee from Svargalokā. How could the daiyās under the shield of the mighty Sukra be destroyed? That was the worrying thought of the devas. They were thus worried about this when Sukrācārya went to do penance for attaining more power. The daiyās awaited the return of their acārya. In the meantime they sent Prahlāda who was, though a daiya, a friend of the devas to talk peace terms with the devas. The messenger was successful and the devas agreed to a no-war treaty. Prahlāda returned triumphant.

Sukra did severe penance to propitiate Siva and Siva appeared before Sukrācārya and when he knew that the purpose of Sukra was to defeat the devas he was a bit embarrassed. So he told him thus: "Oh sage Sukra, you take a vow and do penance with your head downwards over smoky incense for a thousand years. You will then attain power and happiness as you desire." In Sukra's thought: Siva might not be able to complete the penance and so not succeed in his plan of destroying the devas. But Sukra started the penance in right earnest.

The devas were frightened when they knew the deceit of the daiyās and the strategy of their preceptor. They decided to go to war with the daiyās immediately. The daiyās were taken by surprise. The devas thought if they fought without a help of their guru defest to them was sure. So they ran to the mother of Sukra and sought her help. The devas rebelled against Sukra's mother and she invoked the goddess of sleep and put the devas into deep slumber. Mahāviśvavāma stealthily carried away Indra lying asleep. Indra persuaded Mahāviśvavāma to kill Sukra's mother and then cut off the head of Sukra's mother by the divine discus. Sudarṣaṇa, Bṛhaumaharsi, father of Sukra, was angry at that arrogant and cruel deed of Mahāviśvavāma and cursed him saying that he would be born on earth several times as man. After that he brought to life by sprinkling water his wife lying dead with her head severed from her body. Knowing well the havoc that would be created when Sukra came back after his penance had been completed he sent his daughter Jayanti to destroy the penance of Sukra. She went in the guise of a demon girl to serve Sukrācārya. In the meantime at the request of Indra Bhīṣapati took the form of Sukrācārya and presented himself before the daiyās. The daiyās believed him to be their real guru Sukra and were pleased.

Ten years went by and one day Sukrācārya remembering the old creature left Jayanti and went to his court in the demon land. Bhīṣapati had by that time returned to devaloka fully satisfied with his mission. The devas not knowing that Sukra had returned started for a war with the daiyās. Sukra when he came back went wild when he knew that his people had been worshipping Bhīṣapati for ten years. The angered preceptor was not to be pacified by any amount of arguments and so they sent Prahlāda to Sukrācārya and Prahlāda pleaded for controlling his anger and Sukra did so.

Sukra then saw with his divine vision the maneuverings in mind of the devas and was convinced that a war with the devas at that juncture would be an utter failure. So he advised the daiyās to desist from war and assured them that during the period of Sāvani Maṇi to come, emperor Bali would become all-powerful and he would then fight and win the devas. Prahlāda returned and told the asuras the message of Sukrācārya. But the daiyās were not satisfied and compelled Prahlāda to go to war with the devas. At last Prahlāda was forced to agree and a fierce deva-deva battle ensued. Prahlāda met Indra in a single combat and it prolonged for a hundred years. In the end Prahlāda won. Indra prayed to the goddess and fearing that she might destroy the demon world, Prahlāda also prayed to her. The devil was pleased with both of them and they pacified them both and each went back to his own place.

(4th Skandha, Devī Bhāgavatī)

(ii) Once there was a fight between Prahlāda and Kāla. (Bhāgavata Parva, Chapter 59)
(iii) Once Uṣanas sang in honour of Prahlāda. (Sloka 50, Chapter 139, Sānti Parva)
(iv) Once Prahlāda taught Indra the rules of good conduct. (Sloka 29, Chapter 124, Śānti Parva)
(v) Once Prahlāda learnt the importance of Ājagaraṇi from a sage. (Chapter 175, Śānti Parva).
(vi) During the reign of emperor Prthu when the goddess of earth (Bhūmidevi) was milked, the asuras used Prahlāda as the calf to milk madaya (wine) from her. (4th Skandha, Bhāgavatī)
(vii) Prahlāda sits in the court of Varuṇa and worships him. (Sloka 12, Chapter 9, Śābhā Parva)
(viii) Prahlāda once went to the court of Brahmā to worship him. (Sloka 19, Chapter 11, Śābhā Parva)
(ix) Prahlāda acted as mediator in the controversy between Virocana and Sudhanvā. (See under Sudhanvā.)

(For knowing more details about Prahlāda please see under Virocana and Bali.)

PRAHLĀDA II. A Kṣatriya King born of the family of Bṛha. This King belonged to the line of kings under the demon king Śalabha. (Sloka 30, Chapter 57, Adi Parva).

PRAHLĀDA III. A serpent. This serpent sits in the court of Varuṇa and worships him. (Sloka 10, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PRAHLĀDA IV. A place of human habitation of Purāṇic fame. (Sloka 46, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).
PRAHUTA. A great yajña.

Manusmṛti states that respecting each of the following five is considered as a yajña in itself:—A devata, a guest, servants, parents, and the self. Of these the first is called Abhuta, second, bhuța, third, prahața, fourth brāhmaṇabhuta and fifth, prāśita. (Stolka 72, 73, Chapter 3, Manusmṛti).

PRAJĀGARĀ. A celestial lady. Once when Arjuna went to Indra this celestial maiden gave performance in dance at the request of Indra. (Stolka 30, Chapter 43, Vana Parva).

PRAJĀGARAPARVA. A sub-division of Udyoga Parva of Mahābhārata. This comprises chapters 33 to 40 of Udyoga Parva.

PRAJĀNGHA. A rakṣasa (demon) of the party of Rāvana. This demon was killed by Abgada. (Sarga 76, Yuddha Kanda, Valmiki Rāmāyana).

PRAJĀPATI(S). Creators of the world. With a view to making creation easy Brahmacāra at first created twentyone Prajāpatis (creators). They are Brahmacāra, Rudra, Manu, Dakṣa, Bṛhari, Dharma, Tapā, Yama Marici, Angaśa, Ātri, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Vasistha, Parasumēthi, Śūrya, Candra, Kardama, Kruco and Vikrata. (Chapter 384, Śānti Parva 50, Chapter 3, Manusmṛti).

PRAJĀPATIVEDI. This is a holy place situated in the middle of four sacred places in Kurukṣetra named Tarantuka, Aranataka, Paratuarāmukā and Macedrana. This place is called the Utāra (north) vedī of Prajāpati also. Besides this, four other places, Prajāpatispuri (with Prajāga), Kambala, Asvatarā and Bhojavati are also called Prājāpatisvedi. The aforesaid five sacred places are called Brahmacāre also. (Chapter 53, Salya Parva; Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

PRAJĀPATYA. A kind of marriage.

Sahoubāna caratāt dharmamāni vacanubhāśya ca
Kanyakapradānamabhyaracaya
Prajāpatai tvādhi smrtah (Sarga 19, Chapter 3, Manusmṛti).

Giving in marriage to a brahmācāri one’s daughter after inviting him to his house and worshipping him is called Prajāpatya.

PRAKALA. A serpent born of the family of Vāsuki. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Chapter 57, Adi Parva).

PRAKASA. A benemthin form of the family of Bṛhari. He was the son of Tamas who belonged to the race of Gṛtumasana. (Stolka 63, Chapter 30, Anusāsana Parva).

PRAKKOSALA. The place east of Kosala. Saubadēva conquered this place situated in Daksinābhadrā (Stolka 13, Chapter 31, Subhā Parva).

PRAKRTA. A Yaksha. He became very rich within twelve days. (Stolka 19, Chapter 194, Vana Parva).

PRAKRITI. PURUSA. Prakriti (matter) and Purusa (spirit) are two basic factors essential for production of the Prapāchaka (the visible world which is the scene of manifold action) as man and woman are for the production of progeny. From Purusa (male), Prakriti (female) originated and then they together created the Prapāchaka. The Vedas and Purūṇas make statements everywhere regarding Prakriti and Purusa and three of the most important ones are given below:

1) "Pra" means 'principal' and 'Kṛ' means 'creation'. Therefore the word is meant to convey the meaning 'one that is the principal factor for creation'. 'Pra' means 'sāttvic', 'Kṛ' means 'rājasic' and 'a' means 'tāmasic' and the word 'Prakṛti' thus conveys the power of the three gunas'. 'Pra' means 'before' and 'Kṛ' means creation and so Prakṛti means that which existed before creation.

Before creation Prakṛti lay merged with the Supreme Spirit without separate existence. But when the desire for creation was aroused, this Supreme Spirit divided itself into Prakṛti and Puruṣa. Then the right half becoming Puruṣa and the left half Prakṛti. Even though they are thus two yojndras (kings among sages), they see themselves as merged with the eternal One like fire and heat and assert the truth Sarvam Brahmanyam (everything is Brahma, the Supreme Spirit).

It was this basic Prakṛti that took forms as the five goddesses, Durgā, Lakṣmī, Sarasvatī, Śāvitrī and Rubhā. (Sāth Skandha 1, Devi Bhāgavata Purāṇa 2.) Prakṛti is the vital sentient Truth that sets in action the entire Prapāchaka. This Puruṣa is Supreme among the Supreme, beyond human comprehension, without form, colour, name, without origin, growth, change or end, residing in himself and that which can only be imagined to exist. This puruṣa has got two different forms, the visible and the invisible and also a third imaginary one, time. The sages call Puruṣa the Subtle prakṛti (The subtle all-pervading spirit, the supreme soul). This Sūkimaprapakṛti which cannot be measured by any unit of measure, is not attached to anything, is imperishable, is without decrepitude, is immovable and is without the senses of sound, touch smell or form. This Prakṛti endowed with the three gunas, without beginning and end is eternal, the root cause of this Prapāchaka. This Prakṛti pervaded over Prapāchaka from the beginning of the great Deluge to the beginning of creation. Brahmacāriniun who were great seers and who knew the truth of the Vedas speak about Prakṛti thus: "There was no night or day then, neither the earth nor the sky, neither light nor darkness. There was nothing but this. There was only Prakṛti merged in which were Prakṛti and Puruṣa, a brahmā which could not be understood by any of the five senses nor by intelligence. It was from the supreme being of Viṣṇu that the two forms Prakṛti and Puruṣa originated. These two were separated from Viṣṇu at the time of the great deluge and again joined together at the time of creation. The time of Viṣṇu at which this occurred was termed Time. During the last great deluge this visible Prapāchaka merged with it and so, this deluge was called Prakṛtaprapālaya. Time is eternal, having no end and so the process of Śrīti, Śhīti and Sannāhāra (creation, existence and destruction) continued without any interruption.

After that, during Prajāya (deluge), Prakṛti and Puruṣa stood apart due to equality of the gunas, Satya, Rajas and Tamas in Prakṛti. Viṣṇu in the form of Time starts the work to join them both together. Then when the time of creation came Viṣṇu, the Supreme Being, the supreme soul, the god of all living beings, omnipresent and omnipotent by his will entered the emotionless Puruṣa and emotional Prakṛti and created sensations in him. Smell is the sensation which created the substance by its nearness to it. Just like that Viṣṇu by his very presence near them created disturbances in them. It is Viṣṇu, the best of Puruṣas, who acts as Prakṛti which can disturb and which can be disturbed, which exists in states of contraction and expansion. It is Visnu, the god of the gods, who exists in forms of Sūkṣma and Sūkṣma and as the great tattva and as the deus like Brahmā. The Mahātattva originated from Prakṛti, which was existing as emotionless due to the equalisation of the three guṇas, when at the time of creation Visnu, Truth in the form of Kṣetrajña (knower), merged with Prakṛti. The Mahātattva in its three forms, Sattva, Rajas and Tamas lay enveloped by Prakṛti just as a seed is covered by its husk. From this Mahātattva originated the three egos, Vaikārikā, Tājas and Tāması, the cause of the PāCSahājas. Because that ego contained the three guṇas it became the cause of the origin of the bhūtas (elements) and indriyas (senses). Ego pervaded the Mahātattva just as the Mahātattva pervaded (Aṣṭāda, Chapter 2, Visnu Purāṇa).

1) In the beginning during the Deluge the world was all water. Then Śiva tore open his thigh and dropped a drop of blood in the water. It became a huge egg. He broke it and from it came out Puruṣa and from Puruṣa he made Prakṛti for the creation of the Prapātana. These two, Prakṛti and Puruṣa, created the ājñatapati and they in turn created the prajās. Puruṣa seeing the vast creation going on due to his action became arrogant and Śiva chopped off his head. Śiva became repentant of his hasty deed later. To atone for his sin he took the skull in his hand and vowed that he would carry a skull in his hand and that he would cremate in cremation grounds. The two halves of the great egg became Ākāśa and bhūmi (earth and sky). (Tāranga 2, Kāthāprākṛtamā, Kṛṣṇa Purāṇa).

RALAMBA I. A notorious dānava born to Kālyapa-ājñatapati of his wife Danu (Siśka 29, Chapter 65, Adi Purāṇa).

RALAMBA II. An asura (demon). He attacked Śri Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma and was killed by Balarāma. (10th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

RALAYA (Destruction). Pralaya is of four kinds. The first is Brahmāparyaya. This is the destruction going on daily for all animate and inanimate objects born on earth. The second is Brahmāprasrālaya or naṁmitakaprayālaya. The third is Prakṛtpralaya. This is the great deluge made by prakṛti (nature) at the end of a thousand Caturyugas (four yugas). The fourth is Ayantikaprayālaya. This is the union of the soul with the Supreme Being due to Jñāna. The above the Brahmāparyaya, or naṁmitakaprayālaya happens at the end of a Kalpa or a day of Brahmā or a thousand yugas. The nature of this pralaya is as follows: At the end of a thousand yugas the world will look famished. Then there will be excessive drought for a hundred years together and everything in this world would be destroyed then. Then Mahāvisuddha is lord of everything in this universe, would present himself in the seven big rays of the Sun and drink to emptiness all the waters of all the three worlds, earth, ocean and pātāla. Then by the divine power of Mahāvisuddha the seven rays of the Sun which had grown fat by drinking this water would become seven separate Suns. These Suns would burn all the three worlds including Pātāla. Then the earth would look like the back of a tortoise (tortoishunda). That time Rudra, equal in brilliance to Kālāgni, would from beneath burn the pātāla sending breaths from Adisesa. After pātāla Kālāgnirudra would burn the earth and then the heavens. Because of this all the worlds would look like globes of fire. Then the inhabitants of these worlds would go to Mahābhūta, unable to bear the heat and from there to Janaloka. Thus Visnu in the form of Rudra would destroy everything.

Then from the face of Visnu would originate clouds and lightning in different forms. These clouds would rain incessantly for a hundred years and destroy the fire prevailing everywhere. When the rains become unbearable Vāyu would enshroud upon the seas of the Saptarṣi in the ocean and by the breath of Visnu destroy all the clouds. At that time Visnu, lord of all, would lie on the back of Adisesa in that one big ocean drinking vāyu (air). Visnu will lie thus for a period of a Kalpa in yogic slumber meditating on Vaṣudeva taking the name Madhusūdana and form of Brahmā praised by the Siddhasūrya inside the ocean. After that he would take the form of Brahmā and start creation.

In Prakṛtpralaya this whole universe would lie in extinction for a period of two parārddha. One parārddha is 10000000000000 years (one followed by seventeen zeroes) and so the period of a prakṛtpralaya is double the above number of years. The world would then come into existence, become arrogant and Śiva would break out and burn away everything in this world from Mahātattva to Viśesa. Then prompted by the desire of Visnu, pratisākṣa (back into nature) would occur. Then Jala (water) would absorb the guṇas of bhūmi like gandha (smell) and when the qualities of the earth are thus absorbed the earth would merge with pralaya. Jala is rāṣṭramahādī. Agni will absorb the rasa of jala and jala would be kindled. The guṇa of Agni is form and is in the form of Sun. Vāyu would absorb it and Agni would be destroyed. Vāyu would then become powerful and shake the world. The quality of Vāyu is touch and the ether would absorb that guṇa of Vāyu and Vāyu would be destroyed. The quality of ether is sound and it would be absorbed by the elements. If the elements are absorbed one by one the earth would merge into water (Jala) and Jala in Agni, and Agni in Vāyu and Vāyu in ether and ether in Ahākāra (ego). Ahākāra would merge in Mahātattva. This Mahātattva would be absorbed by Prakṛti. Prakṛti has got two forms: Vyākta and Avyākta (Manifest and Un-manifest). The Vyākta would merge with Avyākta. Pātāla is single, pure and without decay. But he is also part of Paramātman (the supreme Being). So Prakṛti and Pātāla would both merge into the supreme Being. There are no distinctions, fabrications in Paramātman, the lord of all. It is only an existence. It is such a Paramātman that should be known and which itself is knowledge, The Paramātman is beyond the Ātma (soul). It is in such an indescribable Paramātman that all are dissolved during a Prakṛtpralaya. (Chapter 368, Agni Purāṇa).

PRAMADA. A son of Vasiṣṭha. He was one of the Saptarṣi of Uttama Manvantara. (1st Skandha, Bhāgavata).

PRAMADVĀRA. Wife of Ruru.

1) Birth. Pramadvāra was the daughter of the nymph Menakā born of the Gandharva Vāyuvāsu. As soon as the child was born, Menakā threw the child into the forest and left for Devaloka.
Sthílakása, a sage who was engaged in penance in that forest in a hermitage heard the cry of a child and came out of his āśrama. On seeing a new-born child lying unclaimed and uncared for, he took the child to his āśrama and named her Pramadvarā and brought her up. She grew into a charming maiden and one day Prince Kuru coming that way while hunting saw her and fell in love with her. The sage was pleased to give her in marriage to the King and so fixed the date of marriage.

The day previous to her marriage she trumpeted over a poisonous snake while walking in the forest with her companions and immediately she fell dead by the bite of the serpent. Kuru’s grief was uncontrollable. He wept bitterly crying aloud “If I have from my very birth with great devotion taken vows, let Pramadvarā rise up alive.” Then a devadātu (messenger from Indra) appeared before him and said that all his wishes were of no avail since it was only in the order of things that one whose āyuṣ (period of life on earth) was over should die. Kuru then enquired of him a way of escape from this inevitable calamity and then the devadātu said that if Kuru was prepared to surrender half of his āyuṣ in favor of Pramadvarā she would come back to life. Kuru agreed and they went to Dharmarāja (god of Death) and told him of his wish. Dharmarāja brought back Pramadvarā to life and she stood beside Kuru as if just woken up from sleep. Their marriage was duly conducted. (Chapter 8 and 9, Ādi Parva).

PRAMAGANDA. The King of Kikapās mentioned in the texts the son of Câyana and Câyana of Kikapā. (Sloka 14, Anuvaka 53, Mahābhaōga 5, Igyedha).

PRAMANAKOTI. A sacred place on the banks of the river Gaṅgā. There is a great banyan tree named Pramānakotī at this place. It was at this spot of the river that Duryodhana poisoned Bhimasena and threw him into the river, bound hand and foot. The Pāndavas who went for their exile in the forest spent their first night at this spot. (Sloka 41, Chapter 1, Vana Parva).

PRAMANDHU. A Yāaka who was the custodian of the wealth of Harīcandra. Vīsāvatītira removed the bad smell of the body of this Yāaka by pouring holy water over his body. (Chapter 2, Skanda Purāṇa).

PRAMATAKA. A sage. He was one of the members of the Sarvasatās of Janamejaya. (Sloka 7, Chapter 53, Ādi Parva).

PRAMATHA I. A son of Dhrtrāṣṭra. (Sloka 13, Chapter 116, Ādi Parva).

PRAMATHA II. One of the two pārṣadas given to Subhrasena by Yamarāja. The other was named Ummātha. (Sloka 30, Chapter 45, Śalya Parva).

PRAMATHA III. A rākṣasa (demon). This rākṣasa was a minister of demons Kharana and Dīśana. (Sarva 23, Aranyakhāya, Vālmikī Rāmāyana).

PRAMATHAGAJA. Śiva’s attendants. They were well-versed in Dharmādharmas (What is virtuous and what is not). (Chapter 131, Anuśāsana Parva).

PRAMATHI. One of the hundred sons of Dhrtrāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhimasena in the great battle. (Chapter 157, Drona Parva).

PRAMATHI II. Brooer of Dīśana who was an associate of Rāvana. When Rāma and Lakṣmana were in exile in the forests they had to fight Kharanaśatāraśiras. Then the captains of their army, Mahākapāla, Sthīlakása and Pramāthi attacked Rāma-Lakṣmana. Pramāthi attacked Lakṣmana and then Nīlakaṇṭha army-chief of the monkeys killed Pramāthi. (Sarva 26, Vālmikī Rāmāyana and Sloka 22, Chapter 287, Vana Parva).

PRAMATHI III. A rākṣasa who was a friend of Ghatotkaca. In the Kurukṣetra battle Duryodhana killed this Pramāthi. (Sloka 20, Chapter 91, Bīṣama Parva).

PRAMATHINI. A celestial woman. This woman gave a dance performance during the Janmanasava of Arjuna. (Sloka 21, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

PRAMATHI I. (PRAMATI).

1) General information. Great Sage Bhṛgu, got of his wife Pulomā Cāyana and Cāyana got of his wife Sukanyā, Pramati. This sage Pramati married the beautiful Prākapī and their son was Kuru.

2) Other details.

(a) Pramati visited Bīṣama while he was lying on his bed of arrows. (Sloka 5, Chapter 26, Anuśāsana Parva).

(b) Pramati is described as the son of Vīgindra born in the family of Gṛṣamadha son of Vīthavavya. (Sloka 58, Chapter 30, Anuśāsana Parva). For details see under Kuru.

PRAMATI II. Son of a brahmin named Sūra of Prayīga. During the Kuruṇga the brahmans made Pramati their army-chief and defeated the Kṣatriyas. (Vīsāvatītīra Purāṇa).

PRAMATI III. One of the four ministers of Vībhūsana. (Yuddha Kāṇḍa, Chapter 7, Verse 7, Vālmikī Rāmāyana).

PRAMITĀ. Chief of the Sūdras (country of women) in the Himalaya. The Pāndavas conducted an ṛṣāvyāga after the great battle. It was Arjuna who followed the sacrificial horse. Roaming about without anybody daring to tie it the horse reached Sīrīvāya and Pramita tied the horse. Arjuna challenged her and in the fight that ensued Pramita defeated Arjuna. At that time there was a voice from heaven which said “Arjuna, you will never be able to take back the horse after defeating Pramita. So you should not want to save the sacrificial horse, enter into a truce with her and make her your wife.” Arjuna took the advice and saved the horse after marrying Pramita. (Jaiminiṣya, Āvamodha Parva, 21-22).

PRAMŁGĀ. A nymph who enticed the sage Kanḍu. (See under Kanḍu).

PRAMODA I. A serpent born of the family of Aśvatas. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarvasatā of Janamejaya. (Sloka 11, Chapter 57, Ādi Parva).

PRAMODA II. A soldier of Subrahmanya. (Sloka 65, Chapter 43, Śalya Parva).

PRAMODA III. One of the Mānasaputras (Spiritual sons) of Brāhmaṇa. Pramuda was born from the neck of Gajendra. (Maṅgala Purāṇa).

PRAMOHINI. A Gandharva maiden. Pramohini and four Gandharva maidens were absolved from their curses by a drop of water from the river Narmadā. The story recounted to Yuddhishṭhira by Nārada as is follows: Five Gandharva maidens Pramohini, Suṭā, Suṣvarā, Candrika and Suṭārā were friends. Pramohini was the daughter of Śukasthīgitī, Suṭā of Sūkṛtī, Suṣvarā of Haraveśī, Candrika that of Candrakeśī and Suṭārā of Suprabha. On a day in spring all the five went about collecting flowers in a forest. As they went on walking they reached the pond named Acchoda. They bathed in that pond and after that made an idol of Ambikā with clay and adorned it with golden ornaments. Putting marks on it with Kumkum (Saffron) and Candana (Sandalwood-paste) they danced around the idol with devotional songs. As they were doing so, the eldest son of sage Vedanadhi came to bathe in the Aachoda pond. He was very charming to look at with eyes like lotus, broad chest and round and brown eyes. He looked like another Kama-deva (Cupid). He was wearing a deer-hide and around his waist was a yellow waistband of Mahi grass. The five girls were attracted by the ascetic youth and stopping their dancing they at first thought of making him their guest. But the girls took him at first not as a guest of the girls, but their mother. The girls started to approach him with amorous looks and perplexed by this move, the ascetic youth fled away from the place. The girls searched for him everywhere and was not to be found. They found an emptiness on all sides. They thought that perhaps he might be a magician. They felt themselves in the plight similar to that of the girls who searched for the missing Kama. Somehow taking courage they reached their homes and told their mother. The mothers asked them why they were so late and they replied that not the passage of time speaking with the Kinnar who arrived there. Their bodies were hot and the mothers thought that it might be due to their brisk walking for such a long distance.

Telling a lie like that to hide their secret, they lay on the ground thinking about him and him alone. They did not make the Keelamur (peacock kept far and wide) dance, did not reach the parrot in the cage, did not put the mongoose nor did they converse with their pet Srikâ. The night seemed to them like a yoga and as soon as it was morning they ran up to the Aachoda pond. The brahmin boy came there that morning also for bathing. The five girls encircled him and requested him to stay with them. He made some excuses and tried to get away from them. Then Pramohini breaking the circle went and caught hold of him by his legs, Sushila and Susvâra caught hold of his hands, Sutâr embraced him and Candrikâ kissed him on his cheeks. At last in desperation the brahmin boy cursed them and turned them into devils. The girls were not to be subdued like that. They arose and cursed him in return and made him also a devil. All the devils formed like that by curses and counter-curses lived in the same place in the forest. After a long time one day the sage Loma came that way by chance and the burning eloquence of Loma due to his severe penance made him unapproachable to the devils and they stood at a great distance from him. But the brahmin devil by the strength of his penance in his previous life knew Loma and falling before him in prostration told him everything that had happened. Loma was greatly moved by his story and he took them to the banks of the river Narmadâ. At that time a wind blew and dries of water from the river, changed them into their original forms and they stood praising Narmadâ. Then following the advice of Loma the brahmin boy married the five girls and lived on the shore of Narmadâ in the forest, drinking its water and worshipping it. They lived there for a long happily and attained Vrundâ. (Chapter 22, Padma Purâna) PRÂMRTA. One of the ways of earning wealth. There are five ways according to Manusmrti.

Rtãntâbhyanâ, jîvettu
Mrita nama pramanena va
Satyãntâbhyanâpi va
Na savytva kâdâcena./
(Sloka 4, Chapter 4, Manusmrti.)

Râm, Amrâm, Mryntam, Prâmrtam and Satyãntam are the five ways.

Each has been described thus:
Râmaâthâlâtâ Pâyam
Amrâm yâdâkâtâ chitam
Mtyntu yâtâr bhâlksam
Pramrtam karârah smrtam;
Satyãntu vâdhyam
tena caiva jîvye;
Sevâ vâtârthâkhyaât
Tasmâ tân parivarjyaret.//
(Sloka 6, Chapter 4, Manusmrti.)

(Râma is the collection of grains from paddi fields with two fingers. Mrita is that which is obtained without begging and Mrynta is that which is obtained by begging. Wealth that is obtained by agriculture is Prâmrt and that which is obtained by trade is Satyãnta. Wealth obtained by sevâ (battery and service) is to be avoided.)

PRAMSUNKGA. A Mânu, Tâkâvakkâ, Tâbâhâga. Bhrjâ, Saryâti, Narîjânta, Prâmrtmrga, Dita, Kârâna and Prâmrtva are all Manus. (7th Skanda, Dev Bhâgavata) PRÂMUGI (PRAMUGA). A sage who lived in Daksînabhîrata. (Sloka 29, Chapter 208, Sûnti Parva.)

PRÂNA I. Grandson of sage Bhrj, Bhrj got of his wife Khyâtâ a daughter named Laksâ and two sons named Dhâta and Vridhâtâ. They married Jyoti and Nîyati respectively and they got two sons named Prâna and Mrynâ. Mrynâ was the son of Mnyâ. (Chapter 10, Am'â 1, Vîgusa Purâna.)

PRÂNA II. A son born to the Vashu named Soma of his wife Manohâra. Tis Prâna was the younger brother of Varcâs. These brothers had two other brothers named Sîsîra and Râma. (Sloka 26, Chapter 66, Adi Parva.)

PRÂNA III. Prânâvâya. The wind of life. (See under Parivâha.)

PRÂNADHARA. A carpenter of Purûnic fame.

There were two celebrated carpenters in the country of Kârî, named Prânâdharâ and Râjyadhara when King Pûla was ruling that country. They learnt many mechanical arts in carpentry and architecture from the great architect, Mayâsura. Prânâdharâ, the elder brother, became an addict to wine and women and gambling and lost all his wealth. Râjyadhara gave a portion of his wealth to his brother and before long both became poor. Then Prânâdharâ found out a plan and he both together made mechanical bird and tying a rope to its legs sent it into the treasure-house of the King through a window. The bird picked up diamonds or ornaments which it could carry in its beak and came back to them. This continued daily for some days and then Râjyadhara advised his brother to stop it acquiring him with the dangers if it was ever found out. But Prânâdharâ did not heed the advice and continued the theft. When the keeper of the treasury found things missing he was worried. He mused: "Doors are not open. Can it be rats? No, there has never been a single rat here before. Then how did it happen?" Thinking thus he went and reported the matter to the King. The King was confident of the keeper. Soon he put guards over the treasure-house to keep watch over it at night. Little knowing that he was being fooled. Frightened, he played his bird into action that night also. The watchmen caught hold of the rope as soon as the bird came out with the booty from the treasure-house. Prânadaha knew that the trick had been found out and he rushed to his brother and told him what had happened. Immediately Prânadaha made a Vimâna and escaped from the place with his family. Sri Karuja also made a Vimâna and escaped. When he had travelled in the Vimâna for four hundred Kâtas (Kâta = four miles) he reached a sea-shore and then leaving the Vimâna there started walking. On the way getting tired he slept inside a garden. When he woke up, a man on a peacock came to his side and said “You live here. When you are hungry and feel like taking food to the second floor of this house and you will find there whatever you want.”

The visitor disappeared and he found a house in front of him. When he had finished his daily ablations he went inside the house which was empty. But when he went up he saw ample food in gold vessels arranged there. He never heard about his brother again. (Târâga, Kâhânta, Kâbhâlambaka, Katibasirianga)
PRASENAJIT III. A distant brother of Satrajit called Kava. Dakagniya, Pusha, Chapter 14, Sabbath Parva.

PRASENAJIT IV. A King who lived in the city of Svarapati. Once a very virtuous brahmin came to this city. Finding him to be a man of great virtues a Vaiśya took him to his house and kept him there worshipping him. Many rich men coming to know of the brahmin came and worshipped him with offerings of costly clothes and ornaments. Within a short time the poor brahmin got a huge sum of gold and silver. He sold all his property and lived in his own house. He used to give alms for the needy and at night without letting anybody know went and buried it in a secret place in the forest. After some days he went and looked for it and found his buried wealth missing. When the brahmin returned weeping, the host, the Vaiśya, gathered from him all that had happened. The householder conspired against the brahmin but the merrily and greedy brahmin was not to be pacified thus and he started to commit suicide. He went to a pond nearby and was about to jump into it when Prasenajit who heard about this came to the spot and told him thus:—"Do not grieve over your stolen loss. I shall make enquiries about it and if the stolen wealth is not recovered I shall give you compensation from my treasures.

After rounding the brahmin thus the King went to his palace. He pretended to be ill and called the physicians of the city to his side. He asked them about their patients, their illness and the medicines prescribed for them. One of the physicians during the enquiry said thus:—"Oh lord, Mātrədattavān is my patient. Yesterday 1 prescribed to him the root of Orca plants. The King of Kava ordered physicians to be sent for Matrədattavān and asked him who brought him the root. When Mātrədattavān replied that it was his servant the King sent for the servant and on questioning the servant—"the latter confessed having taken the hidden treasure. Thus because of the intelligence and wisdom of the King the brahmin was brought to book his wealth. (Tarapāta 7, Mahān-Acūrākśi-Uttara, 3rd Sandha, Bhagavatāvāra.)

PRAŚĪTA. One of the Patañjaliyaśajjas. The five yajñas are Abhuta, Huta, Prabha, Brahmāhya and Prāśīta. (Sūkta 73, Chapter 3, Manusmṛti.)

PRATIKA. Son of a King called Vau. (9th Sandha, Bhagavatāvāra.)

PRATIKĀMI. The charioteer of Duryodhana. It was Pratikāmi who brought Pāṇiśalī to the court of the Kauravas when the Pāṇiśals were defeated at the game of dice by the Kauravas. He was killed in the Kurukṣetra battle by the Pāṇḍavas, (Chapter 67, Sañjā Parva; Chapter 33, Śalya Parva).

PRATIKŚATRA. A King who founded the family of Parasurāma. (9th Skanda, Bhāgavata).

PRATIMATSYA. A place of human habitation in ancient Bharata. (Chapter 9, Bhīma Parva).

PRATIṢPA. A King of Candravansi (Lunar dynasty). He was the father of King Sañtana. There is a story behind the birth of the son Sañtana to Pratipa. One day while King Pratipa was worshipping the Sun-god in the waters of the river Gaṅga, when a beautiful maiden rose from the waters and sat on the right thigh of the royal ascetic. The King was embarrassed and he told her this:—"Oh sweet girl, who are you? Do you realize what an unrighteous deed you have done? Why did you thus climb on my thigh without seeking my permission? The right thigh is for the daughter and the wife of the son. Since you have thus sat on my right thigh, you shall be the wife of my son when one is born to me."

Hearing this the maiden jumped out from the thigh of the King and left the place and the King went to his palace. After some time Pratipa got a son named Sañtana. Sañtana was none other than emperor Mahābhāsaś, who was forced to be born on earth due to a curse of Brahma. When Sañtana came of age Pratipa decided to spend the rest of his life in forests and calling his son to his side gave him all advice and added "Son, perhaps a maiden may come to you and if she comes accept her as your wife. Do not ask her about her identity. By making her your faithful wife you will acquire a high family."

Pratipa, thereafter, entrusted the kingdom to his son and after performing severe penance in the forests attained divya-loka. (2nd Skanda, Devī Bhāgavata).

PRATIPĀDA. A King of the race of Bharata. He was the son of Gandhamādana and the father of Suvairy-kala. (2) [Navama Skanda, Bhāgavata]

PRATJŚTHĀ. The installation of deities in temples. According to Agni Purāṇa it is the installation of śiva-līnga that is called Pratīṣṭhā. Pitha is Sākṣi (Power) and Līnga is Śiva. It is the union of Sākṣi in the form of Pitha and Śiva in the form of Līnga that is called Pratīṣṭhā. This Pratīṣṭhā is attained by means of Sivamantras. There are five different kinds of Pratīṣṭhā:

1) Viśeṣ-pratīṣṭhā. Any pratīṣṭhā in which Brahmatiṣṭhā is used in combination is called Viśeṣ-pratīṣṭhā.
2) Sthāpaṇa. Fixing the liṅga on the pitha (platform) is called Sthāpaṇa.
3) Śikhasthāpana. The fixing of the liṅga (idol) on the pitha (platform) when the liṅga gets shaky on it is called Śikhasthāpana.
4) Uṭhāpana. Taking the idol from the platform and relighting it, is called Uṭhāpana.
5) Āśṭāpana. A pratīṣṭhā in which after the fixation learned priests conduct purification ceremonies, is called Āśṭāpana.

PRATIŚTHĀNAPURA. A sacred place in Prayōga. The place is so praised called śāyāni. Once this place was ruled over by a king called Yāyāni. The sage Gāeṇa accompanied by Gargu visited this king one day. (Sloka 9, Chapter 114, Udyoga Parva).

PRATIŚTA. A Viśvdeva. (Sloka 32, Chapter 92, Atriśa Parva).

PRATIVINDHYA. A son born to Pāńchali of Drona-nagrat. The details available about him from Mahābhārata are the following:

(i) Pratīvindhya was born from a part of a Viśvdeva. (Sloka 127, Chapter 37, Adi Parva).
(ii) On the first day of the Kurukṣeta battle Pratīvindhya fought against Śakuni. (Sloka 63, Chapter 42, Bhīma Parva).
(iii) Pratīvindhya was defeated in fight with Alabunda. (Sloka 39, Chapter 100, Bhīma Parva).
(iv) He fought against Aparītī. (Sloka 29, Chapter 25, Droṇa Parva).
(v) Pratīvindhya was defeated after fighting with Duryodana. (Sloka 34, Chapter 160, Droṇa Parva).
(vi) He slew King Carita in a battle. (Sloka 20, Chapter 14, Karṇa Parva).
(vii) Pratīvindhya died together with his brother Viṣṇu. (Sloka 48, Chapter 8, Śaṃśī Parva).
(viii) The synonyms found used in the Mahābhārata for Pratīvindhya are the following: Yaśodhārāni and Yādūśriḥ. PRATIVINDHYA. A violent king born of the family of Ekaśakriya. Arjuna defeated this king during his victory march. (Sloka 5, Chapter 23, Śānti Parva).

PRATYAGRAHA. An ancient king of Bhīrā. He was the second son of Uparīktravasu. (Sloka 231, Chapter 1, Adi Parva).

PRATYANGA. An ancient king of Bhūrata. (Sloka 238, Chapter 1, Adi Parva).

PRATYUYA. A son born to Drona-nagrā of his wife Pratīṣṭha. Pratīṣṭha, princess of the Asvāvas are Āpā, Dhruva, Soma, Ānta, Agni, Pratīṣṭha and Prabhāṣā. The sage Devala is the son of Pratīṣṭha. (Sloka 17, Chapter 66, Adi Parva).

PRAVAHĀ. A vāyu (wind). This wind of life in the body always moves upwards. (Sloka 27, Chapter 301, Śānti Parva).

PRAVĀHA. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya. (Sloka 64, Chapter 45, Śānti Parva).

PRAVĀHANA. A king of Pāńchāladeva. He was a contemporary of Uddālaka.

Pravāhana was a great Dhārāṇika (philosopher) and he once held a Tattva nāṭya (sermon on philosophers). With a view to defeating the king in a discussion Śvetaketu also attended the seminar. But Śvetaketu was unable to answer the five questions put to him by Pravāhana. Ashamed of the defeat Śvetaketu went to his father Uddālaka, who was his Guru in Jñānavidya also, and asked him the questions put by Pravāhana. Uddālaka also was unable to answer the questions and they both went to Pravahana and the latter gave as a gift to these brahmans whatever knowledge he had on Tattvajñãna then (Chândogyopanishad).

PRAVÁLKA. A Yakha of the court of Kubera (Stóka 17, Chapter 10, Sabhã Parva).

PRAVARA. A Yadava. He was one of the ministers of Sri Krsma. (Chapter 71, Vígãta Purañã).

PRAVARA. A river of Purãnic fame. (Stóka 23, Chapter 9, Bhismaka Parva).

PRAVARAKA (PRAVARA). An ancient Purãnic place included in Kauñãnandvãpa. (Stóka 22, Chapter 12, Bhismaka Parva).

PRAVARAKARNA. An owl without death living in the Haimavatãs. (See under Indradyumna).

PRAVARASENA. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the sixth century A.D. He is the author of the book 'Setubandha' written in Prakrit language. This book is called 'Setu-kãva' and 'Rávkandavãhã' also.

PRAVARASANA. A peak of the mountain Gománta. Sri Krsma and Balarâma once went to its top to observe the movements of their enemy Mágadha. (10th Skandha, Bhágavatã). The mountain was named Gománta.

PRAVASU. A son born to Uliana of the Panduravins. (See under Panduránsa). He was the husband of his wife Rútâ. Pravasu had four brothers named Dusyantha, Sûra, Bhumina, and Vaiv. (Stóka 17, Chapter 94, Adi Parva).

PRAVÉN. Kanyávrna was on the shores of this river. (Stóka 11, Chapter 88, Vaña Parva).

PRAVÉPANA. A serpent of the family of Takṣãka. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasthara of Janamejya. (Stóka 3, Chapter 57, Adi Parva).

PRAVÍRA I. A king of the Pûru dynasty. His father was Santvardha. He had two brothers named Dusyantha and Sûmantha. (Chapter 279, Agni Pûrãna).

PRAVÍRA II. A son of Pûru, a king of the Pûru dynasty. His mother was Paústi. He had two brothers named Rvara and Rãudrãvã. Pravira got of his wife Sûraseni a son named Manûsty. He was known by the name Janamejáya also. After conducting three asvamedhas, Pravira accepted Vánaprastha (third stage of life). (Stóka 11, Chapter 92, Adi Parva).

PRAVÍRA (S) III. A special class of Kâstriyãs. King Vrádha was born in this class. (Stóka 16, Chapter 74, Udvogyo Parva).

PRAVÍRA IV. A candâla (the lowest and most despised of all classes of people). In order to keep his word of honor, Hrásvãvañúma allowed himself to be sold to this czâéla Pravira. He was none other than Lord Śiva himself. (See under Hrásvãvañúma).

PFÁKSEVA. A place of human habitation in ancient Bhrárata. (Stóka 50, Chapter 9, Bhismaka Parva).

PRAÝRTTA. All religious ceremonies are divided into two classes, Praîrtta and Nîrvîrtta. All ceremonies connected with worldly life are classed under Praîrtta and those of a spiritual nature under Nîrvîrtta. (Chapter 292, Agni Pûrãna).

PRAÝEGA. A sacred place situated at the meeting point of Gângã and Yamunã. He who bathes at this holy spot would get the benefit of doing ten asvamedhas. (Stóka 35, Chapter 84, Vana Parva).

It is believed that at Prayâga there is the presence of Brähmã, devatã, devâkãs (guardians of the quarters), lokâkãlãkas (guardians of the world), Sûdhyas (realised souls), Purary (names), Mahârits like Sanatkumára, Ángiras, Brähmârs, Nágas, Garûla, Siddhas, Sûrâyâva and Mahâvîspa. There are three fire-pits there. The river Gângã runs through the centre of these pits. The Centre of the confluence of Gângã and Yamunã is believed to be the waist of the world. There is at Prayâga the world-famous Triveni confluence. If one bathes at that place one gets the benefit of Ásvamedha and Rajâsûya together.

The greatness of Prayâga is described thus: Prayâga-tirtha, Pratîśhâmatârtha, Kambalatârtha, Ásvaturatârtha, and Bhogavatârthata are said to be the Yâmagedha of Prâyâpata. At such a Prayâga Vedas and Yajñas live personified. If one praises it or chants its name in songs or smears the mud from it on one's body, one would be absolved of all sins. If one gives away anything in charity at this place or conducts Śrâddha (ceremony of giving offerings to deceased relatives) or does pious utterings one would get benefits of an imperishable nature. There are about seventy thousand tirthas in this world, ten thousand of one kind and sixty thousand of another kind. Prayâga has the presence of all these tirthas and so it is considered as the best of all tirthas. Here is the Bhogavatârtha of Vasuki and the tirtha called Hamsapratapa. If one bathes in the ponds there for three days together, one could get the credit of giving as libations as much as cowa. Three important places are the Gângîdîvâra, Prayâga and Gângîsâjâgambha. (Chapter 214, Agni Pûrãna).

PRAÝŚCITTA. In ancient Bhûra a sacred injunctions existed about religious rites to be performed for the amoment of sins committed. The following are a few of them:

Murder is that act which ends in loss of life. One who kills a brahmin is a Brahmaghâtaka. Even if murder is actually committed by one man, all those involved in a conspiracy for murder are murderers. If death occurs while treating a patient it is no murder. If death occurs when you punish your son, disciple or wife it is no sin. If he who has killed a brahmin or a cow commits suicide he will be absolved from his sin. Or he should go about begging with a skull and the organ of generation of any animal. If he spends twelve years begging eating little and with repentance in his heart the Brahmaghâtaka will be absolved of his sin and he will become pure. If the murder is done to serve a purpose of his he should live as a beggar for twelve years but if it is not done to gain any end of his, he need live only for six years as a beggar. If a brahmin attempts to murder another brahmin he should observe the above vow for three years. If the attempt is made by a Kâstriya he should double the period; if by a Vâjíya or Shûdra triple the period. If a brahmin kills a Kâstriya he need observe only three fourths of the prâyâscitta. If a brahmin kills a Vâjíya or Shûdra he need observe only one eighth part of the prâyâscitta. If he kills a woman he should observe the punishment fixed for killing a Shûdra.

If a brahmin does 'gohatyâ' (killing a cow) he should practise penance drinking Pâçaçayya (five products of the cow taken collectively). He should sleep in a cowshed and go about feeding the cow and should also give away cows as gift. If a gohatyâ is committed by a person of any other cast, he need observe only three fourths of the prâyâscitta. Hitting the cows by fists, piercing their body with nails and cutting their horns are to be classified under gohatyâ. If one kills a cat mongoose, frog dog, or a bird, one should drink milk for three days. Though wine, date-palm-juice sugar-cane-juice, black-palm-juice, tamarind-juice and toddy are intoxicants they are not classified under alcoholic liquors. Real liquor or sura is made from rice flour. Drinking liquor is prohibited to Brahmins, Ksatriyas and Vaishyas. If any one of these castes drinks he should drink water after performing penance or live eating pippall (long pepper) for a year or eat of cake at night for a year. If one drinks water in a pot used for taking liquor one should observe the pravachita for seven days. If the drinker drinks from a cūndā he should observe the pravachita for six days. If one eats rice from a cūndā one should observe Cūndāyana, an expiatory penance of decreasing and then increasing food according to the waxing and waning of the moon. If one eats food in the house of a Śūdra during times of distress, one would be absolved of the sin by repentance alone. Taking another man’s property and appropriating it to himself is called theft. He who steals gold should be struck on the head by a wooden pestle by the king and killed. Alternatively he should live for twelve years without clothes or eating more than one meal a day only such things as leaves, fruits and roots and lying on earth. He who steals diamonds, pearls, corals, copper, silver, iron, bronze and granite stones should fast for twelve years. He who enjoys sexual intercourse with his father’s wife, his own sister, daughter of his preceptor or wife of the preceptor should burn himself in a hot iron pot. Alternatively he should embrace a red hot iron level of a woman and die. (Chapters 183 and 184, Agni Purāṇa).

PRAVUTA. A Devagandharva. He was born to Kasyap-prajāpati of his wife Muni. (Śloka 43, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva).

PREKSĀRGRAHA. A building for staging dramas, and conducting festivals well-designed and ornamental constructed. Drupācārya made the royal architects construct it in Sāgar for exhibiting the skill of the Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas in archery. (Śloka 11, Chapter 133, Ādi Parva).

PRETAGRANATHA. A very ancient book of the Egyptian. There are only two books which can claim to be as old as the Rygveda, the most ancient treasure-book of mankind. One of them is Pretagranatha which the Enlil people call the Book of the Dead. The other is Gilgamesh of the Babylonian.

PRITTI. Wife of sage Pulasya. Prini got a son named Dattoli of her husband Pulasya, that Dattoli was in his previous birth the Agastya of Svāyambhuva Manvantara. (Chapter 107, Amśa 17, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

PRIYABHRTYA. An ancient King of Bharata. (Śloka 238, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva).

PRIYADARSHANA I. A soldier of Subrahmanya. (Śloka 39, Chapter 43, Salya Parva).

PRIYADARSHANA II. A son of the king Drupada. In the battle that ensued after the marriage of Draupadi, Karna killed him. (Ādi Parva, Mahābhārata).

PRIYAKA. A soldier of Subrahmanya. (Śloka 65, Chapter 45, Salya Parva).

PRIYAMALYANULPANA. A soldier of Subrahmanya. (Śloka 60, Chapter 45, Salya Parva).

PRIYAMVADĀ. A companion of Rādhikā. This girl gave all protection and service to Arjuna when the latter was conducting Jālānūṣṭhāna taking the form of a woman named Arjuni. (Chapter 74, Pāñča Kṛṣṇa, Mahābhārata).

PRIYAVARCCAS. A nymph of the court of Kuber. Arjuna saved her when she was lying as a crocodile due to a curse. (Chapter 1, Skanda Purāṇa).

PRIYAVRAVA. The eldest son of Svāyambhuva Manu. He had another son named Utanapāda and three daughters named Ākuti, Devala and Pracīti. The daughters were married to Ruci, Kardama and Daksā respectively. (8th Skanda, Devi Bhīṣagata).

Priyavāra married Barhaismālā daughter of Kardama-prajāpati. He got of her two daughters named Samāśi and Kukśi and ten sons named Agnideva, Agnibhūta, Vapumāni, Duyumāni, Medhas, Medhāthī, Bhāyava, Savana, Putra and Jyotisnān. Of these Jyotisnān was really possessing 1001 elephants. Medhas, Agnibhūta and Putra, were interested in the practice of yoga and were aware of their previous births. Priyavāra distributed seven islands to seven of his sons as follows:

Janmadīvīpa to Agnideva, Plakṣadīvīpa to Medhāthī; Sālāmadīvīpa to Vapumāni; Kuśadīvīpa to Jyotisnāna; Krautcadīvīpa to Putra; Śākadevi to Bhāyava; and Pṛukṣadīvīpa to Savana.

Agnideva had nine sons named Nādhī, Kimpuruṣa, Harivaśa, Ílvarī, Ramya, Hiraṇyā, Kun, Bhārīdrā and Ketumāla. (Chapter 1, Amśa 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

Priyavāra once crested round Meru in his chariot. As he was competing with the Sun Priyavāra started his circling along with sunrise and sunset. Nine days make the nights look like day and the sun appear dim and faded. The Sun was deceived and it was at the request of the Trimūrti that Priyavāra stopped his circumambulation. It was the path of Priyavāra’s circling for seven days that later became the seven oceans of Purānic fame. (Viduddha Kanda, Kaṇtha Kaṇṭhayāna).

PROSALA. An ancient place of human habitation in western Bharata. (Śloka 61, Chapter 5, Bhīṣma Parva).

PROŚṬHA. An ancient city of Bharata. (Śloka 61, Chapter 9, Bhīṣma Parva).

PRASĀDASA. An ancient King who got a daughter from king Aśoka. (Śloka 80, Chapter 106, Sānta Parva).

PRASĀDHAKA I. The ninth son of Vaiśvānara Manu. He is described as one of the sacred and virtuous persons to be remembered during early morning. He did penance at Kurukṣetra and attained Svarga. (Śloka 11, Chapter 20, Ālameṣha Parva).

Even from boyhood Prasādha started practice of penance. He got disgust even from his own boyhood. A story is told how it happened. Once when Prasādha was studying under his Gour, a tiger entered the shed of the cows at night. Hearing the pitiful cries of the cow he went to the shed with his sword and gave a strong and fatal cut to the tiger with it. Unfortunately the stroke fell on the cow instead of the tiger and not knowing the truth in the darkness Prasādha went and slept peacefully. In the morning when he went to the shed he fully realized the cow laying dead with his sword-cut. He then knew the mistake he had made; at night and was so distressed with the accident that he at once left for Kurukṣetra and started doing penance there,
2) Birth and Coronation. Sumathi, wife of Anga, was the eldest daughter of Yama. Vena was born of her. Vena, the grandson of Yama, because of hereditary traits from his grandfather, was very wicked even from birth. When Vena was crowned king by the maharishi and he became the supreme lord of the world he announced to the world thus: “Yagas should not be performed; gifts should not be given; no kind of home should be done. There is nobody but me to accept as Yajñapurūsa the share of yajñas. I am the sole lord and consumer of yajñas.”

The sages were dumbfounded. They all approached Vena and impressed upon him the necessity of performing a Yaga to propitiate Mahāvīra. Vena who got angry at this request of the sages told them thus: “There is nobody greater than I and I have none to be worshipped. Who is Hari, your Yajñavalkya? (lord of the yāga). All such great powers who can bless and curse alike and such eminent deities and entities like Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva, Indra, Vāyu, Yama, Varuna, Śūrya, Agni, Dīhātā, Pāśa, Bhūmi and Candra are merged in me, the king. Do understand this fact and obey my orders.”

Despite repeated requests Vena did not give permission to conduct a Vājnava yajña. The sages got angry and cried aloud “Kill this wicked man!”, “Kill this wicked man”. Saying thus the sages killed Vena by Kuśa grass made sacred and powerful by mantras—Vena, who was spiritually dead because of his contempt of the gods even before. Then the sages saw dust rising in columns from all sides and asked the people the cause of the same. The people said “When they knew that there was no king poor people have turned themselves into rogues and are plundering the wealth of the rich. The swift movements of these running in haste are raising dust from the ground below.”

The riot commenced together and to get a son from the dead Vena they churned the thigh of the wicked king. Then from the thigh came out a short and black (as black as a burnt pillar) man with a compressed face who stood before the sages in distress and asked “What am I to do?” The sages said “Nīśā” meaning “sit down”. He thus became Nīśāda (an illiterate forest-dweller). He went to the mountain of Vindhyā and along with him went all the sins of Vena. Nīśāda thereafter are said to be those who have destroyed the sins of Vena.

Then the sages churned the right hand of Vena and from it came out a brilliant boy of great strength and power and he was named Prthu. At the time of his birth there dropped from heaven the divine bow Ajagava and many powerful arrows and a divine armour. All animate objects of the world were happy at his birth. Vena attained svarga for having delivered such a brilliant son. For the coronation of Prthu the oceans brought very many precious diamonds and the rivers holy water. Brahmā along with Aiṅgarīs came and crowned Prthu as the emperor. Brahmā saw the line of Candra in his right hand and was, therefore, pleased to know that he was part of Mahāvīra. Thus Prthu, valiant and brilliant, was crowned their emperor by the virtuous people of Bhūrata.

He united his people by his love for them. When he travelled through the ocean the water stood still and when he travelled on land the mountains gave way and his flag- pole was never obstructed anywhere.

3) Sūna-Māgadhā. Brahmā performed a yāga as soon as Prithu was born. From that yāga was born a very wise and intelligent demon named Sūna. A scholarly Māgadhā also was born from the yāga. The mahārājas commanded the Sūna-Māgadhā to praise Prithu and they then said “Oh revered sages, we do not know anything good or bad about this king just born. He has not earned a name or fame. Then on what basis are we to sing praises about him?” The mahārājas said that they should praise him for the qualities he should have in future. Prithu heard that and feeling elated decided to become a very virtuous emperor. When Prithu was thinking like that the Sūna-Māgadhās sang in melodious tones thus: “This king speaks the truth always, is charitable, is one who keeps his promises, is valiant and full of all good qualities.” Thus with the blessings and good wishes of all Prithu started his yāga.

4) Prithu attacks the Earth. The people were hungry for want of proper food crops. They approached Prithu and told him that during the short interval between Venā’s death and Prithu’s assuming charge the goddess of earth drew inside all her vegetation and so the people were put to great difficulties. They requested him to generate vegetation again.

Prithu got angry on hearing this and taking his bow Ajagava and several arrows went in search of the goddess of earth. The goddess got frightened and fled taking the form of a cow. She went to all lokas but Prithu followed her with his bow and arrows everywhere. At last desiring to escape from the arrows of such a valiant king Bhūmidevi went to him and trembling with fear said “Oh king, why do you make such a persistent attempt, to kill me which would be the great sin of Śivasadāna? (killing a woman)” The Rājas replied that there was no sin in killing wicked persons. The goddess asked what refuge was there for the people if the earth was destroyed. The king said that he would protect his people by the power of his yāga. Bhūmidevi was frightened and she said “Oh king, I shall give you back all I like destroyed in the form of milk. Therefore, virtuous as you are, if you are really interested in the welfare of the people I shall allow even to milk me and take back everything you want during a calf.”

5) Prithu milks the Earth. Prithu by the end of his bow put in arrangement at one place the thousands of mountains which were lying scattered over the country.

The grounds were not even and so there were no divisions in villages and towns. There were no grain-plains like paddy or wheat, no agriculture, no cow-protection and no trade. It was since the time of Prithu that all these came into being. People desired to live in places where the grounds were even. Then the people lived on fruits, leaves and roots. When they were all destroyed people found it difficult to live.

Therefore Prithu making Śvyānabha Manu as calf milked for the welfare of his people all plants from the earth. People do live even today by what was milked then. Prithu, because he gave life to Bhūmidevi, became her father and she gave him the name Prithvi.

The brahmin sages milked the cow of earth again. Then Agastya became the calf and Brhaspati milked. When the planets milked, Candra became the calf and again Brhaspati milked. The devas even now feed on the Īṣīṣvara (milk rich in food value) they got then. All the animals live because of their virtue and truth. The yāga milked truth and virtue. The manes made Yama the calf and Antaka the milkier. They milked Svadhā in a silver pot. The cobras and serpents making Takṣaka the calf milked poison making Dhṛtarāṣṭra the milkier. They live by their poison which is their great defence also. The dānis and dānavas using Virocana as calf and making the two-headed Rśvak Madhu as the milkier milked jointly courage, valour and the सर्ववर्तमानतिस्तंब् (māyā, the destroyer of all enemies). They milked in an iron pot. All their knowledge, bodily health, strength, vigour, brilliance and valour are made from this and that is why they are adept in the art of magic even now.

Yaksas milked in an iron pot milk that disappeared from the earth Rajatānabha using Vasantavāna as calf. That Yakṣarajapurana was sarvaśa (knowing all) and Sarvadharmanātha (convenient with all charitable things) with two heads and eight hands. The rakṣasas, pīkācas and wicked maruts using Rajatānabha as milkier and Bhumī as the calf milked blood in a pot made of a skull. They live on this.

The Gandharvas and nymphs using lotus as their pot, Surṣe as milkier and Citrānabha as calf milked music from her. The mountains making Mahāmuras as milkier and Himālayas as the calf milked diamonds and medicines. The sacred trees made Sala the milkier and plakṣa the calf and milked in a pot made of Gānadhāpatrophulah (the power of growing again even if cut or burnt). The sādānaghyakacakranidāyādharas also milked her each using different pots, calves and milkiers and they all got what they wanted.

6) Alambadā. Prithu’s land became rich and prosperous. Then he performed an Alambadā. The Yāga house was led by Vṛjñā, son of Prithu. India did not like Prithu conducting the yāga. Indra hit a place on the path of the yāga horse. The sage Atri helped India. Indra bound the horse and a fight ensued between Indra and Vṛjñā in which Indra was deplorably defeated and confessions his guilt he craved for pardon and Prithu granting him pardon became his great friend. (4th Skandha, 11th chapter).

7) Prithu’s rule. In the history of Bharata the period of Prithu’s rule is considered a golden period. When Prithu became the emperor, Brahmā divided the universe into several kingdoms and made a separate ruler for each of them Soma was appointed King of the stars, planets, brahmans, plants, yāgas and ancestors. He appointed Kubera as the lord of kings, Varuna as the lord of all waters, Vishu as the lord of all animals and Pāvaka as the lord of all Vayu, Dakṣa was given lordship over parasites, Indra over maruts, and Prahlāda over all dānis and dānavas. Yama, the Dharmarāja was made lord of the manes. Aruva was made King of all elephants and Garuda King of all birds. Cakrāvat was made King of all horses and Vāsālha of all cattle. The lion was made King of all beasts and Himavān the lord of all immovable things. Kapila became chief of all sages and the tiger the leader of all beasts with tails and snouts. Pāvaka was made the King of all trees.

After distributing kingdoms thus, Brahmā appointed Dipālika will then be born as your son. Both of you will then be released from the curse. Dipālika after ruling the country for some time will also be free from this curse.” Āṭājāna and Dipālika soon disappeared by the power of the curse. Āṭājāna was born as king of Trigarta in the name of Pavrīthadora and Saudāunità became his wife. A son was born to them named Dipālika and as soon as he was born the parents were released from the curse and entered heaven. (Sāhākavatīdīnakā, Kauthāṣṭī-sāgara, Tarotā 6).

PRTHUĐARBA. A king of the race of Avīga. (Chapter 277, Agnī Purāṇa).

PRTHURĪVIRA. When Rāma and Lakṣmanā were staying in Paścavaṭī a demoness named Sūrīpankha made approaches to them and Lakṣmanā cut off her limbs and sent her away. Then a rākṣasa army came under the leadership of Kharā, Dūṣana and Trikṛas and Prthuuvīra was one of the twelve prominent soldiers of that army. (Sarga 26, Aranyā Kāṇḍa Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

PRTHUKA. A devāgana of Raivata Manvantara.

PRTHULĀKSA. A King born of the race of Avīga. This king lived in the court of Yama and worshipped him. (Siśka 22, Chapter 8, Sāhā Parva).

PRTHULASVA. A king of the race of Iksvaṅku. He was the son of Prthu and father of Adra. (Chapter 1, Bṛhaṁda Purāṇa).

PRTHURĀŚMI. One of those who are named ‘Yāti’. The Yātis were a people of anti-yajñya feelings and wore all burnt to death in Indra’s fire of wrath. But three yātis, Brāhagiri, Raṅgavīra and Prthuṛāsmi were taken care of by Indra and Indra taught them Brāhmaṇḍvīrya, Kṣatrīyavīrya and Vaikoṣṭhyavīrya.

Prthuuvīra commanded Indra to grant him Kṣatrīyavīrya also along with Kṣatrīyavīrya. There is now a sāma even in the name of Prthuuvīra. (Padma-vimāṇa-Brhaṁda).

PRTHUSEMA. A king of ancient Bhrātrā. (5th Bhagavata, Bhīgavat).

PRTHUSRAVAS I. A king of Rṣideva times, Indra killed the enemies of this king. (Siśka 116, Anuvaṇa 17, Mandala 1, Rṣideva).

PRTHUSRAVAS II. Father of Kāmā, wife of king Ayunāyik. He lived in the court of Yama. (Siśka 12, Chapter 6, Sāhā Parva).

PRTHUSRAVAS III. A sage of ancient Bhrātra who was a friend of Yudhishthīra. (Siśka 22, Chapter 26, Vana Parva).

PRTHUSRAVAS IV. A soldier of Subrahmaṇya (Chapter 45, Sāhā Parva).

PRTHUSRAVAS V. A serpent. This serpent was present at Pratīṣṭhāla to carry the body of Balabhadrarāma. (Sāhā Parva 13, Chapter 4, Mātranga Parva).

PRTHUVASTRA. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya (Chapter 46, Sāhā Parva).

PRTHUVAGA. A King of the court of Yama. (Siśka 12, Chapter 8, Sāhā Parva).

PRTHUVRĪPA. A beautiful king of a country called Pratīṣṭhāna. Once three wise yogins came to him and said “Oh King, we have travelled all around the world, there is a princess in Mātikādīpa called Rūpālata. In beauty she will be a good match for you.” On hearing this Prthuuvīra calling the court artist Kumārādadatu to his side said “Paint a picture of mine and go along with these three sanyāsins to Muktidvipa and give the painting in private to the princess there and also bring me an exact painting of her.”

The painter went to Muktidvipa and the King coming to know of the talents of the artist Kumārādatta commissioned him to paint a picture of his daughter Rūpalatā. He did the work beautifully. The King was immensely pleased and he enquired if Kumārādatta had seen a suitable prince for Rūpalatā. Kumārādatta immediately showed him the portrait of Pratīvrūpā. The King found the prince extremely suitable and entrusted the artist himself with the task of negotiating the marriage with Pratīvrūpā. Kumārādatta returned to his King with the portrait of Rūpalatā and Pratīvrūpā was infatuated with the dazzling beauty of Rūpalatā. Before long the marriage of Pratīvrūpā with Rūpalatā was conducted in all grandeur. (AmarāvatiUttarādvara, Kaśāśvatisagara, Tatlīga 1).

PRATĪVRŪPA. A sacred pond on the borders of Kurukṣetra. He who bathes in this pond would get the benefit of doing a sahasrāgadāna (giving away at a thousand cows). (Sloka 13, Chapter 83, Vana Purāṇa).

PUCCHĀNDAKA. A serpent of the family of Taśaka. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasatra of Jamnajjeyā. (Sloka 8, Chapter 57, Adi Purāṇa).

PŪJANI. A bird of superior intellect. The story of Pūjani was told by Bhima to illustrate that Kaśtriya can never be believed.

There was once a king called Bhāmakadatta in the country of Kāmpiliya. The King had a bird named Pūjani. Pūjani was very intelligent and all-knowing and the king treated her as his friend. Days went by and one day the queen delivered a son. At the same time Pūjani also got a child. The prince and the little bird grew up as great friends. The little bird used to bring to the prince whatever eatable it could take in its beak. They lived as such thick chums.

One day while Pūjani was away from the cage, the prince caught hold of the little bird and strangled it to death. When Pūjani came back she found her child missing and went about crying loudly. She then knew what had happened and got very angry. She flew and pricked blind the eyes of the prince and bade farewell to the King. The parting scene was very pathetic. Pūjani declared that Kaśtriya were not to be believed and flew away. (Chapter 139, Santi Purāṇa).

PŪJĀVIDHI. Chapter 155 of Agni Pūrāṇa states the various acts of worship that should be done daily and they are the acts of worship observed by all brahmācārins during the time of Manusmiṛti. You should rise up at Brāhmamahānta. Finish your ex- cretry routine sitting facing north during daytime and facing south during night time. If it is at dusk or dawn it should be done as during day time. It should never be done in public roads, water or grass. Wash with sand after your excretions and then wash your teeth. After that take your bath. Baths are of six kinds: Nitya- māna, Nāṁārtikamāna, Kāṇiyamāna, Kriyāmāna, Mahākārskamāna and Kriyānāma. Any religious act done without a bath is of no use. Therefore you should bathe early. Well-water is good for bathing, water from a fountain is better, water of a lake is much better, river-water is still better and water of a tirtha is still better. The water of the river Gaṅgā is the best.

After washing after excretions you should enter into the waters and wash again and then wash your body. While washing you should recite the following mantras “Hiranyavarnāḥ, Sanno devīḥ, āpo hī hāḥ idam- āpah.” You should submerge yourself in the waters and recite the mantras there under the waters. You should also recite Ahamāramcārtā sūkta or the Rk named Droupāda. Gujayāti should be chanted specially. After the Japa you should rub dry with a cloth your head and body and then offer water to the devas and manes. Then you should worship with water reciting Purāṇa- sūkta.

You should give way to anybody carrying a load, a pregnant woman and preceptors. Never look at the sun at the time of rising or setting. Never look at the reflection of the water. Never drink milk. Never do any violence to animals. Never speak injurious words. Never talk to woman. Do not sink into a well. Never trample over clothes and sacred ashes. Never enter the bedroom or the treasure room of another man. Those who rub mud blocks against mud block, cut their teeth or bite their nails will perish. Never enter a house through any other opening than its proper gate. Never interrupt when others are talking. Never talk while in food or study. Never be a fellow of a woman. Tell everybody ‘Bhadram’ ‘Bhadram’ (well well). Never speak to disguise anybody. Never walk on the shadow of an individual. Do not pass through the space between two respectable persons sitting and talking. Do not look at falling stars. Never mention the name of another river while in a river. Do not scratch your body with both your hands. Never cross a river before offering water to the devas and manes. Do not throw your excretions into the waters. Never bathe naked. After bath you should pray to gods for your welfare. Never take out a garland from your body by yourself. Avoid dust from the hooves of donkeys sticking to your body. Never laugh at low-case people, nor live with them nor live in their places. Never live in a place where there are no rivers, devarīs or manes. Nor live in a place ruled by barbarous people or a woman or by a number of people together. Never talk with women during their period of menstrues. If you have talked with them think of Viṣṇu. Never laugh, sneeze or yawn without covering your mouth. Vīma man should hide the disgrace in one way or to him- self and protect the words of the supercilious. Never encourage too much activity of the senses nor should you check the pressure of excretions. Do not belittle even the smallest of ailments or the smallest of enemies. If you walk through public roads you should wash yourself. Never walk bearing water or fire. Do not live in the presence of respectable and virtuous persons. Do not place one’s feet on the other leg. Never speak directly or indirectly things which are unpleasant to others. Avoid contempt of Vedas, Kings, sages, science and devas. Do not be jealous of women nor do place confidence in them. Always listen to virtuous talks, be devoted to the gods and observe righteous acts daily.

On your birthday worship the moon, gods and brahmās. Never take an oil bath on the fourth (caturthi), sixth (asatthi) and eighth (asamastha) days of lunar fortnight. Throw away your excretions far away from home. Never be unfriendly with venerable and noble people.
PULAHĀ. One of the Prajāpatis. The references about him in the Purāṇas are as follows:

1. Pulaha was one of the six spiritual sons of Brahmā. (Sloka 12, Chapter 204, Vana Parva.)
2. Ksāmā, wife of Pulaha, delivered three sons named Kardama, Urvārīvā and Sahishnu. (Chapter 10, Anśu 1, Vīsṇu Purāṇā.)
3. Pulaha got his wife Ksāmā, another son named Karmavṛstia (Chapter 20, Agni Purāṇā.)
4. Pulaha is included in the group of six powerful sages (Sloka 4, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva.)
5. From Pulaha were born the butterflies, lions, tigers, lambs, wolves, and Kimpurūyas. (Sloka 3, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva.)
6. Pulaha took part in the Jannottava of Arjuna. (Sloka 32, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva.)
7. Pulaha was also among the sages who dissuaded Parāśara from conducting a yāga to kill all the rākṣasas. (Sloka 9, Chapter 180, Ādi Parva.)
8. Pulaha was a member of the court of Indra. (Sloka 17, Chapter 7, Sābhā Parva.)
9. Pulaha was a worshipper of Brahmā. (Sloka 18, Chapter 7, Sābhā Parva.)
10. Pulaha did penance at a place on the shores of Alakamandā, a tributary of river Gaṇgā. (Sloka 6, Chapter 142, Vana Parva.)
11. He took part in the Jannottava of Sutrahmānya. (Sloka 9, Chapter 43, Salya Parva.)
12. Pulaha is included in the twenty-one Prajāpatis. (Sloka 33, Chapter 334, Śanti Parva.)
13. Pulaha is one among the group of Saptarṣi, called Cītrāṣkhyādīnīs. (Sloka 29, Chapter 335, Śanti Parva.)
14. Pulaha is also one of the Aṣṭa-prakṛtis. (Chapter 340, Śanti Parva.)

PULĀKA. A daitya who was transformed into an animal. There is a story in the Skanda Purāṇa about him thus—Pulaka performed penance and got from Śiva a boon that he should possess astonishing strength in his body. The demon used to entice even celestial ladies by means of his smell. He thus became a menace to the three worlds. Devas complained to Śiva. Siva got angry and commanded him to abandon his demoniac form and become an animal. Pulaka agreed to do so but requested Śiva to grant him the smell even in his state of an animal. Siva granted that.

PULASTYA. One of the Prajāpatis.

1) Birth and marriage. Pulastya is one of the six spiritual sons of Brahmā. Pulastya was born from the Kuru—i.e., of Brahmā. (Chapter 65, Ādi Parva and 1. Āgāvata.)

Pulastya had a son named Dattoli (Dambholi) of his wife Priti. This Dattoli in his previous birth was the Agastya of Sivavamūla Manvantara. (Chapter 10, Anśu 1, Vīsṇu Purāṇā.)

Pulastya had a son named Viśravas of his wife Harivṛddhi. (4th Skanda, Bhīgavac.) Mahābhārata states that Pulastya had two sons named Sandhyā and Pracīti. Harivṛddhi mother of Viśravas had another name, Manu. All these statements taken together indicate that Pulastya had four wives named Priti, Harivṛddhi, Sandhyā and Pracīti.

2) Genealogy. The race formed by Pulastya is given below: Pulastya got a son named Viśravas of his wife Havirbhhū alias Māṇi. Viśravas had two wives named Kaikast and Devavarmā alias Liśā. Kaikast had three sons, Rāvaca, Kumbhakarna, and Viṣhūṣaṇa and a daughter named Sūrya-pāgadhā. Rāvaca got of his wife Mandodari three sons, Meghamāda, Atśāyā and Akakumāra. Kumbhakarna got of his wife Vajrajāta that two sons named Kumbha and Nīkumbha. Viṣhūṣaṇa got of his wife Sārabha seven sons. Viśravas got of his wife Dāhila a son named Viśravasvāla (Kuberā). 3) Birth of Viśravas. In olden times in Tretāyuga Pulastya Mahāraja was doing penance on Mt. Meru. On a nearby hillock the sage Trāṇabindu was also doing penance. Celestial maidens, Nāga maidens and their lovers came to the Āśrama and by their erotic sports and dances vitiated the precepts of the Āśrama. Pulastya got angry and cursed all the maidens to become pregnant if they entered the Āśrama area. Without knowing this curse Māṇi, daughter of Trāṇabindu came to that spot and got pregnant of Pulastya. Pulastya then married her and the celebrated Mahāraja Viśravas was born to her.

4) How he saved Rāvana. Once Rāvana who started on a war campaign met Kārtikeyarjuna on the shores of Narmadā. Kārtikeyarjuna captured Rāvana in the former’s prison. Pulastya was grieved much to hear about the plight of his grandson and going to Kārtikeyarjuna and explaining things got the release of Rāvana. (Chapter 45, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa.)

5) Other details.
(i) Pulastya once blessed Parāśara, for the writing of Purāṇas. (Chapter 1, Anśu 1, Vīśṇu Purāṇā.)
(ii) Rākṣasa, Vanaras (monkeys), Kinnaras, Gandharvas and Yaksas were born from the intelligent Pulastya. (Sloka 7, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva.)
(iii) He was present for the Jannottava of Arjuna. (Sloka 52, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva.)
(iv) Parāśara once started to perform a Yāga to destroy all the rakṣasas and pulastya along with other sages went and persuaded him to withdraw from his venture. (Chapter 180, Ādi Parva.)
(v) Pulastya was a member of the court of Indra. (Sloka 17, Chapter 7, Sābhā Parva.)
(vi) Pulastya sits in the court of Brahmā and worships him. (Sloka 19, Chapter 11, Ādi Parva.)
(vii) Once Pulastya taught Bhima the importance and greatness of all the holy places of Bhārat. From then onwards Pulastya is called the Guru of Bhīma also. (Chapter 82, Vāna Parva.)
(viii) Pulastya got of his wife Gau a son named Kuberā. (Sloka 12, Chapter 274, Vana Parva.)
(ix) Viśravas was born of half of the body of Pulastya. (Chapter 274, Sloka 13, Ādi Parva.)
(x) Pulastya was present for the birth day celebrations of Sutrahmānya. (Sloka 9, Chapter 45, Salya Parva.)
(xi) Pulastya also visited Bhīmāya lying on his bed of arrows. (Sloka 10, Chapter 17, Śanti Parva.)
(xii) Pulastya was one among the twenty-one Prajāpatis. (See under Prajāpati.)
(xiii) Pulastya is included in the group of Saptarṣis, called Cītrāṣkhyādīnīs. (Sloka 29, Chapter 335, Śanti Parva.)
(siv) Pulastya is one of the Aṣṭa-prakṛtis. (Chapter 340, Śanti Parva.)
(xv) As synonyms of Pulastya the following terms are used: Brahmāra, Viṣpryag. (Mahābhārata.)
PULINDA(S) I. The people of the country of Pulinda. Information available regarding them from the Mahabharata is given below:
1) Pulindas were originally Ksatriyas. But they became Sūdras by a curse of the brahmans. (Chapter 33, Anu Asana Parva).
2) Pulindas who belong to the mlechcha tribe became rulers in Kaliyuga. (Chapter 186, Vana Parva).
3) Pulindas were born from the foam of the celestial cow Nandini of sage Vatsayana when she got enraged. (Chapter 165, Krātavanāśa Parva).
4) Bhima fought against the Pulindas and destroyed all their big cities. (Chapter 26, Sābhā Parva).
5) In the great Mahābhārata battle Pulindas fought on the side of Duryodhana. (Chapter 153, Udyağa Parva).

PULINDA(S) II. A mlechcha tribe of ancient Dakṣināmbārata. The Vāmanu Purāṇa gives some details regarding them.

PULINDI. See under Gandaka.

PULKASA. A son born to a Kśatriya woman of a Sūdra is called Pulkasa. (See under Cāturvarya).

PULOMA I. A demon. This aura belongs to the aura race born to Kṣapa of Diti. This aura fell in love with Puloni, wife of the sage Bharu. (See under Cavya, Satidevi, wife of Indra, was the daughter of Puloman. (Chapter 19, Agra Purāṇa).)

PULOMA II. (PULOMI). Wife of the sage Bharu. (See under Cavya for details).

PULOMA III. A demoness. Her sons are called Pulomideśas. Thir Pulomā had a sister named Kiśākā. Both of them together did dharma and pleased Brahma. They got a boon from Brahmā to the effect that their sons would never be killed. The Pulomās were given a golden city in the air to live and he declared that that city could never be destroyed by anyone. (Chapter 173, Vana Parva).

PUM, PUTA, PUTRA. Puta alias Put is a hell. Those who die without children go to this hell and he who saves one from this hell is called Putra (Sloka 36, Chapter 74, Ādi Parva).

Punāthānna naṣkādyastu
Trāyate pitaram suṭuḥ/
Tasāṃ putra iti prakāśai
Savayameva savayambhūva/
(See under Sloka 138, Chapter 9, Manusurta).
(Because a son of his own, by birth, saves a father from the hell called ‘Put’ he is called Putra).

There are twelve different kinds of Putras (sons).
1) Aurasaputra. A son born to a wife of his own caste begot by the husband himself is called aurashaputra.
2) Kṣetraputra. If one dies without children or is impotent or possessed of a disease, his wife is lawfully allowed to lie with the brother of the husband to get a child. The son born of such a union is called kṣetraputra.
3) Dīstaputra. When one is worrying miserably for getting a son and if, at that time a husband and wife willingly hand over a son born to them by mutual consent with the following words: ‘This son becomes your own from now with a religious sprinkling of water, such a son is called dīstaputra.
4) Kṛtrimaputra. A son adopted from one’s own caste for the purpose of doing the obsequial ceremonies for the manes is called Kṛtrimaputra.

1) Gādhopanna. A son born to one’s wife by another man is called Gādhopanna.
2) Apadmaputra. When a son is rejected by either a father or mother or by both and that son is taken care of and brought up by another man, that son becomes an apadmaputra.
3) Kṣetraputra. If a son is born to a virgin before marriage while living with her father, that son is called a Kṣetraputra.
4) Sūdramaputra. When a girl is married while pregnant the son born to her after marriage is called a Sūdramaputra.
5) Kurukṣetraputra. A son purchased and brought up by a servitor man is called Kurukṣetraputra.
6) Paunārādhana. A son born to a woman after becoming a widow or after being divorced by her husband and who willingly going with another man is called Paunārādhana.
7) Śravānirūpa. When a son after becoming an orphan or after being abandoned by his parents goes willingly to another man and remains with him as his son, that son is called śravānirūpa.
8) Śravānirūpa. A son born to a brahman as a Sūdra’s wife.

PUNARJANMA. It is the theory that the soul of a man is born again after his death. The Purāṇas and Vedas contain many statements regarding this of which the following are a few.
1) What is Death? When the Jīvātma (soul) of an individual leaves his body with all its upādhis (attributes and adjuncts) it is called Death. By upādhis are meant the following four things: (i) Mind and its senses, (ii) The five Prāṇas namely Prāna, Apana, Udāna, Vyāna and Samāna. (iii) The Śūkas arūḍa, that is, the Prānas manojñānako asaṅghāta (the subtle body that is invisible with the grosser elements) (iv) Karman (action)
All these three follow the soul even after his death. Only when the soul attains mokṣa (salvation) to the upādhi leave it. It is the soul or the ātma through dharma (speech), chāri (life), Kṛma (the dark fortnight), daksināyaka (the sun’s passage south of the equator), pūrṇālya (world of the manes) and Ākāśa (ether). He enjoys the rewards of the deeds done on earth there and reserving some to be enjoyed or suffered in his next birth the soul with the upādhis comes back to earth to enter another body. The soul comes back to earth through ether, water, air, fire, light, odour, taste, touch, sound, ether, space, āantage, vyāsa, āsante, vyāsa, Tila, Purusabija and strigarbha.

When the Jīvātma goes to Candra its padarthavā (attribute) diminishes gradually and when it comes back to earth it increases gradually. Thus the jīvātma takes thousands of births going to and from the moon. The jívátma coming back from the moon evolves from a plant to man. Plants are the food of man and the soul entering the plant enters the puruṣaśāja (semen virile) through food. The souls coming out as rebirths do accept wombs according to a definite principle. In the order of the merit of their good deeds on earth they are born in Brahmā, Kṣitija, Vaśistha, or Śūlaka wombs. The souls with great sins are born as worms and insects. The passage of the soul from earth to Candra and vice versa is called Pitrāyana.

(ii) Āparādhyāsājas. There are some people who do not consider performance of religious rites as important but worship Brahmā. They do not treat Brahmā and jívātmā as one but view them as separate entities. Such devotees are called Āparādhyāsājas. Their souls as soon as they leave the body move towards Āparābrahman. The path to Āparābrahman is through Agni, Jyotis, dayātma, Suklāpaka (the white fortnight), Uttarāyana (the passage of the sun to the north), samvatara (year), Śūrya (sun), Candra (moon) and Vidyut (lightning). The dhātuyas (blessed ones) who attain Vidyut go to Varanaksa, Indrākṣa and Pījāpātaka and then move with Āparābrahman (the supreme being). This path is called Āparāyana. Such for both Pitrāyana and Āparāyana the jívātmā has to depend upon Candra it is to be surmised that there is some special connection between jívātmā and Candra. Those who attain Āparābrahman by the path of Āparāyana do not come back to earth. They have no rebirths. Those who have merged with Āparābrahman attain Brahmā by the end of a life.

The sect who attain Āparābrahman do not believe that jívātmā and Brahmā are one and view them separately attain Āparābrahman through the merger with Āparābrahman. This is called Kramamukti. Some sages are of opinion that those who attain Āparābrahman enjoy prosperity by mind. Those who live attached to worldly pleasures but not do things prohibited by the Vedas attain Purūksha by the path of Daksinayana. After enjoying all the accrued pūnya there, they come back again to earth to be born again.

(12) Pāțhāpānā. The jívātmā of one who does not follow the injunctions of śāstras correctly does not attain Candra-loka. It is born again as wasps and insects attaining a place called Trīyā. There is no evidence in the Purāṇas of their surviving maksa. How a soul subjected to rebirths attains maksa is described in the ‘Maksa’ (Chândogya Upaniṣad, Gītā, Bhāgavat, Śvetāṣṭara Upaniṣad).

PUN ARVASU ĀTREYA. An ancient preceptor of Ayurveda. He was the Guru of Aipindra, author of the book ‘Agniśeṣastra’ which is the basis of Caraka-samhitā and also of his classmates like Bhaṭa.
Punarvasu was the son of the sage Atri who was one of the spiritual sons of Brahmā. In support of this statement it can be found in many places in Caraka-samhitā his name referred to as ‘Ātrimatu’ or Atri-svadana.

Atri-svadana was also a learned preceptor of Ayurveda. According to Kaśyapa-samhitā Devendra taught Ayurveda to Kaśyapa, Vaśishta, Atri and Bṛha. The incomplete work ‘Ayuṛvedaśaṅkha-sāstra’ by Atri was completed by Punarvasu according to AIPAGH śa.
Punarvasu’s mother’s name was Candrabhāgā. Getting knowledge in Ayurveda from his father and also from Brahmā, Punarvasu became an authority on Ayurveda. His important work is ‘Ātreyasaṁhitā’. There are about thirty prescriptions in his name. The prescriptions regarding ‘Balātāilā’ and ‘Anrūtātiśā’ are found in Caraka-samhitā.

PUNASANDRA. A sacred place. This is situated in the Jamadagni-vādī in Śrīparvaksiśtra. (Sūka 12, Chapter 86, Vana Parva).
PUNGU. A King of Śrīyavamsa (solar race). He was the son of Harita and father of Vijaya. (Brahmanda Purāṇa, Chapter 1).

PUNDARIKA I. A King born of the race of Śrī Rīm. He was the son of Nisadhī and father of Kṣemadhavanī. (9th Sānādha, Bṛhāvāta).

PUNDARIKA II. One of the Astadīgajas (elephants guarding the eight zones). (See under Astadīgajas).

PUNDARIKA III. A brahmin who lived during the period of Nārada. Nārada once held a scholarly conversation with him on virtue. He saw Mahāvīnu in person and attained sāntayāna (intimate union with a deity). (Chapter 124, Aṅgāśāna Parva).

PUNDARIKA IV. A great yājña. (Sūka 83, Chapter 5, Sāsā Parva).

PUNDARIKA V. A holy place situated on the border of Kuruksetra. One who bathes in a sacred pond there would get the benefit of doing a Pundarikayājña. (Sūka 83, Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

PUNDARIKA VI. A nāmph. This maiden was present for the Jamotasa of Atriya and performed a dance. (Sūka 13, Chapter 85, Atri Parva).

PUNDARIKAMUKHA. An eminent serpent King. His subjects, Pundarikamukhas, lived with him in the beautiful serpent-city surrounded on all sides by gold castles. Gandharvas and Kinnaras of both sexes lived inside the city. A Gandharva of name Lālita fell in love with a Gandharva lady named Lalitā and they lived there happily enjoying amorous sports. One day Pundarikamukha held a music concert which Lalita was asked to sing as the leading musician. His love Lalitā was absent at the assembly and Lalita could not sing or dance in proper form that day. Karkatā, a serpent chief, privately informed his King the reason for the poor display of Lalita that day. The King got angry and cursed Lalita thus: ‘Wicked one, you will be born as a man-eating rākṣasa. This is the penalty for thinking about your wife while singing for me.’ Lalita immediately became an ugly, fierce-looking demon. Lalita deeply mourned over this pitiable plight of her husband and followed him in the forests where he roamed about making loud roaring sounds. While they were thus wandering in the forests, they found a pretty āśrama in which there was an ascetic engaged in penance. Lalitā stood before him with tears rolling down her cheeks. When the sage opened his eyes Lalitā told him that she was the daughter of the Gandharva named Viradhavanī and that her husband had become a demon by the curse of the serpent King Pundarikamukha. The sage advised her to observe Ekāśa Vraja. She observed the Vraja with devotion and her husband Lalitā, was freed from the curse. He became the former handsome Gandharva once again. They then went back to Gandharvaloka. (Chapter 49, Bṛha 4, Padma Purāṇa).
PUNJARIVAKA. A Vīvadeva. (Chapter 91, Amuśāna Parva).

PUNJARI I. An ancient city in Bihāra. (Śloka 224, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva).

PUNJARI II. An ancient region of Bihāra. The region comprised then the present district of Mālāda, certain portions on the east coast of river Kosi and certain portions of Dinājpur. King Pāṇḍu conquered Punjāra. (Chapter 112, Ādi Parva). The people of Punjāra came to the Kaṇḍavas of Yudhīshthira with presents. The Pāṇḍavakāvasādava mentioned in the Bhāgavata was the King of Punjāra. Karna and Arjuna conquered this country at different times. (Chapter 32, Sābha Parva; Chapter 8, Karna Parva; Chapter 82, Āvamedhikā Parva).

PUNJIKASTHALA. A nymph. She was the servant-maid of Brāhpasi. One day she was collecting flowers for her Goddess in a garden when a set of young men and women came to the garden for amorous sports. They were roaming about in the garden in pairs doing all sorts of erotic acts and Punjikasthala stood watching them for some time with passion aroused in her. She returned to the aśrama thinking all the way about her miserable lot of having no husband to enjoy a similar life. So when she returned to the aśrama and on seeing Brāhpasi she caught hold of him by the hand and pleaded to satisfy her passion. Brāhpasi was angry at this improper request and cursed her. "You have become rotten. You have become lustful by seeing the amorous sports of others. May you be born as a monkey. Get out of this aśrama." Punjikasthala was full of grief when she returned to the aśrama and hearing this threat to her, she begged her Goddess to grant her release from the curse. She returned to him and said "Go and enjoy your full sexual life with a lover whom you like best. Then you will get a son from the virility of Siva. When that son is born you will be released from the curse and you will go to heaven." She became immediately a monkey girl named Aśojā and married a monkey named Kauhā and lived for many years increasing an amorous life. She did not get a child even after several years and then she prayed to Siva for a child.

It was at that time that Pārvatī and Paramēśvarī played amorous sports in the form of monkeys and Parvati became pregnant. Parvati expressed reluctance to be the mother of a monkey child and then Siva by his divine powers deposited his semen virile through Vayubhūṣagavān (god of wind) into the womb of Aśojā who was then praying to him for a child. Coming to know of this through Nārada and fearing that his lordship over the monkeys would be lost if such a monkey were born to Aśojā Bali poured into the belly of Aśojā molten liquid of pāñcakoṭha (five metals). Aśojā was not the least injured and she gave birth in due course to a monkey son who became the celebrated Hanumān, the life-force of the Rāma-Rāvana tussle. (Pārvatīkāla, Kamba Ramayana; Kśīkindhā Kāpila, Vālmiki Rāmāyana).

This Punjikasthala belongs to the famous set of eleven devakanyākās. They are: Menaṅā, Sahanāyā, Karmikā, Punjikasthala, Kṛṣṇakā, Ghrāci, Pārvacitti, Uloci, Pramloci, Urvaci and Viśvācī. These were the celebrated courtesans of Svaraga. (Chapter 123, Ādi Parva).

Punjikasthala was the dancer at the court of Kubera. (Chapter 10, Sābha Parva). She took part in the Kaṇḍavas of Arjuna. (Chapter 122, Ādi Parva).

PONTĀNAM NAMBUṬIRI.

1) General Information. The slām (house) of this Nambūṭiri, who was a contemporary of Meppattur Nārāyaṇa Bhāṭṭātirī, was in Nennem anadā of the taluk of Vaiṭivānādu in south Mālsār. Though some say that his original name was Brahmadattā there are no sufficient records to support the statement. His Guru according to the work Śri Kṛṣṇaśāstra was a nambūṭiri named Nīlakṣaṇa. Puntānām had only ordinary education. He worshipped Kṛṣṇa at the temple of Guriyāvā at a very long time and became a great devotee of Kṛṣṇa. He lived for ninety years. When he became very old he found it difficult to come to Guriyāvā and at one day he bade farewell to the deity. Then a voice from heaven said "Don't worry. I will be near you on your left side." He went and sat on a hill named Tirumindhia and to his astonishment ecstasy he found Kṛṣṇa sitting on his left side. He then constructed a temple there and installed his deity Kṛṣṇa there and continued his worship. That was the Vānapura (left place) of Puntānām.

2) Kṛṣṇa (Krishna). The following are the works of Puntānām: (1) Bhāṣākaraśāstra (ii) Kāmarākṣaraśāstra (iii) Janapadāvā (iv) Pathābhaktabhāva (v) Ghanasāgara (vi) Nārāyaṇakārṇa (vii) Gokulāmukhā (viii) Aṣṭahastamahāśāstra (ix) Śrīkaṇṭaśāstra (x) Aṣṭakārṇa (xi) Brahmapuraskandakārṇa (xii) Gopālakārṇa (xiii) Gautarkārṇa (xiv) Vānapuruśaśāstra (xv) Padmanābhaśāstra (xvi) Vīvahodānāśāstra (xvii) Jayaśrī (xviii) Vānapuruśaśāstra (xix) Śrī Rāma Kirtana (xx) Mukundakārṇa (xxi) Devaratnaśāstra. Besides these he has composed some philosophical songs in Tamil also.

3) Ṛṣisandha. Puntānām got a son after a long time of prayer and for the ceremony of Annaprāśana (feeding rice for the first time) all the people of his community were invited. The women who came for the function threw their upper garments on to the cradle where the little child was allocated to death. Puntānām thereafter became disgusted with life and Jñānappāna was written at that time.

4) Ṛṣisandha. Puntānām spent most of his time in the temple of Guriyāvā after the death of his child. It was at this same time that the great scholar Nārāyaṇabhāṭṭātirī, author of the famous Nārāyaṇa, was in the temple worshipping the deity there. Puntānām had written a poem Santanaopallam in the pāṇi style and he took it to the great temple Nārāyaṇa Bhāṭṭātirī for correction. With the goodness that was his nature he said "What is there for correction in a Malayalam poem? Nothing but blunders will there be in it. Especially when Puntānām is not well-versed in Sanskrit grammar. It will therefore be full of mistakes." Puntānām could not contain the rebuff and he wept bitterly. Then from the inside of the temple came a voice which said "Though Puntānām is not a grammarian like you Bhāṭṭātirī, he is a greater devotee of mine than you. His Bhakti is more appealing tome than your vibhakti." The divine voice made Bhāṭṭātirī feel sorry and ashamed of his behaviour and he begged Puntānām to grant him pardon and immediately went through his work giving suggestions for improvement.

PUNYA II

The name of the sage Ditghatama. The story of Punya as found in Jñānaviśvāmi is the following:

There is a mountain called Mahendra in jambhūdvipa. Dīghatama, who was doing penance there, had two sons named Punya and Pavana. Punnakumāra grew up into a boy abounding in virtues. Pavana was not so beneficent. When after some time Dīghatama, the father died, Punnakumāra controlling his sorrow did not allow the funeral rites; but Pavana, unable to control his sorrow left the place and wandered in the forests weeping bitterly. After some days Punnakumāra went in search of his brother and on finding him comforted him, and told him that there was nothing to be worried about their father's death. On hearing the learned and moral teachings of Punya, Pavana also got enlightened and after living in that forest for a number of years both of them abandoned their lives.

PUNYA III

The name of the Āraṇa of the sage Vihārakanda. (Śloka 23, Chapter 110, Vana Parva.)

PURAṆJAYA

A king. The story of this king was told to king Priyavrata by Nārada to illustrate the truth that those who kill yajña cows on earth would surely suffer its consequences at one time or another.

Puraṇajaya once started on a tour after killing a few yajña cows. His aim was to build a new palace. After walking alone for a long time he reached the neighborhood of Himalaya. While wandering in the forests he saw a beautiful garden and by its side a large castle with nine tower-gates. It was the residence of the Gandharva lady Puraṇajaya. She had innumerable girl companions and her castle was guarded by a five-hooded cobra called Prayāra.

Puraṇajaya fell in love with Puraṇajaya at first sight and their greetings and subsequent talks ended in their marriage. Thus Puraṇajaya became the husband of Puraṇajaya and they lived happily an erotic life for a hundred years. Then one day the king went for hunting alone. Even that separation for a little while from Puraṇajaya was unbearable to Puraṇajaya and he returned to his palace soon. Puraṇajaya did not come to receive him. On enquiry her companions informed the king that Puraṇajaya was lying on the floor with grief unable to bear the separation from the king. Puraṇajaya consoled her and they lived again for many years in perfect happiness. Then one thing happened. Kala had a daughter named Kākānayakā who lived a very wicked and vicious life. She wanted to get married but nobody wanted to be her husband. She went about in search of a husband. Puru became her husband for some time but she was soon divorced by him. She approached a Yavana king named Bhaya who had a brother called Prayāra. Bhaya did not want to take that woman as his wife and sent her back with a boon that she could stand in hiding and enjoy all men she liked. He sent his brother Prayāra for her help. She roamed about like that for some time and came back again to Bhaya. Kākānayakā, Bhaya and Prayāra joined together and gathering a strong army attacked Puraṇajaya. A grim battle followed which lasted for several years in the end of which Puraṇajaya was defeated and taken captive. While he was being taken as a prisoner a herd of wild cows attacked Puraṇajaya and he was killed. After that he was born as a princess named Vaidarbi. Malavahāva, king of Pandy, married her and got seven celebrated sons. Agastyā married the daughter of Malayadivasa. (4th Śakhi, Bhagavata.)

PURAṆJAYA

A king of Ayodhyā. See under Kākutthā.
PURĀṆA.

1) General information. The Amarakosa describes a Purāṇa thus:

Sargas pratiṣṭhāyata
Varnā manvantaraṁ ca
VarnāṆacaritān ca
Purāṇaṁ pāñ-talakaṁyaṁ dhārāṁ vā.

According to this definition, Purāṇa is one which describes Sarga, Pratistha, Varṇa, Manvantara and VarṇāṆacara. Among these Sarga and Pratistha are natural creation and renovation (Cosmogony). Varṇa means history of sages and patriarchs. By Manvantara is meant the period of different Manus. VarṇāṆacarita means Genealogy of kings. In the Purāṇas which are current now some of these five divisions are wanting.

Statements about Purāṇas are found even in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa. Therefore it is to be surmised that Purāṇas existed even before historic times. Mahbhārata has used the term Purāṇa to mean stories about devas and siddhas. The Upāntas have said that Purāṇas are śiṣṭhas and as such constitute the fifth Veda. Smrti says that Purāṇas are commentaries on Vedas. From all these statements it can be gathered that Purāṇas have a hoary past. The great Sanskrit scholar Rangācārya has defined Purāṇa as Purāṇa (Purāṇa = old; nava = new) meaning things which are as good as new though existing from olden times. Though there are large portions of wide imagination dealing with the human side in the Purāṇas many truths about the universe can be grasped from them. All the Purāṇas contain praises of Brahman, Viṣṇu and Mahēsvara. In most of the Purāṇas old, new additions and interpolations are seen. The Purāṇas in original were in existence before Christ.

Akhyaśāsīcāpyūpakhyānaṁ
Gāthāḥbhiḥ Kalpaśaddhīpiḥ
Purāṇāśāhātyaṁ cakre
Purāṇāśāhātyaṁ cakre
(Slokā 15, Chapter 6, Anuśa 5, Viṣṇu Purāṇa)

Aṣṭadā Purāṇaṁ
Kṛtvā Satyavattuñcaḥ Bhāratākhyānamakhilam
Cakre tadupamaharaṁ
(Slokā 72, Chapter 53, Matsya Purāṇa)

From the above it can be gathered that it was Viṣṇu who composed all the Purāṇas, Bāna who lived in the seventh century A.D. speaks about Viṣṇu Purāṇa. Kumārila Bhaṭṭa who lived in the eighth century and Śaṅkaracārya who lived in the ninth century speak about the Purāṇas. Purāṇas must have therefore taken their present forms before the sixth or seventh century A.D.

There are eighteen major Purāṇas and another eighteen minor ones. The major Purāṇas contain over four lakhs of Slokas, All the Purāṇas are in verses like Mahābhārata. But none of them is as good as Mahābhārata as a piece of literature. Still the Purāṇas splendidly reflect the culture of Bharata. The Purāṇas are the basis of the bulk of Indian thinking on matters social, cultural, religious and political. Even the Indian art has taken form from the Purāṇas. The Purāṇas are classified into three, those pertaining to Viṣṇu and those to Śiva.

2) Viṣṇu-based Purāṇas.

(i) Viṣṇu Purāṇa. This is the most important of all the Purāṇas. This contains the five technical divisions of the Purāṇa. This is divided into six sections. This deals with the events of Vāsudeva Kṛṣṇa and contains twenty-three thousand ślokas. The theme is the ten incarnations of Mahāviṣṇu. Viṣṇu Purāṇa is the most ancient of all the Purāṇas and has got the name Purāṇatrata (gem of Purāṇas).

The method of narration is in the form of teaching the disciple Maṇḍavīya by Sage Parāśara. Since there is a reference in it to the Maurya dynasty it is to be surmised that this was composed in the first or second century A.D. The narrator himself states thus:—

"Viṣṇu an adept in the composition of Purāṇas composed this Purāṇasāntithi with śiśyānum, Upāśīyunānum, gāthānum and Kalpaśāyinānum. A Śūta named Raurahṛṣaṇa was Viṣṇu’s chief disciple. The broad-minded Viṣṇu gave that sāmyāta to that sūta. Raurahṛṣaṇa had six disciples named Sumati, Agnivasā, Mitṛvṛṣi Śāntāpyana, Akṣaravatā, and Śāvarjī. Of these Akṣavatā, Śāvarjī and Śāntāpyana have composed Purāṇasāntithi. There is yet another sāmyāta composed by Raurahṛṣaṇa which was the basis of the samhitās of his three disciples. I have composed Viṣṇu Purāṇa basing on these samhitās.

If a man gives as gift a book of Viṣṇu Purāṇa on the full-moon day in the month of Āśādha (July) with Jaladheera he will attain Viṣṇupāda.

(ii) Bhāgavata Purāṇa. This is the most popular and widely circulated of all the Purāṇas. It is dear to Viṣṇu-devotees. Divided into twelve Skandhas this contains eighteen thousand ślokas. All the incarnations of Viṣṇu are described in this. The most interesting Skanda is the tenth Skanda in which the author has described the life and activities of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. There was once a belief that it was Bāladeva who lived in the thirteenth century A.D. that had composed this Purāṇa. But this belief was smashed when it was found that Vaiśānaka of Bengal who lived in the eleventh century A.D. had made reference to this Purāṇa. Bhāgavata accepts Kapila and Buddha as incarnations of Viṣṇu. This has been translated into all Indian languages. This book has to be given as gift on the full-moon day in the month of Pṛṣṭhipada (September). Agni Purāṇa instructs that this book is to be given along with a golden image of a lion.

(iii) Nārāyaṇa Purāṇa. This is in the form of a narration by Nārada to Saṁskūta. This book of twenty-five thousand verses Nārada teaches the dharmas of Bhṛka. It is of viṣṇu gift on the full-moon day in the month of Āśādha there will be great prosperity.

(iv) Garuda Purāṇa. This is in the form of instructions for Garuda by Viṣṇu. This deals with astronomy, medicine, grammar, and with the structure and qualities of diamonds. This Purāṇa is dear to Vānayāνeś. The latter half of this Purāṇa deals with life after death. The Hindus of north-India generally read this Purāṇa while cremating the bodies of the dead. This has given great importance to the origin of Garuda. There are eight thousand verses in this book. This book can be given as gift along with an image in gold of a swan to get prosperity.

(v) Padma Purāṇa (Pādma Purāṇa). This is divided into six Khaṇḍas comprising fifty-five thousand verses. The six Khandas are Srāvakhaṇḍa, Bhūmikaṇḍa, Svargakhaṇḍa, Pāralakhaṇḍa, Uttarakhaṇḍa and Kṛṣṇya-gaṇa. The Uttarakhaṇḍa describes the importance of all months and also the lotus, the seal of Brahmā. This contains the stories of Śakuntalā and Śrī Rāma as described by Kālidāsa in his works Śakuntalā and Rāghuvanśa which has made some believe that this Purāṇa was written after Kālidāsa.
If this Purāṇa is given as gift with a cow in the month of djėśā (June) it brings prosperity.
(vii) Varāhā Purāṇa. The mode of narration is in the form of narrating the story by Varāhā, the third incarnation of Viṣṇu. The theme is about holy places and mantras. It states that the goddess of earth prayed to Mahāviṣṇu and that prayer took the form of a goddess.
This book contains fourteen thousand verses. If one copies down this Purāṇa and gives it as gift along with a golden image of Viṣṇu on the full-moon day in the month of Cāitra (April) one will attain Viṣṇuloka.
B. Purāṇas relating to Brahmā.
(i) Brahma Purāṇa. This is in the form of achnings by Brahmā to Dakṣa. This contains twenty-five thousand verses. This is called Ādi Purāṇa also. There is a special treatise in this book on Orissa, an ancient holy region of Brahmā. There is in this a special annexure explaining the intimacy between Śiva and Śūrya which is a deviation from other Purāṇas. Brahma Purāṇa states about a śūryakṣaṇa (sun-temple) situated at a place called Konarka near the holy place of Puri, installed there in the year 1241 A.D. If this Purāṇa along with Jalādhari is given as a gift on the full-moon day in the month of Vaiśakh (May) the donor will attain heaven.
(ii) Brahmāpuraṇa Purāṇa. This deals with the origin of the universe as told by Brahmā. In the beginning there was a golden egg and the prapāncha (universe with its activities) was formed out of it. Portions of Adhvāma Rāmāyana, references to Rādhā and Kṛṣṇa and the incarnation of Parasurāma are included in this.
This book contains twelve thousand verses and it is believed to be utama (best) to give this book as a gift to a brahmin.
(iii) Brahma-mahāpurāṇa Purāṇa. This was instructed to Śāvagīa by Nārada. The theme is the story of Rāma-nātaka. There are four kāṇḍas in this Purāṇa called It duṣankunda, Pārtikākunda, Gancṣakunda and Kṛṣṇaāmankunda. This deals with Prapāncaṣṭi (creation of the universe). It says that Prapānca is nothing but the Vaiśvarṇa (transformation) of Brahmā. It is considered to be holy to give this book containing eighteen thousand verses as a gift on the full-moon day in the month of Māgha (February).
(iv) Mārkandeya Purāṇa. This is one of the ancient Purāṇas. There are many stories regarding Indra, Śūrya and Agni in this. This includes a division called Devimāhātya, containing praises about the goddess Durgā. This contains nine thousand verses and it is considered as utama (best) to give this book as a gift to a brahmin on a full-moon day in the month of Kārttikeya (November).
(v) Bhāṣya Purāṇa. This is what is told to Manu by Śūrya (Sun). This contains statements about future events. The book praises the worship of Śūrya (Sun), Agni (fire) and Nāga (serpent). There is an annexure dealing with the several holy places of Bhārata and the rights of pilgrims. The book contains fourteen thousand verses and it is considered to be utama (best) to give this book along with triscal as a gift to a brahmin on the full-moon day in the month of Pañcava (January).
(vi) Vaimana Purāṇa. There is a great similarity between the contents of this Purāṇa and that of Varāhā Purāṇa.
All the incarnations of Viṣṇu from Viṣṇu onwards are described in this Purāṇa. The scene of Śiva marying Parvati is vividly described in this book. This Purāṇa contains sixteen thousand verses and it is considered to be utama (best) to give this book as a gift in the autumn season or at the time of Viṣṇuva to a brahmin.
C. Purāṇas relating to Śiva.
(i) Vaiṣṇava Purāṇa. This Purāṇa is told by Viṣṇu. Banabhāṣa who lived in the seventh century A.D. makes references to this Purāṇa in his works. There are many references in this Purāṇa about the Gauḍa Kings who ruled Bhārata in the 6th century A.D. So it believed that this Purāṇa must have been written in the fifth or sixth century A.D. The book contains plenty of verses in praise of Śiva. There are fourteen thousand verses in the Vaiṣṇava Purāṇa and it is considered to be best to give this book as a gift to a brahmin on the full-moon day in the month of Śrāvana (August).
(ii) Linga Purāṇa. This book contains instructions of Śiva on Dharma sitting in the form of linga (Phalas). The twentyeight different forms of Śiva are described in this. This contains twelve thousand verses and if this book is given as a gift to a brahmin with īlādheenu on the full-moon day in the month of Phalguna (March) the donor will attain Svāyamprabhā.
(iii) Skanda Purāṇa. This Purāṇa is narrated by Skanda.
The theme is the slaughter of the demon Tārākṣaṇa by Skanda (Subrahmānya). There is a great similarity between this Purāṇa and the Kumāra-sambhava of Kālidāsa. There are eightyfour thousand verses in this Purāṇa and giving this book as a gift is thought to be good.
(iv) Agni Purāṇa. This Purāṇa was instructed to the gage Viṣṇu by Agnidvāra. There are several references in this to Śiva-linga and Durgā-devi. The incarnations of Rāma and Kṛṣṇa are also dealt with in this.
Distinct from other Purāṇas this book deals with arts and science like Kavyalakārāntās (poetry, dramas, figures of speech), Jyotishāstra (Astronomy) and Śilpakalā (architecture). This Purāṇa contains twelve thousand verses and is capable of imparting knowledge on all arts and sciences.
(v) Mātasya Purāṇa. This Purāṇa was taught to Manu by Mātasya, the incarnation of Viṣṇu. The incarnation of Mātasya is dealt in this. Several subjects like Jainamatha (religion of Jainism), Buddhama (Buddhism), Nāyakāraṇa (histrionics) and Andharaśavamsa (kin-dom and Kings of Andhra) are discussed in this book.
The book contains thirteen thousand verses and this is to be given as gift along with a golden image of a fish at the time of Viṣṇuva.
(vi) Kāraṇa Purāṇa. This Purāṇa is taught by Kāraṇa-murti (incarnation of Viṣṇu as Kāraṇa (tortoise) while narrating the story of Indradyumna at Pālaṇa.
All the seven islands and seven oceans are described in this book. Bhārata is situated in the centre of all these and is called Jambūdīvāpa. Though it is believed that there were four sambhātas for this, only the Brahmāsambhāta is available now. It includes I varagīa and Vyāsagīa.
The book contains eight thousand verses and is to be given as gift along with a golden image of tortoise.3) (Śṛṣṭakāśī.) There are eighteen minor Purāṇas besides the eighteen major ones. They are—(1) Sanatkumāra (2) Nārāyaṇī (3) Nārādayya (4) Śiva (5) Dvīvāvonā (6) Kāpila (7) Mānava (8) Upanās (9) Vāruṇa (10) Kālika (11) Śambha (12) Saura (13) Aḍiśṭva (14) Māheśvara (15) Devbhūmaka (16) Vāsishtha (17) Vaiṣṇavendra (18) Nīlānata Purāṇa.

These two Upapurāṇas mentioned lastly are associated with Kashmir. The first is about the Vaiṣṇava religion there and the second about the wise saying of a Nāga king of the place called Nīla. (Purāṇas; History of Sanskrit Literature).

Pūrāṇa. An ancient sage. He was one among the four who visited Bṛhaspati lying on his bed of arrows. (Sloka 12, Chapter 47 Satīt Parvā).

Pūrṇa III. The name of the titus (lunar days) Pāncama, Dīśam and Paścātī day. Vishvishravā was born on the Pāncama day called Pūrṇa. (Sloka 6, Chapter 122, Ādi Parvā).

Pūrṇabhādra I. A celebrated serpent of the family of Kaśyapa. (Sloka 12, Chapter 33, Ādi Parvā).

Pūrṇabhādra II. The son of a Yaksas named Kuṭakabhadra living on the mountain Gandāmanādana. He had a son named Harikēsa (Pīngala). Harikēsa was a devotee of Śiva and major one. A Mahādharma who was a devotee of Kuṭakabhadra away from his house. Harikēsa was then taken care of by Śiva and made one of his attendants. (Matsya Pūrāṇa, Chapter 18).

Pūrṇamukha. A serpent born of the race of Ďṛṭarashtra. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpaśastra of Janamejaya. (Sloka 1, Chapter 57, Ādi Parvā).

Pūrṇāṅgada. A serpent born of the family of Ďṛṭarashtra. This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpaśastra of Janamejaya. (Sloka 16, Chapter 57, Ādi Parvā).

Pūrṇāyuṣ. A Devagandharva who was the son of Kaśyapa of his wife Pradā. (Sloka 46, Chapter 63, Ādi Parvā).

Pūrocanā. A minister of Duryodhana. It was under the guidance of this minister that the lac-palace was constructed and set fire to in order to kill the Pandavas. Purocanā was also burnt to death when the lac-palace was destroyed by fire. (See under Arakālā).

Pūrojava. The youngest son of the Vāsū, Prāna, born to him of his wife Ārjuna. (Gīth Kandā, Bahūtāvara).

Pūrovastu. A king of the Āga line of kings. He was the son of Bṛhaspati. He ruled over the country of Gāndhāra. (Chapter 270, Agni Pūrāṇa).

Pūrū I. A Kṣatriya King. He was the son of Manu. Manu had eleven sons of his wife Naṣṣā. (Sloka 22, Chapter 90, Vana Parvā).

Pūrū II. A mountain. (Sloka 22, Chapter 90, Vana Parvā).

Pūrū I. A celebrated king of Gandhavasā. 1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Vīṣṇu are Brahmā—Atri—Candra—Buddha—Purūrasvā—Āyu—Naśīna—Yāyā—Pūrū. Yāyā had two wives named Sārṇiśṭha and Devayāni. Sārṇiśṭha gave birth to Druhyu, Auā and Purū. Devayāni gave birth to Yadu and Turavas. 2) Purū became king. Yāyā, Purū's father, was turned into an old man by a curse of Śukadevā. The king called all his sons to his side and requested each to take his old age and give him their youth. All the elder sons refused to do it but Purū agreed to do so. Taking the youth of Purū, his father, Yāyā lived a handsome life for a thousand years. Then the king gave back Purū his youth and crowned him as the heir apparent to his kingdom. (See under Devayāni). 3) Other details. (i) Purū got of his wife Kaushalyā alas Pāṇti three sons named Janamejaya (Prāvirā), Tīvra and Raudrā. (Chapter 94, Ādi Parvā). (ii) After his death Purū entered the court of Yama. Sloka 8, Chapter 8, Sahā Parvā). (iii) Purū along with Indra in the latter's Vimaṇa witnessed the war between Arjuna and the Kauravas. (Sloka 10, Chapter 56, Vināśita Parvā). (iv) A king called Māndhātī once defeated Purū in a battle. (Sloka 10, Chapter 62, Drona Parvā).

Pūrū II. The name of the character of Arjuna. (Sloka 30, Chapter 33, Sahā Parvā).

Pūrcchē. (Pūrcchē). A sage praised in the Rgveda. He was the son of Dīsidā (Māndhātā 1, Rgveda).

Pūrūjīt. A king who was the son of Kuntībhūja and brother of Kuntī, mother of the Pandavas. He had a brother named Kuntībhūja. In the great battle he fought against Durmuksa of the Kaurava army when he died Purūjīt went to Yamaloka. (Chapter 14, Sahā Parvā; Chapter 6, Karṇa Parvā; Chapter 33, Drona Parvā).

Pūrūkutsa. The sons born to the celebrated king, Māndhātā of his wife Bindumati. (See under Māndhātā for Genealogy). Pūrūkutsa had a brother named Maitrakanda. Descending in order from Pūrūkutsa were Aṇāya—Bṛhadāvā—Haryāvata—Tridhāvata—Ārupa—Satyaṃvatra—Trīṇakā. One Pūrūkutsa is praised in the Rgveda. It is not known whether both are one and the same person. Pūrūkutsa with his wife Narmādādevi went to the forest of Kuruksetra and doing penance there attained moksa. (Chapter 20, Ārjunavāsikā Parvā).

Pūrūmitra. A king of Purūvantas. He was the son of Bhāpatī. Bhāpatī had two more sons named Ajamidhā and Dūmidhā. Of these three sons the most valiant Ajamidhā became the propagator of the dynasty. (Chapter 276, Purūnā).
PURUMITRA. II. The first Mapadala of the R̥ṣveda mentions a R̥ṣi named Vinvada marrying the daughter of Purus̥tra.

PURUNIṢṬHA. See under Purus̥ṭha.

PURURAVAS I. A prominent king of Chandravamsa (lunar race).

1) Origin of Chandravamsa and birth of Pururavas. Describing in order from Brahmana came Atri—Candra—Buddha Pururavas. The dynasty which came from Candra was called the Chandravamsa. Though Buddha was the first king of Chandravamsa, it was Pururavas who became celebrated. The story of the birth of Pururavas is given below:

Brahma in the beginning deputed the sage Atri for the work of creation. Arunashiri started the penance called anuttara to acquire sufficient power for creation. After some years Sasodamaṇḍa Brahmana with an aura of lustreflected in the heart of that pure and serene soul. In his ecstasy tears rolled down his cheeks and the glittering fluid of water was lustfully drunk by the visionaries. They were envious and took a bribe from him. Then the brahmarishi requested Brahmana to make their lord and the throne. When the sun, devas, gandharvas and nymphs praised him reciting Śānavada the majestic illustrious of the youth increased. It was from this that apadesas (medicines) originated and that is why Candra is considered to be the lord of medicines, divas and nymphs. This apadesa was transmitted to SarvadanaMahārāj, a brahman who was skilled in the art of chemicals. It increases and decreases according to the white half and black half of the moon-based month.

Dakṣa gave in marriage to Candra twenty-seven beautiful maidens. Then Candra did penance meditating on Visnu for ten thousand Kalpas. Visṇu pleased by his penance asked him to name a boon and Candra said “When I perform a yāga in svarga all the devas like Budha should come in person to my yāga and take the yāgabhūga. Śilapaṁ should remain as a watchman at my R̥ṣiṇīya.” Accordingly with the blessing of Visṇu, Candra conducted the yāga in which Atri, Bhrigu, Brahmanda, Visṇu, Deva, Vasu, Maruṭu and Vāśadeva took part. Candra gave as yāga-fees to R̥ṣikas all the three worlds. The yāga was complete and when Candra rose up after a bath nine devas fell in love with the amorous beauty of Candra. Lakṣṇi, wife of Visṇu, Sīvavālī, wife of Kardama, Dvitiya, wife of Vaiṣṇava, Pujī, wife of Dīkṣita, Prabhā, wife of Vīrga, Kuhū, wife of Hrīśmāna, Kirti, wife of Jayanta, Anumati wife of Kāpāya and Dhighi wife of Nanda, abandoned their husbands and went with Candra. Candra treated them all as his own wives and gave them erotic pleasure to their hearts content. Those who saw this non-virginal act deemed drowsy unable to curse Candra.

Attracted by the dazzling brilliance of Candra Tārā, wife of Bhraspati, went with him. Enraged at this, Bhraspati pining with other devas prepared for a fight against Candra. Devas took sides and by the mediation of Indra a conference of both the parties was held and Tārā was sent back to Bhraspati. Tārā was pregnant then and Tārā confessed that the child in her womb was that of Candra. So when that child was born Candra took it away and named it Budha. Brahmapāṇi and other rājas gave Budha a seat among the planets.

Buddha married Iśa and they got a son named Pururavas. (See under 1) After that Budha performed a hundred Aśvamedhayāgas. He then enjoyed world prosperity as lord of Śapadvipa living in the beautiful Himārdīṛīga, worshipping Brahman. (Chapter 12, Bhāgā 3, Padma Purāṇa).

2) Testing Pururavas and the curse. Pururavas by his brilliance performed a hundred Aśvamedhayāgas and lived in glory at Himārdīṛīga. Great demons like Keśi became his servants. Urvasi attracted by his beauty became his wife. While he was living like that, Dharma, Artha and Kama went in disguise to his palace to test him. He received them all well but paid more attention to Dharma. Artha and Kama got angry and cursed him. Artha cursed him saying that he would be ruined by his greed and Kama cursed him saying he would go mad by being separated from Urvasi. Hearing that Dharma blessed him thus: “You will live long leading a virtuous life. Your race will increase and remain in glory till the end of the moon and the stars. The inanity caused by your passion for Urvasi would end by the end of sixty years. That celestial maiden would remain with you for one Manvantara.” (Chapter 12, Bhāgā 3, Padma Purāṇa).

Pururavas used to visit Indra daily. One day while he was going through air wellwarmed with a bow and arrows he saw a demon named Keśi carrying away by force Urvasi and Gīrīgukha; and after deceiving Keśi in a fight recovered the nymph and gave them back to Indra. Indra praised Pururavas and in his honour a drama, Lakṣmiṇīvarmavamsha, was enacted by Urvasi, Menakā and others. Urvasi taking the part of Lakṣmi started to dance but seeing Pururavas before her she became lustful and made wrong steps. Nārada who was present at the function got angry and cursed her “You will forget all you have learnt. Not only that, you will live as a creeper separated from Pururavas for a period of sixty years.” (For details see under Urvasi). Padma Purāṇa says that it was Bharata who cursed Urvasi. This story is slightly different from that found in the other Purāṇas.

3) Sons of Pururavas. Urvasi got eight sons of Pururavas named Ayu, Dṛḍhāyu, Vaśyāyu, Danāyu, Vṛttanām, Vasi, Divijāka and Subhā. Of these Ayu became the propagator of the dynasty. Of the sons born to Ayu five sons, Nāhūsa, Vṛdhāvan, Raśi, Dambha and Vīpāṅkha became celebrities. A hundred sons were born to Raśi. They were called Raśyās. (Chapter 12, Bhāgā 3, Padma Purāṇa).

Some Purāṇas state that Pururavas had six sons while some state that he had seven sons.

4) Other details. The following references are made about him in the Mahābhārata.

(1) Once Pururavas stole the wealth of some brahmans. The brahmans took Sanatkumāra along with them and made representations to the king. Pururavas did not give back their wealth. The brahmans cursed him and as a result the prosperity of the King waned. Then Pururavas brought down from svarga three Agnis and performed a yāga and thus regained his lost splendour and prosperity. (Chapter 75, Adi Parva).
PURURAVAS II. ( ii) Pururavaša got six sons of Urvāšī named Āyas, Dhibhāna, Amaśvata, Dhurabhūva, Vatsyaśva, and Satyāyas. (iii) Once he asked Vāyu the wind-god about the origin of the four castes and the superiority of the brahmins over other castes. (Śloka 3, Chapter 72, Sānta Parva.)
(iv) At another time he discussed about yajñapurohitas with Kaśyapa. (Chapter 73, Sānta Parva.)
(v) Ikṣvāku gave Pururavaša a sword which in his old age he gave to his son Āyas. (Chapter 166, Sānta Parva.)
(vi) He once declared that one can attain svarga by the blessings of brahmins. (Śloka 31, Chapter 6, Aruśāsana Parva.)
(vii) Pururavaša was famous as a donor of cows. (Śloka 26, Chapter 70, Aruśāsana Parva.)
(viii) Pururavaša never ate meat. (Śloka 65, Chapter 11, Aruśāsana Parva.)
PURURAVAS II. (a) king of the race of Dīpākṣa. (Śloka 15, Chapter 74, Udyoga Parva.)
PURUṢA. See under Prajñā.
PURUṢĀDAKA. An ancient place. (Chapter 57, Sahā Parva.)
PURUṢANTI. A mahārāja well-praised in the Rgveda. The Asvin devas once saved the following from trouble viz.: The immigrants, Dīgha, Dhvasana, and Puruṣanti. (Śloka 113, Anuvāka 16, Mandala 7, Rgveda.)
PURUṢOTTAMA. Śri Ṛṣya. He got this name because of his Pārava (filling) and Sādanna (sitting) (Chapter 70, Udyoga Parva.)
PURUṣYĀŚAS. A king of Pāṇcāla. He was the son of Bhūryāśas. The King became more and more prosperous observing 'Vaishākhadhāma' following the instructions of the King's preceptors Yāju and Upāyuṣa. (Chapter 2, Skanda Purāṇa.)
PŪRVĀBHĪRĀMA. A river of Purānic fame. (Śloka 22, Chapter 9, Bhishma Parva.)
PŪRVACITTI. A celebrated celestial maiden. She belongs to the group of six celebrated nymphs named Urvāśī, Pūrvacitti, Sūhajyāna, Ghrūcī, Visvācī and Madhuvantī. (Chapter 74, Ādi Parva.) Pūrvacitti was present for the Jambotasa of Ārjuna. (Chapter 122, Ādi Parva.) Once when Ārjuna went to svarga Pūrvacitti and others danced in his honour. (Chapter 43, Vana Parva.)
PŪRVADIṢA (PŪRVADIJK). The East.
Of all the sides Pūrvadiṣa is the most prominent.
1) The Sun rises in the east.
2) The sādiyas come and do severe penance in the east at dusk.
3) The moon rises here.
4) The result of offering havya to the fire spreads to the east.
5) The daughters of Dakṣa after becoming the wives of Kaśyapa dwelt in the east.
6) Devas made Indra the king of the east.
7) Indra and the devas did penance jointly in the east.
8) Because the devas accepted this side first (pārva) the side got the name Pārva.
9) The sun gives away as gifts the yajur Mantras at this place.
10) The devas drink the soma juice facing the east.
11) Vāraṇa once entered Pārvaša by the east and attained prosperity.
12) Indra selected the sacrificial animals at this place.
13) The soul of man comes to Svarga and the earth through the east. (Chapter 108 Udyoga Parva.)

PURVAPĀL. An ancient king. The Pāṇḍavas invited this king for the great Mahābhārata battle. (Śloka 17, Chapter 4, Udyoga Parva.)
PŪRVĀŚRAMA. A sacred place on the shores of the river Sarayu. While going along the shores of this river with Rāma and Lakṣmana, Vibhūsana showed the boys this śāraṇa and explained to them its importance. It was at this place that Śiva burnt Kāmadēvā (god of love) to death. Kāmadēva got the name Anuđaga at this place. (Bāsa Kṛṣṇa, Vālmīki Rāmāyana, Sarga 23.)
PŪṢĀNA. A female follower of Subrahmanya. (Śloka 26, Chapter 43, Śalya Parva.)
PŪṢĀ (PŪṢAN). Pūṣā attended the Jambotasa of Ārjuna (Chapter 122, Ādi Parva). When Ārjuna and Kṛṣṇa fought against Indra at Khādavapārastha, Pūṣā stood as an ally of Indra. (Śloka 35, Chapter 226, Ādi Parva.) Once all the devas together performed a yaga and not knowing the importance of Śiva, they did not invite him to the Yaga. Śiva attended the function uninvited. The devas did not like it and they attacked Śiva. The twelve adiyas as a team fought against Śiva and in the fight Pūṣā lost his teeth. (Chapter 18, Saṃśīkā Parva.) Ārjuna preserved to Subrahmanya two warriors named Pāṇḍūsa and Kaṭka.
PŪṢĀ II. (PŪṢAN). Another name for the Sun. (Śloka 16, Chapter 3, Vana Parva.)
PŪṢAKĀ I. A valiant soldier who fought on the side of Rāvaka. Hanumān fought against this soldier fiercely. (Bāṣa 2, Padma Purāṇa.)
PŪṢAKĀ II. The youngest son of Bharata, son of Dvārakā. Māṇḍavi was the mother of Pūṣakā. (Chapter 68, Vāyu Purāṇa, Chapter 6, Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa; Chapter 4, Visnū Purāṇa, Chapter 11, Agni Purāṇa.)
Details about Pūṣaka from Padma Purāṇa and Vālmīki Rāmāyana are the following:
(1) Pūṣaka was with Satyugaha when the latter served as the guardian of the horse in all the three avamukha-yāgas conducted by Śri Rāma. (Padma Purāṇa, Pāṭala Khanda, Chapter 1 and 22).
(2) He defeated Damāna, son of Sulabha, while he was following the sacrificial horse. (Padma Purāṇa, Pāṭala Khanda, Chapter 34).
(3) He fought fiercely against the demons, Vuvunmī and Ugraśrava. (Padma Purāṇa, Pāṭala Khanda, Chapter 34).
(4) He fought against Rukumāṇī and Viramāṇī. (Padma Purāṇa, Pāṭala Khanda, Chapter 41).
(5) He was defeated by Lava who checked the progress of the sacrificial horse. (Padma Purāṇa, Pāṭala Khanda, Chapter 61).
(6) Pūṣaka conquered the country of Gandhāra and built a city called Puskālavanī nilat Puskālavanī and made it his capital city. (Vālmīki Rāmāyana, Uorra Kanda). (7) His wife's name was Kāntimāti. (Padma Purāṇa, Pāṭala Khanda, Chapter 57).
PŪṢKARA I. Son of Varuna. Soma's daughter was attracted by the beauty of Puskara and married him. (Śloka 12, Chapter 98, Udyoga Parva.)
PŪṢKARA II. The younger brother of Nala. It was this Puskara who jointly with Kali defeated Nala in a game of dice and drove him away from his country.
At last Puṣkara apologised to Nala and gave him back his son. (See under Damayantī.)

PUṢKARA III. A sage. He was the Guru of Pāparāma. (Chapter 151, Agni Parāśāra.)

PUṢKARA IV.

1) General information. This is a holy place situated 30 Kilometres to the north of Ajmer. Brahma once did penance there. There is a temple of Brahmadeva there. Padma Purāṇa gives a story about the origin of this temple.

Once Brahmadeva came to a place holding a jōtras. Then Brahmadeva Vajraṇābha was engaged in penance for the destruction of the demons. Suddenly the jōtras in the hands of Brahmadeva fell down making a thundering noise. The sound was so loud that its vibrations killed Vajraṇābha. From that day onwards the place was known as Puṣkara.

2) Other details.

a) Arjuna spent the period after his pilgrimage to this place (Śloka 14, Chapter 220, Aśī Parāśa).

b) Once sage Pushtiyā praised the greatness of Puṣkara. (Śloka 20, Chapter 82, Vana Parāśa).

c) Sage Dhaumitya praised the greatness of Puṣkara. (Śloka 16, Chapter 99, Vana Parāśa).

d) Once the god of death came and did penance at this place. (Śloka 26, Chapter 54, Droṇa Parāśa).

On Brahmadeva performed a Yāga at this place and then Sarasvatī rose up from the place in the name of Suprabhā. (Śloka 5, Chapter 38, Sālyā Parāśa).

f) On this place peacefully one can attain mokṣa. (Chapter 297, Śānti Parāśa).

PUṢKARA V. A mountain in the island of Puṣkara. This mountain is full of precious stones. (Śloka 24, Chapter 12, Bhīṣma Parāśa).

PUṢKARA VI. One of the seven islands. The other six are Jambūdīvpa, Piśakadīvpa, Śālaphandīvpa, Kūṭādīvpa, Kraukadīvpa, and Śakadīvpa. (8th Skanda, Devī Bhagavata.)

PUṢKARA VI. The wife of a sage. There was once a sage named Satyā in the country of Vindārba. Puṣkaradhīrīni was the wife of Satyā, Satyā who believed in Āhimsā performed a Yāga with fruits and roots. It is believed that no yāga is perfect if performed without a sacrificial goat. But even his wife for fear of a curse did not object to a Yāga of the kind.

There was another sage living in that forest in the form of a deer due to a curse and he was a great friend of Satyā. The deer came to the place of the Yāja and requested Satyā to kill him as the sacrificial animal to make the Yāga a success. Satyā did not agree to that but then Savitridevī appeared in person and compelled him to kill the deer and conduct the Yāga. With great reluctance Satyā killed the deer and conducted the Yāga, but the power of penance of Satyā faded away by that deed of his. Then Puṣkaradhīrīni performed penance to regain the power of her husband and Dharma appeared in person and blessed Satyā.

(Chapter 272, Śānti Parāśa).

PUṢKARA VII A King of Purānic fame.

There was once a King called Bhadrakāśa in Taikāta. His name was Bhadrakāśa. He worshipped Bhagavati with 108 lotus flowers daily in order to obtain a son. One day he found one flower missing and the brave king tore open his heart and made the number complete. The goddess was pleased and she blessed him saying that he would have a son worthy of becoming an emperor. Puṣkaraka was the son thus born.

The boy grew up and after crowning him as King Bhadrakāśa left for the forests. Puṣkaraka worshiped Śiva daily to get a suitable wife. After some time Śiva blessed him saying that he would get a very good wife. One day he went for hunting. He saw a camel trying to eat two coconuts engaged in the act of mating. Instantly the King sent an arrow against the camel and the camel falling down, a female Vidyādharā told the King thus:—"Oh King, there was once a Vidyādharā named Rājagamāli. A Vidyādharā maiden named Tāravali was attracted by the handsome form of Rājagamāli. She married him without the consent of her parents. The angered father separated them by a curse. The curse took effect and they soon got separated losing their way in the forest. Pining to see her husband Tāravali roamed about in the forests and reached the other shore of the western sea. It was a colony of trees and there was a big tree standing in full blossom. Tāravali took the form of a bee and sat on the tree sucking honey. After some days Rājagamāli also came to the place. On seeing her husband she had emission and from that evil seed was born a girl. After that boy of three was born to her. Dharva loka, I am Rājagamāli. Once a day a sage named Jītūsa came that way and this fruit fell before him. From the fruit came out a beautiful maiden and Jītūsa with his divine power understood the whole story behind it and so took the girl to his abode and named her Vīnavavati. Vīnavavati grew into a beautiful maiden and Tāravali was lost in delight. One day by accident I happened to see her and attracted by her beauty tried to rape her. She cried aloud and hearing the noise the sage came out and cursed me and turned me into a camel. I pleaded for mercy and the sage said I would be released from the curse when I was killed by the future husband of Vīnavavati, Puṣkaraka by name. Oh King, I am now released from the curse and you should go to the forest named Sarabhinnarūta on the other side of the western sea and marry that maiden."

Puṣkaraka was pleased to hear this and the king going back to the palace and entrusting the administration of the state to his ministers left for the forest of Sarabhīmucūra. Reaching the shore of the western sea he was thinking of ways to cross the sea when he saw a Bhadrakāśa temple nearby. When he went to the temple he saw a violin in front of it and taking it he played on it a few songs in praise of Śiva and went to sleep in the temple. The goddess was pleased with his songs and took the sleeping king to the other side of the sea. When he woke up next morning he saw himself on the other shore and was pleasantly surprised. He walked about on the shore and saw an abode and peering in saw a sage sitting inside. On seeing the king the sage told him thus:―"Oh Puṣkaraka, Vīnavavati in search of whom you have come here has just gone to pluck flowers for her worship. She will come just now and you can then accept your wife of your previous birth as your wife of this life."

The king wanted to know more about Vīnavavati when the sage said she was his wife in his previous birth also. Then the sage said:―"Once there was a Śūdra called Dharmaśeṣa in Tāmarātīpi. He married a girl named Vidushi. All their wealth was stolen by thieves and robbers when they attempted to commit suicide by jumping into the fire. They saw two swans flying towards them and without waiting for them to reach them they committed suicide. In their next birth they became a swan couple. They lived on a date tree during rainy seasons. Once in a storm the tree fell down and in the darkness each went its own way. In the morning the male swan started searching for his mate. In the end he found her in the lake of Manasa in Svaranga. They lived there happily till the rainy season was over and then they went and stayed on a mountain. One day a forester killed the she-swans and while coming with the dead swans in his hands he saw a set of armed men coming that way and the frightened forester threw the dead swan into a lake nearby. The dead swan came in touch with the Manasavati herb in the pond and came to life flew away. The husband swan went into another group of swans and lived there in sorrow. One day a fisherman came and caught all the swans in a net. At that time the she-swans came there and finding her husband in the net felt very sad. She was thinking of some way to get her husband released from the net when a man came to the pond. He wrapped the diamond necklace of his in a cloth and placed it in the shore. The she-swans took the necklace and flew making the fisherman see everything before him. Seeing the swan going with the necklace the fisherman went after it. The swan flew to a mountain nearby and placed it on its top. The fisherman started climbing up and the she-swans then flew back and released her husband from the net. One day while they were flying making a show as an umbrella a hunter shot them down with arrows. Fortunately the lots fell on an idol of Siva and by the power of Siva they were born in their next birth as a king and a woman. The king is himself and the woman is Vasavadatta.

Puskarantha married her there and returning to his land lived happily for a long period (Tattanga 2, Sasanakavatilambaka, Kathakasitsagara).

Puskarantha II. A king. Puskarantha, son of king Suvendra, was cut to death by Parasmata (Brahma Purana, Chapter 3).

Puskaramalini. A very devoted woman. She was the wife of a sage named Siva, who lived on ashes in the country of Vidusha. Because she was very strict and perfect in the observance of vratas she became lean but pure. She was very obedient to her husband and she made her own dress out of peacock feathers gathered from forests. Puskaramalini was against sacrificing cows in yajnas. (Chapter 246, Sahasra Parva).

Uspa. A serpent born of the family of Kaasya. (Stota 13, Chapter 103, Udyoga Parva).

Puspadanstra. A prominent serpent of the family of Kaasya. (Stota 12, Chapter 35, Adi Parva).

Puspadanta I. One of the Aridiggajas. (The eight elephants of the quarters)

Puspadanta II. One of the three soldiers given to Subrahmanyas by Parvati. The other two were Umadhama and Sanatkurna. (Stota 51, Chapter 43, Salya Parva).

Puspadanta III. One of the attendants of Siva. Due to a curse Puspadanta was born on earth as Varatru (see under Varatru). There was another curse also on him. (See under Jambuvakirsha).

Puspadanti. A relative of a Gandharva named Citrasena. Puspadanti was once dancing in the court of Indra with Malayavat and other Gandharvas. Puspadanti faltered in her steps as she was admiring the beauty of Malayavat and Indra cursed them both and turned them into devils. They then observed the Ekadasi (eleventh day of every lunar fortnight) called Jaya and got themselves released from the curse. (Chapter 43, Utsara Khanda, Padma Purana).

Puspakama I. A divine Aerial Chariot.

1) Oruga. Visvakarma had a daughter named Sanjhita. She was married to Surya. But Sanjhita could not live with Surya for long because of the terrible heat and so she came back and told her father about it. At once Visvakarma ordered Surya to come to him and the former then tried to reduce his brightness by rubbing him on a grindstone. However much he tried he was not able to reduce even an eighth of his brightness. The brightness of the Sun which was rubbed out spread in the atmosphere as suspended luminous particles. Visvakarma collected that glistening dust and from it created four brilliant things. The Cakrayudha of Mahavishnu is one, the Tridala of Siva is another, and the third is Puspakavarna (Puspakama Aerial chariot). The fourth is Sakthi, a weapon of Subrahmanyas. Visvakarma gave them all as presents to Brahma (Chapter 2, Am 2, Vishnu Purana).

2) How Kubera got the Pushaka. Visvakarma abhd Kubera was the son born to Visvakarma of his wife Devaratrini, daughter of sage Bharadvja. Viskavaka did penance to please Brahma to get a son and Valravana was born by the blessing of Brahma. Kubera also, even while he was a boy, went to the valley of Himavat and did penance there. Kubera did penance for ten thousand years with his head downwards in cold water and another ten thousand years in Paricagni standing on one leg. At that time Brahma appeared in person and asked what boon he wanted. He said he wanted to be one of the lokapakshas (guardians of the universe). Granting Kubera that, Brahma gave him two treasures named Sanbhakshuni and Padmanadha and also the Puspakavarna. After that Kubera built a city named Lakka on the mountain of Trishna in the southern ocean and started living there.

3) How Ravana got the Pushaka. Visvakarma had three more sons named Ravana, Kumbhakarna and Vidhiva. They did penance and acquired divine powers. Ravana then went to Lakka and after defeating Kubera and sending him north captured Lakka and made it his capital. He also took by force the Puspakama from Kubera.

All the victory marches of Ravana were in this Puspakama. Once Ravana was going in his Puspakama with a Yaks beauty kidnapped from Alakapuri when the girl cried loudly attracting the attention of Sampati, a vulture. Sampati attacked Ravana with his fierce beak and powerful claws. Ravana's weapons proved futile against Sampati and the bird broke the Puspana into pieces. But the Vimaña was a divine one and it regained the original shape and utility soon. All the weapons of Ravana were destroyed, the great weapon Gandhabāhas was thrown away. The crown of Ravana was struck down and trampled upon. With his sharp beak and piercing claws Sampati made brushes on the face of Ravana. Unable to bear the attack of the mighty bird Ravana begged for peace. Sampati asked Ravana to release the Yaksha girl which Ravana did at once. Ravana then returned to Lankā in the Puspana (Kuskandhā Kanda, Kamba Ramayana). It was in this Puspana plane that Ravana kidnapped Sitā. In the battle that followed, Ravana was killed and the Puspana Vimaña came into the possession of Vibhisanā who gave it as a gift to Śrī Rāma. Śrī Rāma sent it back to its original owner, Kubera, but Śrī Rāma used it again as once.

A ādāra named Sambhika started performing penance in Lankā as a consequence of which there started a series of infant deaths in the country. Śrī Rāma knew the cause and he got down by meditation the Puspana Vimaña from Kubera. When the plane came from Kubera Śrī Rāma got into it and flew to the place where Sambhika was doing penance and on reaching there killed the Śūdra and saved the country from a great trouble. The Puspana was then sent back to Kubera. (Uttara Ramayana).

PUSPAKA II. The great forest lying on one side of the mountain Latavastu situated to the south of Divarakapuri (Chapter 38, Dīkṣitārāma Pātha, Sabhā Parva).

PUSPĀNĀKA. A Yakṣa. He lives in the court of Kubera. (Śloka 17, Chapter 10, Sabhā Parva).

PUSPARAGĀRKHARA (RATNASALI). The Purāṇas state about a fort made of diamonds called Pusparāga shining red above the heavenly plane called Maṇḍitvā above Brahmāloka. This fort is seven yojanas high. All things inside it, the ground, the trees, the birds, the animals, plants, creepers and gardens are purparaga-studded and look red like saffron. Therefore the fort is called Rāmaśāla also. All the dikpālakas of the universe live with their family and attendants in this fort. (12th, Skanda śastra Bhāgavata).

PUSPARATHA. The chariot of the King called Vasumana. This chariot was capable of travelling through air, mountains, and oceans. (Chapter 198, Vana Parva).

PUSI UREKA. A King born of the family of Dhruva. He married a girl named Prabhā. (Skanda 4, Bhāgavata).

PUSPĀVĀHANA. A King of Rathantarakalpa. He got ten thousand sons of his wife Lāvanavatī. Puspadvāhana was a hunter in his previous birth. He used to give daily lotus flowers to a hermit who was doing worship of Viṣṇu observing the Dvādaśīvarta. He was doing this service with such devotion that in the next birth he was born under the name Puspadvāhana (carrier of flowers). The sage Ṛṣabha once told him about his previous birth and asked him to observe Dvādaśīvarta. Puspadvāhana observed the vrat and attained bliss. (Ṛṣtriya Kanda, Padma Purāṇa).

PUSPAVĀN. A King. This King who ruled supreme over all the three worlds also met with his death. The story of this King was quoted by Bhāma to illustrate that everything is transitory in this world. (Chapter 277, Sānti Parva).

PUSPAVATI. A sacred place. If one stays here for three nights fasting and bathing in the holy pond there one would get the benefit of making a thousand good wishes (cow-gift) and his family would be absolved of all sins. (Śloka 12, Chapter 29, Vana Parva).

PUSPOKATĀ. Mother of Kubera.

1) Genealogy. From Brahmā were born; two demons Ḥeti and Ḡrajeti. Ḥeti married Bhayu, daughter of Kaśi and to them was born a son named Viḍyuteka. Viḍyuteka married Sāhukājajak śakti daughter of Sandhyā and to them was born a son named Siṣke a. They abandoned the child in a forest and went away. Śiva took care of the child Śukṣa who married Daivaśvati daughter of the Gandharva called Marimayā and she delivered three sons named Māyavān, Sumālī and Māli and all the three started living in the crystal palace built at Lankā by Viṣṇukarṇa.

At that time a Gandharva woman called Narmadā delivered three daughters named Sundari, Ketumati and Vasudhā. When they came of age Sundari was married to Māyavān, Ketumati to Sumālī and Vasudhā to Māli. Māyavān got of Sundari seven demons named Vajrapuṣṭi, Virupāka, Durmūla, Supatigama, Vajahaka, Matta and Ummattā and a demoness of name Nālī. Sumālī got of Ketumati ten sons named Vaiśvānara, Dakṣa, Puspatātā, Kaikai and Kumbhinar. Māli got of Vasudhā four sons named Anala, Anila, Aha and Sampati. Sumālī wandered in the forests with his daughters. He gave all the four daughters in marriage to Viṣṇu, sons of Pulasta. Viṣṇu gave to Kaikai three sons named Rāvaha, Kumbhakarana and Viḥṣṭhana and a daughter named Sūrapakṣā. Viṣṇu got of Puspatātā a son named Vaśravāna or Kubera. (Chapter 11, Āgni Purāṇa; Chapter 275, Vana Parva, Utara Ramayana).

PUSHTI. A daughter born to Dakṣaprajāpati of his wife Prasūti. Dharma married her. Pushti had twelve sisters. Dharma married them also. Besides these thirteen daughters Dakṣa got of Prasūti another eleven daughters. They were Khyāti, Sati, Sambhūtī, Śrīmī, Pratī, Kuṃā, Santati, Anasūya, Īrjā, Śvāhdevi and Svadhā. They were married in order to Bhṛgu, Svī, Marci, Āgūra, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kṛṣṇa, Ātri, Vasiṣṭha, Agīr and the Pīṭhas. (Chapter 7, Amā 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

PUSṬIMATI. Another name for the agni called Bhūrāna. If this agni is appeased there will be health. (Chapter 221, Vana Parva).

PCTRĀI. A demoness who was killed by Kṛṣṇa at Ambājī. Her previous birth, her relationship with Kamsa and such other details are found differently in different Purāṇas.

1) Kamsa and PCTRĀ. (PCTRĀ was the daughter of a demoness called Kaitavi and was the servant maid of the wife of Karuna. She had a younger sister called Vrksodari. (Adi Parva, Chapter 18).
(ii) Putanā was the chhiari (father-mother) of Karna. She entered Gokula in the form of a bird. (Harivamśa, Chapter 2, Verse 6).
(iii) Putanā was the sister of Karna and the wife of Ghapara. (Brahmavarta Purāṇa).
9) Parajāmna (Vajir birth).
(i) Putanā in her previous birth was born as the daughter of Mahābali, bearing the name Ratnamālā. When Vāmana appeared before Mahābali during the time of the latter's Yajña, Ratnamālā mentally desired thus:—"Oh if only the Vāmana became my child! I could have then breast-feeding him." Vāmana, the omniscient, understood the desire of Ratnamālā. So during the incarnation as Kṛṣṇa, Ratnamālā was born as Putanā and Kṛṣṇa gave her salvation by drinking her breast-milk. (Brahma Vaiivarta Purāṇa, Chapters 9 and 10).
(ii) Once when the sage Kālabhiru and his daughter Āryamātī were travelling together they saw the sage Kāksīvāna running on the peacock of the river Sarvasvati. Kālabhiru saw in Kāksīvāna a suitable husband for his daughter and so he gave Āryamātī in marriage to him. They were thus living happily together when once Kāksīvāna had to go on a pilgrimage alone leaving Āryamātī in his ashrama. Taking advantage of her loneliness a Śūdra made her his concubine and when Kāksīvāna returned he found out the deceit and cursed her to be born as a demoness. She begged for relief and the sage said he would get relief when Viṣṇu incarnated as Kṛṣṇa. Putanā was the cursed form of Āryamātī. (Chapter 18, Adi Parva).
8) Pūtanā II. An evil spirit. This spirit which torments children stays with Suhranāmayana. (See under Grahapada. (Chapter 23, Vana Parva).
Pūtika. A creeper. This can be used in Yāgas as a substitute for Somalatai. (Ślokas 33, Chapter 32, Vana Parva).
Puradarsanaparva. A subdivisional Parva of Āśrama-vāsika Parva. It comprises chapters 29 to 36.
Purakṣa. A King. (See under Pataikpuraka).
Purūkaputra. A son born to a woman who is either a prostitute or one without a brother. (Ślokas 11, Chapter 3, Manusmriti).
Piyavaha. A hell. (See under Naraka).

R
R. This letter means "sound". (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).
RA. The letter ra means fire, strength, Indra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).
Rabhāsa I. A monkey in Śrī Rāma's army. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakātra, Canto 4).
Rabhāsa II. A Rākṣasa on Rāvana's side. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakātra, Canto 9).
Rabhya. An ancient king wedded to justice and fair-play in ruling the kingdom. (For details see under Ekavira).
Rādha I. Śrī Kṛṣṇa's dearest consort. Rādha is considered to be one of the two forms of Kṣīmūḍīvī. When Kṛṣṇa lived in Gokula as a man with two hands Rādha was his dearest consort. But when he lives in Vaikuṇṭha as four-handed Viṣṇu, Lakṣmi is his dearest consort. (Devi Bhāgavata 9, 1; Brahmavarta Purāṇa, 2, 49 and 50-57 and Adi Parva Chapter 11).
(ii) Different versions about the birth of Rādha are given in the Purāṇas, as follow:-
(i) She was born in Gokula as daughter of Vṛṣabha and Kaśīvān. (Brahmavarta Purāṇa, 2, 49; 35-42; Nārada Purāṇa, 2, 81).
(ii) She was got as Bhūmi-kanyā (earth-girl) when Kṛṣṇa visited Vṛṣabha. (Brahma Purāṇa, Harivamśa Purāṇa 6).
(iii) She was born from the left side of Kṛṣna. (Brahmavarta Purāṇa).
(iv) At the time of Kṛṣṇa's birth Viṣṇu asked his attendants to be born on earth. Accordingly Rādha, dear consort of Kṛṣṇa, took her birth in Gokula under the star Jyeshta in the month of Suklaśati day in Bhāratapada month. (Adi Parva). (v) Kṛṣṇa once desired Viṣṇu, the Gopi woman, to the hall of enjoyment (rasamanḍala). Knowing about it Rādha followed them to the hall, but both of them were not to be seen. On another occasion when Rādha found Viṣṇu in the company of Kṛṣṇa and Sudāmā she, in great anger, insulted Kṛṣṇa whereupon Sudāmā cursed her to be born as a human woman and experience the pangs of separation from Kṛṣṇa. (Nārada Purāṇa 2, 8; Brahmavarta Purāṇa 2, 49) and Rādha cursed him in turn to be born in the dīnava dynasty. It was on account of this curse of Rādha that Sudāmā was born as the asura called Śāṅkhačaṇḍa. (Brahma Vaiivarta Purāṇa, 2, 4, 9, 34).
(vi) Rādha is considered to be one of the five forces which help Viṣṇu in the process of creation. (Devi Bhāgavata 9, 1; Nārada Purāṇa 2, 81).
(vii) Rādha is the mental power of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (For details see under Paṇḍarpānas).
Rādhā II. Wife of Adhirātha, the foster-father of Karna and the foster-mother of Kṛṣṇa (See under Kār̥ga).
Rāga. One of the seven daughters of Bhṛṣapati—Āgrī. As she was loved by all beings she came to be called Rāga. (Vana Parva, Chapter 205).
Rāgakhāṇḍāva. A cake-like thing formed in a Yajña performed by King Dīlīpa. (Drona Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 8).
Rāghu.
1) General. A famous king of the Solar dynasty. The great king Dīlīpa was his father. (For genealogy, birth etc. see under Daśaratha and Dīlīpa).
2) Other information.
(i) Rāghu also occupies a place in the list of famous kings of ancient days (Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 232).
(ii) In the fight between the king of Virāṭa and the Kaṇavaṇas (over the killing of cows) Rāghu was present along with Arjuna in fight. (Viṣṇu Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 10).
(iii) Rāghu got from King Yuvanāvāra a sword, which he presented to Harināvāra. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 78).
(iv) He did not eat flesh (Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 81).
(v) Kaśīvāras who praise Rāghu will not be defeated in war (Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 51).
(vi) In the list of kings to be remembered at dawn and at dusk Rāghu too is included. (Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 51).
RAGINI. A celestial woman, daughter of Himavān and older sister of Pārvati. (For details see under Pārvati).

RAHASAYAVEDA. A Veda composed by manu Arvāvasu. This Veda is about Sūrya. (Bhārata, Chapter 137, Verse 19).

RAHODARA (RAHODARA). A muni of ancient days. There is a story in Chapter 29 of the Varāṇa Purāṇa about an ass falling on the muni’s neck and the place where the skull was removed from his neck coming to be known as Kapālāmocana.

Śrī Rāma killed the Rākṣasas who lived in Dandaka forest. The head of one of the Rākṣasas cut by a very sharp knife was thrown off at a distance in the forest and it fell on the neck of Rahodara, who happened to be walking at the time in the forest. It (the head) cut deep into the bones of the Sage and that made it difficult for him to move about. Yet, he visited all the holy places on the earth with the skull of the Rākṣasa around his neck. At last he told the noble Rāi about his misfortune and they directed him to visit Aṣṭānasattiriha, and the moment he touched the water in the tirtha the skull fell into the water. Hari 2 had been told about the incident, the Rāi named the tirtha Kapālāmocana.

RAHOVĀDĪ. A king of the Pāru dynasty. He was the son of Śarvaśī and the father of Bhadrāśva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

RĀHU. An āśrama.
2. Rāhu and the Solar eclipse. The oldest story about Rāhu is that about the solar eclipse (See under Candra IV, Para 4).
3. Other information.
   (i) Rāhu is a member of Brahma’s court. (Sabhā Parva Chapter 11, Verse 29).
   (ii) Saṅghya once spoke to Dhyantarā about Rāhu. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 40).
   (iii) Rāhu exists 10,000 yojanas below the Sun. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).
   (iv) Rāhu is installed in temples as wearing a half-moon on his head. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

RAKOAGANA. A sage who lived in the Rgyedic times. It was his son Gautama, who composed the 74th Sūkta of the first Mandala of Rgyedas.

RAJBHAVĀ. A hermit who was famous in the Palace of Yuvābhīṣa. Information about this hermit, found in the Mahabharāta is given below:
   (1) Raibhya who was a friend of Bharadvāja had two sons named Arvāvasu and Parāvasu. They were great scholars. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 135, Stanza 12).
   (2) Bharadvāja once forbade his son Yakvattra from going to the hermitage of Raibhya. Getting angry at this, Raibhya struck his matted hair on the ground and created a wicked fairy and ordered her to kill Yakvattra. Knowing this Bharadvāja ran to that place and cursed Raibhya that his eldest son would kill him. Once Parāvasu, mistaking his father for a cruel animal killed him. By the order of his second son Arvāvasu, Raibhya was brought to life again. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 139, Stanza 157).
   (3) Raibhya was the son of Angiras. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 26).
   (4) Raibhya was once an assistant at the sacrifice of Upārkaravas. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 7).
   (5) Raibhya was one of the hermits who visited Bhishma in his bed of arrows. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 26).

RAIBHYA II. An ancient hermit. This hermit learned the Śivapaddhāraṇa from Vīrana. After that he taught his son Dīkṣita this charma. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 343, Stanza 42).

RAIBHYA III. The father of Duyanta, the husband of Sākuntalā. This Raibhya was the son of Sumati. (Bhagavata, Skandha 9).

RAIBHYA IV. One of the sons of Brahmadāt. Once Raibhya went with Vasu and Angiras to Brahmaparśu and asked him several questions about the attainment of Supernal bliss. Brahmaparśu replied that attainment of bliss could be had, not by action but only by devotion. Raibhya immediately started to Gayā to do penance. There he met with the Sanātikamāra. (Varaha Purāṇa).

Urvaśī made an earnest effort to hinder the severe yon and penance of Raibhya. But it was of no use, and by her curse, that celestial woman became ugly. She entreated him for liberation from the curse. Raibhya blessed her and said that she could obtain her original form by bathing in Yoḍhiniṅkūṇḍa. (Yogini Kūṭā). Urvaśī bathed in Yoḍhiniṅkūṇḍa and from that day onwards that tirthā (holy bath) came to be known as Urvaśīyoginiṅkūṇḍa.

RAIKWA. There was a noble King in ancient Indra named Jāmaśūta. The following is a story about the fame of this King.
One night while this King was sleeping, some hermits took the form of swans and were flying through the air. One of them saw the radiance of the fame of Jāmaśūta shining brightly. The other swans said that the fame of Raikwa was far greater than this. Jāmaśūta heard this. He found out Raikwa and placed all his wealth at the feet of Raikwa and gave him his daughter in marriage.

RAIVATA I. Information about this King found in the Mahabharāta is given below:
   (1) An ancient King in Bhārata. Once he heard the Gandharvas singing songs from Sānavech in the harbours of Mandara mountain in the south and becoming so much immersed in it, he decided to renounce his country, city, wife and everything and go to the forest. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 109, Stanza 9).
   (2) He got a sword from Manuṭṭa. He gave that sword to Yuvābhīṣa. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 166, Stanza 77).
   (3) Raivata never ate meat. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 63).
   (4) He is one of the Kings who should be praised in the mornings and evenings. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Stanza 53).

RAIVATA II. One of the eleven Rudras. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 19).

RAIVATAKA I. A mountain in Gujarāt. It stands near the present Junagadh. The present name of Raivatakā mountain is Girnar. In Mahābhārata it is spoken of as Bhājanantag. It is stated in Mahābhārata that while ŚrīKrṣṇa and Arjuna were travelling through Prabhāsaksetra once, they got to the top of this mountain. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 217, Verse 8).
RAIVATAKA II

The Yadavas once celebrated a great festival on the Raivataka mountain. It was during this festival that Adi Parva narrates the story of Subhadra, the sister of Sri Karna. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 219; Bhagavata, Sanhita 10).

RAIVATAKA II. A mountain in Saka Island. Mention is made about this mountain in Mahabharata, Bhagavata, Parva, Chapter II, Stanza 18.

RAIVATAKA (RAIVATA). Son of Priyavrata, the brother of Karna; Priyavrata had ten wives Surupa and Bharatami, Surupamedha and Axis. These sons were born to Axis. These sons were born to Subhadra. Three sons were born to Tumas and Raivata were born to Bharatami. These three sons became Lords of Manavanta, in course of time. (See under Manavanta).

RAJA I. A warrior of Subrahmanyas. (Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 78).

RAJA II. A Sage. He was one of the sons born to Vasistha of Urdj.

RAJIVAN. One of the two gatekeepers of Saryadeva. (Bhagavata Purana, Brahma Purana).

RAJA (N). All the important Puranadas have laid special emphasis on the importance of rule by Kings. All living beings will have Kings of their own. It was Brahma who first assigned the task of King to the Creator of the Prajapatis. Brahma made Candra, the King of the stars and medicines; Varuna was appointed King of waters, like sea, river etc; Vaishravana was appointed King of Kings; Vism, King of Devas; Agni, King of Vasus; Indra, King of Maruts; Daksha, King of the Prajapatis; Priyavarta, King of the divinities; Hima, King of the mountain; Bharata, King of Gandharvas; Vasudha, King of the old; Ganges, King of waters; Aranyavat, King of elephants; Ox, King of cattle, Taper, King of animals, Peepal, tree, King of trees and Ucchashavas, that of horses. (Agni Purana).

As to what type of the King of mankind should be and what should form his duties it is ordained as follows. The Raja should appoint either a Kshatriya or a Brahmin as his Commander-in-chief. The Commander-in-chief should be of noble birth and well-versed in law. Only a strong man who can speak boldly and openly should be appointed mean as an ambassador. Either a male or a female may be appointed to carry chewing materials. But that person should be loyal, friendly and capable of putting up with hardships. The body-guard of the King should be a good general, a Minister should be conversant with dharmakshetras (moral and ethical code).

Also, the King should be surrounded by the royal physician, chief of the elephant division of the army, the mahouts, chief of the cavalry force, master of the fort, the architect, preceptor in archery and the chief of the internal administration of the palace. When it is yet three hours for the dawn, the King should wake up from sleep. Music, prayers by courtiers etc. should herald his waking up. As soon as he has woken up, the King should hold talks with his spies. Then he should examine accounts and only after this he should begin the ablutions. After his puja (worship) is over, he goes with gold should gift to Brahmins. With the blessings he must seek fire from the mirror and then give along with gold. He should keep up the almanac for the day's star etc. And after having taken the medicine prescribed by the physician and also the blessings of the preceptor, the King should attend court. (Agni Purana, Chapter 233).

According to Chapter 8 of the Manas Putrag, a great authority on law and order, Kings are born from the shoulders of Indra, Vayu, Yama, Surya, Agni, Varuna, Candra and Kubera.

RAJA (S). One of the seven sons of Vasistha by Urdj. The other six being Guira, Urchavabha, Savana, Anagha, Suptas, and Sutka. Holy souls, these seven were Saptarishis in the third Manavanta. (Vigasa Polimana, Part 1, Section 13).

RAJADHARMAM. A work, which was a friend of Brahmas and a son of Krityaprajapat. This work was known as Adityagita. (See under Nadjagita).

RAJADHARMAKUSANANA PARVA. A sub-Parva of Sani Parva, Chapters I-130.

RAJADHIDEVI. The youngest of the five daughters of the solar king Sura by Murgia. King Jaya of Avanti married Rajadhidevi (Bhagavata, Skanda Purana).

RAJAGIRHA (GIRIRAJA). An ancient city in India. Capital of Magadh. King Pushya was killed by King Pingula. (Adi Parva, Chapter 112, Verse 27). Another King, Ambiluka had for a time, ruled over the city. (Adi Parva, Chapter 203, Verse 17). Afterwards Jarasandha became a powerful King of Rajagirha. It is a holy place as well. He who bathes here will become his pleasant-looking as King Kaktuvan. (Vvana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 104).

RAJAMUKHI. A celestial woman. (Skanda Purana).

RAJANI. A holy river in ancient India. (Bhagavata Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 21).

RAJANITI. (Politics and administration).

Politics and administrative administration in ancient India is dealt with in Manas Putrag and Agni Purana. A very brief summary of it is given below:

The King should organise six kinds of army formations, worship the Devas, thaly and then set out for war. Mithila, Paiseka, Sindula, Subhodha, Sutakabha and Turkabha are the six kinds of army formations. The list is given in order of the importance of the bala. The army has six parts. They are: Manas (advancers), Kosa (treasury), Padh (infantry), Turaga (Cavalry), Gaja (elephant) and Kattha (chariot).

If an attack is feared either against the forts or across rivers or trenches, the army should be marshalled. The attack is to proceed against the forts or across rivers or trenches. The Army Chief is surrounded by trinity warriors should lead the division. The King and his wife should be the centre of the army division along with the treasury and first class soldiers. On both sides of the King should march in the cavalry and the chariots should form the farther wings. Elephants should proceed on the two sides of the chariots, soldiers recruited from forests must march on the sides of the elephants. The supreme commander will march behind all the others guiding the army.

If there is cause for fear in front of the army during the march, three Vyalas (Phalanas) Makara, Syena or Shosh should be put in the Vanguard. The Sakatavyala is more suited to meet an attack from behind. If attack is feared from the flanks then also the Sakatavyala is advisable. When attack is feared from all the sides is feared sarvatobhadra (all around). It is the duty of the Supreme Commander to safe-guard his army and suppress reactionary forces whenever the army gets weakened, when it marches through caves, mountains rocks or other difficult terrain or weakened by the persistent attacks of the enemy. When the time, place and the people's attitude are favourable, the king should engage himself in open war with the enemy, and if they are unfavourable he shall not go in for war. If confrontation with the enemy occurs under circumstances in which the king is visible to the enemy, powerful divisions of the army consisting of victorious warriors of high calibre should be stationed either at the front or in the rear.

In the formation of victors (pahlānā) there are seven factors called Uras (breast), Kukas (arm-pits), two Pakkas (sides), two Madhyas (centre) and Pratha (rear). The commanders should be surrounded by bold soldiers. The leader is the very life of the war. At the Uras of the vētha powerful elephants, at the Kukas chariots and at the Pakkas cavalry should be stationed. This is called pakvikādīvīyā. If at the centre cavalry and at Kukas and Pakkas elephants are stationed, it is called antarādīvīyā. If there are no chariots, cavalry or infantry may be put in their place. Certain authorities maintain that in every vētha elephants may be stationed in the place of chariots, if chariots are not available. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 242).

RAJAPURA I. An ancient and famous city in Kānchi. Here Karna defeated the Kāmbogas. (Dona Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 5).

RAJAPURA II. Capital city of King Girgānda of Kānchi. Innumerable kings gathered together in the city in connection with the Svayamvāra of the princess of the Pratāpavēṭha. (Chapter 4, Verse 3).

RAJAKŚEHARA. A Sanskrit dramatist who lived in India in 7th century A.D. Balaśhāhrata or Prakāndlavāna, Balarāma, Viḍḍhalalabhaḥājīka and KarṇapramAjājī are his more famous dramatic works. Kārparanatājī refers to him as the predecessor of a king of Kāncajī. Rājaśekhara was known by the name Kaviśāka also Balāshāhrata, called also Mahānātaka, is a drama in ten Acts. Balaśhāhrata contains only two Acts. Its theme is the wedding of Draupadi and the ruin caused by the game of dice. Viḍḍhalalabhaḥājīka is a drama in four Acts. He has a further work to his credit, Kāyāmānaṃśa in eighteen chapters. Some scholars hold the view that Rājaśekhara lived in the 10th century A.D.

RAJASŪVA. A great yājña. Harīcsandra and also Dharmaputra performed it. (Śabhā Parva, Chapters 33, 35, 81).

RĀJACYAPARVA. A sub-Parva of Śabhā Parva. (Chapters 33-35).

RAJAṬANABHA. A Yājña. He married Maṇivārī, daughter of Amuruṇa and two sons, Maṇivāra and Maṇiṣhūra were born to them.

RAJAVAN. A muni born in the Bhūrga dynasty. To Bhūrga were born of his wife Kṛṣṇā, Kārṣṇa, the wife of Viṣṇu and their son was called dyātha and Viḍhalī. They married 25 sons and 50 daughters of Mera. Two sons, Prāma and Miṅkanḍu were born to them. From Miṅkanḍu was born Mārkandeya and from him Vedas iras. Prāma had a son called Dyutimān and he a son called Rājāvan. It was from Rājāvan that the Bhūrga dynasty multiplied. (Viśnu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 10).

RĀJAYOGA. See under Yoga.

RĀJ. (Rāj). A prominent king of the Pāru dynasty. He was one of the five sons of Aṣṭavakra in the other four being Nābha, Kṣatrvēṭha, (Vṛdhīśaṃkar) Rambha and Anētas. (Arama Parva, Chapter 70, Verse 23).

Purāṇas contain stories that Indra destroyed people in Rāj's dynasty as they hated the Former. That side in which the powerful Rāj fought used to win. In a fight between the asuras and the Devas, when Indra felt that his side was losing, he secured the participation of Rāj in the fight on condition that the latter would be given Indra-hood. The asuras were defeated and Rāj was made king of svaraga. Rāj had thousands of children and they were known under the common name Rājyakṣatryās. But they were a foolish lot and lacked the capacity to distinguish themselves in Indra's place. Therefore, at the instance of Bhraspati, preceptor of the Devas, Indra destroyed them all and resumed his former position and status. (Bhagavata, 9th Skanda; Vāyu Purāṇa, Chapter 92, Verse 76; Brāhmaṇda Purāṇa, Chapter 11; Harivamsa 1, 26; Manusya Purāṇa, Chapter 24, Verses 34-49).

RĀJUKAMYA. A grammarian. In Pāṇini's Saṁśādhaṇī, he is depicted as a mahārāja possessing great knowledge of the Vedas.

RĀJNI. Second of the three wives of Vivasvān. The couple had a son called Revaṇa.

RĀJAVARDHANA. A king of Varśi. Rājaśekhara was a great critic, who could comprehend the past, the present and the future. Knowing that his death was near, he told his subjects about it and went into the forests for rapsa. Sorry over the departure of their king, his subjects as well as ministers began worshipping Śūrya, who appeared and blessed them saying that their king would live for ten thousand years in perfect health, victory and with all wealth and prosperity and other resources and with unimpaired youthfulness. The ministers and subjects greatly elated over the boon informed their king in the forest about it, but he only felt sorry about it. He told them that during his life for ten thousand years he would have to witness the death of his sons, grandsons and subjects and would thus have to be sad throughout life.

The king conspired and made them return. Then he did rigorous tapas to Śūrya and secured from him the boon that during his life-time none would die. (Mārkandeya Purāṇa).

RAKĀ I. The presiding Deity of the full moon. She too was present at the birth of Subrahmanyā. (Śaiva Purāṇa, Chapter 45, Verse 1).

Rākaḍevī was the daughter of Aṅgirās, who had by his wife Smṛti four daughters called Śrimālī, Kūri, Ṛkā and Anumati. (Viśnu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 1).

RAKĀ II. A Rākṣasa girl. She served, at the instance of Kuṇera, Mahārāja Vivasvāna, and a son called Khara and a daughter, Śrīparākha, were born to her by the mahārāja. (Vana Parva, Chapter 275, Verse 34).

RĀKṢAS. A particular sect of asuras. Yaksas and Rākṣas were offspring born to Kāyapa prajāpati of his wife Muni. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).
Rākṣasa I. A particular sect of asuras. The ancients had ordained that Rākṣasas should not be killed at dusk. Vālmīki Rāmāyana, Bākāśāda (Canto 22, Verse 22). Uttararāmāyaṇa, contains the old story about the origin of Rākṣasas. When Bhrāma was reciting the Vedas at the beginning of Kṛta-yuga he felt very hungry and certain forms emanated from his face. Those who were born from his anger assumed the form of Rākṣasas and those from his hunger that of Yaksas. The Rākṣasas turned out to be evil folk killing and eating cows and brahmans. Bhrāmati and Heru were the first born Rākṣasas, the latter of whom wedded Bhāyā, daughter of Kāla, and to them was born a son called Viśvukūsa. Her married Śiśakāpanā, daughter of Saṅdhya. Though a child was born to them they forsook it in the Himālayan slopes and went their own ways.

At that time Siva and Pārvatī came that way and after blessing the child returned to Kailāśa. The child was named Śucī. He married Devatavī, daughter of the Gandharva called Maṇumaya and three children were born to them, viz. Mālyavān, Sūmāli and Māli. They did tapis to propitiate Brahmā and when he appeared requested him thus: “We must defeat Vākṣas Kūnara, Gandharvas, Śudhājas, Viśvādṛas, Yana, Kubera, Vāsāva, Nāga kings and daityas and dānavas and we must not be defeated by any one. We must kill all enemies and they shall not kill us. We three shall never quarrel among ourselves.” Bhrāma granted all their prayers. The three, proud and haughty due to these boons, began roaming about consuming cows and brahmans. They asked Viśvākarmā to construct for them a city for them on Mount Trūkā in the south sea. The three brothers took their abode in Lanka. Mālyavān, Sūmāli and Māli married respectively Sundarī, Kṛtumati and Vasudhā, daughters of the Gandharva woman Nāmāda. Mālyavān begot of Sundarī seven sons called Vajravastu, Viṣṇupāda, Durmuktā, Uṣṇipāda, Yajñapāda, Maha and Uṁma and also a daughter called Nila. To Sūmāli were born of Kṛtumati ten sons and also four daughters.

Four sons were born to Māli of his wife Vasudhā, and they became the ministers of Viśvākarmā. Then thousands of Rākṣasas were born as sons, grandsons, brothers, nephews, etc. to the above and they lived in Lanka, a terror to the whole world. While the daughters of Sūmāli, Vekā, Purposūkā, Kākāsī and Kumbhūkāsī were once walking in the forest they saw Kubera on a visit to Brahmā in all pomp and glory. They understood that Kubera owed his pomp and glory to his being the son of Viśvāvas and therefore, the next day one of the four, Kākāsī, went to Viśvāvas’s kraima and prayed for children by him. Three sons called Rāvana, Viśvāsika and Kumbhākarna and a daughter called Śūrpanakha were born to her by Viśvāvas. They secured boons by performing tapas and Rāvana lived in Lanka as king of the Rākṣasas.

Rākṣasa II. An approved system of marriage. (See under Viśvāsī.)

Rākṣasagraha. An evil spirit connected with the Rākṣasas. Affected by this spirit man will immediately become mad. (Vana Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 50.)

Rākṣasayajñā (Rākṣasasatras). Parāśara once conducted a yajña to annulise the Rākṣasas and their effect. (Adi Parva, Chapter 180). The provocation for Parāśara to conduct the yajña was that a Rākṣasa called Kālmakapāda ate Śakti, the father of the man; and the son of Vasiṣṭha. When the yajña had reached its climax Pulastya, Pulaha and Kavi went to Parāśara and held conciliatory talks with him, and Parāśara, ended the yajña. The Agni that he had made to devour the Rākṣasas was discarded on the slopes of the Himalayas. According to the Purāṇas that fire, even to this day, continues consuming the Rākṣasas, trees and rocks. (For details see under Kālmakapāda and Parāśara.)

Rākṣasthā. A celestial woman daughter of Kaśyapa-prajapati by Pradḥādevī. (Adi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 50.)

Rākṣasabhāska. A hell. (For details see under Kāla.)

Rākṣasovāha. A kingdom in ancient India. The Kṣatriyas there were annihilated by Parāśurāma. (Drona Parva, Chapter 70, Verse 12.)

Rākṣa. A son of Mahiśāsura. He had two sons called Bāla and Atībala. He had also a number of mighty army generals like Dhumäkta and thousand aṣṭāśuṁdis under each general. (Skanda Purāṇa, 7.1.119.)

Rākṣabhāja. 1) General. Rebirth of Rambhāsura, father of Mahiśāsura. Stories of Raktabhāja and Rambhāsura are inextricably interwoven.

2) Origin of Raktabhāja. Once upon a time there lived an asura king called Danu. His two sons, Rambha and Kārmabha who had no children, did tapas at Pañchamada for the blessing of having issues. Rambha and Kārmabha meditated upon Māyā, the supreme seat at the centre of the five fires and the latter standing in the water. Indra in the guise of a crocodile dragged Kārmabha away by the feet and killed him. Angry at the death of his brother, Rambha decided to cut off his head and offer it to fire. When he was about to do so, Agni appeared and told him that suicide was worse than killing others and proposed to him the following story according to his desire. Accordingly Rambha requested Agni for a son more effulgent than the latter, who would conquer the three worlds and would not be defeated even by the Devas and the Auras. Rambha further wanted that son to be as powerful as Vāyu, exceptionally handsome and skilled in archery. Agni blessed Rambha that he would have, as desired, a son by the woman whom he coveted. On his way back home he saw a beautiful she-buffalo, which he married. He took the buffalo which got pregnant by him, to Pāṭalā to protect it from the attack by other buffaloes. One day another buffalo felt a passion for Rambha’s wife and in the fight that ensued Rambha was killed by it. Rambha’s wife died in his funeral pyre. It was from the centre of the fire that the very powerful Mahiśāsura was born. Rambhāsura also rose from the fire under the name Raktabhāja. (Vamana Purāṇa, Chapter 17; Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha.)

3) Born to Raktabhāja. Raktabhāja secured from Siva a boon according to which if one drop of blood from his body fell on the battlefield, many Rakṭabhājas would arise from the blood and fight the enemies. Each of these Rakṭabhājas would also be like the others in the matter of strength, form and weapons. (Devī Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha.)
4) His death. War between Deva and Asuras broke out and in the fight between Deva and Raktaajya blood from his body flowed. When Deva found it impossible to kill the allies of Raktaajya who arose from the blood, he resorted to a trick. She asked Gomundra to lick off the blood flowing from Raktaajya before it fell on the ground. Accordingly Deva began killing the asuras and Gomundra consuming their blood and flesh. When the mortal Raktaajas were all killed thus, the original Raktaajya returned to heaven and in the meantime Deva cut off his hand with her sword. Gomundra did not permit even a drop of blood to fall on the ground (Dev biharvata, 5th Sandukha).

RAKTAJA. A form assumed by Arjuna in his previous birth. The following story is told in Padma Purana (Chapter 14) about Arjuna being reborn as such at the meeting of Kali and Devapara yugas and Svedaja being born as Kara during the same era. Once during a quarrel between Siva and Brahma the former rushed off Brahmas head. (For details see under Brahman). Some drops of sweat appeared on the forehead of the angry Brahman and from the sweat which Brahman wiped with his hand arose a person wearing a thousand shields, bow and quiver. That person was Svedaja. He asked Brahman where he should go and the former granted him permission to destroy Siva. Then approached Siva with bow drawn and the frightened Siva ran to Visnu and sought refuge. Svedaja followed Siva and when Visnu, seeing him, raised a loud noise "Hum", Siva prostrated at Visnu’s feet. Siva extended the skull in his hand towards Visnu requesting him to destroy Siva as he would otherwise else give Siva, put the right hand into the skull as alms, Siva wounded the hand with his Sida (three pronged weapon) and pure red blood began flowing from the hand into the skull. The blood continued flowing for a thousand years in a length of fifty yojanas and thickness of ten yojanas. At the end of the period Visnu asked whether the skull was not filled you and answered yes. At this Brahman answered that it was filled. Then Visnu stopped the flow of blood, and Siva, in the presence of Visnu, looked into the skull for a thousand years and stirred it with his hand. The blood gradually turned into a bubble, and a person possessing thousand hands and as glowing as fire appeared in the skull. He had a crown on his head and held in his hands a bow and quiver. He wore flowers on his hands. And, that was Raktaaja, an incarnation of Raktaaja.

King at Raktaaja. Siva told Visnu thus: "This master in heaven is Nara. You spoke Nara, and let his name, therefore be Nara. Oh Narayana, you both will be called Narayana. This Nara will be of help to you on behalf of the Devas and also in the maintenance and protection of the world. He will further help you to kill the asuras. Nara, the great intellectural that he is, will become a man of surpassing wisdom. Brahman’s divine fifth head possesses such an effulgence. Nara is exalted from that effulgence and also from the blood from your hands and my look at him. He will annihilate asuras in war. He will be a terror to those persons who cannot be conquered by you, Indra and the other Devas. While Visnu stood there amazed Raktaaja praised him and Siva with folded hands and asked from the skull what he should do. Then Siva ordered him thus: You kill this asura (Svedaja) created by Brahman with his own effulgence." And Siva led Raktaaja out of the skull by his hands and told him again: "Look, here lies the terrible person I spoke about made unconscious by the cry of 'Hum' by Visnu. Awake him immediately." After having said this Siva disappeared. Nara, in the presence of Narayana, kicked the unconscious Svedaja with his left foot, and he came out of his unconscious state. The fierce fight that ensued between Raktaaja and Svedaja continued for two years. By then Svedaja had lost everything but one of his shields and Raktaaja had only his two arms to fight with. At this stage Vasudeva (Visnu) in great alarm went and asked Brahman whether Raktaaja might not kill Svedaja. Brahman answered, 'In the next birth Nara may defeat Svedaja.' Saying 'Right, let that be so, 'Visnu returned to the battlefield and withdrew them from fighting with the assurance that they would be given an opportunity to fight again during the period of the Kali and the Dwapara yugas.

Afterwards Visnu directed Asitya (Sun) and Akhandalika (Indra) to look after Raktaaja and Svedaja. He told Asitya further: 'At the end of the Dwapara yuga you should see that Svedaja is reborn, in the interests of the Devas, as your son. In the Yudha dynasty will be born a very powerful fellow called Siva and he will have a very beautiful daughter named Priya. Durvasas will advise her some mantras as a boon and she will have some sons from the devas whom she will make with the mantras. With that object in view, while in her periods, she would, at the time of dawn gaze at you with love. Then he (Svedaja) will be born as the son called Vasudeva of Kunti, the virgin.'

The Sun-God agreed to obey the above instructions of Visnu and told him further: "I shall procreate in the virgin a very powerful and valiant son who will become well-known in the world as Karna. He will gift away all wealth to brahmans." After saying thus Sarya disappeared. After this Visnu told Indra as follows: "You should, at the end of the Dwapara yuga see that this Nara, born from blood, is reborn as an aspect of yours on earth. King Pandu will one day go into the forest with his wives, Kunti and Madri, and he will then become the object of an animal’s curse. He will therefore, in a spirit of renunciation, go to mount Sukastra where he would ask Kunti to become a mother by another man. Unwilling to do so Kunti will desire to have sons by Devas, and when she prays to you, you should favour her with this Nara as son. Devendra raised a loud objection to the above injunction of Visnu as follows: "You, who incarnated yourself as Rama in the twelfth yuga of the last Manvantara for the purpose of killing Rakshasa, killed my son Bili. Therefore I do not wish to procreate Nara as my son." To this objection of Indra Visnu assured him that as a penalty for the mistake of killing Bili, he would be a companion of Nara (Arjuna) who would be born as Indra’s son. According to the above terms and conditions fighting between Raktaaja and Svedaja ended. In the next birth Raktaaja was born as Arjuna and Svedaja as
To have a son, Dāsaratha took as his second wife Kaikēyi, daughter of the King of Kekaya and younger sister of Yudhīsārī. But the word of the king must be heeded. Then he married Sumitra, daughter of the King of Kasi. Even after many years none of the three waves of Dārātha presented him with a son.

One of these days Da'aratha went deep into the forests, hunting. While resting on the banks of river Sarvāti he heard a sound like that of an elephant drinking water in the river. Without realising the fangs that were dug in at the spot, he realised his mistake. He had an unknowingly a brahmī-śayo, a man’s son. The boy lay wounded about to die. The boy explained to Dāsaratha who he was and how he had come to the river to carry water to his aged parents. After realising his mistake, he breathed his last. Dāsaratha went to the aged parents of the dead boy with the pot filled with water. The parents, who were blind thought that it was their son who was approaching them when Dāsaratha revealed the sad story to them. After cursing Dāsaratha that he was only to die of such a misfortune from his son, the aged man expired; his wife also died in her funeral pyre. The grief stricken King returned to Ayodhya. Only Vaishāthi and Sumitra were told about the curse, which, though a cause for great sorrow, implied that Dāsaratha would have sons, Vaishāthi, therefore, advised Dārartha to get the yajna, called punārjañēšu performed by Rāja Viśvāmi. Accordingly the King made his daughter Śīmi and his son, Rāja Viśvāmi, present, and the yajna began. Rāja Viśvāmi made offerings in the sacred fire chanting the prātrākramā hymn. Then a divine person arose from the fire with a golden vessel full of pudding (nectar of the Devas) and disappeared again in the fire after giving the vessel to Rāja Viśvāmi. Rāja Viśvāmi handed it over to Dāsarātha who ascribed this deed to the benevolent Rāma and the goddess of nature, Kiśmāla. Then Dāraratha invited Bhūmidevi to Brahmapura, who took them to Śiva at Kailāsa as killing Kāraṇa was beyond his (Brahma’s) power. Śiva thought it improper on his part to kill Kāraṇa and so he took Brahmapura and others to Śiva and solemnised them to come to him. Śiva conferred upon him several titles like “Kāma,” “Kṣama,” and “Kśrama.” Dāraratha should take both, on earth to help me to kill Rāvaṇa and other evil Rākṣas and to protect Bhūmidevi and the good people on earth.” (Kama Rāyasyāyana, Pāva Kanda).

Birth of King Dāsaratha of the solar dynasty took place in Kekaya. Years passed by, yet he had no son. One of these days King Kāraṇa, close friend of Dāraratha visited Ayodhyā. Lomāpīṇī, who was children’s nurse, requested Dāraratha to the house of the king. There, at his adopted daughter by Dāraratha. Lomāpī gave her in marriage to Rāyaśreṇī, who had once caused rain-fall in Ayodhya. (For details see under Rāyaśreṇī).
proper place of the axe and thus averted the mishap. When Dāśarathā knew about this timely action of Kaśyapi he was so very pleased that he asked her to choose any two bounts she desired, and she asked him to keep the bounts with him to be granted whenever she requested for them. Dāśarathā and Kaśyapi took leave of Indra and returned to Ayodhyā. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa.)

8) Marriage of the Ramas. The four sons of Dāśarathā grew up in Ayodhyā. Though they were equally friendly to one another, intimacy between Rāma and Laksmana and also between Bharata and Sātrūkgna came to be thicker. Once Viśvāmitra decided to conduct a yājña for the happiness and contentment of all people. At the very commencement of the yājña Rākṣasas, in batches, tried to spoil it, and Mātréka and Subhāku, sons of Tātākā, were the leaders of the obstructionists. Viśvāmitra knew that Rāma was the most effective weapon against the Rākṣasas and requested Dāśarathā to lead him Rāma’s help. Dāśarathā felt sad about it and Viśvāmitra was getting excited over the former’s attitude when Vaiśvāmi advised Dāśarathā to send Rāma along with Viśvāmitra. Accordingly Dāśarathā sent Rāma for this purpose in the company of Viśvāmitra. Laksmana too followed his brother. While walking in the forest Viśvāmitra related many old stories to Rāma and Laksmana. They crossed river Sarayū, passed by many śramaṇas of muni and reached the Pala forest. Here Viśvāmitra imparted to Rāma and Laksmana, who felt too weak on account of hunger, the secret of how to ward off hunger and thirst. He also taught them the use of certain rare arrows. Śrī Rāma was specially taught the use of a divine arrow called Jambhakṣastra.

10) Tātākā killed. While Viśvāmitra was relating to them the story of Tātākā, who dwelt in the forest, they saw the fierce Rākṣas coming last with a long spear in her hand. She threw a big rock at Viśvāmitra. Ramā shattered the rock with an arrow. Next, Tātākā dashed forward against Rāma roaring furiously, and Rāma, with another arrow killed her. The soul of the dead Tātākā assumed the form of a Gandharva woman and ascended to heaven.

11) Departure of Śrī Viśvāmitra. Rākṣasas like Subhāku lined up to obstruct the yājña, while Viśvāmitra began after the killing of Tātākā. Ramā killed Subhāku; Mātrēka ran away in fright and hid himself in the sea, Rāma drove away the other Rākṣasas.

Next, Viśvāmitra, hearing about the Svayamvaram of Sīti, daughter of King Janaka started for his palace with Rāma and Laksmana, and on the way he told the boys many Purāṇic stories. They bathed in the river Gātī and a short walk took them to the vacant āśrama of Gauṭama. The great muni called Gauṭama had once lived in this āśrama with his dutiful wife Ahalāyā and their son Śatānanda, an erudite scholar in all sciences. Indra, who lost his head over the great beauty of Ahalāyā went to the āśrama one midnight in the form of a cock and crew. Thinking it was already dawn Gauṭama went to the river for bath when Indra assumed the form of the muni, entered his bed room and slept with Ahalāyā. When Gauṭama understood the fraud thus played upon him, he cursed her into a stone. She was to resume her old form when, during Tretāyuga, Śrī Rāma trod upon the stone. Accordingly, as soon as Rāma trod on the stone Ahalāyā cast off her form as stone and resumed her old form as Ahalāyā. Immediately Gauṭama and Śatānanda also appeared on the scene. Ahalāyā ascended to the sky as a devī.

12) Marriage of Viśvāmitra. Viśvāmitra came to king Janaka’s palace with Rāma and Laksmana. Janaka’s daughter Sīti and his younger brothers’ daughter Mānḍāvi, Īrmīla and Śrutakrīki were living in the palace as sisters and very good friends. One day the princesses who were playing in the garden could not pluck jasmine flowers from a height. Sīti then brought the Svayācīpā (Sīvi’s bow) from the weapon-room and shot down Jasmine flowers with it. As Janaka watched Sīti’s action of shooting with the Svayācīpā an idea came into his head. He announced that the hero, who succeeded in shooting with Svayācīpā, would be given Sīti in marriage. Just as Rāma and Laksmana were inseparable companions Sīti and Īrmīla were always to be found together and Mānḍāvi and Śrutakrīki were particular friends. Śrī Rāma shot an arrow from Sīvi’s bow and he was selected as Sīti’s husband. Janaka informed Dāśarathā of the marriage and he came with his attendants. Rākṣasas married by King Janaka and Sūrya. Sūrya married by Śrī Rāma and Śrutakrīki. After living in Mithūlā for some time Dāśarathā and others returned to Ayodhyā. Viśvāmitra went to the Himalayas for rest.

13) Parāśurāma’s treat. Dāśarathā and others on their way back to Ayodhyā passed the Videha kingdom and reached the suburb of Bhrāgavārama. All of a sudden a shining form of a brahmin with Ksatriya effulgence appeared in front of the processions. Vaiśvāmi understood that it was Parāśurāma and Dāśarathā and others were alarmed. Parāśurāma approached Śrī Rāma who was viewing the former with quiet serenity. Parāśurāma was very angry that Rāma broke the bow of Sīva who was his (Parāśurāma’s) preceptor. All Rāma’s ceremonial talk failed to pacify Parāśurāma, who spoke thus to Rāma: “You, young one! Bow your head and pay respect to me. All right, let me see your power. Take this bow of mine, and shoot with it.” Śrī Rāma took hold of the bow and bent it easily and fixing an arrow on it asked Parāśurāma to point out the target for it. As Parāśurāma feared that if the arrow was sent, it might crush the whole universe, he asked Rāma to choose the result of his (Parāśurāma’s) weapon as target for the arrow. Both the bow and the arrow were of Visuṭṭ’s power. That power as well as his own Vaisāgav power, Parāśurāma transferred to Śrī Rāma and having thus fulfilled the object of his incarnation Parāśurāma went to Punyārama for permanent tapas.

14) Rain of the country. Dāśarathā decided to install Śrī Rāma as crown prince. The people who heartedly welcomed it. During the night previous to the coronation, while the wives of Dāśarathā were gladly discussing the happy incident, Manthārā, the tale-bearing maid of Kaśyapi advised her mistress to prevail upon Dāśarathā to exile Rāma into the forest and install Bharata as crown prince. Manthārā also reminded Kaśyapi about the bounts, which had been promised to her by Dāśarathā during the devāsura. Kaśyapi fell into the trap thus set by Manthārā. Kaśyapi put on a wrathful face and shut herself up in a room. When Dāśarathā enquired of her the reason for her anger she asked him to make her son Bharata, the crown prince and exile Rāma for fourteen years' life in forest. The king fainted when he heard the demand. But, Sri Rama, on hearing about it, put on the Shankara's sanyasa and got ready to start for the forest. Sita and Lakshmana also got ready to follow Rama into the forest. While the entire population of Ayodhya stood there weeping, Rama, Lakshmana and Sita wearing the forest-dwellers' garb started for the forest.

11) Death of Dataratha and Bharata's derision. As soon as Sumantra, who had accompanied Rama and others returned to Ayodhya, Dataratha expired on account of unbearable grief caused by Rama's exile. Messengers brought to Ayodhya Bharata and Surratha from Keekaya where they were put up with their uncle Yuddhajit at the time of their father's death. But, they were kept in the dark of all that had happened in their absence till their arrival at the palace. Bharata, who heard of everything from his mother was greatly upset and got ready to go to Rama in the forest. Surratha too got ready to accompany him. Arundhati and Vasishta in a chariot in the fore-front, Kaushalya and Sumitra in another chariot just behind the first one, Bharata and Surratha behind them—in this manner the great journey into the forest started. Leaving all others behind him, Bharata went: 'We will never return. We are abandoned by manu at Chitrakuta. Sri Rama broke into tears on hearing about the death of their father. But in spite of Bharata's pressing request Rama refused to return to Ayodhya. At last Bharata yielded to Rama's injunction and returned to Ayodhya with the latter's sandals. But he did not enter the palace; instead he built an aśrama at Nandagrama and worshipping Rama's sandals lived there.

12) Trip to Pañcaviś. From Mount Chitrakuta Sri Rama and others started towards the forest. When they continued their journey after visiting the Sage Attri's aśrama a Rākṣasa called Virāchana ran away carrying off Sita. Rama killed Virāchana and regained Sita. Then they visited the aśrama of sage Sarabhaniga in the Rākṣasa forest. Thereafter they visited the forest where they visited malariṣi Agastya, and there Rama took the vow to kill Rāvana and other evil Rākṣasas and thus render the land safe for sages to perform tapas. Agastya presented to Rama a Vaiṣṇava bow, a Brahma arrow and a Saiva quiver. Rama kept them with Agastya himself to be given to him when required. Then Agastya gave Rama a divine ornament such as was not available in all the three worlds. Rama tied it round Sita's neck. Taking leave of Agastya, Rama and others went to the Daṇḍaka forest. It was on a high peak of Mount Mahakīrtvana in the forest that Jātayu, brother of Sampāti and a very close friend of Rama lived. Rama and Jātayu renewed their old friendship and decided to be of mutual service in future. After that Rama and others rested themselves on the banks of the near-by Godavari.

13) Stay at Pañcaviś. Pañcaviś was on the southern bank of the Godavari. Five vāpas (peepal trees) of the same size stood there in a circle, and so the place was called Pañcaviś. (See under Pañcaviś). Rama decided to build his aśrama at the centre of these trees. Lakshmana cut down an ebony tree there to put up a parāṣālā (but). At once the log disappeared and the dead body of a Rākṣasa youth was found there. It was the corpse of Sambhukumāra, son of Sūpānakhā. He was performing tapas there to propitiate Śiva when he was overcome by the beauty of Sītā and to look at her from a hidden spot. He hid amongst the leaves of the ebony tree. It was him that Lakshmana had cut down. Sri Rama understood the situation and explained to his wife and brother about the trickeries of the Rākṣasas. Then the parāṣālā was constructed and they lived there. Hearing about the coming of Rama all the sages of the Daṇḍaka forest visited them. They lived in Pañcaviś for thirteen years.

14) Oh Parasuram (Siva) and Pañcaviś. Paramesvara and Pañcaviś, Parameshvar and Pañcaviś, who knew that many tricky changes would occur in the thirteenth year of the life of Rama and Sītā there, decided to submit them to a test. The object of the test was to see whether Rama and Sītā would recognize each other under all circumstances. When Sītā one day entered the river Godavari to fetch water, she saw Sūpānakhā enjoying throughout a lotus pool in the middle of a sand-bar in the river. When Sītā went near the pool she saw Rama bathing in it. But on a closer look she recognized that it was not Rama, but Śiva, in the guise of Rama, who was bathing there. To befoul Sītā Śiva, who was disguised as Rama, told her :-Dear one! Please come to me quickly. Why are you so late?

Sītā :-Oh, Deva! Salutations. Why did you alone come to the bath? Rama :-I had to come alone as Deva did not come with me at once and was late in coming.

Sītā :-Why did not the Deva come? You two are unique. Devi might be alone at Kaśī just now. It was not good that you did not bring her also with you.

Sītā :-Oh great Deva! Salutations to your divine greatness, Let me return to Kaśī after saluting Śri Rama. Hail unto thee.

Meanwhile Śri Rama was waiting impatiently for Sītā to return. Then Sītā approached him looking into a lotus flower she held in her hand and also throwing, off and on, amorous glances at him. (She was in fact Pañcaviś in the guise of Śivā. And she told Rama :-My Lord! I would like you would excuse my delay in returning. The delay was due to my tarrying there to look at the play of two swans. Śri Rama looked closely and recognised that it was not Sītā and replied as follows :-Oh Deva! My salutations. Did you come alone? Where is Deva? How is it that you are separated from him? Mahādeva and Mahādevi are one and inseparable. Then how this separation? Sītā (Pañcaviś) :-Salutations. Thou art omniscient and omnipotent. I return to thy presence of Śiva.

15) The incident of Śūpānakhā. Śūpānakhā was the wife of a Rākṣasa called Vidyujjhiva. Once in a war which Rāvana, Vidyujjhiva and other Rākṣasas fought at Devaloka Vidyujjhiva was killed by mistake. Rāvana, therefore, permitted Śūpānakhā to choose what she liked as her husband, and she went about the world in search of a suitable husband. She liked some persons, but they did not like her, and vice versa. Thus she was roaming about discontented. She was also on the look-out for an opportunity to take vengeance on Lakshmana for killing her son, Sambhukumāra. Śūpānakhā, who heard about the beauty of Rama and Lakshmana came to Pañcaviś disguised as Lāśī. Śri Rama alone was there in the aśrama at the time and she told him that she was love-sick. Śri Rama rejected her prayer on the plea that he was already married,
Then she approached Lakşmanä with the same request. He too refused to oblige her. Then she saw Sîtä there and decided to shatter her married life and also to make a present of her to Râvana. She also thought that if Sîtä were got rid of she would have Râma for husband. Maddened by such thoughts she rushed into the aśrama. But, Lakşmanä drove her out. Then, carrying Lakşmanä with her she rose into the sky and he cut away both her hands and nose. This disfigured she resumed her form of Râkṣasa. She flew away in the sky roaring loudly.

16) Khara killed. Having heard about the disfigurement of Sûrpamakñhî Khara sent fourteen Râkṣasas to Râma's aśrama. Lakşmanā killed them very easily. Next, Khara, his brothers Dûṣhana and Trisûrâ with fourteen thousand Râkṣasas soldiers came to fight Râma. Râma and Lakşmanâ killed them also. This saddened Sûrpamakñhî very much and she reported the entire affair to Râvana at Lankâ. She told him that Râma and Lakşmanâ were very courageous warriors and he was not to enter into direct fighting with them, but was to abduct Sîtä whose loss would cause Râma's death. She also assured Râvana that if Râma died, Lakşmanâ would himself carry Sîtä to Lanka. This saddened Sûrpamakñhî very much and she reported the entire affair to Râvana at Lankâ. He told him that Râma and Lakşmanâ were very courageous warriors and he was not to enter into direct fighting with them, but was to abduct Sîtä whose loss would cause Râma's death. She also assured Râvana that if Râma died, Lakşmanâ would himself carry Sîtä to Lanka. This saddened Sûrpamakñhî very much and she reported the entire affair to Râvana at Lankâ. He told him that Râma and Lakşmanâ were very courageous warriors and he was not to enter into direct fighting with them, but was to abduct Sîtä whose loss would cause Râma's death. She also assured Râvana that if Râma died, Lakşmanâ would himself carry Sîtä to Lanka.

17) Sîtä abducted. Next day a spotted deer was found playing near the aśrama. Sîtä desired to have the deer and Sîrî Râma, after asking his brother to take care of Sîtä, followed the deer, which enticed him to a great distance in the forest. Aftâr, finding it difficult to catch the deer alive, Râma shot an arrow at it. Hit by the arrow, the deer died. Sîtä traced the arrow and found Sîtä killed and fell down crying, "Oh! Sîtä! O Lakşmanâ, a Râkṣasa is killing me. Come and save me."

The Râkṣasa, who thus fell a prey to Râma's arrow was really Mârica, uncle of Râvana. Mârica had gone in the form of a deer to Râma's aśrama at the instance of his nephew to cheat Râma. Sîtä heard the false cry of Mârica and asked Lakşmanâ to hurry up to the spot for Râma's protection. Lakşmanâ at first did not want to leave Sîtä there alone and go after Râma. But, when she used hard and cruel words against him Lakşmanâ quitted the aśrama and went into the forest. When Râma and Lakşmanâ were thus absent at the aśrama an old Sannyâsin came for alms at the courtyard. Sîtä, who came to offer alms was forcibly carried away by Râvana (the sannyâsin was Râvana in disguise) in his puspaka aerial chariot to Lankâ. On the way Jaṭâyu saw Râvana and put up a fight with him to get Sîtä released. But, Jaṭâyu had to fall down wounded by the sword of Râvana and he lay there awaiting Râma's arrival. Râma and Lakşmanâ returned to the aśrama only to find Sîtä missing. While they advanced some distance lamenting over the loss of Sîtä they saw Jaṭâyu lying in the forest, his wings cut, but happy in expectation of salvation and repeating the name of Râma. Jaṭâyu gave Râma all details about Sîtä and then gave up his body and ascended to Vaikuntha.

18) Salvation to Aśkandhâ. Râma and Lakşmanâ moved toward the south in quest of Sîtä. An aśrama woman called Ayumûkhî, sister of Sûrûpamakñhî tried to entice Lakşmanâ, who went alone to a pool to fetch water. When Lakşmanâ resisted and kept away from her allurements, she tried to carry him away into the sky.

But, he drove her away disfigured. When the brothers continued their search for Sîtä they were caught in the arms stretched out in semi-circular form. It was a Râkṣasa called Aśkandhâ, and they cut away one arm each. At once the fierce Aśkandhâ (headless body) form disappeared and a Gandharva youth appeared in his place. After offering mokṣa to Aśkandhâ Râma and Lakşmanâ continued their search for Sîtä. (See under Aśkandhâ).

19) Salvation to Sâbarâ. Râma and Lakşmanâ reached Sâbarâ and were duly received by the female hermit Sâbarâ. She presented them with fruits. Not only that, she personally tasted each fruit for its quality and then gave the best to the guests. Râma was so very pleased with her pure devotion that he offered her salvation. (For details see under Sâbarâ).

20) Râma-Sugrîva alliance. Râma and Lakşmanâ bathed in the Pâmpa river and thus refreshed they travelled up to the height of Mount Râyanmûka where Sugrîva lived with Hanumân as his Prime Minister. Sugrîva, who saw Râma and Lakşmanâ coming, deputed Hanumân to find out whether they were friends or foes. Hanumân, in the guise of a brahman boy talked with them, who revealed to them the projected alliance of Sîtä. Having understood the matters Hanumân resumed his actual form and carried Râma and Lakşmanâ on his shoulders into the presence of Sugrîva. Sugrîva related to Râma the story of his expulsion from Kiskindhâ by Bâlî, his elder brother. Sugrîva wanted a powerful ally to recapture the country. Similarly Sîrî Râma too wanted a powerful ally to regain Sîtä. So both the parties entered into an alliance. Râma undertaking to kill Bâlî and restore his kingdom and his wife to Sugrîva and Sugrîva undertaking to search for and find out Sîtä for Râma. Though the above pact was made, Sugrîva was doubtful about Râma's capacity to honour his part of the contract, and Râma, knowing this suspicion of Sugrîva, wanted to dispel it. The mountaineer killers body of Durndul, the Râkṣasa killed by Bâlî, lay there in a big heap of bones and at the instance of Râma, Lakşmanâ threw it into the distant southern sea with the big toe of his left foot. Sugrîva was wonder-struck at this feat of Lakşmanâ and praised him. Yet Sugrîva was not quite cured of his doubt and Râma wanted to further convince him of their prowess.

There were seven big trees there known as Saptasâlas. Bâlî used to wrestle with the trees due to his overflowing vitality and power. (See under Saptasâla). Sîrî Râma went near the trees and suddenly fixed an arrow on his bow-string and shot it by drawing the bow, with the big toe of his right foot pressed against a rock. The arrow cut down the seven trees at one and same time and then automatically returned to its quiver. Sugrîva was taken aback by this marvellous show of power.

21) Exhibition of ornaments. They came again to Râyanmûkacañya and Sugrîva placed before Râma a bundle of ornaments and said that it was dropped down by a weeping woman from an aerial chariot, which had, a few days back, passed above the mountain. Râma recognised them as Sîtä's ornaments, shed tears and sat there motionless for some time. At last Sugrîva and Lakşmanâ consoled him and he handed over the bundle of ornaments to Lakşmanâ.
22) Kingdom restored to Sugriva. The very next day Sugriva took Rama to Kiskindha, and the former challenged Bili for a combat. Rama, from a distance, viewed the fierce fight between the brothers, but he could not do anything as it was impossible to distinguish between Bili and Sugriva on account of their very close resemblance. Sugriva, who was defeated in the first round and retired from fight, felt angry towards Rama, but was soon satisfied with Rama's explanation for his inaction. To distinguish Sugriva from Bili Sri Rama, the next day, put a garland on the former's neck and wearing the garland Sugriva challenged Bili a second time to a duel. Though Bili's wife, Tarâ, this time prevented him from accepting the challenge Bili paid no heed to her protests and rushed forth for the duel.

Bili and Sugriva fought again, and this time Rama from his concealment behind a tree shot an arrow at the chest of Bili. The arrow killed him. Rama and Lakshman then came into the open and Bili spoke disparagingly to Rama about shooting the arrow from concealment. Rama answered him saying that if he had seen him (Rama) face to face he would have become his devotee and he had to shoot Bili from his hiding place as it was not proper to kill one's devotee. At last, after hearing over charge of his wife and son Alagada, to Sugriva, Bili breathed his last. Sri Rama decided to crown Sugriva as King and install Alagada as crown prince and returned to Kayamkûzâla for rest after entrusting, under the supervision of Lakshman, Hanumân and Jambavan with the duty of making preparations for the coronation. Though Sugriva invited Sri Rama to Kiskindha when preparations for coronation were over, the latter declined the invitation gracefully and deputed Lakshman to represent him at the ceremony. Lakshman installed Sugriva as the Mahârâja, Alagada as crown prince, Rumâ as queen and Tarâ as queen-mother. Also, Hanumân was appointed as Sugriva's minister. Those things over, Lakshman returned to Kayamkûzâla at Lakshman's urâkh. The next four months were rainy period. Even after that Sugriva did not make necessary arrangements to search for Sita. At Rama's instance Lakshman went to Kiskindha to enquire about the reason for the delay. The monkeys were alarmed by the grave appearance of Lakshman and Tarâ came out and apologised to him. Arrangements were soon finalised for the quest of Sita. Armies of many laks of monkeys were deputed to the eight regions to search for Sita. Susena was appointed chief of the army for the west, Sataballa for the north, Vinata for the east and Alagada for the south. As the south was the chief place for the search, monkeys like Hanumân, Jambavan, Vívida, Nala, Nila, Kumuda, each of them an expert in various ways, were appointed chiefs of different matters. Every chief and his assistant was given suitable instructions by Lakshman and Sugriva, and accordingly the army of monkeys began its march under the leadership of Hanumân.

24) Words of recognition. To convince Sita that it was really the emperor of Rama who went to her the latter imitated to Hanumân in the following three sentences for timely use.

(i) "When I took leave of you for life in exile in the forest you (Sita) were then in the inner apartment dressed in ordinary fashion came out in the same dress prepared to follow me saying 'I too...' engaging anger'.

(ii) When, for our life in the forest, we had left the city and approached a shrubbery, Sita in her childish ignorance and goodness of heart told me 'This place will do for our forest life.'

(iii) While she was one day massaging my leg in our bedroom she threw away from her finger the ring studded with stones. When I asked her the reason for it she answered me as follows:—This ring studded with stones may prove to be of danger to me. When your feet touched the hard granite rock it turned out into a world beauty (Atalyâ). Under the circumstances how much more beautiful would be the woman, who would be created by the touch of your foot on the beautiful stone of the ring? And, because of that beauty you may...me....and then...". We two—i and Sita—alone knew about the above incident.

Carrying thus Sri Rama's signet and words of recognition Hanumân went along with the army, which started for the south. Sugriva gave one month's time to the searching parties to find out Sita and warned them that their threats would be cut if they failed in their mission.

25) See Suyamprabhâ. Alagada, Hanumân, Jambavan and others during their search came to an extensive forest. They were dead tired with hunger and thirst. The leader of the party looked about for something to eat and drink when he saw small birds flying up from a distant pit. From drops of water falling from the wings of the birds it was inferred that the pit contained water. When Hanumân and others entered the pit (cave) and walked a great distance they came to a spacious garden. They were astonished to find a solitary beauty there, and she related to them her autobiography as follows:—

I am the faithful maid of Rambahâ. The powerful asura called Caturâya wanted me to procure Rambahâ for him and he got this garden city built by Mayâcharya, the architect of the Daityas, for me as reward for my service to him in the matter of Rambahâ. Various kinds of gems light this place and creepers and trees supply food materials. Caturâya, I and Rambahâ alike were living here. But, Indra came to know of it, came here, killed Caturâya and took away Rambahâ with him. He cursed me to lead a solitary life here as punishment for having helped Caturâya. I prayed for redemption from the curse and Indra told me, that after thousands of years a company of monkeys would come here in search of Sita and that after entertaining them with food I must see Rama and then return to Svaragâ. I have thus been awaiting your arrival and now I am leaving the place, which will vanish as soon as I quit it. All of you, please stand there with eyes closed and I shall send you back to the place where you were before coming here.

Accordingly the monkeys stood there with eyes closed and when they opened their eyes there was neither the garden city nor Suyamprabhâ there but they were standing in the old plain. Suyamprabhâ appeared before Rama, praised him and then went to Svaragâ. 25) Meî Sambahâ. The monkeys again went southward, reached Mahendragiri and descending on its southern side came to the shores of the southern sea. They could advance no further to the south. They were suffering from great hunger and thirst and if they returned with no tangible information about Sītā, Sugriva would kill them. They preferred death by fasting on the seashore to death by the sword of Sugriva.

Having decided thus the monkeys spread darbha grass on the extensive plain of Mahendra mountain and lay on the grass to die. In a large cave in the mountain was living Sampāti. The huge bird Sampāti was starving with hunger and was not able to fly as it had lost its wings. But it dragged itself to the mouth of the cave and saw the monkeys lying there awaiting death, and it thought of eating the monkeys one by one. The monkeys, who understood this idea of Sampāti cursed their fate and sang the praise of Jātāyu.

Hearing the word 'Jātāyu' Sampāti approached the monkeys, who related to him the object of their journey. Being told about the death of Jātāyu, Sampāti shed tears and told the monkeys as follows:-

Jātāyu was my younger brother. Our mother was Mahēṣvetā and father Śūryadeva. On account of the boon of our parents I was King of all the birds and Jātāyu the crown Prince. As our brotherliness grew thicker our haughtiness due to our power and greed also increased. Once we flew up towards the orbit of the Sun to see him, our father. In his youthful enthusiasm my younger brother, Jātāyu, climbed higher up in the sky leaving me behind. Due to the heat of the Sun his wings lost their power and energy. Then, to save him, I flew up above him and shielded him. Therefore he could descend to the earth without his wings being burned and thus killed. My wings got burned and I fell down on the Mahendra mountain and got my legs broken. Thus I lost the power either to fly or to walk.

I stayed here as the attendant of Nīśākara Mahāraṣṭri, who could divine the future also. He told me the story about Rāma's incarnation. He told me further that monkeys in search of Sītā would come here when I should tell them where Sītā was and that then I would regain my health."

After telling the monkeys the above facts Sampāti, with their cooperation, performed the obsequies of Jātāyu. Then the King of birds (Sampāti) raised its head and surveyed the ocean and he saw the following: Mountain Subela in the heart of the southern sea; the plain at the heights of the mountain constituting the base of Lankā; in the centre of Lankā there was Rāvana's capital; nearby the ladies' quarters; near the quarters the aśoka garden; at the centre of the garden the Śīr apā tree and under the tree Śīrādevi.

A soon as Sampāti had finished telling the monkeys the above details he regained his health.

Sampāti told the monkeys another story also as follows:- Rāvana once abducted a Yāka beauty from Alakāpūri and carried her away in his Paupaka Vimāna. Sampāti clashed with Rāvana on his way and destroyed his plane. But the plane, which was self-generating came again into existence. Sampāti threw away by its beak the Candrabhāsa (Rāvana's sword) and kicked his crown down. At last, at the request of Rāvana, he and Sampāti signed a non-aggression pact. That was the reason why Sampāti could not fight Rāvana in person.

27) Hanumān saw Sītā. Atanga said that for the search for Sītā in Lankā as told by Sampāti, some one should jump across the ocean. Though many a monkey tried to do so it was Hanumān, who succeeded in crossing the sea. At one jump he reached the heights of Mahendra mountain whence he took another jump forward. But, midway Surāsā, mother of the nāgas, swallowed him, and he came out through her ear and continued his journey towards Lankā. When he had advanced some more distance an evil spirit called Chayagrāhini obstructed his way by a mysterious attack on his shadow. Hanumān quickly understood it and had his shadow and killed the evil spirit with one kick of his left foot. He again continued his flight. But, he very soon became weak and exhausted. Then Mount Maināka emerged from the ocean and fed Hanumān with fruits and roots. He reached Lankā at dusk. He defeated Lankālakṣmī, who tried to prevent his entry into the city. In fact Lankālakṣmī was Vijayalakṣmī, who had been cursed by Brahma. (For details see under Vijayalakṣmī). After defeating her, who was thus absorbed from the curse, Hanumān saw Sītā seated under the aśoka tree. But, none saw him as he was perched on a tree.

28) Hanumān's return. That night Rāvana dressed in all splendour visited Sītā and tried to secure her favour by soft words and caresses, all to no purpose. Then he threatened her with death, which was promised to be of no avail. After instructing the Rākṣasa women that Sītā should be somehow brought round within a month's time, Rāvana returned to his palace. Rākṣasas surrounded Sītā and described her the greatness and various merits of Rāvana. Sītā continued to sob. Then came there Trijata, daughter of Viśnū, the great devotee. She implored with Sītā, to console Sītā. Trijata had boundless devotion towards Rāma and great love for Sītā. She repeated to Sītā certain dreams she had had.

Left to herself Sītā began saying to herself various things regarding her past. She referred to her infancy, beginning of youth, wedding, stay at Ayodhya, forest-life and life in Paśca-vāsi and went over her recollections about them. Hanumān, who heard Sītā's soliloquy completed Sītā's story by relating, from his place on the tree, about Jātāyu's salvation, salvation given to Kāhandha and Sabari, alliance with Sugriva, killing of Bali, expedition of the monkeys in search of Sītā, meeting with Sampāti, himself (Hanumān) crossing the sea and his finding out Sītā. Hearing the words of Hanumān, Sītā looked up in astonishment. Immediately Hanumān came down the tree and presented the signet ring at Sītā's feet. When she examined the ring her hands shook and tears dimmed her eyes. Hanumān talked to her in detail and told her that he would, if only Sītā permitted him, carry her on his shoulders to Rāma. He told her further that if she did not welcome the idea of returning to Rāma, he would return with Śī Rāma and others, defeat Rāvana in war and take her back. Sītā was not convinced about the power and prowess of Hanumān. He then increased his body in size so that his limbs grew into the size of a mountain, hands into that of trees, head into that of a mountain peak, tail into that of a river etc. His breathing became akin to a storm. Then he roared in such a manner that even the very ends of the world shook and the people of Lankā were awakened by it.

Sītā was now absolutely convinced of Hanumān's bona fides and faithfulness. She handed over to him her Cūḍāmaṇi (ornament worn on the head) to be given to Rāma and also told him the following three words of recognition so that Rāma might be all the more convinced.
(1) When Rāma first came to the garden near the palace in Mithilā I (Sīta) saw his reflection in the blue mirror in the veranda of my palace and the beauty of the reflection attracted me. I looked towards the garden to see the original of the reflection. Then he (Rāma) was looking down into the waters of the glass pool. He also saw my face reflected in the water and suddenly he looked at me. Our eyes met and in all shyness I hurried to and hid myself in the ladies' quarriers.
(2) Before our wedding I sent him through a faithful maid, a love letter to which he gave me a suitable reply.
(3) After our wedding while we were living in Ayodhya when one day I returned to our bedroom after a long chit-chat with my younger sisters, my lord (Rāma) was lying on the cot in reclined sleep. Quietly I went up to him and kissed him on the lips. Because of the pressure on his lips and as my breast then touched his chest he pretended to have suddenly woken up and awoke up.
Having received thus from Sīta the Cūdānaṇi and these words of recognition Hanūmān took leave of Sīta and with her implied sanction went about to have a look at Lankā. At one place he heard Vibhiṣaṇa reciting Visūṇa’s names. After wishing that this house of the devotee should turn into a royal abode he passed Vibhiṣaṇa’s house. Then he came to Rāvaṇa’s palace and... Hanūmān functioned as supernumeraries and other monkeys as workers. Mountains, hills, rocks etc. were brought from various quarters and the construction of the bond was begun.
Meanwhile, Rāvaṇa sent a great magician called Marutta disguised as King Janaka to Sīta to convert her to the side of Rāvaṇa. But, the attempt failed.
Rāvaṇa then sent his two expert spies Sītu and Sāruṇa disguised as monkeys to Rāma’s camp. Jambha-vān and Hanūmān captured and brought them before Sugrīva. Weeping they both sought refuge in Rāma, who set them free. They returned to Lankā and reported matters to Rāvaṇa, who felt a desire to have a look at Rāma for which purpose he... The first day the northern towers were... Rāvaṇa, who knew about it by his spies climbed the heights of Sabela mountain whence he stared at Rāvaṇa. Their eyes met in anger seeing which Sugrīva by one leap reached Rāvaṇa and kicked off to Rāma the crown from the central head of Rāvaṇa. After performing something like a destructive dance on Rāvaṇa’s head Sugrīva by another leap returned to Rāma. Full of disappointment Rāvaṇa returned to his palace.
His father-in-law, Māyāvarāṇa, tried his best to dissuade Rāvaṇa from war, all to no purpose. Rāma sent an emissary to him to ask him to send Sīta back.
Rāvaṇa declined to oblige, and immediately war began.
During the first day of the war the majority of the Rākṣasas including their great leaders like Mahābhāhu, Mahā-pārśva, Mahodara, Mahākāyā etc. were killed. On the second day the Rākṣasas army under the command of Atikāya, son of Rāvaṇa, set out from the northern tower to fight. Lakṣmīnara killed Atikāya with Brahma-stra. The other two Rākṣasas-commanders were Tīrīsiras and Meghanāda. Lakṣmīnara encountered them.
When the latter failed to win by righteous fighting reverted to cunning and attributed victory to him, and then he hid himself in the sky and shot the māgāstra given to him by Siiva against the enemy.
That arrow rendered Lakṣmīnara, Sugrīva and all the monkeys unconscious. At that time Vibhīṣaṇa was away to arrange for food.

When Vibhīṣaṇa returned with food he was taken back to find Lakṣmaṇa and others lying in an unconscious condition. Rāma was informed about the matter and when he came to the battle-ground and saw Lakṣmaṇa, Sugrīva, Hanumān and all the others lying there unconscious he lost self-confidence for a short while and remarked that it was all the result of his having put faith in Vibhīṣaṇa, Rāvana’s brother whom he had put in charge of the battlefield. This comment of Rāma pained Vibhīṣaṇa much; but Śri Rāma soon treated him kindly.

Even the Devas who witnessed the scene were alarmed. But Rāma sat there for some time immersed in meditation and then a light emerged from his right eye, shot towards the north and disappeared in the horizon. At once Garuḍa appeared on the scene from the west and removed with his beak the nāgāśtra from Lakṣmaṇa’s body. Lakṣmaṇa jumped up from his unconscious state; Sugrīva and others also regained consciousness. In the fighting that followed all the Rākṣasa leaders were killed. It was Hanumān, who killed Kumbhabakarna. At the time of his death Kumbhabakarna made his last request to Rāma, i.e., his head should be cut off and thrown into the sea as otherwise the Rākṣasas would laugh at him to see the head from which the ears have been bitten off by monkeys. Accordingly Rāma got Hanumān to throw Kumbhabakarna’s head into the sea.

Then Śri Rāma told Lakṣmaṇa thus: Today I shall fight Indrajit. This war shall continue yet further. Today Indrajit and tomorrow Rāvana shall be killed and the next day we will return to Ayodhya. Lakṣmaṇa answered:—‘I shall fight Indrajit. I have told Vibhīṣaṇa that I will kill Indrajit within three days.’

With Śri Rāma’s blessings Lakṣmaṇa began fighting again. Indrajit shot Nārāyānastra which attracted by the ‘seven-letter-Mantra’ (Nāma Nārāyānāya) of Lakṣmaṇa circled him three times and entered his quiver. The Rākṣasa minister called Mahodara converted his elephant into Airāvata and himself changed into Devendra and encountered Lakṣmaṇa. Saying that he had no quarrel with Indra and would not fight him Lakṣmaṇa put down his bow, and Indrajit, exploiting the siṣumāṇ shot Brahmāstra against Lakṣmaṇa under cover of the clouds. Lakṣmaṇa, Sugrīva and others fainted. Then Śri Rāma was in the army-camp, watching weapons to render them more powerful. Rāma returned to the battle-ground to find Lakṣmaṇa and others in life-less condition and crying like a more ignorant fellow lay by the side of Lakṣmaṇa. Vibhīṣaṇa, who returned with food prayed for the grace of Devas. India appeared, gave to Vibhīṣaṇa Gaṅgā water in a golden vessel and asked it to be given to Hanumān and Jambhavān, who, though unconscious were not dead.

Vibhīṣaṇa did so and both Hanumān and Jambhavān regained consciousness. Jambhavān told Hanumān that if Mṛtasanjīvini (herbal medicine which will put life back into the dead) were brought from the distant Himalayas before the next day all the dead ones like Lakṣmaṇa and Sugrīva could be brought back to life. (See under Mṛtasanjīvini). Accordingly Hanumān started for the Himalayas. Meanwhile Indrajit had told Rāvana about his victory, and as suggested by the latter Rākṣasa women took Śītā to the battlefield in the Puspaka Vimāna, showed her Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa and others lying there in a life-less condition and told her that all of them were dead. Śītā wept aloud, but Trijāṭa consoled her by saying that the Puspaka Vimāna would not carry widows and therefore Rāma was not dead. Hanumān returned before dawn the next day. As he could not distinguish Mṛtasanjīvini he had brought with him a mountain peak where the four medicinal plants, Sālayakaraṇi, Viśālayakaraṇi, Saṃdhānakaraṇi and Mṛtasanjīvini grew. Jambhavān distinguished Mṛtasanjīvini from the others and carried the four herbs into the battlefield. Contact with the air, which carried the smell of Mṛtasanjīvini brought the dead back to life. Viśālayakaraṇi removed all the arrows from their bodies and Saṃdhānakaraṇi healed the wounds.

Lakṣmaṇa again went out to fight Indrajit. Reluctant to fight with the former, Indrajit resorted to a new magical trick. He created an artificial or illusory Sun and with her seated in a chariot he rose up in the sky and said as follows:—‘Rāvana has abandoned Śītā who brings about humiliation to the Rākṣasas and ruin to Lāṅkā. So, I cut her to pieces.’ So saying he cut into two, by one stroke of his sword, Śītā, who cried Oh! my lord! oh! brother.” Blood fell on the battlefield and Indrajit disappeared. Though Rāma and others were alarmed by all these Vibhīṣaṇa explained that it was all the magic of the Rākṣasas, and in the fierce fighting that followed Lakṣmaṇa killed Indrajit. By now all the important and prominent Rākṣasas were killed. At last Rāvana himself entered the battle-field. His first encounter was with Lakṣmaṇa. Then the fighting turned into one between Rāma and Rāvana. The former broke the bow of Rāvana and did not want to fight with the weaponless Rākṣas King. Next day Rāvana brought Pāṭāla Rāvana and Kumbhodara to Lāṅkā. Both of them entered Rāma’s camp during night, but Pāṭāla Rāvana, who realised that nothing could be achieved there returned to Pāṭāla with Kumbhodara. He built a tunnel from Pāṭāla upwards to earth, where in the fort created by Hanumān’s tail twisted in a circular way Śri Rāma and others. The tunnel opened into this ‘fort’, and Pāṭāla Rāvana and his brother made Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa unconscious by making them inhale sammohana medicine and carried them off into Pāṭāla. Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were laid in the court-yard of a Kālī temple to be sacrificed to Mahākāli the very same night. Arrangements for the sacrifice were completed.

Hanumān had been frequently looking inside the fort. As soon as the absence of Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa was noticed, Sugrīva and others, under the leadership of Vibhīṣaṇa reached the Kālī temple through the tunnel. In the fighting that followed Hanumān killed Pāṭāla Rāvana and Angada killed Mahodara. The only son of Pāṭāla Rāvana, Sunālī, was crowned King of Pāṭāla. Rāvana entered the field again against Rāma. Rāma shot the Mahendra arrow against Rāvana. The arrow, which represented itself in the effugence of Mahendra, the hardness of diamonds, the intensity of fire and Viṣṇu’s glow cut off the ten heads of Rāvana. His physical body fell on earth and his spirit ascended to heaven.
30. Return. Rāma and others, who were pleased with the turn of events, crowned Viśālaka King of Lanka. Tripura was in charge of dressing Sītā in new clothes. Apasūra appeared on the scene. Bālīcāda presented to Sītā a chain, Urvaśī an ornament for the head, Menakā, two bangles, Rambhā a waist-let, Tilottama a set of chains for the feet, and Anasāyā, wife of Atri, a Cūḍāmaṇi. When she wore all these ornaments Sītā appeared to be equal to Lakṣmīdevī in grandeur and beauty. She was brought in a palanquin to Śrī Rāma by Viśālaka and others. Rāma was taken aback by the glamorous dress, ornaments etc. of Sītā, and immediately a suspicion arose in his mind, and he kept mum after asking Lakṣmāna to do whatever Sītā wanted. As soon as he heard those words of Rāma, Sītā asked Lakṣmāna to light a funeral pyre saying that the woman suspected by her husband should not live and she would quit her life in the very presence of Rāma.

Lakṣmāna cast a pathetic look at Rāma; but his face exhibited no change of feeling. He granted Sītā's request by his silence. Those present there awaited developments with bated breath. Lakṣmāna, with the help of the monkeys got a pyre ready. After going round Viśālaka with Śrī Rāma and others, he started a fire. In a very short time three divine forms emerged from the fire, Śrīdāsa, Śrīdevī and God Agni. His suspicions having thus vanished Rāma welcomed Sītā back and the next day they left for Ayodhyā in the Puspaka Vimāna. Viśālaka, Suṅgivāna, Hanumān and others followed them. After reaching Ayodhyā Rāma returned to Puskara and lived there. Bharata came back from Nandīgrāma. In the presence of all relations and others concerned the coronation of Śrī Rāma as king took place. Bharata was appointed crown Prince, Lakṣmāna Commander-in-chief of armies and Saṅgrahana, finance minister.

31) Sītā abandoned. Under Śrī Rāma's rule the country overflowed with milk and honey. Nobody had to fear robbers or enemies. He renounced his Wife, Sītā, at Kauśalyā. (For details see under Sahasrayuṣāvāpa.) Śrī Rāma used to go about the country in disguise to enquire about the welfare of his subjects. On a particular day he happened to be standing outside the house of a washerman. The washerman asked his wife, who had gone out of the house, what for something. He suspected that she had gone to meet her paramour. He bluntly told his wife that he was not prepared to act like Rāma, who had accepted Sītā, though she had lived with another person. Śrī Rāma, who heard the above talk, returned to his palace very sad. After thinking about for a long time he decided that it was his duty to abandon Sītā in the interest of his subjects. The next day Sītā got a chariot from Śrī Rāma, and she decided to go to the forests once again. Rāma considered this as the most suitable opportunity to abandon Sītā in the forest and Lakṣmāna was entrusted with the matter. That day at Sun-rise Lakṣmāna took Sītā in a chariot to the suburbs of Viśālaka's āśrama, abandoned her there and returned to the palace. (According to the Rāmāyana written by Kāmaṇa, a Tamil author, it is said that Sītā was left in the suburbs of Gāuṭama's hut. There, Śrī who was pregnant was looked after by Ahālaya, the wife of Gauṭama.) Weeping aloud Sītā fell down. Young munis—Vālmiki's disciples—saw her and took her to the āśrama. At the āśrama she delivered two sons, Kuśa and Lava.

32) Āvamedha. After abandoning Sītā in the forests Rāma led a sad life for five years. Yet, he decided to perform an Āvamedha yajña. As soon as Rāma thought of him, Hanumān appeared and he was deported to invite Viśālaka, Suṅgivāna, and others from Lankā and Rikṣindā and the feudatory princes and armies from other countries. Suṅgivāna was put in charge of the armies. Viśālaka in charge of finance, and central authority was vested in Lakṣmāna. Then the yajña horse, accompanied by the army, was let loose to travel all over the country. Accompanied by cavalry, the elephant division, infantry and the chariot-force the horse went about the various kingdoms. The army, on its way back to Ayodhyā was supported by the states and cities. It was used for rest near Vālmiki's āśrama when Kuśa and Lava tied the yajña horse, which was after being ridden by the princes, girls, and others. The horse was carried in a chariot and was used for the Āvamedha yajña. It was believed that such deaths increased when Sudras tied tappas, and to find out if any Sudra was engaged in tappas. Rāma flew over the Dājakā forest where he found a Śrīdāra called Śaṅkāvī forming tappas. He hung on the branch of a tree with his head down. Rāma killed him and his spirit got salvation. Afterwards, the princes and others praised the Āvamedha yajña. Then they asked Rāma and Sītā where he and Sītā met face to face. Kuśa and Lava also came there and they thought with surprise the change in appearance brought about in their mother and Śrī Rāma on their meeting each other. When they heard from Hanumān the real facts about Rāma they withdrew their arrows and prostrated at the feet of Rāma. Śrī Rāma then, with the consent of all and in accordance with his own desire, took back Sītā and returned with her to Ayodhyā. Lakṣmāna and others received Sītā most heartily. Śrī Rāma, who till then was having no wife, had made a golden image of Sītā for the purpose of the āvamedha. Now, since the real Sītā was with him the idol was an unnecessary thing. The Āvamedha yajña went off very well.

33) The end. Śrī Rāma's reign became all the more prosperous. It was during this period that Rāma, as desired by the munis in the Yamunā plain, killed Lavaṇāparsu, son of Madhu in the great city called Durgā in the centre of the Madhu forest. (For details see under Lavaṇa.) After Lavaṇa's death, a sect of Gandharvas called Saṅīkṣas, who lived on the shores of the eastern sea, proved to be enemies of Ayodhyā. Śrī Rāma annihilated them also. Kaikīyā began getting jealous of the prosperity and happiness of Sītā. One day when Rāma had gone to hunt in the forest, Kaikīyā closely questioned Sītā over particulars in Lankā and prevailed upon her, overruled her unwillingness, to draw a picture of Rāvana. Sitā drew on a piece of ‘sitting-plank’ Rāvana’s figure with the ten heads. Kaikēyī took away the picture on the pretext of exhibiting it in the ladies’ quarters, and gave it to Rāma, when he returned from hunting, to sit on at the time of Puja (worship). Rāma got angry to find Rāvana’s picture drawn on the ‘sitting-plank’. Kaikēyī then told him that it was Sitā, who had drawn the picture and also that she usually praised Lāṭāka and Rāvana. Rāma pronounced the death penalty on Sitā for having drawn Rāvana’s picture. The inmates of the palace shuttered to hear the judgement. When Laksmana seated Sitā on the floor to kill her, Bhūmidevi (earth) rent itself open into two and carried her off through the opening.

Sri Rāma grew sadder and sadder following the disappearance of Sitā. Ill omens began to appear in Ayodhya in increasing measure. One day a divine Rsi whom the people of Ayodhya had not seen till then, came to Rāma’s palace. He told Rāma that he had to impart certain secrets to the latter and after making Rāma vow that no one would enter the room while they were conversing and that if any on did come when they were talking, he should either be killed or forsaken for ever, he began to talk with Rāma in a secluded spot. Rāma posed Laksmana at the entrance with the strict injunctions that nobody should come into their presence. Within a short time great misus like Sanaka came there and told Laksmana that they wanted to see Rāma. They were not prepared to wait even for a short time as requested by Laksmana, but threatened ruin to the royal family. Laksmana then, was prepared to suffer the consequence, and went to Rāma and told him about the arrival of Sanaka and others. Rāma, in keeping with his vow, banished Laksmana immediately. But, when Rāma came out and looked for Sanaka and others no one was to be found anywhere there. When he returned to the inner apartment the Rsi also was not to be seen. In fact they were Kula and his emissaries deputed by Brahmā to recall Rāma as the object of his incarnation was already achieved.

Rāma, who had already been suffering mental agony on account of Sitā’s departure, lost all peace of mind as Laksmana’s banishment followed Sitā’s departure. He decided to put an end to his life for which purpose he went to the river Sarasvati. All the dependants followed him. While the great mass of people who thronged in the banks of the river burst out into weeping, Rāma and his followers drowned themselves in the waters of the Sarasvati, and their spirits attained Vai-kuntha. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Kamba Rāmāyana and Tulsidasā Rāmāyana).

RĀMAHMĀDA. A holy place on the boundary of Kuruksetra. Ambā, daughter of a King of Kaśi once bathed here. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 186, Verse 28).

RĀMAKA. A mountain Sahadeva, during his triumphal tour of the south, conquered this mountain. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 68).

RĀMAṆĀ. I. A son born to the Vasu known as Soma of his wife Manohara. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 22).

RĀMĀNGACA. A particular region in ancient India. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 66).

RĀMAṆĀ (M). (RĀMAṆĀKAM). An island near Dvārakā where, according to Chapter 58 of the Southern Text of Bhārata, there was a forest. It was in this island that Vināṭa, mother of Gaurudā and Kāṭur, mother of the nāgās lived. Gaurudā, after freeing her mother from her slavery evicted the nāgās from this island. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 17). Following the eviction, many of the prominent nāgās lived in Pāṭalā. But, Kāṭur, in fear of Gaurudā, lived in Kāṭurī. After his suppression by Śrī Kṛṣṇa Kāṭurī, with his family, as advised by Kṛṣṇa returned to Rāmānukam. (Bhāgavat, 10 th Skandha).

RĀMAṆĀKĀ. The third son of Yaśābāhuṇa, son of Pṛyavara. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

RĀMAṆĪYĀKĀ. The island called Rāmānukam where the nāgās live. (See under RāmaṆākā).

RĀMATHA (S). I. A mleccha tribe who lived in the kingdom of Māndhātā. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 14).

RĀMATHA (S). II. People of a low caste (mlecchas) who lived in South India during Purānic times. Nakula, subjugated this caste, and from that day onwards they became devoted to the Pāḍavas. They were invited to the Rājāyaṇa conducted by Yudhiṣṭhira. (Vana Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 25).

RĀMĀṬIṢTHA I. A holy place in the river Gomati. He who bathes in this tirtha will derive the results of performing the Āsāmedha yājña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 73).

RĀMĀṬIṢTHA II. A holy spot on the top of the Mahendrap mountain where Parāroṣa lived. A bath here brings the benefits of performing the Āsāmedha yājña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 17).

RĀMĀṬIṢTHA III. A holy place in the plains of river Sarasvatī (Sūrya Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 7).

RĀMVĀṆĀ. I. General. Rāmāyana is considered to be the first poetic composition in the world or at least in India, and hence it is called the Ādi Kāvya (First Epic). It is an epic as it contains descriptions and references to ancient themes. Vālmiki is its author, and hence Vālmiki is known as the Ādi kavi also. Vālmiki and Śrī Rāma were contemporaries. During his life in exile in the forest Rāma visited Vālmiki’s aśrama. It was in this aśrama that Sitā lived after being abandoned by Rāma. The connection in many ways of the life of Vālmiki with the Rāma story was an incentive for him to write the Rāmāyana.

2) Composing of Rāmāyana. Once while returning from the river Tamasā Vālmiki witnessed a hunter shooting down one of a Krauṅca (a kind of bird) couple. The intense emotion created by the incident burst out as follows in verse form.

Mā niṣāda prāṭīṣṭhāṁ tvamagamāṁ śāvatī samāṁ /
Yat kramamāṅsāṅdekaṃavadhīṁ kāmamobhitam. ;)

Immediately Brahmā appeared on the scene and advised Vālmiki to write the story of Rāma in the same pattern as that verse. Brahmā taught him about the past and the future of the history of Rāma. As Sitā, Kuśa, and Lava were living in his aśrama Vālmiki was well in the know about the present. In the above background Vālmiki completed writing the Rāmāyaṇa Story in 24,000 verses. The epic is divided into seven kāṇḍas (sections) of five hundred chapters. The seven sections are the Bālakāṇḍa, the Ayodhyākāṇḍa, the Aranyākāṇḍa, the Kīskindhākāṇḍa, the Sundara Kāṇḍa, the Yuddha Kāṇḍa and the Uttarakāṇḍa. Vālmiki taught the poem to Lava and Kuśa and when they went with Vālmiki to Ayodhyā during the avadhānya of Śrī Rāma, they sang the poem in the open assembly there.

3) Different views about the author. Traditionally the authorship of the Rāmāyaṇa is attributed to Vālmiki. But, western scholars hold the view that a part of Bālakāṇḍa and the whole of Uttarakāṇḍa are interpolations of a future date. The following are the reasons for this view.

(i) Two different texts are found for cantos one and three of Bālakāṇḍa. In one of them many of the stories mentioned in the other are missing. It may, therefore, be surmised that the two texts were composed during different periods.

(ii) In the early texts of Rāmāyaṇa stories like Gaṅgāvataranā are not to be found. So they must be interpolations of a later period.

(iii) Only in Kāṇḍa one and seven is Śrī Rāma treated as a god. In the other Kāṇḍas he is considered in the capacity of a hero only.

(iv) Uttarakāṇḍa is not to be found among the early translations of Rāmāyaṇa into other languages.

(v) In the Bālakāṇḍa it is stated that Vālmiki composed the Rāmāyaṇa, taught it to Kuśa and Lava, and that they recited the whole poem before Śrī Rāma at Ayodhyā. Many of the things mentioned in this Kāṇḍa are not in Uttarakāṇḍa, which, therefore, must have been written by someone else.

4) The period of Rāmāyaṇa. According to Indian belief Śrī Rāma lived at the end of Tretāyuga, which came to its close in 8,671,100 B.C. As per Rāmāyaṇa Śrī Rāma ruled the country for 11,000 years. He was forty years old when he ascended the throne. Vālmiki began writing Rāmāyaṇa 2,000 years later. Born in the light of the above facts certain scholars point that the Rāmāyaṇa was written near about 870,000 B.C. But, western critics and some eastern critics do not accept this view. Professor Jacob holds the view that the original of Mahābhārata is anterior to Rāmāyaṇa. Most scholars do not agree with this view. A great majority of critics are of opinion that Rāmāyaṇa is anterior to Mahābhārata. They argue as follows:

(i) The traditional belief in India is that Rāmāyaṇa was written much earlier than Mahābhārata.

(ii) Rāmāyaṇa makes no reference to any of the characters of Mahābhārata.

(iii) The Śrī Rāma story is referred to in many a Jātaka story of the Buddhists.

(iv) Vālmiki has made no mention about the city of Pātaliputra established near about 300 B.C. It is an irrefutable fact that Śrī Rāma had passed by the city.

(v) During the reign of emperor Aśoka the Prākṛta language was spoken in the areas where the incidents mentioned in Rāmāyaṇa took place. But, Rāmāyaṇa was written much anterior to the emergence of Prākṛta language.

According to Professor Keith Rāmāyaṇa was written in 300 B.C.

5) Different readings of Rāmāyaṇa. In various parts of India three original texts or readings are found of the original Rāmāyaṇa. There is an instance where 1/3 of the portion differs from one another. The Rāmāyaṇa text is popular in northern and southern India. The second is the Bengali text. The third, the Kashmir text, is popular in the north-western parts of India. The interference to be made from the existence of these three different texts is that the original epic was composed in a Prākṛta language, which was most popular at the time and that it was later translated into Sanskrit by different persons at different times. Thus theory will explain the existence of the different texts. For many years it continued to be handed down from mouth to mouth till it assumed written form in Sanskrit.

6) Other Rāmāyaṇas. The Rāmāyaṇa story in other forms and garbs, is also prevalent in India. One of them is Vāsīṣṭhārāmāyaṇa or Jñānavāsīṣṭhārāmāyaṇa. The authorship of it also is attributed to Vālmiki. Most of the Rāmāyaṇas like Vāsīṣṭhottarāmāyaṇa, Śātisāvī, Adbhutarāmāyaṇa, Adbhutottarāmāyaṇa etc. found in different parts of India are believed to have been written by Vālmiki. Adbhutarāmāyaṇa is composed of twenty-seven cantos. According to this Rāmāyaṇa, it was Śīta, who killed Ravanā at their feet. There is another Rāmāyaṇa in Sanskrit called Adhīṣṭhamā-Rāmāyaṇa. It is a poem separated from Brahmanda Purāṇa. It is written in the form of a conversation between Umā (Pārvatī) and Śiva. Ananda-Rāmāyaṇa and Mūla- Rāmāyaṇa extol the greatness of Hanumān.

RAMBHA. An asura. (For details see under Kārmambha).

RAMBHA. I.

1) General. One of the most beautiful of the asura women. Urvāṣī, Tīlottama and Rambhā are really reputed for their beauty.

2) Birth. All the famous Celestial women were daughters of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Pradhā. Devāri (Kaśyapa) begot the following daughters of his wife Pradhā i.e. Lāmbusā, Vīrā, Śīvā, Kuśā, Vājargī, Tīlottama, Avagā, Rākṣī, Rambhā, Manoramā, Subālī, Keśī, Surātā and Surājī. (Adī Parva, Chapter 62).

3) Rāmāyaṇa cursed. Rāvāna raped Rambhā and Nalākūhara cursed him. (See under Nalākūhara).

4) Purūravas and Rambhā. Indra once killed an asura chief named Māyadhara and held a festival in honour of the victory. At the festival Rambhā danced before her preceptor Turmuru. Purūravas too was present on the occasion and he ridiculed Rambhā for her mistakes in dancing. Moreover he claimed that he was a greater master of dance than Turmuru preceptor of Rambhā. Enraged by this claim Turmuru cursed that Purūravas would be separated from his wife Urvāṣī. (Kāthāsīrīṣīgā, Līvānakālambara, Turmuru 3).

5) Rambhā and Sūrya. There was a King called Sūrya on mount Cītrakūṭa. This handsome bachelor prince used to sit alone in the lotus pond near his palace. When once Rambhā passed through the sky above the pond her eyes met those of Sūrya and she alighted on the spot and the long talk between the two ended in their marriage. Sūrya enjoyed life there for a long time with Rambhā without knowing that she was an asura woman. He had attempted many a time to know the real facts about her, to no purpose. Rambhā did not even think about her native Svarga. Her companion, a Yakṣi, showered gold all over Sūrya's RAMBHĀ II. Wife of Mayāsura. The couple had the folktale seven children: Mśyāvi, Dudpulha, Mahiśa Kālōka, Ajakarna, and Mandocari. (Brahmāṇḍa Paṇḍita, 3 6 28-29).

RĀMŚVARA. There is in South India a very famous holy place called Rāmeśvara and a Siva temple there. Rāma and others encamped on the sea shore to cross over to Lankā to release Sitā from Rāvana’s custody. This temple, according to Kamba, was built by Rāma at that time. The following story is from the Yuddha Kāṇḍa of Kamba Rāmāyana.

To make the passage over to Lankā easy, Rāma decided to build a great temple at Rāmeśvara and install a Sivalinga in the temple. Under the expert supervision of the great architects, Nala and Nila, all the monkeys cooperated to build the temple. As ordered by Rāma, Hanumān went to Kaliśa to fetch Sivalinga. Hanumān did not return with the linga though the suspicious time for the installation was very near. How could the installation be made without the idol and the installation had to be made at the appointed time.

Rāma stood ready near the installation platform. It was the exact time for the installation of the idol. A divine effulgence was seen to emerge from Rāma and immediately a Śivalinga automatically appeared at the spot where rituals were conducted for installation. Everyone was wonder-struck by this mysterious happening.

Hanumān by now, returned with the linga and he felt sorry that the installation of the idol had already been made. Rāma told him: “Please remove the idol already installed, we shall install a new one.”

Happy at the words of Rāma, Hanumān entwined the idol with his tail and jumped directly upwards. But, his tail was cut; head clashed against the roof which was broken and Hanumān fell down unconscious. Rāma held him up and patted him on the head and Hanumān was more pleased than ever. Afterwards, to fulfill Hanumān’s desire and for the prosperity of the temple Hanumān was made to install the new Sivalinga in front of the eastern tower of the temple. Rāma laid down the following rule also. Only after worshipping the idol at the tower, should the God inside the temple be worshipped.

The rule was also recorded there.

RĀMOPĀKHYĀNAPARVA. A sub-parva of Mahābhārata comprising chapters 273 to 292 of Vana Parva. RAYYAGRĀMA. Capital of a State, Shadheva, during his triumphal tour, conquered Rayyagrama. (Sahā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 14).

Once the mahārāja called Śyāvāva invited Rathavatī to perform a hunt at the yājña conducted by King Taranta, and when he came for the yājña with his daughter the father of Śyāvāva asked him to marry his daughter to Śyāvāva. Rathavati not only refused, but also dismissed Śyāvāva from the yājña platform. At last Rathavatī married his daughter to Śyāvāva at the request of King Taranta. (Ṛgveda, Śāyānabhīṣaya).

RATHITARA. A king of the solar dynasty. He was the son of Pratāsavī. (Bhagavata, 9th Sandhāna).

RATI I. Wife of Kāṇeḍa and some Purāṇas hold the view that Kāma was the son of Dharma whose father was Brahmā. But, the story of Kāma and Rati is described in the Kāliśāvaras as follows:

Brahmā created ten prajāpatis. A beautiful lady called Sandhyā was his next creation. As soon as she was born, seeing her exquisite beauty Brahmā and the prajāpatis jumped to their feet. All of them thought in the same way. While the court of Brahmā was in such a perplexed confusion, an extremely handsome person emerged from his mind. Fish was the symbol on his flag, and he asked Brahmā thus: “Oh father, what should I do? Give me a suitable name and you should also decide upon a place and position and also a wife for me.” Brahmā told him as follows—“You be moving about everywhere in this world (full of men and women) engaged in the external function of creation with the five arrows of flower in your hands and thus multiply the population. Your arrows will go everywhere and no one, not even the Devas will dare to obstruct your arrows. Everyone will yield to your arrows. You and I also will yield before your arrows. You will enter the hearts of living beings in invisible form and giving them happiness engage yourself in external creation. The chief aim and object of your arrows of flower will be the hearts of living beings. You will be given a suitable name just now.”

Rāṣṭra-prajāpati, who understood the wish of Brahmā, after mundane consultation said: “You emerged churning our minds. Therefore, you will become famous under the name Manmatha (he who churns the mind). You will lay low Śiva's haughtiness and conceit. Oh! best among men, Dakṣa, chief among the prajāpatis, will give you a wife.”

Happily pleased at the above words of Brahmā, Kāma held up in his hands the bow and arrows of flowers and decided to shoot five arrows, i.e. harsanam (pleasing or gladening), Rocanam (attracting or tempting), mohanam (deluding or infatuating), śoṣanam (weakening) and māraṇam (killing). He decided to use the arrows first against Brahmā and then against the prajāpatis. Accordingly the arrows shot forth and Brahmā and all the prajāpatis, overwhelmed by sexual passion, were staked at Sandhyāvedi. Sandhyā also got excited and from her body spouted up 49 pariś 64 kālas (arts) also were born from her. She used incessantly against the leaders of the world (Brahmā and others) who were downed by the arrows of sexual passion, arrows dear to Manmatha. The expressions of Brahmā made Sandhyā sick with love. Śiva, who was just then travelling along the sky, seeing the boisterous exhibitions of passion by Brahmā and others alighted there. He ridiculed Brahmā for his display of passion towards his own daughter Sandhyā and spoke further like this: “This Kāma too is a fool. He tested his arrows here itself, he has no sense of propriety and discretion.”

Brahmā was thoroughly ashamed at the words of Śiva. He perspired and swept with his hands the drops of sweat that oozed from his body. With great difficulty he controlled his passion and gave up Sandhyā. From the drops of sweat falling on the ground, from the body of Brahma were born the pairs called Agnihotras and the Barisadas, the former 64,000 in number and the latter 6,906,000. Drops of sweat from the bodies of the preajapaṭha also fell on the ground and from them were born the Devas. The pairs called Somapās are the sons of Kratu; those called Śvākāsikas are the sons of Vaśishtha; sons of Pulṣaryā are called Ayapās and Haviardhaka are the sons of Agraṇas. Brahma, who was angry that Kama shot his arrows against him in the presence of Śiva cursed the former that he would be burnt to ashes in the fire of Śiva's eyes, and Kama trembling with fear at the curse prostrated at the feet of Brahmana and wept. Then Brahman said that though he would die in the fire of Śiva's eyes, he would be born again.

From the drops of perspiration that fell on the ground, from Dakṣa's body arose a beautiful woman, and Dakṣa told Kama that the woman, his daughter would become famous as Rati devi. Dakṣa gave Rati Devi to Kama to be his wife. Thus did Rati become Kama's wife. (For the second birth of Rati see under Pradyumna and for other details see under Kama.)

RATI II. An apsara woman of Ajākṣapuri. She danced on the threshold of Kubera welcoming Aśvākamauni. (Amūsāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 45)

RATI III. Wife of Viṭṭhu born in the dynasty of King Raṣaḥdeva of Ajanālābhavana. Prathusena was her daughter. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skanda)

RATIGUNA. A Devagandhurva whose father was Kaiyapraprajapati and mother Pradhā. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 47)

RATIVIDAGDHĀ. A courtesan of Hastinapura. As she performed the pious deed of feeding brahmins she attained Vaikuntha after her death. (Padma Purāṇa, Kriyākhaṇḍa)

RATNAGRIVA. A king of Kañcanaagarā who was a great devotee of Viṣṇu. He performed tapas and attained Vaikuntha. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa)

RATNAKARA. A Vaśya. He was killed by an ox, but he attained Vaikuntha as a brahmin called Dharmāsva sprinkled Gāṅgā water on him. (Padma Purāṇa, Kriyākhaṇḍa)

RATNAKUṬA. One of the wives of Atīrathahrī. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa)

RATRIDEVI. The presiding deity of night. Indrāni once worshiped Rātridevi for the fulfilment of her desires. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 25)

RAUBHYA. A hermit. It is seen in Utara Rāmayaṇa that this hermit called on Śri Rāma on his return from Lakkā.

RAUDRA. A class of giants who lived on Kaṭāka and Mandara mountains. The hermit Loma gave warning to the Pāṇḍava, when they went to the north during their forest life, to be careful of the Raudrās. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 139, Stanza 10)

RAUDRAKARMĀ. One of the hundred sons of Bhṛtarāṣṭra. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Dropha Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 62, that Raudra-karmā was killed in the battle of Bharata by Bhīmaśena.

RAUDRĀŚVA I. A son born to the emperor Pūru of his wife Paśūṭi. Raudrāśva had two brothers Pravira and Itvra. Once Raudrāśva fell in love with the celestial maid Mārākṣeṇi. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, that as a result of the married life of these two, ten archers beginning with Anugabhāṣu, were born.

RAUDRĀŚVA II. A hermit who was the disciple of the hermit Kātyāyana. Once Mahāśirṣa came in the guise of a beautiful woman to the hermitage of Raudrāśva to hinder his penance. The hermit cursed Mahāśirṣa, "You will become the image of a woman." (Kālika Purāṇa, Chapter 62)

RAUMYA. A group of gana (warriors) of Śiva. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 284, that these Raumyas were born from the hair pores of Virūbhada, the chief of the guards of Śiva.

RAUŚYA. A Purāṇically famous river of Ancient India. The holy bath Pārasarpāṇa of the hermit Mahāvira is situated on the banks of this river. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 129, Stanza 7)

RAUKRĀVA. One of the twenty-eight hills. For details see the part Naraka under the word Kali.

RĀVANA. The Rākṣasa King of Lakkā who had ten heads.

1) Gaurarāda. Descended from Vīrusa, who was the Brahmin Pālalī. Vīrusa—Vīra-rāma—Rāvana.

2) Birth. Vīra-rāma, grandson of Brahmi and son of Pulṣaryā married Kaṭakā, daughter of Sunā, while Vīra-rāma and Kaṭakā were living in the forest Śrīśūrakhā. Kaṭakā became pregnant. She delivered four children in four Yamas, with an interval of one yama between them. The elder three were the famous Rākaśas, Rāvana, Kubhakarnā and Vībhīṣaṇa; the fourth one, a girl, was named Sūrpaṇakha (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Balakāṇḍa).

Kubera was another son of Vīra-rāma born of another wife called Devavarnī alias Lakkā. As soon as he came of age Kubera captured the Pāpaka chasot and began ruling the kingdom with Lakkā as capital. (Utara Rāmāyaṇa.

3) Previous lives of Rāvana. See under Jaya Xi.

4) Rāvana secured boon. Kaṭakā (Rāvana's mother) who became envious of the pomp and prowess of Kubera advised her son to secure boons from Brahmi by tapas and become equal to Kubera. Accordingly he went to Gokarna with his brothers and began tapas. Kubhakarnā did tapas for 10,000 years; Vībhīṣaṇa also did tapas for 10,000 years standing on one foot Rāvana, standing in the middle of the five fires, meditated upon Brahmi. Though 10,000 years passed, Brahmi did not appear yet. Rāvana then cut one of his ten heads and made an offering of it to Brahmi in the fire. Thus, within 9000 years he cut none of his heads and offered them to Brahmi in the fire. Lastly when he was about to cut off his tenth head, Brahmi appeared and asked him to choose whatever boon he wanted. Rāvana chose the boon that from none but men should he meet with his death. Kubhakarnā desired to secure the boon of 'nirdeśavat' (Absence of the devas) but secured by a slip of the tongue 'nirākāvavat' (sleep). Vībhīṣaṇa chose devotion to Viṣṇu. On his return again securing the boon, Rāvana occupied Lakkā, drove away Kubera and took his puspaṇa chariot. Rāvana further declared Mahāvīra to be his eternal enemy. Hearing about Rāvana's victory the Rākṣasas from Pātāla came to live in Lakkā.
5) Family life. Ravana married Mandodari, foster-daughter of Mayaura and three sons, Meghanāda, Aitikāya and Aksakumāra, were born to the couple. He then conquered the whole world with the cooperation of his sons and other Rākaṇas. The Aṣṭādikpālaṇas (protectors of the eight regions) were subjugated. He attacked Devāloka, but was defeated and imprisoned. Meghanāda by magical trickery captured Indra and released Rāvana from custody. Meghanāda came to be called Indrajit from that day onwards.

6) Kārtavīryaśūnta and Rāvana. See under Kārtavīryaśūnta, Para 6.

7) Curses heaped on Rāvana. As a result of ruling the land, as a terror to the whole world, for many years and of his triumphal journey Rāvana had invited on his head eighteen Śāpas (curses) as follows:

(i) Nālaśākāra śāpa. Rāvana once insulted Rambha, the be-rewed wife of Nālakābara during her tour at a place near Alakā. On hearing about the insult Nālakābara cursed that Rāvana should die with his ten heads broken.

(ii) Vedasatiśāpa. While Vedavati, the only daughter of sage Kuśadvāja, was doing tapas to secure Sītā as her husband, Rāvana committed rape on her and she cursed him thus:—"You and your family will be ruined by Lord Nārāyaṇa on account of me." (iii) Brahmanadāśāpa. He invited a Vedic brahmin to install the idol of Tripurasundari given to him by Śiva. As the brahmin happened to be a bit late to come, Rāvana imprisoned him for seven days, and the old brahmin cursed that Rāvana would be imprisoned seven months by a maṇ.

(iv) Nandikāvalaśāpa. For calling him ‘monkey’ at Kailāsa, Nandikāvala cursed that Rāvana and his kingdom would be destroyed by monkeys.

(v) Vasisthāśāpa. As Vasistha refused Rāvana’s invitation to teach the Vedas etc. he took the former captive. When he was released from captivity by the solar King Kuvalaśāya, Vasistha cursed that Rāvana and his family would be destroyed by those born in the solar dynasty.

(vi) Aśāśāpandāśāpa. Rāvana once saw sage Aśāśāpa at Sejmataka and gave him a kick saying, ‘Oh handsome fellow! I shall curse you eight hunchets,’ and the sage cursed Rāvana as follows:—For kicking etc., a poor innocent sage, you will be kicked from head to foot and foot to head by monkeys.”

(vii) Dattāreyaśāpa. Rāvana once poured on his own head water kept purified by mantras by Dattāreya to bathe the head of his Guru, and the latter cursed that Rāvana’s head would be polluted by the feet of monkeys.

(viii) Draupadāśāpa. When Rāvana molested and wounded the lips of Dyāpyāyana’s sister in his own presence he cursed that Rāvana’s sister would be mutilated by a man and he would be humiliated by monkeys.

(ix) Māṇḍayāvalaśāpa. During a pleasure trip of his with Mandodari Rāvana cruelly manhandled Māṇḍayāvala-maharti, when the latter cursed that Rāvana too would be roughly handled by a monkey.

(x) Atriśāpa. Rāvana once dragged by hair the wife of Atri in his very presence, and Atri cursed that Rāvana will have to witness his wife being desecrated of her dress and dragged by the hair by monkeys.

(xi) Nāandāśāpa. Nārada refused to explain the meaning of ‘Om’ to Rāvana and the latter threatened to cut the tongue of Nārada. Nārada then cursed that all the ten heads of Rāvana would be cut by a man.

(xii) Rutvarmaśāpa. Rāvana once raped Madanabahuja, wife of Rutvarman, who lived as an anchorite in the marutu forest, and the latter cursed that Rāvana would be killed by a man.

(xiii) Maudgalyayāśāpa. Once maharsi Maudgalyāyana was sitting in the svasika pose resting his neck on the yogadanda (a short stick-like piece of wood with a handle) Rāvana happened to come there and he cut into two the yogadanda with his Candrabāha (sword) with the result that the maharsi fell down with face upwards and broke his back-bone. The maharsi then cursed that Rāvana’s Candrabāha would prove ineffective in future.

(xiv) Brahmaṇaśavatamalāśāpa. Certain young brahmin girls who had gone for a bath were humiliated by Rāvana in the presence of their mothers when they cursed that the wife of Rāvana would be insulted in his very presence by monkeys.

(xv) Agniśāpa. Rāvana once humiliated Svadhādevī, wife of Agni in his very presence and Agni cursed that Rāvana’s wife would be humiliated by monkeys in his presence.

(xvi) Amaragajāśāpa. Rāvana killed by one blow on his chest King Anaranyya of the solar dynasty who sought refuge with him, and the King cursed that Rāvana would die with all his ten heads cut by the arrows of a prince of the solar dynasty.

(xvii) Bhraspati śāpa. When Rāvana was about to return after conquering Devakot and taking the devas captive, Sulekhādevī, daughter of Bhraspati tried to take shelter somewhere when Rāvana attempted to catch her by force. Then Bhraspati cursed that Rāvana would die hit by the arrows of Bhraspati.

(xviii) Brahmadraśāpa. Rāvana tried to humiliate Puṣpikādevī, daughter of Brahmac, and the latter cursed that Rāvana would die with all his ten heads broken if he touched unwilling women.

8) Rāvana got Candrabāha. See under Candrabāha.

9) He threatened Devas. Rāvana during his triumphal march with the armies, once came to the Udravira mountain. Then the King called Marutta was performing Mahāyana yoga on the plains of the mountain. Indra and the other devas came to receive their portion of the offerings. But they ran away in fear on the arrival of Rāvana. Indra assumed the form of a peacock, Yama that of a crow, Kubera that of a chameleon and Varuna that of a swan, and the devas, thus assuming various forms went away in different directions. Marutta got angry and got ready to fight Rāvana. But, as the maharis prevented him from it no fighting took place. Rāvana returned with the glories of victory.

10) He defeated Kāla. Once Nārada felt the urge to witness a quarrel. He went to Lāhika and told Rāvana about Kāla, that Kāla was more powerful than Rāvana, that Kāla would soon be causing Rāvana’s death etc. These stories awakened the anger in Rāvana against Kāla, and the former, with a strong array challenged Kāla, and war between the two started.
Brahmā was in a fix, for he had given Rāvana the boon that the latter would be killed only by a man. At the same time he had given the boon to Kāla that anybody thrashed with his (Kāla’s) club would die. Brahmat, therefore, decided to end the fighting between Kāla and Rāvana somehow, and he approached Kāla and requested him to withdraw from fighting. Accordingly, Kāla acknowledged defeat and thus the fighting ended.

11) Rāvana attacked Pāṭāla. Afterwards Rāvana marched with his army to Pāṭāla where he defeated Taksaka, the nāga King and exacted tribute from him. Then he attacked Nīvatākavacas. When the fighting became very fierce Brahmat intervened and brought about a compromise between the two. Next, Rāvana attacked Surabhi in Varuṇa’s palace, but the Rākṣasas who emerged from the pores on Surabhi’s body drove away Rāvana.

12) Rāma killed Rākṣī. See under Nālaṅkābara.

13) His death. Rāvana’s sister, Sūrapānakā met Śri Rāma and Lakṣman at Pātačavati and wanted first Rāma and then Lakṣman to marry her. But, Lakṣman cut away her nose, breasts etc. Enraged by this, Rāvana abducted Śrī Śrī Rāma, with the help of the monkey-army, killed Rāvana in war. (See under Rāma.

RAVI I. A prince of Sauṣṭra. It was this prince who stood with the flag behind the chariot of Jayadra[tha], who had come to carry away Draupadi. He was killed by Arjuna. (Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 27).

RAVI II. A son of Dhratrāṣṭra. He was killed by Bhima in the great war. (Sālīya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 14).

RAVA. A King of the lunar dynasty and son of Purāṇa. He was a prince who had many sons like Ayus, Śrī Rāma, Satyayu, Raya, Viṣṇu, and Jaya. (Bhāgavata, 3rd Skandha).

RBHU I. An ancient sage. He was the son of Brahmā. He was an extraordinary scholar who was the preceptor of Nidāgha who was the son of Pulastya and the grandson of Brahmā. Bhū rises conveyed all knowledge to Nidāgha. But he saw that although he taught Nidāgha all branches of knowledge, the latter did not take any interest in “Advaita”. So he left him in disappointment but later got him interested in Advaita. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Artha 2. Chapter 15-16).

RBHU II. An ancient sage. He was the son of Brahmā. He was an extraordinary scholar who was the preceptor of Nidāgha who was the son of Pulastya and the grandchild of Brahmā. Bhū rises conveyed all knowledge to Nidāgha. But he saw that although he taught Nidāgha all branches of knowledge, the latter did not take any interest in “Advaita”. So he left him in disappointment but later got him interested in Advaita. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Artha 2. Chapters 15-16).

1) General information. Rhibus are a group of divine beings who attained divinity by performing tapas. Mahābhārata, Anuṣṭāna Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 25 says that even other gods worship the Rhibus.

2) Who were Rhibus? Aṅgiras, the son of Brahmā had a son named Suddhavan. Suddhavan had three children, Rākṣasā, Vīra and Vaiśā. These three persons form the Rākṣasa clan as mentioned in Viṣṇu, 1st Mandala, 16th Anuvāka, 111th Sūkta.

3) Rhibus and Miracles.

(i) Long ago, a cow belonging to a Rāja died. Its calf began to cry. The Rāja took pity on it and prayed to the Rhibus. They made a cow and covered it with the skin of the dead cow and placed it in front of the calf. Because of its likeness to its mother, the calf believed it to be its mother.

(ii) Rhibus restored their parents who had become old, to youth. (Rgveda, 1st Mandala, 16th Anuvāka, 111th Sūkta).

(iii) Rgveda says that it was the Rhibus who made Indra’s horses, the chariot of the Aṅgiras and Imaṇhapati’s cow.

RCEYU. A king of the Pūru Dynasty.

1) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order: Brahmā-Ati-Candra-Buddha-Pururavas-Ayus-Nahusa, Yayati-Puru-Janamejaya-Pracławin-Pravīra-Namsu-Vitabha-Sūpyad-Bahudiva-Samyā-Paracśi-Paracśi-Pracśi-Racśi-Pacśi-Kacśi and Rceyu.

2) Other details.

(i) His mother, Matrakati was a goddess. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 10).

(ii) He had two other masts: Aṇavaghānā and Aṇārā. Matrakā was the son of Rceyu. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 11-13).

RCIKAR (AJIGARTA). A famous sage.

1) Genealogy. From Viṣṇu were descended in the following order: Brahmā-Bhṛgu-Śrīyavana-Uru-Rekka. Rekka was the father of Jamadagni and grandfather of Pataśatru.

2) Rekka’s marriage. Gāthi, a king of the lunar dynasty had a daughter, Satyavati. Rekka wished to marry this beautiful princess. Gāthi agreed to give his daughter in marriage to the sage if he gave 1,000 horses with black ears. Rekka offered worship to Varuṇa to help him in the matter. Varuṇa was pleased and a thousand horses rose up from the river Gaṅgā. Rekka married Satyavati after giving the horses. Afterwards both of them went and settled down in the forest.

3) Birth of Jamadagni. One day Satyavati made a request to Rekka that she should have a son. Besides, she requested him that her mother should be beaten up with a son, so that she might have a brother. Rekka performed a “homa” and after that he made two balls of rice and gave them to Satyavati. He advised her to eat one of them and to give the other to her mother. Rekka had put “bhratragas” (brilliance of bhṛmata) in the first rice-ball and “kṛttragas” (brilliance of kṛta) in the other. When Satyavati and her mother ate the rice-balls, it happened that the rice-ball intended for her mother was eaten by Satyavati and the one intended for Satyavati was eaten by the mother. Later Rekka came to know of this mistake. In due course, Satyavati and her mother gave birth to sons. Satyavati’s son was named Vāikesāmīra. (Brahmatvārī Purāṇa, Chapter 37).

4) Other sons of Rekka. After this three more sons were born to Rekka. The eldest of them was named Sunahpuchā, the second was named Sunāśēphā and the third, Sunolāṅgūra.

5) The tale of Sunāśēphā. Once king Ambariṣa started a yāga. Indra who was jealous of him, stole the sacrificial cow. Since it was an evil omen, the priest advised Ambariṣa that either the lost cow or a human being in its place must be obtained to complete the yāga. In spite of searches made in many places, the cow could not be traced. At last Ambariṣa’s men met Rekka who was doing tapas on Bhrugutanga. Rekka told his second son, Sunāśēphā to Ambariṣa in exchange for the price of 100,000 cows.
The king took Sunāṣēpha with him and came to Puṣkaraūrīha. There they happened to meet Viśvāmitra. Sunāṣēpha complained to Viśvāmitra and lamented over his ill-fate. Viśvāmitra wished to save him and to send one of his own sons in his place with Ambariṣṭa. But none of his sons was willing to oblige. Viśvāmitra cursed them and turned them into eaters of human flesh. Then he turned to Sunaṣēpha and said:

"When you stand ready to be sacrificed near the altar, offer your prayers to Agni. If you do so, you will attain siddhi." (salvation or mokṣa.) He also taught him two songs of praise to Agni.

While standing at the altar ready to be sacrificed Sunaṣēpha recited the two songs of praise. India and the other gods appeared and after saving Sunaṣēpha rewarded Ambariṣṭa for his yāga. (Nāgaviśvāmī, 62nd Sarga).

(i) Reka and the Vaiśāvata bow. Once Viśvākarma made two mighty bows. One of them was taken by Śiva to burn the Tripuras. That bow is known as "Vaiśāvata." The other bow was given to Viśu. It is called "Vaiśāvata." The Devas wished to see a trial of strength between Śiva and Viśu. They prompted Brahmā to bring about such a conflict. Brahmā succeeded in causing a quarrel between Śiva and Viṣṇu. A fight began between Śiva and Viṣṇu. Both the Vaiśāvata and Vaiśvāvakāma went into action. But Śiva was defeated. After that, Śiva gave his bow to Devarāta, king of Videha. By inheritance it came into the hands of king Jaraka, the father of Śita. It was this bow which was broken by Śri Rāma at the time of Śita's Svayamvara.

After the battle with Śiva, Viṣṇu gave his bow to Reka who, in turn gave it to Jamadagni. Jamadagni presented it to his son Parāśurāma. It was with this Vaiśvāvakāma that Parāśurāma confronted Śri Rāma who was returning after Śita's Svayamvara. (Rāmāyana, Bālakanda, 75th Sarga).

(ii) Mahābhārata, Advamedhiika Parva, Chapter 23. Verse 23 says that Reka once tried to stop Parāśurāma from killing Kaśyapīyās.

(iii) Once Duryodhana, King of Śrīva, presented a tract of land to Reka. (M.B. Anuvāsa Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 28).

(iv) Reka attained Vaṅkudha and his wife Satyavati accompanied him in her earthly body. It is said that after it, Satyavati transformed herself into a river under the name "Kauśākī" and began to flow in North India. (Nāgaviśvāmī, Bālakanda, 94th Sarga).

RCĪKA II. One of the twelve Ayūyas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 42).

RCĪKA II. A King who was the grandson of emperor Bharata and son of Druyamanu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 24).

RDDDHI. Varuna's wife. (M.B. Udvyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 9).

RDDDHI MĀNA. A great serpant. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 160, Verse 15, there is a reference to the killing of this serpent by Garuḍa.

RĒNU. A teacher-priest, who was the son of hermit Viśvāmitra and the author of a Stūka in Rgveda. (Altaraya-Brāhmaṇa 7. 17. 7; Rgveda 9. 70).

RĒNU II. King of the dynasty of Ikṣvāku. Rēnukā the wife of the hermit Jamadagni, and the mother of Parāśurāma was the daughter of this King. Rēnu had other names such as Pracnemi, Pracena and Suveṇu. (M.B. Anuvāsa Parva, Chapter 116; Verse 2).

RĒNUKĀ I. The wife of the hermit Jamadagni. (For further details see under the word Jamadagni).

RĒNUKĀ II. A holy place frequented by Sages. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 82 that those who bathed in this holy bath would become as pure as Ćandra (Moon). It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, that this holy place lies within the boundary of Kuṇḍaketa.

RĒNUKĀ. A powerful Nāga (serpent). This serpent who was a dweller of Pāṭāla, (nether world) once went to the Dīvāgajas (Eight elephants supporting the globe), in accordance with the instruction of the gods, and asked them questions pertaining to duty and righteousness. (M.B. Anuvāsa Parva, Chapter 132, Stanza 2).

RĒPHA. A hermit of the period of Rgveda. Once the Usuras threw this hermit into water. This was the punishment for the sins committed by him in his previous life. (Rgveda, Mandala I, Anuvāsa 17, Śūkta 116).

REVANTA. A son of the sun.

1) Bṛśi. The son married to the daughter of Viśvākrama named Samihā. She gave birth to three children named Manu, Yama and Yami. Once, being unable to bear the radiance of her husband, Samihā went to the forest to do penance. During this period Chāyā the maid of Samihā attended on the sun. Three children, Śaṅkśetra, Manu and Tapati were born to the Sun of Chāyā. Once Chāyā cursed Yama. Then only did the Sun remember about Samihā. At that time Samihā had been doing penance in the forest in the form of a mare. The Sun took the form of a horse and lived with her in the forest. From this union Aśvinikumāras and also the last son Revanta were born. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Adīka 3, Chapter 2).

2) Lakṣṇi is born at the sight of Revanta. For the story of how Lakṣṇi was born at the sight of Revanta's handsome figure and how Mahāvīra cursed Lakṣṇi consequently, see under Ekāvīra.

REVATA. The father of Revati, the wife of Balabhadrāma. Revata was the son of Ānarta and the grandson of king Śarāyū. It is mentioned in Devī Bhāgavata, Skananda 7, that Revata was the first king who erected his capital in the Island Kuśasthali and began to rule the land.

REVATA I. Wife of Balabhadrāma. Revata the son of Ānarta and the grandson of King Śarāyū was ruling over the island Kuśasthali. Hundred sons beginning with Kukūndā, were born to him. As the youngest of all a daughter named Revati was born. At the instruction of Brahmā the beautiful Revati was given in marriage to Balabhadrāma. (Bhāgavata, Skananda 10; Devī Bhāgavata, Skananda 7).

REVATA II. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Stanza 29, the name 'Revati' is used as a synonym of Āditi Devi.
REVATI III 649

REVATI III. One of the twenty-seven stars. The following statements occur in the Mahabharata about the importance of this star:
(i) Sri Krishna started on his journey at the auspicious moment of Maitra on the star Revati in the month of Karttika. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 6).
(ii) If a cow is given as alms on the day of this star that cow will go to heaven and make preparations for the comfort and convenience of the giver. (M.B. Anudasa Parva, Chapter 69, Stanza 33).
(iii) He who gives offerings to the stars on Revati day would become wealthy. (M.B. Anudasa Parva, Chapter 89, Stanza 14).

REVATI IV. The mother of Raivata, the lord of the fifth Manvantara (age of a Manu). There is a story in the Markandeya Purana about the birth of Revati.
A son was born to the hermit Rtvak on Revati day. By age by he became wicked. Having learned from the hermit Garga that his son became wicked because he was born under the star Revati, Rtvak cursed the star Revati and kicked it down from its place. The spot on which the star fell became a lake. After a time a beautiful damsel was born from the lake. The hermit Pramucu took the girl home and brought her up. She was called Revati. When she came of age, she was given in marriage to Dugama, the son of king Vikramaditya. At the request of Revati her marriage was conducted at an auspicious moment on the day of the star Revati. The hermit blessed the couple “Let a son, who would become the Lord of the Manvantara, be born to you.” As a result of this blessing the bright and valiant son Raivata was born to them. This Raivata was the 5th son of the fifth Manvantara.

RGVEDA. The Rgveda is the oldest recorded work of the human race. The Egyptians claim that another book entitled “Book of the Dead” was also written during the period of the Rgveda. The Babylonians have an ancient work called ‘Gilgamish’, which according to scholars, is not as old as the Rgveda. Rgveda is the work that forms the basis of Hindu religion. Of the four Vedas, Yajurveda, Samaaveda and Atharvaveda were composed after Rgveda. The Rgveda stotras were interpreted for the first time in Yajna’s “Nirukta” and Savya’s “Vedarthapakasha”.

The most important of the four Vedas is Rgveda. It is divided into ten “Manadals”. There are 1017 stotras and 10472 Rks in it. Although there are 11 more Suktas called “khilas,” they are not usually included in the Rgveda.

Manadals two to seven of the Rgveda were composed in different Raksulas. The second Manadal was of Bharagava Kulu, the third of Vivasvmitakula, the fourth of Vishnudeva, the fifth of Atri, the sixth of Bharadvaja and the seventh of Varishta. The eighth Manadal and the first 50 Suktas of the first Manadala were composed by Kaiyakula. The general view is that the tenth Manadala was written by someone at a later period.

Most of the Rgveda stotras are praises. But some of the Suktas in the tenth Manadala are of a different type. We can see in many of them the joy and wonder experienced by the Aryas when they entered the beautiful land of India for the first time. Most scholars believe that the Rgveda was composed during the period between 2,500 and 2,000 B.C.

Ancient Belief about Rgveda. The four Vedas—Rgveda, Yajurveda, Samaaveda and Atharvaveda emerged from the four faces of Brahma. In Kriyayoga, Brahma gave these Vedas to his sons. In Dvaparyuga, the Rksa got these Vedas. Mahabharata incarnated on earth for the preservation of Dharma, in the person of Veda Vyasa. Vyasa distributed the Vedas among his son Sakyalya and his disciples. Sakyalya received Rgveda. He communicated it to his disciples. (Bhagavata, 12th Skanda. See under the word Veda).

RIPU. Grandson of Dhrurva. Two sons called Sisqi and Bharya were born to Dhrurva by his wife Sanbhba. Sisqi’s wife Suchchayi delivered five sons, i.e., Ritu, Ripunjaya, Vipra, Vrkal and Vrkaetjes. Cakausha Manu was born as the son of Ritu by his wife Brhati. (Vishnu Purana, Part I, Chapter 13).

RIPUNJAYA. I Son of Suratha, lord of the Kuntala city. When Suratha captured Sri Rama’s yatind house there ensued a fierce war between him and Satrugna. Ripunjaya too was present at the fighting. (Padma Purana).

RIPUNJAYA. II A brahmin, who was born as Divodasa, king of Kasii in his rebirth. When once fire ceased to be in Kasii, he took upon himself the function of fire. (Skanda purana, 4.2, 29-46).

RIPUNJAYA. III. Son of Dhrurva. (Abhayapurana).

RISTA. A king. He worships Yama in his assembly. (Sabhba Parva, Chapter 8).

RIVSA. A king mentioned in the Rgveda. Once he besieged the city of another King, Vangrapa, with the help of Indra. (Rgveda, 1st Mandala, 10th Anuvaka, 33rd Suka).

RiRVASVA. A muni (sage) celebrated in the Rgveda. Some details:
1. Rjravas was made blind by his father (Rgveda, 1st Mandala, 16th Anuvaka, 112th Suka).
2. Rjravas was the son of the royal sage, Vrsizhig. Once the donkey which is the vehicle of the Adindevas assumed the shape of a she-wolf and went to Rjravas. Rjravas gave it 100 sheep belonging to the people of the country and cut them to pieces and offered the same as food to the she-wolf. This plunder of the people’s wealth enraged Vrsizhig. He cursed Rjravas and made him lose his eye-sight.

Rjravas who thus became blind offered prayers to Agni, who restored his eyesight. (Rgveda, 1st Mandala, 17th Anuvaka, 116th Suka).

RK. A small section of the Veda. The Veda which issued from the face of God at the time of creation, consisted of 1,000,000 books in four sections, beginning with RK. (Vishnu Purana, Part 111, Chapter 4). The root “RC” means “to praise”. It got the name “RK” meaning, “to praise gods”.

RKSIA. A king of the Puro dynasty. He was the father of Sarvamaka. For genealogy see under the word of Sarvamaka. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 94).

RKSIA. II. King Haribha had a son named Rkasa born to him by his wife Suddeva. Mahabharta, Adi Parva, Chapter 95 says that this Rkasa had a son named Matiabra, by his wife Jvala.

RKSIA. Wife of Ajamidha, who was a king of the lunar dynasty. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 37).

RKSADEVA. Son of Sitakshi. Mahabharta, Droup Parva, Chapter 23 refers to his horse with white and red colour.
RKSAMBIA. A woman follower of Lord Skanda.
(M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 12).

RKSARAJAS. A monkey who was the foster-father of Bāli and Sugriva. He was the king of Kiskindhā. He had no issue for a long time. Bāli and Sugriva were brought up by Ahalyā at Gautama’s Āśrama. Rksarajas, with the permission of Indra, went to the Āśrama and took Bāli and Sugriva with him to Kiskindhā. From that time, Bāli and Sugriva remained with him as his foster-sons. (Uttara Rāmāyana).
There is a story in Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Prakṣipta Sarga, about the origin of this monkey.
Once when Brahmā was in a state of meditation on the Meru mountain, tears rolled down from his eyes and he gathered the tears in his own hands. From those tears, a monkey came into being. Rksarajas was that monkey.

One day, Rksarajas went to a lake to quench his thirst. Seeing his own image reflected in the water, he thought it was some enemy and jumped into the lake, to attract him. But he soon realized his mistake and returned to the shore. As soon as he came out of the water, he felt that he had become a woman. Seeing her reflection in the water, Indra and his attendants were filled with lustful passion. Both of them had involuntary emission of semen. Bāli was born from Indra’s semen which fell on the head and Sugriva was born from Sūrya’s semen which fell on the neck of Rksarajas. Towards the end of the night, Rksarajas lost his female form and regained his former shape as a male. At once he took the two children with him to Brahmā and told him the whole story. Brahmā sent an messenger with Rksarajas and had him anointed king of Kiskindhā. After the time of Rksarajas, Bāli became king of Kiskindhā.

RKSARCGA. The younger son of Dirghatapas who was performing tapas in Mandāravāna on the northern part of Kāṭi. Since he was killed by Citrasena, all others committed suicide. But Dirghatapas was left behind and collected his bones, and deposited them in the sacred Sūkhahedārūla. Skanda Parāśa says that consequently they attained Heaven.

RKSÅVA. One of the seven mountains in India.
(M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 11).

ROCAMĀNA. An attendant of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śrīya Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 28).

ROCAMĀNA I. A Śrīkṣatriya King. The following information is available from Mahābhārata about him.
(i) Rocamāna was born from a portion of an asura named A’vagriva. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 18).
(ii) Rocamāna also was present at the Svayamvara (marriage) of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 10).
(iii) Rocamāna was the king of the country Atva-medha. Bhimasena, at the time of his regional conquest, defeated this King. (Mahābhārata, Śrīkṣa Parva, Chapter 29, Stanza 8).
(iv) At the beginning of the battle of Kurukṣetra, the Pāṇḍavas sent an invitation to this King to join the battle. (M.B. Udयoga Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 12).
(v) Rocamāna was a mighty warrior on the side of the Pāṇḍavas in the battle of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Droga Parva, Chapter 70, Stanza 47).

ROCAMĀNA was killed by Karta in a combat. (M.B. Karta Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 49).

ROCAMĀNA II. Mahābhārata, Śrīkṣa Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 19, mentions another Rocamāna who had been defeated by Arjuna in his regional conquest.

ROCAMĀNA III. Mention is made in the Mahābhārata, Karta Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 20, that teacher Drona had killed two brothers with the name Rocamāna in the Bhāraṭa-battle.

ROCĀNA I. The daughter of the King Devaka. Vasudeva married Rocāna. Two sons Hema and Hemāgūda were born to her. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

ROCĀNA II. Grand-daughter of Rukun, the King of Vīdağrha. Aniruddha the grandson of Śrī Kṛṣṇa married her at Bhōjakā, (Bhāgavata, Skanda 10).

ROCĀNAMUKHA. An asura. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 105, Stanza 12 that Gruḍa killed this Asura.

ROUHA. A hell. See the part Narsaka under the word Kāla.

ROHINI I. The mother of all the cows. The following is a story about the origin of Rohini, given in Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Aranyaprākṛti.
Prajapati Kaśyapa married Surabhi the seventh daughter of Dakṣa. Two daughters Rohini and Gandharvī were born to Surabhi. In later years cows and oxen were born in the world from Rohini and horses from Gandharvī. In the Mahābhārata, Śrīkṣa Parva, Chapter 66, it is mentioned that two daughters Vimala and Anālī were born to Rohini and that these two, in later years cattle were born.

ROHINI II.
1) General information. One of the wives of Candra (Moon). The twentyseven stars are the wives of Candra. Of these twentyseven wives, Rohini was loved most by Candra. (See under Candra).
2) Rohini and Dasiārā. (See under Dasiārāh, Para 10).

ROHINI III. The mother of Balabhadrārāma.
1) General information. Vasudeva had two wives Devaki and Rohini. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was born from Devaki and Balabhadrārāma from Rohini.
2) Previous Birth of Rohini. Vasudeva was the rebirth of Prajapati Kaśyapa. When Kaśyapa took birth as Vasudeva, his two wives Aditi and Surāsī took birth as Devaki and Rohini respectively. (They took birth thus because of the curse of Varuṇa. For details of the curse see under Kaśyapa, para 6).
3) The birth of Balabhadrā. The seventh child of Devaki was placed in the womb of Rohini and Balabhadrārāma was born. (For this story see under Kṛṣṇa, para 6, Karṇa, para 6 and Śaḍārāhaka).
4) Death. As soon as a messenger named Dāruka brought the news that the entire race of the Yādavas had perished in Dwārakā, because of grief, Vasudeva, Devaki and Rohini forsook their bodies. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 11).

ROHINI IV. Nīlā the third wife of the Agni (fire) called Manu or Bhānu gave birth to a daughter named Rohini. Because she had done some misdeeds, she became the wife of Hiranyakaśipu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 291).
ROHINI V. The mother of Uutta, a famous hermit. (For details see under Saryantapa).

ROHITA (ROHITASVA). The son of Haricandra. This son, who was born by the blessing of Varuna, was wanted to be sacrificed by Varuna himself. In connection with this Haricandra had to bear much sorrow and misery. (For details see under Haricandra).

ROHITAKA (ROHITAKARASYA). A mountain famous in the Purânas. Places surrounding this mountain also were known by the name Rohitaka. It is mentioned in Mahâbhârata, Sâdhâ Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 4, that during the regional conquest of Nakula, he passed through this country. The present name of this country is Rohitk (Haryana).

ROMAHARSHA. A famous disciple of Vyasa. The great Vyasa gave the collection of Purânas to Romaharsha. Sumati, Agnivardha, Mirâyus, Samásapayana, Aktrava and Sâryam were the six disciples of Romaharsha. (See under Guruparamparâ).

ROMAKA. A country in ancient India. The inhabiants of this country were called the Romakas. Mention is made in Mahâbhârata, Sâdhâ Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 17, that the Romakas came with presents to the horse-sacrifice performed by Yudhishthira.

ROMAS. A daughter of Prasapti. The reply given by Romas to her husband when he teased her, is given in Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvâka 19, Sûkta 126.

RâSAHA I. A King of the Lunar dynasty. He was the great grandson of Upârankaravasa. Mahâbhârata, Drona Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 12 says that he fought with the Garûçayâdha formed by Drona.

RâSAHA II. A munî (sage) who was the grandson of King Agudžíbra. 1) General Information. Râsha was the son of King Nâshí by his wife Merupâvi. One hundred sons were born to Râsha by his wife Jayantâ. After entrusting his kingdom to Bharata, the chief of his clan, Râsha went to the forest and did tapas in Prabâ’s ârama. 2) Râsha and Râshâba. Râsha did tapas in the forest for many years. The mountain peak on which he performed his tapas got the name “Râshakhâtâa”. The sage who wished to observe strict silence did not like the presence of strangers and visitors in the vicinity. So, he pronounced a curse that the mountain should drop boulders on any one who ventured to come there. Once he ordered the wind to blow without noise as it passed by the side of the mountain. He declared that anyone who made noise in Râshakhâtâa would be struck with thunder. There place of holy waters came into existence there. (M.B. Aranyya Parva, Chapter 11). 3) The Fall of Râsha’s Age. Râsha became a devotee of Sâya by worshipping him. Once a Brâhmana named Mandara had an illicit alliance with Pîgâla, a prostitute. Both of them died together. Mandara was re-born as Bhadrâyâ, the grandson of Nala and Pîgâla as Sumati, the wife of King Vajrabâhu (Aitâmun). Sumati became pregnant. Her co-wives who were jealous of her poisoned her. As a result, She died and the child fell victims to diseases. Dâkárpa abandoned them in the forest. Sumati lived in the house of a Vaisya with her child. While living there, the child died of disease. Râsha went to the grief-stricken Sumati and comforted her. (Siva Purâna). 4) Râsha’s End. Râsha performed tapas according to the rules of Vânaprastha ârama and conducted yâgas as ordained by Sâstras. On account of his austerity he became so lean and thin that all the veins in the body could be seen. Putting a pebble in his mouth, he went about in the forest, determined to renounce his body. (Vişnu Purâna, Chapter 7, Section 1). In the course of his wanderings in the forest a wild fire broke out in which his body was burnt up. Siva Purâna says that the soul of Râsha who died in the wild fire, attained Siva Loka.

RâSBHA III. A Naga born in the Dharâstra family. In Mahâbhârata, Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 11, we read that this naga was burnt to ashes at Janaamaya’s Sarpaasara. (Snake sacrifice).

RâSBHA IV. An Acura. (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 51).

RâSBHADVIPA. A holy place on the banks of the river Sarawati. Mahâbhârata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84 says that by bathing in this place, one would obtain Devavimâna.

RâSBHAKSÔTA. See under Râshâ Parvata.

RâSBHAPARVATA. There are twenty mountains on the four sides of Mahâmûru Râshâ. One of them, Devi Bâghavata, Aâstha Sâkâna. There is a reference to Râshâ Parvata when Sugriva gave instructions about the way to the army of monkeys going out in search of Sûta. Sugriva speaks about the Râshâ mountain as situated in the middle of the ocean of milk. (Valmiki Ramâyana, Krânkâla Kundâ, 4th, Sargâ, Verse 44).

RâSBHATIRTHA. An ancient place of holy waters in Ayodhya. Mahâbhârata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84 says that an observance of fast at this tirtha is equivalent to the gift of 1,000 cows and a Vişvapayaya.

RâSI. Agni Parvâ, Chapter 240 states that the letter “R” means ‘sound’. The word “Râsi” is derived from this root. During the period when the art of writing was not known, Vedas, Sâstras and other sacred lore were communicated through the mouth of the Râsi. The voice of Ârama Bâtrata itself is the voice of the Râsi. Hindus believe that the Vedas are the outcome of the inspiration, introspection and spiritual vision of the Râsi. There is a Sanskrit stanza defining a Râsi, which is given below:

Tredhvarecitaspasyâyat
Niyatâtîca sanyânti /
Sapânugra hyah saktaâh
Sattشاءulbhvadvâryâh /

India has given birth to numerous Râsis. The word “Râsi” may be found throughout the Vedas. Râsins born in all classes of people had lived in India. The general belief is that the number of Râsis may come to about 48,000. It is not possible to know the names of all of them. In the Râmâyana we find that when Bhrâma returned to Ayodhya after his life in the forest and took up the reign, many Râsis came to Ayodhya from all parts of the country. Among them, Pîgâla, Yakrâ, Kanyâ and Garga came with their party of disciples from the east; Dâkárpa, Nâmucâ, Prâmucâ, Vâlmiki, Soma, Kundu and Agastya came with their disciples from the south; Vṛṣaṅgâ, Kaviṣa, Kauṣâ, Raudvyra, Nárada, Vámadeva, Saubhari, Aśāvakra, Śuka, Bhṛgu, Lomāśa, Maudgalyā and others with their disciples came from the west and Kasyapa, Vasiṣṭha, Atri, Gautama, Jamadagni, Bhradarvīṣa, Śānaka and party, Sārabhandha, Durvāśa, Māṇḍaka, Vībhānḍaka, Tumburu, the Saptarṣi and others with their party of disciples arrived from the north, according to Utpala Ramayana. There are three classes of Rāṣṭra—Brahmāṛṣa, Rājaṛṣi and Devaṛṣi. Vasiṣṭha was a Brahmarṣi, Vīvāmura, a Rajaṛṣi and Kasyapa, a Devaṛṣi.

RŚIGIRI. A mountain situated near Girivraj, the capital of Magadhā kingdom. This mountain is also known as “Māṇḍaka” (M.B. Sahitya Parva, Chapter 21, Verses 2 and 3).

RŚIKA I. A Rajaṛṣi. Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verses 32 and 33 state that he was the rebirth of Arka, the Asura leader.

RŚIKA II. A town in North India. A terrible battle took place here between Arjuna and Śiṅka, the Rajaṛṣi. (M.B. Sahitya Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 25).

RŚIKULYĀ. A sacred river in ancient India. Mahābhārata, Bhārata Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 47 mentions that those who bathe in this river will attain Mokṣa (liberation).

RŚYAMŪKA. A mountain. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 9 states that Rāma and Lakṣmanā visited the sage Markandeya on the top of this mountain. It was here that Rāma and Lakṣmanā met Sugrīva. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 279, Verse 44 states that the river Pampā runs round the Rśyamukha mountain.

RŚYĀRŚIGRA. Son of the sage Vībhānḍaka.

1) Birth. Vībhānḍaka, son of Kasyapa was the father of Rśyārśiga. There is a strange story about him in the Mahābhārata.

Once sage Vībhānḍaka happened to see Urvashi at Mahābhārata. At the very sight of her, the sage had an involuntary emission of semen. The semen fell in the water and just then a female deer came there to drink water. It swallowed the semen with water and in due course became pregnant and gave birth to a human child. But the child had the horns of a deer. Consequently Vībhānḍaka named the boy “Rśyārśiga”. Vībhānḍaka and Rśyārśiga lived together in the ārāma. Rśyārśiga grew up into a youth, but he had never seen anyone except his father Vībhānḍaka.

2) Rainfall in the kingdom of Āṅga. At that time, the kingdom of Āṅga was ruled by Lomapāḍa, a friend of Daśaratha. Once he cheated a Brāhmaṇa. Consequently all the Brāhmaṇas in that country left the place and emigrated to other lands. From that time there was no rain in the land of Āṅga. A severe drought and famine followed. Lomapāḍa invited devout Brāhmaṇas and committed them how they could bring rain to the land. They told him that if he could get a Muni (sage) who had never seen women to perform a yāga, there would be rainfall in the land. The King sent his men far and wide to find a Muni who had never set eyes on a woman. At last he got news that Rśyārśiga, son of Vībhānḍaka was the sage who had never seen women. He then began to plan how Rśyārśiga could be brought over to Āṅga.

Lomapāḍa called together some prostitutes and asked them whether they could bring Rśyārśiga to his country. All except one of them said it was quite impossible. One of them, however, agreed to try. As desired by her, the King sent her with several other damsels.

The young women went to the forest and made a floating ārāma in a boat in which they sailed in the river by the side of Vībhānḍaka’s ārāma. They stopped the boat close to the ārāma and one of the girls entered the ārāma when Vībhānḍaka was not there. She had a talk with Rśyārśiga in the course of which she used all the amorous enticements of her sex to captivate the young Muni. She told him that she was the daughter of a Muni, living in an ārāma, three yojanas away. Rśyārśiga felt a peculiar fascination for her and tried to please her by offering fruits etc. When she left him, he felt deeply distressed and unhappy. He was in that depressed and gloomy state of mind when Vībhānḍaka returned to the ārāma. Finding him unusually restless and dejected, the father asked him whether she had come there, Rśyārśiga who was an entire stranger to the feminine world told his father that a handsome youth of irresistible charm had visited him during Vībhānḍaka’s absence. But from Rśyārśiga’s description of the “yāga” Vībhānḍaka understood that the visitor must have been a woman. But he could not guess who it was.

On another occasion, the same woman came again to the ārāma in the absence of Vībhānḍaka. At her sight Rśyārśiga was enraptured and before his father’s return, they left the ārāma. They entered the floating ārāma in the boat and the woman set the boat sailing in the river. It glided slowly down the river and at last reached near the palace of Lomapāḍa. They landed there and the King married his daughter Śánta to Rśyārśiga.

To appease Vībhānḍaka, Lomapāḍa sent him rich presents and much wealth. When Vībhānḍaka returned to his ārāma he was met by the King’s servants who had brought the presents and wealth. Ignoring them and their rich presents, the furious Mahārāja set out to the city of Cantā, the capital of the Āṅga Kingdom. At the royal command, Vībhānḍaka was welcomed by the people with honour. When the sage found that the whole kingdom belonged to his son, his anger was allayed. After ordering his son to return to his ārāma after the birth of a son, Vībhānḍaka left the palace. As a result of Rśyārśiga’s yāga there was rainfall in Āṅga and famine ended. After the birth of his child he returned to the forest as ordered by his father. (M.B. Aranyā Parva, Chapters 110-112).

3) Rśyārśiga in Ayodhyā. King Daśaratha of Ayodhyā had no children for a long time. His Minister Sumitra advised him to invite Rśyārśiga to perform a yāga for the purpose. Lomapāḍa sent Rśyārśiga to Ayodhyā at the invitation of Daśaratha. He arrived at Ayodhyā and performed a yāga called Purāṇakaṃśi. From the sacrificial fire there arose a dark monstrous figure, with a pot of pudding in his hand. Daśaratha received it from him and gave one half of it to Kusūla and the other half to Kaikeyi. Both of them gave one half of their shares to Dasharatha. The King got two shares while the other two wives of Daśaratha got only one share each. As a result Kusūla and Kaikeyi gave birth to a son each, while Sumitra had two sons. Kusa’s son was named Rāma, Kaikeyi’s son was Bharata and Sumitra's sons were Lakşmanas and Sattugrha. (Valiñiki Raññapāṇa, Sāla Kāññā, Chapters 14-16).

RTA I. One of the 11 Rudras. (M.B. Amūrāsa Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 12).

RTA II. See under the word Prawmīta.

RTA III. This word has a general meaning 'truth'.

Besides in Agni Puraṇa, Chapter 152, we see that it also means 'Something obtained by begging'.

RTADHĀMA. Another, and Sānta Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 62.

1) Genealogy. From Viśvānu were descended in the following order—Brahmā—Marici—Kātiyapa—Viśvāvan—Vaikvatama Manu—Ikṣvāku—Viśvānu—Śaśāda—Kālaikā—Kanti—Bhuṣu—Ahīttavā—Viśvāma—Adri—Kuvalāśva (DHUNDHUMĀRA).

2) How he got the name Dhundhumāra. The most heroic exploit of Kuvalāśva or Kuvvalaśva was his killing of the Asura Dhundhu.

Madhu and Kātābha were two Asuras born from the ears of Mahāviśvānu. The Asura Dhundhu was their son and a brother of Madhu and Kātābha. Dhundhu was furious over the death of his father. He worshipped Brahmā who granted him unconquerable strength. After defeating the gods he went to the desert called Ujjilaka and lay beneath the sands. Whenever he heaved a sigh clouds of dust rose up to the sky and the earth shook for seven days. It caused great damage to life and property in the world, like a storm. Ușṭakā, a sage who lived in the neighbourhood of Ujjilaka was the person who suffered most from Dhundhu's misdeeds.

Brhadāśva, of Ikṣvāku dynasty and father of Kuvalāśva in his old age entrusted the rule of the country to his son and prepared to go to the forest. At that time, sage Uṣṭakā came there and advised the King to go to the forest for killing Dhundhu who called his son Kuvalāśva and after giving him the task of killing Dhundhu, proceeded to the forest.

Kuvalāśva had 21,000 sons. Leading them, he went to the desert Ujjilaka to kill Dhundhu. Uṣṭakā declared that anyone who killed Dhundhu would get part of Mahāviśvānu's strength. Kuvalāśva's sons surrounded Dhundhu. The battle took place in a mountainous country. In the fire from his eyes, all the 21,000 sons of Kuvalāśva were burnt to ashes. Next Kuvalāśva came into conflict with Dhundhu. In that fight Dhundhu was killed. The gods gave Kuvalāśva many boons. From that day, Kuvalāśva got the name, "DHUNDHUMĀRA" (one who killed Dhundhu). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters from 201).

3) 72 sons. Kuvalāśva had three more sons named Dhṛđhāśva, Kapiḷāśva, and Gandhrvāsa, or Bhadrāśva besides the 21,000 sons. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 204, Verse 40).

4) Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 59 gives the following account of how Kuvalāśva won the favour of sage Gātiśva.

Long ago while sage Gātiśva was performing tapas in his hermitage in a forest called Pañākaka, he desired to vary his meditations regularly. One day, the sage looked up to Heaven and heaved a sigh. At once a horse dropped down from the sky. A mysterious voice was heard saying—"This mighty horse will travel thousands of yojanas in a day." The sage received that horse and presented it to Rukdhvāja, King of the lunar dynasty. Rukdhvāja mounted that horse and named it Pāñākaka. It was Viśvāsva who dropped this horse from Heaven. Pāñākaka had once fallen in love with Viśvāsva's daughter, Mādāśāla. It was in revenge that Viśvāsva had done like this.

RTADHVĀJA II. A Mahārṣi (sage). The sage Jābili was his son. (For further details, see Para 2 under the word Viśvāsakarṇa).

RTAMBIHRA or Rukdhvāja II. An ancient King. He worshipped Kānadhenu and obtained a son who was a devotee of Viśvānu. The son's name was Satyavāna. In connection with Sīri Rāma's Ávamēdaśayāga, Sattugrha who was leading the horse, arrived in Satyavāna's city during his tour of the eastern lands. (Pacitra Purāṇa, Pacitra Purāṇa, Chapter 3). RTASTUBH A Muni (sage) celebrated in the Rygveda (Rygveda, 1st Mantra, 16th Anuvāka, 112th Sātra). RTAYU. See under Kalinga.

RTEU I. A king of the lunar dynasty. RTEU II. A Mahārṣi (sage) of the western country. He was a ṛtik (priest officiating at a yajna) of Varuṇa. (M.B. Aranyā Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 226).

RTUKALĀ. The term that is most auspicious for sexual intercourse for a woman with her husband. In ancient India certain days were prescribed as the best period for women to become pregnant. This period is called Rūkikā. (Rūkikā—Menstruation. Kālā—time, period.) The sixteen days following menstruation are supposed to be good; but the first three days are not very good and it is advisable not to have sexual intercourse during those days. The next even days beginning with the fourth day (4th, 6th, 8th, 10th, 12th, 14th and 16th) are the best days for coitus if a male issue (a son) is desired. The odd days (3rd, 7th, 9th, 11th, 13th, 15th) are to be preferred if a female issue (daughter) is desired. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 131).

RTUPARNA. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty.

2) Other Details.

1) Nala's irrogant life. While Nala was wandering in the dense forest after leaving Damayantī, he was bitten by the serpent Karkotaka. His complexion turned blue owing to the effect of the poison. Karkotaka gave him a garuda by wearing which Nala could regain his form. As advised by Karkotaka, Nala went to the palace of Rupārṇa, king of Ayodhyā, assuming the name Bāhu. He lived there as the chief charioteer of the king. He had mastered the art "Āvahikā" by which he could drive the chariot-horses with astonishing speed. Rupārṇa appointed him as his chief charioteer and gave him two assistants, Vārṇīrya and Jīvala. (M.B. Aranyā Parva, Chapter 67).

(ii) Rupārṇa and the second marriage of Damayantī. Damayantī came to know that Nala was living in Rupārṇa's palace, through the messenger Pañākaka. She sent a secret message to Aaydhya through a Brähmana named Sudeva that her second marriage was fixed for the next day and that Ruparna should attend the ceremony. Ruparna started at once with Bähuka as his charioteer. On the way, Ruparna's cloak happened to fall down from the chariot. At once he asked Nala to stop the chariot. But he told him that within a moment, the chariot had covered a distance of one yojana from the place where the cloak fell.

They saw a tree in the forest which was heavily laden with fruit. Ruparna was able to tell at a glance, the exact number of leaves and fruits on that tree. He told Nala that he was able to do so with the help of the art "Aksahrdya" and he taught it to Nala. In return for it, Nala taught the king the art of Akshardya. At last they reached the city of Vidarbha. Damayanti managed to recognize Nala even in his disguise. Ruparna who was happy over the reunion of Nala and Damayanti returned to Aydhya on the next day. [M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 77].

RUSTHALA. A Celestial damsel. In Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, we find that she attended the birth-festival of Arjuna as a companion of Dhatala.

RTVĀ. A Dhatala Gandharva. Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 122 states that he had taken part in Arjuna's birth-festival.

RTVIK. A Priest who officiates at a yāga.

Those who perform yāgas like Agnisāndha, Agnigostha, Pahraya etc. are called Rtvika. Manusmṛti, Chapter 2, Verse 413.

RUCAKA/PARVATA. (The mountain Rucaka) A mountain standing near the mountain Mahāmeru. It is mentioned in Devi Bhāgavata, Sandhā 8, that there are twenty mountains including Rucaka on the four sides of Mahāmeru.

RUCI I. A celestial maid of Alakāpūri. This celestial maid danced in the Palace of Kubera on the occasion of the visit of Avikāra. [M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 13].

RUCI II. A son of Brahmā and a Prajāpati. This prajāpati married Akūti the daughter of Manu Svayambhūva. A son and daughter were born to Ruci of Akūti. The son was the incarnation of Visu. He was named Yājña. The daughter who was incarnation of Mahālakṣmi was named Daksā. Yājña was brought up in the hermitage of Svayambhūva and Daksā grew up in the hermitage of Ruci. When they grew up Yājña married Daksā. Twelve sons, named Tosa, Santosa, Pratosa, Bhadra, Śanit, Iqapati, Ithana, Kavi, Vihana, Vahni, Sudeva, and Rocana, were born to the couple. In the time of Manu Svayambhūva twelve were called the Tristūs, a group of devas (gods).

RUCHI III. The wife of the hermit named Devalārma. (For detailed story see under Vipula).

RUCIPARVA. Son of the king Ācīti. In the Bhārata battle, to save Bhumascena, Ruciparva confronted the elephant of Bhagadatta and was killed by Bhagadatta. [M.B. Draupari Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 51].

RUCIRASVA. A king of the Lunar dynasty. (Bhagavata, Sarga 17).

RUDHIRAMBHAS. A hell. (See under the word Khāda).

RUDHIRASANA. A giant-chief who came to fight with Śrī Rama, under the leadership of the giant Khara. In that fight the captains of the army of the giants were Rudhirāsana etc. All of them were killed by the arrow of Śrī Rama. [Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Aranya, Kāpāda Sarga 26].

RUDRA. A form of Śiva.

1) General information. The birth of Rudra is from Brahmā. Even before the creation of the Prajāpatis, Brahmā had created Sanandana, Sanaka, Sanātana and Sanatkumāra. These four were not destitute of mundane pleasures and were not wild and brutal children; they were great sages and scholars, of abstinence and without any discord and animosity. When these four showed no interest at all in the creation of the world, Brahmā became angry to such an extent that he was prepared to destroy the three worlds. At that time the whole of the three worlds shone in the radiance that emanated from the fire of the fury of Brahmā. Then, from his shining eyebrows which were curved with fury, a figure of unbearable radiance like the mid-day sun came out. That figure was Rudra. Half of the fierce body of that Rudra who was very furious, was a woman and the other half was a man. Brahmā, saying, "Divide body", disappeared. Instantly Rudra split himself into the figure of a man and the figure of a woman. He then divided the body of the man into eleven parts. These eleven figures are the eleven Rudras.

The names of the eleven Rudras are given differently in different Purānas. In a text it is said that the eleven Rudras are: Manu, Manu, Mahānā, Mahānā, Śiva, Rudra, Ugraretas, Bhava, Kāma, Vāmadeva and Dharma. According to some other Purānas, the eleven Rudras are Ajā, Ekā, Paśu, Bhūta, Ākrama, Hara, Śāktya, Tṛibhūvan, Ākaram, Jīva and Ekā. Brahmā appointed some of the eleven Rudras to take different functions. They were: Dī, Vṛttī, Uṣā, Umā, Nityā, Sarpī, Ilā, Ambika, Embā, Embā, Āmī and Dikśā. The eleven Rudras became the wives of the eleven Rudras. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anuśa 1, Chapter 7).

2) Other information regarding Rudra. Details about the origin, life, character etc. of Rudra which occur in other Purānas are given below:

(i) Thirty-three children were born to Prajāpati Ka ṣaya, by his wife Aditi, as Adityas, Vāsun, Rudras and Atri. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Aranya Kāpāda, Sarga 14).

(ii) From the fury of Brahmā, Rudra was born; from the lap of Brahmā, Norton was born; from the right thumb, Daksā; from the mind, Sanaka and the others; and from the left thumb, a daughter named Vīraṇi was born. (Devi Bhāgavata, Sandhā 7).

(iii) In the beginning of Kalpa (Age of Brahmā) Brahmā meditated upon getting a child like himself and a child of blue complexion appeared on his lap. He ran here and there crying aloud. Brahmā asked him "Why are you crying?" He replied: "I must be named." Because he was crying (dūṣa rakṣā) Brahmā named him Rudra (He who cries). He cried seven times more. Brahmā gave him seven more names. They were Bhava, Sarva, Iśana, Paśupati, Bhumā, Urga and Mahādeva. Thus there were eight Rudras. To each of them, Brahmā gave a position and wives and children.
The Sun, water, earth, air, fire, ether, Brahmin who has taken vow and the moon were allotted to them as their positions and figures. Their wives were Suvarcalī, Usā, Vikeśī Sīvā, Śvālā, Dīśā, Dīkā and Rohinā. This world is filled by the sons and grandsons and so on of these wives. Their sons, respectively were Sarasvati, Suṣrā, Pārā, Mahāvī, Gaṇapati. This Rudra who is described above, married Śrīṇavī the daughter of Prajāpati Daksā. (Visnu Purāṇa, Svēta 1, Chapter B). (For further information see under Śiva also).

RUDRAKETU. An asura. Two sons named Devāntaka and Narāntaka were born to this asura by his wife Śrīrā. The hermit Nārāyaṇa was greatly pleased at the virtue of these two sons, and taught them “Pahāsakarimahāvī- da,” Devāntaka and Narāntaka, who became hagiographers and orators by prowess were killed by Gaṇapati. (Ganesa Purāṇa, Kriyā Śiṅi 2).

RUDRAKOTI. A holy place in North India. Once a large number of hermits gathered in this place to worship Śiva. Greatly pleased at this Śiva appeared before them in the form of many phaluses. From that day onwards the place of Rudrakoti became a holy place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 62, Sātan 118).

RUDRAKSHA. (Elaco Carpus seeds) Beads for rosaries. 1) General information. A holy thing worn by devotees. In the Purānas much importance is attached to Rudrākṣa. In Devi Bhāgavatī, Skanda 11, there is a story stating how Rudrākṣa came to be honoured in this way. Once there lived an asura chief who was mighty and valiant. His name was Ṭaṇḍu. The deva chief became his servant. The deva chief became the asura. The devas were much grieved because of him. They went to Śiva and represented their grievances. Śiva thought for a while, how to kill Tripura, and sat with open eyes. This sitting continued for a thousand divine years. After this prolonged time Śiva winked his eyes and tears fell down from them. The Rudrākṣa tree originated from these tears. From the sun-eye of Śiva twelve types of Rudrākṣa came into being; from the moon-eye sixteen kinds of Rudrākṣa and from the fire-eye ten kinds of Rudrākṣa originated. Those which originated from the sun-eye are bloodcoloured, those from the moon-eye white Rudrākṣa and from the fire-eye black Rudrākṣa. Belied Rudrākṣa is considered a Brahmin caste, red rudrākṣa a Kṣatriya caste, white one a Vaiṣṇava caste and the black rudrākṣa a Śūdra caste.

2) Division of rudrākṣa based on quality. The division of rudrākṣa according to the number of faces, and qualities thereof are given below:

With one face: Rudrākṣa with only one face is the figure of Śiva. By wearing this remission from the sin of Brahmaṅhātyā could be procured.

With two faces: Rudrākṣa with two faces is the figure of Devideva. This is known by the name “Gaurāṅkara.” By wearing this remission from all sins committed knowingly and unknowingly, would be obtained.

With three faces: This is the figure of Agni (fire). By wearing this the sin incurred by Śrīnātha (killing a woman) would be washed away.

With four faces: Rudrākṣa with four faces is the figure of Brahma. By wearing this the sin incurred by Śrīnātha (killing a man) could be got rid of.

With five faces: This is the figure of Kālaṅgi (Fire of Kāla the God of death). By wearing this, remission of sins incurred by eating food which ought not to have been eaten and enjoying woman who ought not to have been enjoyed, could be obtained. All sorts of sins would be absolved by five-faced rudrākṣa.

With six faces: Six-faced rudrākṣa is the six-faced god Kārttikeya. By wearing it on the right hand, remission from all sins, beginning with Brahmaṅhātyā could be obtained.

With seven faces: Rudrākṣa with seven faces is the figure of Kāmadeva (Cupid). If this is worn, sins such as theft of gold etc. could be removed.

Eight faces: Rudrākṣa with eight faces is the figure of Vināyaka, the general of the great army. By wearing this, sins incurred by deceit such as selling rice of low quality as good quality, keeping false weights and measures, giving gold of lower carat as good carat gold, bytoString of wretched families, touching the wife of teacher, and so many other kinds of sins would be absolved, and impediments would be avoided, and finally one can attain supernatural bliss.

With nine faces: This rudrākṣa is the figure of Bhairava. This should be worn on the left hand. By doing so one would become as mighty as god and would become devoted to god and would attain salvation. The sins incurred by killing the child in the womb a thousand times and killing Brahmans a hundred times would be got rid of by wearing this rudrākṣa.

With ten faces: This is the figure of the real Janardana. If one wears this, the devils, wicked planets, Ghastis, goblins, spirits haunting funeral places, Brahmaṇhātyās (a kind of demon) etc. will not come near him. Moreover, snakes-bite would not affect him.

With eleven faces: Rudrākṣa with eleven faces is the figure of the Eleven Rudras. This should be worn on the head. By doing so one could obtain the fruits of performing a thousand horse-sacrifices and a hundred Vījapeyayīgas (A kind of sacrifice).

With twelve faces: Rudrākṣa with twelve faces is the dwelling place of the twelve Aṣṭaśiyanas. This should be worn on the face. If it is done so, the sun-god will be pleased. The wearer will obtain the fruits of performing horse-sacrifice, cow-sacrifice etc. He will not be wounded by animals with horns, or quills or teeth. He need not fear disease or worry. He need not fear to go anywhere. Wherever he goes he will be honoured as God. All the sins incurred by slaughter of elephants, man, snake, rat, frog etc. will instantly be absorbed.

With thirteen faces: He who wears rudrākṣa with thirteen faces will be equal to Kārttikeya. All his wishes will be realized. He will get rava (mercury) and rasiyana (sweetened medicine) and all the pleasures and luxuries of the world. The great sins of killing parents, brothers etc. will be removed.

With fourteen faces: He who wears rudrākṣa with fourteen faces will be exactly like the real Paramaṇvita.

3) The mode of wearing Rudrākṣa: He who wears thirty-two rudrākṣa on the neck, forty on the head, six on each ear, twelve on each hand, sixteen on each of the upper arms, one on each eye, one on the lock of hair, and one hundred and eight on the chest is really Śiṅkāṅka Paramaṇvita Himself.

RUDRAMĀRGĀ. A holy place. If a day and a night's fast is taken in this place, one will attain the world of Indra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 181).
RUDRA. Another name of Pārvati. (For further details see under Pārvati).

RUDRAIRUDRA. A holy place in India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Aitareya Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 31, that the great hermit Asthāvakra visited this holy place on his journey to the northern countries.

RUDRAPADA. A holy place in India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 100, that if Siva is worshipped in this holy place, one will obtain the fruits of performing the horse sacrifice.

RUDRAROMĀ. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 7).

RUDRASAÑKAR. A Manu. (See under Manvantara).

RUDRAŚENA. A king who was the helper of Yudhishṭhira. Mention is made about this king in Mahābhārata, Drona Parva, Chapter 138, Stanza 39.

RUDRAṬA. A Sanskrit critic who lived in the 9th century A.D. The famous Book of criticism known as "Kavyālankara", was written by this scholar who belonged to Kashmir.

RUDRĀVARTTA. A holy place. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 37, that by taking a bath in this holy place, one could attain heaven.

RUHĀ. Daughter of Surasā, the mother of Nāgas. She had two sisters called Anaālī and Virudhā. (M.B. Adi Parva, Daksāyīna Pātha, Chapter 66).

RUKMAKESA. The youngest of the five sons of Bhīṣma, King of Vidarbha. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skandha).

RUKMĀNGADA II. A son of Salya the King of Madra. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 14, that this Rukmāngada, the brother of Rukmaratha, attended the Savyavāra (marriage) of Draupadi.

RUKMĀNGADA II. Father of a Vaisnavite named Dharmāṅgada. This Rukmāngada was the son of Rukmaratha, the King of the city of Vidīśā. (See under Dharmāṅgada).

RUKMARATHA I. Son of Salya, King of Madra.

(i) He attended the wedding of Draupadi in the company of his father and brothers. (Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 14).

(ii) In the great war he fell unconsciously shot by the arrows of Śvetā (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 49).

(iii) He was killed by Abhimanyu in the great war. (Drona Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 9).

RUKMĀNGADA II. A synonym of Dronāṅgada. As he rode in a golden chariot Drona came to be known by this name. (Vināśī Parva, Chapter 38, Verse 2).

RUKARA I. A particular class of Trigarta Kings, who fought on the side of the Kaurevas in the great war. (Drona Parva, Chapter 112, Verse 19).

RUKMARĀKHĀ. The wife of King Rādīthīya. She was the mother of Ekaśīla (See under Ekaśīla).

RUKMAŚUKRA. A son of Priyavrata, the brother of Uttānapāda. Prajāpati Vaiśākara gave in marriage to Priyavrata, his two daughters Surīpā and Barhiśtarī, who were exceedingly beautiful and good-natured. By these two daughters, two sons were born to him. Devi Bhāgavata, (Chapter 8).

RUKMVATI. The daughter of Rukmi. Pradyumna married this lady Aniruddha was the son born to Pradyumna of Rukmavati (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

RUKMI. 1) General information. King of the Province Bhogadāna in the country of Vidarbha. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 62, that this Rukmi was born from a portion of the Aśura named Krodhāvāda.

2) Birth. Father of Rukmi was the king Bhīṣma. Two children were born to Bhīṣma, namely Rukmi and Rukmikī. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 62).

3) Getting a bow. Śri Kṛṣṇa took Rukmi's sister Rukmikī by force and married her. Rukmi did not like this and so he confronted Śri Kṛṣṇa. In the contest Śri Kṛṣṇa revived him. Rukmi got angry at this and went to Kañcāsa and did penance before Śiva. Śiva appeared before him after three years, and gave him a bow for destroying the enemies. Śiva told him that it would be broken, only if it was used against Mahāviṣṇu. After getting this bow he returned to Bhogadāna and lived there.

4) The details regarding Rukmi, given in the Mahābhārata.

(i) Rukmi accepted the suzerainty of Sahadeva at the time of his regional conquest. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 35).

(ii) Rukmi paid tribute to Karna at the time of his regional conquest. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Stanza 14).

(iii) The Pāṇḍavas had sent invitation to Rukmi for the Bhārata-battle. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 16).

(iv) Bhīṣma, the father of Rukmi, was killed by Śri Kṛṣṇa. He attacked Bhogadāna. Rukmi fought with Śri Kṛṣṇa and was defeated. The place at which he was defeated is known as Bhogadāna.

After having been defeated by Śri Kṛṣṇa, a thought arose in the mind of Rukmi to keep amity and concord with Śri Kṛṣṇa. Knowing this, the Pāṇḍavas invited Rukmi to their palace. He promised his help if ever Arjuna feared to do battle. At this Arjuna laughed and said that he was not in need of any help. After this Rukmi went to Duryodhana and promised to help him. But Duryodhana also rejected his help. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 159).

5) Death of Rukmi. Disowned by everybody, Rukmi lived in Bhogadāna, having no contact with any body. During this period the king of Kaśīna once approached Rukmi and advised him to challenge Bālabhadra for a game of dice. The challenge was made knowing that Bālabhadra was not a good player. Knowing that to reject a challenge was not honourable, Bālabhadra went to play the game. Rukmi won the first round of game. Staking everything, the second round of the game began and Bālabhadra won the game. But Rukmi and the king of Kaśīna did not accept the victory. All the kings who witnessed the game sided with Rukmi. Instead of an ethereal voice said: "Bālabhadra has won the game." The friends of Rukmi did not accept the ethereal voice. They began to create a tumult in the hall. Bālabhadra for whom became furious at this ridicule took a pestle of iron and killed.
RUKMINI

Rukmini with one blow. The rest of the kings fled from the place. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

RUKMINI. The chief queen of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

1) Birth. From the following Purānic statements, it could be understood that Rukmini was the incarnation of goddess Lakṣmī.

(i) "Śrī Devī (Lakṣmī) by her portions, took birth in the earth as Rukmini in the family of Bhīmaśaka". (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 156).

(ii) Formerly Laṅkāṇi Devi took birth as the daughter of Bhīṣma by his wife Khyāti. Next she took birth from the sea of Milk at the time of the churning of the oceans by the combined efforts of the devas and the asuras, to take Amṛta (ambrosia). When Viṣṇu took birth as Adiṭya, Lakṣmī took birth from lotus. When Viṣṇu incarnated as Pārashurāma Lakṣmī Devi became the earth-goddess. In the incarnation of Śrī Kṛṣṇa she became Śitā and in that of Śrī Kṛṣṇa she was Rukmini. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anśa 1, Chapter 9).

It was in the kingdom of Vidarbha that Laṅkāṇi Devi took birth as Rukmini during the incarnation of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. To Bhīmaśaka, the King of Vidarbha, five sons beginning with Rukmini, were born. The sixth was a daughter named Śrī Śatvarūpiṇī. She grew up into a beautiful damsel. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

2) Marriage. Rukmini fell in love with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Her parents agreed to her choice. But her brother Rukmini was an enemy of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Rukmini desired to give her sister to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The date of the marriage was fixed and the heart was burning within Rukmini. She sent a Brahmin as messenger to Śrī Kṛṣṇa.

The time of marriage drew near. The kings of Aṅga, Kalinga, Mālaya, Kosāya, Vaiśa, Magadha, Kosala, Sālva, Cola, Pandyā, Keralā and so on took their seats in the nuptial hall. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Baḷabhadra came with their army. The army under the leadership of Baḷabhadra remained behind and Śrī Kṛṣṇa went alone to the nuptial hall. While preparations were being made to give Rukmini to Śrī Śatvarūpiṇī, Śrī Kṛṣṇa took her in his chariot and quickly left the place. All the other kings who ran after Śrī Kṛṣṇa to fight had to confront with the mighty army of Baḷabhadra, who defeated the kings and returned to Dvārakā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

3) Sons. It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skandha 10, that ten sons were born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Rukmini. They were Pradhyumna, Cāruḍeṣaṇa, Sūdeṣaṇa, Cāruḍeṣa, Sācāru, Īruṣṭīpoṭa, Bhīduṣṭāru, Īruṣṭāru, Cāruṣū and Cāru. But a slight difference is observed in the description of the sons of Rukmini given in Mahābhārata, Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 33 and 34.

4) Yekta to the chariot by Dāsāśabha. See under Durvāsas, Para 3.

5) Consoled Arjuna. After the death of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna visited Dvārakā. Seeing the dilapidated city without rulers and the women without husbands, he cried aloud. Rukmini Devi ran to him and consoled him and seated him on a golden chair. (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 12).

6) Death. After the death of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Rukmini, with the other wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa jumped into a burning pyre and died.

"Saibhāya, Rukmini, Gāndhārī, Haimavati and Jāmbavat jumped into the fire." (M.B. Mausala Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 23).

7) The Palace of Rukmini. There is a statement in the Mahābhārata, Dāśāṣṭhāpya Pātha, Saibhā Parva, Chapter 28, about the palace of Rukmini. "Vīśvakarma built a palace for Śrī Kṛṣṇa at the instance of Indra. The highest dome of it is covered with gold. So this dome dazzled as the peak of Mahāmeru. It was this dome that was set apart for his beloved wife Rukmini by Śrī Kṛṣṇa."

RUMĀ I. A noble woman obtained from the sea of Milk at the time of its churning by the devas and the asuras to get Amṛta (Celestial honey of immortality). At the time of the churning, many beautiful and noble things were obtained from the sea of Milk. Jyeṣṭhā, Airāvata, Uccāsaśasā, Kalpa tree, Cintāmanī, Kauśītakā, Candra (Moon), Celestial maid, nymph of heaven, Mahālakṣmī, Tarā, Rumā and so on were some of them. (Kamba Raṃyāna, Vyudhā Kūṃḍa).

RUMĀ II. The wife of Sugrivā. She was the daughter of the famous monkey called Patasu. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, 3:7221). After driving Sugrivā away from Kṣiṇḍhā Bāli took Rumā by force. After the death of Rumā, Rāma returned to Sugrivā (Vālmiki Raṃyāna, Kṣiṇḍhā Ḍārā, Chapter 20, 21; Padma Purāṇa 4: 112:161).

There was Rumā also, among the women who came to see Śrī Rāma on his return to Kṣiṇḍhā after visiting Vibhīṣṇu. (Padma Purāṇa, Srṣṭi Khanda).

RUMANVAN. Son of Supratipada, a captain of the army of Udayana. (See under Udayana).

RUMANVAN II. The eldest of the five sons born to Jamadagni by his wife Remukā. The sons of Jamadagni were, Rumanvand, Suyasena, Vasu, Visvāvasu and Pārashurāma. It was Rumanvand that Jamadagni ordered to kill Remukā who was late in fetching water from the river. But Rumanvand did not obey his father. The angry hermit cursed Rumanvand. According to the curse Rumanvand became a bull whose birds and beasts. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 116, Stanza 10).

RUPAKA. See under Pattu (Ten).

RUPAVAIKA. A country in ancient India. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 50, Stanza 43.

RUPAVATI. A hermit who lived in Trivijāwa. It is mentioned in Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Kūṃḍa, that Rupavati and her lover Devadatta attained salvation by adopting the life of a house-holder in the forest.

RUPAVIDYĀ. The figure of Devī. The figure of Devī, shown as sitting with twelve hands, is called Rupavidyā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 30).

RUPINA. A son born to the emperor Ajarindha by his wife Keśī. He had two brothers named Jānua and Vrajā. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 32).

RURU I. A hermit famous in the Purāṇas.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmaḥ-Bhīṣṇu-Cyavanī-Pramati-Ruru.

2) Birth. The beautiful Pulomā was the wife of Bhīṣṇu. Bhīṣṇu got the son Cyavanī by Pulomā. Cyavanī married Sukanyā the daughter of Šaryāṇī. A son named Pramati was born to them. The hermit Pramati married the beautiful damsel Pratāpī. Ruru is their son. He grew up to be a famous hermit. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 2).
3) Marriage. Ruru happened to see the exceedingly beautiful Pramadivarā, daughter of Vīśvāvasu by Menakā. The moment he saw her he fell in love with her. The father of Pramadivarā came to know of this and decided to give her in marriage to Ruru. Preparations for the marriage were being made. One day during that time Pramadivarā who had been running here and there joyfully, was bitten by a snake and she fell down dead. Ruru instantly reached the spot. Ruru who was greatly sad and disappointed, got down to the Ganges and bathed. Then ringing his mouth he took some water in his hand and said “By the favour of Gōtb I have acquired by my devotion and worship of gods, devotion and service to my teacher, by my scriptural study, my worship with Ājañatra, my prayers and meditation, my penance, my offerings to the holy fire, and my oblations, let her come to life. If she does not come to life, I will die in this Ganges water.” Making this prayer, making the gods witnesses he poured the water down.

Immediately a messenger from heaven appeared in the sky and said that she would come to life again provided Ruru was to give half of his life to her. Ruru agreed to it. Thus Pramadivarā came to life again and Ruru married her. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 2).

4) Hatred towards Serpents. A relentless hatred grew up in the heart of Ruru against serpents, because a serpent had killed his wife. He wandered about destroying every serpent he came across. Finally when he confronted Dundubha he was given exhortations and good advices regarding righteousness by Dundubha. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 19).

Moreover it is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 12, that Ruru had taken a lively interest in the sacrifice of Jamanejaya meant for the extermination of serpents.

Ruru II. A mighty and valiant Asura. After procuring a boon from Brahma, Ruru became arrogant and started frightening the Devas and gods. Of gods that were defeated by Ruru ran to the Blue mountain and prostrated before the goddess Sakti, who had been doing penance there. This goddess Sakti had been born from the matted hair of Siva.

Ruru followed the Devas and reached the Blue mountain. When Devi saw Ruru and his mighty army a loud bellow burst out from her. From that laugh thousands of devilish figures came into existence. They completely annihilated the army of Ruru. After this Dei killed Ruru with the nail of her toe. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛti Khandā).

Rukuka. A King of the Ikṣvaku dynasty. This King was a scholar in economics and administration. (Prabhāsāyana, 10, 29).

Rusabhānu. Wife of Hitunyākṣa, an asura. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

Rusadratha. A King of the Asura family. He was the son of Tirikṣu and the father of Pāla, a member of the line of Vyāsa’s disciples. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

Rusadrū. A King in ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Saḥā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 19, that this King stays in the palace of Yama.

Rusama. A Priest who had studied the Vedas well. A story occurs in the ‘Pañcavīṁśābrāhmana’, about this priest.

Once Indra and Rusamā bet on going round the world. Both got ready and started. But Rusamā walked round Kurukṣetra and returned, while Indra travelled the whole of the way round the world and kept the conditions. The question arose as to who won the bet. The devas gave the decision, “Kurukṣetra is the dāl of Brahma, and so Kurukṣetra contains the entire world. Therefore both Indra and Rusamā were declared to have won the bet.”

Rusāgni. An ancient hermit. Once the great hermit Arṣīṣṭha came to the hermitage of Rusāgni and did severe penance. Vīśvānirīta obtained Brahmaṇanvata (Brahminhood) by doing penance in this place. Towards the end of his life Rusāgni and his son came to Prāḍūka-kūrada and sang laudatory songs about Prāḍūka-kūrada. Rusāgni said that those who did penance and died in this holy bath would not have to undergo miseries after death. (M.B. Saṭyā Parva, Chapter 39, Stanza 24).

Rusāndhikā. A wicked King of the Sāurikā dynasty. Mention is made about this King in Mahābhārata, Yuddha Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 14.

Ruyyaka (Rucika). A Sanskrit playwright who lived in the 12th century. He has been called ‘Ruyyaka’ also. The book of criticism called ‘Aalakāravasa’ is written by him. He was the teacher of Manthaka, the author of ‘Srīkanthacariya’. Some are of opinion that Ruyyaka had written only the Sūtras in the book ‘Aalakāravasa’ and that the gloss or commentary was given by Manthaka. Some of the other works of Rucika are Sahitya-dalal, Aalakāravasa etc.

S

Sā (S). The letter Sā means to lie down and also Sarikāra. ‘Sā’ means comfort or happiness. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

Sā (N). Sā means noble, subline. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

Sāhi. The sound ‘Sā’ means indirect; ‘Sā, Lakṣmi (Goddess of wealth and prosperity) and ‘sā’ means hair. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

Sābala. A nāga born to Kṛṣṇa’s father to his wife Kadrī. (Adi Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 7).

Sābalāsva. I. The thousand sons born to Dakṣa of his wife Vājra, are known as Sābalāsva. To procreate man-kind Dakṣa first created five hundred sons by his wife Aśikī and named them Harya-vas. Dakṣa had to create the Sābalāsva as the Harya vas were misled by Nārada. But, Nārada approached and told the Sābalāsva also that it was not correct on their part to procreate children before they were married.

Believing Nārada’s advice the Sābalāsva also set out to measure the extent of the earth and they have not yet returned. Because of this Brahma cursed that Nārada, instead of living at one place, should always be on the move. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 13).

Sābalāsva II. A King born in the dynasty of King Kuruv. His father, Aśikī, was the grandson of King Kuruv. Aśikī had, besides Sābalāsva, seven sons called Parikṣit, Adhirāja Viṣṭa, Sāmala, Ucāśikāravas, Bhāgikār and Jitār. (Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 52).
Ayyappan’s departure made the King sad and very restless in mind. After giving all his immovable property to the King, followed Ayappan to Kerala, taking all his ornaments, jars and other utensils, and came at last to Pambalam. This region of Kerala was then in the control of a petty Chieftain called Kaippurtha Tampän. The King of Madura purchased some land from the Tampän, put up a palace there and lived therein with the members of his family.

Ayappavan on his way back to Kerala met Paratram, who told the former that he had already, for the protection of Kerala, installed on mountains and the sea-coast idols of his (Ayappavan) and that he would install another idol of Ayappan at Sabarimala where they had now met each other. From that day onwards Ayappavan took his abode there.

One of those days the Pandyian king living at Pambalam had a dream, and in that dream Ayappavan appeared and told him that he (Ayappan) was living at Sabarimala and the King might meet the Svami if he went there. The next day morning the King with his retinue started for Sabarimala. At Sabarimala the King got the forest cleared and made a search of the ground where he found an idol installed by Paratram. The King immediately went there and installed the idol of Ayappavan therein. He also got necessary purificatory ceremonies conducted in the temple by the famous tantris (high priests) Tazhaman. A routine programme for the conduct of affairs in the temple was fixed. As it was difficult for men to live in the forest infested by wild beasts and conduct puja etc. daily, it was fixed that puja need be conducted only five days in every month and that Makaravltrathi should be the annual festival day. From the first of Makaram (January) for five days it was to be utsava with the deity led in procession. On the fifth of Makaram every year a ‘Kalaham’ and on the seventh day a ‘guruti’ also were ordained.

On the annual festival day the temple priest, the senior priest, the tuksadas and other employees of Sabarimala carrying with them rice etc. for food and clothing about ‘Svaminyayatanam Ayappan’ (O Lord Ayappan you are our refuge), devotees climb the mountain today also repeating this prayer. (See under Sasta).

SABHANA (SALAKA). See under Dhananjaya V.

SABHANNA. A King of the Bharata Dynasty. He was son of Anandragupta, and the father of Kalamana.

SABHA PARVA. An important section in the Mahabharata. The main theme mentioned in this section is the building of the palace of the Pandavas. (Sabha = palace).

SABHAPATI. A prince who took the side of the Kauravas and fought against the Pandavas. Mention is made in Mahabharata, Katha Parva, Chapter 89, Stanza 64, that the prince was killed by Arjuna.

SACI. Daughter of Polomô and wife of Indra. The following information about Saci is gathered from the Mahabharastra.

1. It was said an ascetic of Saci that Panchali, daughter of King Dhupada was born. (Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 133).

2. Saci is seated on the best throne in the assembly of Devas in the court of Indra. (Sabha Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 4).

3. She worships Brahma also in his court. (Sabha Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 42).

4. It was Saci, queen of Indra, who took Sri Kripa and Satyabhama, during their visit to Devaloka to the Devanâtā. (mother of Devas). (Sabha Parva, Daksinapâthha, Chapter 38).

5. When Indra, afflicted by Brahmâyâya, hid himself away from Devaloka Saci was kept under the protection of Bhargapi. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 200).

6. While he was made Indra, Nahuşa wanted to take Saci for wife and she tried hard not to fall into his clutches. (See under Nahuşa).

7. Saci was present at the birth of Subrahmanyâ. (Salaya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 13).

SADACAARA (Good conduct).

1. General information. Each country has good customary practices of its own. A man with good habits or behaviour is considered as having conquered the two worlds. The sound ‘Sat’ denotes ‘Sadhus’. Sadhus are those who are without any bad conduct or behaviour. The habits and practices of the Sadhus are called Sadacaara. The Saparajis (the seven hermits), the Prajaspatis (lords of all creatures) and Manus (the fathers of men), were careful to keep up the good practices. Once the hermit Auvra advised Sagara, what the good usages of the people of Bharata ought to be. The laws of good conduct according to hermit Auvra are given below:

2. The passage of excreta and urine. Every one should wake up in the Brahmanubhara (Two hours before dawn). After having risen, he should go to the south west corner of the village or house at a distance of an arrow-shot for stooling and passing urine; should not pour the water used for washing the face and the legs, in the courtyard; should not pass urine in one’s own shadow, or in the shade of a tree, or facing cow, the Sun, fire, wind, teacher and Brahmin. Ploughed fields, fields where grains are ready for harvest, cattle-streets, crossing, path, lakes or the river, and the bird’s nest, are forbidden for stooling or passing urine. When there is no danger, a wise man should pass urine, facing the north in the day and facing south at night. When passing excreta the ground should be covered with grass and his head should be covered with cloth.

3. The conduct of ablation after anointing the cult of nature and rinsing the mouth after meals. Soil such as taken from white ant-hill, ground thrown up by moles or rats, soil at the bottom of water, remainder of soil used by another, soil taken from the wall, soil gathered by worms and flies, ploughed soil etc. should not be used for ablution. By using soil, do the cleansing of the urethra after the anus, thrice, the anus thrice, the hands together, seven times. After this use pure water (in which there is no mud or foam and which has no foul smell) and rinse the mouth. Take soil again and wash the legs with it. Rinse the mouth thrice and wipe the face twice. Then holding water in the hand, touch the apertures in the head such as eye, etc. the crest of the head, both upper arms, navel and heart. With this rinsing take bath. After bath, with the help of a mirror, tie the hair, anoint the eyes with collyrium, and wear flower garlands etc. carefully. Bathing should be done in river, rivulet, lake, jungle-stream, mountain or holy bath (tirtha), or draw water from the well and bathe there or carry well-water home and bathe there. After, let the bath be put on clean skirts. Then take some water in the hand, offer it as oblation to gods, sages, and the manes with care. Throw water thrice for the blessing of the gods and hermits and to Prajapati once, as ordained. In the same way, to the manes and the great ancestors also give oblation of water thrice. After so much is done do the customary sacrificial offerings, prayer etc. to Devi. Then invite guests to the house and welcome them. (Visnu Purana, Anita 3, Chapter 11).

SADAJIT. A king of the dynasty of Bharata. He was the son of Kunti and the father of Mahismān. (Bhagavata, Skandha 9).

SADAPATI. A river in India, Purānically very famous. Mention is made of this river in Mahābhārata, Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 25.

SADARSHA. A river in India very famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made of this river in Mahābhārata, Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 204. Some scholars are of opinion that this river is the same as the Karatovī of Modern India.

SADARSHAKA. Six sons of Marici. Subjected to a curse by many rishis and ultimately they resumed their old forms as children of Devaki. (For details see under Karita, Para 2).

SADASVA. A king of ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 12, that this king reigned in the palace of Yama, glorifying him.

SADASVYOMI. A king. He is a worshipper of Yama. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 11).

SADGUVI. The six qualities or attributes of Bhagavān (God). Avijñāya (providence), Viryam (power), Varāgyam (non-attachment or renunciation), Vijnānam (super-knowledge), Śrī (wealth and prosperity) and Yakṣā (fame, reputation) are the six attributes of Bhagavān.

SADGUVI I. Six kingly or political policies. Sandhi, Vighraha, Yudhya, Asana, Dvaita and Āsraya are the six policies of statecraft. (Manusmriti, Chapter 8, Verse 160).

1) Sandhi. To enter into peace and accord with the enemy is Sandhi. One may make peace for one’s own benefit with the enemy, who is powerful and is fighting. There are sixteen kinds of sandhi called Kapālasandhi, etc. No kind of peace or truce should be made with twenty kinds of kings, i.e. infants; old men; one suffering from chronic diseases; cast out by one’s own people; coward; one whose supporters are cowards; miser; one whose people are misers, who is very much addicted to women and such other material things; one, who has not a mind of one’s own and is ruled by more than one adviser; he, who does not respect Devas and brahmans; one hated or forsaken by God; blunderer; one subject to scarcity and sorrow, one not with satisfactory army; local person; one with many enemies; one whose days are numbered and one devoid of truth and righteousness. One shall only fight and not enter into peace with the above types of people.

2. Vighraha. Fighting, i.e. war is vighraha. War is the failure of moral evil-things. The king, who desires prosperity who is troubled by others and in whose favour and circumstances are, should go in for war. The main causes of war are the following:

- the desire to capture kingdom, woman, position etc. by violence and impropriety, obstruction to duties and rights, the interest of friends and allies, destruction to one’s allies, both parties getting interested in one and the same thing etc. Enmity is engendered chiefly due to the following causes: rivalry of co-wives, disputes about property and women, verbal controversies and wrongs committed. The following kinds of wars should not be fought: Wars of the benefit of which is meagre or futile; wars which would cause harm to the present as also in future; with the enemy whose strength is not correctly known; united by others, for others, on account of women, which would continue for long; with brahmans, where time and fate are not in favour, with him, who has powerful allies, though of temporary advantage but which will not be so in future; through advantage in future but menace at present.

The king should always do what will be of advantage at present as also in future. If one’s own army is strong and enthusiastic and when the army of the adversary is not so, one may go in for war. Also, when all circumstances are in one’s favour and against the antagonist one may fight.

3) Yudhya. Yudhya means marching for war. One may start for war after declaring it, after making peace, after making alliances; and incidentally also.

4) Āsraya. To remain quiet or doing nothing which is also of four kinds as yudhya.

5) Dvaita. To get in between the contending parties and support with words only and to remain without joining either side is dvaita. He who takes up the stand of one, must make peace, after making alliances; and incidentally also.

6) Āsraya. When one is attacked by a stronger enemy and if one finds no means to retaliate, one should depend upon another person, who is noble, truthful and powerful. To put on a surplice’s cloak, to understand the moods of that person whose help is sought and to be humble to him—these are the characteristics and traits of the dependent. (Agni Purana, Chapter 240).

SADHU. An incarnation of Siva. The Brahmāndā Purāṇa contains the following story about it. When the Himalayas and Manaka mountains once began a very intense tapas, the Devas and Rājas fearing great ruin to the world in case the mountains got salvation, sought Siva’s protection and prayed for a solution for the problem. So Siva, in the guise of a brahman named Sādhya, went to the mountains, spoke to them condemning Siva and thus made them retract from their devotion to Siva.

SADHYA. Mother of the Sādhyas (See under Sādhyas).

SADHYA (S). 1. General. A Gana-devata. These Devatās often used to play an important role in Purānic movements and incidents. The Sādhyas were born from the seed Virāt Purāṇa. (Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 35). But according to Visnu Purāṇa (Part I, Chapter 35), the Sādhyas were the grand-children of Prajapati. One of the granddaughters of the Prajapati by his wife Asikni, ten were married by Dharmadeva; the Viśdevas were the sons of Dharmadeva by his wife Viśā and the Sādhyas were his sons by Sādhyā.

ŚĀDIYASKA, A yajña ordained for Rājakṣas. It could be performed in one day. (Vana Parva, Chapter 204, Verse 16).

SAGARA. A king of the solar dynasty, Sagara ruled Ayodhya.

1) Geemayaj. Descended from Brahma thus: Brahma-śatya-

Vāivasvan-Vaivasvata Manu-Ikṣvaku - Viśvāsa - Sū-pujaya-

Kākūtasa-Anenaḥ-Puruṣhūti Va-Pusenja-

-Vivasvāna-Mādhūta - Purukutsu - Šrutakṣya-śatya - Aryanaya-

Aryavatā - Satvasūta - Taryayu - Saivasvānuma -

Yasvantuva - Trisākara - Harīcandra - Rohitāsāva-Subhā-

Cucul - Sarvadeva-Śbrukha-Śbhu-Śagara.

2) Bāṅkhu, father of Sagara, was known as Subha also. Sagara was Bāṅkha’s son by his wife, Yaśa (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 16). Though Sagara was a prince he was born at the Aṭrama of Aurva, and there was a reason for it.

Subhā and Yādavī did not have a child for long. But, as a result of many yajñas conducted for the gift of a child, Yādavī conceived. While she was in the seventh month of her pregnancy her elder wife administered poison to her with the result that she did not further advance in pregnancy and deliver in due time. Thus she continued as a pregnant woman for seven years. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 16). The King became an old man.

During this period Tālajāñika, king of Hēcaya, attacked Ayodhya with his army, and Subhā, despite his old age, fought back. But the fighting grew fiercer.

Subhā found that he would not be able to defeat

Tālajāñika and so he escaped into the forest with his wife Yādavī. They took shelter in the Śānaka of sage Aurva. Subhā expired there due to old age and Yādavī got ready to follow him in his pyre. The Muni prevented her from doing so by pointing out to her that the child in her womb was a very fortunate one and would become emperor of the seven islands when he grew up to manhood. Yādavī delivered shortly. As the poison (gara) given to her by the co-wife had imbued with her pregnancy it, so long Aurva named her child Sagara. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 16 and 17).

3) To Ayodhya. Sage Aurva conducted the Upaṇayana ceremony of the boy and taught him the Vedas etc.

Once Yādavī went to hear the boy address the muni

‘father’, and when the son asked her the reason for it she told him that the muni was not his father, who was really greater than the muni. She also told him their previous history, and Sagara decided to return to Ayodhya somehow.

The people of Ayodhya lived scattered here and there in fear of Tālajāñika, and disgusted with such an existence, they came together and took refuge with Vaśistha, who told them that king Subhā had expired in Aurva’s house, but that his son Sagara was there in the Śānaka. He further advised them to bring Sagara back and reconquer Ayodhya. Yādavī wept at the sight of the people from Ayodhya and they insisted uppon Sagara’s return to the state as their king. They waited in the Śānaka for five days for Sagara. Then Sagara and his mother, with the blessings of the Sage, returned to Ayodhya along with the people. Sagara fought Tālajāñika, reconquered Ayodhya and crowned himself as king. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 20 to 23).

4) Family life. Sagara had two wives called Sumati alias Vīlārabhi and Keśini alias Subhāya. Sumati was the daughter of Garuda.

As he had no issues for long, Sagara, with his wives, went to Himālayas and began doing tāpas at Bhūgrapra-rava mountain. After hundred years Bhūgrī appeared and blessed Sagara that one of his wives would give birth to 60,000 sons and the other to one, who would add to the glory of the dynasty. Sumati chose 60,000 sons and Keśini the one son.

The king and the queens returned to Ayodhya and in due course Sumati delivered the son called Asamaṇja who was to bring prosperity to the dynasty. Sumati gave birth to a lump of flesh, which developed into 60,000 children. They were put in pots of ghee and they grew up to become young persons. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākanda, Canto 33).

Some Purāṇas contain stories somewhat different from the above about the birth of the 60,000 children.

e.g. in the 9th Śrīānanda of Devī Bhāgavata, the story is related as follows: "Keśini delivered the son

Asamaṇja and Sumati did not deliver at all. So she did tāpas for Śiva for children and because of his blessing the conceived. Sumati delivered only hundred years after continuing to be pregnant, and even that was only a piece of flesh, and she began weeping add-resing Śiva, who appeared before her and cut the mass of flesh into 60,000 parts. Each piece of flesh transformed itself into a very powerful and effulgent man."

(6) He defeated Virāṭa, the Matsya king in battle. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 2).

(7) He conquered the southern kingdom on the orders of Yudhīṣṭhīra. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30).

(8) He defeated Damuṅavatīra in battle. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 59).

(9) He defeated Nila, king of Māhīśmati, in a fierce battle and collected taxes from him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 59).

(10) He departed Ghaṭotkaca to collect taxes from Vībhīṣana, king of Lanka. Vībhīṣana sent Ghaṭotkaca back with a lot of gold and gems. Vībhīṣana also gave 80,000 Rākṣasaś to carry the gold etc. (Sabhā Parva, Southern text, Chapter 31).

(11) He was Yudhīṣṭhīra's minister during the Rājaśāya yajña. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 40).

(12) After the yajña was over, he conducted Droṇa and Āśvatthāmā back to their palaces. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 48).

(13) He took the vow that he would kill Śākyuni. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 77, Verse 9).

(14) In the battle that followed the abduction of Draupadi by Jayadratha, the chariot of Yudhīṣṭhīra went out of action and he, therefore, rode in the chariot of Sahadeva. (Yana Parva, Chapter 271, Verse 15).

(15) During his life-incognito he thought of assuming the name Tārīppāla. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 9).

(16) He went to king Virāṭa disguised as Vaiśyá called Arjanaśī and got himself appointed as head of the king's dairy. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 5).

(17) He, in the guise of a dairyman, used to give milk, butter-milk etc to the Pāṇḍavas. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 9).

(18) Sahājayā emphasized the fact that Sahadeva was a heroic warrior to Bhīma. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 31).

(19) When Yudhīṣṭhīra, during the great war, divested himself of his armour and started towards the Kaurava army, Sahadeva questioned the action. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 19).

(20) On the first day of the battle he fought a duel with Durmuṅa. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 25).

(21) He defeated Vikarna, Śāliya and others in the battle. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 83).

(22) He annihilated the cavalry of the Kauravas. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 89, Verse 32).

(23) He ran away from the battle-field. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 16).

(24) He fought a duel with Kṛpaśārya. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 12).

(25) He fought with Śgkuni. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 22).

(26) He fought again with Durmuṅa. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 13).

(27) He killed Nirudita, the Trigarta prince. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 107, Verse 29).

(28) In the fight with Karna he got defeated. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 187, Verse 15).

(29) He defeated Duṣṭāsana in battle. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 188, Verse 2).

(30) When Śāyana was about to kill Dharmaṅyama, he pacified the former by a tactful speech. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 198, Verse 53).

(31) He defeated Paṇḍurāja. (Karna Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 14).

(32) He defeated Duṣṭāsana again. (Karna Parva, Chapter 23).

(33) He got wounded in the fighting with Duryodhana. (Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 7).

(34) He defeated Ulīka. (Karna Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 43).

(35) He killed Śāla's son. (Śālya Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 43).

(36) He killed Ulīka, son of Śakuni. (Śālya Parva, Chapter 28, Verse 32).

(37) He killed Śakuni. (Śālya Parva, Chapter 28, Verse 45).

(38) After the war, Yudhīṣṭhīra allotted Durmukha's palace to Sahadeva. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 12).

(39) In the matter of dharmārthabāms (righteousness, material wealth and enjoyment of love life) he attached more importance to artha (material resources). (Śanti Parva, Chapter 167, Verse 22).

(40) During the Rājaśāya the duty of managing domestic affairs was entrusted to him by Vyāsa and Yudhīṣṭhīra. (Ātvamedhā Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 20).

(41) After the great war he visited and saluted Kuntī, who lived in the forest then. (Ātramavāsikā Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 8).

(42) In the great journey (Mahāprāṇāhāna) he walked in front of Pāñcāli and behind Nakula. (Mahāprāṇāhāna Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 31).

(43) Synonyms used in Mahābhārata for Sahadeva: Āśvīneya, Āśvīnīsūta, Bharatāsādhulī, Bharatāsādāma, Kauravya, Kuṇmandana, Madrīputra, Mādreyā, Nakulānāja, Paṇḍava, Paṇḍunandana, Tārīppāla, Yama, Yamaśīta.

SAHADEVA II. A mahārṣi, who lived in the court of Indra. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 16).

SAHADEVA III. A king in ancient Indra. He lived in the court of Yama worshipping the latter. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 17).

SAHADEVA IV. A son of Jāriśandha about whom the following facts are collected from the Mahābhārata:

(1) Asī and Yāşū, two wives, of Karna were the sisters of this Sahadeva. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 31).

(2) He was present at the wedding of Draupadi. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 183, Verse 6).

SAHAJA. A Ceti King. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 16).

SAHAJANYA. An aśārā woman. The following information about her occurs in the Mahabharata:
1) She is one of the six noble celestial girls, the other five being Urvāsi, Pārvatī, Menākā, Ghrūcī and Vivācī. (Adi Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 69).
2) She was present at the Birthday Celebrations of Arjuna. (Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 64).
3) She is an actress in Kuhera’s court. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 11).
4) Sahajanyā was among the celestial women who danced when Arjuna came to Devaloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 30).

SAHAJITI. A King of the Bharata dynasty. He was one of the sons of Mahībhoja. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SAHASRAVAHU. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. (Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 59).

SAHASRACITYA. Grandfather of King Sātayājīpa. Sahasracitya was King of Kekaya. A very righteous person, he abdicated the throne in favour of his elder brother’s son and performed tapas in the forest. He gave up his body for a brahmin and attained heaven. (Aucśāsana Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 29; Aṛama-nanda Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 7).

SAHASRAJAJIT. A King of the Bharata dynasty, Sahasra-jit was a son of Mahībhoja. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9). He gave up his life for brahmins and attained heaven. (Sāntī Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 31).

SAHASRAJYOTI. One of the three sons of King Śrāvaṇa. He had a million sons. (Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 46).

SAHASRAKA. A holy place of pilgrimage. This place is situated in Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahībhoja, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 158, that those who bathe in this place will get the merit of giving thousand cows as gifts.

SAHASRAMUKHARAṆA. 1) General. A Dāsiya King, who ruled Trilokapūrī, a country thousands of miles away from India. Trilokapūrī was an island at the centre of the seas. He was a terror to the whole world and possessed a thousand heads and two thousand hands.
2) Secured boon. This Rāvaṇa once went to Satyaloka and performed the most intense tapas for many years. Yet, Brahmā did not appear and then he began cutting his heads one after the other and offering them in the fire. Nine hundred and ninetynine of his heads were cut thus. When he was about to cut the last head also, Brahmā, fearing the end of the world, appeared and granted him the following three boons:
   (i) You will not die at the hands of anyone, but a woman.
   (ii) Brahmāstra, which would annihilate, will be at your disposal.
   (iii) You will also possess an aerial chariot for travels as you please.

Sahasramukha, who returned to his country with the boon became emperor of all Dāsiyas and then conquered heaven, Paśūna, Kailāsa, Vaikuntha and the eight regions of the world.

He then defeated Pātālalāraṇa and wedded his only daughter Indumukha. He got as a present a weapon called Kṣapaharkūhāra. He propagated in the world the customs and practices of heaven with the result that all the customs of the Dāsiyas were derogated. Good people felt harassed. In the rise of unrighteousness righteousness became helpless.

3) Curse. Once on his way to his father-in-law’s house Sahasramukharaṇa raped a Vidyādhara woman, Cācukākṣī, who was performing tapas of Laksan-devī and Cācukākṣī cursed him that Laksan-devi would kill him.

4) Son. Vajrabhū was Sahasramukha’s son. He secured from Śiva Pāṭālapātra and an armoured impenetrable by anyone. Vajrabhū captured Indra and Subrahmanya killed the former.

5) Death. Sahasramukha had an army-chief named Bāna and both of them together did incalculable harm to the three worlds. Śrī Rāma was King of Ayodhyā at the time, and Deva and sages complained to him about Sahasramukha and as soon as the complaint, Bāna left Ayodhyā, Sugriva and Vībhīṣṇa came there. They told Rāma about the abduction by Sahasramukha’s second son, Candragupta of Sugriva’s daughter and Vībhīṣṇa’s daughter-in-law. At one time Śrī Rāma, along with Laksman, Sugriva, Vībhīṣṇa, Hanumān and a great army of monkeys reached Sahasramukha’s capital city. Śrī Rāma sent word to him through Hanumān that Sugriva’s daughter and Vībhīṣṇa’s daughter-in-law should be returned. Indra should be released and that pardon should be begged for, for his errors. Angered at this message Sahasramukha deputed Bāna to fight Śrī Rāma. Bāna was killed in battle. (See under Bāna IV). Then ensued a fierce battle between Rāma and Sahasramukha, the latter aided by Candragupta. Aigada was about to be overpowerd by Candragupta, and then the following celestial voice was heard: “Candragupta will not die as long as his wife Padmāvat is reciting Brahmaṇastra imparted by Brahmā.” Then Vībhīṣṇa sent Hanumān to the women’s quarters and as a result of the latter using a Kālaśastrayāntra great confusion and quarrels broke out among the women folk, and utilising the opportunity Aigada killed Candragupta.

Sahasramukha fought Śrī Rāma single-handed. All tactics of Rāma proved to be of no use. Then he remembered Brahmā’s boon to Sahasramukha and Cācukākṣī’s curse upon him. Immediately Śrī Rāma took down Sitā from Ayodhyā and the latter shot the Sākṣi arrow at the throat of Sahasramukha and he was killed. (Kamba Rāmāyana, Uttarakanda).

SAHASRANĀMA (N). (Sahasra = thousand; nāma = name).

Hymns containing the thousand names of Viṣṇu, Śiva and Devi are generally known as Sahasranāma. The recitation of these names is considered to be annihilative of all sins. Sahasranāma of Viṣṇu is more popular.

SAHASRANĪKA. A King of the lunar dynasty. (For details see under Udayaṇa).
SAHASRAPĀDA (SAHASRAPĀT).

1) General. A mahārāja, who was transformed into a serpent by the curse of Khasana, another mahārājā. But a talk with King Ruru restored him to his former self. (For details see under Ruru, para 4).
2) Other information. Ruru desired to get some information about serpent yajna from Sahasrapāṭ, who answered the former that he would hear the story of Sahasrapāṭ from Brahmins and then disappeared. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 3).

SAHASRAVĀK (SADAHUSUVĀK). One of the hundred sons of Dhiṣurāṣṭra. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 100).

SAHIṢJU. One of the three sons of Pulaha Prajāpati by his wife Kṣamā, the other two being Kardama and Urvārīkā. (Vivāha Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 10).

SAHODHA. A child conceived by a girl while she was unmarried but delivered after she is married. (See under Putra).

SAHYA. A mountain on the plain of Lavanasamudra (salt sea). Monkeys, in the course of their search for Sitā crossed this mountain, which is one of the sagha-krṣ-striped (seven, greater mountains) in Indiā. Nabhā once picnicked on this mountain along with apsāras women. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 11 and 12; Vana Parva, Chapter 282; Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9).

SAIYĀ I. An ancient King of India. He was the father of Śriyāja and a close friend of Sage Nārada and Sage Parvata. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 7).

SAIYĀ I. King of the Sibi land. Mahābhārata gives the following pieces of information about him:—
(i) Govinda, King of Sibi land was the father-in-law of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 76).
(ii) Sāiẏya adorned Yudhiṣṭhira's assembly. (M.B. Bhāsā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 25).
(iii) Sāiẏya and the King of Kasi had come to Upapāya city with an army and the king of Kasi came to him to attend the marriage of Abhimanyu. (M.B. Viṣṇa Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 16).
(iv) Durvūdhana admitted that Sāiẏya was the greatest archer in the army of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Bhāsā Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 25).
(v) During the Bharata Yuddha, Sāiẏya and the King of Kasi were standing to protect Dhrūḍājyamāna's Krahuśavānyā. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90, Verse 55).
(vi) This Sāiẏya was the grandson of Uṣīnara. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 64).

SAIYĀ III. Name of a horse tied to Śri Kṛṣṇa's chariot. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 20, 22, and 283).

SAIYĀ IV. A Kāśīra hero born in the Vṛṣṇi family. In Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 84, we read that he learnt Dhanurveda (science of archery) from Arjuna and shone in Yudhiṣṭhira's assembly.

SAIYĀ V. A Kāśīra King who was defeated by Śri Kṛṣṇa. There is a reference to this Sāiẏya in Mahābhārata, Dīkṣitāyī Pāthā, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 36.

SAIYĀ VI. A warrior who fought against the Pāṇḍavas on the side of Kaurava. He fought from the Sarvatobhadrayaḥ formed by Bhīṣma. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 99, Verse 2).

SAIYĀ VII. King of Sauvira land. When Jarāsandha invaded Gomata city, Sāiẏya was put in charge of the defence of the western gate of that city. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skanda). His daughter Ratnā married Akṛṭa. (Matsya Purāṇa, Chapter 45, Verse 28).

SAIYĀ I. One of the wives of King Sāgara. Sāgara had two wives named Sumati and Keśi. In Devī Bhāgavata, 9th Skanda we see that Sumati had another name, "Vaidabhi" and Keśi had another name, "Sāiẏya". Prince Asadnājī was the son of Keśi. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 7).

SAIYĀ II. Queen of Śrīyāja, the King of Śrīvṛkṣa. This Sāiẏya was the mother of Śrīyāvaṇ. (See under Śrīyāvaṇ).

SAIYĀ III. One of the wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. When her husband Śrī Kṛṣṇa renounced his body, this Sāiẏya jumped into the fire and was burnt to death. (M.B. Matsya Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 75).

SAIKHĀVATYA. An ancient sage. Ambā who was forsaken by the King of Śrīvṛkṣa went and mourned over her misfortune in Sākhyāvatya's ashrama. This sage consoled her. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 175, Verse 38).

SAILAHA. A Sanātana Vīśvadeva. (M.B. Anuśasanā Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 32).

SAILAKAPAMI. A King of the tribe of Subrahmarya. (M.B. Śrīvṛkṣa Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 63).

SAILALAYA. A King of ancient time. He was the grandfather of Bhagadatta. After performing tapas in the tapovanas at Kurukṣetra he attained Indraloka. (M.B. Āraṇavāsīka Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 10).

SAILODA. A river flowing between the two mountains, Mount and Mandara. Arjuna conquered and subdued the low class people who inhabited the valley of this river. A low-class people known as "Khasas" used to live on the banks of this river under the shade of the dense growth of bamboo trees. These low class people had brought presents of gold to Yudhiṣṭhira's Rāja-śivya. (M.B. Śrīvṛkṣa Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 2).

SAILOSA. A Gandharva. A class of Gandharvas is also known as "Sālīsās". Some references found in the Purāṇas concerning Sālīsās are given below:
(i) Śrī Rāma sent Bharata and completely destroyed the class of Gandharvas called Sālīsās who were causing trouble on the shore of the eastern ocean. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Utara Kāṇḍa).
(ii) During the reign of Śrī Rāma, as ordered by him, Bharata killed with his sword of arrows, the wicked Gandharva named Sālīsā and his three cousins who lived on the banks of the river Śindhu. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 11).
(iii) Rāvana's brother, Vibhīṣaṇa had married Sārāmā the daughter of a Sālīsā Gandharva. (Utara Rāmāyaṇa).
(iv) The Gandharva named Sālīsā serves Kubera and remains in Kubera's assembly. (M.B. Śrīvṛkṣa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 26).

SAIMHIKEYA (Ś). The Asuras (Demons) who were the sons of Sinhikā. Two sons named Hiranāyaka and Hiranāyakāsaipu and a daughter named Sinhikā were born to Prajāpati Kasyapa by his wife Dit. Sinhikā was given in marriage to Vipracit. The sons of this couple were known by the same name Sinhikās. Rātā was the first of the Sāmihikeyas. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19). For further details see under Rātā.

SAINDHAVA I. A disciple of the hermit Śaunaka. (See under Gṛuruśandhapa).
SAINDHAVA. A town in India. There is a reference to it in Mahabharata, Bhisma Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 18.

SAKA. A particular sect of people or caste. The following information about the Sakas is gathered from the Mahabharata.

(i) Sakas were born from the breast of Nandini, Vasishtha's cow. (Adi Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 36).

(ii) Bhima, during his triumphal tour of the eastern regions subjugated the Sakas. (Sabbha Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 14).

(iii) Nakula conquered them. (Sabbha Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 14).

(iv) King of the Sakas participated in Yudhishthira's Rajasuya. (Sabbha Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 32).

(v) The Pandavas invited them to take part in the great war. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 15).

(vi) They did along with Sudaksipa, king of Kamartha, service in Duryodhana's army. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 21).

(vii) Sri Krsna once conquered them. (Drona Parva, Chapter 119, Verse 45).

(viii) Karna once defeated them and conquered their country. (Karna Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 18).

(ix) Sakas who were originally K-HTraiyas were demoted as Sudras as they incurred the displeasure and anger of brahmans. (Anutatsana Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 21).

(x) As the Sakas and the Yadavas had helped the Hidaya kings Parasurama, Sagar, and Bhirada defeated them in war and drove them off from the country. (Bhagavata, Navanna Skandha).

SAAKLI. A tree in the Sakta island. The island got the name from this tree. (Bhismaka Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 28).

SAKADVIPA. One of the Sapadavipas (seven islands). Sahjaya once gave Bhartiraya a description of this island. (Bhisma Parva, Chapter 11). Jambudvipa, Plakadvipa, Simaliadvipa, Kusadvipa, Krauskadvipa, Sakadvipa and Puskadavipa are the Sapadvipas. (Devi Bhagavata, 6th Skandha).

SAKALADVIPA. An ancient kingdom referred to in the Puranas. Prajapinidnya, king of this kingdom was defeated by Arjuna. (Sabbha Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 14).

SALKALA. A maharaja in the lineage of gurus (preceptors). (See under Guruparampara). He systematised the Vedashilbas. It was Badarayana-skra, who became later famous as Vedavyasa, who first arranged in systematic order the Vedashilbas. Prominent scholars hold the view that Vyasa lived between 1300-1500 B.C. The sarhita text now popularly systematised by Sakalaya is called Sakalaya-sakhā (Sakalaya branch). Sakalaya is reported to have saved Kasyapa maharaja once. When king Pariksit was cursed that he would die by Taksha's poison Kasyapa started for his court to save the king from the calamity. But, Taksha met him on the way and sent him back laden with presents of gems, ornaments etc. People derided Kasyapa, who on account of covetousness, renounced the duty of saving the king's life and non-cooperated with him in every way. In this contingency Kasyapa sought the help of Sakalaya, who advised the former to bathe in the sacred tirthas in the rivers Godavari and Saraswati. Kasyapa did so and regained his old reputation.

SAKAMBHARI. A sacred place dear to Devi. He, who fasts for three nights here, will derive the same benefit as of eating lettuce (saaka) for twelve years. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 13).

SAKATA. An asura. (See under Krsna, Para 9, Sub Para 2).

SAKATALA. An intelligent minister. (For details see under Vasuvri).

SAKATAYANA. A famous grammarian. He lived before Vasika and Pandini. He is considered to be the author of the well-known text on grammar called 'Unadatraipatsa'. He is referred to as the foremost among the grammarians in the ashadhyahti of Pandini. (Panimisutra, 1, 4, 86 and 87).
ŚAKHA. According to one view Śākha was the younger brother of Subrahmanya while there are others who maintain that he was Subrahmanya’s son. In verse 37, Chapter 44 of Salva Parva it is stated that Śākha was the son of the Vasa Anala and the younger brother of Subrahmanya and that he had two brothers called Vaiśākha and Naigamayya. It is stated in Chapter 15, part 1 of Vīṣṇu Purāṇa as follows: “Āya, Dhrūva, Soma, Dharma, Anila, Agni, Pratīṣṭha and Prabhāsa are the aṣṭa vāyuṣ. Vaitāṇḍa, Śrāma, Śani, and Dvān were sons of Apū. Kaśā, who annihilates the entire world is the son of Dhrūva and Varocas is Soma’s son. Varocas gives people the vital glow. Druva, Hutaḥvatayagāna, Śvāvara, Prāṇa and Varnā were the sons of Dharma by Manoharā. Anila’s wife was Śīva, and two sons, Manojeva and Avijñata were born to the couple. Kumāra, son of Agni was born in Sarasastamba and he had three brothers called Śākha, Vaiśākha and Naigamayya.”

The story about the birth of Śākha is from Taranga 5, Lāvanakalamaka of Kālihitmāsagara: Defeated in battle by Tārākuntra, Indra decided to have no more fight with him and retired to Mount Mahāmeru. Devas and mahājās sought asylum with Subrahmanya, who gave them protection. Indra came to know of it and fought with Subrahmanya feeling that the latter had captured his kingdom. Two sons, Śākha and Vaiśākha were born to the face of Subrahmanya wounded by the Vaiṣṇavūthi of Indra.

ŚAKRA. A synonym of Indra. (See under Indra.)

ŚAKRADEVA. A prince of Kaliṅga, who fought on the Kaurava side in the great war and got killed by Bhīma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 24).

ŚAKRAMUKERIKĀ. A sacred place from very olden days. Those who bathe there will attain heaven. (Vana Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 81).

ŚAKRAVĀP. A village, which lived in a forest near Girivrāja. The forest was near the āśrama of Gauṭama. (Śāhīma Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 9).

ŚAKRĀVARTTA. A holy place. He who worships Devī and the souls of his ancestors here will attain the world. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 29).

SAIKDORAJA. A rural area in ancient India. (Śāhīma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 66).

ŚAKTA. Son of Manavī, the great-grandson of emperor Puru. Suraśīri was his mother. He had two brothers called Sambhaṇana and Viṣṇi, both of them great in warfare. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 7).

ŚAKTI I.
(1) General. Son of Vasiṣṭha by Arundhati. He was the first-born among the hundred sons of Vasiṣṭha. Kalmāśapāda, the Rākṣasa captured and ate Śākta and his pregnant wife Ādityaṇī spent her days in great grief with Vasiṣṭha. Parāśaramuni, father of Viṣṇu, was Ādityaṇī’s son. (For details see under Ādityaṇī).

2) Other information
(i) It was Śiva, who incarnated himself as the son of Vasiṣṭha.

(ii) Gopāyana, Bharadvāja, Āparānta and Arjuna belong to the line of disciples of Śākta. (Vaiṣṇava Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

ŚAKTI II. The weapon of Subrahmanya is called Śākta, and it was made by Viśvakarman. Viśvakarman once grilled Śūrya (sun) on his machine and reduced his glory. The glow thus released by Viśvakarman fell on the earth and Viśvakarman made with that glow the caṅkha (disc) of Viṣṇu, the triśūla (trident) of Śiva the Pusapaka, an aerial chariot of Kubera and the Śākta of Subrahmanya. (Vīṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 2).

ŚAKTI III. The sound Ś means welfare or prosperity and aśī means great. Therefore Śākta means he, who is the embodiment of prosperity and prowess or she, who grants prosperity and prowess. The definition of ‘Bhagavati’ is, she who combines in herself knowledge, affluence, wealth, reputation, power and the female organ. Therefore the word Śākta may be taken to mean Bhagavati and Parvati, and what are termed as Bhagavati, Śākta, Devī, Ambikā, Pārvatī etc. are manifestations of Śiva, Śiva’s spouse. This Śākta exists fractionally in all Devas. When, once upon a time the devānura war broke out the Śaktis of Devas like Bhrāmaṇa emerged to help Candaṭkā. The vehicle, ornaments, weapon etc. of each Deva, his Devi also possessed. The Śaktis (Devis) of the Devas appeared in the following manner. Bhrāmā, wife of Bhrāma, rode on the swan wearing beads around her neck and holding the water-vessel in her hands. She was followed by Viṣṇu’s Śākta on Garuḍa wearing yellow clothes and with the conch, disc, lotus etc. in her hands. Śakti’s Śiva’s Śakti rode on the ox with the crescent moon and serpents as ornaments and holding in her hands the Śula. Kaumāri’s, Subrahmanya’s Śakti rode on Airavata with Śūla in hands. The Śakti called Varāhi in the form of a great boar rode carrying a corpse. Nārasiṃhi’s Śakti took the form of narasimha (half man and half lion). Yāmā, Yama’s śakti, rode on buffalo holding in her hands a long stick. Śaktis called Kauberi and Vatsuvī took their respective forms and in this manner all the Śaktis came to the help of Devī. This light is not only the Devas, but the mother of the universe also. Along with them incarnated on earth Śakānara, who gives saṁti (happiness) to the world and blessed Candaṭkā on the battle-field (Devī Bhāgavata, 5th and 9th Skandhas).

ŚAKTIBHADRĀ. A dramatist in Sanskrit, who lived in the seventh century A.D. He belonged to Chengannur in the Kerala State. He was a disciple of Śāṅkaračārya. The Dramatic composition Ācārya-guḍāmaṇi is his work.

Śakthibhadra, after writing his drama, once read it out to Śāṅkaračārya. As the ācārya was observing silence that day, he made no comments about the drama. Disappointed at this silence of his Guru, the dramatist burnt his work to ashes in fire. When his observance of silence was over, the Guru asked his disciple for the drama. When told about the burning of the drama the ācārya repeated from memory the whole drama. The above legend is widely prevalent in Kerala.

ŚAKUNA (OMENS).
(1) General. In ancient times people in all countries used to consider Śakunas to be harbingers of good or evil things. Today also many people believe in omens. In India
Sakuna had developed as a science even in olden days. A general description about omens, good and bad, according to the Indian concept, is given below.

Mixed grains, back stones, cotton, grass, dried cow dung, charcoal, indigo, one whose head is shaved clean, or whose body is smeared with oil who is naked; flesh eater; iron, dirt, skin, hair of the head, mansa person, cununch, prison, guard, women, who are either carrying or are widows; oil cake, paddy husk, ashes, skull, bone, broken vessel etc. are evil omens. Broken, fierce or murmuring instrumental music also is a bad omen.

It is a good omen to hear the voice of beckoning (come) in front of the traveller, but it is not good if the voice is heard behind. It is good if the voice of farewell (go) is heard behind, but is bad to be heard in the front. Disapproving or prohibitive words like “Where are you going, stop, don’t go”, “what is to be done by going, etc. will cause death. It is a bad omen to see carnivorous beasts on the road of flagstaff etc.

For vehicles to bump, weapons to break and head to get wounded by dusting against doors etc. as also for umbrella or clothes to fall down are ill omens. Praying or worshipping Visnu will do away with the inauspicious results of ill omens. But, if evil omens are seen continuously the traveller should return home.

While good omens are seen the places are safe, but evil omens are seen continuously the traveller should return home.

2) Two kinds of omens. Omens are divided into two varieties, diptha (glowing) and shanta (quiescent, mild). Glowing omens bring about auspicious results and the other is inauspicious results. There are six ways or elements, which make omens or omens, i.e. velar (time), dik (region), dina (place), Karna (action) and jatu (kind).

The power of effect of diptha increases in ascending order.

To see creatures, which move about during day time as moving about during night and vice-versa is veladiptha. In the case of stars, lagna (the dominant zodiac) and planets, those which are virulent are considered to be dipthas. With regard to stars and lagna, those which the Sun enters are auspicious, those where the Sun is already present are jvalana and those from which the Sun has left are Am arni. These three are dipthas and the rest shantas. (This is called veladiptha.)

When dik (region) is diptha it is called digdiptha. To see forest animals in village and village animals in forest is digdiptha. To see good bramhins at inauspicious places is diptha. To see donkey one does not get ordained to his caste is karanadiptha. To hear different horrible voices is rudadipptha. To see purely flesh eating animals is jadidiptha. If all the characteristics of diptha do not synchronise but differ from one another it is called shanta and if the characteristics of diptha and shanta are mixed up it is called mingadiptha.

3) Birds, etc. If the case of wild crow makes sound when the king gets out of the palace, he will meet with dishonour. If the sound is heard on the left side, there will be quarrel but food will be served. If the bird is sighted on the right side at the start of the journey, it is a good omen. If the peacock makes different sounds, threats from thieves will result. If a deer is seen in front of the king going out on a journey, death will happen to him. To see the monkey, bear, rat, tiger, lion, cat and donkey coming in the opposite direction also will bring about death. Donkey braying in awkward notes is also inauspicious. To see kapitaala bird on the left side is an excellent omen, on the right side also it is not bad. But, behind the person, it is a bad omen. Triton bird also on the rear is not good.

It is always a good omen if the deer, boar and spotted deer cross the path from the left to the right side; the opposite of it is bad omen. It is a favourable omen if the ox, horse, jackal, tiger, lion, cat and donkey pass from the right to the left side. It is auspicious to see the females of the jackal etc. on the right side and the males on the left. To hear the serpent, hare, bear and wild lizard named is good, but to see them is not so. Contrary to this is the effect to see the monkey, ox etc.

The result of the important and powerful omens witnessed at the start of the journey will be experienced the very same day. The omen of the intoxicated, those praying for food, children, people quarrelling and those who stayed away from the limits of the road is effectless. To see the jackal howling in the darkness, or four times is a good omen, but to hear it five or six times is bad. The seventh time is good.

If heard for more than the seventh time it will have no effect. Diptha omens facing the Sun will horribilate men, cause fear in the case of vehicles and is to be greatly feared. If Harisingh (flour, deer, elephant, peacock, cuckoo, lion, horn etc.) is met as the first thing in an auspicious place its good effect will last for one year, and if these are not at the auspicious place, the result will be bad. Everybody should see Harisingh at some auspicious place every day.

If the crow is found crowing in front of the house, the owner of the house will come into possession of wealth; if soil is deposited thus, land will be acquired. If gems are deposited, extensive lands will come to owner of the house. If the crow flies in the same direction as the one chosen by the traveller, prosperity and success will result to him and if it flies in the opposite direction it will not and the traveller not achieve his object but, he will also meet with danger. If the crow come crowing against one starting on a journey, it will be hindered.

To see the crow on the left side is a good omen. If it is seen on the right side, the journey will not end in success. It is very good if the crow flies in the same direction as the traveller on his left side, if on the right side the result will be of medium nature. It it flies in the opposite direction on the left side the traveller will face hindrance. If the crow flies into the house when one is about to start on a journey, it means the journey may be begun. The crow which looks at the sun with one eye and perched on one leg is surely indicative of fear for the traveller. If it is in the hollow of a tree great calamities will happen. To dream of crow with its mouth full of excretion is indicative of all-round success. If the dog enters and barks in the house the result will be sure death of the owner of the house. But, if the dog smells on the left side of the man it is good, and if it smells on the right side, it is bad. If the dogs come against the person about to start on a journey, it will cause hindrance to him. If the dog stands blocking his path there will be threat from thieves. If it comes facing him with a piece of bone in its mouth, he will fail to achieve the object of his travel; if it comes biting a cord, the same will be the result. It is auspicious to see dog, which carries a slipper in its mouth or the mouth of which is filled with flesh. Fear will deliberate him in front of whom the dog urinates and goes away. But if not a bitch and if, after urination, it goes to an auspicious place, to the shade of an auspicious tree or towards an auspicious thing, then it is a good omen. The same considerations are valid in the case of the jackal etc.

If cows cry without cause or reason, it indicates ruin to the owner of the cow. If the cow cries in an awkward tone, death will result. If the ox moans during night, it is good for the master. Ox tied to a cord also is good omen. If cows are found to treat their calves without love, it spells ruin for pregnant women. It is a good omen to see cows which have got wet and whose horns are smeared with earth. These considerations apply to buffaloes as well.

If elephants indulge in the sexual act in villages, it augurs ill to the villages. If the she-elephant delivers or gets mad in the country, i.e. not in the forest, it spells ruin to king. Ruin to the king will be the result if the elephant objects to his mounting or it runs back home or if the mad elephant is found without madness. It is an auspicious omen if the elephant places its right foot on the left foot of it and also if it holds its trunk with its tusk.

SAKUNI I. A scripture born in the Dhararastra dynasty. It was burnt to death at the serpent yajña conducted by Jayamejaya. (Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 16).

SAKUNI II. An asura who was the son of Hiranyaksha and brother of Sambahara, Trimurti, Saikhu and Arya. (Agni Purãna, Chapter 19).

SAKUNI III. A king born in the dynasty of Bharata, son of Dusyantra. Sakuni was Bhimaratha's son and father of Uruddhi. (Bhagavata, Ninth Skanda).

SAKUNI IV. A son of Ukyakû. (For details see under Vishvakarma, Para 2).

SAKUNI V. A maharshi whom were born nine sons called Dushya, Sarla, Budha, Tura, Jyotsmnä, Namoha, Jitakarma, Dhyananakriti, and Gunadhika. The first five of them held household's life while the last four took to Sannyasa even as children. (Padma Purãna, Adi Nîtha, Chapter 31).

SAKUNI VI. The notorious uncle of Duryodhana. Son of King Subala of Gandhara and brother of Gandhâri. Sakuni, staying at Hastinâpura, pulled the strings for all the evil actions of Duryodhana. It was Sakuni's hands, which worked in the background in driving the Pandavas out of the kingdom and in denuding Pàtëllâ of her clothes. It was also his evil tactics, which tore asunder all chances of conciliation with the Pandavas on their return from the forest; and thus led to the great war that lasted for eighteen days. At last he was killed by Sahadeva during the war. (Sahitya Parva, Chapter 28, Verse 61). A resume of the part played by Sakuni in the Bharata story is given below:

1. It was with his help that Duryodhana defeated Dharmaputra in the first game of dice. (Adi Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 50).
2. He was born, due to the anger of the Devas, to destroy righteousness. (Adi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 111).
3. He was Dwâpâra re-born. (Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 78).
4. It was he who took the initiative in marrying Gandhâri to Dhararastra. (Adi Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 15).
5. He was present at the wedding of Draupadi. (Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 2).
6. He once advised Duryodhana to annihilate the Pandavas, root and branch. (Adi Parva, Chapter 199).
7. He was present at the Râjasûya yajña performed by Yudhishthira. (Sahitya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 68).
8. Even after the yajña was over and everyone had departed, he remained there for some time more with Duryodhana. (Sahitya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 68).
9. It was he who first discussed with Dhararastra the question of inviting Dharmaputra for a game of dice so that the wealth of the Pandavas might be extracted from them. (Sahitya Parva, Chapter 49).
10. By foul play he defeated Dharmaputra in the game of dice. (Sahitya Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 61).
11. It was he who cooperated with Duryodhana to invite Dharmaputra again for a game of dice fixing the bets and in defeating him in the game. (Sahitya Parva, Chapter 76, Verse 9).
12. He once prophesied that the Pandavas would not return after their life in forest. (Vana Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 7).
13. While the Pandavas were living in the Dvaita forest Sakuni suggested the need for leading a procession to them. (Vana Parva, Chapter 238, Verse 21).
14. Sakuni and Duryodhana led the procession. In the forest they got wounded in fighting with the Gandharvas and he returned home. (Vana Parva, Chapter 241, Verse 17).
15. Afterwards he once advised Duryodhana to restore the kingdom to the Pandavas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 251, Verse 1).
16. He too participated in the great war and on the first day of the war he fought a duel with Pratihudya. (Nâtapa Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 63).
17. In the battle that followed, Iravân killed five brothers of Sakuni. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 90, Verse 25).
(18) He then fought with Yudhishthira, Nakula and Sahadeva and got defeated. (Bhīṣaṇa Parva, Chapter 105, Verse 8).

(19) He fought with Sahadeva. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 22).

(20) Then Sakuni resorted to certain magical tricks. Arjuna successfully fished the tricks and Sakuni ran away from the battlefield. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 15).

(21) He fought with Abhimanyu. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 5).

(22) He fought with Nakula and Sahadeva. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 21).

(23) He fought with Sātyaki. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 120, Verse 11).

(24) Bhīma killed the seven mahārathis and five brothers of Sakuni. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 22).

(25) Nakula defeated Sakuni. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 143, Verse 16).

(26) He attacked the Pandava army at the instance of Durvodhana. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 170, Verse 66).

(27) Arjuna defeated Sakuni. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 161, Verse 25).

(28) On the death of Droṇānārya Sakuni ran away from the battlefield in great fear. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 19).

(29) In the fight that followed he defeated Śrutatena. (Karna Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 40).

(30) Sakuni was defeated in the fighting with Sātyaki. (Karna Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 48).

(31) In the fight with Bhima he fell down. (Karna Parva, Chapter 77, Verse 65).

(32) In 27th fight he killed the Kalinda prince. (Karna Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 7).

(33) Cavalry of the Pandavas attacked Sakuni and he got wounded. (Salya Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 41).

(34) In the battle that followed Sahadeva killed Sakuni. (Salya Parva, Chapter 28, Verse 61).

(35) After the war was over Vyāsa summoned the sons of the Pandavas to the surface of Gaṅgā and Sakuni's soul was present among them. (Āśrama-vāśika Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 9).

(36) After his death he joined Dvāparā. (Svarga-rūpa Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 21).

(37) Synonyms of Sakuni used in Mahābhārata: Gāndhārapati, Gāndhārājya, Gāndhārāja-vrata, Krīvata, Parvatiya, Supāra, Supāra-vṛtta, Supāra-vṛtta-vrata. (Vana Parva, Chapter 280, Verse 26).

SĀKUNI. A mahārāja, who lived in Madhūv forest. Of the nine sons of Sākuni, Dhrūva, Śiva, Dādha and Tāra were house-holders and agnihotrīs (those who sacrificed offerings in fire). (Padma Purāṇa, Svarga-Śravaṇa 81).

SĀKUNI-GRAHA, Vinādi, in his fierce attitude or aspect known as Sākuni-graha. Brahmītus call it Kāmadanapāram (Vana Parva, Chapter 280, Verse 26).

SĀKUNIKĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā. (Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 15).

SĀKUNA. A son of Viśvāmitra. He was a Vedāntin. (M.B. Anuśādana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 30).

SĀKUNTALĀ. Foster-daughter of sage Kayva. 1) Birth. Sakuntalā was a daughter born to Viśvāmitra, a brahmin, by a nāgini woman named Menakā. Viśvāmitra was engaged in intense tapas on the banks of river Mālinī in the Himālayas. Indra deputed Menakā to break the mahārāja's tapas. She enticed him away from his tapas and got pregnant by him. But she forsook the child on the banks of Mālinī and returned to Devaloka. 2) Childhood. Birds gathered round the forsaken orphan child. While Sakuntalā i.e. birds were petting the child Kaṇva came that way, saw the child and took it with him to the āśrama. As Sakuntalā had petted it, the child was named Sakuntalā. 3) A queen. King Dusyanta of the lunar dynasty married Sakuntalā and to the couple was born the famous Bharata. This is the original story about Sakuntalā's married life. All the Indian languages contain two different versions of Sakuntalā's life. One version is that related in Vyāsa's Bhāratā and the second is that contained in Kalidāsa's Sakuntalā. Many scholars opine that in the matter of the Sakuntalā episode Kalidāsa has gone a step further and for the better, and therefore both the versions of the story are to be carefully studied by us.

(i) Vyāsa's Sakuntalā. Sakuntalā, now grown up as a maiden, was alone in the āśrama when King Dusyanta, out in the forest on a hunting expedition, came there. In the absence of her foster-father Kaṇva, Sakuntalā welcomed the King. They fell in love with each other and the King married her. According to the Gāndharva way of marriage and lived with her for a few days. Sakuntalā became pregnant. The King returned to his palace. Kaṇva returned to the āśrama and he was pleased that what had been desired to take place had happened. In due course of time Sakuntalā delivered a baby, who was named Sarvadamanā. When the child was grown up, Kaṇva sent his mother along with him to Dusyanta's palace. The King did not recognise them, but a celestial voice convinced him that the child was his own son. The King heartily welcomed his wife and son and Sakuntalā lived in the palace as his devoted wife.

(ii) Kalidāsa's Sakuntalā. Kaṇva brought up Sakuntalā born to Viśvāmitra Menakā in his āśrama and she had two companions called Anasūya and Priyadravāti. All the three grew up and became maidens. King Dusyanta, who went out hunting in the forest followed a deer to Kaṇva's āśrama where he saw Sakuntalā watering the garden with her companions. Kaṇva was then away at Gaṇāthrīṣa, Dusyanta, who fell in love with Sakuntalā, married her according to the Gāndharva rules and lived with her at the āśrama for a few days. Meanwhile Sakuntalā became pregnant and emissaries from the palace came and the King returned with them. He left the āśrama after promising Sakuntalā that he would soon return to her. He gave her his signed ring.

Sad over the separation from Dusyanta and immersed in thought about him, Sakuntalā was sitting there in the āśrama when Durvāsas came there. She did not see the mahārāja nor welcome him respectfully. He got angry at this and cursed her that she be forgotten by him about whom she was so intensely thinking. Sakuntalā did not hear the curse either, but her companions who heard it begged pardon of the maṃḍa on behalf of Sakuntalā and prayed for absolution from the curse. Then he said that if Sakuntalā showed the King any sign about their relationship the King would remember her. Her companions did not tell Sakuntalā about the above incidents, Kanya gladly welcomed Sakuntala's wedding with Dushyantha. Days and months passed by, yet Dushyantha did not return and Kanya sent Sakuntala, in whom signs of pregnancy had become prominent, to the palace of the King in the company of Gautami and Saradvarman. Anasuya reminded Sakuntala to take particular care of the signet ring. On their way to the palace, Sakuntala and others bathed in the Somavarnstha, and nobody noticed Sakuntala losing from her finger the ring in the thirtha. They reached the King's palace. None noticed them. Dushyantha did not remember having even seen her. The signet ring was missing. After leaving Sakuntala at the palace, her companions returned to the aśrama. Menakā, whose heart melted at the pathetic wailings of Sakuntala led her to Kasyapa's aśrama, left her there and returned to Devaloka. The signet ring lost by Sakuntala was swallowed by a fish, which was netted by a fisherman, who went about the streets to sell the ring extracted from inside the fish. Servants of the King took the fisherman captive. At the sight of the ring thoughts about the past dawned on the King and he remembered all about Sakuntala. His days became sad pondering over separation from Sakuntala. Sakuntala delivered a boy at the aśrama of Kasyapa. The child was named Sarvasvamana and he grew up as a courageous boy. On his return from the devīśatra war, Dushyantha entered Kasyapa's aśrama and found Sarvasvamana counting the teeth of a lion he had caught. Having heard details about him from the boy, the King went inside the aśrama and saw Kasyapa and Sakuntala. He returned with Sakuntala and the boy to the palace with Kasyapa's blessings. It was this boy Sarvasvamana, who afterwards became Bharata, the famous emperor of Indra.

ŚALĀ I. One of the three pugilists deputed by Karna to attack Kṛṣṇa at Mahācū, the other two being Čāṇḍa and Muniśka. Kṛṣṇa kicked Śala to death (Bhagavata, 10th Skandha).

ŚALĀ II. A serpent born in Vāsuki's dynasty and burnt to death at the serpent yajña of Jānanejaya. (Aḍī Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 5.)

ŚALĀ III. One of the hundred sons of Dīnārāṣṭra. He was killed in the great war by Bhima. (Karna Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 4.)

ŚALĀ IV. Son of Somadatta, a King born in the Kuru dynasty. He had a brother called Bhūrīśvaras. (1) Śala was present at the wedding of Draupadi. (Aḍī Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 15.) (2) He was present at Yudhisṭhira's Rājasūya yajña. (Sahā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 8.) (3) He was a fierce warrior in Duryodhana's army. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 68.) (4) He fought from the southern wing of the great vāyuha set up by Bhima (Shivana Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 57.). (5) He fought with Abhimanyu in the great war. (Drona Parva, Chapter 37.) (6) He was killed by Śrutavarman in the battlefield of Kuruksetra. (Drona Parva, Chapter 108, Verse 10.) (7) He was one among the valiant sons brought to the surface of the Gaṅgā by Vyāsa (Āramavatī Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 10.). (8) After death he became one with the Viśvadevas. (Svarga-roha Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 16.)

ŚALĀ V. Son of King Pariksit of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. Sudobhanā, daughter of the Mandūka King was his mother. He had two brothers called Dala and Bala. Śala did not return some horses, which he had taken as loan from Vāmadeva mahanā. Angered at this the maharṣi created some Rākṣasas, who killed Śala. (Vana Parva, Chapter 192.)

ŚALĀBHA I. An ascetic, son of Kasyapa prajaśatī by his wife Danu. He was born in his next life as Prahśa, the Bāhlika King. (Aḍī Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 30.)

ŚALĀBHA II. A warrior, who fought against the Kauravas on the Pāṇḍava side. He was killed by Karna. (Karna Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 49.)

ŚALĀBHA. Wife of Atrimaharsi. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3, 8; 74-78.)

ŚALĀBHI. A female attendant of Subrahmanyu. (Śiśya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 26.)

ŚALĀGRĀMA. A stone emblem of Viṣṇu.

1) Origin of the name. Sālāgrāma is the kind of amonite, used for making the image of Viṣṇu. Mahāviṣṇu is known by the name Sālāgrāma also. This name originated from the name Sālāgrāma, which is the name of the place from where the river Gandaki, which flows through Nepal, starts. This Sālāgrāma is considered to be a holy place. Mahāviṣṇu and other gods always dwell in this place. Sālāgrāma is the name of Viṣṇu who dwells in Sālāgrāma. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanzas 123 to 125.)

2) The importance of Sālāgrāma. The place Sālāgrāma is at the origin of river Gandaki. There are various kinds of stone figures which are called Sālāgrāmas. These Sālāgrāmas themselves have originated from portions of Viṣṇu. That is why those stones are used for making images of Viṣṇu. There is a story in the Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 9, stating that the derivation of these stones is from a portion of Viṣṇu. During the early days, Sarasvatī, Lakṣāni and Gaṅgā were wives of Mahāviṣṇu. One day there arose a family quarrel among them. (See under Tulasi.) As a result of this quarrel, the Devis cursed each other. Sarasvatī cursed Lakṣāni and changed her to holy basil plant (Tulasi) on the earth. When Lakṣāni was about to depart as Tulasi, Mahāviṣṇu blessed her thus. "Look ! Lakṣāni ! you will live in the world as a holy basil and when the curse has been completed you will come back to me. On that day, a river named Gandaki, will start from your body which will be in the shape of the holy basil plant. (It is also said that the river Gandaki has taken birth from the sweat of Śiva and Viṣṇu. Refer to the word Gandaki) On the bank of that river, I will remain as a stone image. There will be so many worms with strong tusks and teeth, which will pierce the stone into the shape of Sudarśana cakra (the weapon of Viṣṇu) and will create numeberless Sālāgrāmas. The Sālāgrāmas thus made, will be of various sizes and shapes."
SĀLAGRĀMA

(i) Lakṣminārāyaṇa. With one hole, four caikras (wheels) and Vanamallā (a line like the garland) and of the colour of clouds.

(ii) Lakṣminārāyanadāna. This is the same as Lakṣminārāyaṇa, with the difference that there will be no Vanamallā.

(iii) Rāgahātha. With two holes and four wheels and mark of the hoof of a calf. This also will have no Vanamallā.

(iv) Vāmanā. With two very small wheels and the colour of the cloud. This too will have no Vanamallā.

(v) Śrīkara. This is the same as Vāmanā with the exception that it will be having Vanamallā. The house in which this is placed will have a prosperity and well being of its own.

(vi) Bāndhara. Will be large and round with two caikras (wheels) and with no Vanamallā.

(vii) Narārāma. Neither too large nor too small, but of medium size and round, with two wheels and the marks of child's kick, bow and quiver.

(viii) Rājaśeṣṭhara. Of the size of Narārāma with seven caikras, (wheels), ornamented with the mark of umbra. This will earn for the possessed kingly glory.

(ix) Ananta. Somewhat thick with fourteen wheels, and as black as a cloud. This Sālagrāma will give men the four Puruṣārthas (objects of life) 'Dharmārtha-kāmnamoksa' (Duty, wealth, desire and salvation).

(x) Madhusūdana. A sālagrāma in the shape of a wheel with two wheels, and impression of cow's hoof, having the shade of cloud, of ordinary size. This will be very bright.

(xi) Sudarśana. Sudarśana will have only one caikra (wheel).

(xii) Gṛhādikara. This also will be having only one wheel which will not be bright.

(xiii) Hanumā. This will have two wheels and the face of a horse.

(xiv) Nārasimha. With a very wide mouth, two wheels, and awful shape. This Sālagrāma will cause instant self-renunciation.

(xv) Lakṣminārāyanasimha. This also will be having a wide mouth and two wheels. Besides these, there will be the Vanamallā also. This will make house-holders easy and comfortable.

(xvi) Vāsudeva. The Sālagrāma with two wheels at the region of the hole and with round shape having vividness and brightness, is Vāsudeva. This will grant all desires.

(xvii) Pradynma. This will have only a minute wheel. The colour will be that of clouds. But on the outer side, there will be a hole in the inside of which there will be a number of cats or deities. This will give house-holders comfort always.

(xviii) Sankṣarṣana. In the Sankṣarṣana two wheels will be joined face to face. The fore-part will be thinner than the hind-part. This also will do good to house-holders.

(xix) Aniruddha. The colour of this is yellow. This will be quite round and bright. This also will give comfort to the house-holder. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 9; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 46).

4. The greatness of Sālagrāma. Of these, the stones with caikras (the weapon Driscus), are Bhāgavān Viṣṇu in reality. Those who worship this stone with mark of caikra, need not have to take another birth. He who habitually worships Sālagrāma should even renounce gance and should be charitable. He who worships Sālagrāma with the mark of wheel should not covet others' wealth and women. The caikra from Dvārakā and the stone from Gaya will bring atonement in a moment for sins incurred in a hundred births. Even if one has incurred thousands of sins, one will get remis- sion for all of them by worshipping Sālagrāma. The Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra will attain heaven if they become house-holders according to Vedic convention and worship Sālagrāma. On no account should women worship Sālagrāma. If by ignorance, a woman, whether she is good-natured or of a higher status, happens to touch Sālagrāma, all her merits earned by good deeds will be lost and she will go to hell. Brahmān sages say that women throwing flowers as oblation on Sālagrāma, commit the greatest sin. If a woman touches a Sālagrāma, the offering of Sandal-wood will be like poisoned rice, flowers like diamond, and meals presented to god before being eaten by the servants in the temple, will be like Kāla-kūta (the points of Viṣṇu), to Bhāgavān Viṣṇu. If a woman touches Sālagrāma, she will have to remain in hell for the duration of fourteen. Indeed. Even the sin of Brahmāvatya (killing a brahman) will be remitted by drinking the water of Sālagrāma and he will attain heaven. Basil (tulasi) sandal-wood, water, roostin bell, wheel, stone, copper pot, and name of Vrinda comprise 'Pārāśātrī' (the celestial stor of words) which it is power of Sālagrāma ting sins. The merits obtained by bathing in all the tirthas and the performing of all the yāgas (sacri- fices) dwell in each drop of water of Sālagrāma. (Padma Purāṇa, Patākha Khandha, Chapter 20)

ŚALĀKĀ. Wife of maharshi Dhanañjaya, who belonged to Vaiśāya gotra. (For details see under Dhanañjaya)

ŚALĀKAKA. A nāga born in Taksaka's dynasty. It was buried at death at the serpent yāga of Janamejaya. (Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 9).

ŚALISIRAS. A Devagandharva, son of Kasyapaśrījāpati by his wife Muni. He participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 4).

ŚALISŪRYA. A holy spot in Kuruksetra. It is said to have been the place where muni Śaliśāhota lived. To bathe at this place is to derive the same result as that of making a gift of a thousand cows. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 10).

ŚALMALI. A king of the lunar dynasty. He was the grandson of Kuru and son of Avikête. He had seven brothers. (Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 52).

ŚALMALIDYIPA. One of the seven islands.

1) General. Śalmali island, which is double in extent of Pāksa island is surrounded by Iksurasa (sugar-cane juice) ocean on all four sides of it. There are seven mountains there which produce gems and they are seven boundaries which separate the regions. Just like this, there are also seven rivers there. The seven rivers are Yoni, Viṣṇu, Ćandra, MUKTA, Vyoman and Nivrata. More remembrance of the seven rivers is sufficient to annihilate all sins. Here people divided into the four classes. Brahmins, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas and Śūdras here are called Kapilas, Arunas, Piṇa and Kṛṣṇas. These devout people worship Viṣṇu in the form of Viṣṇu by sublime yajñas. Devas are ever present on this most beautiful island. A tree named Śalmali tree gives mental comfort grows in this island. The island is surrounded on all four sides by an ocean of Sūri (liquor). (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part II, Chapter 4).

2) Śalmali island and nāgasthra. See under Nāgasthra.

ŚALOKINI. A sacred place in Kuruksetra. To bathe in the DŚāvatrīha there, is to derive the same benefit as performing ten āsāmedhas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 15).

ŚALVA 1.

1) General information. The lover of Ambā (q.v) the daughter of the King of Kāśi. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 16 that this Kṣatriya King Śalva was born from a portion of Ajaṅka the younger brother of Vyāparārāja.

2) Other details.

(i) Śalva was the ruler of the city named Saubha, Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 102, Verse 61.

(ii) He was present at the Śvayamvara marriage of Draupadi. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 106 Verse 15).

(iii) He was present at the sacrifice of Royal consecration (Nāgaśāra) of Yudhīṣṭhira. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 9).

(iv) At the death of Śānopila, King Śalva became angry and besieged Drārakī. In the battle which followed Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Śalva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 15 to 22).

(v) Śalva had several friends such as Damabhossa, Anīs, Kaliṅga, Mālava, Kekeya, Vaiṣṇa, Mukhaśa, Kosalā, Krikāña, Heḷaya, Cola, Pāṇḍya, Kṛṣṇa and others. (Śhāhvārata, Skanda 10).

ŚALVA II. There is a story in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, stating that three Śalvas and four Madras were born to Bhadrā from the dead body of her husband Vyūtiśāva. (See under Bhadrā II).

Here, Śalva’s name is mentioned of Śalva. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Shañhā Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 26 that the people of Śalva fled to the south in fear of Jarāsandha. Śatyavān, the husband of Śatī, was a native of Śalva. It is also mentioned that the soldiers of Śalva who joined the army of Kauravas fought against the Pāṇḍavas. There were Śalvas on the side of the Pāṇḍavas also. Mention is made in Drona Parva, Chapter 154, that the Śalvas on the side of the Pāṇḍavas, attacked Drona, the teacher.

ŚALVA III. A king of the low castes. The details given below about this king are from Mahābhārata.

(1) This king attacked the vast army of the Pāṇḍavas in the battle-field of Kuruksetra. (M.B. Śalva Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 1).

(2) The elephant of this Śalva was as big as a mountain and belonged to the family of elephants called Mahābhadrā. (Śalva Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 2).

(3) Duryodhana had honoured this low caste King Śalva. (M.B. Śalva Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 2).

(4) Śalyaki killed this king Śalva; and Dhrṣṭadyumna killed his elephant in the battle of Bharata. (M.B. Śalva Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 1).

ŚALVA IV. In Uttara Rāmāyaṇa a Śalva, who was a contemporary of Kusāḍhvajāya, is mentioned. Kusāḍhvajāya once approached this king Śalva and requested for some financial help. But the coveous Śalva did not give any help. So Kusāḍhvajāya performed a sacrifice to obtain wealth and prosperity. Śita was born from that sacrificial fire. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

ŚALVA V. A story occurs in Brahmanḍa Purāṇa, describing how Renuka, the wife of Jamadagni, was infatuated at the sight of a handsome Śalva, and how this event subsequently led to her death. (See under Renukā).

SAMĀDHIṣEṬṬI. A Vaiśya who became learned and abstemious by the grace of Devī. The story of this Vaiśya, who ran away from the cruel and wicked treatment that he had suffered from his wife and children, and took to spiritual knowledge by the force of circumstances was told to Janamejaya by Vyāsa. After telling several stories about the kind regard of Devī towards those who worship her with devotion, Vyāsa continued as follows:—

During the time of Śvārociṣa Manu, there lived a King named Surāchā. Because of his liberality and truthfulness he had very few enemies. While he was ruling over the kingdom known as Kolāpura, once the low caste people of the mountains fought a battle with the King. Though the army of the low castes was small it was the King who sustained defeat. He returned to the palace thoughtful. He had no peace of mind. So he went to the forest to get peace. After traveling for a long time on horse-back, he reached the hermitage of the sage Sumedhas. Forgetting himself in the peaceful stillness of the hermitage, the King got down from the horse and sat under a tree. The hermit Sumedhas came there and talked with the King. The King told his story to the hermit, who invited the King to live with him. Thus the King lived in the hermitage eating fruits, roots etc.

The King found it difficult to reconcile himself with the purity and simplicity of the hermit's surroundings. He always thought of his wife and children. He was troubled in mind by thinking that the money kept in the treasury would be wasted by others. Thus thinking about many things, with a troubled mind, the King was sitting under a tree near the hermitage once when he saw another man coming towards him, with a troubled mind like himself. They talked with each other. The new-comer said to the King "I am a Vaiśya. My name is Samādhiṣeṭṭi. My wife and children love wealth. They want to take possession of your wealth and to waste it. But I was against it. I did not favour unnecessary expenditure. They resolved to remove the obstacle from their path, and began to make preparation for it secretly. I understood it and fearing death I ran away from the house." As soon as the King heard this story he said his own story to the Vaiśya. The Vaiśya continued: "Oh! Still, my mind is troubled. I am worried about my wife and children. They will be put to much difficulty if I am not there to look after them. Who is there to support them without me? All the children are lean. My wife also is likewise, lean. They are all always ill. What will they do without me? While I think of all these things I have no peace of mind at all." Surāchā: "What a fool are you! You yourself have said that all your children are wicked and cruel. Moreover they and their mother joining together had been trying to murder you. Why do you feel so miserable about such a wife and children as that? When the King had finished saying thus much, Sumedhas came there. To remove the darkness of illusion from their minds, the hermit taught them the Nine-lettered Mantra (spell) with prayer and meditation. Thus giving them the mantra, the teacher hermit advised them to go to the bank of the river and select a suitable place and worship Devī with devotion and concentration of mind. Accordingly they went to the bank of the river and waited at your and solitary place, and concentrating their minds on Devī, began to meditate and worship her taking only very little food. Thus engaged in deep meditation they spent two years. One day in a dream Devī appeared to them. She was clad in red clothes, and wore beautiful ornaments. They were full of joy on seeing the goddess. The third year of the penance was over. But Devī did not appear directly before them. In the third year they took only water. They finished the fourth year without seeing the goddess. They decided to do severe penance. Their intention was to offer their bodies to Devī. So they made a triangular cavity, with three parts each having an extension of 1 1/2 ft. and made the walls of the cavity firm and kindled a large fire in it. The King and the Vaiśya began to cut pieces of flesh from their bodies and offered to Devī in the fire, and with the blood coming from the body they performed sacrifice to Devī. Instantly Devī appeared before them and asked them what boon they wanted. The King wanted to get his kingdom back. Devī said: "You return home. Your enemies shall not leave the kingdom. Your ministers shall beg your pardon. You can rule over your country for ten thousand years. After that you will take rebirth as Sāvārni Manu, the son of the Sun."

What Samādhi Cetṭi wished was a life of self-renunciation. Devī gave him the wisdom and knowledge to renounce everything he had and to live a life of complete abstinence. Then Devī disappeared. The King returned to his kingdom and resumed his rule. Cetṭi renounced everything and wandered about immersed in meditation on Devī. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 5).

SĀMAYAPĀLANAPARVĀ
A sub-section of Viśrāma Parva, consisting of Chapter 13 of Viśrāma Parva.

SĀMĀ VA
The son born to Śrī Kṛṣṇa by his wife Jambavati.

1) Birth. A story about the birth of Sāmba, occurs in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 4, as follows:
Children were born to Rukmīni and the other wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. But Jambavati alone did not give birth to children. Jambavati was filled with sadness when she saw the children of her co-wives. One day she went to the presence of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and requested him to give her a son like Pradyumna. Hearing this, Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to the mountain where the hermit Upāanyakū did penance and making the hermit his teacher, according to his advice, did penance before Paramāśvā. He did penance for the period of a month holding a skull and a hermit’s rod. He did penance in the second month, standing only on one leg and drinking water alone. In the third month Kṛṣṇa did penance standing on the toes using only air as food. When the penance was continued for six months in this state, Paramāśvā appeared as Sāmba (Ardhanaśārya) and asked what boon he wanted. Śrī Kṛṣṇa expressed his wish, Śiva said that Jambavati would get a son. Soon Jambavati gave birth to a son. The child was named Sāmba.

2) Marriage. Sāmba married Lakaśā the beautiful daughter of Vṛśabha. Hearing about the Svayamvīra marriage of Lakaśā, Sāmba went to Hastināpura and took her by force from among the various Kings who were present there. Duryodhana and the others captured him. This news reached Dvārakā through Nārada. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadrarāma went to Hastināpura and rescued Sāmba and took the bride and the bridgroom to Dvārakā. Ten sons beginning with Sumitra were born to Sāmba by his wife Lakaśā. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 10).

3) Prabhāvatī abducted. Prabhāvatī was the daughter of Vrajānītha, the King of Supuranagari. Sāmba, with his brother Pradyumna entered the city Supura in the guise of drama-actors with a view to kidnap the beautiful daughter of Vrajānītha. They produced four performances such as ‘Rambhābhīṣṭā’ and three other dramas and earned the praise of everybody in Supura. In this way they got access to the palace of the King, and when the time suited, they took away Prabhāvatī to Dvārakā. (Harivamśa, 2 : 93).

4) The discovery of an iron rod. Once some Yādavas with Sāmba at their head, abused Kaśyapa and some other hermits who came to Dvārakā. They cursed the Yādavas, in consequence of which Sāmba gave birth to an iron pestle, which caused the extermination of the Yādavas. (See under Kṛṣṇa, Para 39, Sub Para 2).

5) The curse of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Sāmba was extremely handsome, and even the wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa fell in love with him. Under the influence of these unhappy feelings he became wicked. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to know of the unnatural attachment between his wives and Sāmba, from Nārada and cursed Sāmba that he would become a leper, and cursed his own wives, that they would be carried away by thieves and plunderers. Accordingly Sāmba became a leper and the wives of Śrī Kṛṣṇa were carried away by the Abhiras, after the submerging of Dvārakā.

After a few years, according to the advice of Nārada, Sāmba began to worship the Sun, at a place called Sāmpapurā in the basin of the river Candrabhāgā, to get recovery from leprosy. A brahmin also was brought from Sukha (Kuda) island to perform the fast and vow correctly. (Sāmba 3; Bhāvīyā Parāva, Brāhma Parva, 65: 72; 73: 125; Ścāndala Parāva 4: 2, 46; 6: 215).

6) Other details.
(i) Sāmba was present at the Svayamvīra marriage of Draupadī. (M.B. Chapter 185, Verse 17).
(ii) Among the Yādavas, who brought the dowry, when Arjuna married Subhadra there was Sāmba also. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 31).
(iii) Sāmba learned Vrāmabhadra’s psalms. After this he was a member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 34).
(iv) Sāmba was one of the seven great chariot-fighters of Dvārakā. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 57).
(v) Sāmba was present at the Rājasūya (royal consecration-sacrifice) of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 16).
(vi) Sāmba was defeated in the battle he fought with Kṣemavṛddhi the minister of Śiva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 80).
(vii) Sāmba killed the aura Vegavān in a battle. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 17).
(viii) Sāmba participated in the marriage of Abhimanu conducted at the city Upālāvaya. (M.B. Virātā Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 22).
(ix) Sāmba came with Śrī Kṛṣṇa to Hastināpura and took part in the Rājasūya of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Ávamedhika Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 3).
SAMBHA II. Two Brahmans were put to death by the firemen, Samba also was killed. (M.B. Maunala Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 44.)

After his death, Samba entered the group of Vivasvanus. (M.B. Svaragrobana Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 16.)

SAMBHA III. A Brahmin scholar, when Bhadrartha started for the forest towards the close of his life, the people bade him farewell. This Brahmin stood among the people and spoke words of consolation. (M.B. A rama Vakaka Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 13.)

SAMBHA IV. An asura.

1) General. Various Puranas refer to this leader of the asuras as having played a prominent part in the devasuras war. After many such wars he was killed by Siva.

2) Sambha's magic power. He possessed marvellous magical powers. Once while fighting with him, the Devas were non-plussed by his magical powers, and they hid themselves in a forest. Sambha was pleased and he roamed about freely without any fear and burnt the palaces of the victors. The Devas left their homes and disappeared in disgrace. The Devas began fighting those whom Sambha had appointed as army-chefs. To counter this attack by the Devas, he created three powerful asuras by his powers of magic. The three asuras called Dama, Vyala and Ghaata began killing the warriors of the Devas, and the Devas told Brahma at Satyaloka about the depredations of the asura. Brahma encouraged them for further fighting, and the three asuras were killed and Sambha ran away and hid himself. (Jnana Sarit Sathi Prakaranam.)

3) Sambha in Rgveda. There are several references to Sambha in the Rgveda. He was King of the Dasyus. He had mastery over hundred cities. The forts and trenches in those cities were very strong. The forts are referred to as Aisvanay, Ayaal, Satadhama etc in the Rgveda. The chief enemies of the Aryanas were the race of people called Pani in the city. There is a hint about the killing of Sambha in Suta 17, Amsa 6, Mandala 1 of the Rgveda.

4) Other information.

(i) Sambha was Kavyaprapratapati's son by his wife Danu.
(ii) Dara, he was at the request of the Devas defeated Sambha in a war fought in Devaloka. (See under Dara, Parva 5.)
(iii) Iron, on another occasion, defeated Sambha. (Amen Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 43.)

SAMBHA II. An asura.

He was the son of Harayaksha and brother of Sakuni. Dvumrtha, Santha and Arya, (Agni Purana, Chapter 17.) Sambha, who was a great adept in magic, was killed in the company of his wife Mayavati, by Pradyumna, the son of Sri Krsna. (See under Pradyumna.)

SAMBHALA (SABHALA, SAMBHALA). A village famed in the Puranas. According to Mahabharata Mahavirapa will stay at Kalki in this village. (For details see under Kalki.)

SAMBHAVA. A King of the Puru dynasty, son of Urja and father of Jarasandha (Agni Purana, Chapter 278.)

SAMBHAVA Parva. A Sub-Parva of Adi Parva (Chapters 65-139.)

SAMBHAVA. A Brahmin scholar. When Bhadrartha started for the forest towards the close of his life, the people bade him farewell. This Brahmin stood among the people and spoke words of consolation. (M.B. A rama Vakaka Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 13.)

SAMBHAVA Parva. A Sub-Parva of Adi Parva (Chapters 65-139.)

SAMBHU I. Dhruva's wife. The couple had two sons called Siiti and Bhavya. (Vigvita Purana, Part I, Chapter 13.)

SAMBHU II. Grandson of Tvasa, son of Kasyapa by Surabhi. Tvasa had a son called Vijayavarna who begot fourteen sons of whom Hara, Balurupa, Tryambaka, Aparajita, Vrkasapati, Sambhu, Kapardi, Mrgavaydha, Sarpa and Kapali. These eleven sons of Vijayavarna form the eight auspicious. (Agni Purana, Chapter 18.)

SAMBHU III. One of the three sons of Ambarsa, the other two being Virupa and Katakam. (Bhagavata, 9th Skandha.) Sambhu never tasted meat in his life. (Amritasa Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 65.)

SAMBHU IV. A Rakshas, the son of Vidyujjha by Surpanakha. Sambhu, who was engaged in tapas in Daydaka forest when Sri Rama visited the forest was attracted by the beauty of Sita and transformed himself into a tree to enjoy her beauty with his eyes. Lakshmana, who was seeking down trees to build an astra felled this tree also, which disappeared immediately leaving behind the dead body of a Rakshas. It was the corpse of the Rakshas and Samba comforted Sita and Lakshmana by revealing the fact to them. (Kamba Ramayana. Aranyakanda.)

Uttara Ramayana contains a story of how Devavati (or Vedavati) daughter of Kuśadvaja once cursed Sambhu. Devavati was born from the mouth of Kuśadvaja (son of Bharpur) at the request of the Vedas. Sambhu wanted to marry the child when she was grown up, but Kuśadvaja did not consent to it, and Sambhu, in retaliation, killed Kuśadvaja in his sleep. Next morning Devavati awoke from sleep to see the dead body of her father. She cursed Sambhu. Her curse was a contributory cause for the death of Sambhu by Lakshmana.

SAMBHU V. An agni, which occupies a status equal to that of a brahmin well-versed in the Vedas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 5.)

SAMBHU VI. Son born to Sri Krsna by Rukminidevi. (Amritasa Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 93.)

SAMBHU VII. A King of the Bharata dynasty. He was one of the eighty sons of Ugrasena. (Bhagavata, 9th Skandha.)

SAMBHUTA. A King, son of Tvasadatta: and father of Anaranya. (Vayu Purana, Chapter 88, Verses 74-75.)

SAMBHUTI I. Wife of Martti, son of Brahma. The couple had a son called Paurnamasa. (Agni Purana, Chapter 20.)

SAMBHUTI II. Wife of Javadvatha. The couple had a son called Vijaya. (Bhagavata, Skandha 9.)

SAMBUKA. A Soudra muni. During the reign of Sri Rama a great number of children died in the country and many parents wept before the king about the loss of their offsprings. According to Vasistha's advice Rama enquired whether anybody indulged in actions not proper to his station in life. Sri Rama surveyed the country from the air in a Vimana, and during the survey he found Sambuka, the Soudra muni hanging with his head down and inhaling smoke from a fire lit under him. Thus, having found out that the tapas by that Soudra was the reason for the children's death, Rama killed Sambhara immediately. (Kamba Rāmāyana, Uturnakabhi)
SAMEDI

SAMEDI. An attendant of Subrahmanyaya. (M B. Sālyā Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 13).

SANGATA (SANGATA). A King of the Maurya dynasty. He was the son of King Suya and the father of King Śalīśhāra. (Śhāyāvarta, Śkanda 12).

SANGAVA (SANGAVA). The supervisor of the cattle-shed of Duryodhana. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Yana Parva, Chapter 228 that this Sangava helped Duryodhana in the fight which ensued at the time of the great procession conducted by the Kauravas, to the Pāṇḍavas in the forest.

SANGHAM (SANGHAM). An organisation formed in olden days for the cultivation of Śentamil (classical Tamil) literature, which took its origin in south Drāvida land in the 4th century B.C. The Paṇḍyas set up three Sanghams for the promotion of this literature, the first one in southern Madura. When the city was swept by erosion of the sea they set up the second Sangham at Kapāṭapura. When Kapāṭapura also was destroyed by the sea, the third Sangham was founded in Drāvida Madura. The first Sangham was called Mut刹那, the second Japavakām and the third one Kataycakām. Reliable information about the first two Sanghams is not available. But, there are reasons to believe that a Sangham called Kataycakām flourished for about six hundred years from 2nd century B.C. to the close of the 4th century A.D. (History of Kerala Literature by Ullār, Part I, Page 47).

The Paṇḍyan King had built at Madura a hall (mandapā) for the poets and scholars of the third Sangham to assemble together to produce their works. Even to this day there exists a temple called Saṅghatārktvāi at the south-western corner of the set of the Sundauretvara temple. There the idols of Sarasvatī and of the forty-four poets of the Sangham are being worshipped even today. The growth and influence of the Buddhist and the Jain religions and also that of the Pallava royal dynasty, contributed to the downfall of the Sangham. The Sangham poets have written many excellent books. According to legends, Agastya in a text on grammar of the first Sangham and Tolkāpyam of the second Sangham. There were authoritative text books on music written by the last poets of the Sangham. But, none of these books has been unearthed yet. Again, references are found to dramas like Muruvāl, Jayantam, etc. They too have not yet been found out. Five mahākāvyas (Epic poems) and five short Kāvyas also belong to Sangham works. Puranānūra, Akanānūra, Pāṭippattu, Ain Kurunūra, Kalūtoči, Kurunūkai, Paṟipāṭai and Naṭṭai are included in the Sangham work called Eṭuttokai. Most of them are collections of many compositions. The authorship of the four hundred songs in Puranānūra is distributed among nearly 160 poets. Ain Kurunūra contains five hundred songs by five poets. These five hundred songs were collected by the scholars: Kōṭi, Tamā, Kapāṭapura, the orders of the Guru, Cera, Marāntumpaṭai. Paṭippattu is a collection of songs composed by ten poets in praise of the Cera Kings. But, only eight of these from two to nine are available yet. Paṭippattu comprised of the following works like Tirumurukāṭuppatāi, etc. Tirukkural, Nāṭiyar etc. are among the eighteen works under the group Paṭippokkānakur, Cilappadikāram, Manumekhalai, Jivakacintāmanai, Kudulakē and Vaṭāiyapāti are the five great Āvāsiva and Nālakesi, Cāyāmanai, Yaṭalakāvya, Nagakumāra-Kāvya and Udakumārakāvya (Udayanarkasi) are the five short (lāghu) Kāvya. Amongst the above Kāvya Manumekhalai and Kudulakē are Buddhī Kāvya and Cintānapāi and the five short Kāvya are Jain works. The last seven books might have been written after the Sangham period. Tirutakatevar, author of Cintānapāi, lived in eighth century A.D. Some of the songs in Puranānūra are the oldest among the works of the Sanghama period. References to Cēra Kings are found in many of these works.

SAMGRAHA. One of the two attendants given to Subrahmanyaya by the sea, the other being Vikrama. (Salva Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 37).

SAMGRĀMAH. One of the ten sons of Śri Kṛṣṇa by his wife Bhadrā. (Vīṣṇu Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 18).

SAMHANA. A King of the Pāṭīra dynasty, grandson of Pāṭī and son of Manasū. Samhana was the son of Manasū by his wife called Saiyovī. (Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 5).

SAMHATĀ. Second wife of Dītrakaṭra. She was the niece of Gāndhārī.

SAMHATAPA. A nagā born in the Aiṇāvā dynasty. It was burnt to ashes at the serpent yajña of Jamanejaya (Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 1).

SAMHITA. Collection of hymns addressed to various Devatas in nature. These songs are in the form of mantras. (See under Vedas).

SAMHITĀKALPA. A section of saṁhītas of Atharva Veda. The five sections of Atharva Veda composed by Jaimalika and called Naksarakalpa, Vedakalpa, Samhitakalpa, Agirmanakalpa and Samhitakalpa are held in great respect. (See under Vedas).

SAMHITĀSVA. A king of the Bhūrg dynasty, grandson of Hāyasva and son of Nikumbha. Renuka, grandson of Samhitāsva and daughter of Prasenajit was married by mahārṣi Jamadagni. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 1).

SAMHLABA (SAMHRLABA). 1. A son of Hiranyakaśipu. Two sons called Hiranyakaśa and Hiranyakaśipu and a daughter called Simhikā were born in Kaṭyānaprapāṅkā as the following by his wife called Diti, and Hiranyakaśipu had four sons called Anurādhā, Hṛṣī, Prahlāda and Samhītra. Samhītra had three sons named Auyunmā, Sibi, and Bākala. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19). According to verse 17, chapter 45 of Adi Parva, Prahlāda, Samhītra, Anurādhā, Sibi and Bākala were the sons of Hiranyakasipu. This Samhīla, in his next life, was born as Sāla, the Bāhlika king.

2) Separation from husband. Samīṇa lacked the power to put up with the heat of Sūrya. She once went into the forest to perform Tapas after deputing her companion, Chāyā, to serve her husband. Samīṇa left her three sons Manu, Yama, and Yami also in the charge of Chāyā, who in the guise of Samīṇa served Sūrya. He took her to be his wife and begot three children, Samāśa, Nāyaka, and Tamapa, of her. Chāyā once got angry and cursed Yama, son of Samīṇa. Then it was that Sūrya realized that she was not his wife. Sūrya felt very sad at this separation from his wife and went to the forest in search of her. He knew, by the power of his meditation, that Samīṇa was doing tapas in the guise of a mate. Then he assumed the form of a boar and begot of the mate the Asvinikumāras and Rāṣṭra. The Asvinikumāras named Nāsita and Dastra were born through the mate (Samīṇa) nose. (Aṇuḍaṇa Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 17).
3) Ramū. Sūrya brought Samīṇa back with him. She complained to her father Viśvakarman, that life with Sūrya was impossible on account of his excessive heat, and so Viśvakarman(group Sūrya on his drumming machine and reduced his heat. But, only 1/8 of the heat (effulgence) could be so reduced, and it was with that fraction of effulgence that Viśnu's disc (cakra), Śiva's trīṭūla (trident), Kubera's pūpakāvama and Subrahmaṇya's Śakti were made. (Viśnu Purāṇa Part 3, Chapter 2; Harivaṇa, Chapter 41 and Bhāvīṣya Purāṇa For details see under Tapātī.)

SANAKĀDI (S). Sanskara, Sanandana, Sanatana and Sanatkumāra, the four Sages. The Sanakādīs are the maternal sons of Brahmā. When they stood in the form of infants they were asked to create subjects. But they were the incarnation of Śaivas, (the attribute of purity), and so were not prepared to undertake creation. Even at the age of four or five the four of them learned the Vedas and travelled together. They were celibates for ever. While the Sanakādīs were travelling thus one day they reached Vaikuṇṭha, and cured Jaya and Vijaya who showed disrespect towards them. (See under Jaya-vijaya).

It is mentioned in some places that the Sanakādīs were the incantations of Mahāviṣṇu. Once Brahmā praised the incantations of Viṣṇu.

It is clear that the Kumāras (Sanakādīs) had taken incarnation before the present Brahmā began the work of creation. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 1; Skanda 7; Bhāgavata, Skanda 1. Bhaviṣya Purāṇa).

SANDHĪYA II. Mother of the giantess Sālakatākā. It is stated in Uttarā Ramāyana that this Sālakatākā, the daughter of Sandhīya was married by the giant Vidutikṣa.

SANHĪYA III. Time of union or conjunction. There are three Sandhīyas in a day. These are morning sandhīya (Pratīvatandhīya), noon sandhīya (Madhyāhāna sandhīya) and evening sandhīya (Śāyam Sandhīya). The meeting time of night and day, is morning Sandhīya, the joining time of the first half and the second half of the day, is noon (Madhyāhāna Sandhīya), and the joining time of day and night, is evening Sandhīya. Brahmins should keep the three Sandhīyas properly. The morning sandhīya is of three kinds. Good, Medium and Bad. When the morning stars are seen and the sunrise is approaching it is good morning; when the stars are not seen and the sun is not risen it is medium sandhīya and the morning time after the sunrise is bad Sandhīya. In śāyama sandhīya also there is this difference of time, as good, medium and bad. The time till the sun rises good; the time after the sunrise and before the rising of the stars, is medium and the evening after the rising of the stars is bad. In the Vedas it is metaphorically mentioned that Brahmins are trees, and the three sandhīyas are their roots, the Vedas, their branches and the rites and rituals ordained in the Vedas their leaves. From this it is clear that Brahmins should on no account leave unobserved, worship at these three sandhīyas. The Brahmin who does not observe there three sandhīyas carefully will, in his life time, become a śūdra and after the death, will be born again as a dog. Moreover the Brahmin who does not do the three evening, morning and noon worship, will have no right to conduct any other Vedic rites.

After the sun-rise and sun-set, within three nāvika (a nāvika-24 minutes) the morning and evening worship should be finished. There is anonement ordered for morning and evening worship conducted after the stipulated time. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 11).

SANÌYA I. Minister of Dhītrārātra. 1) Birth. Sāntāja, who was equal to a hermit, was born as the son of Śūta from a portion of Gavālgana. (Adi Pärvatī, Chapter 68, Verse 93).
2) The boon of Sāntāja. Sāntāja who was born within the circle of the friends of the Kaśvānas, became the minister of Dhītrārātra. The great work that Sāntāja did in Mahābhārata was, telling Dhītrārātra every thing that was taking place in the battle-field without leaving even the smallest events in the order of their occurrence. Sāntāja was able to do this because of the boon granted by Viṣṇu.

When the armies of the Kaśvānas and the Pāṇḍavas pitched their camps on either side of the battlefield, Vedāvyāsa came to Hastināpura and saw Dhītrārātra. Dhītrārātra heard about the preparations on either side for the battle. He did not like to go to the battle-field and see for himself the events of the battle. He asked to see Viṣṇu. Then Viṣṇu called Sāntāja to him and said “Sāntāja shall see all the events of the battle directly. He shall have such a divîn: inward eye.” Viṣṇu continued. “O king! Sāntāja has inward eyes. He will tell you everything about the battle. He will be knowing all. Whenever he thinks of it he will see everything that takes place in the day and in the night in open, and in secret. No weapon will cut him and no weariness will affect him. He is the son of Gavālgana and will come away unhurt from the battle.”

Because of this blessing Sāntāja used to inform Dhītrārātra of all the events in the battle at the time of the occurrence. Sāntāja informed Dhītrārātra of the news up to the death of Dyūrodhana. When Dyūrodhana was killed the cry of Asvāthâmāla grew louder. Sāntāja who heard this cry early in the morning, ran to the battlefield with a broken heart. With the death of Dyūrodhana the boon of inward eye given to Sāntāja by Viṣṇu was lost. (Mahābhārata Pärvatī, Chapter 2; Saunālīka Pärvatī, Chapter 9).
SANJAYA I

   (xx) Sāyaki took Sanjaya as a captive. (Sāyā Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 57).
   (xxi) Due to the blessings of Vyāsa Sanjaya escaped from the captivity of Sāyaki. (Sāyā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 39).
   (xxii) Sanjaya consoled Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (M.B. Sṛṇi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 23).
   (xxiii) Vyūha entrusted Sanjaya with the duty of post-war reconstructions. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 11).
   (xxiv) Towards the close of his life Sanjaya went with Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī to the forest. (Āśramaśāka Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 8).
   (xxv) On the first day of this journey to the forest, they reached the basin of the Ganges. On that day Sanjaya made the bed for Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Āśramaśāka Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 19).
   (xxvi) Sanjaya introduced the wives of the Pāṇḍavas to the hermits. (Āśramaśāka Parva, Chapter 25).
   (xxvii) On reaching the forest Sanjaya observed complete fast for two days. (Āśramaśāka Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 13).
   (xxviii) Sanjaya always walked close behind Dhṛtarāṣṭra and in places of ups and downs he led the King by the hand. (Āśramaśāka Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 16).

SANJAYA II. A prince of the country called Sauvira. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 265, Verse 10, that it was this prince Sanjaya who carried the flag and walked in front of Jayadratha, on his journey to carry away Piśūdā. In the fight which ensued Arjuna killed this Sanjaya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 271, Verse 27).

SANJAYA III. Another prince of the country of Sauvira. Vidulśā was the mother of this prince. This prince once ran away from the battle-field and by the instigation of his mother went to the battlefield again. This story is narrated in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 1.

SANJAYANANTI. An ancient city of South India. Sahadeva, during his regional conquest of the south sent his messengers to this country and conquered it easily. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sābhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 70, that Sahadeva got tribute from this country.

SANJAYAYANAPARVA. A sub-section of Udyoga Parva in Mahābhārata. This comprises Chapters 30 to 32 of Udyoga Parva.

SANJIVA. A character in the Pañcatantra. (See under Pañcatantra).

SANKARACARYA

SANKAVANAMANI. The jewel in the head of serpents. There is a tradition among the poets that this jewel is the head of the naga's life. There is a story in Mahabharata, Aparajita Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 42, stating how Bahuruvahana brought Arjuna to life by Sankavananami. (For details see under Babhuruvahana).

SANKALPA. One of the sons born to Dharmadeva by his wife Sankali. (Bhagavata, Sandha 6).

SANKALPA. A daughter of Daksa. Dharmadeva married the following ten daughters of Daksa, i.e., Arundhati, Vasu, Vasuki, Lakshmi, Bhadra, Marutavati, Sankali, Muhurti, Sadhya and Visva.

SANKARA I. A synonym of Siva.

SANKARA II. A simpleton, who was killed by his wife. This brahmin had a very mean wife called Kalipriya. After killing her husband she left the place with her paramour. But, wild animals killed him on their way in the forest. In all repentance Kalipriya returned home and after worshipping the corpse of her husband she observed Kārttika vrata at the instance of certain women. Thereby she got absolution from sin and attained heaven. (Padma Purāṇa, Brahmakāraṇḍa, Chapter 10).

SANKARACARYA

1) Gṛhastha. The spiritual and philosophical preceptor of India. Sīra Sākara was born in the village of Kāliati on the banks of the holy river Periyar, also called Cūrṇa and Perunā. According to certain scholars he was born in 509 B.C. while certain others contend that he saw the light of day in 54 A.D. Yet others place his date of birth in various periods between 509 B.C. and 54 A.D. Whatever that may be, the great Śākara is believed to have lived only for 32 years.

2) Birth. The name of Śākara's father was Sivaguru and that of his mother Arjyāmā. This nimbūdri couple had no issues for a long time. So they went to Trīshiva-purūr (Trichur) to worship Śiva in the famous Śiva temple there. The idol in that temple is known as Vīrācālāvara and Vārakumārā also. Ere long Lord Śiva blessed them. The belief is still that, pleased with the prayer of Sivaguru and Arjyāmā Śiva himself was born as their son. The child began exhibiting extraordinary intellectual powers. At the age of five the boy Śākara was invested with the sacred thread. By the time he was eight years old he had earned deep erudition in the Vedas, Śāstras, Purāṇas, epics (śilasās) etc. His father was no more by then and on the mother devolved the duty of bringing the child up.

3) Crocodile-attack. The boy showed no taste for or interest in childish plays, but evinced a tendency towards a life of renunciation. This attitude of the son pained the mother much and she wanted her son to get married. But, the boy did not like the idea. As time would have it, an incident which proved to be a turning point in the boy's life occurred soon. One day the mother and her son were bathing in the Periyar, when a crocodile caught hold of the boy. He cried aloud, and the mother got greatly alarmed. There was a custom for one to take to sannyāsa, irrespective of circumstances, when danger or death threatened one, and that is called śānti-vivāhana. The belief is still that the mother prevailed upon the boy to take to sannyāsa at that moment when his end was near, and willingly the mother granted permission. All at once the crocodile, which had so unexpectedly attacked him, disappeared equally unexpectedly. The boy came out of the river absolutely unharmed. The decision to take to sannyāsa was taken once for all. Śākara assured his mother, before he started on a tour of the country, that he would be present at her bedside during her last days and also that he would duly perform her obsequies.

4) In the presence of the preceptor. Śākara, who then was not even seven years old, started for the north in quest of a preceptor, and on the banks of the Narmadā he saw Govinda - bhagavatpāda, the disciple of Śrī Gaudapāda. The Bhagavatpāda was sitting in a cave surrounded by many wise people. Śākara approached and requested him to send him his disciple and grant him sannyāsa. Śākara's prayer was granted.

5) Controlled flood. A wonderful thing happened while Śākara was living at the āśrama. The Narmādi was in spate and the huts on its banks were about to be submerged in water. People got alarmed. Then Śākara put his kālandalu (vessel which sannyāsins keep with them for water) and chanted the Jālākāraṇa Mantra (hymn to attract water). At once the water which had flooded the banks flowed back into the river. People and their huts were saved. Afterwards his Guru asked Śākara to go to and live in Kāśi and write Bhāyas (commentaries) on the Prasthānātraya, i.e., the Brahma-sūtras, the Upaniṣads and the Gītā.

6) Padmapāda. Accordingly Śākara went to Kāśi. It was there that he took as his first disciple Virūṇārman, a young man from the Gola region of the country. Śākara called him Sanandana. Afterwards other disciples also came in. But, gradually jealousies cropped up in the ranks of the disciples. The other disciples of Śākara thought that the latter was partial towards Sanandana and showed special affection and regards to him. Śākara then decided to prove to the others that Sanandana was a disciple of exceptional talents and merits. One day Śākara was bathing with his other disciples in the Ganges, and he called Sanandana who was on the other side of the river to go to him. Sanandana walked on the surface of the water to his Guru, and as he took each step a lorus flower appeared beneath and held him up from sinking into the water. From that day onwards he came to be called Padmapāda, and his colleagues also realised his greatness.

7) Hastāmalaka. Hastāmalaka was one of the best disciples of Śākara. There is a story about his becoming Śākara's disciple. He was born dumb. His father, Divākara took Hastāmalaka to Śākara believing that due to the blessing of the great Guru his son would gain powers of speech. Śākara asked the dumb boy, 'who are you?' and the boy answered, 'I am the same, which has no relationship with the parts and attributes of body and mind and which is also entirely different from them'. There were certain verses, which the boy recited as answer to Śākara's question and each verse ended with 'niyopalabdhivāpōmāmāt' (I am the same and external knowledge, consciousness, is its characteristic). The boy's answer pleased Śākara, who took him as a disciple of his. The boy was given sannyāsa under the name Hastāmalaka the meaning of which word is he who is in possession of knowledge like the gooseberry in one's palm.
8) Toṭakācārya. Toṭakācārya was a disciple, who came soon after Hastāmalka. The name Toṭakācārya has a story behind it. This disciple approached Śaṅkarācārya with his request for discipleship in verse praising the latter. The verses were composed in the difficult toṭakā metre. The verses attracted Śaṅkarācārya very much, and he took the applicant as disciple. His real name was Kaḷaṇātha, but the Guru named him Toṭakācārya in view of his verses in that metre.

9) The Caṇḍālāvara. There is a story about Śiva going to Śaṅkarācārya at Kaṭāki in the guise of a Caṇḍālāvara and Śaṅkarācārya receiving him. One morning Śaṅkarācārya, after bathing in the Gaṅgā, was returning to the Viśvānātha temple. A Caṇḍālāvara with his hunting dogs and a pot of liquor was advancing from the opposite direction of Śaṅkarācārya, who asked the former to move away from his path. Immediately the Caṇḍālāvara asked, “Whither, body or soul, is to remove itself from the path? The body of everybody is composed of blood, flesh, bones etc; the constitution of it also is the same. But, the Atman is universal and omnipresent. Whom—whichever of the two—are you asking to move away from your path?” Śaṅkarācārya realised from the above answer that the Caṇḍālāvara was an extraordinary person. In fact, it was Śiva, who had disguised himself as a Caṇḍālāvara. Śaṅkarācārya prostrated before him. Śaṅkarācārya thought about God saying that he who had attained Brahman and the consciousness of oneness with all, was his Guru, whether he be a Brahmin or a Caṇḍālāvara.

10) Deity of the grammarian. Śaṅkarācārya has composed a hymn named Māhāmudgāra, in which he ridicules a grammarian. One day walking along a street in Kaṭāki, Śaṅkarācārya saw a grammarian learning by rote rules of grammar, and then he composed the very sweet and beautiful poem—Bhujā Govindam—to reveal the foolishness of the grammarian repeating the useless rules of grammar. By the very first verse of the poem Śaṅkarācārya revealed the following truth: “Oh ! foolish worship Govinda (Bhujā Govindam) meditate upon Him. You meditate upon Govinda realising the truth that when death approaches, the grammatical tātra “Paṇḍita Kārane” will not come to your aid.”

11) Śisya Vyāsa. Vyāsa, when he appeared in the guise of a Caṇḍālāvara to Śaṅkarācārya, had asked him to visit Baṭārīkāśrama, and accordingly he went there and visited Vyāsa. It was there that Śaṅkarācārya met his supreme preceptor, Govindapāda. He returned to Kaṭāki with the blessings of Vyāsa and Govindapāda and engaged himself in the writing of books.

12) Śaṅkarācārya’s age. There is a legend about Śaṅkarācārya’s life. Brahmadeva had allotted to him only eight years’ life. Before Śaṅkarācārya left his house at Kaḷaṇātha, a batch of sannyāsins including Agraśya and Nārada came to the house. The sannyāsins, who were pleased with the reception accorded to them blessed Śaṅkarācārya to live for sixteen years instead of the eight Brahmadeva had permitted him.

While Śaṅkarācārya was writing books at Mādhavandapāda at Manikarika Ghat in Kaṭāki Vyāsa came there one day and in the presence of an old man, and there ensued a lengthy discussion between the two. Prakāsyapāda, the ancient Vyāsa in the old man and told him and Śaṅkarācārya thus: “How would there be peace and happiness in the world, if Śaṅkarācārya, the incarnation of Śiva and Vedavyāsa, the incarnation of Viṣṇu quarrelled with each other?” As soon as his identity was revealed, thus, Vyāsa admitted that Śaṅkarācārya’s Bhāṣya on the Brahmatattvam was correct and blessed him to live for thirty-two, instead of sixteen years.

13) Controversy between Śaṅkarācārya and Maṇḍānāṃśīra. Pandits (scholars) view the controversy or discussion between Śaṅkarācārya and Maṇḍānāṃśīra as the most important event in Śaṅkarācārya’s life. Three incidents, Śaṅkarācārya’s meeting Kūmārila-Śaṅkarācārya’s meeting Kūmārila-bhaṭṭa, his defeating Maṇḍānāṃśīra and his entering the dead body of another person—may be found in connection with the above controversy.

A: Meeting with Kūmārila-bhaṭṭa. Śaṅkarācārya’s object was to expose the defects and draw-backs in Pūrva-māṇīmśa (the ritual part of the Vedas). Kūmārila-bhaṭṭa was the most competent person for a discussion on the subject. Śaṅkarācārya, for this purpose, went to Prayāga from Kaṭāki. But, Kūmārila-bhaṭṭa was not in a condition fit for discussion. He was slowly burning himself to death in a heap of paddy husk set on fire. He carried this punishment voluntarily to atone for a wrong he had committed. Years back he had put Buddhist attire and studied the secrets of Buddhist religion from its preceptors with the object of refuting that religion. Kūmārila-bhaṭṭa had great faith in Karmakanda, and he therefore, decided that it was his duty to make atonement for the wrong he had purposely done according to injunctions laid down in Karmakanda. Śaṅkarācārya was very sorry to find Kūmārila-bhaṭṭa in this condition in which discussion could not be held with him on the defects of Pūrva-māṇīmśa. Kūmārila-bhaṭṭa directed Śaṅkarācārya to the great scholar, Maṇḍānāṃśīra at Māhismati for a discussion on Pūrva-māṇīmśa.

B. Maṇḍānāṃśīra defeated. When Śaṅkarācārya reached Maṇḍānāṃśīra’s house a ceremony connected with obsequies was being conducted there. The door for entry to the house was closed. Śaṅkarācārya, by his yogic power entered the home and revealed the object of his visit to Maṇḍānāṃśīra, who agreed to the proposal of Śaṅkarācārya. Accordingly a debate began between the two. Bhāratidevi, wife of Maṇḍānāṃśīra and an erudite scholar in her own title acted as the arbiter in the discussion. Before the debate started she put a garland of flowers on the neck of both the contestants and announced that he would be considered as defeated in the debate the garland on whose neck began fading first. The debate continued for a number of days and the garland on Maṇḍānāṃśīra’s neck began showing signs of fading. According to the terms and conditions of the debate Maṇḍānāṃśīra acknowledged defeat. He accepted Śaṅkarācārya’s discipleship.

C. Prakāsyapāda (Ending the dead body of another person). But, Bhāratidevi argued that it was not enough that Śaṅkarācārya had defeated her husband in debate. She challenged him to defeat her as well, and Śaṅkarācārya accepted the challenge. Many topics dealt with in the various Śastras were debated upon and Śaṅkarācārya won all those debates. Ultimately Bhāratidevi raised certain points connected with the science of sexual love in the course of her argument. Śaṅkarācārya admitted that he did not possess sufficient mastery over the subject as he had taken himself to sannyāsī even from infancy. But, he told her that if he was allowed necessary time for it he would debate on that topic also.
Bhāratidevi granted him time for it and the debate was adjourned.

Śāṅkara prepared himself for the study of the science of sexual love. Just at that time a King called Amarakūṭa died. After asking his disciples to take especial care of his body Śāṅkara entered by yogic power the dead body of Amarakūṭa. The dead King came back to life and his people felt very happy about the mysterious happening in Śāṅkara, who thus entered the body of King Amarakūṭa, lived in the palace enjoying all royal pleasures. He gained practical experience in the matter of sexual love from the queens in the palace. People found the resurrected King Amarakūṭa to be better and more intelligent. The ministers suspected that the soul which dwelt in the body of the king was of some one else. Under the impression that it might be that of some yogin the ministers deputed agents to various parts of the country to find out if there was anywhere the dead body of a yogi, and they found out Śāṅkara's body. It was about to be burnt on the pyre when the disciples of Śāṅkara met King Amarakūṭa at the palace and informed him about these developments. Immediately Śāṅkara quitted his own body and entered into the body of King Amarakūṭa, who then requested the former to grant him sannyāsa and accept him as a disciple. Śāṅkara did so. Bhāratidevi too followed her husband in accepting sannyāsa.

14) Mother's death. Śāṅkara now knew that it was time for his mother's death. According to his promise to her that he would be by her side at the time of her death Śāṅkara returned to Kālī. His mother expired, and for some days the body lay unburied. But his actions did not cooperate with him and argued that it was against the injunctions in the Śaivas for a son, who had taken to sannyāsa, to perform the cremation etc. of his mother. At last, Śāṅkara had to cremate his mother by himself without others' help. He made a pyre with plane-trees in the compound of his house, and cut his mother's corpse into pieces, carried the pieces to the funeral pyre and thus cremated the body.

15) Triumphant tour. After the cremation of his mother Śāṅkara set out on his triumphant tour of the country. He is believed to have travelled throughout India three times. Wherever he went he gained friends and also made enemies. It was during these tours that he established the four mathās (centres) in the four regions of the country, Śrīgeri in the south, Jagānātha in the east, Dvārapāla in the west and Badarīnātha in the north were the four chief mathas established by Śāṅkara and they continue to function even to this day.

The Śīva, Viṣṇu and Devī templates and other Hindu religious institutions to be found in India today very eloquently proclaim the achievements and immense reputation of Śāṅkara. It is traditionally believed that Śāṅkara brought five liṅgas from Kailāsa and installed them in the five great temples. Muktālinga in Kedāra, Parālinga in the Nilakaṇṭha temple in Nepal, Ṣokṣalinga at Cidambaram, Bhogalīṅga in Śrīgeri and Yogalinga in Kāṅcī are the five liṅgas installed by Śāṅkara. The 'five-in-one' method of worship was also propounded by him. According to this system Ādiyā, Ambikā, Viṣṇu, Gaṇapatī and Mahēśvara are conjointly worshipped, special importance being given by the worshipper to his special deity. Śāṅkara appointed one disciple of his in each of the mathas as its head and these mathas play the most important role in the maintenance and propagation of the Advaita philosophy. The heads of these mathas during various periods have been reputed Vedāntists and noble souls. Jyotilīṅga in Badarīnātha, Gourbhāna pīṭha in Jagānātha-puri, Sāradā pīṭha in Śrīgeri and Kāmēśvārīpīṭha in Kāṅcī are the most important of the Śrī Śāṅkara's pīṭhas. Having thus completed his philosophical mission or object he left Śāṅkara entered mahāsāmādhi at the age of thirty-two. Some scholars believe that he disappeared in a cave at Kедāra while certain others hold the view that he ascended the Sarvajñāpīṭha (the omniscient state) at Kāṅcī and spent his closing days there.

16) His works. The literary compositions of Śāṅkara may be classified into four divisions, viz., Bhāṣyās (commentaries), original works, hymns to various deities, and sutras.

ŚĀṅKARAŚVAMI. Father of Upavarsa. (See under Upavarsa). ŚĀṅKARI. Wife of Varatana, the brahmin. (See under Varatana for the reason why the couple had no children in their next life). ŚĀṅKARŚANA. Balabhadrā Rāma. (To know about the derivation of the name see under Balabhadrā Rāma). ŚĀṅKĀSYA. A King of ancient days, who lived in Yama's court. (Saṁhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 10). ŚĀṅKĀSYAPURA. A Kingdom in ancient India. The King of this country Sudhanavā once attacked the kingdom of Mihili. (Vaṁśika Ramayāṇa, Bālakanda, Canto 73).

ŚĀṅKHA I. Considered to be a great, sublime treasure, found in Kubera's court. Brahmadatta, King of Pāṭaliputra attained heaven as he used to giveŚāṅkha to good brahmīns. (Śantī Parva, Chapter 234 and Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137). Śāṅkha appeared on earth, according to one belief, from the bones of Śāṅkhacūḍa. (For details see under Tīrtha, Part 2).

ŚĀṅKHA II. A nāga born to Kṛṣṇa-paprajapati of Kadrī. The following information about it is from the Mahābhārata.

(i) Nārada once introduced Śāṅkha to Mātali, charioteer of Indra (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 12).
(ii) In Śāṅkha was one of the chief nāgas which came to bear the soul of Balabhadrā to Pātālā at the time of his death. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 7).

ŚĀṅKHA III. Son of the Virātā King.

(i) He was present at the wedding of Draupadi in the company of his brother Uttara and sister Uttara. (Adi Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 16).
(ii) He also came out to fight Durvodhana and others when they lifted the cows of the Virātā King. (Virātā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 16).
(iii) On the first day of the great war he clashed with Bhūrīravas. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 25).
(iv) He was killed in fighting with Drona at Kurukṣetra. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 17).
(v) After death he got absorbed in the Vīvadava.
(Svāgrāhā Anvāra, Chapter 5, Verse 17).

SĀNKHA IV. A maharji, who was the elder brother of Likhitamaharṣi. Likhitai once punished Sānkha for plucking fruits from his garden without his permission.

For details see under Likhitai.

SĀNKHA V. A Kekaya prince. He and his four brothers were maharājas on the side of the Pāṇḍavas.
(Sāla Parva, Chapter 171, Verse 15).

SĀNKHA VI. The asura called Hayagriva. (See under Hayagriva).

SĀNKHACĀDA I. An Asura. Sudāmā became this asura as the result of a curse. (For details see under Tulsī, Para 5).

SĀNKHACĀDA II. A slave of Kubera. While Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra were enjoying pleasures with naked Gopi women, Sudāmā took the Gopī women, went there, and abducted the women and in the fight that ensued was killed by Kṛṣṇa, who gave to Balabhadra the precious stone taken from his head. (Bhāgavata, 10th Skanda).

SĀNKHALIKAI. A female attendant of Subhrāmaṇya.
(Sāla Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 15).

SĀNKHAMEKHAI. A maharṣi. Once he went to the Sāmata of sage Śivālakṣeta to see Pranatadāra who was lying there, bitten by a snake. (M.B. Śī Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 24).

SĀNKHANĀKHA. A nāga that lives in the court of Varuna worshipping the latter. (Sāla Parva, Southern text, Chapter 9).

SĀNKHAPADA. Son of Śravasajaya Manu, who once taught him Śatāvata and Sāṅkhapadā imparted the dharma to his son Śuvarṇāgāma. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 940, Verse 37).

SĀNKHAPAVARA (MOUNTAIN). A mountain near Mount Meru. (See under Kuruṅgā Parvata).

SĀNKHPINDERĀ. A nāga born to Kaśyapa-prajāpatis of Kadrā. (M.B. Śī Parva, Chapter 25).

SĀNKHĀSRAVAS. A female attendant of Subhrāmaṇya. (Sāla Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 26).

SĀNKHATĪRTHA. A sacred place on the banks of the river Śravasati. (Sāla Parva, Chapter 37).

SĀNKHYAYANA. An ādāra (preceptor) who was a prominent disciple of Saṅkhyāmūra, Pṛhaspāti being another equally prominent disciple. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 8).

SĀNKHYAYOGASĀSTRA. See under Kapila.

SĀNKHINĪ I. A sacred spot at Kurukṣetra. A bath in the Dvīpavati river will add to one's beauty. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 51).

SĀNKHINĪ II. Wife of Mahāṣākha, a crocodile. (For details see under Mahāṣākha).

SĀNKOGA. One of the Rākṣasas, who, in ancient days ruled the earth and ultimately died. The story of Sānkoga was told by Bṛhma to Yudhishṭhira to prove the truth that even the greatest and most powerful has, one day or other, to quit life and die. Among such great ones are included Pṛthu, Aila, Mayā, Daśamukha, Prabha, Nāmuc, Daksā, Viśrāmita, Viśvesa, Surabhi, Vṛṣakā, Kapilāśa, Vṛis a, Bāṇa, Kāśvāna, and Viśvānātha. Though all of them were once emperors they had to give room to the next generation. Bhrīṣma, on his bed of arrows, was thus describing the transience of life. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 277).

SĀNKRTTI I. A King, who lives in the court of Yama worshipping him. (Śāla Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 10).

SĀNKRTTI II. A muni born in the Atri dynasty. After giving his disciples lessons on impersonal (attributeless) God he went and lived in Devaloka. (Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 22).

SĀKU I. A son of Hiranyakṣa. Saṃbarā, Saṃkū, Dvīmūrta, Sākṣa and Arya were the sons of Hiranyakṣa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

SĀKU II. A Yadava King who was present at the wedding of Draupadi. (Śī Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 19).

He was a member of the company of Vīdāvāc, who carried Subhrāda's dowry at her wedding with Arjuna. He was a maharāja also. (Sāla Parva, Chapter 14 and Śī Parva, Chapter 220).

SĀNKUKARṇA I. A muni, who lived at the sacred Kapardīvara tirtha in Vārānasī. There lived a brahmin in the temple there performing tapas. One day a lean and bony ghost, hungry and panting came to the brahmin. To the brahmin's question the ghost replied thus: "In my previous life I was a rich brahmin. I looked after my family well, but did not worship Devas, guests or cows. Nor did I do any pious deed. But, one day I happened to worship Lord Viṣṇu and touch his idol. Within a short period after that I died. You will please tell me the means, if any, for me to attain heaven."

Sānkukara answered the ghost as follows: "There lives no man on earth, who is more fortunate than your good self, who could touch and prostrate before Lord Viṣṇu. That good fortune has led you to me. You bathe in this holy tirtha and you will lose your ghosthood. The ghost, accordingly dived in the water and immediately rose up to heaven. (Padma Purāṇa, Śī Khanda, Chapter 54).

SĀNKUKARṇA II. A nāga born in the Dhīrāstra dynasty. It was burnt to death at the serpent yajña conducted by Janamejaya. (Śī Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 15).

SĀNKUKARṇA III. An attendant of Śiva. He lives in the court of Kubera. (Śāla Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 34).

SĀNKUKARṇA IV. One of the two attendants presented by Pārvati to Subhrāmaṇya, the other being Pujapadānta. (Sāla Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 51).

SĀNKUKARṇA V. A warrior of Subhrāmaṇya. (Sāla Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 50).

SĀNKUKARṇESVARA. A mūrti (aspect) of Śiva whose worship is ten times more productive of good than the aśvamedha Yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 70).

SĀNKUROMĀ. A nāga with thousand heads, one of the sons of Kaśyapa by Kadrā. (Maṇḍya Purāṇa Chapter 6, Verse 4).

SANTAKAṆAṆ. A King of Kāśi. He was the son of King Kṛṣṇa, father of King Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SANTANA. The son of Duryātkuru who was the King of Kekāya. He was present at the Rājasya sacrifice of Yuddhisthira. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9).

SANTARAJANA. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Śāalya Purāṇa, Chapter 45, Verse 58).

SANTI. Daughter of Dakṣa by his wife Praśūti. Praśūti delivered including Śanti, twenty-four children. (Vīnu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 12, Verse 19).

SANTI I. A king born in the dynasty of Bharata, son of Duryātu. He was the son of Nila, grandson of Ajaśīra and father of Suśanti. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SANTI II. Name of the Indra of the fourth Manvantara. (Ādi Purāṇa, Chapter 196, Verse 29).

SANTI IV. A mahārāj. Son of Aśgīra, he was called Āmevīr also. He had participated in the Yajña conducted by Uparā-charvasu. (Śānti Purāṇa, Chapter 336, Verse 8; Ādi Purāṇa, Chapter 196, Verse 20; Anuśaśana Purāṇa, Chapter 95, Verse 130).

SANTI V. A mahārāj who was a disciple of the Rṣi called Bhitī, who did once go to participate in a yajña conducted by his brother Suvarnaśa, leaving matters connected with his āśrama with Śanī, who discharged his duties quite well in the absence of his master. One day when agni became very incandescent he praised Agnives. Agnives and noticing that the Deva was pleased Śanti requested him to bestow a son on the mahāraṣṭra. Accordingly a son was born to Bhitī, who later on became famous as 'Bhāyūmyanu, Bhitī, who was pleased with the devout life of his disciple (Śanti) taught him Śrīgovinda. (Māraṇeya Purāṇa).

SANTIDEVĪ (SANTIDEVĪ). Daughter of King Devaka. She was married by Vasudeva. (Vīnu Purāṇa, Chapter 96, Verse 130).

SANTIKAṆPA. One of the five saṅkhīṭā sections of the Atharva-vedā composed by muni Muniśikēśa, the other four sections being nakṣatrakaṆpa, vedakṣatapañ, saṅkhīṭaṅkaṆpa and Āṅgira-kaṆpa. NakṣatrakaṆpa contains rules for the worship of the stars; Vedakṣatapaṅ contains the rites regarding Brahmā, the Ṛtik; saṅkhīṭaṅkaṆpa contains the rules about mantras, and the Āṅgira-kaṆpa deals with black magic and SantikaṆpa.
contains rules about propitiating deities by offerings of horse, elephant etc.

SÁNTIPARVA. An important Parva of the Mahábhárata (See under Mahábhárata).

SÁNTI-URDHWA. A king of the Púru dynasty. He was the son of Mainára. (Agni Puráṇa, Chapter 278).

SÁYU. A country of ancient India. (Mahábhárata, Bhima Parva Chapter 9, Verse 43).

SÁNYASA (SÁNNYASA). One of the four stages of Brahmanical life. The four stages are Brahmácarya (Religious student), Gásthya (householder), Vánaprastha (Forest-dweller) and Sányása (hermit or sage).

For further details see under Árama.

Duties of a hermit. Manu has ordained that one should perform sányása (renunciation) at the fourth stage of life renouncing every tie with the world. After becoming a hermit he should travel daily alone. He should enter villages only for food. He should have renounced wealth. He should not acquire any wealth. He should be a sage filled with knowledge. He should have a skull as the goal for taking alms. He should sleep under trees. He should wear poor cloth and should be solitary. He should consider everybody as equal. Having become a hermit he should not delight in death or life.

A hermit should put every step looking straight down to the earth. He should drink water filtered by cloth. Words and deeds should be pure and true. The shell of water-gourd (pumpkin), wooden pots and earthen pots are the Vásta sign of hermits. A hermit should beg for food daily from houses where no smoke comes out, where pestle is placed and where there is no charcoal, and after all have taken food and the pot for preparing food is placed upside down.

It is said that the food got by hermits by begging is of five types. They are Múthukara (collected alms), aamukpitha (unlimited), Pápkpátra (prepared much earlier), Ayácádam (got by not begging) and tákikála (for the time being). In whichever stage of life he may be, he should be staunch in that stage and should perform the duties with honesty.

If by ignorance a hermit engaged himself in killing animals by day or night, to remove the impurity and get purity, he should bathe and perform six pránayámas (prana) of the breath) daily. The hermit should discard his body made of five elements.

The rules of duty are, resolution, forbearance, self-restraint, not robbing, cleansing, control of sense-organs, modesty, knowledge, truth, not resorting to anger, and so on. Hermits are of four grades, such as Kúśikaka, Bábudaka, Hásva and Parámaksh, the last-mentioned being the noblest grade. The hermit who wears one or three dándas (rod) will be freed from ties of birth and death.

The five Yanas or restraint or the not killing, truth, not stealing, celibacy and not receiving. The five Niyamás or religious duties are cleansing, joy or contentedness, penance, self-study and meditation on God. The sitting postures suitable for hermits are Pačmánana etc. (Agni Puráṇa, Chapter 161).

SÁNYASTAPÁDA. A famous Puránic region in India. The king of this kingdom, fearing Jaraśandha, ran away to the south with his son. (Sáhab Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 28).

SÁPTACARU. A holy place. The reason for giving this place the name Sáptacaru is given in Mahábhárata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82 as follows.

The word 'Caru' means sacrifice. Once devas (gods) and men together put the fat parts of sacrificial animals, as burnt offerings in the sacrificial fire, each singing seven verses from the Rgveda. By this sacrifice they obtained more prosperity than the fruits of giving one head of cattle, two goads, three kesas, four dohas or performing hundred Kájasvatya sacrifices or thousand horse-sacrifices.

"The wise said that it was an endless gift to the manes. The gods, the manes, the Gandharvas, the celestial maids, the gandá, the yakasas, Khinnaras, the saddhas, the Vidyádharas, the people of the earth, the Rákṣasas, the daityas, the Rudras, Brahmas, all these joined together with vow and fast taken for a thousand years and performed a sacrifice each exalting Vianu by singing seven verses from Rgveda. Keśava was much pleased at the caru and gave them Átrasvāryasiddha (the eight miraculous attainments) and everything they wished. Thus giving them all kinds of prosperity, the god Mukunda disappeared in this place as lightning in the clouds. Therefore this place became famous everywhere by the name Sáptacaru.

SÁPTADVIJÁ (Sí). The seven Brahmins who killed and ate on the way the cow brought for the teacher. These seven Brahmins were the disciples of a teacher in Kúndinapura. Once owing to a severe famine people were in a very difficult situation. The teacher sent these seven disciples to beg for a cow from his son-in-law who had a very large number of cows. They did accordingly. The son-in-law gave them a cow for his father-in-law. The disciples began the return journey with the cow. When they reached half-way they became so weary and tired of hunger and walking that they could not proceed a step further. When they reached the stage of death, those celibates killed the cow for the Vedic rites, and ate the flesh. Carrying the remaining flesh they reached the house of the teacher and told him all the truth. As they had tried to be righteous as far as possible, the teacher only felt proud of his disciples. (Káthásuññitásagāra, Madhamaśucukālambaka, Táraga 1).

SÁPTADVIJÁS (SEVEN ISLANDS).

1) General information. The seven islands are Jambúdvípa, Plásksdvípa, Sámalidvípa, Kuśadvípa, Krauñcadvípa, Sádadvípa and Puskaradvípa. Each of these islands is surrounded by sea. The sea that surrounds Jambúdvípa is the Lavana sea (salt sea), the Pláskádvípa is surrounded by the sea of Sugarcane-juice, Sámalidvípa by the sea of liquor, Kuśadvípa by the sea of ghee, Krauñcadvípa by the sea of cow's milk and the Sádadvípa by the sea of milk and the Puskaradvípa by the sea of pure water. In the centre of all, lies the Jambúdvípa and in the centre of this island, stands the golden mountain meru. (Víga Puráṇa, Aníśa 2, Chapter 2).

2) Origins. There is a story about the origin of these seven islands and the surrounding seas, in Devi Bhágavata Skáambha 8.

Two famous sons named Priyavatra and Uttanápáda were born to Sávyambhu Manu. Priyavatra and his children ruled the country for a period of eleven arubs, that is a hundred million years. Though he was aged so much, the power of his mind and body did not show any sign of weakness. At this time he saw once the sun travelling on the first side of the earth, and began to think: “When the sun is walking on one side of the earth, the other side must naturally be dark. Will it happen so in our time? In all places at all times it should be bright and there should be no darkness.” Thinking thus he got into a chariot as bright as the sun and travelled round the earth seven times. During these travels the wheels of the chariot made seven furrows on the earth. These furrows became the seven seas and the beds between the furrows became seven islands.

3) Sovereign powers. Priyavrata made his seven sons sovereigns of the seven islands. These seven sovereign rulers were Agnideva, Idjmaihiha, Yajñabhabha, Hiranyakasipu, Ghrapraptha, Medhatithi and Vidhobha.

SAPTAGANGA. An ancient holy place. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Anu Adam Parva, Chapter 28, Verse 16, that if one goes to this place and gives offerings to gods and the manes and worships them, one would attain heaven and become a deva (god).

SAPTAGODAVARA. A holy place near the temple of Surparaka. Those who bathe in this will attain heaven. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 44).

SAPTAJANAKAMAMA. A holy place where seven hermits called the Saptajanas, went to heaven by standing head downwards in water. This was the place through which Sri Rama and Sugriva went to Kiskindha. Sugriva told Sri Rama about the hermitage of Saptajanas as follows:

“Oh Ratha! This vast area is the hermitage where rest could be taken, as sweet fruits and pure water could be obtained and the forest looks like a garden. Here the seven hermits called Saptajanas, who did penance and took vow and fast by standing in water always, with heads downwards, did live in days of old.” (Vimalkuti Ramlivaca, Kiskindha Kanda, Sarga 13).

SAPTJIT. One of the daughters born to Kaçyapa by his wife Daun (Matsya Purana 6:19).

SAPTAKRT. An external god concerned in Sraddha (offerings to the manes). (M.B. Anushadha Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 36).

SAPTAMAT (S), (SEVEN MOTHERS).

1) General information. Saptaamats are the seven goddesses named Brahmani, Vaisnavi, Maheshvari, Kaumari, Vrishi, Indrani and Camudaj.

2) Origin. Some are of opinion that the Saptaamats are connected with Siva. Their names reveal that they were born from the bodies of Brahma, Vishnu and such other gods. There is another story that when Siva and Vishnu joined together and tried to kill the asura named Anahaka and failed, they created the seven mothers to kill the asura. From each drop of blood of Anahakasura that fell on the ground an asura arose. These seven matri joined with Yogeshvari, the creation of Siva, drank the blood of the asura without allowing it to fall on the ground and so it became easy for Siva to kill the asura. This is a story inVirana Purana, Chapter 36, about the birth of the Saptaamats, as follows: In olden days a fierce war broke out between the devas and the asuras. When the fierce asura Candra and Mundha were killed the famous asura named Raktabija entered the battlefield with an akshauni of army (21,870 chariots, so many elephants, 6,551 horses and 10,530 infantry). Seeing this immense army of the asuras drawing near, Kaundika Maheshvari and Kali made a loud roaring sound. Then from the mouth of Maheshvari, Brahmaci came out seated on a swan and wearing rosary and water pot. From her eyesMaheshvari with three eyes came out seated on a bull and wearing great snakes as bangles and ear-rings and holding a trident. From the joints came out Kaumari, seated on a peacock and holding a lance. The beautiful Vaisnavi came out from her hand, seated on Garuda, holding a conch, discus, club, sword, the bow arjuna and arrow. From her posterior came out the horrible Varahi (Bear) with great peste, seated on the Nagaserpent) Sesha, and furrowing the ground with her fierce tusks. From her heart came out the turtleduck Nakshathri (woman-lion) with fierce claws, who at the shaking of her mane displaced the planets and the stars, and from her foot Camudaj came out. (See under Pañala).

SAPTANAGA (S). (Seven serpents). The Saptanagas are Amsata, Taksaka, Karka, Padma, Mahapadma, Shankhaka and Guliaka. All of them should be consecrated in temples as wearing Brahmana string and having the face with the expanded hood of a serpent. (Agni Purana, Chapter 51).

SAPTARAVA (SAPTAVATA). One of the famous children of Garuda. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 11).

SAPTARSIS. (The seven hermits). A group of hermits. There are seven hermits in this group The Saptaaris in each Manvantara (age of Manu) are different. As there are fourteen Manvantaras before a great deluge, by that time ninetyseven Saptaaris will be born and dead. The father of the Saptaaris in each Manu’s age will be different. The Saptaaris of the present Manu’s age, Marici, Angiras, Atri, Pulastya, Vasishtha, Pulaha and Krtav are the mental sons of Brahma. (For further details see under the word Maavantara).

SAPTAUSKUDA. A holy bath (Ganga) situated within Kuruksetra. It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapter 73 that those who bathe in this tirtha will obtain the merit of good actions.

SAPTAUSALA (S). The cursed forms of the King Manubhadra’s seven sons who were miserable. Due to the curse of Agastya they became seven palm trees (salas). They obtained liberation from the curse during the incarnation of Vishnu as Sri Rama. (For detailed story see under Manubhadra II).

SAPTAUSAMUDRAS. (The seven seas). See under Saptadvipa (S).

SAPTAUSRASVATA. 1) General information. A holy place situated within Kuruksetra. This is a holy bath dedicated to Sarasvati. Mention is made in Mahabharata, Saly Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 61, that during his pilgrimage Balabhadrarima visited this holy bath.

2) Origin. A story occurs in Mahabharata, Salya Parva, Chapter 38 about the origin of this tirtha. It is given below:

Once Brahma performed a sacrifice on the island of Purkara. All the devas (gods and goddesses) attended the sacrifice. Among the rivers, Sarasvati alone did not come at first. Then Brahmā remembered Sarvatī and she appeared under the name Suprabhā. Thus she appeared before the hermits who were doing penance in that place assuming seven different figures. From that day onwards the place became famous under the name Suprasārasvata. (See under Sarvatī).

SAPTASVĀS. The seven horses of the Sun. The chariot of the Sun is nine thousand yojanas long and its shaft is eighteen-thousand yojanas long. The length of the axle is fifteen million seven lakhs yojanas. The wheel is secured to this axle. The entire wheel of 'Time' (Kāla-caakra) stuck fast in the undiminishing figure of 'year' with three navas of 'the wheel, five spokes and sixty rings. The chariot is drawn by seven horses. They are the seven Vedic metres with their theory. They are Gāyatrī, Bṛhatī, Uṣṇīk, Jāgati, Triṣūp, Anuṣūp and Pankti. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anuśa 2, Chapter 8).

SAPTAPĀNAS. (The seven expediencies). See under Caturupāyas.

ŚARABHA I. A nāga born in the Takṣaka dynasty. It was burnt to death at Janamejaya's serpent yajña. (Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 8).

ŚARABHA II. A nāga born in the Airavata dynasty. It was burnt to death at Janamejaya's serpent yajña. (Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 11).

ŚARABHA III. A notorious Dānava, son of Kukuyaprajapati by his wife Dānu. (Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 26).

ŚARABHA IV. A mahārāja who worships Yama in his court. (Subha Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 14).

ŚARABHA V. Brother of Dīrghakeśu, King of Cedi. He was a friend and supporter of the Pāṇḍavas. During the Āśva-medha he helped Arjuna to lead the yājñic hore. (Āśva-medika Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 3).

ŚARABHA VI. A brother of Sakuni. He was killed in the great war by Bhīma. (Droupa Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 24).

ŚARABHA VII. Virabhadra incarnated himself as Śarabha to defeat Narasimhamūrti. (Siva Purāṇa, Sākradraśthūrya).

ŚARABHĀŚGA. A Maharāja, who lived in the Dandaka forest during the ‘forest-life’ of Śri Rāma. (Valmiki Rāmāyana, Aranyakānda, Canto IV). When Śri Rāma visited Śarabhaśga’s āśrama, Indra too came ther, but went away saying that he would meet the mahārāja after the great mission of Rāma was over. The mahārāja told Rāma that he was waiting to see him and did not accompany Indra to Devaloka as he wanted to go there only after seeing Rāma. Rāma answered the Mahārāja that he would take upon himself all the spiritual assets and good results of the actions of the Mahārāja, and wanted him to point out a place for them (Rāma and others) to live. Sarabhaśga directed them to the āśrama of Sutikṣṇa, and after that ended his life by leaping into the fire and attained Brahmāloka.

ŚARABHĀŚGAŚRAṬA. A holy place. Those who visit the place purify their families. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 42).

ŚARADANAṆṆAVI. A Kekaya King. His wife Sruṭasena was the youngest sister of Kunīt. As the couple did not get a child even very long after their marriage, the King got .persuaded, with Sruṭasena’s permission, the Pūmnasvāna yajña with the result that three sons (Durjaya and others) were born to them. (Adi Parva, Chapter 111).

ŚARADVĀN. A muni, the son of Gautama. From his very infancy he preferred the learning of the dasuvarudha (science of archery) to the other Vedas. While a brahmadvīcin (Religious student) he performed tapas and secured divine arrows. Afterwards, having been overcome by the charms and appeals of an apsarā woman named Janaśpati, Saradvān had seminal emission from which were born Ikṣvāku and Ikṣurī. (For details see under Kṛpā).

ŚARADVATI. An apsarā woman. She attended the birthday celebrations of Arjuna.

ŚARAGULMA. A monkey in Rāma’s army. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Kiskindhā Kānda, 41, 3).

ŚARAKATIRTHA. A famous sacred place in Kuruksetra. He who takes a dip in the waters of this place has the desire to realize himself fulfilled. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83). Within this tirtha there are a number of other tirthas called Kudakati, Kūpakundā etc. The sacred place to the east of it is said to belong to Nārada.

ŚARALOMA. A mahārāja, the father of Dāsaūra. Vasistha once told Śri Rāma the story of Dāsaūra to prove that the world is all illusion. Dāsaūra was the only son of Sāralomā, a muni, who performed tapas in the plains of the mountain in Magadha. Dāsaūra too did tapas in another part of the mountain. While the father and the son were living happily the father entered sanātāni and the son went over the loss of his father. Then a forest-tapas comforted him with celestial advice.

Dāsaūra performed his father’s obsequies. He began thinking that the earth was impure and that the top of trees was pure and decided to do tapas in such a manner that he get power to sit on the branches and leaves of trees. Accordingly he made a big pit of fire and began making offerings of flesh cut from his body into the fire. Agniḥbagavān (Fire-deity) appeared and asked him to choose the boons he wanted. Dāsaūra told Agni as follows: “Oh Lord; I do not find any pure spot on this earth, which is full of created living beings. You should therefore, grant me the power to live on the tops of trees.” Agni granted him the boon.

Dāsaūra then climbed a big tree in the forest and occupied, without the least fear, a tender leaf at the top of the topmost branch of the tree. He there assumed the Padmāsana (the lotus seat for meditation). His mind was functioning actively as it had not been turned inwards into true knowledge. With his mind in such a state he performed yajña. He continued performing yajña like gomudha, a varāntha etc on tấtally for ten years. Then self-illuminating knowledge arose in his mind, and he saw a beautiful forest-tapasya seated beautifully attired at the end of the tender leaf on which he was sitting. She was looking very sad, her head bent down. Dāsaūra asked her, who she was so much beautiful and attractive as to evoke love even in Śri Rāma (the God of love). She answered him in a sweet voice as follows: “Very rare desires in life may be got if great men are requested for. I am the forest-tapasya of this forest beautified by the trees you sit on and by trees and creepers equally beautiful. An assembly of the forest-tapasya has been held to celebrate a festival for the worship of Kāmadeva on trāyodasi in the śuklapāka of the month of Caitrā, I, too went there, and I, who am childless, felt sorry in mind to see the others petting their children on their laps. But, why should I be sad when you, who can give succuploa anything they wish for, are here? You should, therefore, bless me with a child or else I will end my life in fire.”

Dādāra blessed her to have a son within a month. He told her also that it would be difficult for the son to acquire knowledge as he was got on the insistence that she would die in fire unless she got him. He did not grant her request for permission to live with him; he went into the forest leaving her behind him.

The son of the forest nymph became twelve years old. Then, one day, she took the child to the muni; left it with him and went away. One day the father began telling the son a story, on the top of the tree, and Vasiṣṭha, who was going by the sky in invisible form to bathe in Kaśīkāngā, heard the story. Vasiṣṭha hid himself on the tree and listened to the story.

It was the story of king Svotaṭhā that the muni was telling his son as follows—“He was famous for his noble qualities and unique prowess. He possessed three bodies, which possessed capacity to rule the country. One of the three bodies was the best, the midway between good and bad and the third bad. The very origin of the king was in the wide and extensive sky; like birds he lived in the sky. He built a city in the sky with fourteen streets and three divisions or sectors. There were also forests, woods and mountains for games in the city; seven big tanks, wavy-white with creepers of pearl and two lamps, spreading heat and coolness, burning always. The King, who went about all his time in this vast city, built in it many movable inner dwellings, and they were divided between the upper and lower parts of the city. They were thatched with a kind of black grass. Each inner house had nine doors, some of them windows, which admitted air always. In each house five lamps burned, the lamps resting on three pillars and a white piece of wood. Each house was glitteringly plastered and had courtyard. A particular sect of bhūtas, who ever feared light, guarded the houses. When the houses created thus by magic moved from one place to another, King Svotaṭhā enjoyed, like birds in nests, playing various games therein. The king, who possessed three bodies, used to go out after playing for some time with the guards, and run about like one possessed of a desire to occupy houses, newly built, and then reach the city, which was like a Gandharva city., Frail and unsettled in mind, the king, off and on, developed a will to die, and accordingly he died. Just as waves come up in the sea, the king used to be born again from the sky and to attend to worldly affairs. At times he used to repent about and weep over his actions asking himself what he, the fool, was doing and why he should be sad like that. At other times he used to feel elated and enthusiastic. Briefly put, he used to be, by turns drinking, walking, jumping, expanding, contracting, feeling, drowsy and then roused. The great and handsome king was actually, like the sea, rendered restless by wind, possessed by various moods.

The father was describing a philosophy of life figuratively to his son, but the boy understood nothing. Then, as requested by the son, the father explained to him the meaning of the story as follows:

Svotaṭhā was concretion conception born out of the ultimate sky. Conceptions originate and die automatically. The whole visible world is imaginary. The world is there only when there is conception and in its absence no world exists. Brāhma, Viṣṇu, Siva and Indra are only parts of that conception. It is conception itself, which creates the world of three cases in nothingness or vacuity. On account of the life-swig (will) of that fundamental Caitanya (awareness, life) the formal concept attains Brahmahood (the universal self) and engages itself in the process of creation. The glittering city said to have been created in the sky is the fourteen worlds, the gardens in it are forests and woods, the play fields therein are mountains like the Himalayas, Meru etc. The two eternal lamps of heat and coolness, the sun and moon, the trees, the trees, the trees refer to the Sun and Moon. The creepers or garlands of pearls refer to rivers. Special gems have been described as tendrils of lotus and fire in the ocean and the seven seas are described respectively as lotus and the seven tanks. The statement that in this three-tiered city the king of conception built play-houses referred to the creation of individual bodies. The body of Svotaṭhā's father is described as those in the upper, middle and lower parts to denote living beings in the three worlds, Devāloka, Manuṣya-lōka and Pātāla Movement is the journey of bodies due to the flow of Prāṇa (breath). Pieces of wood refer to bones and the plastering is skin. Black grass said to have been used for thatching is hair on the head. The nine doors are the nine openings in the body. Windows refer to the eyes, ears, nose, etc. The hand arms etc. are roads and the five sense organs, lamps. The guards, who shun and quit light, are the egos which run away from knowledge and discretion. The king of conception or imagination born from non-materials finds enjoyment in the house of the body, but the enjoyment is only ephemeral. Imagination develops a moment and is extinguished like the lamp in the next moment. The place or status of conceptions in the body may be compared to that of waves in the ocean. When desire takes place for things conceived it returns to the 'body-house', which is to be born, and it ends or perishes on achievement. Rebirth due to desire (will-power) is never for happiness, but is for enduring sorrow and pain. The wise world cannot know the cause it is felt to be real. Absence of this feeling ends the sorrow as night swallows clouds. Lamentation is the appeal or expression of the mind remembering forbidden practices in life and amanda happiness, is the proud state of mind remembering noble practices. The three bodies of the king according to the three states—the heat or highest, the middle one and of lowest, the three attributes (Satva rajas-tamo guṇas) cause or the existence of the world. The lowest of the attributes (tamoguna) or conceptions according to them, getting more and more pain-giving on account of uncultured action lead one to lower forms of life like the worm, tree, grass etc. Conception of real knowledge and truth is realization of duty, righteousness and wisdom. It is the act of realization of the God Deśavāra state. Raajas (the middle attribute) guṇa functions as material activities in the form of attachment to wife, son, wealth etc. When one has rejected the forms of guṇas (conceptions) and the very conception is thus annihilated, one attains the supreme state. Therefore, Oh! son, you reject all external perceptions, control the mind by itself and completely annihilate all internal and external perceptions. Whether you live in heaven, on earth or in pātāla and do intense tapas for thousands of years, unless conception is eliminated you will not attain salvation.

After hearing the above explanation about the illusions in life, from his hiding place Vasiṣṭha went away. ([Rāmāyaṇa, Canto 17])

SĀRAMĀ I.
1) General. Trich of the Devas. Śyāma and Sabāla, sons of Sāramā, were two prominent messengers of Yama and they possessed four eyes each. The offspring of these dogs are called Sāramayesa. The Rgveda and Mahābhārata contain a story about Sāramā cursing Janamejaya. (For details see under Suraśātravaiṣṇava.)
2) Other information.
(i) Sāramā worships Brahmā in his court. (Sāhā Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 40).
(ii) Sāramā is a graha (Evil spirit) of Subrahmanya which enters the womb of pregnant women and steals the babies. (Vana Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 14).
(iii) Sāramā happened to have drunk milk from dayus lied about it to Indra, and he punished her. (Varāha Purāṇa).
(iv) Indra once deputed Sāramā to find out the place where the Paśiś had hidden the cows on condition that he would feed her children. Sāramā found out the place and informed Indra about it so that her children will get fed. (Rgveda, Mandhāla, Chapter 5).

SĀRAMĀ II. Wife of Vībhṛṣṇa and daughter of the Gandharva called Śailīsa. Sāramā consoled Sītā weeping under the Asoka tree in Lanka. (Vilāmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakanda, Canto 33, Verse 1).

SĀRAMĀ III. Daughter of Dākaprājapati by his wife Aslā. She was married by Kaśyapa maharsi and from her were born the ferocious animals on earth. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 6). SĀRAŅEYAS I. A King of the dynasty of Bharata. It is stated in Bhāgavata, Skanda 9, that Sāraṇeya was the son of Svavalka. (Svaphalaka).

SĀRAŅEYAS II. The son of the dog Sāramā (See under Sāramā II).

SĀRAŅEYASANA. A hell. (See the section Naraka under Kaṇa).

SĀTANA. A serpent born in Viśnu's dynasty. It was doomed to death at Janamejaya's serpent yajña. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 5).

SĀRAŅA I.
1) General information. A Krataya of the Yadu clan. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 17, that he was the son of Vasudeva by Devaki and the brother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Subhadra.
2) Other details.
(i) This Śrīkṛṣṇa was one of those who took the dowry to Hastināpura at the marriage of Arjuna and Subhadra. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 32).
(ii) Śrīkṛṣṇa shows the court of Yuddhīṣṭhra. (M.B. Sāhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 39).
(iii) Sāraṇa participated in the Raśāṣṭā sacrifice of Yuddhīṣṭhra. (M.B. Sāhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 15).
(iv) When Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to Hastināpura from Dwārakā to take part in the horse-sacrifice of Yuddhīṣṭhra, Śrīkṛṣṇa also accompanied him. (M.B. Āvamedha Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 4).
(v) Sāraṇa was the foremost of those who disguised Samba the son of Jāmbavati as a woman, and abused the hermits. (M.B. Māmaṭa Parva, Chapter I, Verse 15).

SĀRAŅA II. A minister of Rāvaṇa. (For details see the word Śukasārāṇa).

SĀRANYA. A wife of Śīrva. (Rgveda, 10, 17, 2).

SĀRAKI. A monkey, who accompanied Hanumān to the southern regions in search of Sītā. (Vilāmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiskināda Kānda, Canto 44).

SĀRASA II. A son of Yadu. He founded the city Krauṇḍapura on the banks of the river Vieni in South India. (Harivamśa, 2, 56, 27).

SĀRASANA. See under Citraśārana.

SĀRASTAMBA. A sacred place in ancient times. He who bathes here will attain the state where he is served by aparās. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 28).

SĀRASVATA II. See under Apāntarātanmas.

SĀRASVATA II. An ancient hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sālīya Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 7, that Sārvasvata was born in the house who had been happened to see the celestial maid Ambāṣa and became excited, and seminal discharge occurred to him. The semen fell in the river Sārvasvata. The river became pregnant and delivered a child. This child grew up and became the famous hermit named Sārvasvata. After the death of the hermit Dāndhī, due to scarcity of rain a great famine occurred which lasted for twelve years. When the famine became unbearable all the hermits on the basin and banks of the river Sārvasvata began to migrate to other places leaving all their possessions behind, to save their lives. But Sārvasvata alone remained on the banks of Sārvasvata, living on fish obtained from the river, engaged in meditation and study of Vedas.

After twelve years the famine ended and the country became prosperous as before. The hermits who had gone to other places began to come back to their hermitages. The desire to study Vedas grew up in their minds. But there was not a single person, well-versed in the Vedas, except Sārvasvata. So all the hermits accepted him as their teacher. Thus Sārvasvata taught the Vedas to sixty thousand hermits who returned to their hermitages. (M.B. Sālīya Parva, Chapter 50).

In course of time the place where the hermitage of Sārvasvata stood, became famous under the name Sārvasvata tirtha. Tungaṅgakāranya is another name of this place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verses 43-50).

In ancient days there were two schemes of study known as Kāṅdāṅkramaṇaṣṭha and Sārvasvapataṣṭha for the Taittiriya-collection (Sanhitā). But today the Kāṅdāṅkramaṇaṣṭha has become quite extinct. The following is a description, given in Sāmkaravatmānamāla stating how the 'Sārvasvapataṣṭha' attained so vigorous a vogue.

Once owing to the curse of the hermit Darvāsas, the river Sārvasvata took birth as a woman in the house of a Brahmin, who belonged to the Gotra of Ātreyas. Later from that same Brahmin she conceived and gave birth to a son named Sārvasvata. The river Sārvasvati herself, taught her son the Vedas completely, and then sent him to Kurukṣetra to do penance. As a result of this penance Sārasvata got an original Kramapātha (serial) taught by his guru, Sanśānta. He taught those serial lessons to his disciples. In course of time these serial lessons got the name Sārasvatapātha, which earned metaphysical and philosophical importance.

SĀRASVATA III. A hermit who lived in the western regions. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Śanti Parva, Chapter 201, Verse 30, that this Sārasvata was the son of the hermit Atithi. Atithi.

SĀRASVATA IV. Mention is made in Padma Purāṇa, Svarga-khanda, about another hermit Sārasvata, who taught the Vedas to several disciples in Tungakāranya.

SĀRASVATA V. The people who lived in a particular region of Western Bharata. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9.)

SARASVATI I. Divinity should be known.

1) Both Sārasvati is the daughter of Brahmā. Kamadeva was born from Brahmā's heart; Krodha (anger) was born from his eyebrows, Lobha, from his lower lip, Susravātī, from his face; the Sindhust from his genitals, and Nīrtti, from his anus.

The following story about the birth of Sārasvati is from Brahmāyuddha Purāṇa, Chapter 17:

Brahmā got ready for creation, and while in meditation satvaguna (sublime quality) began swelling up in his mind wherefrom a girl was born. Brahmā asked her who she was. She answered: "I am born from you. You fix for me a seat and duties." Then Brahmā told her that her name was Sārasvati and ordained that she should stay on the tip of everybody's tongue. You should especially on the tongues of learned people. You should also exist on earth in the form of a river, and assuming a third form you should live in me too," Sārasvati agreed to this.

2) Curse of Sārasvati. See under Gāṅga.

3) Mided Kumbhakarna. When Kumbhakarna requested Brahmā for a boon, Sārasvati, at the instance of the latter, lodged herself in the tongue of Kumbhakarna and made him ask for Nidrāvatī (sleep), something different from what he really desired to get. Vīr Nirdevaṇa (absence of Devas).

4) Revisited Badavagni (all-consuming fire). Badavagni was born at the quarter between the Brāhmanas and Ḥēyāyas. Badavagni is flames of Auruva, the Bhāgavata. (See under Auruva). It was Sārasvati who took the Agni to the ocean. As a result of this, Sārasvati became a river in India. The story is told in the Sṛṣṭikhaṇḍa of Padma Purāṇa as follows:

The world was about to be burnt in Badavagni, which originated from Auruva, when Indra requested Sārasvati that he should deposit this agni in the western ocean; or else the world will be consumed in its flames. To this Sārasvati told Vīgāna as follows: "I am not a free person. I will do nothing without the permission of my father. Therefore, please think of some other means.

The Devas, who understood Sārasvati's nature, went to Brahmā with their case. Immediately he called Sārasvati and asked her to deposits Badavagni in the western ocean for the safety of himself and the Devas. Unable to disobey her father, Sārasvati, with tears in her eyes, agreed to do so. Then Gāṅga followed her and she told the former that she (Gāṅga) would see her flowing northwards when she reached the eastern region surrounded by Devas.

Sārasvati sent bucket after bucket of the flames like Gāṅga, Vamanā Manoramā, Gāyati and Sāvitrī who followed her. Then she appeared at the ārāma of Uṣaṅka under the Plakṣa tree in the presence of the Devas. Just as Śiva carried Gāṅga, the Plakṣa tree bore Sārasvati and immediately did Śiva give to her Badavagni in a pot. Because of his blessing the agni did not burn her hands. She went towards the north with the pot and came to Puskara, and she stopped there to redeem the sins of people. It is believed to this very day that those who drink water from the Puskara will attain Brahma-loka.

From Puskara Sārasvati flowed towards the west and reaching a date-garden not far off from Puskara it rose up again where Sārasvati is known as Nandā. There is also another reason for the name Nandā. Once upon a time there was a king called Prabhājanī. While hunting in the forest he saw a deer inside a cluster of shrubs and he shot an arrow at it. Then the deer told the king: "What a crime this ! You have wounded me, who am feeding my child. I have heard that the king shall not kill a deer while it is engaged in drinking, sleeping or nursing. Maya, who have done this cruel act, be transformed into a tiger and roam about this thorny forest." Saving again and again that he did not notice that the deer was feeding its child, the king begged for absolution from the curse. Taking pity on the weeping king the deer told him that he would be redeemed from the curse when he had talked with the cow called Nandā, which would go there after a hundred years.

According to the above curse the king got transformed into a tiger and spent hundred years eating wild animals. After hundred years were over a herd of cows came there grazing under the leadership of a cow called Nandā. Beautiful Nandā used to walk ahead of the other cows and graze alone at a secret place in the forest. There was a mountain called Rokha there, on the banks of the river. The northern side of the mountain was a dense forest infested by cruel animals. There lived there a very cruel and terrible tiger as big as a mountain. A generous person called Nandā was feeding the cows with grass etc. Nandā, the cow, got separated from the herd and came to the river. The tiger ran after it asking it to stop. Crying aloud the cow said: "Oh tiger; I have a child, which has not begun even tasting grass and it is awaiting the return of its mother to the cow-shed at dusk. I shall go and take leave of the child and return so that you may eat me." Taking pity on the cow the tiger granted its prayer. It returned duly to the tiger at dusk. The tiger, taken by surprise, killed the cow and asked for her name. The cow answered that it was named Nandā by its master, Nanda. As soon as the name was uttered Prabhājanī was released from his old curse and he became the former king. Dharmadeva then appeared there and asked her to choose the boon she liked and she replied as follows: "I, with my child, must attain the ultimate place and the secret place must become a sacred place for munis. Also, let this river Sārasvati, come to be known as Nandā, by my name." Nandā immediately ascended to heaven and Prabhājanī returned to his palace. River Sārasvati came to be called Nandā from that day; after flowing through the above-mentioned date-garden towards the south for some distance Sarasvatī (Nandā) flowed again towards the north. She reached the ocean and deposited therein the pot of Bādevāgni. (Padma Purāṇa, Śrīśīkāndha).

5) Sarasvatī as Brahmā's wife. The Purāṇas mention three wives of Brahmā; Sarasvatī, Sāvitrī and Gāyatrī. But, the three are, according to Matsya Purāṇa, one and the same person. The Matsya Purāṇa mentions—

Brahmā created, from his own effulgence, a woman, who became famous under the names Sāturī, Sāvitrī, Gāyatrī and Brāhmā. Brāhmā fell in love with his daughter and noticing the fact she turned away to the right side of her father. Then did a face appear on his right side. To avoid the amorous looks of the father, she slid off to both his sides, and faces appeared on three sides of Brāhmā. Then Sarasvatī jumped up to the sky and a fifth face appeared on his head, turned upwards. Finding escape impossible she yielded to the desire of Brāhmā and they enjoyed honey-moon for a hundred years. To them was born a son called Svāyambhūva or Viṣṇu.

At one place in Skanda Purāṇa, Sāvitrī and Gāyatrī are referred to as different individuals. (See under Sāvitrī).

6) Idol of Sarasvatī. Sarasvatī, clad in white clothes, sits on a white lotus. She holds in her hands a string of beads, book and Viṇā. She is depicted in sitting, standing and dancing postures. She is conceived as Śakti as Śukra and Vīṣṇu as also as Śiva. In certain old works in Bengali, Sarasvatī, instead of Bhubandev, is to be seen along with Viṣṇu. Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 50, enjoins that idols of Sarasvatī in temple should hold in its hands book, string of beads and Viṇā.

7) Other information.

(i) It was on the banks of Sarasvatī that Vyāsa performed tapas and Suka was born. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 1).

(ii) There are various references to Sarasvatī in the Kṛṣṇadiya.

(iii) Sarasvatī shines forth in Indra's court. (Sūkha Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 19).

(iv) Once Sarasvatī advised the muni called Tārkṣya. (Vana Parva, Chapter 185).

(v) During Tripurārākṣa (burning of the city of the Tripuras) Sarasvatī appeared as a passage for the chariot of Śiva to advance. (Karma Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 34).

(i) Muni Viṣṇusūrya once thought of Sarasvatī and she appeared before him wearing ornaments of jewels and consonants and sounding ʻOm. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 318, Verse 14).

SARAVAN. River Sarasvatī, flowing through north India, is according to Purāṇic conception, Sarasvatī devī who has assumed the form of a river. (See under Sarasvatī 1). The following information about river Sarasvatī is from the Mahābhārata.

(i) King Matsyāna once performed a yajña on the banks of river Sarasvatī. At the close of the yajña Sarasvatī devi appeared and chose the King as her husband, and a son called Tāṁsu was born to the couple. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 26).

(ii) River Sarasvatī is one of the seven tributaries of river Gāngā and its source is under the Plaksa tree. One who drinks its water will become free from sin. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 19).

(iii) Sarasvatī worships Varuna in his court. (Śukha Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 19).

(iv) The Pāṇḍavas, while travelling in the forest, crossed the river. (Vana Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 2).

(v) Śrī Kṛṣṇa conducted a yajña in the plains of river Sarasvatī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 14).

(vi) Kāsaṇika forest is on the banks of Sarasvatī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 41).

(vii) It is a holy river. If one bathes in it and worships one's ancestors one will attain Sarasvatatokha. (Vana Parva, Chapter 89, Verse 66).

(viii) Dādhanaka had his ʻārama on the banks of the river. (Vana Parva, Chapter 100, Verse 13).

(ix) Muni Lomasā once extolled the greatness of river Sarasvatī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 20).

(x) The river disappears in Viṣṇunātiṣṭha and reappears at Camaśodabha. (Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 3).

(xi) It is the source of Agni. (Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 22).

(xii) There are many holy places on the plains of the river. They are described in Chapters 33-34 of Śalya Parva.

(xiii) River Sarasvatī once carried Vaṣiṣṭha in its flow. (See under Vaṣiṣṭha).

(xiv) Vāsūmīrta cursed Sarasvatī. (See under Vaṣiṣṭha).

(xv) Sarasvatī returned to Dādhanaka mahārāja the son born to him; he blessed her. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 51).

(xvi) Balabhadrākīma once extolled the greatness of Sarasvatī. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 54, Verse 33).

(xvii) Arjuna appointed the son of Śātakyā as the master of a particular region on the banks of the river. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 71).

(xviii) Following the death of Śrī Kṛṣṇa his 16008 wives drowned themselves to death in Sarasvatī. (Śvargārūpa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 25).

SARASVATĪ IIII. Wife of Manu. (Udyogya Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 14).

SARASVATĪ IV. Wife of Dādhanaka mahārāja. The couple had a son called Sarasvatī. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 101, Verse 9).

SARASVATĪSĀGARASĀGAMĀ. The point where Sarasvatī joins the ocean. It is considered to be a holy place. Candra regained his brilliance once dimmed by the curse of Dākṣa by bathing at this holy place. (For details see under Candra IV, Para 6).

SARASVATĪSĀGAMĀ. A sacred place. Brahmā and the mahārāja once worshipped Viṣṇu here. He who bathes here will attain Brahmaloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 151).

SARASVATYARUJĀSAĀGAMĀ. A sacred place in Kurukṣetra. One who bathes here andfasts for three nights will be freed from the sin of Brahmacātā (killing of a brahmin). (Vana Parva, Chapter 83).

SARAVANA. The place where Subrahmapīya was born. (See under Subrahmapīya).

ŚARAVINDU (ŚUŚABINDU). A famous King born in the dynasty of Bharata, son of Dvīyasat. His father's name was Gītarītha. He was a great ascetic and a powerful emperor. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha). He had SARAYU. A river very famous in the Puranas. The most important things associated with the river are given below:

(i) Seven tributaries of Ganga originate from the golden peaks of the Himalayas and Sarayu is one of them. Those who bathe in the river will be absolved from sins. (Adi Parva, Chapter 169, Verse 20)

(ii) The river exists in Varuna’s court worshipping him. (Adi Parva, Chapter 8)

(iii) Sri Krishna, Arjuna, and Bhima, on their way to Girdhara from Indraprastha crossed this river. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 28)

(iv) It was at Gotham (or Gopratara) in this river that Sri Rama drowned himself to death and attained Vipujapada. (Vana Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 70)

(v) This river is the source of Agni (fire). (Vana Parva, Chapter 229, Verse 22)

(vi) Vasishtha once blocked the course of Ganga on its way to Kaalasa at Mānasaavara. But, Ganga broke the obstruction and flowed on, and Sarayu is the stream that started from there (Anuśasan Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 23).

(vii) It is said that the rivers to be remembered both at dawn and dusk. (Anuśasan Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 21).

(viii) The city of Ayodhya is situated on the banks of Sarayu. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākatha, Canto 3, Verse 5).

SARAYU II. Wife of the Agni Vira. The couple had a son called Śiddhi. (Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Verse 11).

SĀRDUL. A spy of Rāvana. It was he, who informed Rāvana about the arrival of Rāma. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakīnlī, Canto 30).

SĀRDULI. Daughter of Kasyapaprajapati by his wife Krishavatī, who had ten daughters including Sārduli. Tiger, leopard etc. were born from Āśāduli. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākatha, Canto 25).

SARGA (CREATION). Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20 refers to various sargas as follows.

The first creation is that of greatness (Mahatva) i.e. Brahman. The second creation is that of tamātas called bhātisārga. The third is Vishkunjasarga also called śārndhīyasārga. These three kinds of creation are called Pārāśastra (natural creation) and that is conscious and intelligent creation. The fourth is mukhyasārga. Mukhyas are immovable. The fifth is tiryagyoniṣṭya. Since it functions side-long it is called tiryakyaśrotas. The sixth is the creation of Urdhvasrotas, called devasārga. The seventh is the creation of arvākṣivas, called manasāsarga. The eighth, anagrasārga, is both sattvic and tamasic. Thus, vālawāsārga are five in number and prākṛtasārga three. The ninth sarga is the Kaumārā sarga, which is both vaikrita and Pārāśastra. The fundamental root cause of the universe is the above nine creations of Brahman. Prākṛtaśastra is of three types: nitya (eternal), saṁśātra (casual) and dainandina (daily). Nitya'sārga is the creation after interference of beings.

SĀRITA. One of the prominent sons of Garuda. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101).

SĀRITKA. A hermit who was a prominent member of the council of Yudhishtira. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 13.

SĀRIMJAYA. A King in ancient India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 186, Verse 19, that this King was present at the Śvayambhur (marriage) of Draupadi.

SĀRIRA. (BODY). Body is constituted of the five elements, earth, water, fire, air and sky (ether). What is solid or hard in the body is earth; liquid, is water; hot or burning, fire; what gives motion to the body is air and what are pores in the body is sky.

Body is that which exists and functions with the five organs of knowledge, ear, nose, tongue and skin, and the five organs of action like Upasana (sex organ), Pānī (hand), Piśa (leg) and Vāṇi (speech). The body depends on the six tastes, sweet, sour, salty, bitter, hot and astringent. (Kāsu. anā, madhura, laverγa, tikā and kaśāya). The female organs of reproduction are subject to the influence of the five elements (chātu) of seven colours, white, red, dark (black), black and white, yellow, brassy and faint-white (Pandura). Vānaprakāṣas (wind, bile and phlegm) are intertwined in the body. Since the body is formed of vital fluids from the sex organs of the father and the mother it is divīyam (males with male and females with female organs of reproduction). The body exists by four kinds of foods, bhūjya, bhākṣya, kāhāgya and lehya. After coitus, within one night, the male and female semen and blood contaminate into one body in the womb (Kāla). Within seven days it becomes foamy (bududa). After a fortnight it becomes solid (pīda) and after one month hard (kajuna). During the second month the head of the child is formed; in the third month its feet; in the fourth its ankles, stomach and waist are formed. In the fifth month is formed the back (Prśtha) and face, nose, eyes and ears are formed in the sixth month. During the seventh month life enters the child’s body. By the eighth month all the signs of the human being are completed in the child. If the vitality and effulgence of the mother are more than those of the father the off-spring will be female and vice versa; if both are in exactly equal proportions the child will be a eunuch, neither male nor female. If the parents were sad and worried during the time of the mother’s conception, the child born would be either blind, lame or a pigmy. If the season is cast into two by wind (in the womb) the mother would give birth to twins. In the ninth month the child will be given with knowledge and it will remember what caste it belonged and what all good and evil actions it did in its previous life.

SĀRISRKA. Son of the bird Mandapāla. (See under Kṛṣṇa-vadhavālā, Parva 8).

SĀRNJAYA. A Srijaya King. Mention is made about this King who had been successful in the Bhadrāśvatā, in Kṛṣṇa, Manjula 6, Anuvāka 47, Sākta 25.

SĀRKA. A son of King Kusuma. Sārka had a brother called Gāni. (Bhadrāśvāṇa Purāṇa, Chapter 57).

SĀRMACA. A famous rural region in the northeast of India. Bhimasena conquered the region during his triumphal tour. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 13).

SĀRMIṬHA. A brahmin scholar. (See under Pannakāla).

SĀRMĪŚṬHĀ. Daughter of Vṛṣaparvan, King of the anuras. (For details see under Devayāni).
SÄRGKA. Sri Kraţa's bow. The following facts about the bow are gathered from the Mahâbhârata.

(i) When Kraţa exhibited his Viśvarûpâ (cosmic form) in the assembly of the Kauravas he had held in one hand this bow. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 131, Verse 10).

(ii) Kraţa's Sārgka is on a par with Indra's bow called Vijaya. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 4).

(iii) Sārgka is one of the three divine bows. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 5).

(iv) Sārgka was made by Brahmâ and presented to Kraţa. (M.B. Southern text, Anûśâsana Parva, Chapter 141).

SÄRGKAKOPÂKYÂNA. The story of the Sârgaka bird. (See under Khâdjavâdâhu).

SÄRGKARAVA. A mahârâj. He was one of the officiating priests at the Sarpasatra of Janamejaya. (Adi Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 6).

SARP. A son of Vâsî. According to Agni Purâna the sons of Vâsî were called Ekaśâraduâs; but according to Mahâbhârata, Sarp, one of the Ekaśâraduâs is the son of Sthûra and the great-great-grandson of Brahmâ. (Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 2).

SARPABALI. An offering made by Hindus in South India to groups of serpents. Serpents are pleased by songs by Pulluvan and Pulluvati (male and female members of a Hindu sub-caste). To draw Kalams (drawings on floor conveying certain esoteric meanings), to make offerings and for the Pulluvans to sing—these form important elements of Sarpabal. The ball has a connection with the story of Khâdjavâdâhu. The Khâdjavâdâhu, the ball of the Khâdjavâdâhu, the ball that a Pulluvan woman saved Taksaka, who escaped to the ocean after the Khâdjavâdâhu forest was burnt down. Songs by Pulluvan and Pulluvati are unavoidable items in Sarpabal.

Drawing the Kalam is a very important item in Sarpabal. It is drawn on a platform made of putrumanau (small heaps of earth thrown up by earthworms and termites), the platform being demarcated by four pieces of coconut wood. The platform is covered with silk and tender coconut leaves are hung all around it. The Kalam is drawn with rice powder, and other coloured powders. The husk of paddy burnt into charcoal is powdered and with it serpents are sketched first on the mandana (platform). The naga drawings are tinted with colour. The colour powders are collected in coconut shells and sprinkled on the drawings through hollow shells. Pulluvans exhibit wonderful artistic talent in making the drawings.

When the kalam is drawn worship of naga is begun compulsorily by a male member of the house, and he is technically called 'Kalastii Kâimal'. He has been observing 'vratâ' during two days previous to the pûjâ (worship). Having taken his bath and wearing an additional cloth across his shoulders (Uttutiya) he comes with water in a jar. Four lamps should be burning on four sides of the kalam. Also, paddy, rice, tender coconut, milk, fruit etc. should be placed on its four sides. As directed by the Pulluvan the 'Kâimal' conducts the worship by offering flowers, water etc. The Kâimal is to sit on each of the four sides of the kalam and do the pûjâ. Then water (made of cloth) should be lighted, water sprinkled on it and with that the Kâimal should go around the kalam thrice. With the wicks placed on a leaf with paddy underneath it and also with burning camphor he should go round the kalam. Then the Pulluvan playing on the Vinâ in front and a male member of the house with a vessel containing milk, a female member holding a lamp, two girls holding brass plates and the Kâimal and all of them following the Pulluvan go round the kalam thrice and proceed to the serpents' temple in the compound, pray and return. After all these persons are seated, the Kâimal washes the feet of and puts flowers on the heads of the two girls, who had held the brass plates; seats them on two pieces of round wood in the kalam. The girls will have mirror etc. in their hands. They should concentrate their eyes on the heads of the serpents. Now begins the Pulluvan pâtu (song by Pulluvan). At the time of the worship they will be beating tunes on a brass pot, music being made on the Vinâ.

Pulluvan pâtu is the most important item in the whole programme. The songs relate to the burning of the khâdjavâhu forest. Kâliyamardana (suppression of the naga king) etc. One Pulluvan sings songs and a second one repeats them. A minimum of two Pulluvans and two females are required for the purpose. As the songs acquire momentum the girls begin to shake their heads and to wipe off the kalam. Then the girls are asked questions and they answer 'Wânu'. In a short time the girls will swoon and fall on the ground. They are brought back to consciousness by water being sprinkled on them and by fanning. This is in general the nature of a Sarpabal.

SARPADÉVI. Sarpadevi, also called nágârthôtha, is a sacred place in Kuruksetra. A bath here is as beneficial as the performance of an agniṣṭoma yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83).

SARPAMÂLÎ. A mahârâj gifted with divine powers. He had a talk with Sri Kraţa on the latter's way to Hastinapura. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83).

SARPÂNTA. A bird born in the line of Garuda's children. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 12).

SAŚABINDU. See under Saravindu.

SAŚĀDA I. Son of Vikuśi, the King of Ayodhyā. Parasurāma was Saśāda's son. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 17).

SAŚĀDA II. A son of Vikuśi. His real name was Vikuṣi. (For the detailed story as to how 'Vikuṣi' became 'Saśāda' see under Vikuṣi).

SAṢĀKA. A caste. Karna, during his triumphal tour, defeated the King of the Saṣākas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 254, Verse 21).

SAṢALOMA. A King very much reputed in the Purāṇas. He did tapas at Kuruksetra and attained heaven. (Ātramviniška Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 14).

SAṢAYANA. A sacred place. In the waters of river Sarasvatī at this place the full moon reflects in the form of a śāda (hare). A bath here will make a man as bright and luminous as the moon. (Vana Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 114).

SAṢIKA. A rural area in ancient India. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 49).

SAṢIΚALĀ. Daughter of Subhā, King of Kāśi. She was married by a prince Sudarśana who had been driven out of his kingdom by Yudhājit.

As she became a young woman Saṣikalā heard about Sudarśana, who lived in the forest with his mother and fell in love with him. One night Devi appeared in dream to her and told her that marriage with Sudarśana would take place, and at those words of Devi she awoke from sleep and began laughing. Though her mother asked Saṣikalā about the reason for her laughing thus, she answered not, but continued laughing. One day while she was picnicking in the Campaka forest, an old brahmin came there and described to her about the great personality and beauty of Sudarśana, who then was staying with his mother at Bharadvājārama. Saṣikalā's heart yearned to be with Sudarśana.

Sudarśana, after the death of his father Dhruvasandhi, lived with his mother Manoramā and her father. But, Yudhājit killed Manoramā's mother also. It was after this that Sudarśana and his mother took refuge in the āśrama of Bharadvājārama. One of these days, Nisāda, King of Śrīgīverapura and a friend of Sudarśana's father (Dhruvasandhi) came to Bharadvājārama and presented a chariot, which possessed mysterious powers, to Sudarśana. The muni were pleased at this and imparted to Sudarśana the Āsana of Āsana, which gave one who practised it all that one desired, and after the above incident Sudarśana began slowly to come out of the Āśrama. He went about the forests in the chariot presented by Nisāda, and he was astonished to find many an armed soldier surround him wherever he went. This happened because of the mysterious powers of the chariot.

It was at this time that King Subhā decided to conduct the Swayamvara of his daughter Saṣikalā. Kings from all lands came. Saṣikalā told her mother in secret about her desire to marry Sudarśana, and the mother in turn told about this to the father. But, he was not for it. Then Saṣikalā sent a messenger secretly to Sudarśana to request him to be present at the Swayamvara, and Sudarśana and his mother started for the palace of the King of Kāśi and when they reached it, kings like Yudhājit had already come there. A rumour was spread that Subhā, insatiably ignoring all the crowned heads, was going to marry his daughter to Sudarśana, a mere beggar. The assembled Kings, therefore, got themselves ready to pick a row with Subêka, but, he pacified them with the assurance that the Śvayambhûva of Śakñikā would formally be conducted and her husband could then be selected by herself. That night Śakñikā’s parents tried their best to divert her heart away from Sudarśana, to no purpose and the same night she was duly married to him. By the next morning word about the marriage became public and all the Kings, who had come for the Śvayambhûra decided in conference to kill Sudarśana on his way back home with his wife, and abduct Śakñikā. Accordingly on the fourth day after the wedding when Sudarśana and Śakñikā were returning to Ayodhya escorted by the army allotted to them by Subêhû, King Yaduhjíti and his followers attacked them from their hiding place. In the battle that ensued Devi appeared and helped Sudarśana, who defeated the enemies. People of Ayodhya received with enthusiasm the victorious Sudarśana and he was crowned their King. In later years he became famous as emperor Sudarśana.

ŚASTA. The presiding deity (idol installed) in the Sabarimala temple.
1) Bhûta Siva fell in love with Mahâvânuk in his assumed form as Mohini and Sástâ was the result of their union. (Kambârâmâyana, Bâlakânâda). This story occurs in the 8th Chandâ of Bhágavata and the Asura Kândâ of Śkandâ Purâna, but only the Śkandâ Purâna refers to the child by name Sástâ.
2) Other information.
(i) In the battle between Indra and the asura called SaраФmahâdha the former depicted Sástâ for the protection of Śađevedi. (Śkandâ Purâna, Asura Kânda).
(ii) Sástâ is supposed to have two wives called Purâna and Puṣkâla and a son called Satyâka. (Aṣṭottaraśa-takam about Sástâ; also see under Sabarimala).

ŚASTHIDEVI.
1) General. A Devi born out of 1/6 part of original nature (Mahâprakṛtī). Since she was born out of 1/6 part, she is called Śaśthidevi. Also called Devasena, Śaśthidevi is the patron-devi of children. She grants them life. She protects them as the real mother and always remains by their side. She has earned Siddhis by the practice of yoga, is the best among the asaṃâtras (eight-mothers) and is the wife of Bhágavata.
2) Blessings of the Devi. She is foremost among the devi, who bless children. There is a story in the ninth cento of Devi Bhágavata revealing the importance of Śaśthidevi.

Though Priyâvatâ, son of Śvayambhûva Manu was at first averse to marriage he, at last, married, on the insistence of Brahma, a woman called Mâlû. For long he had no issues and sad at heart he got a putrâkâmaṇi yâjâ performed by Kaṭyânaprajâpati as a result of which Mâlû got pregnant, and delivered in the twelfth year. But, the child was still-born and Priyâvatâ set out with the corpse for the burning ghat. But, he could not make up his mind to give it up and so decided himself also to court death. Then he saw a divine planet stop there with a woman in it, who spoke to him as follows: “I am Devasena, the maternal daughter of Brahmâ and wife of Śkandadeva. It is I, who grant son to the sonless, wife to the wifelss, husband to the husbandless, wealth to the poor and the results of their actions to all.” So saying the Devi took from Priyâvatâ the corpse of his child and brought it back to life.

ŚASTHHRADĀ. A sacred place. Bathing here is more beneficial than gifting away food. (Anûsârana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 36).

ŚASOLKAMUKHÎ. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 22).

ŚASYA. An ancient King in Bhara. It is said in Mahâbhara, Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 17, that this King remains in the palace of Yama and glorifies him.

ŚATA. A great yaksha friend of Vaiśravana. (See under Dipakarṣu for the story about how Sāta became a cursed Yakṣa).

ŚATABALI. A peepal tree on the peak of mount Kumuda. From the branches of the tree milk, butter-milk, ghee, juice of Sugarcane etc. descend carrying with them divine rice, clothes, ornaments etc. to the Kumuda mountain and flow in rivers towards the north. The people in those places get their rice, clothes ornaments etc. from the river. Muniśkidevi praised by Devas has her abode here. Those who drink milk etc.
flowing in the river will not be affected by hunger, thirst and signs of old age. Nor will any danger overtake them. They will live long. (Devi Bhágavata, 8th Śkandha).

ŚATABALI. A great monkey under the leadership of Śukrâvan. He was the leader of the monkeys deputed to the northern regions to look for Śita. (Vaṁśikī Râmaâyaṇa, Kiśkindhi Kânda Canto 43).

ŚATABHISAK. A star.
He who gives gifts of fragrant materials like sandalwood on the day of this star will, after death, live with the aparâs and enjoy fragrant smell. (Anûsârana Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 30).

ŚATACANDRA. A brother of Śakuni. In the battle of Kuruksetra he fought on the side of the Kauravas and got defeated by Bhima. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 23).

ŚATADHANUS (ŚATADHANVÂ). A Yadava king.
(For details see under Kaṭaravâra Para 2).

ŚATADVÎ. The Purânic name of the Indian river now called Sudêj. Grief-stricken over the death of his son, Vâsîtha once jumped into this river, which, realizing that the mahârsi was as powerful as fire, divided itself into many branches and flowed in various directions, and hence the river came to be known as Śatadvî.
(Adi Parva, Chapter 176, Verse 8). Once in talking about sublime rivers to Śiva, Parvati mentioned this river also. (Anûsârana Parva, Chapter 146, Verse 18).
Śatadvî is also one of the ten rivers referred to in the Ṛgveda.

ŚATADYUMNA. A king in ancient India, son of Câkuṣa Manu by his wife Nadvâla. (Vîṣṇu Purâṇa, Part I, Chapter 13). Nadvâla had ten brilliant sons including Śatadyumna. Satadyumna once gifted away a house of gold to the brahmin called Mûgâla and thereby attained heaven. (Śînti Parva, Chapter 224, Verse 32).

ŚATAGHANTA. A female attendant of Subrahmaṇya.
(Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 11).

ŚATAHRAĐA. Mother of the Râkṣaṇa called Virûḍha.
His father’s name was Jaya. (Vaṁśikī Râmaṇya, Aryaṇâkâṇḍa).
SATAJIT I. A King of the Yādava dynasty. Śatajit, son of Sahasraśat, had three sons called Mahāhaṁsa, Vepuhaśa, and Saitya. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skandha).

SATAJIT II. Son of Śri Kṛṣṇa. From Jambava. Śatajit met with his death in the quarrels among the Yādavas at Prabhāśātpurāṇa. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SATAJYOTI. Son of King Subhṛata. The King had one lakh sons. (Adi Parva, Chapter I, Verse 44).

SATAKARŚI. See under Mandakarśa.

SATAKASI. II. Son of King Purushottama. He ruled the country for fifty-six years. (Matsya Purāṇa).

SATAKSİ. Another form of Devi. (For details see under Durgāmā).

SATAKUMBHA. A sacred river, considered to be the source of agni. (Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 22).

SATALOCANA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Sāliya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 60).

SATAMUKHA I. (SATAMUKHA RAVANA). Father of Indumukhi, the wife of Subrahmanya Rāvana. Satamukha had defeated Pāṭala Rāvana in battle. He gave the eternal weapon called Kaṭhorakaṭhāra as dowry for his daughter’s wedding. (See under Subrahmanya Rāvana).

SATAMUKHA II. An asura, a great devotee of Śiva. He observed tapas for hundred years making offerings of his flesh in the fire. Śiva, who was pleased with his tapas, granted him many boons. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 58).

SATANANDA I. Priest of King Janaka. He was the son of Gautama by Ahalya. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha and Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278). Satananda felt elated that Śrī Rāma restored to Ahalya her old sanctity and also that his father Gautama received back his mother and lived with her. It was Satananda, who acted as high-priest at the wedding of Sītā with Rāma.

SATANANDA II. A mahārāja, who possessed divine gifts. He once paid a visit to Bhīma. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 8).

SATANANDA. A female attendant of Subrahmanya. (Sāliya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 11).

SATANIKĀ I. A King born in the dynasty of Yāyati. He was the son of Bhṛhadatta and father of Durdama. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skandha).

SATANIKĀ II. Son of Nakula. The Mahābhārata contains the following information about this Satanikā.

(i) To Nakula was born of Draupadī a son called Satanikā. (Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 127).

(ii) This Satanikā was born from an aspect of Viśva-deva. (Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 127).

(iii) Once upon a time there was in the Kaurava dynasty a Rājaśīrṣa called Satānika and it was to perpetuate that name that Nakula named his son 'Satānika'. (Adi Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 84).

(iv) This Satanikā defeated in the great war Jayasena, Dusāraka and Citrasena. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 42; Chapter 79, Verse 46 and Drōna Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 12).

(v) Satanikā fought with Vṛṣṇaṇa, Śruṭakaṁśa, the son of Durgārātra and Atvākhaṁśa. (Drona Parva, Chapter 167, Verse 7; Karna Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 15 and Chapter 85, Verse 14).

(vi) He killed Bhūtakarmana and the prince of Kalinga in the great war. (Drona Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 23; Karna Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 21).

(vii) He died in the great war hit by the arrow of Āsavaṁkhaṇa. (Saupālika Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 57).

(viii) He is referred to by the following names also in the Mahābhārata, viz. Nakulaputra, Nakuladēśa, Nakul..

SATANIKĀ III. A prince born as the son of Janamejaya (Parīkṣet’s son) of his wife called Vapiṣṭhamā. He married the princess of Vidēha and to the couple was born a son called Āsavaṁkhaṇa. (Adi Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 86). He had also another son named Saṭaṅkāṇa. (Kathāśrītāgama). (See under Udāyana).

SATANIKĀ IV. A well-known Rājarṣi born in the Kuru dynasty. It was to perpetuate his name that Nakula called his son Satānika. (Vana Parva, Chapter 220, Verse 84).

SATANIKĀ V. A brother of Viraṭa, the King of Matsya. He was called Śuruddha. Further he was the commander-in-chief of the army of Viraṭa. When Viraṭa’s cows were lifted by the Kauravas, Satānika went to war against them along with the Trigartas, who wore golden helmets on their heads. (Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 31). He was an ally of the Pandāvas in the great war. He was wounded in the war by Bhīma and killed by Sāliya. (Drona Parva, Chapter 167, Verse 30; Bhīma Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 27).

SATANIKĀ VI. Younger brother of the Viraṭa king. He was killed by Drōna. (Drona Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 18).

SATAPATRAVANA. A forest on the western side of Dvāraka. The mountain called Sukasā is at the centre of the forest. (Saṭṭha Parva, Southern text, Chapter 33).

SATAPARVA. Wife of Sukraçıana. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 13).

SATARAṬHA. A King in ancient India. He lives in the court of Yama and worships him. (Saṭṭha Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 26).

SATARUDRA. The story of Satarudra was imparted to Śrī Rāma by Vyāsā to show that all life is mere illusion or different forms of Śrī Rāma. One dropākhyāna is the story of a contemplative sanyāsī. Whatever subject or object he conceived in his mind used to assume its form as water changes into waves, and it was a boon or great asset, which his heart had acquired as a result of its purity. He confined himself to his āsana and thought about things one after the other.

To start with, Satarudra thought to himself that he was a ‘dream person’ called jīva. While picnicking in the streets of a ‘dream-built city’ the ‘dream person’ overcame by the effect of liquor remained in an unconscious state for some time. He also felt immediately to be a Brahmin learned in the Vedas. ‘Jīva’, who transformed himself thus into a brahmin and spent during day-time overcome by exhaustion on account of work. At once he dreamt himself to have been transformed into a feudal lord or tributary King, who, after taking his meals went to sleep when he dreamt that he was changed into a great King. The King, who ruled the country peacefully changed himself one day in dream into a celestial woman. The next dream was that the woman, while it was deep asleep after a hilarious sexual act, was turned into a she-deer. The she-deer, in dream turned into a creeper, and it duly bore leaves, flowers and fruits. The creeper felt that it entwined and climbed some trees. Then he (Jivata) went into deep sleep, absolutely unaware of himself, for some time. Then he dreamt himself to have been changed into a beetle. The beetle felt attracted towards a lotus flower and got captured therein. An elephant from the forest nearby entered the ‘lotus pond’, plucked and tore into pieces the lotus flower. As the beetle had got fixed in its mind and imagination the picture of the elephant it became a skinner elephant after its death. While running about in the forest the elephant had captured himself and the King’s men captured and killed the elephant. A number of beetles gathered around the elephant to suck its ichor (madajala). Because it thought about the beetles the elephant, after its death in battle, again became a beetle, which imagined about the swan in the lotus-pond. The beetle one day got captured in the lotus-flower and became a swan, on being killed by the elephant. Thus the beetle, after taking many births and forms, became ultimately Brahma’s vehicle, the swan. While the swan once moved about the surrounding places of moun. Kaśī it saw Rudra and imagining itself to be Rudra (Rudra’s name is I am Rudra) attained Rudrahood. While associating with the parthenial Rudra he remembered his past lives, and wondering about the many continuous dreams of his, in solitude he thought like this:—‘The power of Mayā (illusion) which rules over everything in the world is truly wonderful. How curious and peculiar is the cunningness or trickeries of Mayā in creating, like mirage, the illusion that things, which did not really exist, existed. Mistaking Māyā for the truth and the fact, I roamed about in many a material desert. In one form of life I was born as Jivata, in another, King: in yet another, swan etc. and now I have attained Rudra-hood. Hundred Caturyughas and thousand years have passed in this ‘show’. Now, I will return and personally see all past episodes and I shall identify them all with myself after bestowing knowledge on them.

Having made up his mind like this, Rudra descended to the city of the old Sannyāsin. He infused life and vitality into the dead body of the sannyāsin that was there. The Sannyāsin remembered his old illusions and hallucinations. He had attained Rudrahood after crossing various stages from being Jivata. Then both of them together came to the Jivāja stage, awoke the ‘dram-person’ by giving him mind and vitality. Afterwards he took over, who assumed single form by the composition of different personalities, attained various stages like brahmin etc., awoke them too and add them to themselves (the three). Thus there came about to be hundred persons formed from aspects or fractions of Rudra, and at the instance of the real Rudra they returned to their homes and lived happily with their sons, relations etc. Those hundred persons are the Satarūpas. (Rāmāuwīka, Satarudra-pākhāyaṇa). In Verse 13, Chapter 150 of Anuśāsana Parva, Mahābhārata also is found references to the Satarūpas.

SATARŪPA. Wife of Svēyambhuva Manu, who took his sister Satarūpī as her wife. The couple had two sons called Priyavrata and Utānāpāda and two daughters Prastūti and Akūti. Prastūti was married to Dakṣaprajāpati and Akūti to Ruciṣprijāpati. (Viśu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 7).
