Puranic Encyclopaedia

A COMPREHENSIVE WORK WITH SPECIAL REFERENCE TO THE EPIC AND PURÄNIC LITERATURE

VETTAM MANI

FOREWORD

I feel flattered and consider it to be great privilege to have been asked by Shri Vetam Mani to contribute a foreword to his Puranic Encyclopaedia, a really magnificent literary production, massive in size and rich and invaluable in contents. This is the first attempt in Malayalam and for the matter of that in any Indian or foreign language, so far as I know, to produce a comprehensive and well-nigh exhaustive book of study and reference with regard to episodes, incidents, characters etc. occurring in the many Puranas and such other works in Sanskrit. In the field of mythology, with regard to variety and contents as also sheer bulk, Greece stands first. Egypt comes only next. But Indian mythology—the epics and the puranas—far exceeds and excels both Greek and Egyptian mythologies put together in merit and size. Even the preparation of a complete list of characters mentioned in our epics, puranas etc., will be a stupendous and well-nigh impossible task calling for the combined efforts of a number of scholars. But, fortunately for us, each and every such name, one need not necessarily know or be acquainted with. At the same time there are great names which compel attention and should not escape a proper study. And, such names are legion, and Shri Mani has not omitted mention of even one such name in his great work. I looked up the encyclopaedia for a few such random names, and was really surprised to find detailed treatment of the same in the book. Moreover, with reference to really important names, incidents and episodes connected with them and the whole genealogy are given. Everything is fully documented and quite authoritative. And, deep, extensive and exhaustive study, patient and untiring research and above all absolute dedication to the cause are so very patent on every page of the book. Literally and in effect Shri Mani’s is a unique contribution, the first and foremost book, in the magnificent spheres of religion, culture, scholarship and history all put together. As the pioneer in the field he can justly feel happy and proud about his rare achievement, and he deserves in ample measure the unstinted praise and appreciation of all lovers of learning and culture.

Shri Mani has already earned well-deserved reputation as a teacher, especially in Malayalam, and also as a diligent student of literature and author of talent. He evidently possesses a flair for research. All such distinguished talents and attainments of his have been fully and quite successfully commissioned in the preparation of this marvellous encyclopaedia. He has put every lover of learning and knowledge everywhere, under an eternal debt of gratitude by the publication of this noble work.

PREFACE

It is a matter of profound pleasure and pride for me that the internationally famous publishers in the field of Indology, M/s Motilal Banarsidas of Delhi are publishing the English translation of my Puranic Encyclopaedia, which was originally published in Malayalam, and which has already run into four editions.

The Purāṇas along with the Great Epics the Rāmāyana and the Mahābhārata, have for centuries, profoundly influenced Indian life and Culture. The well-known definition of a Purāṇa as a work having five characteristic features—purāṇam puruṣalakṣaṇam—namely, primary creation, secondary creation, the genealogies, the ages of Manu, and the dynastic accounts, hardly does justice to the full significance of these works. They are much more than that. While their genealogies and the dynastic accounts form the bed-rock of the political history of ancient India, they throw a flood of light on all aspects of Indian Culture, its religion, social practices, art, literature and sciences. They serve as the key to the proper understanding of the various aspects of Hinduism its beliefs, its modes of worship, its mythology, its festivals, feasts and fasts, its sacred shrines and places of pilgrimage, its philosophy, and ethics, and its theology. Truly it has been said that a Brahmin was not really wise if he did not know the Purāṇas. The study of ancient Indian history, and culture particularly religion is impossible without a proper knowledge of the Purāṇas. As a matter of fact, it is virtually impossible to understand not only ancient Indian culture and life, but also the literature in modern Indian languages, as it largely draws upon the ideas and ideologies as embodied in the contents of the Purāṇas and the Epics.

The literary writings in all Indian languages are indebted to the Epics and the Purāṇas in more than one way—their form, content, ideas and ideologies are all influenced to a greater or lesser extent by these ancient works. Direct and indirect allusions to Purāṇic episodes, characters, events, are frequently to be met with in the literary writings of all Indian languages. Teachers engaged in imparting instruction in the literature in modern Indian languages must therefore be conversant with the contents of the Purāṇas and Epics in order to be able to explain these allusions wherever they occur in the writings in modern Indian languages. However, it is well nigh impossible for an average teacher to go through the whole of this vast literature. Thus the need for a handy work of reference like the present Encyclopaedia is apparent.

The desire to compile a Purānic Dictionary that should solve many of the day to day problems of the Indian language teacher, took root in me several years ago, but I could not arrogate to myself the capacity to fulfill this urgent need. I waited for many years, for more competent and better equipped scholars to come forward and produce a work of my dreams. But since no one appeared to quench this thirst, I plunged myself into this vast ocean of Sanskrit literature, and for thirteen years I dived deep into studying not only the original texts but also modern works in English, Sanskrit, Malayalam and Hindi. This took me five years, and I spent about twenty thousand rupees on books and travelling for this project. I started the compilation on 1st January 1955, and it took me seven years to start preparing the Press copy of my work. The first edition of my ‘Puranic Nighantu’ was released in February 1964 and the remaining four were published after an interval of six months in each case. The second edition of all the five volumes was brought out in May 1967, still under the original title ‘Puranic Nighantu’. However, in the third revised and enlarged edition in one volume published in October, 1971, the name was changed to ‘Puranic Encyclopaedia’.

In an endeavour like this imperfections and drawbacks are only inevitable, and I am fully conscious of the same. But as a pioneer effort, and as a much needed aid to the teaching and study of Malayalam language and literature, I hope, be found useful. Scholars and general readers in Malayalam have been generous in welcoming the encyclopaedia. That four editions of the work had to be brought out within a period of seven years from 1967 to 1974 speaks eloquently for the merit, and utility of the work and I feel my labour and expense amply rewarded. I felt still more flattered when the celebrated firm of M/s Motilal Banarasidas of Delhi, who have already laid the world of Indology under a deep debt of obligation by their monumental publications in all fields of Indian Culture and history, mooted a proposal for publishing an English translation of the Malayalam original. I am deeply indebted to them for bringing my work before a much wider circle of readers. The onerous task of translating the work into English was entrusted to a committee of five scholars: 1. Mr. P. Rajaram Menon, Professor of English, Basel mission College, Kottayam; 2. Mr. K. R. Atchutan Nayar, retired Professor of English, C.M.S. College, Kottayam; 3. R. K. Kartha, ex-Chief Editor, Deshbandhu, Kottayam, 4. P. J. John, Retired Headmaster, Kurichi; and 5. Mr. P. N. Menon, Ollur. I need hardly point out that these members of the editorial committee are highly qualified for this work and I must gladly acknowledge the fact that they have more than amply justified the trust placed in them.

Finally, I cannot adequately express my feelings of deep gratitude to Shri Puthezathu Rama Menon, the doyen of Malayalam literature, for writing an excellent introduction to the original Malayalam edition of the work. I am also beholden to many scholars and the reading public who have been pleased to extend a most generous welcome to the Encyclopaedia.

VETTAM MANI
Pāñcāla, Abhimanyu married Utarā, daughter of the King of Vrāta. War broke out between Kauravas and Pāñcālas. On the first day itself Abhimanyu entered into a duel with Bhīṣma, King of Kosalas. In the terrible conflict with Bhīṣma, Abhimanyu broke Bhīṣma’s staff. After that he assisted his father Arjuna to fight against Bhīṣma. Verses 61-13 of Chapter 53 of Bhīṣma Parva of the Mahābhārata states, Abhimanyu’s fight with Laksmana in the second day’s battle.

Then he took his place in the Arjuna Candra Vyūha (semi-circular phalanx) formed by Arjuna. He fought fiercely with the Gandharvas. He attacked Satāla and killed Jayatama, King of Madagha, along with his elephant. We find Abhimanyu assisting Bhīṣma in M B Bhīṣma Parva, Chapters 65, 69 and 79. After that Abhimanyu defeated Laksmana, the son of Laksmana. He defeated Vaiśrava, Gāvina and others also. Later he took his position in the Śrītāla Vyūha created by Dūśarindrā. He started fighting with Bhagadatta. He defeated Ambasena and Ambuma. Next he fought a duel with Satodhana. Later he encountered the Bhīṣma’s weapon and threw it on the ground. Next he fought with Jayatatha and Sāla. Then he was caught in the Cakra Vyūha (circular phalanx) of the enemies. There he inflicted great losses upon the enemy forces.

Sāya was Turned and his brother was killed by Aśīma M B Drona Parva, Chapter 15, Verses 17-22 are a description of Abhimanyu’s battle against Bhīṣma. Bhīṣma’s arrow reached Abhimanyu’s breast. There is a story about Abhimanyu’s Parvānān in the Mahābhārata. It was Varacś, son of Candracandra, who incarnated as Abhimanyu, son of Arjuna. A conference took place between the Devas and Candracandra about the incarnation of the Devas in the world for the destruction of the wicked people. Candracandra told the Devas: “I do not see to send Deva, whom I love more than my life, to the earth. Still, I think it is not right to stand in the way of the plans of the gods. You must give one condition if I am to send my son. Let Him be born as the son of Arjuna. I am unable to be separated from him for more than sixteen years. My son will enter into the Cakra Vyūha of the enemies to be killed by them and return to me in the sixteenth year.” The devas (gods) accepted this condition. That is why Abhimanyu was killed in his sixteenth year. (M B Ar Parva, Chapter 67). 3) Military Training and War. Abhimanyu received his training in arms from his father Arjuna. Later, he went with his mother Subhādrā to Devarākā and lived for some time with his uncle Śrī Kṛṣṇa. There he tried to have regular training in arms from Śrī Kṛṣṇa. After the recognition of the pada who performed Sarvajñata. (A vāyu) Śaṅkūṭika was the son of Janamāyaka. Śaṅkūṭika had a son named Sahasrajñaka, King Lohanu, the jewel of the Candra Vamsa (Sun dynasty), was born to Sahasrajñaka by the goddess Megavati (See "Udāyana"). Stories about the Udāyana are very famous. Kātākṣa has mentioned in his "Mahābhārata" about the old names that emerged from the country-sides to tell and listen to Udāyana stories. (Kātākṣa, Madhava Kaḷeśvara, Adhīratha, 4th Ex麹a.)

AHIHMYNU 11 One of the sons of Mani. The ten sons born to Mani by Nādatī were Kurum, Pura, Śaṅkūṭika, Pāvāk, Śaṅkapuru, Saṁkatā, Kurum, Mani, Ahihmūyi, and Ahihmūya (Vīma Purāṇa, Section I, Chapter 18, Verse 11). AHIHMANYU YADVA PARVA A part (branch) of Dhrītī Parva (See "Māhābhārata").

Ahihmūya mentions in the Purana, Chapter 342. Ahihmūya has been defined as follows. Ahihmūya is the art of presenting before the people the ideas that are to be communicated to them. There are four divisions of this art known as Śaṅkūṭika, Vāyu, Śaṅkūṭika, and Ahihmūya. These, another division known as Ahihmūya's (Ahihmūya's) may also be mentioned. This satisfies the propagation of ideas like Śaṅkūṭika. There are two kinds of Śaṅkūṭika known as Śaṅkūṭika and Vīmaṇādha. Four varieties of Vīmaṇādha called Pārvaṇādha, Vīmaṇādha, Māta Vīmaṇādha, Prāvāda Vīmaṇādha, and Kurum Vīmaṇādha are mentioned. The union after Vīmaṇādha is Śaṅkūṭika-Saṁkatā. All Śaṅkūṭika ideas are included in Śaṅkūṭika. All these have to be expressed through Ahihmūya.

AHIHRIU A Rāṣṭriya who was born of the sixth Kalākṣa (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 53).

AHIHRIKAM A Janapada (Village) of ancient India. The inhabitants of this Janapada were called Ahihmūyas. (M.B. Bhūta Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 12, Chapter 98, Verse 2).

AHIHRIKAM A Janapada of ancient India. (M.B. Bhūta Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 94).

AHIHRIKAM A Rāṣṭriya who conquered this city, which was one of the ancient cities of India, in the course of his Duryodhana's reign. (M.B. Bhūta Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 50).

AHIHSYANTA A son born to Mahārāja Kurva by Vatsa. He had three brothers named Cauṭarājya, Māya, and Janamāyaka. Ahihmūya was the younger brother of Ahihmūya and elder brother of Cauṭarājya. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 50-51).

ALTAL General Atala was the son of Subala, a Rāṣṭriya. He was Śrīṇavasa's brother and a great warrior of the Kaṁsas (M.B. Udvoga Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 1).

2) Atala had also taken part in Yudhīṣṭhīra's Rāṣṭra. (A very superior warrior - one, who performed by an impromptu) (M.B. Subha Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 7).

3) Atala had a brother named Vīmaṇādha. In the battle between the Kaṁsas and Pāndavas, Atala killed Vīmaṇādha (M.B. Bhūta Parva, Chapter 38, Verse 11).

At last Vīmaṇādha summoned the departed holy souls and Atala was among them. (M.B. Āśvamedha Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 12).

ACALA II. Name of a bull. Among the parśavas of Skanda we see the bull named Acala. (M.B. Śāya Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 74).

ACALA III. An epithet of Mahāvīra. Among the thousand names of Mahāvīra we see the name Acala also. (M.B Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 92).

ACALA. Subrahmanyā, who was born from Śiva's semen which fell into the fire, was made Commander-in-Chief (Generals of the Mahaguru) by the gods to kill Tārakāsa. A large number of warriors and mothers were assigned to assist him. A woman named Acala was included among those mothers. (M.B. Śāya Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 14).

ACOHIDA A spiritual daughter of the Pittas. (For further details see "Amākṣu").

ACOHODASAKAS A river, who was the daughter of the Pittas (M.B. Bhūma Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 74-72).

ACUTA STHALĀ. This is an ancient village in India. In ancient times Śudras of mixed casts inhabited this region. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 2).

ACUTA. A description of the image of Ahihmūya is found in Agra Pārāṇa. Himā (violence) is the consort of Ahihmūya. The people created two children, Arura and Nikru, and from them sprang up Bhayā (Fear), Naraka (Hell), Māyā (illusion), Vedicā (truth) etc. And, out of them Māyā brought forth Death, the destroyer of all objects. Vedicā, in its turn produced Sorrows and Grief out of Kaufava. From Death was born Dusk, Sorrow, Sorrows, Intense愁 and Anger (Agra Pārāṇa, Chapter 28).

ADHARMA. Adhārma is a person in whom an embodiment of Adhārma is found in Agra Pārāṇa. Himā (violence) is the consort of Adhārma. The couple created two children, Arura and Nikru, and from them sprang up Bhayā (Fear), Naraka (Hell), Māyā (illusion), Vedicā (truth) etc. And, out of them Māyā brought forth Death, the destroyer of all objects. Vedicā, in its turn produced Sorrows and Grief out of Kaufava. From Death was born Dusk, Sorrow, Sorrows, Intense愁 and Anger (Agra Pārāṇa, Chapter 28).

ADHARMA. Adhārma is a person who is an embodiment of Adhārmas. (M.B. Adī Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 54). Adhārma's wife Nāma delivered 3 children; Bhayā, Mahābhīmaya and Māyā. Adhārma had another son, Dāva (concent) born of Wealth. (M.B. Saṁ Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 27).

ADHAŚSIRAS I was a great sage. Sri Kṛṣṇa is said to have met the sage on his way to Hastināpura. (M.B. Udvoja Parva, Chapter 33, Verse 64).

ADHAŚSIRAS II. There is a reference in Vīma Purāṇa to a hill called Adhāśsirās. (Vīma Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 5).

ADHĪRA A King, also a great devotee of Lord Śiva. He desired death itself on an innocent woman. He also destroyed with his own hands a temple of Śiva. As a consequence of those two sinful deeds he became a devil after death. Ultimately by the grace of Śiva he cast off the devil's form and became an attendant of Śiva. (Rata Purāṇa, Kādala Khandā, Chapter 111).

ADHĪRAHYA A Kingdom, in ancient India, described in Bhūma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 44. This place is known as Kēva.

ADHĪRATHA Foster father of Karnā.

1) Lavanā Descended from Vīma thus : Brahma-Ati-Gand-muni-Pāruṇa-Avas - Nāhuṣa - Yāyati - Anuradhyu-
2) Foster father of Kunti. Sage Durvâsas had taught Kunti some mantras to get children, and Kunti, then unmarried, tested the first mantra with the Sun-god as her object. The Sun-god appeared before Kunti and from his power she conceived and duly delivered a child, Karṇa. The Sun-god was Kunti's foster father.
3) Same purport. Adhirâdhartha was king of Anga. He was a Sûta, a brother of Kûśâ. Kûsâ and Karṇa grew up as his sons. Karṇa was sent to Hamsâlâyana to be trained in the use of weapons, and it was here that Duryodhana and Karṇa developed their friendship and alliance (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapters 67 and 130, Vana Parva, Chapter 309, Devabhâgavata, Skanda 2).
4) Same purport. Karṇa was king of Anga. He was a Sûta, a brother of Kûśâ. Kûsâ and Karṇa grew up as his sons. Karṇa was sent to Hamsâlâyana to be trained in the use of weapons, and it was here that Duryodhana and Karṇa developed their friendship and alliance (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 3), Sûtas Mahâdevabhâgavata at Chapter 3 notes the following incident: "Thus lamenting Kûśâ sent the box containing Karṇa, by the nurse, to be floated in the river, and after half an hour it was seen floating in the river in the normal way within the silted up area. Kûśâ Adhirâdhartha bathing in the river saw the box floating in the river." These facts prove that Adhirâdhartha was not only the King of Anga but a good character as well, and further a very good friend of Duryodhana.
5) The same purport. When Karṇa entered the lists the Pâñçabandhu questioned his nobility of birth. Seeing Karṇa's great humility and disinterest Duryodhana enthroned him immediately as King of Anga. Vâsishtha, who witnessed the scene has given a pictorial depiction at Chapter 3.

ADHOKSAJA

A synonym of Mahâ Vânu (Kâmarûchakshu-Amanaskra).

ADHIHÂYÀ A river (M.B. Bhûarna Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 24).

ADHYAPÂYANA A disciple of the great preceptor of Atharvaaveda, Sûntaka. He divided Atharvaaveda into two parts and gave one to Umâdith and the other to Ved darâsana (Bhâgavata, Skanda 12).

ADITI. 1) Genealogy. Kâśîapa, grandchild of Brahmâ and son of Marie, married Aditi, daughter of Daksepurapathu. Aditi had twelve sisters: Dûti, Kâli, Dârâvyata, Danu, Sombika, Kratamâ, Pîtâ, Vâsî, Vâmara, Kapîla, Muni and Kârdû. (Mahâbhârata, Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 12). Dûta were sons born to Kâśîapa by Aditi and hence known as Dûta. Kâśîapa married all the thirteen sisters including Aditi, and all living beings owe their origin to them (See Kâśîapa).
2) Descendants: 33 sons were born to Aditi and from them are called Devas: Dvârih, Pûshå, Aso, Vâtå, Maha, Sûta, Varuna, Anû, Aso, Bhma, Vivasvat, Dvâryata, Sûra, Tenu and Vîrama. Amongst the other 21 sons are the 11 Rudras and 8 Vayus. (See M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 15).
3) Main residents. 1) May Mahâvâna was born as the son of Aditi. The Mahâbhârata and the Kathâvâna refer to a story about the birth of Mahâvâna as the son of Aditi. Vâmara entered the womb of Aditi as Vâmara (Dvârå). This story was related by the sage Nâgadatta to the boys Kârma and Lakshamana while they were accompanying the sage in the forest. When they entered Sundhârakamâ Vâmatarâ pointed to the latter that the Aśvamedha was over and Mahâvâna had stood there for long as Vâmara. The Devas induced Mahâvâna to abduct the sacrificial (saggar) being performed by Mahârâja Mahâvahâ, son of Vâmara. At that time Aditi, the wife of Kâśîapa was bringing out the child so that Mahâvâna would be born as her son, and accordingly he entered her womb, 3000 years later she gave birth to Vâmara, and that child was known as Vâmara (See Vâmara, also M.B. Vâna Parva, Chapter 272, Verses 62, Amevâcina Parva, Chapter 83, Verses 25 and 26, also Upanisâd Kâmarûchâ, Canto 29).
4) Birth of Aditi. Once Kâśîapa made all arrangements to perform a sacrifice (yajña). Having failed to get the sun in the sky for it, he stole Vâmara's cow and conducted the yajña. Not only that, Kâśîapa refused to return the cow even after the yajña was over. Vâmara in her anger rushed to Kâśîapa's hermitage. Kâśîapa was absent, and his wives, Aditi, and Sûta did not treat Vâmara with due respect. The enraged Vâmara cursed them to be born in Gokâla. He also complained about the manner of treatment by Kâmarûchâ, Brahman told Kâśîapa: "Since you, a learned person, have stolen the cow, may you along with your sons be born in Gokâla and cursed!" Accordingly Kâśîapa and his wives, Aditi and Sûta, were born as vânavas in Yavatika. Devâs and Kâna in Gokâla in 28th Dvâparya yuga (this story has been told by Vîrama to Râja Janamâjya) (Dvârakhâgavata, Skanda 14).
5) Aditi of Gokâla. Devâs and Kâna chosen: This was because of Devâs being impressed on the_taxonomy of Karṇa. When Kâśîapa was living in an Aśvattha with Aditi and Dvâra he was so much pleased with the sermons of Aditi that he asked her to beg for any boon she wished. Accordingly, she prayed for an ideal one. The boon was readily granted, and India was the son thus born to her. The birth of India engendered jealousy in Dvâra towards Aditi, and she also demanded a son equal to India. Kâśîapa obliged Dvâra also. As Dvâra advanced in pregnancy and her beauty also increased, Aditi got jealous of her and told Dvâra that unless something was done in time, Dvâra would deliver a child equal to her (Indra); thus deceiving him probably to the place of second Deva. Thus, admonished by her mother, the actual India approached Dvâra and told him: "Mother, I have come to solve your." Dvâra was greatly pleased (India), services were done. Dvâra to sleep very quickly, and India until the opportunity...
ADRIKA. A nymph (devastri). There is a story in Devibhāgavatam about her being cursed by a Brahmin and turned into a fish.

ADRIKHAṬIYA is the curse put on King Janamejaya by Saramā, the dog of the Devas. While Janamejaya, son of Parīkṣa, was conducting, along with his brothers, a yāga of long duration at Kurukṣetra the son of Saramā went to the place and was threatened by the brothers of Janamejaya. Seeing her weeping child Saramā naturally got angry. She cursed the king thus, "My son did not commit any offence; he did not even look at the havis (oblations), nor did he lack it. For having thrashed the innocent child you will experience Adrikhaṭiya. When the yāga was over Janamejaya got rid of the curse by getting sage Somaśravas to do certain proper rites.

ADRSYANTI, wife of sage Sakti, the son of Vasītha and mother of sage Parīṣa. Kalmāśpadā, a king of the Ikṣvaku dynasty reached the hermitage of Vasītha during a hunting expedition when Sakti, eldest of the hundred sons of Vasītha came walking towards him. False pride prevented either of them from touching the other. The King got angry and whipped Sakti. Sakti cursed the king and he was converted into a demon. This happened at a period when sages Vasītha and Viśvāmitra were at loggerheads. Viśvāmitra got admitted into the body of King Kalmāśpadā a demon called Kuñjara, and the king set out to take revenge upon Sakti, the son of Vasītha. The king was further promised all support by Viśvāmitra. Kalmāśpadā ate up all the hundred sons of Vasītha. Overcome with grief Vasītha attempted suicide many a time. But the spirit (Aum) did not quit the body. Thus sunk in grief Vasītha lived in his hermitage with Adrisyanti, wife of Sakti. One day Vasītha heard distinct sounds of the chanting of the Vedas and Adrisyanti told him that a child of his son, Sakti, was developing in her womb and that the vedic sounds heard were sounds produced by that son chanting the Vedas. Vasītha thus was happy to hear that the dynasty will not become extinct and, so, gave up all ideas of suicide. Another day Kalmāśpadā in the guise of the demon hurriedly came to devour Adrisyanti and Vasītha gave him redemption from the curse. He was restored to his old state and born. Adrisyanti only gave birth to a son, and the child grew up to become Parīṣa, father of Vīśva.

While the Pāndavas, in the course of their forest life, were passing the banks of river Ganges at midnight, a Gāndharva named Aṃgāraparzta umpiring in the river-waters clasped with Arjas, and he was defeated. The story of Adrisyanti is one of the many stories told by Aṃgāraparzta to the Pāndavas. (M.B. Ād. Parv. Chapters 175-178.)

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viśvānu in this order Brāhma-Mārtikā-Katyāya-Sūrya-Agastya.

2) Birth. A story occurs in Utta-Rāma-Carta about the birth of Agastya. Nuru was the son of his vaku of the Sūrya dynasty. When he ascended the throne he decided to celebrate a sacrifice of long duration. He invited Vasītha to perform the sacrifice. But Vasītha, who had to participate in the sacrifice, declined.
of Indra, could not accept the invitation and Nimi had to return disappointed. At this he got angry and sought the help of Sāhānanda, the son of the great hermit Gauṭama and the sacrifice began. Vāsistha did not like this. He cursed Nimi that he might be separated from his body. Nimi returned with the same curse. Vāsistha’s spirit separated itself from his body and began to roam about in the sky. At last he requested Mitrā to provide him with a body. Brahmatrī granted his wish and said that he would be born again from Mitra and Varuna.

When the spirit of Vāsistha returned to the earth it was Mitra and Varuna moving about, having only one body for both Vāsistha’s spirit entered into that body. One day Mitra-Varuna happened to see the celestial beauty, Urvāsi on the seashore. They embraced Urvāsi and pleaded with the spirit of Vāsistha to enter the body of Urvāsi.

After this Mitra and Varuna separated themselves from one another and assumed two different bodies. Vāsistha approached Urvāsi with lustful desire, but rejecting him Urvāsi accepted Mitra. Varuna had seminal flow and this semen was taken and kept in a pot. After the death of this person, Agastya grew in Urvāsi and the semen of Mitra already received in her womb oozed out and fell on the ground. This also was collected and kept in the same pot along with that of Vāsistha. After a few days the pot broke open by itself and two babies came out. One was Agastya and the other Vāsistha. As these two were born of the same mother the spirit of Vāsistha later took the name of Atri Parva of Mahābhārata, Verse 343 of Chapter 88.

3) Education. Very little is mentioned in the Purāṇas about the education of Agastya. Some say that his education was imparted by the Veda-s and sciences and he was skilled in the use of various weapons. In Verse 9, Chapter 339 of Mahābhārata, Atri Parva, Drona says to Arjuna as follows:

“Agnevasa, my teacher was the disciple of Agastya, in the art of using bows and arrows and I am his disciple.”

When it is said that even Agnevasa, the teacher of Drona was a disciple of Agastya, his proficiency in the art of using weapons could easily be discerned.

4) Marriage. There is an interesting story behind the marriage of Vāsistha with his second wife as Agastya, who had brought all the passions under control. As the hermit Agastya was walking along the forest, he saw his ancestors (Pitris) hanging head downwards in a canyon. He wanted to know the reason and they replied: “Child, we would be allowed to enter heaven only if sons are born to you. So get married as soon as possible.” The necessity of marriage occurred to him only then. But will there be any woman who could be patient enough to become the wife of this bearded dwarfish hermit? Agastya did not lose heart. At that time the King of Vidarbha was doing penance to obtain a son. Agastya collected the quintessence of all living beings, with which he created an extremely beautiful lady and named her Lopāmudrā. Agastya gave Lopāmudrā as daughter to the King of Vaidarbha. The King, who was delighted at getting such a daughter, employed hundreds of maids to look after the child, who soon grew up to be a young lady. Agastya once approached the King of Vidarbha and expressed his wish to have Lopāmudrā as his wife. The King was in a dilemma. On the one hand he did not like his beautiful daughter having the brightness of fire, to be given as wife to the hermit clad in the bark of trees and wearing tufts of matted hair. On the other hand he was afraid of the curse of the hermit Agastya. As the King was trying hard to find a solution, Lopāmudrā herself came to the King and said “Father, I am happy to be married willingly the wife of the hermit Agastya.” At last her father consented and discarding royal garments and ornaments, Lopāmudrā accompanied Agastya. It is mentioned in Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 3, that they were married at Mahānandhūrītha. After their marriage they went to Gangadāvāra (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 96).

5) The story of how Agastya ate Vāsīta. While Agastya was doing severe penance, Lopāmudrā attained puberty and had menstruation. Longing for a child, she went and stood beside Agastya. She expressed her wish to lead a family life. Her demands did not stop there. During conjugation, Agastya should wear flower garlands and ornaments, and she must be provided with food, drinks and perfumes. Agastya was surprised at the enormity of her demands. Poor, penniless Agastya! Leaving Lopāmudrā in the hermitage he went in search of money. He first approached King Śrutavrā, who produced accounts of his income and expenditure and convinced Agastya that he had no balance at all. Agastya, accompanied by Śrutavrā and Brāhmaṇa went on to the wealthy King Trasadayu, who also produced his accounts to render any help to Agastya. Finally Agastya accompanied by the three Kings, went to the house of Ívála, a noble aura of immense wealth.

The aura Ívála lived in Shravatapattana with his younger brother Vāsīta. Once Ívála approached a hermit Brahman and requested that his wish for a son, having the power and status of Indra, be granted. The Brahman refused to grant such a boon. Since then Ívála and Vāsīta considered Brahman as their enemies. The elder brother converted the younger one (Vāsīta) into a goat and whenever a Brahman visited his house, he would kill the goat, prepare nectar drinks and set them before his guest. When he had finished eating, Ívála would call aloud: “Vāsīta, come out.” Breaking the stomach of the guest open, Vāsīta would come out. In this way Ívála had killed a good number of Brahmanas. It was at this juncture that Agastya and the Kings came to beg money of him. Ívála welcomed the guests with hospitality and as usual killed the goat, prepared food with it and served the food before Agastya. When Agastya had finished eating, Ívála called Vāsīta loudly. But Agastya slowly said, “Vāsīta, jīro bhava” (Let Vāsīta be digested) and immediately Vāsīta was digested in the womb of Agastya. The awe-stricken aura Ívála gave each Brahman ten thousand cows and as much gold and to Agastya he doubled the quantity of alms. Over and above this, he presented Agastya with a chariot hitched with two fine horses called Vṛiddha and Asvagosa returned to his hermitage and adorned himself as Laginabhuta had demanded (Mahabharata, Vana Pari, Chapter 96).

6) Birth of a son. Laginabhuta became pregnant. Asvagosa told her, "A thousand ordinary sons, or hundred sons, each having the strength of ten ordinary sons, or ten sons each having the strength of hundred ordinary sons, or a son greater and nobler than one thousand sons, which of these do you prefer?" Laginabhuta preferred one son. When she was with child Asvagosa again went to the forest to do penance. After seven years of pregnancy Laginabhuta gave birth to a handsome son. The hermit Dadhavin, who is also called Nandivana, is this son. This child is said to have caused the Vidyadhara groups and tried to murder him. He used to gather twigs for kindling the sacrificial fire of his father, and hence he got the name Nandivana.

7) How he stopped the Vidyadhara mountain down. Once the tabbean Nandivana happened to come to the Vidyadhara Mountain, which gladly welcomed Nandivana, gave him a share of its moonlight, and asked him news. Nandivana said, "May you be blessed. Just now I am coming from the Mahabharata, Indra, Agni (the god of fire), and other gods live there. Kalisa, Kusuma, Nikha, Gandhamadana, etc., are mountains far nobler than this. But they are not so haughty as you. That the Sun and the Moon and such others twelve round him, is the reason for his exalted position. On hearing these, Vidyadhara thought that Nandivana should be taught a lesson. Once Vidyadhara made his peaks grow higher and higher till they touched the sky. The Sun, the Moon, and others found it very difficult to pass over the high peaks in their usual journeys to the West, and so they had to resound about in the sky. When the journeys of the Sun and the Moon were hindered, everything in the world fell into chaos. The gods came to Vidyadhara groups and tried to satisfy him. But then Nandivana, little so they approached Asvagosa and made him present to him. He agreed to partly Vidyadhara somehow or other. Asvagosa and his wife came to Vidyadhara in Ktsana. When Vidyadhara saw Asvagosa he began to sing with joy. Contracting all his high peaks, he bowed before Asvagosa and said, "Vidyadhara is going to South, Bhadra. Let your heads bow till I come back." Vidyadhara agreed. Asvagosa passed on to the South and built a hermitage in the Mahabharata and lived there. Since then, Asvagosa had never gone to the North and Vidyadhara had never come up. As he had made the mountain (Agra) bow his head, he got the name Asvagosa (Vidyadhara).

8) Abhima transformed into a huge serpent by Asvagosa. Devendra killed Vritra, an enemy of the gods. As Devendra had resorted to treachery for killing the enemy (see the word Vritra) he incurred the sin of Bhishmottara. Once Indra went to the Mahabharatas. Without the knowledge of anybody and hid himself in the peak of a huge mountain. The gods and especially Sakhi were much alarmed. At that time the great Devendra Heaven was without a king. Bad creatures began to appear. Indra, who had hidden in the lotus stalk in the shape of a water-snake, was not at all enable as the petals had closed over him. It was at this critical moment that King Nahusa had completed hundred horse-sacrifices and became eligible for the throne of Devendra. At a great gathering of the Gods Nahusa was elected as Devendra. Though Nahusa got all the celestial maids at his disposal in the Nandivana (Nandivana Garden) his passion for women was not satisfied. So he began to have an eye on Indra. She was in sorrow and misery at the disappearance of her husband Indra, and did not at all look with favour on the new move on the part of the new Indra. She sought the help of Bhishapati, who agreed to protect her from Nahusa. The newly-elected Indra could not tolerate this disloyalty on the part of Indrani. He became furious. Nahusa was not sent to him forthwith. All hermits gathered round Nahusa and tried with their advice to dissuade him from this attempt, but he would not be dissuaded. Nahusa belittled Bhishapati and all the hermits and was rude to them. Finally the hermits, being afraid of Nahusa, went to Bhishapati to persuade him to send Indrani to Nahusa. Bhishapati suggested the safest way of safety. Accordingly she came to Nahusa and said to him "Lord, to become your wife, is a matter of great pleasure to me. But before that I must make sure if my husband is living anywhere. So allow me to make a search". Nahusa agreed to this and by the blessings of Devi, Indrani found out her husband. But Indra would not return to the court, with Indrani, who complained to him about Nahusa's outrageous behaviour. Indra advised her a new way to protect herself from Nahusa's onslaught. Indrani returned to Nahusa and told him "Lord, women generally love pomp and glory. I have a mania for vehicles. You should make a palanquin. Let the palanquin bear his hermit. You must come to my house in this palanquin with hermit on your palanquin head and then I will accept you as my husband." Nahusa agreed. He employed Asvagosa and such other hermits to bear his palanquin. He got into his palanquin and started for Indrani's house. His desire to reach Indrani was so that he thought the hermits to be very slow. To make them quick enough he ordered "Sarpa, Sarpa!" and the hermit, Indrani, began to run. Still Nahusa was not satisfied. He kicked at the heads of the hermits and whipped the dwarffish Asvagosa.

Asvagosa got angry and cursed Nahusa thus: "Since you have whipped me, saying Sarpa Sarpa, maybe you be transformed into a huge serpent (sarpas) and fall into the great forest." The horror-stricken Nahusa pleased Asvagosa by praise. Asvagosa said that Nahusa would be freed from the curse and attain heaven when he happened to meet Dharmanapata. Nahusa instantly changed into a serpent of immense size and slithered into a great forest in the Himalayas (Devibhagavata, 5th Sarpa). During their sojourn in the forest, the Pagivas visited many huge palaces and reached the Yarman mountain in the Himalayas. When Bhima was passing by the mouth of a cave he was attacked by a huge serpent. In spite of his immense strength Bhima could not extract himself from the hold of the snake, who eventually informed Bhima of its previous history.
When Bhima understood that the serpent was none other than Nahusa, a King of the Shriya dynasty (Solar), he felt sorry for him. Dharmaputra, who came there in search of Bhima, talked with Nahusa, who immediately regained his original form and went to heaven. (Mahabharata, Chapter 17 of Udyoga Parva, Chapter 179 of Vana Parva; Chapter 342 of ArDubhag, Chapter 38).
9) How Agastyaya drank up the ocean. Indra ruthlessly killed Vritrasura, who had been harassing the Gods, with the help of the Kadakeyas. The frightened Kadakeyas got into the ocean and hid themselves at the bottom. From that hideout they decided to destroy the three worlds. At night they came out on the crash and ate a good deal of Brahman, and caused much damage to the hermitages of Vasujiva and Gyawan. All the Brahman on the earth were terribly afraid of the Kadakeyas. The gods went to Visnu and prayed for protection. Visnu informed them that the Kadakeyas could not be caught unless the ocean was dried up, and this task could be performed only by Agastyaya. So the Gods approached Agastyaya and he went with Visnu and informed them. With pleasure Agastyaya accepted the job. Accompanied by the Gods and hermits he reached the swaying and singing ocean.
While all were watching unwinkingly Agastyaya brought the great ocean into his palm and drank it up very easily and subsequently the Kadakeyas were killed.
Now the Gods again approached Visnu and made request that the ocean be left. Visnu, however, told them that by the presence of Bhagavata the divine Ganga would fall into the earth and then the ocean will be filled. In this way the earth regained its vast ocean. (Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapters 101 to 105).
10) Agastyaya cursing Kubera and his companions. In the course of their journey in search of the Pandavas visited several holy places and reached the proximity of the Himalayas leaving his brothers behind.
Arjuna went up the Mahisamor to worship Siva.
Years passed by As last his brothers also started for the Mahisamor in search of Arjuna and with the help of the hermits Vrasapavrata and Astavana, they reached Kubera's capital (capital of Kubera). Thence Bhima destroyed the army of Kubera and killed Manumana, his friend and favourite Dharmaputra, renouncing of his younger brother's iniquity bowed before Kubera and asked him with pleasantry, why the power of gods gave way to the power of man.
Kubera replied that it was due to the curse of Agastyaya and began to depict the event thus. Once my friend Manumana and myself were going, in a chariot, to be present at the singing and chanting just begun at Kusavati. At that time Agastyaya was standing in his hermitage on the bank of Kali, performing Sun worship. When Manumana saw this from the sky, he spat on the head of Agastyaya, who instantly getting wild cursed me: "Lo, Kubera, your friend Manumana spat on my head yesterday! Great will be your army will meet with death at a man's hand. When they die you should not feel sorry for them. If it becomes possible for you to meet the man who killed Manumana you will be liberated from the curse."

It is this curse that brought about the death of Manumana and the army. When Kubera saw Bhima face to face his curse was revoked. (Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapter 160).
11) Agastyaya cursing Mrica and Tadaka. The boys Rauta and Lakshmana went to the forest with Visvamitra for protecting sacrifice. When they entered the Tadaka forest Visvamitra told them the story of Tadaka thus...

Tadaka was the daughter of Suketu, a semi god of the tribe Vakta. Being childless for a long time Suketu was miserable and began to do penance before Brahma, who blessed him and granted his wish and a daughter was born to him. This daughter was named Tadaka.
Bhima blessed her, giving her the strength of one thousand elephants. Tadaka grew up and became a young woman. Suketu gave her in marriage to Sunda, son of Harpaja. Tadaka gave birth to a son called Mrica. When Sunda was killed, Tadaka got widowed and ran into the hermitage of Agastyaya (coming much invited there. At this Agastyaya got angry and cursed her to become a Rakshasa (giantess) and instantly the bodies of Tadaka and Mrica were deformed Tadaka could not control her anger and she denounced the hermitage of Agastyaya (Valmiki Ramayana, Bharadwaja).
12) The story of the theft of lotus. Once Visvamitra and other hermits went on a pilgrimage, with Indra as their leader. On the way they reached Bhimaar, in the holy place of Kasyaka.
Agastyaya had grown some lotus flowers there. The pilgrims plucked extraordinarily all the lotus flowers nurtured by Agastyaya and ate them. The furious Agastyaya got into the midst of the hermits in search of the culprit. None admitted the theft. Finally he caught hold of Indra, as the thief Indra said: "Oh, Lord, that I have not been for my eagerness to hear discourses on duty from your face. I would not have stolen your lotus flowers." Saying this Indra returned the lotus flowers. Agastyaya was pleased and left Indra and the hermits depart in peace. (Mahabharata, Amarasimha Parva, Chapter 95).
13) How Agastyaya burned the Asuras (Deemons). (This story occurs in the Mahabharata as having been told by the God Visvamitra to Bhima as a discourse on the greatness of Agastyaya and Bhima reverting it to Arjuna.)
Once the God had to accept debat at the hands of the Asuras (Deemons) and they approached Agastyaya and said thus: Oh, hermit, since we have been defeated by the Asuras, our prosperity is at an end. There is none to help us but you. Hearing this Agastyaya became angry and began to burn the Asuras to death, by the merits of his penance. Many of them fell down on the earth and some fell into Padma (the other world).
The asura who thus fell were not killed by Agastyaya.
Thus the menace of the Asuras in heaven was warded off, and the Gods lived in peace and prosperity.
(Mahabharata, Amarasimha Parva, Chapter 155, Verses
1 to 13).
14) Indra's conflict with Agastyaya. Once Agastyaya conceived a sacrifice of twelve years' duration. Many hermits participated in this sacrifice. No sooner had the hermit begun the sacrifice, than Indra, (the God of Thunder and Rain) stopped rain in the world. Crops could not be raised. But Agastyā provided everybody who took part in the sacrifice, with sumptuous meals.

The hermits wondered how Agastyā could do this. Some of the hermits feared that the sacrifice would have to be stopped before the stipulated time, if the drought continued. Agastyā told them not to fear, and that if Indra refused to send rain, he himself would become Indra and protect the subjects. Indra was heartened when he heard this and he began to send rain regularly. (Mahābhārata, Atharvavedīka Parva, Chapter 92).

15) Story of Gaṇendramoksa (The redemption of an elephant). In the Bhārata a story occurs, as to how Agastyā cured King Indradvīma, and turned him to an elephant. While Indradvīma, the King of Pândya, was absorbed in deep meditation on Vīṣṇu, Agastyā reached the palace. Being immersed in meditation, the King failed to notice the arrival of the great hermit, who getting angry with the King, cursed him to become an elephant. for one thousand years. Instantly the King was delirious and the palace in a big forest and lived there happily with the other elephants there. At that time a hermit named Devalī was living in a hermitage in that forest. One day Indra, a gaṇdharva (a class of semi-gods) enjoying the company of some celestial maidens came to the place where Devalī had put up his hermitage. He hermit saw the Gandharva and the maidens playing and bathing in the pond in front of his hermitage, a complete nudity. Getting angry Dévalī cursed Indra, and he was transformed into a pond, which was in the Tārāy Mountain. The pond was under the superintendency of a crocodile. The aspirer (Indradvīma) entered the pond to drink water. The crocodile caught hold of the leg of the elephant. Each tried to pull the other with equal force. This fight is said to have lasted for a thousand years. When both were tired, godly visions began to dawn in their minds. Then, riding on an eagle Mahāavān appeared before them, cut them with his īścharāyuddha (the wheel-weapon) and both were given deliverance. (Bhāgavata, 8th Skandha, Chapter 2).

16) Agastyā teaching Šrī Rāma the Aṣṭa-yātra Mantra (A hymn in praise of the Sun). When Šrī Rāma was fishing with Kāvana in Lankā, depletion befell him, his heart being weighed down with guiltiness, for a while Kāvana made the best use of this opportunity and began to advance. The gods had gathered in the sky above to witness the fight. Agastyā, at that particular moment, taught Šrī Rāma the Aṣṭa-yātra Mantra, a hymn in praise of the Sun and when Šrī Rāma chanted that mantra, he resumed fight with Vīgour and Kāvana was defeated and slain. (Vālmiki Rimāvīra, Yuddha Kāna, Sarga 197).

17) How the want of the earth was rectified by sating Agastyā. The matrimonial ceremony of Šrī Paramēṣvāra and Pārvatī was held in the Himalayas. On that auspicious occasion all the living beings of the world were present, and as a result the Himalayan region sank down and the earth slanted to that side. To keep the equilibrium of the earth, Vīṣṇu sent Agastyā to the south. Accordingly Agastyā reached Kūtidad, where there was a temple dedicated to the worship of Vīṣṇu. Agastyā had beautified his forehead with ashes and admission to the temple was denied to him. By the devotees there who were Vājsnavites. By his own power Agastyā turned himself into a vajsnavite and got into the temple, and immediately the image of Vīṣṇu in the temple changed by itself into a Śiva Linga (idol representing Śiva). Since then the temple at Kūtidad has remained a temple of Śiva. Agastyā proceeded to the southernmost point of the earth and sat there and because of his weight the earth regained its normal position. (Skanda Purāṇa).

18) Agastyā and the Kārniča Mountain. When Agastyā passed the Vindhyā mountain and proceeded to the Soudh a Rākṣasa (giant) called Kārniča hindered his way. By his power the Rākṣasa caused to fall everywhere a very heavy rain. Agastyā sprinkled a few drops of water from his waterpot on Kārniča, who instantly became a mountain. Telling him that he would get deliverance from the curse when the weapon of Subrahmaṇya struck him, Agastyā continued his journey to the South. (Skanda Purāṇa).

19) Agastyā and the River Kāvieri. Once Śūrabpadma, an Asura (demon) drove the Gods out from heaven. Indra came to Śiyālī a place in the district of Tājaviś (Tanjore) and began to do penance to please Śiva. Rain was completely stopped. Agastyā had compressed the river Kāvieri and held the water in his waterpot. Gaṇapati having came to know of this, came in the form of a crow and toppled the waterpot. Agastyā got angry and ran after the crow, which immediately assumed the form of a boy Agastyā caught hold of him. The boy instantly revealed himself as Subrahmaṇya and granted Agastyā a boon. Your waterpot will always be full. Since then there had never been shortage of water in the Kāvieri. (Skanda Purāṇa).

20) Agastyā in the palace of Bhadrāśvī. Once Agastyā lived in the palace of Bhadrāśvī as his guest for seven days. Agastyā praised Kāntināṭi the queen on several occasions. The King wanted to know the reason Agastyā said: During her previous birth Kāntināṭi was the handmaid of a rich man. On one occasion of Śvādasi (twelfth night after full moon) in the month of Tālā (second half of Oc'tober and first half of November) the rich man had asked his handmaid to see if the lights in a certain temple did not go out and she did so, in consequence of which, during her current birth she has become your queen, bearing the name Kāntināṭi. The King and the queen were much pleased at this explanation of Agastyā and thenceforward they began to observe Śvādasi as a day of fasting (Vīṣṇu Purāṇa).

21) Agastyā cursing Urvāśī. Jayanta and Nārada. Once Agastyā went to the realm of the Gods, as a guest of Indra. On that day a performance of dance by Urvāśī was held in honour of Agastyā. In the midst of the dance Urvāśī's eyes fell on Jayanta and she fell in love with him; her steps went out of beat Nārada also went wrong slightly in playing on his famous lute called Mahati. Agastyā got angry and cursed Urvāśī, Jayanta and Nārada. According to the curse Jayanta became a bud. Urvāśī was born in the earth as a woman called Medhavi and ‘Mahati’ the lute of Nārada became the lute of the people of the earth.
22) Agastyas curse Dusyana. Dusyana was the last son of the king of Pataliputra. The wicked Dusyana had slain a large number of babies, and the king therefore expelled him from the palace. Dusyana went into the forest, where he caught hold of the child of Ugraravas and killed it by putting it under water. Ugraravas cursed him and accordingly he fell into water and died and his spirit became a ghost, after washing himself about seventeen times in the Ganges near the sacred banks. At last the spirit approached Agastya, who called his disciple Sutinsa and asked him to go and bathe in the Angirastha (a bath) in the Gandhama-dana mountain and bring some water from the tirtha and sprinkle it on the spirit of Dusyana. Sutinsa acted accordingly and immediately the spirit of Dusyana received divine figure and entered heaven. (Setu Mahatmya).

23) How Agastyas got golden Bangles. Once Agastya entered a forest of about a hundred yojanas wide. The forest was devoid of life. When he had walked a few more steps some Gandharvas (semi-gods) and celestial maids came there singing and dancing. From among them a noble male being came forward to the bank of a lake in the forest and sat without any hesitation, the corpse of a man that was lying there. After that he walked round Agastya and made obeisance to him. Agastya asked him why he had eaten the corpse of a man. The noble man told Agastya thus: "In teela yuga (the third age) there lived a king named Vidarbha. I am his son and my name is Sveta. After having ruled over the land, I went to the forest to see the beautiful maids and fair cattle. I went to the banks of this lake and began to do penance. After that discarding my body I entered heaven. Though I attained heaven my hunger was not appeased. I asked Brahma how, I, a dweller of heaven, got this hunger. Brahma said that when I was King I had given nothing to anybody and so I got this hunger even after entering heaven. As a remedy Brahma suggested that I should come here everyday and eat a course and when I had completed ten thousand days the hermit Agastya would come here and then when I offered him a golden bangle my sin would be washed away." Saying thus Sveta offered to Agastya the golden bangle given by Brahmas and then he vanished and the corpse also disappeared. Sveta went to heaven. (Uttara Ramayana).

24) Conclusion: owning Agastya.

(1) Agastya had a brother called Sutinsa. (Agnipurana, Chapter 7).

(2) Sutinsa was Agastyas disciple too. (Setu Maha.

(3) Ilvaka and Vadapi were the sons of the giantess Ajamukhi. In the valley of a mountain Ajamukhi prayed to Agastya for love and thus Ilvaka and Vadapi were born from Durvasas. These two sons demanded that Durvasas should impart to them all his merit of penance. Getting angry Durvasas cursed them that they would meet with death at the hands of Agastya. (Skanda Purana, Avara Kanda).

(4) Agastya had been the priest of the King Kheda. (Revela, 112th Suka).

(5) When Sri Rama returned to Ayodhya, with Sitata from Lask, hermits from various parts visited him, among whom, Dattireya, Namuci, Pramuni, Sri Valmiki, Shona, Kanada, Agastya and their disciples were from the South. (Uttara Ramayana).

(6) Agastya gave Sri Rama an arrow, which, when shot at an asura (demon) would pierce his heart, pass on to the other side, fly to the sea and bathe in the sea-water and return to the quiver, it is said. (Uttara Ramayana).

(7) Once Agastya visited the hermitage of Astambha. He asked Agastya, who, of Brahmas, Visnus and Sivas, was the Supreme deity. Agastya replied: "These three are only three manifestations of the one supreme Being." (Brahmapuran).

(8) For the story of how Agastya cursed the sons of Manishadra and transformed them to seven palms, see the word 'Sapinsa'.

(9) There was a hermit called Sutinsa, to whom Sri Rama and Lakshmana paid a visit when they were wandering in the forest. This Sutinsa is the younger brother of Agastya (on the word Sutinsa).

(10) Agastya cursed Suka and deformed him into a Raksha. (See the word Suka in ).

25) Conclusion. It is believed that the great hermit Agastya, who had performed such wonderful deeds by the merits of his penance, is still doing penance in the Agastya Kuta hills. Agastya who had travelled throughout the length and breadth of Bharata had several hermitages In the Valmiki Ramayana, Aranyakand, Sarga 11, a description is given, of a beautiful hermitage of Agastya, and the peaceful atmosphere that prevailed in and around it. Agastya had presented to Sri Rama a bow got from Visnu, when the brothers visited his hermitage. Agastya had accompanied Sri Rama and his fellow-disciples on his return journey to Ayodhya from Lask, with Sita after killing Ravana. There is a legend in the Tamulnad that Agastya was a member of the first two 'Santhgas' (groups) of the "three Santhgas", mentioned in Tamil literature. As Agastya was dwarfish he is mentioned as Kurumuni, (short hermit) in Tamil works. He has written a Tamil grammar on music, literature and drama. But this work is not available now. The Tamil Grammar 'Tolkappiyam', which is considered to be the oldest grammar, was written by Tolkappiar, one of the twelve disciples of Agastya. Even today in certain temples in the Tamulnad, Agastya-worship is carried on. Kambur, has mentioned about Agastya in his Ramayana. A great Tamil author Viralpuran says that the Tamil language and the beautiful maiden presented by Agastya.

It is believed that the following works have been composed by Agastya:

1. Agastya Gita; in the Varahapurana, Paupadopakhyana.

2. Agastya Samhita; in Paucarartha.

3. Agastya Sanka, in the Skanda Purana.

5. Dvaidha-nirnaya Tantra.

AGASTYA KOTA. This is the sacred mount where the sage, Agastya, sat and did penance during his sojourn in the southern parts of India. In the Kiskindha Kanda of Valmikis Ramayana we find King Sugriva commanding that all his soldiers going in search of Sitata should pay homage to the sage Agastya.

AGASTYA PARVATA. This is a mountain in South India believed to belong to the Kishkindha mountain range. Agastya Kuta is in this mountain.

AGASTYA SARAS. This is another name for Agastya Gita.
AGASTYA-ÂRÂMA. The Purânas make mention of several asramas connected with sage Agastya. The Pavâvanas during their exile visited an ârâma of this name. This is situated near Pavâvaṇa twenty-four miles to the south-east of Nâsik. It is known as Agastya-grih now. (Sloka 20, Chapter 80; and Sloka 1, Chapter 96 of Vaiṣṇava Parva, M.B.).

The Mahâbhârata mentions another Agastya-Ârâma near Pratâsha, belonging to the Jaiminiya line with Saint Lomâśa as head priest for some time. Valmiki describes an ârâma of this name which Râma and Laksmîna visited during their exile in the forests. (Chapter 11, Aranyâ Kañḍa of the Ramâyana).

AGASTYA TIRTHA. This is one of the five tirthas or sacred places of worship lying scattered in the southern ocean. The other four are the following: (1) The Sañchidra tirtha (2) The Pauiloma tirtha (3) The Kârandhama tirtha and (4) the Aupâvaṇa tirtha. These five are known as Pâca tirthas and many sants used to live there. There existed in each of these tirthas one huge and fierce crocodile and all the sants living there, afraid of these creatures, deserted their places one by one. (Ref: Sloka 3, Chapter 220 of Adi Parva, Bhagavad Gita for more details see under Pâca tirtha).

AGASTYA VATA. This is a sacred shrine in the neighbourhood of the Himâyâlas. Arjuna paid a visit to this place while he was living with his brothers in the forests during their period of exile (Sloka 2, Chapter 214 of Adi Parva, M.B.).

AGATI. A city. Two sons Taksaka and Chhatraketu were born to Dharmarâja, the son of Sri Rûma, and his wife Urmila. The court of the eldest prince Taksaka was situated in the city of Agat. Formerly this was known as Kanâkiâla and was occupied by forest tribes. Exterminating these forest tribes, Laksmiâna built a city there and appointed it to his eldest son Taksaka. (Uttara Ramâyana).

AGHA. The name of an aśura. This aśura was one of the followers of Kimâ. According to the instructions of Karna, Agna once set out to Gokula to kill Sri Kṛṣṇa. At that time Sri Kṛṣṇa was playing on the banks of the river Kûlumdi with other cowherds. Aghâsa watched the games of the children from the sky above. Then he transformed himself into a colossal serpent and lay with his mouth wide open; his open mouth looked like an immense cave. The soul smelt coming from his mouth soon spread over the whole place. Sri Kṛṣṇa and the other children did not know anything about this. In the course of their games they waded into the cave-like mouth of Agna and were soon stuffed in his belly. Agna then closed his mouth and the boys including Sri Kṛṣṇa were now imprisoned inside his body. Some of the boys died. Reahring the situation Sri Kṛṣṇa now enlarged his body. His body grew larger and larger until at last it burst open the body of the serpent (Agna). Thus Agna was killed. Sri Kṛṣṇa then restored the dead boys to life by his divine looks (Kâtaâkśa). Thus Aghâsa was the brother of Bâkâsa and Putama. (Bhagavata, Skanda 10, Chapter 12).

AGHAMARSA. He was a great hermit of austerity, who had observed the duties pertaining to Vânaprastha and the four stages of life-forest hermit. (M.B., Śantu Parva, Chapter 214, Stanza 16).

AGHAMARSANA S ÔKTA. This is a hymn in the Rigveda. It is said that all sins will be eliminated, if this hymn is recited three times, standing in water.

AGHĂRDĐANAVAMI. (See the word NAVAMI VRATA).

AGHASVA. A King hermit (Rajâr) named Peda. (Rigveda, Mandala 1, Anuvâka 17, Sûkta 116).

1) Genealogy. Agni was descended from Viṣṇu in this order: Viṣṇu-Brahma-Aṅgus-Bhraspati-Agni.

2) Birth. We come across several contradictory statements in the Purânas regarding the birth of Agni. There is some real difficulty, therefore, in tracing correctly the true genealogy of Agni. The one given above is based on statements in Bhagavata and Mahâbhârata. Aṅgus is one of the six mind-born sons of Brahmâ. Aṅgus married Śraddhâ and got four daughters and two sons. Bhraspati was one of the sons and Uatadhya was the other. The daughters were Sīvâlî, Kunû, Râkî and Anumati. (There is a mention of a third son named Samvatara in the Bhagavata by Kâthahsan though the original quoted below does not say so).

Caitava 's caiva saûkha
Sûrîvaryâ Kûhâ Râkî
Caturbhûram anuvâstham
Tatpurâvâravâdham
Khyâstâ varv Abrâsati tare
Utadhya bhagavân sâkñâ
Bhramâna Bhargava Bhruaspati
Bhraspati married Candrahasi and got six double sons. Of these Samya, the eldest, married Sâtya and Agni was born to Sâmyu of Sâtya. (Slokas 1 to 4, Chapter 219, Aranyâ Kañḍa of Malayâlama Mahâbhârata).

3) Agni—One of the Āsas-dh-pâlakas. (Āśa=eight, dh=zone, pâlaka=guardian). The Devī Bhagavata states in its eighth chapter that Agni is one of the eight guards posted at the eight different zones to protect the universe. Indra guards the east; Agni the south; Yama the south-west; Vairuna, the west; Vûyu, the north-west; Kuber, the North and Sûva, the north-east. The place where Agni sits on guard is known as tejo-pâlana.

4) Agni—One of the five elements. The universe is believed to be composed of five elements of which Agni is one. The other four are Water, Earth, Ether and Air.

that time I will take back the replica and give you back your real wife." Śri Rāma was very much pleased to hear this. Agni then, by his yogic powers created a Phantom Sītā and gave her to him. Rāma kept this as a secret even from Lakṣmana. In the great Rāma-Rāvaṇa battle Rāvaṇa was killed and Śri Rāma took back Sītā to his kingdom. Then, respecting public opinion and wishing to establish in public the purity of his queen, König Śri Rāma put her into the fire. At that moment Agni took back the replica and gave back the real Sītā to Śri Rāma. Sītā thus came out from the fire unscathed. Later, on the advice of Rāma and Agni, the Phantom Sītā went to the sacred place Puṣkara and started doing tapas (penance) there. After doing tapas for a long period of three lakhs of divine years this Phantom Sītā became known as Svargalakṣī. It was this Svargalakṣī that later on in the Devapura yuga came out from the yajña kundā of King Pāñcāla as Pāñcālī and became the consort of the Pāṇḍavas. Vedavati, daughter of Kuśadhyāja in Kṛṣṇa yuga, Sītā, daughter of Janaka in the Treta yuga, and Pāñcālī, daughter of Drupada in Devapura yuga are one and the same person. Each account of this she is known as trikhyāni also. (Chapter 9 of Devi Bhāgavata).

6) The story of how Agnigot indigestion. In olden times there was a bold and mighty King called Śvetaki. He conducted several different types of yajña. Afflicted by the unending dense smoke in the yajña hall all the ascetics left the place and went their way. Undaunted by this, Śvetaki performed for twelve years a fire sacrifice in which not a single sage took part. The sages rebuked him and said if he wanted to conduct a sacrifice again he could invite Śudras to help him. (Śudras belong to the lowest caste among Hindus and are not allowed to participate in sacrifices generally.) Enraged by this insult Śvetaki went to Kālīṣa and did fierce penance. Lord Śiva appeared before him and gave him Durvāsaś as a priest for his yajña. For twelve years this sage Durvāsaś performed the yajña pouring into the mouth of Agni through the sacrificial pit unlimited materials of food. Agni was overfed and he got indigestion. He lost all appetite for food, became weak and the brilliance of his face faded. (Chapter 235, Adi Parva, M.B.)

7) The story of how Agni burnt the big forest, Kāñcana. When the indigestion continued without abatement for some time Agni approached Brahmā and asked for a cure. Brahmā declared that his indigestion would be cured if Agni could burn the huge forest, Kāñcana, the abode of the enemies of the Devas, Agni immediately started consuming the forest. But the inhabitants of the forest soon quenched the fire. Disappointed Agni went to Brahmā again and the latter advised him to wait for some time till the advent of Nara-Nārāyaṇas to that forest. They would then help Agni to burn the forest. Agni waited for the time to come. At that time the Pāṇḍavas were living in Indraprastha with Śri Kṛṣṇa. When the heat became unbearable there Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa came to the banks of river Yamunā. Hearing about the arrival of Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna who were none but the incarnations of Nārāyaṇa and Nara, Agni disguised as a brāhmin approached them and requested them to help him to burn the Kāñcana forest. Agni added that any attempt of his to burn the forest was always foiled by Indra who would send a heavy downpour of rain to quench the fire because Takṣaka, an intimate friend of Indra, was living there.

To gain his end Agni gave Arjuna an arrow-case which would never be empty, a chariot bearing a monkey flag, four white horses adorned with gold chains and also the famous Gāndiva bow. To Śri Kṛṣṇa he gave the cabrayuddha or the divine wheel-weapon. (All these military equipment were once given to Agni by Varuna.) When all these were given to them Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna got ready to help Agni to burn the forest. Agni started burning the forest, Indra at once sent a heavy downpour of rain and Arjuna created a canopy of arrows above the forest preventing the rains from falling on the forest. Agni carried on his work undisturbed, the forest was burnt and Agni was cured of his indigestion. (Slokas 239 to 239, Adi Parva, M.B.)

8) Agni falls in love. As an inaugural procedure to the great Rājasūya which Dharmaputra performed at Indraprastha his four brothers Bhūma, Arjuna, Nakula and Sahadeva conducted a victory march to the four different sides of the kingdom to show their turned with conquered men from including Dantavakra and Bhīmaka and reached a country called Māhismattapura. There he had to encounter a powerful king called Nila. Before long there broke a fire in his camp. Distressed, Sahadeva prayed to the God, Agni, for help. It was then that Sahadeva came to know about the ties between Agni and Nila. Once Nila had a beautiful daughter named Sudarṣanā. Once when she was talking to her father after having entered the Agni-hatra Agni fell in love with her. From that day onwards Agni became dreamy about the beautiful lips of Sudarṣanā. It reached a stage when Agni would burn only if it was blown by the lips of Sudarṣanā. This ended in Agni marrying Sudarṣanā. After the marriage Agni lived in the palace of his father-in-law, King Nila, as a useful ally. It was at this time that Sahadeva came to conquer Nila. But Agni knew that for the proper conduct of the Rājasūya of Dharmaputra his father-in-law had to surrender to Sahadeva and so advised his father-in-law to do so. What appeared to be a difficult problem was thus easily solved. (Chapter 31, Shāhā Parva, M.B.)

9) How Emperor Sibi was tested by Agni. Once Agni and Indra thought of testing how strong and deep was the sense of charity in Emperor Sibi. Indra took the shape of a hawk and Agni that of a dove and the dove flew and dropped down into the lap of the Emperor who was at that time doing a yāga. The hungry hawk came chasing its prey and finding the dove in the lap of the Emperor said: "O King, is it proper on your part to withhold my food from me, and keep it in your lap?" Hearing this Sibi replied: "This dove has sought refuge in me. It is my duty to give it protection. If it is only food you want I shall give you food." Sibi then offered many things including his kingdom to the hawk in return for the dove. But the hawk refused them all and finally agreed to accept an equal weight of flesh from the body of the Emperor. Sibi without any hesitation cut a portion of his thigh and weighed it against the dove in a scale. The dove weighed more and the Emperor started putting more and more flesh from his body to make the weight equal. But the dove always weakened more and at last the Emperor said he would wound himself against the dove. As the weak and helpless Emperor was about to get into the path of the scale Agni and Indra emerged from the bodies of the dove and hawk and appeared before the Emperor. They blessed him and immediately took him to heaven.

(Chapter 131, Vana Parva, M.B.)

10) Agni and the Walter a goat. The occasion is when sage Vashamitra is taking Kama and Lakshmanana to the forests to give protection to the sages against the demons. They reached the place where Ahalya lay as a stone cursed by Gautama. Vashamitra told them the story: "It was here that the great sage, Gautama, lived with his beautiful consort, Ahalya. Once Indra had an intercourse with her privately and Gautama coming to know of the noised cursed her and turned her into stone. By the curse of the same sage Indra lost his testicles. Greatly aggrieved by this loss Indra prayed to god Agni for help and on the advice of Agni the devas removed the deformity by placing a goat's testicles instead" (Slokas 48 & 49, Balita Kanda, Valmiki Ramayana).

11) How sage Birju saved Agni. Sage Birju was living with his wife Puloma in his herama. Puloma became pregnant. One day when Birju wanted to go out but for a bath in the river he asked Agni to keep a watch over his pregnant wife. There was a demon by name Puloma who was once in love with Puloma. On this particular day Puloma entered the herama to see her former lover. When he entered the herama Puloma saw Agni there burning with a brilliant flame in the fire-god. Puloma said: "O God of fire, if I ask you a question you must give me an impartial reply. I was in love with this Puloma and I had accepted her as my wife spiritually. But, then, her father gave her to Birju. Who, then, is the true owner of Puloma?" Agni was afraid of Birju. Yet he explained the position honestly. "It is true that Puloma has married Birju. But he has not married her according to Hindu rites. Hearing this the demon changed himself into the shape of a swan and carried away Puloma. On the way Puloma delivered a male babe and it fell on the ground. The boy was named Cyavana. It was this boy that became later on the famous Cyavana Mahars. Even at birth the boy was brilliant as the Sun to look at and Puloma, the demon, noticing the unusual brilliance of the child left the mother and child on the way and fled frightened. Puloma returned to the herama carrying the child weeping profusely all the way and creating a lancrymound river called Vadhushara. As soon as she entered the herama the angry Kama asked "Who told Puloma that you are my wife?" Puloma then told her husband all that happened there and Birju called Agni and cursed him thus: "May you be a consumer of all things on this Earth". Greatly aggrieved Agni went away and hid himself. The absence of Agni created chaos in all the three worlds; Heaven, Earth and the Nether-world. A deputation of all the afflicted people wanted upon Brahm and Brahm modified the curse and declared that all that Agni touched would become pure. Agni was consoled and he started his work as usual.

12) How Agni cursed frogs, birds and elephants. Many important events took place while Agni was underground cursed by Birju. It was during that time that Parvati cursed all the Devas and the Devas were defeated by the asuras (demons). The necessity of a warrior capable of defeating the asuras arose then. The idea of creating Lord Subrahmanya was born. Subrahmanya said that only Agni could help them in this matter since Agni was the only one who escaped from the curse of Parvati, being underground at the time of the curse. The Devas started a vigilant search but Agni was not to be found. Agni was then hiding inside the ocean. The ocean was getting hot and the animals living there found their life unbearable. Frogs went to the devas and told them where Agni was hiding. Enraged at this Agni cursed the frogs saying that they would never be able to find the taste of anything. Frogs went weeping to the devas who in turn blessed the frogs saying that they would acquire the ability to move about easily in any darkness. Agni changed his place of hiding and went and hid himself in a sugar palm tree. A bird living in that tree gave information to the devas and the devas found him out before he got time to leave the place. Agni cursed the bird saying that its tongue would always be curved inside and the devas blessed it saying that the curvature would help it to sing beautiful songs. Since Agni was found out from Sami tree this tree became sacred. Since this finding out of Agni after a long absence is like a re-birth of Agni the Puranas mention that Agni was born from the Sami tree. The Devas then requested Agni to help them to create a son capable of conquering the demons. (Chapter 85, Anuksana Parva, M.B.)

13) Birth of Subrahmanya. At that time Varuna performed a yaga. All the devas and demons gathered. Siva participated in the yaga. Subrahmanya came out of the Earth. Siva blessed him. While Nala was going to the wedding of Damayanti Indra, Agni, Varuna and Kila accorded him on his way and asked him to go as a messenger of their and advise Damayanti to marry one of them. Nala did so, but Damayanti was adamant and said she would marry none other than Nala. So all the four gods appeared as Nala in the wedding hall. Damayanti who was confused prayed that she should be shown the real Nala. The gods then changed into their original forms and blessed Nala. Agni said he would come and help him the moment he wanted him. Thus Nala became a good cook and Nala Pircakam (Pārcaṇāda = cooking) became famous. Even now it is a synonym for good cooking. (Chapter 57, Vana Parva, M.B.)

15) Agni and Rambha. There was once a dānavā called Danu. He had two sons named Rambha and Karambha. They had no children and tormented this they went to Paścimānada and started doing penance. Rambha sat in the centre of Paścimānada (five fires) and Karambha in water to do penance. Indra afraid of the severe and powerful tāpas of the two took the form of a crocodile and killed Karambha who was doing penance in water by dragging him down to the water. Bereaved Rambha started to commit suicide by jumping into the fire. God Agni appeared before him and asked him what he wanted. Rambha then said that he should get a son who would be famous as a warrior in all the three worlds. Agni agreed. Rambha put his back and back saw a voluptuous she-buffalo and married her at yakṣa kavaṭa. They lived a happy married life and one day a he-buffalo envied of their life attacked Rambha and killed him. Griev-stricken Rambha’s wife jumped into the funeral pyre and committed suicide. Then from the fire arose a demon named Mahāśiva (Māsāśiva = Buffalo, Asura = Demon). This buffalo-demon became a terror to all in the three worlds later on. (Chapter 5, Devi Bhāgavata).

16) Difference of opinion between Agni and Aṅgiras. Bhagavān Aṅgiras did penance in his own āśrama and became more brilliant than Agni. The whole world was submerged in his brilliance. Agni felt a bit depressed at this. Agni argued that it was not proper on the part of Brahmā to give anybody else more brilliance than himself. So as a protest against this Agni disappeared from the world. Even Aṅgiras was annoyed at Agni’s disappearance and so he went and consorted with Agni and took him to Brahmā. Brahmā declared that henceforth the world would recognize Agni as the father and Aṅgiras as his son. Thus Agni got the first place in effulgence. This is a story told by sage Mārkaṇḍeya to Dharmaputra. (Chapter 217, Vana Parva, M.B.)

17) Agni and Mahābali. On their way to the forest sage Viśvāmitra took Rāma and Lakṣmana to Siddhārma. The sage explained to the princes the importance of that āśrama. He said: “Mahāviṣṇu lived in this āśrama for a number of years. It was at that time that the Emperor of the asuras (demons), Mahābhārata, son of Virocana, was ruling the world conquering even the devas. After having conquered all the three worlds Mahābali decided to conduct a yāga. A delegation of the Devas headed by Agni then waited upon Mahāviṣṇu and Agni said: “O Lord, Mahābali has commenced a yāga and before it is finished you should go to him and inform him of the benefit of the devas”. It was at this request of Agni that Mahāviṣṇu took the form of Vāmana and sent Mahābali to the nether-world. (Chapter 29, Bālakanda, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

18) Agni and Nabhā. Repenting for his act of killing Vṛtra Indra unknown to anybody went and hid in a lotus in the Mānasa Saras (Lake Mānasa). Perplexed by the disappearance of their leader the devas brought Nabhā from the Earth and made him their leader. Nabhā became very proud and arrogant of his new position and tried to make Indrāni his wife. Indrāni went to Bhraspati for help. Bhraspati commanded Agni to go and find out Indra. Agni searched for him in forests, rivers and lotuses. He found Indra hiding in a lotus and Bhraspati was duly informed. Then Bhraspati gave Indrāni some clever directions to kill Nabhā and Nabhā was killed. (See Agastya). There is a story in Śanti Parva, Chapter 28, of how Agni took for himself a quarter of the sin which Indra acquired because of his killing Vṛtra, a brahmin by birth. (Chapter 15, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

19) Agni Deva and Kārttikavirājya. After the great Kurukṣetra battle the Pāndavas went again to Kurukṣetra along with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. On their way Kṛṣṇa showed them the Parāsurasamhārasas and narrated to them several stories of Rāma. Reference to Agni comes when Kṛṣṇa explains the reason for Kṛṣṇa cutting off the thousand hands of Kārttikavirājya. It was at the time when Kārttikavirājya was ruling the three worlds by his might that Agni went and asked for alms from him. Kārttikavirājya gave Agni mountains and forests for his food which Agni burnt and ate. In one of the forests the sage asked if Aśvapati and that Agni was burnt. Agni said: “Agni went to Vṛtra saying that his thousand hands would be cut off by Parāsurasamhāra. Though the curse was not seriously minded by the King then, it so happened that before long Kārttikavirājya had to meet Parāsurasamhāra in a battle when the children of the King stole a sacrificial cow belonging to Jamadagni, father of Parāsurasamhāra. In the battle all the thousand hands of Kārttikavirājya were cut off by Parāsurasamhāra. (Chapter 43, Śanti Parva, M.B.).

20) How Agni was duped. Once the wives of the Saptarṣis (seven Saints) attended a yāga where Agni was also present. Agni fell in love with them but knowing it to be futile to make any attempt to fulfil his desire he went to the forests deserted. Śvāda, daughter of Dakṣa was for a long time craving to marry Agni, and she decided to take advantage of the opportunity thus offered. Disguising herself as the wife of Aṅgiras, one of the seven saints, she approached Agni and said: “O Lord, I am Śiva, wife of Aṅgiras. We were all excited when you darted cupids’ arrows against us and they have now selected me to come to you for fulfilling your desire”. Agni believed her and took her as his consort. (Pages 223 to 227 of Vana Parva, M.B.).

21) How Agni became a doctor. There was once a sage called Dattātreya who had a son called Nimi. Nimi had a son and he died after thousand years. The bereaved sage performed a Śrāddhā which was attended by all devas. The feat was so auspicious that the devas got indigestion after that. Consulting Brahmā Agni prescribed a remedy for their indigestion. He said: “Whenever you take any food make me also a participant in that. If you do so you will never get indigestion”. That is why a very small portion of any cooked food is first thrown into the fire before given for eating. This story is part of Bishama’s oration to Dharmaputra on the origin of śṛddhika. (The ceremony conducted on the anniversary of the death of a person by his son). (Chapter 92, Anuśasana Parva, M.B.)

22) How Agni became a horse. There was once a preceptor named A维奇. He got a disciple named Uttanga. One day A维奇 left his śārma for a distant place leaving his disciple in charge of the management of the śārma. The preceptor was absent for a long time and his wife started making love to Uttanga. The dutiful disciple strongly objected to this. When Uttanga completed his course of study under A维奇 he enquired what he should give to his preceptor. The preceptor directed him to his wife. The wife who bore a grudge against Uttanga resolved to tease him and said that she should go to King Pauṣya and beg of him the earrings worn by his wife. Uttanga started immediately and getting the earrings was coming back when on the way Taksaka wrested the ornament from him and went and hid in the nether-world. Uttanga followed Taksaka and there Agni in the form of a horse appeared before him and asked Uttanga what he wanted. He replied that he wanted to subdue all the serpents in the nether-world. Agni then advised him to bl, w thro’ the nostrils of the horse. As he did so flames burst forth from all the openings of the horse making the nether-world hot and smoky. Taksaka was frightened and he at once gave back the earrings to Uttanga. Uttanga was again worried for he had very little time to carry the earrings to the preceptor in time. Here again Agni helped him by carrying him swiftly on his back to the śārma. When the preceptor and his wife found that Uttanga had carried out their wish they blessed him. (Chapter 3, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

23) Agni becomes a messenger. Once there arose a misunderstanding between Bhṛpati and Sāvatthakā, sons of Anuvasa. Bhṛpati went to Devaśoka as priest and made it his goal to make bhūmaṇa world as a mad saint. At that time a King called Marutta invited Bhṛpati to officiate as priest for a yajña of his. But Bhṛpati refused to accept it. Nārada saw Marutta in despair and told him thus: “You go to Kāṭṭi (Benares) and there at Purasva place a dead body and wait there. Sāvatthakā, Bhṛpati’s brother will come and reprimand you. Without minding his scoldings follow him and request him to become the chief priest for your yajña. He will then ask you who advised you to do like this. Tell him that Nārada did so and if he asks where he could find Nārada do tell him that Nārada is hiding inside Agni.” Hearing this Marutta went to Ādi and dāl all as directed. Sāvatthakā agreed to cease the priest but wanted Marutta to bring some gold from Kālāśka before that. Marutta brought that also and the yajña started. Bhṛpati when he came to know of all these developments became sorry for his refusal first and decided to become the priest of Marutta for his yajña. It was Agni who carried this message of consent to King Marutta. Thus Marutta’s yajña was performed in his name. (Chapter 9, Aśvamedha Parva, M.B.)

24) Agni takes the fire. At the time of Khāṇḍa dāhana (burning of Khāṇḍa forest) Agni gave Arjuna the famous Gāṅdīva bow which Varuna had given him. After the great Mahābhārata battle Agni took back this bow from Arjuna. The Pāṇḍavas at the flag end of their life started on a pilgrimage to the south with their consort Pāṇčellī. Marching along slowly they reached the shores of Arunā Śāmadra (Arunā Ocean). Arjuna had with him then the Gāṅdīva and also the arrow-case which never becomes empty. When they reached the shores of the ocean Agni blocked their way standing before them in the form of a huge mountain and said, “O Arjuna I am god Agni. It was I who gave this famous Gāṅdīva bow to you. The bow belongs to Varuna. So please throw it into the ocean and proceed on your way.” On hearing this Arjuna threw both the bow and the arrow-case into the ocean and continued the march. (Ślokas 33 to 43, Chapter 1, Mahāpravakṣhāna Parva, M.B.)

25) Additional information about Agni, the God of fire.

1) Śvāhādevī, wife of Agni, gave birth to three sons, named Dākṣiṇam, Gāṅgaprayatam and Ahaṇvantyam. (Chapter 9, Devi Bhāgavata).

2) Agni, the God of fire, got three sons by his wife Śvāhādevī named Pāvaka, Pāvānā and Śuci. These three sons had all together forty-five sons. These forty-five grandsons, three sons and Agni himself constitute the forty-six Fire deities mentioned in the purāṇas (Angrāṇa).

3) Nila, the monkey, is born of Agni. (Sarga 41, Chapter Kiṣkindhā, Rāmaṇya).

4) Dṛṣṭaḍyumna, the great archer, was born of Agni. (Ślokas 126, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

5) Subrahmaṇya was born as the son of Agni. (Chapter 223, Vana Parva, M.B.).

6) Agni, the God of fire, loved all the prajāpatis like his sons. (Chapter 85, Anuvasana Parva, M.B.).

7) The sage, Bhṛgu, was born from Agni. (Ślokas 8, Chapter 5, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

8) All Devas are Agni himself. (Ślokas 109, Chapter 85, Anuvasana Parva, M.B.).

9) God Agni loved God Śaṅkara more than anybody else. (Chapter 226, Vana Parva, M.B.).

10) At the time when Śrī Rāma after killing Rāvana was putting Sītā to a purity test by throwing her into the fire, Agni witnessed that Sītā had done no wrong and was pure and chaste as before. (Ślokas 28, Chapter 201, Vana Parva, M.B.).

11) In the beginning Brahmā created the universe. There was no death then and the Earth became overcrowded. Brahmā got worried and he sent fire from his body to burn all beings. The world was on the verge of extinction when Lord Śiva intervened and requested Brahmā to withdraw Agni and create the god of Death. (Chapter 52, Drona Parva, M.B.).

12) Agni is in one of the Aṣṭa Vasis which are eight in number. The others are: Apa, Bhṛgu, Soma, Dharmā, Anila, Pratyaṇa and Prabhāsī. (Chapter 15, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

13) Śuchi, son of Agni, born of Śvāhādevī is Bādavāgni himself. (Chapter 20, Agni Purāṇa).

14) The God, Agni, uses a spear as his weapon and the vehicle he uses is a goat. (Chapter 51, Agni Purāṇa).

15) The sage, Agastyā, converted the Viṣṇu idol at the Kurukṣetram temple into one of Śiva and when people around started an agitation Agastyā sent forth flames of fire through his eyes. (Aśura Kāṇḍa of Śkanda Purāṇa).

16) Agni was born to Pururavas as a son named Jáṭavedas. (Chapter 14, Navaṇava Skandha of Bhāgavata).
17) The Devas wanted help to clean their hands when obiated materials stuck to their hands, and Agni created from water three sons known as Ekta, Dvita and Tritha for this purpose. Of these Tritha fell into a well while drawing water. Seeing him fall the demons closed the well but Tritha broke the top and came out. (Sūkta 52, Anuvāka 10, Mandala 1 of Rgveda).
18) Once the earth looked like heaven because of the immumerable celestial beings that came to earth in search of Agni. (Sūkta 63, Anuvāka 12, Mandala 1 of Rgveda).
19) The Sun hands over his effulgence to Agni in the evening and takes it back from him in the morning. (A fact from Sūra—Sūkta 71, Anuvāka 12, Mandala 1 of Rgveda).
20) For making fire for the sacrificial ceremony the sage main job of Agni is to Agni sticks. These are two pieces of wood, one upper and another lower, and fire is produced by attrition. It is believed that the sage gets the strength to produce fire from it through Vivā, one of the forms of Vāyu (air). So Rgveda describes Agni as the son of Vāyu. (Sūkta 112, Anuvāka 16, Mandala 1.)
21) In the times of the Rgveda Agni was worshipped as a God. (Sūkta 1, Anuvāka 1, Mandala 1 of Rgveda).
22) Lord Śiva entered into an elaborate and long conjugal play for creating Subrahmanyā. Hundred years went by and still the preliminaries never ended. The universe was on the verge of a collapse and so the devas decided to send Agni to put a stop to this libidinal play of Śiva. But Agni was afraid of Śiva and therefore absconded and hid himself in the ocean. The ocean became hot and the water-animals unable to bear the increasing heat went and informed the devote of Agni’s hiding place. Agni cursed them all saying that all of them would go dumb. He then went to the Mandara mountain in the shape of an owl and hid there. But the devas went there also and picked him up. Agni thus by his terrible heat stimulated Śiva into action. Śiva threw his spear into Agni and Agni poured it into Ganga and Ganga delivered a child which later on became Subrahmanyā. (Tatra 6, Lagavakalambaka of Kathāsaritra).
26) Conclusion. Agni stands next to Indra in importance in the Vedas. Because Agni was indispensable for yāgas the care of Agni became a separate task. According to the Rgveda the birth of Agni is different. Born of the clouds Agni reaches the earth as lightning. Then Agni forges his form and becomes invisible. It was Mātarīstä who gave form to Agni and gave him to the Bhrigu family. From that day onwards it became possible to produce fire and the Rgveda describes how Agni is produced by sages by the use of Arati sticks. The presence of Agni is to receive the oblations from devas when they conduct yāgas.
27) Sāvasāyō of Agni.

Śikha, Cātāhāna, Vānā, Sve, Appatā.
2) Dāvāva: Śiva, Bīdaḥ, Bāvā, Bāvānānā.
3) Agniśāla: Jvalā, Kila, Arca, Hēd, Śikha. (Flame)
4) Ṣpāra: Śulungā, Āṅgikānā.
5) Heat: Sattāpa, Śayārā.
6) Firebrand: Ulīkā.
7) Ashes: Bhūpa, Bhistā, Śthānā, Kṣaṇa, Rākṣa.

AGNHOTRA. A son of the first Manus.
AGNIDATTA. See under the word Davagatha.
AGNIDATTĀ. (See under GUNASĀRMĀ.)
AGNHRANA TIKTHA. This is the name of a sacred place near Gauḍamavana. (See Sloka 146, Chapter 84, Vana Parva, M.B.)

AGHINGHRA (AGNIDHRA).
2) Birth: Priyavrata, son of Vivasvatsamivas, married Barhmati, daughter of Viśvakarma. Agnīḥtra was one of their ten sons. The other nine sons were: Ilihärjiha, Yagabhū, Māṅgāvar, Hiraṇyvarat, Ghrā-, Pravā, Sava, Nādāhtīḥ, Viśthrā and Kavi. A daughter also was born to Priyavrata and Barhmati named Črīvatsa. Śukra married her and Devayāṇi was their daughter.
3) Married tīrtha. Agnīḥtra married a nymph named Pratīvats. They had nine children: Nābā, Kimpurpa, Haṭi, Haṣṭata, Rāmika, Hiraṇyaka, Kuru, Bhradjava and Kṣatūma. It was from this Kuru that the Kurus began.
4) Other incidents. (1) Agnīḥtra ruled over Jambudvīpa for a long time. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 6).
(2) While he was the ruler of Jambudvīpa Agnīḥtra once went into a cave and did hard taps there without eating any food. Brahma then sent a beautiful nymph (Apsara maiden) to him to tempt him and thwart his taps. Agnīḥtra fell a victim to the temptation. His presence was shaken by that nymph named Vīpracittra. He married her. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 5, Chapter 2).

AGNIGHOTRA (M). This is a sacrifice offered to Agni-deva. This has two parts, ināya and Kānya.
AGNIKETU: A demon (Rāksasa) who was a close friend and supporter of Rāvana. Rāma killed him in the battle with Rāvana.

AGNIKUMĀRA. An epithet of Lord Subrahmanya.

AGNILOKA. One of the devakāsas situated on the summit of Mount Mahāmukar. There are a few other devakāsas on the same mountain. They are: Indrailoka, Yamaloka, Sivaloka, or Kailāsa, Satyaloka and Vaiśakaloka (devī Bhagavata).

AGNIMĀN. Name of one Agni.

AGNIMITRA. The hero of Kālidāsa's play, Mālavikāgnimitra. He was a King of the Śrīgga dynasty and the son of Putyanitra. Kālidāsa's play deals with the marriage of Mālavikā and Agnimitra.

AGNIMUKHA. An Asura.

1. Genealogy. He was descended from Viśnu in this order: Viśnu - Brahmacari - Marici - Kasyapa - Śrūpadama - Agnimukha.

2. Birth. Śrūpadama married Maya's daughter and Agnimukha was born as their son. In the battle between the devas and asuras, the latter were defeated and one of them sought shelter in Fattāla (the lower world). Kasyapa married his daughter Surṣā. They had six children: Vijaya, Śrūpadama, Smhika, Smīha-vikrata, Vāraṇāsika, and Ajānumān. Śrūpadama married Maya's daughter. Agnimukha was one of their four sons, the other three being Bhāṇugopa, Vaiṣṇavāh and Hiranyā. (Skanda Purāṇa, Āsura-Kanda). In the Skanda Purāṇa there is a vivid description of the valiant way in which Agnimukha fought in the battle between the devas and asuras.

AGNIPA. Son of a Brahmin named Vedanidhi. Once five gandharva maidens named Pramodini, Sūrīlā, Susavā, Sūrālī and Candrikā fell in love with him and requested him to marry them. Being a strict Brahmacari Agnipā was offended by this request and so he cursed them and turned them into frogs. Vedanidhi pitied them and sought the advice of sage Lomasā and so these unfortunate maidens could be redeemed from the curse. According to Lomasā's advice the five maidens bathed in the holy lake of Prayāgāśārim and regained their original forms. Then obeying the instructions of sage Lomasā Agnipā married all these five gandharva maidens. (Chapters 128 and 129, Uttarakhandha, Padma Purāṇa).

AGNILAVASA. Entering fire. In the Yuddha-Kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa, Valmiki has described Śītā's entering and standing in fire (agnilavasa) as a test of her purity. Though Rāma recovered Śītā from Rāvana, he wanted to accept her as his wife only after her purity had been tested and proved. So he decided to test her by fire (agniparākṣanam). Śītā shed tears at the sight that her husband doubted her chastity. Taking Rāma's hudding, made a pyre. Śītā jumped into it after praying to the gods. She remained unconsumed by the fire and Rāma gladly received her once more as his wife.

AGNILPURĀNA. A sacred place (Punya dīrgha) in Indore on the banks of the river Narmad. Many scholars identify this with the place Maheshwar. (Śloka 43, Chapter 15, Apana Parva, M.B.).

AGNILPURĀNA(ā). A sacred place (Punya dīrgha) in Indore on the banks of the river Narmad. Many scholars identify this with the place Maheshwar. (Śloka 43, Chapter 15, Apana Parva, M.B.).

1) General information. This is one of the eighteen Puranas ascribed to Vyās. It is believed that this Purāṇa was originally given orally (as advice) by Agni to many sages. deva and Sage Vasiṣṭha. It is a vast comprehensive work dealing with every subject of importance. To give a copy of this book to a good Brahmin on the Full Moon day in the month of Mārga is supposed to be a highly virtuous and meritorious deed.

2) Contents. This large Purāṇa consists of about 420 chapters. It deals in detail with the following subjects: The Daśavatāras of Mahāviṣṇu; Rāmāyaṇa; Mahābhārata; rules and injunctions relating to the worship of various gods (devapriyādhī); installation of idols in temples (devatapratisthā); Vamanamātras; astrology; architecture and sculpture; Ayurveda; Viṣṇavāda (treatment of poisons from Snakebite etc.); the principles of the drama (Nāṭaka) and other allied arts; figures of speech and all abhākāras in general; and physiology of the human body. All these subjects are treated in a detailed and scientific manner.

AGNIPOTRNĀ. A King of the Solar dynasty (Suryavarsa).

AGNISAMBHAVĀ. A King of the Solar dynasty.

AGNISARMA. (See the word VIDYUVYOTAYA.)

AGNISRIKHA. Father of Varuşi. He is also known by the name Somadatta. (Kathāśāstra-Kathāprātabhālamba-Tārāṇṭa I. See also the word GUSABARĀ). AGNISRIKHTI. A holy place on the plains of the river, Yaman. Arjuna's brother, Sahadeva, performed a yāga at this place. (M.B., Vān Parva, Chapter 90).

AGNIŚOMA. A deity born of the union of two devas, Agneveda and Somadeva. He is one of the devas who receive the havis (oblations) poured into the sacrificial fire in a homa.

AGNIŚOMA (ā). Agni and Soma. Agni had two sons by his third wife Bhānu (also called Nīśa). They were Agni and Soma. These two sons were collectively called Janaka.

AGNIŚAUCA (M). A cloak with magical properties given to Nala by the serpent, Kārkotaka. After separating himself from Damayanti, Nala was wandering in the forest. Then he was bitten by the poisonous serpent, Kārkotaka. This deformed Nala beyond recognition.

Then the serpent gave him this shawl (Agniśauca). Anybody who wore that cloak would regain its original form and colour. (Kathāsaritsagarā-Ālankāravatī-lālībaka-Tantaragi 8).

AGNIŚTALI. (See the word PURŪRĀVAS).

AGNIŚTHAMBHA (M). A mantra that will reduce the burning power of Agni.

AGNIŚTOMA. (See AGNIŚTU).

AGNIŚTU. (AGNIŚTOMA).

1) Ārya. (Descended from Viśnu in this order:—Viśnu-Svēyambhuvanam—Uttānapāda-Dīrgha-Sṛjō-Rupu-Cakṣuṣaṇam—Agniśtu.)

2) Bīśa. Ten good sons were born to Manu by his wife, Nadvallā and Agniśtu was one of them. The other nine sons were: Sūra, Pārū, Satadrumā, Tapasvī, Satyavāk, Kavi, Atriśvā, Sudhumā and Atriśvā. (Agni śāstra, Chapter 18).

AGNIŚVATTA. One of the seven Pitr. The other six Pitr are: Vairāja, Gañapatya, Soma, Ekaśinga, Caturedu and Kāla. (M.B., Sāhārī Parva, Chapter 11, Verses 45, 46 and 46).

AGNIVESA. A Sage. He was the preceptor of Drona and Drupada. It is believed that he learned archery and the military arts from Sage Agastya. Drona had the greatest respect for this guru, Agnivesa. He was a master in the use of all weapons. There are references to this in Chapter 139, Aṭi Parva of the Mahābhārata.

AGRAHA. The name of an Agni, a son of the Agni named Bhūn. Bhūn married Suprāṭa, daughter of the sun and Agraha was one of the six children born to them. In the Āktūrmaśakayajja Agraha receives eight kinds of havīs (Oblations). (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 221).

AGRAJ. The name of an Agni. He was the fifth son of the Agni named Bhūn and his wife, Nīśādevī. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Slōkas 15 to 22).

AGRAŚANDHAK. The name of the book which Yama (the God of Death—Kāla) keeps in which all the virtuous and sinful actions of men are recorded.

AGRAYAN. One of the hundred sons of Dhrutarāstra. He is also known by the name, Anuayūti. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 11).

AHA I. One of the aśavasus. His father was Dharma and mother, Raddevī. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Slōkas 17 to 20).

AHA II (AH). A sacred pond. If one bathes in it he will go to the land of the Sun. (M.B., Vana Parva, Slōka 100, Chapter 89).

AHA III. One born of the dynasty of demons (āsura-varṇās). (See under Heśi, the genealogy chart of the demon dynasty).

AHARA. A sun born of Danu to Katyāya. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Slōka 25, Chapter 65).

AHALYĀ. Turned into stone by the curse of her husband, Gautama. Ahalyā was a princess of the Pāru dynasty.

In Kathāsaritsagarā this story is told in a slightly different yet more interesting way. As soon as Gautama entered the āśrama Indra turned himself into a cat. Angrily the sage questioned Ahalyā, “Who was standing here when I came in?” Ahalyā replied, “Bhūmaśaḥ kahaṁ ca yāvān.” (‘Ish bhūmaśaḥ kahaṁ my lover.’) It was a cat which was standing there. Here Ahalyā used a pun on the word ‘mājāra’ and tried to be honest. ‘Mājāra’ is the Prakrit form of the word ‘mājāraḥ’ which means cat. But ‘mājāra’ has another meaning also. (mā—mine jāra—lover i.e. mājāra—my lover). So Ahalyā did not lie to her husband. (Kathāsaritasagarā, Lavānakalāmbaka).

3) How Ahalyā happened to bring up the mighty monkeys, Bāli and Sugrivā. Once Aruṇa, the charioteer of Sūrya (the Sun) went to devaloka to see the dance of the celestial maidens there. Since there was no admission to the dance for men Aruṇa disguised himself as Arunidevi and sought admission; seeing the beautiful form of Arunidevi Indra fell in love with her and that night a child was born to Indra by her. On the advice of Indra Arunidevi took the child to Ahalyā before daybreak and left it there to be looked after by her. It was this child which later on became the famous Bāli. Aruṇa went a bit late that morning to his master, the Sun. The latter wanted an explanation and Aruṇa told him what had happened. The Sun then told Aruṇa to become Arunidevi again and seeing the enchanting figure the Sun also got a child of her. This child also was taken to Ahalyā and it was this child that later on became the famous Sugrivā.

AINDAVA. (See paragraph 13 under the word BRAHMĀ).

AIRAVATA I. A large elephant, son of Irśvāti.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu in this order:— Viṣṇu—Brahmā—Kāśyapa—Bhūdramātā—Irśvāti—Airavata. Kāśyapa married Dākṣa’s daughter, Krodhasvāsi who bore him ten daughters. They were: Mrgi, Miyamānda, Hari, Bhadrabati, Mātrati, Sardūli, Svera, Surabhi, Sarasā and Kadru. Of these Bhūdramātā had a daughter named Irśvāti; and Airavata was her son. Airavata was not human in shape, he was a large elephant. (See Sarga 14, Aranyakāndā, Rāmāyana).

2) Indra’s Viṣṇu. Indra made Airavata his conveyance (Viṣṇu). Indra was Kāśyapa’s son by Āditī. Airavata also was descended from Kāśyapa. So Indra took Airavata as his viṣṇu.

3) Airavata caused the churning of the ocean of Milk. There is a story of how Airavata was responsible for the churning of the milk-ocean (Kṛṣṇaṁba-mathana). Once some maidens of devas presented a garland of flowers to sage Durvāsas. When Durvāsas visited Indra’s court he gave that garland to Indra. Indra put it on the tusks of his viṣṇu, Airavata. The fragrance of the flowers attracted a swarm of bees which became an intolerable nuisance to Airavata. So Airavata tore the garland off its tusks and hurled it away. When Durvāsas heard this, he took it as an insult. In his anger he cursed all the gods—the curse was that all gods should become subject to old age and the decrepititude and infirmities of old age. But though Durvāsas cursed the gods, he also prescribed a remedy. The gods could redeem themselves from the curse by drinking Amṛtām obtained from the ocean of Milk (Mahāviṣṇu lies on the serpent, Śeṣa on this ocean). The curse began to operate and the gods lost their perennial youth. The gods then befriended the Asuras and with their help they churned the ocean of Milk. They got the nectar (Amṛtām), drunk it and regained their youth. (See under the word AMṛTĀM).

4) There is another story about Airavata—A story of how he also rose out of the ocean of Milk. It is said that when the devas and asuras churned the ocean of Milk, Airavata also came up along with the other good things. This story is narrated in the 16th Chapter of Ādi Parā of the Mahābhārata. The explanation given is that when Durvāsas cursed the gods, Airavata was oppressed with a sense of guilt because he was responsible for the curse. So he took refuge in the ocean of Milk and there started propitiating Mahāviṣṇu. There is however no warrant for such an explanation in the purāṇas. But the explanation sounds plausible because it explains the absence of Airavata during the interval between Durvāsas’s curse and the churning of the sea. Airavata is represented as a white elephant. It is probable that he became white after his long residence in the ocean of Milk. This lends some additional plausibility to the above explanation.

5) Airavata, the Lord of the elephants. In the Viṣṇu Purāṇa we are told how Airavata was made the chief of all elephants. When the Mahāraja had crowned Pṛthu as the sovereign King, Brahmat gave new posts of honour to many of the devas. He made SOMA (Moon) the lord of the Stars and Planets, of Brahmā, Vāsudeva and Ākṣobhya. Kubera was made the overlord of all Kings; Varuṇa was made the master of the seas and all water; Viṣṇu, the lord of the Ādityās and Pārvata (Fire) the lord of the Varus. Along with these Brahmā made Airāvata the lord of all elephants. (Chapter 22, Viṣṇu Purāṇa.)

6) The breaking of Airāvata's tusks. There is a story of how the tusks of Airāvata were broken narrated in the Airāvata-kāṇḍa of Skanda Purāṇa. Once an asura (demon) named Śrāpaḍamā attacked devaloka. A fierce battle ensued between the gods and asuras. In the course of this battle, Javanta, Indra's son, was hit by an arrow and at once he fell dead. Enraged by this Airāvata rushed at Śrāpaḍamā's chariot and shattered it to pieces. Airāvata then attacked Śrāpaḍamā who broke his tusks and hurled him down to the earth. Airāvata lay paralysed for a long time; then he got up, retired to a forest and prayed to Lord Śiva. With the grace of Śiva Airāvata regained his lost tusks and was able to return to the heavens.

7) Other details about Airāvata. (1) There is a belief that Airāvata is one of the eight elephants guarding the eight zones of the universe. These eight elephants are called the Aspadiggajas. Airāvata is supposed to guard the eastern zone. (Chapter 66, Ādi Parva, Mahābhārata.)

(Airāvata and three other diggajas are supposed to reside in Purukṣa Island. (Chapter 12, Bhūṣṇa Parva, M.B.))

AIRĀVATA II. Name of a serpent born to Kaṭyaṇḍa and his wife Kaṇḍu. This is mentioned in Ślok 5, Chapter 35, Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata. Kaṇḍu's father's-name and Ulupi's father, Kauravya belonged to the family of this serpent. (See Ślok 18, Chapter 213, Ādi Parva.)

AIRĀVATA. An asura who was killed by Śrī Kraṇa. (See Chapter 38, Sabha Parva, Mahābhārata.)

AIRĀVATAGHĀṬTA. Name of a place near the seashore, lying to the north of the mountain, Śrīgavān. (See Ślok 37, Chapter 6, Bhūṣṇa Parva.)

AIRĀVATAGHĀṬTA. Name of a place near the seashore, lying to the north of the mountain, Śrīgavān. (See Ślok 37, Chapter 6, Bhūṣṇa Parva.)

AIRĀVATAGHĀṬTA. Name of a place near the seashore, lying to the north of the mountain, Śrīgavān. (See Ślok 37, Chapter 6, Bhūṣṇa Parva.)
AJAKHA (AJAVAKTRA). He was one of the soldiers in Skanda’s army. (M.B. Salyu Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 75). In the battle between Skanda and the Asuras, Ajamukha killed the Asura, Madhu. (Skanda Purāṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

2. Birth. Long ago in a battle between Devas and Asuras one of the routed Asuras had fled to Pātala (Hell). Suriṣā was his daughter. Brahma’s grandson, Kasyapa married Suriṣā. She gave birth to six children—Sūrāpada, Simhika, Simhavaktra, Tārakāsura, Ajamukhi and Gomukha. The Asura woman Ajamukhi is one of them. 3. Chief men. (1) Marriage with Durvasa. Once Sūrāpada called his two brothers, Simhavaktra and Tārakāsura and ordered them to set up two cities, one to the north and the other to the south, of Mahāmeru. In obedience to his elder brother, Tārakāsura started with one half of the army and set up a city to the south of Mahāmeru. That city was named Māyāpura. Simhavaktra lived in the city on the northern side of Mahāmeru. Their sister Ajamukhi went about enticing men to enter her lustful paramās. Once, in the course of her wanderings, she met Durvāśa in the Himalayan valley. They fell in love and even married. The two Asuras, Ivalā and Vātapi were born from their union. They insisted on sharing their father’s achievements between them. Durvāśa cursed them that they would die at the hands of Agastya. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

AJAMUKHI. See AJAMUKHĪ.

AJAKHA. A mountain. A reference to this is seen in the M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 163, Verse 32. Another name, Ajanābhā Varsa for the territory ruled over by Ajānābhā, is also found in Bhāgavata, Fifth Skandha, Chapter 1.

AJARA. Tapaniaka, the minister of King Varsa, told him the story of a man named Ajara to illustrate the law that all people will have to suffer the consequences of their actions in a previous birth. The story is given below—

Once upon a time, there lived a King named Vinasvāsī in Vilāsāsura, in the city of Śrīkṣaṭanāgarī. After some years, the King was affected by wrinkles of old age. A physician named Tarapuṣcadra came to the palace to cure the King of his wrinkles. ‘The King should remain alone in the interior of the earth for full eight months. He has to use a medicine while remaining there. It should not even be seen by anyone else. I myself am to administer the physician’s prescription.’ The King agreed. Accordingly the King and the physician spent six months in the interior of the earth. After that, the physician, after a search, found a man who exactly resembled the King and brought him to the interior of the earth. After two more months, the physician murdered the King and came out with the new man. The people welcomed him with honour as the King who was cured of his wrinkles. This man was Ajara. After some time, the physician approached Ajara for his reward. Ajara said: “It is by my Karmaphala (consequence of my actions in my previous birth) that I have become King. In my previous birth I renounced my body after doing penance. According to the boon which God gave me on that occasion, I have become King in my present birth”. The physician returned empty-handed. (Kathasaritsagar, Ratnaprabhanubhaka, 6th Tarasagya)

AJAVINDU. He was a King born in the dynasty of the Suviras. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 14).

A J EYA. He was a King in ancient Bharat. Ajeya’s name is found among the names of the Kings mentioned by Sanjaya to Dhrtarashtra. All the Kings were mighty and generous rulers who were the recipients of divine arrows. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 294).

AJIGARTA (RIKA). He was a greedy Brahman. (See RICKA I).

King Haritcandra who was distressed by having no children, propitiated god Varuna. Varuna blessed him saying that a son would be born to him. But the condition was that the child should be sacrificed to Varuna. When the child was born, Haritcandra did not like to sacrifice the boy. The sage Vyasa suggested that instead of sacrificing his own son it would be enough if he bought another boy and sacrificed him. Accordingly, Haritcandra sent his minister to find out and purchase a Brahman boy for the sacrifice. At that time there lived in Ayodhya a greedy Brahmin named Ajigarta. He had three sons. In the course of his search, the minister came across this greedy Brahman and asked him whether he was willing to sell one of his three sons. He continued: “Why should you be in this wretched state of poverty and misery? Sell one of your sons and you will get 100 cows as the price”. The minister’s words and the price offered for the son made a deep impression on the Brahmin’s mind. He thought: “It is impossible for me to earn 100 cows. Even if it were possible, how long would it take? If I sell him I shall get hundred cows at once. What a lucky chance! The loss of a son is nothing”. So thinking, he told his son Sunatstepta. (For the rest of the story, see the word “Sunatstepta” Dev Bhagavata, Skandhas 7, 8).

2) Birth. Prthu had two sons, Antardhāna and Vādē. Antardhāna had a son, Harihārana, by Śikhunāthi. Dhīsana, who was born in the Agnikula became Harihārana’s wife. Six sons were born, born to them, Prāćitaharā, Skuru, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vraja and Ajina. (Vipu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 14).

AJIVARA (See the word “SAKAVASA”).

AJODARA. There was an individual called Ajodara in Skanda’s army. (M.B., Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 60).

AKAMPANA. (A mighty warrior among the demons).

1) Genealogy. Descended from Vipu in the following order: Vipu - Brahmā - Hari - Vidyukṣa - Sukeša - Sumanī - Akampana.

2) Other details. Sumanī married Ketumati and got fourteen children. They were 1) Prahasa 2) Akampana 3) Vakta 4) Kalakāmukha 5) Dharmāsura 6) Daṇḍa 7) Śapardha 8) Śandrādha 9) Prācita 10) Bhasakarna 11) Keka 12) Surasakta 13) Kaśi 14) Kumbindunati. Of these the last four are daughters. Prahasa was one of the ministers of the demon King. Kaśi was married to Vīravas, son of Pulastya. Vīravas got three sons and a daughter. They were Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarna and Vibhisana and Śapardha. It was Akampana who informed Rāvaṇa that Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa had killed his three allies, Kuru, Dāsana and Tribhata (Ananya Kanda, Valmiki Ramayana).

3) Death. Akampana fought a fierce battle with Hanumān and in the end Hanumān plucked a big tree and hit Akampana on the head with it and killed him. (Sarga 56, Yuddha Kanda of Ramayana).

AKAMPANA II. He was a king who lived in the Kṛtayuga. He had a son named Hari who was a fierce fighter. He was killed in a battle and the King became much depressed. Nārada consoles him with other stories and Vyasa told this story to Dharmaputra when he found the latter greatly depressed and gloomy after the great battle was over. (Chapter 52, Drona Parva of M.B. also makes mention of Akampana).

AKKAR ropes. son of Kadru.

2) Birth. Kaśyapa married Śakuntali and the eight daughters of Dakṣa named Āśit, Diti, Danu, Kalika, Tārā, Krodhavāsa, Manu and Anāli. Krodhavāsa got ten sons. One of them is Kadru. Ananta and Akarkara were born of Kadru. (Sarga 16, Chapter 35, Adi Parva, M.B.).

AKRODA. A King of the Pūra dynasty. He was born to King Ajañcālā and his Queen, Kāmā, Kāmā mother of Akrodha, was the daughter of Pṛthu. (Sarga 21, Chapter 95, Adi Parva, M.B.).

 AKTRAśrama. He is one of the few sannyāsin who have gone to heaven after completing the fourth aśrama of life namely, Sannyāsa. The Kaurava-Pāṇḍava battle was over. As the eldest, Dharmaputra performed oblations to all those of the good and the bad in the war. He was then met by many sages including Vyāsa and Nārada who comforted him in his bereavement. When Dharmaputra later met Bhīṣma the latter among many other stories told him the story of Akṣarāśrama also. (Sarga 17, Chapter 244, Sūrī Parva, M.B.).

AKTAVRĀSA. 1) General Information. Akṛta-vrāsa was a great sage of erudition and was a disciple of Parāśurāma. He is expelled in the Purāṇas and it is said that Sūra who recited first the story of Mahābhārata to an assembly of sages in the forest of Naimiśa was a disciple of Akṛta-vrāsa. (Skandha 12 of Bhāgavata).

2) How he became a disciple of Parāśurāma. Para urāma was returning after obtaining arrows from Lord Śiva after pleasing him by a fierce penance. He was walking briskly through the dense forests anxious to be at the side of his preceptors to get their blessings. As he passed a great cave he heard a moan and on getting to the site of the sound found a brahmin boy being attacked by a tiger. The tiger immediately fell dead by an arrow from Paramārtha. Lo! the tiger turned into a gandharva freed now from a curse because of which he was for years living as a tiger. The gandharva bowed down respectfully and thanked the sage for giving him relief and left the place. The brahmin boy fell down at the feet of Paramārtha and said, “Great Lord, because of you I have now become Akritavṛṣṇi meaning one who has not received any wound; Akrites—having secured veena wound; I shall, therefore, be your disciple forever henceforth.” From that day onwards he never left Paramārtha but followed him as his disciple.

3) Other details. (1) In the story of Mahābhārata we find Akritavṛṣṇi in several different contexts appearing on behalf of Paramārtha. It was Akritavṛṣṇi who told Dharmaputra the life and exploits of Paramārtha during the exile of the Pandavas in the forest. (Chapters 115 to 117, Visā Paṇḍava, M.B.)

(2) In Chapter 83 of Udyoga Paṇḍava we read about Akritavṛṣṇi meeting Śri Kṛṣṇa while the latter was going to Hastinapura.

(3) In Chapter 175 of Udyoga Paṇḍava we read about Akritavṛṣṇi detailing the history of the Kaurava dynasty to Duryodhana.

(4) Akritavṛṣṇi has played a very important role in the story of Ambā, daughter of the King of Kāśi. Ambā along with her two sisters, Ambikā and Ambālikā, were brought down to Hastinapura by Bhima for his brother Vīśvavṛtra to marry. But on knowing that Ambā had mentally chosen Śālva as her husband, Bhima allowed her to go back to Śālva. But on her return to Śālva he refused to accept her and she came back to Hastinapura. Bhima then requested Vīśvavṛtra to accept her as his wife which, unfortunately, Vīśvavṛtra also refused to do. Ambā then turned to Bhima and besought him to marry her which, much to his regret, he could not do because of his vow of celibacy. Thus foresaken by all, her sweetness turned into bitter hatred towards Bhima and she remained alive thereafter only to kill Bhima. But even the foremost of warriors were not willing to antagonise Bhima and so her appeal to help was not heeded by any. It was then that Hotrāvāhi her grandfather on the maternal side met her and directed her to Paramārtha. When she went to Paramārtha it was Akritavṛṣṇi who received her and on hearing her sorrowful tale encouraged her to seek vengeance on Bhima. Again it was he who persuaded Paramārtha to champion her cause and go for a fight against Bhima. During the fight Akritavṛṣṇi acted as charioteer to Paramārtha. (Sloka 9, Chapter 179, Udyoga Paṇḍava, M.B.)

AKSHA. 1) Genealogy. Descended in order from Vīnu as follows: Brahmā—Pulāṣṭya—Vīśravas—Rāvana—Akṣa. (Uttarāṇāsana.)

2) Birth. Three sons were born to Rāvana, King of the demons, by his wife Mantodari. They were Meghadu, Atikāya and Akṣakumāra. Akṣakumāra was a redoubtable hero and a fierce fighter but was killed by Hanumān in Lankā. (Sarga 47, Sundara Kanda, Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa.)

AKSHA 11. We find another warrior of this name among the soldiers who came to help Skanda in the Kurukṣetra battle. (Sloka 50, Chapter 45, Śilāya Paṇḍava, M.B.)

AKSHARADAYA A sacred chant or mantra. When Nala was roaming about in the forest after his separation from Damayanti he happened to save the cobra, Karkotaka, from a wild fire. But in return the snake bit him and made him as black as clouds. He then advised Nala to go to the palace of King Rūtapāṇa where the cobras, Nala would be taught the secret mantra of Akṣahayadaya by the king.

One who knows this sacred chant can find all secrets of a game of dice and can count within no time the number of leaves, fruits and flowers on a tree. Nala went to Rupannya and stayed with him. While living there a brahmin named Sudeva came to Rupannya and informed him that Damayanti was going to marry again. Rupannya immediately started for Vedarsha taking Nala as his charioteer. The chariot driven by Nala flew like a wind and on the way when Rupannya’s handkerchief fell down and he requested Nala to stop the chariot. Nala informed him that by the time the request was made they had travelled already one yojana. As they proceeded they saw a huge tree full of leaves and fruits. Rupannya at a glance told Nala that the tree contained five crores of leaves and two thousand nine hundred and five fruits. Nala was surprised. Then they understood that Nala was able to drive the chariot so quickly because of his knowledge of the sacred chant of Akṣahayadaya and that Rupannya was able to count the leaves and fruits because of his knowledge of the chant of Akṣahayadaya. They taught each other the sacred mantras. Because of this Akṣahayadaya Nala was able to win the game of dice once the second time and regain his kingdom. (Chapter 72, Vana Parva)

AKṢAMALĀ (ARUNDHATI). See under Arundhati.

AKṢAPRAPATANA. A particular place in the country of Aratta. At this place Sri Kṛṣṇa killed two demons named Gopari and Tālača. (Sloka 28, Chapter 38, Mahābhārata)

AKṢARAPURUṢA. When all was set for the Kurukṣetra battle Arjuna showed signs of weakness and hesitated to proceed for a fight. Sri Kṛṣṇa then through the famous Gītā emphasized a philosophy of life during the course of which he speaks about the two purusārs, Kṣara and Akṣara. All that we see in this world and enjoy are Kṣara and the power behind all of them is Akṣara God. Sri Kṛṣṇa then explained the aspects Kṣara and Akṣara and stands as the root cause of all life. (Slokas 16 to 19, Chapter 39, Bhīma Parva, M.B.)

AKṢASOTRA. She was the wife of the sage Apasambha. She was a very chaste woman. (See under Āparastamba).

AKṢAUHINI. A big division of an army. It is described in the Vēnśa 19 to 26 in the 2nd chapter of Ādi Parva of Mahābhārata. It says thus: One chariot, one elephant, three horses and five soldiers constitute what is termed a Patti. Three such patīs make one Sāṇāmukha and three such Sāṇāmukhas make one Guśma. Three Gušmas make one Gana and three such ganas make one Vāhinī. Three such vāhinīs make one Pusnā. An Akṣauhini contains 20,760 chariots, an equal number of elephants, 25,816 horses and 109,050 soldiers.

AKṢAYAPATRA. This is a copper vessel given to Dharmaśāstra by Sūrya. (Suśaṇ). To destroy the Pāṇḍavas, Duryodhana kept them in a palace made of lac. They escaped from there and passing through dense forests crossed the river Ganges and reached the Kingdom of Pātali. Where they married the King’s daughter, Kṛṣṇa (Pātali). On their way they killed two demons called Kṛṣṇa and Baka. When they were living happily at Indraprastha the jealous Duryodhana deduced them in a game of dice by foul play and sent them for a period of twelve years to the forests. The Pāṇḍavas found it impossible to find the innumerable subjects who faithfully followed them to the forest. Dharmaśāstra then prayed to the God, Śiva and he appeared before him and gave him this Akṣaya Pātra. (Akṣaya = never getting empty. Pātra = pot). Everyday this pot never got empty till the meals of Parīkṣita were over. (Chapter 5, Vana Parva, M.B.). See also under Duryodhana, Parīkṣita.

AKṢAYAYAVĀTA. A sacred lake. When the Pāṇḍavas during their exile went to Puliṣṭyaśārama sage Parīkṣita gave a description of all the sacred lakes in India. He says, “After reaching Mārkandeya lake you should visit the meeting place of the rivers Gangā and Gomati. Then when you reach Gayā you will find there a lake called Akṣayayavāta. If you bathe in that lake you will get salvation”. In the Nāma Skandha of Dvīti Bhaṛava you find the following about Akṣayayavāta: “Purpa-bhadra is one of the famous sacred rivers in India. This river starts from the Himalayas with the name Saravatī and flowing for 500 yojanas. (One yojana is equal to 6 miles) on the left side of river Gomati reaches the western ocean. There is an śrīkrīṣṇa called Akṣayayavāta on the shores of this beautiful river which always carries crystal clear water. The śrīkrīṣṇa got that name because of a big banana tree standing there. Whenever you see the great sage, did please sitting here for a long time. Lord Śiva, Bhadrakāli and Śkanda used to come and sit underneath this banana tree.”

AKṢINA. H. was the son of Vivasvāna. (Sloka 30, Chapter 14, Anuśāsana Parva. For more details see under Vivasvāna).

AKṣOPARA

1) General information. There is a lake in the Himalayas called Indradyumna. Akṣopara is a tortoise living in it. There is also a statement that this is the Adi-Karma (second of the ten incarnations of God). A description of Akṣopara is found in Chapter 189 of Vana Parva in Mahābhārata.

2) Gloryful (Our times has no death) When the Pāṇḍavas were in exile in the forests sage Mārkandeya tells many stories to Dharmaśāstra to console him in his sad plight. The Pāṇḍavas asked Mārkandeya whether he knew of anybody living before him. Then the sage said, “In times of old Indradyumna an asctic King (Rāja) fell down from heaven when he fell short of his accumulated Punya.  Sorrowsome came to me and asked me whether I knew him. I replied in the negative adding that perhaps Prāvṛtakarna an owl living on the top of the Himalayas might know him since he was older than me. At once Indradyumna became a horse and taking me on its back approached the owl living in the Himalayas. The owl also could not remember Indradyumna but directed him to a stork named Nādiṣṭha who was older than the owl. The Azhva in the end then to the Indradyumna lake where the stork lived. The stork also could not find the identity of Indradyumna. Perhaps he said that a tortoise of name Akṣopara living in that same lake might know him. We then approached the tortoise and enquired whether he knew Indradyumna. The tortoise sat in meditation for some time and then weeping profusely and shaking his leaf stood bowing respectfully and said, “How can I ever without knowing him? There are several monuments of the useful work done by him here. This very lake is of his making. This came into existence by the march of the cows he gave away to the people”. The moment the tortoise finished speaking a chariot appeared from heaven to take the King away. The King after leaving me and the owl in their proper places ascended to heaven in the chariot.

ALAGHU. A son born to Vasistha by Orjja, Raja (Raja); Gatra; Urdhva-chahu; Savana; Sukra and Surapas, who were great hermits, were brothers of Alaghu, who has another name ‘Alaghā’. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

ALAKA. The city of Kubera.

ALAKANANDA. River Gangā of devakula. The river ganga of the nether world. It flows through Alakananda and is called Vaitarani when it flows through Pitrloka (nether world). Kṛṣṇa-dvipa-pāyana (Vyāsa) declares that Deva Gangā with crystal pure water flowing in devakula under the name Alakananda and Vaitarani of the nether world, a terror to sinners, are the same as the Gangā of the earth. (Stotras 21 and 22, Chapter 170, Bhūṣaṇa Bhārata, A.P.).

Starting from Viṣṇupāda Alakananda flows through Devayāna which blazes with the splendour of a crore of beautiful many-storied buildings. Flowing from there to Gaudārṇandala (moon), and flooding it completely flows down to Brahmataloka. From there it divides into four rivulets and flows to the four different sides with the names Syāti, Gukus, Alakananda and Bhadrā. Of these four falls on the thickly wooded mountain tops of Mahāmūndra. Water from there flows through Ganghāmadana by the side of Bhadrāsvarāvara falls down in the eastern ocean Gukus falls on the top of Mahāyāna mountain and flowing through Keśumālā falls down in the western ocean. The most sacred of the group, Alakananda, falls on the mountain of Hemakūta and from there flows through Bhadrāsvarāvara and falls down in the southern ocean. The fourth, Bhadrā, falling on the top of the Mountain, Srigāvan, flows to the northern ocean. Of these four sacred is Alakananda which flows through Bhadrāsvarāvara and it is believed that even those who think of taking a bath in that will acquire the benefit of performing yāgas like Āśvamedha and Kāṣṭhā. (Eighth Skandha of Śrī Mahābhāratasthāvārata).

ALAMBALA. A giant who used to eat human flesh. This cannibal was the son of Jātāja. His aura [Alambala] fought on the side of the Kauravas in the Kurukṣetra battle because Bhīma had killed his father, Jātāja. In the battle, Gāhottaka cut off the head of this mighty warrior and magician and threw him head into the war-chariot of Duryodhana. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 149).

ALAMBATRIYA. A holy place where there was a sacred bath, Garuda, when he went to devakula (the realm of the gods) to bring Aṅgāra (ambrosia) took rest in this holy place. (See under the word Garuda. Also M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 39, Stanza 39).

ALAMBUSA 1. Son of the giant Rāyasthag. He had fought on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 167, Stanza 33). There was a combat between Alambusa and Gāhottaka, on the first day of the battle of Kurukṣetra. “Alambusa shot ninety sharpened pointed arrows at the son of Bhīma (Gāhottaka), cut his body in several places. Though he was full of wounds, he fought all the more fiercely.” (Bhāgī Bāhīrata, Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 43, 44).

Alambusa had engaged Abhimanuyu, Sāyaki, Ghātottaka, Kuntibhoja and Bhīma, the five mighty men of arms, in single combat, in the Kurukṣetra battle. It is seen that he has got another name, Sīlakātaṇṭaka. He was killed by Gāhottaka in the battle. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 108, Stanza 22 to 33).

ALAMBUSA 2. Another king on the side of the Kauravas. Sāyaki killed this king. (Mahābhārata, Drona Parva, Chapter 167, Stanza 34).

ALAMBUSA 3. A king of the Rākṣasas. It is seen that this Alambusa was defeated and driven away from the battle-field by Arjuna. (Drona Parva, Chapter 167, Stanza 37 to 47).

ALAMBUSA 4. A giant, the son of Jātāja. Gāhottaka killed this giant in the battle.

ALAMBUSA. A celestial woman born to Kasyapa by his wife Pradhā. 1) Genealogy. Begins from Viṣṇu in the following order: Brahmā—Kālīya—Alambusa. 2) How she entered the hermit Dādha. In days of yore there was an ascetic named Dādha. He began doing tapas on the bank of the river Sarva. Indra was in consternation. Indra went to this celestial maid Alambusa to entice the hermit. When the ascetic perceived the visit of the river, Alambusa approached him with enticing actions and expressions. When the hermit saw her he became passionate and he had seminal flow. The sperm fell into the river. The river became pregnant and delivered a child in due course. He was called Sarvasatya. Alambusa brought the child before Dādha, who blessed the child and said that there would be a drought in the country continuously for twelve years and that at that juncture Sarvasatya would recite passages from the Scripture to the Brahmans who had forgotten them. The much pleased Sarvasatya and Sarvasatya went back. At that time Indra lost his Vajrayuddha [weapon of thunderbolt] somewhere. The Asuras [enemies of Gods] made an onslaught on the gods and their realm. But Indra knew that with a weapon made by the bone of Dādha the Asuras could be destroyed. Indra asked the Gods to bring the bone. They came down to the earth and requested Dādha to give them a bone. Dādha giving his bone died and attained heaven. With his bones Indra made a good deal of weapons such as the Vajrayuddha, wheel weapons, maces and sticks and with them Indra slew all the Asuras (Asura). After this there was a great famine in the country. As there was no rain, crops failed and lands became dry and the Brahmins left the country. Sarvasatya alone remained with his mother. After twelve years the famine and starvation came to an end. By then the Brahmins had forgotten the hymns and mantras of the Vedas. They approached the boy Sarvasatya and renewed their memory. (Mahābhārata, Sāya Parva, Chapter 31).

2) Panonjasīna (Rebirth). Long ago Indra went to Brahmā. There was one Vasu called Vidhūnā also with Indra. When these two were standing near Brahmā, Alambusa also came there to pay homage to Brahmā. The garments she had on were displaced by wind. Vidhūnā saw the dazzling beauty of her body and was overpowered by Ambusha who understood this, was filled with passion for him Brahmā who saw the change in them looked at Indra with displeasure. Indra knowing the mind of Brahmā cursed them: “Both of you who have lost meekness shall become human be-nings and then your desire will be fulfilled”. Owing to the curse, Vidhūna was born as Sahasrānika, the illustrious King of Candravamsa (Lunar dynasty) and Alambuṣā took birth as Mrgāvati, the daughter of King Kṛavaṁra and his wife Kalāvati. (Kathāśristigāra, Kathāmukhahalabaka, Tāranga 1.)

4) The curse of Tīlotamā. Sahasrānika the incarnation of Vidhūna and Mrgāvati the incarnation of Alambuṣā fell in love with each other. One day, they were in the garden of their palace, when the wedding was to take place. Devendra once invited Sahasrānika to heaven. He lived there for a time as the guest of the gods. After having defeated the Asuras it was time for him to return. Indra sent Tīlotamā to keep company. The chariot was driven by Sahasrānika, who was in a state of trance. Tīlotamā said something which the King did not hear. Tīlotamā cursed him that he would be separated from the object about which he was thinking. He was not even aware of the curse.

5) The period of separation. The King returned to Kauśāmbi his capital city. Without much delay, the wedding ceremony also was conducted. She became pregnant. One day she told her lover-husband that she had a desire to dip in a pond. The King immediately ordered the pond filled with the solution of Lakṣaṇa, (wax, when dissolved in water, the water will look like blood; and such other substances. Mrgāvati was dipping and splashing in it when an eagle taking her to be a piece of flesh took her away. At the loss of his wife, Sahasrānika lost his senses and fell down unconscious. Immediately Mrgāvati came to him, dressed him up, and carried him to the gods and brought the King back to consciousness, and then informing him of the curse of Tīlotamā he returned. Without paying any heed to the consolatory words of his ministers or other inmates of the palace the King went on lamenting and moaning, “ha, my love Mrgāvati! Where are you now?” and waited for the end of the period of the curse, expecting Tīlotamā. Casting Mrgāvati on the Mountain of the Rising Sun the bird flew away. The horror-stricken queen, thinking of her present condition cried aloud. A very large mountain snake began to draw near to swallow her. A divine person saved her from that situation and vanished. The unprotected Mrgāvati decided to commit suicide. It was a forest which abounded in lions, tigers, bears and such other ferocious animals. But none of them came near her; over and above the exertion of caring, she had to bear the difficulties of her forlorn condition, and she grew weary and worn and became unconscious. Then a hermit boy came there and questioned her who was now lean and ill-dressed, about her condition and consoling her guided her to the hermitage of the great hermit Jamadagni. When the saw the hermit what was as radiant as the Sun, she bowed low before him. “My daughter! I don’t fear. You will get a heroic son here who will continue your family. You will be reunited to your husband.” Said the great and noble hermit, who could foresee the future. Somewhat pacified Mrgāvati lived in the hermitage waiting for reunion with her husband. After some days she gave birth to a son who had all the symptoms of greatness. At the birth of the child Mrgāvati heard an unknown voice saying, “This boy would become the great and renowned King Udāyana. His son would get the leadership of the Vidyādhāra (the musicians of the Gods)”. At this the queen was immensely pleased. The boy Udāyana grew up in the hermitage, an incarnation of all good qualities. The hermit to whom the past, the present and the future were not obscure, performed the necessary rites and rituals becoming a Kāśyapi boy (Ruling caste) and taught him everything including the Dhanurveda (the Science of Archery). As a token of her intense love for the son, she put a bangle with the name of Sahasrānika inscribed on the arm of Udāyana. One day when Udāyana was tramping the forest, he saw a snake-charmer catching a snake. Seeing the beauty of the snake he asked the snake-charmer to let the snake free. But the snake-charmer replied, “Oh Prince, this is my daily bread. I earn my livelihood by exhibiting snakes. My previous snake was dead and it was with the help of a good deal of herbs and spells and incantations that I caught this one”. Udāyana heard all this and he felt sorry for him and gave the bangle to the snake-charmer and let the snake free. When the snake-charmer had gone with the bangle, the snake beaming with joy said to Udāyana: “I am Vaanemi, the elderly brother of Vāsuki. I am grateful to you for giving me freedom. I give you this lute producing exquisite notes of music, betels and some tricks to prepare whenever feeding goats and paste to use before the forehead. Receive them as my presents”. Udāyana accepted the presents with gladness and returned more luminous than before to the hermitage of Jamadagni. The snake-charmer took the bangle, given by Udāyana to the bazaar for sale. The police caught him and took him before the King, because they saw the name of the King inscribed on the bangle. The King asked him how he got the bangle and the snake-charmer told the King the story from the catching of the snake till he got the bangle. “This is the bangle that I put on the arm of my wife. The boy who gave this bangle to this snake-charmer must be my son.” The King was thinking with sadness, when the King heard a voice from above say, “O King! the period of the curse is over. Your wife and son are safe. The Mountain of the Rising Sun also would not be visited by the King felt extreme joy. Somewhere or other he spent the rest of the day. Early the next morning the King followed by his army, went to the Mountain of the Rising Sun to bring back his wife and son. They took the snake-charmer to show them the way. In due course the King and his train reached the holy hermitage of the great hermit Jamadagni. The place was always vibrant with sounds of the repeating and recitation of the Holy scriptures and covered with smoke mingled with the fragrance of burning herbs and other oblations burned in the sacrificial fire. The various wild animals which are born enemies of each other got on amicably there. The hermit who was an incarnation of the highest aspirations of the King who was the protector of the ascetics, with the hospitality becoming his status. The King who saw Mrgāvati with their son was overcome with gladness. Their reunion caused a shower of Ambrosia (Amrita). The King stood before the hermit with folded arms and bowed head for permission to depart. To the King the hermit Jamadagni said: “Oh, King, you are welcome to this hermitage. In those such as the King Jamadagni the caste (Ruling race) the peaceful atmosphere of our hermitage may not be appealing to the heart. But a holy hermitage is more respectable than the palace of an Emperor. There is no place for unhappiness here, You might have known that the reason for your separation is a curse. When you were returning from heaven with Tilottamā, you were so much engrossed in the thought of Mrgāvati that you did not pay any heed to the conversation of Tilottamā. She was displeased with your behaviour and cursed you. In future, if ever you happen to get into a position which will cause you mental trouble, you can be assured of the presence of this Jamatapati."

"I am extremely grateful to your Eminence for this great boon. I am fully aware of the fact that the presence of the holy hermits who have under their control the eightfold prosperity, is always a harbinger of peace and prosperity. I am very sorry to say that the exigency of my presence at the capital due to the pressure of work in connection with the ruling of the country compels me to cut short my visit to this holy hermitage. I shall be looking forward with pleasure to occasions which will enable me to pay visits to this Holy Abode."

Much pleased at the speech of the King, the hermit said to Mrgāvati, "My daughter! Not only myself, but all the inmates of this hermitage are highly pleased at having got you in our midst for so long. We are sorry to part from you."

"Now look! The animals of the hermitage are standing round you and shedding tears. So we are completely at your reunion with your husband. Naturally you are of a very good character and your rule in this hermitage has given you a nice training and so there is no need for any more advice from me at this time."

"Thus blessing the boy the hermit led him to the King. The joy at her reunion with husband, her shyness at being near him, her sorrow at having to depart from the hermitage and the surging feeling in her mind—all these made her dumb and so being unable to say anything, she expressed her love and regard for the hermit whom she loved as her father, by some motions of her body and took leave of him with her son. The blessed King and his court, looking at the men, beasts and birds which accompanied them for a while, took leave of them and proceeded to the capital city. On reaching there the King anointed his son Udayana as King. Saunaratika then went to the Himalayas to practise asceticism with his vīra."

ALARKĀ. Wife of King Naraśāhādarā. It is seen in the Kathamsārītāsāra where a Vidvādharā woman tells the story of Alarikāvati to the King. Once a vidvādharā named Alarikāvati ruled over a city called Śri Sendarapāpa in the Himalayas. His wife was named Kāranārākāvati. A son was born to them. They named him Dharmākāvati because Devi Kātyāyalā told them in a dream that the son would become Dharmākāvati (who performs duties well). To the prince, knowledge in every branch of studies was imparted and then he was anointed heir to the throne. He executed regal functions with perfection and ruled his state better than his father. Kāranārākāvati, wife of Alarikāvati, gave birth to a daughter at the time of her birth a heavenly voice said that she would become the wife of Naraśāhādarā the emperor of the Vidvādhās. They named her Alarikāvati. She grew up into a very beautiful maiden. She learned arts and sciences from her father. She went on a pilgrimage to the Śiva temple far and wide. One day she heard a celestial voice, "Go to the Śvyānubhū temple in Kaśmir and worship there. And you will get as your husband Naraśāhādarā." Finally Naraśāhādarā the emperor of Vidvādharā married her.

ALOLUPA. A son of Dharmākāvati.

ALPAKĀLA (M). A short time. (Alpa = short and Kāla = time). In the Bhāgavata the following definition is given of alpakāla: "Take two tender leaves of a lotus and place one on the other. Let a strong man take a sharp needle and thrust it hard at the leaves. The time taken for the needle to pierce one leaf and reach the other is alpakāla."

(Alaṅkārakāragrānta, Lambaka 9, Skanda 3)

ALARKĀ (M). I. The name of an insect. It was in the form of this insect that Indra went and bore a hole on the leg of Karna while Parāśurāma was sleeping on his lap. The blood that flowed from Karna’s heel wetted the body of the preceptor.

(Alaṅkārakāragrānta, Lambaka 9, Tarangā 13, Anukāsana Parva, M.H.). He was a member of the council of Yama. He attained salvation by yoga and meditation. Once Akara decided to overcome the five senses. To control them he sent arrows at the mouth, nose, tongue, ear, eye, skin and intelligence. But the senses never surrendered to them. Then Akara by sheer dhyaṇa and yoga brought them under control. (M.B., Anusāsana Parva, Chapter 30)

Akara once told a blind brahmin boy to ask for any boon from him. The boy demanded the eyes of Akara. To keep his promise Akara scooped out his eyes and gave them to the blind boy. (Ramayana, Ayodhya Khāya, Sarga 12, Sloka 43.)

ALATAKSHA. A woman in the service of Shaka (M.B., Satya Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 8).

ALAYUDHA. A giant. He was the brother of Vajrapāra. He fought on the side of the Kauravas. He was killed by Bhima and was called the slayer of Bhimā. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 96, Stanza 46 and Chapter 176, Stanza 6.)

AMADHYA. A synonym of Śri Kṛṣṇa (M.B., Satya Parva, Chapter 392, Verse 70).

AMANTRA. An ascetic. He was burned up in the fire at the Sarga sūtra of Jadavapātra. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 16.).

AMANTHU. A king of the family of Priyavatara.

AMARACANDRA. A Sanskrit poet. It is believed that he lived in the 19th Cent. A.D. Bāla Bīrata was his work. Amarakandra was a Jain priest. It is said that he was a courtier of Vīra-deva, the son of King Vīra-havala who ruled over Gujara; from 1042 to 1262.

AMARAGUPTA. He was the minister of King Vīrakālananda who ruled over Avanti in olden times. (Kathasatīnīgara, Madana Maçuka. Lamps, First Tarasaga.)

AMARASRACA. A place of holy bath. One who takes his bath here will attain Svarga. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 16.)

AMARAKANTA. A mountain. It was on this mountain that some parts of Tripiṇa, which was burnt by Śiva fell. From that time it became a holy place. In Padma Purāna, Ādi Khanda, Chapter 15, we see the following passage about the benefits obtained by visiting this holy place. "One who goes to Amaracantaka mountain will enjoy the fourteen worlds for thirty-seven thousand crores of years. Afterwards he will be born on earth as a King and reign as supreme emperor. A visit to Amarakantaka has ten times the value of an Advamedha. If one has Śiva's darśana there, one will attain Svarga. At the time of eclipse, all kinds of holy things converge towards Amarakantaka. Those who take their bath in Jvalādeva in Amarakantaka will enter Svarga. The dead will have no rebirth. Those who renounce their lives are Jvalādeva will live in Rudra-tūla till the time of great destruction. In the valley of Amarakantaka and in the Tirtha live Devas known as Amaras and numerous Rṣis. Amarakantaka has a circumference of one yogana (about eight miles)."

AMARAPARVATA. An ancient place in Bārata. Nakula had conquered this place. (M.B., Satya Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 11.)

AMARAVATI. It is the city of Indra, the King of the Devas. Its location is described in Devi Bhāgavata as follows. "Brhatā's world extends over 10,000 yojanas on the Mahāmeru mountain. There are eight cities—each 2,500 square yojanas in extent—lying on the eight parts of the Brahma-pāka in eight parts of this Brahmāpura. Thus there are eight cities on the top of the Mahā Meru. They are the following:

1. In the centre is Brhatā's city, Manovati.
2. To the east is Manovati, Indra's city, Amaravati.
3. In the south-east corner, Agni's city, Tepavati.
4. On the southern side, Yama's city, Samayavati.
5. In the south-west corner, Night's city, Kramatānā.
6. In the west, Varuna's city, Treadhavati.
7. In the north-west corner, Vāyu's city, Gandhavati.
8. In the north, Kubera's city, Mahodāvā.
9. In the north-east corner, Svīva's city, Yāsavati.

(Devi Bhāgavata, Asastra Skanda.)

AMAVASANA. See the word "PANCATANTRA".

AMAVASĪ. In Amāvasī, the new moon appears about Amavāsī: "Amāvasī witnessed vārāha's sūryavamsamānumah. Amavāsī means New Moon. "Amā" means "Sahā." So Amavāsī is the Union of Sun and Moon in the same rādi. Once Bhṛgu Mahārshi cursed Agni. At that time Agni explained the importance of Amavāsī. The oblations which are offered with hymns in the first fold of the food of the Devas and Pīths, Substances offered as honours on Purnamādī become food of the Devas and those offered on Amavāsī become food of the Pīths. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 7.)

AMĀVĀŚI. A son of Purvāvasu by Urvāśī. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 24.)

AMĀVĀŚI. A daughter of a King of Khiti. 1) Amā and Vītāśvarī. Amā is an ill-starred character in the story of the Mahābhārata. She had two younger sisters named Ambikā and Ambālīkā. Bhīma, who had taken a vow to remain a bachelor for life, had once taken Ambikā and Ambālīkā, the three daughters of a King of Khiti, to Hastinapura. The circumstances in which this happened, are described in Devi Bhāgavata, PrathamaSamādhi as follows: Śantana, a King of the Gandhārī Vana, had two wives, Gaṅgā and Satya-vatī. Bhīma was the son of Gaṅgā and Citrāgūḍa and Vītāśvarī were the sons of Satya-vatī. Soon after Bhīma's birth, Gaṅgā vanished. After a long period of reign, Śantana also died. Satya-vatī and the three sons were left behind in the palace. According to a vow he had taken long ago, Bhīma, instead of succeeding to his father's throne, left it to his brother Citrāgūḍa. Once Citrāgūḍa went for hunting in the forest. There he came across a Gandharva named Citrāgūḍa. The Gandharva did not like another man with his own name to be living in this world. So he killed the king. After that, Vītravṛtiya became king. Bīṣma had to take up the task of arranging a suitable marriage for Vītravṛtiya.

2) The Swayāvara. It was at this time that Bīṣma came to know that the King of Kāśi was arranging the Swayāvara of his three daughters, Ambā, Ambikā and Ambālikā. Bīṣma went there and in the presence of all the kings who had assembled there, took the three presents with him to Harishcandra. There he made all preparations for the marriage. But as the time for the ceremony approached, the eldest and most beautiful of the princesses, Ambā went to Bīṣma and said: "I had already made up my mind long ago to marry Śālva, the King of Bhoja, we are deeply in love with each other. Therefore, please consider whether it is proper on your part of a great man like you to force me into another marriage."

On hearing this, Bīṣma allowed her to do as she liked. Ambā then went to King Śālva and made an appeal to him to accept her as his wife since they were mutually in love.

3) Śālva's reply. To her words Śālva replied: "What you have said about our mutual love is true. But it is not right for a man to accept a woman who has been accepted by another. I saw Bīṣma taking you by hand and helping you into his chariot. Therefore, as at once to Bīṣma himself and ask him to accept you. Stunned by his words, she turned away, to go to the forest to do penance.

4) Revenge on Bīṣma. In the Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 17, it is recorded that Ambā had cherished a secret desire to wreak vengeance on Bīṣma. She went to the Abhimaṇa of Saṅghava's Meni in the forest and stayed there for the night. Her wish to do penance was approved by the Meni. On the next day, Ambā's maternal grandfather, Kutsāḥa (Srījaya) came that way. Kutsāḥa came to know of all her misfortunes. He advised her to inform Paraśurāma of all her grievances. Just at that moment, Akrūravarman, a follower of Paraśurāma happened to come there. Kutsāḥa introduced Ambā to Akrūravarman. Both Akrūrara and Srījaya explained all her affairs to Paraśurāma. Paraśurāma undertook to persuade Bīṣma to accept Ambā (as his wife). But Paraśurāma's proposal was turned down by Bīṣma, and a duel took place between them at Kuruksetra. When the fight reached a critical stage, Narada and the gods induced Paraśurāma to withdraw from the duel. Thus the fight ended with equal victory to both. Finding that it was not possible to achieve her object through Paraśurāma's mediation, Ambā renewed food, sleep etc. and went to the Yamunā valley to do penance for six years. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 18) After that, for one year she went on a fast, lying under the water in the river Yamunā. Again for another year she did penance, standing on the tip of the toes and eating only dry leaves. Next, she reduced the sky and earth to flames by doing penance. The goddess Ganga appeared to her and when she understood her plight, she told Ambā that it was not possible to kill Bīṣma. In her agony and despair, without even drinking water, she wandered about here and there. The goddess Ganga caused her to become a river in the Vaisāka country. As a result of the curse, a part of her was turned into the river known as Ambā.

5) Śiva's Bond. The remaining part of her engaged itself in penance. Śiva appeared to her and told her that in the next birth she would attain masculinity. He added that she would be born in the Drāupadā dynasty as a great archer under the name of Citrayodha and kill Bīṣma. Pleased with this prophecy, she took a vow that she would kill Bīṣma and making a prayer, burnt herself to death.

6) Drāupadā. King Drāupadā's queen had been in great distress for a long time because she had no children. Drāupadā propitiated Śiva by worshipping him for an issue. Śiva blessed him and said that a girl would be born to him, but she would be transformed into a boy. In due course, the queen gave birth to a girl, but it was announced that it was a boy. Therefore the child had to be brought up, dressed like a boy. The child became famous under the name of Śīkhandī. When Śīkhandī attained youth, Drāupadā decided to look for a wife for him (her?). Still he was greatly perplexed as to how to find a wife for Śīkhandī who was already a youthful virgin! But his wife assured Drāupadā that Śīkhandī would become a man, according to Śiva's blessing. So Drāupadā made a proposal for Śīkhandī's marriage with the daughter of King Daśaratha. Thus, Śīkhandī married Hiranyakarṇa, the King of Daśaratha, gave his daughter in marriage to Śīkhandī. The couple arrived at Kāmbalakapura. By this time the wife came to know that the "husband" was a woman. She disclosed the secret to her Lady-in-waiting. They in turn communicated it to the king. Enraged at this, Hiranyakarṇa sent a messenger to King Drāupadā to ascertain the truth of the matter. He even began to make preparations for waging a war against Drāupadā, King of Pātañjala. Drāupadā and his queen were in a fix. At this stage the distressed Śīkhandī proceeded to the forest, determined to commit suicide. People were afraid of entering that forest because a Yakṣa named Śīkhandakarna lived there. Śīkhandī went to the precincts of the Yakṣa and performed certain rites for a number of days. The Yakṣa appeared to him. Śīkhandī explained the whole matter to him. They entered into a contract. According to it, they exchanged their sexes—Śīkhandī receiving the male sex of the Yakṣa and the Yakṣa receiving the female sex of Śīkhandī. Śīkhandī returned home as a man. Drāupadā repeated with greater force his old plea that his child was a man. Hiranyakarṇa made a thorough examination of Śīkhandī and convinced himself of the truth. Many years after, Hiranyakarṇa died.

7) Kubera's Arrival. At that time, in the course of his world tour Kubera arrived at the residence of Śīkhandakarna. The Yakṣa who was in female form, did not come out to receive Kubera. In his anger, Kubera pronounced a curse that the female sex of Śīkhandakarna and the male sex of Śīkhandī would continue forever. The Yakṣa prayed to the lifting of the curse. Kubera released him from the curse by saying that after the death of Śīkhandī, the Yakṣa would be restored to his own male sex.

According to the previous agreement, Śīkhandī went to Śīkhandakarna's place after the death of Hiranyakarṇa. But coming to know of all that had happened, he returned home. Thus Śīkhandī became a man permanently. Śīkhandī had received his training in arms under Drāupadā. In the great Kaurava-Pāṇḍava battle, he became a charioteer.
9) Sikhandi’s Revenge. The Mahabharata, Bhishma Parva, Chapter 106 describes Bhishma’s encounter with Sikhandi during the Kuravas-Pandavas battle. The Pandavas started the day’s battle by keeping Sikhandi in the vanguard. Bhishma, Arjuna, Aishwaryya and other warriors were giving him support. It was Bhishma who led the Kuravas forces. Arrows began to fly from both sides. It was the tenth day of the battle and Sikhandi shot three arrows aimed at Bhishma’s breast Bhishma with a smile of contempt said to Sikhandi, “Sikhandi! Brahman created you as a weapon, you may do as you like”. Hearing this taunt, Sikhandi became more infuriated. Arjuna inspired him with greater courage.

After that, keeping Sikhandi in front, Arjuna began to fight with Bhishma. Sikhandi also showered his arrows on him. Ten of these arrows of Sikhandi hit Bhishma’s breast. Bhishma disregarded even those arrows. At last he said, “I cannot kill Sikhandi. They are invulnerable (avadhishyata). I cannot kill Sikhandi because he is a real woman and not man. Though I am also invulnerable and cannot be killed in battle, yet today I have to die; the time has come for me to die.”

Meanwhile Sikhandi and Arjuna were discharging a continuous and heavy shower of arrows at Bhishma. At last Bhishma fell down (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 173).

AMBAJANMA

It is a place of sacred bath where the sage Narada usually retires. Those who die here will attain salvation (Moksha) by Narada’s blessing, according to M.B., Vanu Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 81.

AMBALIKA

1) The youngest of the three daughters of the King of Kasi: Ambika, Ambalika and Ambalika Vichitravirya, son of Santi, married Ambalika and Ambalika. The mother of this princess was Kasikadi.

2) Pandu’s Mother Vichitravirya died before children were born to her. To avoid the extinction of the family, Savya, mother of Vichitravirya summoned Vyasa, her other son and asked him to beg a son for Ambikka. Vyasa obeyed her mother half-heartedly. Ambalika did not have the courage to go to Vyasa. Still, owing to the Mother’s pressure, she passively submitted to the act. As a result of their union, a son was born Dhruvasthita, who was blind from birth. The grief-stricken mother called Vyasa again and asked him to have union with Ambalika this time. As Ambalika’s face was pale at the time of their union, a child with pale complexion was born to her. He was named Pandu. Having thus failed in both attempts, Savya invited Ambalika to go to Vyasa again. At night Ambalika secretly disguised her waiting-maid and sent her in her own place to Vyasa. The waiting-maid experienced exquisite pleasure in Vyasa’s company and as a result, a most intelligent son was born to her. It was he who became the ruler of the Kiskan dynasty.

AMBARIṢA

1) Genealogy and Birth. From Vrśiṇi was born in the following order: Brahmā-Marichi-Kāśyapa - Vivasvān-Vāyavaścchara-Kim.drug-Visvāk-uṣa - Saṣadā - Parahājya-Kakutbhā-Auta-Prathābha-Praja - Vyavanā - Mahaṭhā-Ambariṣa. Mahaṭhā had three sons: Ambariṣa, Mucunda and Purukutā and fifty daughters.

The Muni (Sage) Sahastrdbhara married the daughters.

2) Ambariṣa’s Yaga (sacrifice). In Vālmiki’s Rāmayaṇa there is a story of Devendra’s theft of the sacrificial cow from Ambariṣa’s yagaśāla. Devendra could not bear the thought of King Ambariṣa winning world-renown and glory by performing yagās. Therefore Indra stole the sacrificial cow and took it away. The Upādhau (Chief Priest) was alarmed at the disappearance of the cow and expressed his opinion to the King that it would be enough to sacrifice a human being instead of the cow. The King searched for the cow in all countries, cities and forests. At last he reached the peak of Bṛğuna where the sage Reka lived with his wife and children. The King explained to the sage the whole story. He requested him to sell one of his sons in exchange for 100,000 cows. Reka had three sons. The eldest was his father’s favourite and the youngest was the mother’s pet. In the end, Reka sold the second son, Sunāśēpaka in return for 100,000 cows.

On his return journey with Sunāśēpaka the king rested for a while at Prakāra Tirtha. There Sunāśēpaka happened to meet his uncle Vivasvanta and complained to him about his sad plight. Sunāśēpaka’s wish was that the king’s yaga should be performed and at the same time his own bliss should be extended. Vivasvanta proposed to save Sunāśēpaka, his eldest brother, and the other sons and said to them: “One of you must take the place of Ambariṣa’s sacrificial cow and save the life of Sunāśēpaka. God will bless you.”

But none of the sons of Vivasvanta was prepared to become the sacrificial cow. Vivasvanta uttered a curse on his sons that they would have to spend a thousand years on earth, eating dog-flesh. Then he turned to Sunāśēpaka and told him that if he prayed to the gods at the time of Ambariṣa’s yaga, they would save him.

So Sunāśēpaka went to Ambariṣa’s yagaśāla. As ordered by the assembled guests, Ambariṣa bound Sunāśēpaka and had him dressed in blood-red robes, ready for the sacrifice. Sunāśēpaka began to praise and pray to the gods. Soon Indra appeared and blessed him with longevity. He also rewarded Ambariṣa for his yaga. Thus Sunāśēpaka was saved. (Vālmiki Rāma-yaṇa Bāla Kīvāda, Sarga 61).

3) Ambariṣa and Durvaśa. In Bhāgavata we see a story which describes how the Sudarṣana Cakara which emerged from Ambariṣa’s forehead chased Durvaśa in all three worlds. Ambariṣa was a devout worshipper of Vṛṣṇi. From the very beginning of his reign, peace and prosperity spread all over the country. Mahāväyu was pleased with the deep pieties and devotion of Ambariṣa and appeared to him and bestowed on him the control of his (Vṛṣṇi’s) Sudarṣana Cakara. Ambariṣa started the observance of Īkṣādāi vrata. The neglect of the observance alarmed even Indra. He decided to obstruct the observance somehow or other. At that time, Durvaśa arrived in devabha Indra insinuated Durvaśa to spoil the Īkṣādāi observance of Ambariṣa.

Durvaśa went to Ambariṣa’s palace. There the king received him with due respect and sent him to the river Kāndhī for his bath and morning ritus. Durvaśa went...

for his bath and deliberately stayed away till the conclusion of Ambariṣa’s Ekādaśī observance. At the end of the observance, after leaving the gods with all their offerings, Ambariṣa kept the remaining portion for Durvāsas. After his bath etc., Durvāsas returned, but he was furious when he was offered the leavings of the food of the gods and refused to take any food. In his anger he advanced towards Ambariṣa. A terrible monster Kṛṣṇa emanated from the Mahārāja and was about to destroy Ambariṣa. Ambariṣa at once called upon Sudārśana Cakra, which appeared instantly and after cutting the throat of Kṛṣṇa, turned against Durvāsas. Terrified by this, Durvāsas began to flee for life. The Cakra pursued him at his heels. Durvāsas went to Indra and sought refuge with him. But the Cakra followed him there. Indra pleaded helplessness. Then the Mahārāja went to Brahmā and sued for his help. The also the Cakra pursued him. Brahmā sent him to Śiva. Śiva was also unable to give him shelter. Sudārśana continued to chase him. Durvāsas then sought shelter with Maheśvaro. Vaiṣṇavā told him plainly that there was no alternative but to go and sue for mercy to Ambariṣa himself and advised him to do so. At last Durvāsas returned to Ambariṣa and begged his pardon. Ambariṣa spared him from Sudārśana Cakra and described to him the glory resulting from the observance of Ekādaśī vrata. (Śrīdurgāvata, Navama Skandha).

4) Other Details (1) Ambariṣa performed a yāga in the Yamunā valley. (M.B., Aḍi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 277; Bhārata Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 6; Vana Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 2).

(2) Mahārāja Durvāsas recalled Ambariṣa’s power. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 263, Verse 33).

(3) The Sage Vyāsa once told Dharmaśatra that Ambariṣa was one of the 16 great kings who lived in ancient times. The 16 reputed Kings were: Marutā, Sunetra, Paurava, Śibi, Śri Rāma, Bhāgiratha, Dilīpa, Mandūśā, Yayati, Ambariṣa, Sālabindu, Gaya, Rādheva, Bhārata, Pithu and Pauruṣuṣā. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 29).

(4) Ambariṣa fought single-handed against thousands of Kings. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 64).

(5) He performed one hundred yāgas. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 64).

(6) Ambariṣa once questioned Indra about Liś (Ambariṣa’s) army chief Sudeva becoming more mighty than himself. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 98, Verses 6-11).

(7) Ambariṣa gave 110 crows of cows to the Brahmins. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 23).

(8) Ambariṣa was also among the Munis who committed theft of Agastya’s lotuses. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 24).

(9) Ambariṣa was giving cows to Brahmins, Ambariṣa gave them the country also. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 157, Verse 8).

AMBARIṢA II

When Balabhadra entered the lower world (Pātāla) after death, among the Nāgas who welcomed him, there was one called ‘Ambariṣa’. (M.B., Maitraya Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

AMBASII. I. King Śrīmaṇa, who belonged to the party of the Kauravas was the ruler of Ambasu land and so he was called Ambasii (M.B., Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 96, Verses 38-40). He was killed in the fight with Arjuna. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 93, Verses 60-69).

AMBASTHA II. There was a hero called Ambastha among the warriors on the side of the Pādavas. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 50). He fought against King Cedi who was on the side of the Kauravas and in the fight King Cedi fell.

AMBASTHA III. See the word “VARNA”.

AMBASTHAM. A region in ancient India. It is believed that it was to the north of Sindhu (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 7).

AMBHORUHA. A son of Siva Viśvāmitra. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 59).

AMBIKĀ I. Elder sister of Ambikā. (See AMBĀLIKĀ).

AMBIKĀ II. Another name of Pārvatī. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12).

AMBUMATI. A river. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 56).

AMBUVAHINI. A river. (M.B., Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 27). Praising this river at dawn and dusk will bring divine grace. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 26).

AMBUVIČA. One of the Kings of Magadha. He had a minister named Maḥākara. (M.B., Aḍi Parva, Chapter 38, Verses 17-19).

AMHU. An Asura in the period of the Rṣyeda. This Asura had been doing much harm to the hermits. Purukūṣa was the hermit whom he tormented most. Indra vanquished this Asura and destroyed seven of his cities. (Rṣyeda, Maṇḍala 1, Anuśāsana 11, Skanda 63, Khanda 7).

AMPADEVAJA. A Raḵasa. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 50).

AMITAUJA. A mighty Kaśtriya King of the Pāṇḍava kingdom. He was born from the element of a Raḵasa named Ketumā. Before the Pāṇḍavas went to war, they had sent an invitation to him. He was one of the distinguished royal allies of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B., Aḍi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 12; Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 12; Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 71, Verse 11).

AMITRAJIT. A King. In his country there were immeasurable Siva temples. Nārada Muni who was delighted by this sight, went to the Palace and said to Amitrajit: “In the city of Campakāvati there is a Gandharva virgin named Malayagandhini. She has been abducted by Kaṁkālaketu, a Raḵasa. She has promised to marry the person who will rescue her from him. Therefore please save her from the Raḵasa.” As suggested by Nārada Amitrajit killed Kaṁkālaketu in battle and recovered Malayagandhini and married her. Vira was their son. (Skanda Purāṇa).

AMOGHĀ I. A Yakṣa who accompanied Śiva when the latter once went on a journey to Bhadravāra. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 35).

AMOGHĀ II. This name has been used as a synonym of Skanda. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 232, Verse 5).

AMOGHĀ III. A synonym of Śiva. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 114).

AMOGHĀ IV. A synonym of Viśṇu. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 29).

AMOGHĀ (M). An Agni which originated from Brahmā’s family. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 24).

AMOGHĀ. Śantanu Mahārāṣṭri’s wife. Once Brahmā visited Śantanu Mahārāṣṭri’s Aśrama. As the Mahārāṣṭri was not at home, it was Amoghā who received the guest with due reverence. Faddicated by the irresistible charm of Amoghā, Brahmā had an involuntary emission of seminal fluid. He felt ashamed of his own weakness and left the Āśrama immediately. The Mahārāṇa, who returned to the Āśrama soon after, came to know from his wife whose semen it was. He asked Amoghā to accept Brahmā’s precious semen and not to let it be wasted. Being a devoted wife, she accepted it, but unable to bear the divine pregnancy, she deposited it in the water lying in the valley of the Ungandharā mountain. From that time, it became a place of holy bathing, known as Lohita. It was by bathing in this holy water that Varāurkīna washed away his sin of annihilating the Vījñānīyas. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi Khanda, 32).

ĀMPITATA. A name for barbers. Āmpitata is derived from the root Āmpit, which means Physic laxative. In olden days barbers were physicians also. Going about from house to house, they could easily practise both these professions. Since barbers practised physic also they were called Ambisthās. Āmpitata is a corruption of Ambisthā (Dravidian philology).

Barbers sometime style themselves as “Pandit”. It is an abbreviation of Amōr Pānda or Amōr Pānda Sāhba and other similar names. There is a legend on the basis of which this community has assumed the title of “Pandit”.

Long ago when Śrī Buddha was about to go to the forest for performing Tapas, thousands of people flocked together to have his darśana. Buddha wished to continue his journey after shaving his head. Buddha asked broadly whether anyone in the crowd was prepared to shave his head. Only a single man came forward cheerfully to do that work. Buddha turned to him and said: “My dear friend, you are the only Pandit in this crowd. You have the wisdom to understand that there is nothing disgraceful in shaving one’s head.”

He shaved Buddha’s head. From that day his descendants came to be known as Ambisthās.

ĀMRATĀ. Daughter of a King of Magadha. She was the wife of Anāvā and mother of Parasit. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 41).

ĀMRATAM. (See PRĀMRATAM).

ĀMRATAM. A delicious and precious food obtained from the ocean of Milk when the Deva and Āsura churned it. It is defined as wealth received by begging and “Āmratam” as wealth received without begging, and “Prāmratam” as another kind of wealth obtained without begging.

1) Cause of Kṛtādhiśa-mahāman. (Churning of the Sea of Milk)—Once when Mahārāṇa Durvāśa was travelling through a forest, he met the Apsāra woman, Menakā, who was the Sun’s word, Apsāra. The word “Apsāra” is defined as wealth received by begging and “Āmratam” as wealth received without begging, and “Prāmratam” as another kind of wealth obtained without begging.

2) Churning of the Milk Sea. After Viśvava had vanished, the Devas made a treaty with the Āsuras and began to work for getting Āmratam. All of them joined together in bringing various kinds of medicinal herbs and after paring them in the Milk Sea which was as clear as the cloudless sky, began to churn it. Using Mahārāṇa Durvāśa as the churning staff and Viśvaka as the rope. The party of Devas was posted at the tail-end of Viśvaka while the Āsuras took their stand at the head. The Āsuras became enraged by the fiery breath coming out of Viśvaka’s mouth. The clouds which were blown by that breath migrated the Devas. Mahārāṇa Durvāśa transformed himself into a tortoise, and sitting in the middle of the Milk Sea served as the foundation for the Manthara Mountain, the churning staff. Assuming another form, invisible both to Devas and Āsuras, Mahārāṇa pressed down the Manthara Mountain from above.

While churning the Milk Sea like this, the first object that rose to the surface was Kāmādhenu. Both Devas and Āsuras were strongly attracted towards Kāmādhenu. While all were standing spellbound, Vārūṇidevi with her enchanting dreamy eyes next appeared on the surface. Pārijātams was the third to appear. Fourth, a group of Apsāra women of marvellous beauty floated up. The Moon appeared as the fifth. Siva received the Moon. The torrent which came out of the Milk Sea as the sixth item, was absorbed by Nāgas. After that anemone, Bhagavān Dhanvantari, dressed in pure white robes and carrying a Kampañjalu in his hand filled with Āmratam. All were delighted at this sight. Next Mahālakṣmi made her appearance in all her glory with a lotus in her hand and seated in an open lotus flower. Gandharvas sang celestial songs in her presence; Asuras were danced. For her bath, the Gangâ river arrived there with her tributaries. The Milk Sea itself took on physical form and offered her a garland of ever-fresh lotus flowers. Brahûaberelyed her with ornaments. After that Lakshmîdevi, fully adorned in all her magnificent jewels, in the presence of all Devas, joined the bower of Mahâvîra. The Asuras were displeased at this. They snatched the pot of Amrtam from Dhanvantari and fled away.

3) How Amrtam was recovered. With the loss of Amrtam, the Devas were in a fix. They began to consider how the pot of Amrtam could be recovered. Accordingly Mahâvîra transformed himself into a celestial virgin, Mohini, of extraordinary beauty. She approached the Asuras as a shy girl. The Asuras were enchanted by her surpassing beauty. They asked her, “Who are you?” Looking down on the ground, Mohini replied: “I am the little sister of Dhanvantari. By the time I came out of the Milk Sea, the Devas and Asuras had already gone. Being lonely I am going about in search of a suitable mate.”

On hearing these words, the Asuras began to make friends with her one by one, determined not to waste this opportunity. They told her that she should distribute Amrtam to all of them and in the end she should marry one of them. Mohini agreed, but added: “All of you should close your eyes. I shall serve Amrtam to all. He who opens his eyes last, must serve Amrtam to me and he will marry me.”

All Asuras closed their eyes. In a moment Mohini left the place with the pot of Amrtam and went to devaloka.

4) Râhu’s neck is cut. When the Asuras opened their eyes, Mohini was not to be seen. Finding that they were betrayed, they were in great perplexity. All of them pursued Mohini to devaloka. Devas had put the Sun and Moon gods on guard duty at the gates of devaloka. At the instance of the Asuras, Râhu in disguise entered the divine assembly chamber. The Sun and Moon gods detected him and Vishu with his weapon, Sudarshana Cakra cut open his neck. Swearing that he would wreak vengeance on the Sun and Moon Râhu returned. In the 8th Skandha of Bhâgavata it is said that even now from time to time Râhu swallows the Sun and Moon, but they escape through the open gasî in his neck and this is known as solar eclipse and lunar eclipse.

5) Defeat of the Asuras. Indra and all other gods took Amrtam. The enraged Asuras attacked the gods, who had gained strength and vigour by taking Amrtam. The Asuras were driven away in all directions. All the three worlds began to enjoy glory and prosperity again.

6) Kâlakâta. The story of how the deadly poison, Kâlakâta arose at the churning of the ocean of Milk, is given in M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 18, Verses 42-45, as follows: After many precious things had come up Kâlakâta poison with fishes and flames, appeared on the surface of the ocean. So strong smell caused a stupor in all the three worlds. Fearing that the world will perish, Brahmâ requested Siva to swallow that poison. Siva gulped it down, but stopped it in his throat. From that day he became “Nilakâtanâ”.

7) The story of Aîravata. Indra’s tusker Aîravata was responsible for the churning of the ocean of Milk. But in the Mahâbhârata, Adi Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 42 it is said that a white elephant with four tusks arose during the churning of the ocean of Milk and that Devendra caught and tamed it. This is an obvious contradiction. Besides, in Vîmâni Râmâyana, Aranyâkâ, 14th Sarga, the wounded Jâtaka, describing his family history to Sri Râma, gives the following account about the origin of Aîravata between Kâtyâya and the Pratîjâpati, married the eight daughters of Daksha. One of them named Krodhavâda had ten daughters by Kâtyâya. They were: Mrgâ, Mrgamâda, Hari, Bhâtramadâ, Mâtanâ, Sârðâ, Svetâ, Sura, Sura and Kadru. Of them Bhâtramadâ gave birth to a daughter, Iâravati. The tusker Aîravata is Iâravati’s son.

An explanation for this discrepancy may be seen in Vîmâni Purâna, 3rd Section, Chapter 1. Now six Manvantaras have passed (See ‘MANVANTARA’). This is the seventh Manvantara. Each Manvantara has a new Indra. According to this, different Indras have their own Aîravatas. This is the only explanation for this apparent contradiction.

8) Amrtam and Garuḍa. Here is another story about Amrtam which says that Garuḍa once went to devaloka and brought Amrtam from there to be given to the Nâgas, but Devendra came down and took it back. This story is given in Mahâbhârata from Chapter 27 onwards. Vinâti, a wife of Kâtyâya gave birth to Garuḍa and Kadru and her sister gave birth to the Nâgas. Once the bond between Vinâti and Garuḍa, Devendra’s home, were white but Kadru asserted that they were black. To settle the dispute they made a bet. The condition was that the loser must become the servant maid of the winner. As instructed by Kadru, some of the Nâgas went in advance and hung down from the tail of Ucchaisravas, thus giving the false appearance of a tail with black hairs. By this trick Vinâti lost the bet and had to become Kadru’s servant maid. As a result of it, the task of looking after Kadru’s children became Garuḍa’s duty. Kadru told him that if he fetched Amrtam from devaloka and gave it to the Nâgas, she was prepared to release him from the bondage. So Garuḍa flew up to devaloka, fought with the gods and defeated them. He returned with the pot of Amrtam and gave it to the Nâgas. The Nâgas went to take their bath after placing the pot on darbha grass spread on the floor. Just then Devendra swooped down and carried away the pot of Amrtam to devaloka. When the Nâgas returned after their purifying bath, the pot was not to be seen. In their greed they began to lack the darbha grass on which the pot was placed. The sharp edge of the grass cut their tongues into two. This is why the Nâgas (snakes) came to have forked tongues.

Amrtam which has been thus recovered after many such adventures, is still preserved carefully in devaloka.

AMSĀSA. A sage of the family of Marici.
1) Genealogy. He was descended from Viṣṇu through Brahma, Marici and Kaṭyāya.
2) Birth. Marici was one of the six sons, all āṣya of Brahma. These six sons, born pathogenetically of Brahma, were: Marici, Atigra, Atri, Pulavātī, Pulāvā and Kauṭu. Marici had a son named Kaṭyāya. Kaṭyāya married the thirteen daughters of Daksīṇa. The eldest of them, Aditi, gave birth to twelve sons: Dīśā, Āryaman, Miśra, Śakra, Va misunder, Amasa, Bhujagā, Vivavān, Pusan, Savitā, Trastā and Visu. Amasa is one of these twelve sons who have been called the twelve Adityas.
(See Chapter 65 of Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata).
3) Epitome. The Mahābhārata says (Śloka 66, Chapter 125) that Amasa was present at the time of Arjuna's birth when several devas had come there to see the infant. In Śloka 34, Chapter 45 of Śalā Parva it is said that Amasa was present on the occasion of the Abhisēka of Skandadeva. Amasa is said to have presented to Skandadeva five good warriors: Parigha, Vāṣa, Bhima, Dahana and Dahati.

AMSAPAYA. Name of a priest (Ṛtvik) qualified to officiate at a sacrifice. This priest officiated at the sacrifice (ṛtvajñ) performed by Bārīṣṭha at Puṣkarāśṭra. (See Chapter 34 of Padma Purāṇa).

AMSĀVATĀRA. The incarnation of God on earth is called avatāra. When the incarnation is only partial, that is, when only some of the divine elements incarnate, it is called antaḥ-svātāra (Amasa part). Chapters 54 to 64 of Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata give us a list of the gods who have incarnated partially. This list of devas and their antaḥ-svātāra is based upon the account given in the fourth Sandhika of Śrī Mahādeva Bhāgavaṇa.

AMSUDHANAPATTANAM. Name of an ancient town in North India. The town was going to Ayodhya from Kekaya after Daśaratha's death. Vālmīki has described this town in the Rāmāyaṇa in this context.

AMSUMAN. Name of a king belonging to the solar dynasty (Śrīya Vṛtthi).

2) Birth. Saṅga, the king of the Śrīya varṇa, (mentioned above) had two wives, Sumati (Vaidhatī) and Keśi (Saib) by name. Keśi gave birth to a son named Asamaṇja. Asūman was the son of Asamaṇja and the father of the famous Bhagiratha. (See under the title, BHAGIRATHA).

3) Some other details. Amūman was one of the kings who attended the Śunavatara of Pāṇcatī (See Śloka 11, Chapter 165 of Ādi Parva of the Mahābhārata).

AMŚUMAN II. There is a reference to one Amūman in the course of the description of the Viṣvedevas.

AMŚUMAN III. King of Bhoja who was killed by Drona in the war at Kurukṣetra (See Śloka 14, Chapter 6 of Karna Parva).

AMŚUMATI. The daughter of the Gandharva King named Drahma. Her story is narrated in the Śiva Purāṇa to illustrate the benefits of performing the PraṇaPaṇa. Śita expatiates on the importance and advantages of PraṇaPaṇa to a number of sages in Naiṁitārayana, King Satyaratna was a squint observer of PraṇaPaṇa. Unfortunately he defaulted in its observance and was killed by an arrow from a forest. He was killed in a battle by the King of Śiva and his wife, pregnant at that time, fled to a forest. She gave birth to a son on the bank of a river. Then, when they stepped into the river to drink some water, she was carried away by a crocodile. Presumably a Brahmin woman named Uga happened to pass that way and her son named Suvratā. Seeing a newborn infant there, that Brahmin woman took him, gave him the name, Dhumagupta and brought him up as her own son. According to the advice of a pious Brahmā released her son Sāṅgiliya, both Suvratā and Dhumagupta... started performing Pradóa-Vrata. Lord Siva was pleased with them and gave them much wealth. Dharmagupta happened to meet Amûrnati, daughter of the Gandharva King, Drahma, one day in a forest and they fell in love with each other. Drahma came to know of their love and so gave his daughter in marriage to Dharmagupta. As a result of the wealth and power which he had acquired by observing strictly Pradóa-Vrata Dharmagupta was able to return to Vidarbha, defeat King Siva and regain his kingdom from him.

AMûRTARAYAS. He was a renowned King of ancient Bharata and the father of King Gaya. AMûRTARAYAS received a sword from Pûru. (M.B., Sànti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 735).

ANÁDIKAPA. (See PÁNTAṬAPA).

ANÁDHRSTI I. A King of the Pûru dynasty.

Anándhrâj was son born to Raudhrâja by Mûtrañi, an Asur woman. (M.B., Ádi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 8-12). Anándhrâj has two synonyms, Rçeyu and Anavgâhanu.

ANÁDHRSTII. Verse 58, Chapter 14 of Sâbhâ Parva mentions seven great Yadavas. One Anándhrstii is named amongst the seven. This Anándhrstii was present at the marriage of Akhâmûnu as Japâlavanagara. (M.B., Vîru Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 22). There was one Anándhrstii also amongst the warriors who encompassed Arjuna and Kçois at the battle-field of Kuruksetra. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 151, Verse 67). He was the son of King Vîrdbhakaema. Hence he was called Vîrdbhakaema also.

ANÁDHRSTYIY. One of the Kauravas. (M.B., Ádi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 103).

ANÁGATA. (See PÁNTAṬAPA).

ANAGHA I. Son of Vasisthtra. He had seven sons, by his wife Uja. They were: Rais, Gestra, Urdhavâbhû, Savana, Anagha, Sutâpas and Sukra. Holy characters, they became the sârasjris of the age of the third Manu. (M.B., Vîru Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 55).

ANAGHA II. Was a Gandharva. He participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (M.B., Ádi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 55).

ANAGHA III. A king called Anagha is referred to in Verse 27, Chapter 6 of M.B.

ANAGH IV. Skanda has a synonym, Anagha as well. (M.P., Vai Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 9).

ANAGIA. A bird named Anagha is mentioned amongst the children of Garuda. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 12).

ANAGHIA VI. Used as a synonym of Siva. (M.B., Anûsâsa Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 39).

ANAGHIA VII. A synonym of Vîgu. (M.B., Anûsâsa Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 29).

ANAGHAM. A place in ancient India. (M.B., Sâbhâ Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 9).

ANAGNI (S). They are Pîra. Pîra lie Agniyañtis. Barâýads, Anagni. Sîgnis were offsprings of Brahmâ. Two damals, Mênit and Dhârijit were born to them of Sodâl (Apurâ Parva, Chapter 20).

ANAL. A daughter of Daksha. Some of the other daughters are Arditi, Deiti, Danu, Kûlikk, Tâmri, Krodhava, Manus and Anâl. These daughters were married to Kâryapa, son of Mârtci. Trees, creepers etc. owe their origin to Anâl. (Vâlmiki Râmâyana, Aranyaka kândha, Canto 14).

ANALAI. Another Analai is referred to in Verse 71, Chapter 66 of Ádi Parva, in M.B. This Analai was the wife of Kâryapa and a great granddaughter of Krodhavâ, the daughter of Daksha. Krodhava bégot Sveta, and the Surabhi; Rohini was the daughter of Surabhi and Analai was Rohini’s daughter.

ANALAI II. Daughter of Mâljyan born of Sundari. She was married to Vîdâvâusu. Kumbhânasîvat was her daughter. (Vâlmiki Râmâyana, Utrarakandâ).

ANÂLABA. A sacred pool. A bath in the pool is as efficacious as the Purânamecha yajña. (M.B., Anûsâsa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 32).

ANÂMÎTRA I. A king of the Solar dynasty. The Atmphara refers to him as the son of Nîguha.

ANÂMÎTRA II. Anamitra, son of Dhîrti is referred to as a king of the Yâdavas in Atmphara.

ANÂMÎTRA III. One Anamitra, son of Vîra is referred to in Manyaparâna. He was the father of Sni.

ANÂMÎTRA IV. A son born to King Krâsita and his wife Madri.

ANÂMÎTRA. Father of Gâksûa, the Manu of the 6th Manvantara and son of sage Anâmitra. (See Ananda).

ANÂNATA. A sage. (Rgyela, Mandala 3, Sûtka 175).

ANÂNCA I. Son of Kardamaprijapitai, and a king referred to his love of lofty people and unparalleled integrity. He had a son called Astabala. (M.B., Sânti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 91).

ANÂNGA II. (See Kâmadevai).

ANÂNGA. A river in ancient India. (M.B., Bhîma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 35).

ANÂNTA I. (ADISEGA).

1) Genealogy. Mahâvishnu begot Brûhnu and he the Prajapati and Anânta (Adisega) is one of the Prajapati. (Vâlmiki Râmâyana, Aranyaka-kand, Canto 14, Verse 7). Anânta is also referred to as the son of Kâryapa, one of the Prajapati born of Kâdrû. (M.B., Ádi Parva, Chapter 105, Verse 41). Aalo Balabhâdra-râma, elder brother of Sîtâ was a partial incarnation of Anânta.

2) Differences with mother. Vînâth and Kâdrû were two wives if Kâryapa prajapati. Garuda was born as Vînâth’s son and numerous serpents like Anânta, Vâsuku, Takaka, Kârkojaka were sons of Kâdrû. Once a controversy developed between Vînâth and Kâdrû, the latter saying that there were few black hairs on the tail of Airâvata and the former denying it. It was agreed that she who proved wrong in the argument would become the slave of the other. To prove herself to be right Kâdrû, the same night, asked her sons to go and stay suspended in the hairs of Airâvata’s tail. Some of the sons agreed to do so, while her other (prominent) sons like Anânta expressed their disinclination to do such an unethical act. Kâdrû cursed these disobedient children of hers to die at the serpent yajña of Janamejaya, whereupon Anânta and his supporters departed in sorrow. (M.B., Ádi Parva, Chapter 65).

3) Anânta’s new engagement. Departing thus from his mother Anânta visited sacred centres like Gandhâmânâ, Badal and practised austerities. And, Brahman approached before Anânta and asked him not to worry, but to go to the nether world and support the world on his hoofs. Brahman also told him that Garuda would render him all help in the new task. Blessed thus by Brahmā, Ananta gladly took up the new job. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 24).
4) Ananta has another abode in the palace of Varuṇa in the west. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 18).
5) Ananta’s prows. About Ananta’s prows Viṣṇu Purāṇa has the following to say: At the bottom of Pañcāla there is a base (Tāmasic) form of Viṣṇu called Ādiśeṣa. Even the Devas and Viṣṇu, devas and other deities, are not able to describe the attributes of that form. The Siddhas call this Ādiśeṣa Ananta who is worshipped by Devas and Viṣṇu. Ananta has 1000 heads and the Svastika mark which is clearly visible is his ornament. The 1000 gems in his head illuminate all regions, and he renders the Asuras powerless for the good of all the worlds. Ādiśeṣa 49, Verses 89–92 rotate on the overflown of his prows, and who wears blue apparel and garnials of white gems shines forth like another Mount Kailāśa beautified with garnials of clouds and by the flow of the Ganges. Śrī Devi and Varuṇa Devi serve Ananta who holds in one hand a khāliṅga and in the other a mace (mṛdula). At the deluge, end of a yuga Kailāśa, Śiva causes the Aquarius and the sun to rise from the faces of Ananta and consumes the three worlds. Ādiśeṣa dwell in the nether world wearing the whole earth as a crown. Even the Devas cannot gauge his nature, shape, prows and other marks. When he yawns the earth and waters shake and shiver. The Gandharvas, Nāgas, Cārāpas etc. fail to understand the real extent of his attributes, and that is why this strange being is called Ananta (endless). It was claimed that the Devas and by his grace Garga was able to master the sciences of astronomy and causation (nimitta). (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 5).
6) The land of Ananta. Pañcāla is Ananta’s world, and at its bottom there is a spot called Ananta. That spot is 36000 yojanas in extent, and here lives Ananta. He is known as Śrī Karuṇa also. He bears the whole nether world as though it were a mustard seed. And, when he thinks of destroying the entire world the Rudra called Sankarṣana will appear with other Rudras and weapons like tridents (Trishūla). Other serpents bowl at the feet of Ananta, who is supremely beautiful with divine lustre. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).
ANANTA III. A synonym of Śrī Karuṇa. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 70, Verse 14).
ANANTA IV. One of the military captains of Skanda. (M.B., Sālīya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 57).
ANANTA V. A synonym of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 135).
ANANTA VI. A synonym of Śiva. (M.B., Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 135).
ANANTĀ. Wife of Janamejaya, son of King Pūru. ANANTA. The abode of Ananta in the nether regions. (Devī Bhāgavata, Canto 8). (There are certain indications that Ananta refers to Trivandrum, Capital city of the Kerala State. Explanations of words like Svarga, Bhūmi, Pañcāla, Ananta, Deva, Asura, throw much light on this inference).
ANANTAVIJAYAM. The conquest of Dharmaputra. It was blown during the great war. (M.B., Bhīma Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 13).

ANAPAYACOLA. A King of the Cola country, 1065-1112. The Tamil poet Sekhilar who composed the twelfth song of the great Saiva religious book called Tirumurugal was a minister of this king.

ANARAKATIRTHA. A sacred pool. Brahmā, along with Viṣṇu and others bathe daily in this sacred pool. Therefore, it is said that the sins of all those who bathe in the pool will be washed off.

For genealogy, see IKŚVĀKU. Anarayanava was a vēgāvaran. (M.B., Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 59).
ANARAYANA (ANARAYANA). Rāvana once attacked his country whom he challenged to a duel. In the duel Anarayanava died. Before dying he cursed Rāvana that he would be killed by Rāma, son of King Dasharatha. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 45).

ANARAYANA (ANARAYANA). A king born in King Kaipiḍa’s dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).
ANASA (ASAMGA). A brother of Akrūra. (Brāhmapura, Daśaṇa Skandha).

ANASAYA. Wife of Sage Atri, son of Brahmā. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 10).

1) Genealogy. From Mahāvīruna were born in order Brahmā, Śvayambhuva Manu, Devalbhīti, Anasayā. To Śvayambhuva, son of Brahmā, was born by his wife Satarūpā five children: Utānapāda, Priyavratā, Abhūti, Devalbhīti and Prāśvatī and Devalbhīti was married to Kardama, son of Brahmā. They begot two daughters, Kalā and Anasayā. Marici married Kalā and Atri married Anasayā. (Brāhmapura, Skandha 1, Chapter 4).
2) The Tapasakti of Anasayā. Once upon a time, rains having failed for ten years the whole world sweating in agony and river Gaṅga got dried up. Famine stalked the world. In this dire contingency it was the tapasakti of Anasayā that made trees bear fruits and Gaṅga to flow again. Also, she converted ten days into nights on the request of the Devas.

During their forest life Rāma and Sītā reached the hermitage of sage Atri and the sage and Anasayā treated the guests sumptuously. The above story about the tapasakti of Anasayā was told then by Atri. The story helped to increase Rāma’s respect for Anasayā. Anasayā gave Sītā all proper advice. She taught Sītā that absolute service to husband is due to women. Anasayā gave to Sītā a very sacred garland and a sublime gem. And, after that Rāma and Sītā left the hermitage. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyākanda, Cantos 117 and 118).

3) Svās of Anasayā. She had three sons: Dattātreya, Durvāsas and Candira. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 10). (The reason for Mahāvīruna being born as Dattātreya, Sīva as Durvāsas and Brahmā as Candira to Anasayā is given under Atri).

ANUPAMYA. Wife of Bāṣapura. Once she developed an ardent interest in Nārada, which led to some domestic quarrels. (Padma Purāṇa, Adi Kanda, Chapter 14).

ANAVADYĀ. Wife of Kaiva, this Aparā woman participated in the birthday celebrations of Anjuna. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 62).

Āṇḍā. Sīta, the disciple of Vyāsa said to the Munis at the Naimitīryaka about the creation of the Universe: In the beginning in the heavy universal darkness, the first seed of life (anda) appeared. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 28).

ANDHAKĀṬHA. The entire universe consisting of the fourteen worlds, which are: Bhūloka, Bhuvarloka, Svartaka, Maharāloka, Janarloka, Tapo-loka, Satyaloaka, Pātala, Rasātāla, Mahāśāla, Tālātāla, Sutala, Vītalā, Atala.

ANDHHA I. An offspring of Kaśyapa by his wife Kadī. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 16).

ANDHHA II. There is a story in M.B., about a huntsman, Vatsa, killing one Andhha, an evil being. Andhha, whose form and shape were that of an animal, by doing tapas, became recipient of a boon for destroying everything Brahmag rendered him blind lest the world perish, and that animal began to be known as Andhha. When Andhha began his programme of complete destruction, many people rushed up to Viśvāmitra, in his abode in the forest, Andhha followed them. But, Viśvāmitra, in the interests of self-protection pointed out the refugees to Andhha. As punishment for this sin Viśvāmitra had once to go to hell. This story was related by Śrīna to Arjuna during the great war at Kurukṣetra, and the reason for telling the story was: During the light Arjuna hesitated to aim arrows against Karna. Encouraged by this Yudhā or Arjuna-Dharmaputra asked him to hand over his famous bow, Gāndiva, to Śrīka. Feeling insulted at this demand Arjuna, all in a sudden, drew his sword to do away with Dharmaputra. Śrīka prevented Arjuna from attacking his noble brother, and in this context related the above story to prove the truth that sins committed even unwittingly will lead one, as in the case of Viśvāmitra to hell. (M.B., Karna Parva, Chapter 69).

ANDHHA III. Upamanyu, the excellent disciple of Dharma, consumed the leaves of a tree which made him blind (See Ayodhadaumya) (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 3).

ANDHHA I. There was a very renowned king called Andhha in the Yadu dynasty. All kings belonging to this dynasty used to be called Andhhakas. (M.B., Udyoga Parva).

ANDHHA II. Verse 12, Chapter 4 of M.B., Udyoga Parva refers to another king called Andhha. The Pāravas went to him to send a messenger soliciting military help.

ANDHHA I. An Ausra.

1) Birth. This Ausra was the foster son of Hiranyaka. Siva was really his father. While once Siva was immersed in yoga his daughter closed his eyes playfully with her hands, and lo! A darkness rose and enveloped the whole place. From that darkness, with a sound as that of thunderbolt, appeared a Rākṣasa. He, at the name Andhha, as he was born from darkness. At that time Hiranyaka was doing tapas for a son. Siva appeared before him and bestowing on him Andhha was his foster son said as follows: “If he (Andhha) casts the hatred of the world or desires even the mother of the three worlds or kills brahmās I will myself burn him to ashes”. After saying this Siva disappeared (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 63).

2) Andhha dons Pārvati with last. One day overcome by erotic passion Andhha said to his henchmen:—“The true friend who brings Siva’s consort, Pārvati to me, yes, he is my brother, my father even”. Hearing these ravings of Andhha, Prahlāda went to him and convinced him that Pārvati in fact was his mother. But Andhha was not quietened. Then Prahlāda explained to him the gravity of the sin of desiring other people’s wives. Even this had no effect on Andhha. He sent Sambhāraśura to Śiva to ask for and bring Pārvati to him. Śiva sent word to Andhha that if the latter would defeat him in the game of dice Pārvati would be sent to him. Andhha got enraged and rushed to mount Mandara and began a fight with Śiva.

3) Death. Defeated in the encounter, Andhha craved for Śiva’s pardon. He admitted that Pārvati was his mother. He also prayed for Śiva’s blessings for removal of his Asurahood. Śiva granted him the prayers. The sins and Asurahood of Andhha were thus ended. Śiva made him the head of the Asuras, named Bṛdgī. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 65 etc.).

ANDHHA (M). A sacred pool. A dip in this pool will bring all the benefits of a Puruṣamedha yajña. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verses 32, 33).

ANDHAKĀRAKA (M). A place in the island of Krautika. (M.B., Bhīma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 18).

ANDHAKARAM. A mountain in the island of Krautika. (M.B., Bhīma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 22).

ANDHAKOPA (M). In the Dīvī Bhāgavatam Mahābhūtī describes 28 hells to Nārada, and Andhakopāni is one of them. (See Naraka). Andhakopāni is reserved for those who kill either Brahmins or devotees of God or Sanyāsins (holy people). This hell abounds in cruel beasts like the bear and leopard, evil birds like the eagle, reptiles like the snake and scorpion and dirty insects like bugs and mosquitoes. The sinner will have to put up with all these sufferings in hell till the period of his punishment expires. (Devi Bhāgavata, Asītama Skandha).

ANDHATĀMISRA. One of the 28 hells. (See Naraka). This hell is destined for wives who cheat their husbands and consume food and for husbands who cheat their wives and eat food. Agents of Yama get hold of such sinners and push them into the Andhātāmisra. As the cords of the agents with which they bind the sinners get tighter around their bodies they faint and fall down owing to unbearable pain. When they regain consciousness and try to run away and escape, the Agents of Yama again bind them with the cord. (Devi Bhāgavata, Asītama Skandha).

ANDHRA (ANDHRA). This is the Andhra Pradesh in modern India. It has to be surmised that this place was very famous during the period of the composition of the Mahābhārata. (M.B., Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 49).

ANDHRA. Warriors from Andhra were called Andhras. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 8).

ANDHRA I. Verse 24, Chapter 4 of Sabhā Parva, describes this king of Andhha Dēsa as having sat in the assembly hall of the palace constructed by Mayā at Indraprastha for the Pandavas. He was also present at the Rājāśīya Yajña performed by Yuddhishtirā. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 11).

ANDHRA II. The warriors of Andhra Dēsa were called Andhhrakas also. (M.B., Karna Parva, Chapter 29, Verses 10 and 11). In the Bhārata war the King of Pandya defeated these warriors. Kṛṣṇa incited Arjuna to kill the Andhras and the Pulindas. (M.B., Karna Parva, Chapter 73, Verses 19 to 21).

ANDHRA III. Andhrakas are classed with Mlec-ANENAS I

A king of the lunar dynasty (Candra Vana).
1) Genealogy. Descended from Visnu in the following order: Brahman - Atri - Candra - Buddha - Pururavas - Ayus-Anenas.
2) Birth. Pururavas had by his wife Urvasi six sons named Ayus, Srutayana, Satyayus, Raya, Vijaya and Jaya. Of them, Ayus, the eldest, had five sons named Nahusa, Ksattrayudha, Raja, Rambha and Anenas.
Nahusa had a son named Yayati to whom were born the sons Vuru, Yadu and others. The two dynasties of Yadu and Vuru (Yaduvratha and Puruvratha) originated from them. To Anenas, brother of Nahusa, a son named Siddha was born. Siddha begot Suci who begot Trikakup and a son named Scastaras was born to Trikakup.

ANENAS II. A Maharaja of the Ikavya dynasty.
Genealogy. From Visnu descended thus: Ksatyapa-Vaivasvata-Manu - Ikavya-Satas-Indra-Indra-Anenas.

ANGA. A king belonging to the Candra vana. (Lunar dynasty).
2) Birth. Anga, Kaungha, Suhma, Kandha, Vanga, Adrupa and Anashah are the seven sons born to Bali, the son of Sutapas, by his wife Sutesha, and the King Anga was one of them. There is a story about the birth of these twins.

Once there lived a hermit named Utatthya. He was the eldest brother of Bhraspati. One day when Mamatâ, Utatthya’s wife, was pregnant, Bhraspati approached her with carnal desires. In spite of her efforts to dissuade her brother-in-law from his attempt she could not prevail upon him. He forced her and satisfied his desire. The next day, when Utatthya was told of the escape of Bhraspati out into the floor, Bhraspati got angry and cried the child in the womb: “May you fall in perpetual darkness!”. So the child was born blind and remained blind throughout his life. Hence he got the name “Dirghatamas”. Dirghatamas married Pradveda. A son named Gauvana was born to them. The duty of supporting Dirghatamas fell on the wife and the son who put him on a raft and pushed him astray into the River Ganges. King Bali, who was bathing in the river saw this. He rescued the hermit and took him to the palace and pleasing him by hospitality, requested him to beget children in his wife Sutesha, who detaining the idea sent a Suára woman Dhatreyi in her stead and eleven children were born to them. By and by Dirghatamas came to know of the deceit played by Sutesha on him and he became very angry. But the King pacified him and pleased him again and Dirghatamas begot five sons by Sutesha. They were Anga, Vanga, Kaungha, Paundra and Suhma. Dirghatamas blessed them that they would become very famous. Anga, Vanga, Kaungha, Paundra and Suhma were the five kings ruled by Anga, Vanga, Kaungha, Paundra and Suhma respectively. These five are the famous Kings of the Bali family. (Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 104).

3) How Anga got children. Once Anga performed a horse sacrifice. But the gods did not appear to receive oblations. Holy seers said that the Gods refused to accept the oblations offered by the King because he was childless. So he performed the sacrifice called Purvankami (Sacrifice to get a son) and from the sacrificial fire arose a divine person with a golden flask of pudding, which he offered to the King and his queen. The King and the queen Surilhá ate the pudding, as a result of which a son was born to them. He was named Venu. This son was wicked. Because of his wickedness the King became so miserable that he left his kingdom and went on a pilgrimage. Since there was no other means the people enthroned Venu, who tortured his subjects beyond limit. (Bhagavata, 4th Skanda, Chapters 14).

ANGADA I. A son of Bali.
1) Genealogy. Descended from Visnu in the following order: Brahman-Kaungha-Indra-Bali-Angada.
2) Birth. Angada was the son of Bali (the son of Indra) born of his wife Târa. (Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 28).

a) Angada was a member of the group of monkeys sent by Sugriva to find out Sitâ. (Valmiki Ramâyana, Aranyakânda).

b) He was the foremost among the group of monkeys who entered Madhuvana and ate the berries in the garden, on their return after the search for Sitâ.

c) Angada was sent to the court of Râvana as a messenger by Sri Rama. (Ramâyana, Yuddhâkânda).

d) In the battle between Râma and Râvana Angada combated with Indrajit. (Ramâyana, Yuddhâkânda).

e) After his combat with Indrajit, Angada and his followers raised an attack on the army of Râvana. (Râmâyana, Yuddhâkânda).

f) After the battle, Sri Rama anointed Angada as the heir-apparent to the Kingdom of Kiskindhâ. The necklace which Bâli had given on his death to Sugriva, was returned to Angada. (Uttara Ramâyana).

g) Sri Rama returned to Ayodhya after his forest life and celebrated a horse sacrifice. The sacrificial horse was caught and devoured by King Suratha. Coming to know of this the Sri Satruhgna sent Angada to deal with Suratha, who said that the horse was detained with the intention of meeting with Sri Rama personally. Angada returned and told Satruhgna what Suratha had said to him. (Padma Purâna, Paithâ Khaḍyâ).

ANGADA II. There was a prince called Angada among the mighty men-of-arms on the side of the Kaûravas. He got into action on the battle-field on the twelfth day of the battle. (M.B., Droñ Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 38).

ANGADA III. Śrutakérti the wedded wife of Satruhgna, brother of Sri Râma, had two sons called Angada and Chandraekutu. (Uttara Ramâyana).

ANGADA IV. In the Bhagavata we see another Angada who was the son of Gada, the brother of Krâta by his wife, Bhati.

ANGAKARMA. Actions on the stage are of two kinds. One is to express by the major organs of the body. The others are to express by the minor organs of the body. Head etc. are major organs and eyebrow etc. are minor organs. Actions expressed by major organs are called Angakarma and those by minor organs are called Pratyanga Karma. (Agni Purâna, Chapter 34).

ANGALAMMA. She is the wife of Virabhadrâ, a servant.
of Siva. She has a rope in her left hand, with which she haunts up the spirits of the dead.

ANGARAJAVAMI

The kingdom ruled by King Anga. Other details

1) The Dynasty. The first king of the Anga dynasty was Anga the son of Bali. Anagahabhi, Draviratha, Dharmaratha, Komapada (Lomapada), Caturanga, Pruthulika, Bhishmacharya, Jayadratha, Vajra, Drupadora, Suraskri, Aitaraka, Karna, Vrsarana and others were kings of this dynasty. Karna was the adopted son of Aitaraka. During the period of the Mahabharata, Kings of the Aitaraka family were under the sway of the Candra vamsa (Lunar dynasty) kings such as Dhrupatayra and Panu. (For further informations see the word Aitaraka).

2) How Karna became the king of Anga. A contest in archery and the welding of other weapons was going on at Hastinapura, the competitors being the Kauravas and the Pandavas. The status of Karna, who appeared on the side of the Kauravas, was questioned by the Pandavas on the occasion and Duryodhana, who always stood on his dignity, anointed Karna as the King of Anga, on the spot. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 196).

3) Dhrub Kshatriyar. The Kshatriyar of Anga (Lomapada) was the king of Anga once deceased a hero named Brahman. So all the Brahmins quit the country and thereafter there was no rainfall in the country for several years. The sages of the country began to think on the means of bringing about rain. One day they approached the King and told him that the only way to get rain was to bestow a suitable reward upon a certain Brahman. Once Kalyana happened to see Urvashi and he had seminal flow. The semen fell in a river. A deer swallowed it along with the water it drank. It gave birth to a human child with horns on the head. This child was called Rayastra. It was brought up by a hermit called Vibhandaka in his hut. Rayastra had never seen women and by virtue of this, there occurred rainfall wherever he went. The King Lomapada sent some courtesans to the forest to attract Rayastra, who following them arrived at the court of Lomapada. The King of Anga and the King gave Rayastra, as a gift, his daughter Satt糊. Thus the country got rain. This Lomapada was a friend of Dataratha. (Mahabharata, Aranya Parva, Chapters 110 to 115).

4) How the kingdom got the name Anga. One opinion is that the kingdom got its name from the Anga king who ruled over it. Another opinion is that the king got his name from the country he ruled. However there is a story revealing how the country came to be called Anga.

In the realm of God, preliminary steps were being taken for making Sri Paramdevi wed Parvati. According to the instructions of Devendra, Kâmadeva (the Lord of Love—Copul) was trying to break the meditation of Siva. When Siva opened his third eye, fire emitted from it and Anga (Kâmadeva) was burned to ashes. It was in the country of Anga that the ashes of the ‘anga’ (Body) of Kâmadeva fell and from that day onwards the country came to be called Anga and Kâmadeva, ‘Anga’ (without body). (Vâlmiki Râmâyana, Bâlâkândâ, Sarga 26).

5) Other informations.

(1) It is mentioned in the Hindi Dictionary, ‘Sâbda Sâgara’ that the kingdom of Anga embracing Bhatapur and Murigir in Bihar had its capital at Campâpur and that the country had once stretched from Vaidyânaâhanâma to Bhuvanâvar.

(2) Arjuna had visited the Kingdom of Anga also during his pilgrimage. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 9).

(3) The King of Anga was present at the sacrifice of Rajastra (Royal consecration) celebrated by Dharmaratha, when the Pandavas were being lived at Indraprastha. (M.B., Sâbha Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 16).

(4) On one occasion Sri Kripi defeated the Angas in a battle. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 15).

(5) Parashurama had defeated the Angas once. (M.B., Drona Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 12).

(6) In the battle of Kuruksetra between the Pandavas and the Kauravas, on the sixteenth day of the battle, the heroes of Anga made an onslaught on Arjuna. (M.B., Karna Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 12).

(7) The Angas attacked the armies of Dhrstdyumna and the King of Pûrâca. (M.B., Karna Parva, Chapter 22, Stanza 2).

(8) A low caste man from Anga attacked Bhima, who killed the man and his elephant. (Mahabharata, Drona Parva, Chapter 26).

ANGAMALAJA (M) (MALADA—KARUSA).

General Informations. (1) This was a country in ancient Bhurata. (Bhima Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 50).

(2) Visvamitra had taken to the forest from Ayodhya Kama and Lakmana to protect the hermits and their yagas. On the way they entered the Tâtaka forest. Visvamitra told Vrsamitra that the sons of Kshatriya got rain and they were in the forest and they were not allowed to come to the forest. (Mahabharata, Aranya Parva, Chapters 110 to 113).

ANGAPRADAKSHINA. Rolling behind a chariot round the temple as a vow.

ANGARA. A king of ancient India. He was defeated by Mândhâvat in a battle. (Mahâbhârata, Sânti Parva, Chapter 29, Stanza 88).

ANGÁRAKA

1. An Asura who took the form of a pig. The story of how this Asura was killed by his daughter Angárávati, is given below.

Long ago there was an emperor named Mahendra-varma in Udayana. His son Mahásena did not find a wife for a long time to get a wife and a sword. At last Devi appeared and granted the boon: "My son! take this extraordinary sword. So long as you have this sword, your enemies will not prevail against you. Angárávati, the renowned beauty of the three worlds, who is the daughter of the Asura Angára, will become your wife in due course. As do hyrreous deeds, you will be called Gaúpadhamana." He was given the sword and a tamer called Nanága. One day Mahásena went to the forest for hunting. He saw a very large pig. The King used his arrows. But they did little harm to the pig. Moreover it turned the chariot of the King over to one side and ran to a cave. The King followed it with fury. On the way he sat on the bank of a lake with wonder, for a lady of exquisite beauty was walking along the moony surf in the midst of some maidens. Slowly she approached the King and talked with him. The young lady had entirely captured the heart of the King, who told her everything. She began to weep. "Who are you? Why do you weep?" The King asked her. She replied with a deep sigh. "The pig you saw, is my father Angárákasa. His body is as hard as diamond and not vulnerable to any sort of weapon. These maidens have been caught by him from various royal houses and brought here for my help. My name is Angárávati. My father was changed to a giant by a curse. Now he is asleep discarding the form of pig. When he wakes up, filled with hunger and thirst, he will devour you harm. My tears flowed out in the form of heated ice-breaths, when I thought of these things." The King said, "Go and sit by him and cry when he wakes up. He will ask the reason. Then tell him that you had been crying, when you thought how before you would be without a mate, in case your father was killed by somebody." Angárávati did as she was told. Hearing her words Angára said, "My daughter! No body can kill me. My body had vendor of diamond. There is only one vulnerable point in my body, which is on my left forearm and it is always covered with my bow." The King hid himself closely and heard everything. He fought with the Asura and putting at the vulnerable point killed him. The King married Angárávati and took her to his palace. Two sons were born to him. They were called Gopácala and Parama. By the grace of Indra a daughter also was born to him, by her and she was Vásavadatta, the wife of the famous Udayana (Kathásamudrā, Kathá-mukhālambaka, Tarangha 3).

ANGÁRAKA II. A prince named Angára is seen to have been the descendent of Jayadratha, the King of Suras. (Mahábhárata, Yana Parva, Chapter 283, Stanza 10).

ANGÁRAKA III. A planet named Mangala which is a satellite of Brahma is seen to have been called by the name Angára also. (Mahábhárata, Sábha Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 29).

ANGÁRAKA IV. We see one Angára among the one hundred and eight sons of the Sun. (Mahábhárata, Yana Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 16).

ANGÁRAKA. (SMMIKA).

1) Genealogy. Descended in the following order from Víra, Brahma-Macia-Kátyáapa-Angára. 2) Birth. In the battle between the Gods and the Asuras, most of the Asuras were killed and one Asura only from the company of devas to Live (the mortal world). Suras was the daughter of that Asura Kátyáapa married Suras. To them were born the two daughters, Angára (SMMIKA) and Ajámuhi, and four sons, called Jñānapada, Sínhavakra, Táirasvaca and Gomukha. Thus SMMIKA is the sister of Táirasvaca. (Shanda Puraka, Auras Kanda). Other details. This giantess Angára had a clash once, with Hanumán. He sent a large number of monkeys under the leadership of Hanumán to search for Sita. He gave Hanumán certain instructions regarding the route he had to follow. Sugriva said, "There is a giantess in the middle of that Southern Sea. Her name is Angára. She pulls the shadow towards her and feeds on the object of the shadow." From this it is clear that she was a giantess who lived in the sea between Lanka and South India. She knew the art of bringing to her side, anybody who passed over the sea, by pulling at his shadow. When Hanumán jumped to Lanka from the mountain of Mahendra the giantess attacked Hanumán. It is seen that the name Simhikā also is used for Angaraka. Hanumān who was subjected to the excessive attraction of Simhikā, felt a great storm raging round him. Finally he found her out, a monster with such an uncouth face and a mouth as wide as the hole of Pāńdaśa, (the neither world). There was a terrible fight between Hanumān and the monster, in which Simhikā fell on the ground; beaten. After the fight Hanumān resumed his journey. (Valakīki Rāma-yāya, Sundarāyāna, Sarga 1, Stanza 178 to 185).

ANGĀRA (M). A country in ancient India. (Mahā-bhārata, Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 63).

ANGĀRĀPARNA (Citrawrathā). See the word CITRA-RATHA I.

ANGĀRAVATI (See ANGARAKA).

ANGĀVĀHA. A king of immense fame, belonging to the dynasty of Vṛṣṇi. Angavāha attended, with Balabhadrābha, the sacrifice of Rājasthīya (Royal consecration) celebrated by Yudhiṣṭhīra. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 15).

ANGAS I.

1. Bṛha. He is a hermit born from the mind of Brahmā. Six mind-born sons (Mānas-Putras) were born to Brahmā, known as Marci, Angiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, and Kṛatu. All the six of them became great hermits. (Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 16).

2. Important events.

(1) The failure of Angiras. There was a King named Citraketu in the kingdom of Śrīvakṣa. Once Angiras reached his palace when the King was in a miserable state as he was childless. The King informed Angiras of his sorrow. He pacified the King and said that a son would be born to him. He and his wife Kṛddyutī were filled with joy. When other wives of the King did not like this. They feared that when a son was born to Kṛddyutī the King might overlook them. To the King a son was born of Kṛddyutī and the other wives poisoned the child and killed him. While the parents were weeping over the dead child Angiras and Nārada arrived there and wiped their tears. Angiras agreed to bring the child back to him. He instantly called the spirit of the dead child to him and asked it to become the son of Citraketu. The spirit replied that it had a large number of parents in several previous births and that it was not possible for it to become the son of Citraketu. Then it vanished. Angiras and Nārada went on their way. Citraketu became a devotee of Viṣṇu and by the curse of Parvati, the son born again as Vṛūchaula. (Bhāgavata, Skanda Parva, Chapter 6).

(2) How Angiras cured Sudarśana and transformed him to a serpent. While Sudarśana, a vidyādhras (a class of semigods) was travelling lustfully with a group of beautiful girls he came across Angiras and some other hermits. He teased Angiras calling him 'durbhāga' (unlucky) and Angiras heard him and changed him to a big serpent and he was promised liberation from the curse, when, during the dvāpara yuga (one of the four ages) Mahā-visṇu would incarnate as Śrī Kṛṣṇa and would tread upon him and then he would regain his former form. From that day onwards Sudarśana lived on the banks of the river Kālindī in the form of a serpent. It was the time when Śrī Kṛṣṇa was having his game of love with the Gopa women. On one night one serpent bit Nanda the foster father of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The cowherds or gopas hit at the snake with burned wood. But it was of no use. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came there and thrashed the serpent which instantly took the form of Sudarśana Vidyādhras and pressing Śrī Kṛṣṇa entered heaven. (Bhāgavata, Skanda Parva, Chapter 34).

(3) Angiras a Prajāpati. Brahmā had created sixteen prajāpatis, for effecting the creation of the universe. Angiras is one of them. Their names are given below:

1) Kardama
2) Vikeśa
3) Seṣa
4) Sānāravya
5) Sṛhṣṭhvya
6) Marci
7) Atri
8) Kṛatu

(Valakīki Rāma-yāya, Aranyakanda, Sarga 14).

(4) The wives and children of Angiras. Angiras had several wives such as Sudhā, Śrīra, Śraddhā, Devasena and Vasudhā. The names of the sons of Angiras are given below:

1) Bṛhatikīrti
2) Bṛḥatyāvī
3) Bṛḥadākāma
4) Bṛḥadāsūrya

Besides these sons and daughters, other sons such as Sudhanvī and Kārttikṛṣṇa were born to Angiras by his other wives. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, five chapters from 216).

(5) The clash between Angiras and Prahlāda. Durśāsana stripped Pāńcāla of her clothes in the palace hall, in the presence of the Pāńcāla women who were defeated in the game of dice. Before this Pāńcāla had asked Duryodhana one question, 'Have you won yourself or myself?' One husband was not authorised to take his wife Pāńcāla who was the wife of five husbands. Moreover according to the Sāstras (science) the deeds executed by a King, who was miserable due to hunting, drinking, playing dice and hankering after a woman, were not legally binding. Hence how could the Kauravas own Pāńcāla?' Vidura said that the witnesses in the hall had to give an impartial answer to this question and that the punishment of falsehood would come upon the doer himself. As an instance he gave the following old story: Virocana was the son of Prahlāda; Sudhanvī the son of Angiras and Virocana fell in love with the same woman once. There arose a contention between these two as to who was greater. They staked their lives on the issue. Then both of them together approached Prahlāda and requested him to give a decision as to which of them was the elder. Thinking that Prahlāda might side with Virocana his son, Sudhanvī said to him, 'Sir,

*There is another story about the birth of Angiras. At a sacrifice celebrated by Rudra, sexual flow occurred to Brahmā who happened to see some celestial maidens and was overpowered by passionate feelings. Brahmā put the sperm in the fire. From that fire appeared Angiras along with Marci, Bhīma and others. This deve (the shining one—the God) was called Angiras because his origin was from Angira of Grendor.
you should not utter words of falsehood, nor should you abstain from speaking the truth. If you do so, you will be honored by pieces by Indra with his Vajrayuddha (the weapon of thunderbolt)”. Hesitating to take a decision, because of the words of Sudhanva, Prahlada went to Kaiyapa to clear his doubts, and asked: "Lord, do you know which are the future worlds destined for those who utter words of falsehood or abstain from giving out the truth?" Kaiyapa said, "On him, who abstains from speech, path known by thousands of death will fall. He who tells falsehood will have to perform many a deed of duty to attain heaven.”

Having heard the words of Kaiyapa, Prahlada said to Virocana, “Virocana, Sudhanva is greater than you. Angiras is greater than me. Likewise the mother of Sudhanva is nobler than your mother. So according to your bet you owe your life to Sudhanva.” Pleased at the righteousness of Prahlada, Sudhanva gave Virocana a boon to live a hundred years more. (Mahabharata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 63)

(6) How Angiras became the first son of Agni (Fire God)

Once Angiras was blazing out as a furious being. All the worlds were illuminated by that blare of fire. As Angiras burned the inhabitants of the different worlds were agitated. Agni, being sad at the destruction shown towards him by the worlds went to a forest and hid himself there. The living beings were in trouble owing to lack of fire. When he became aware of this Angiras went to the forest and pacified Agni. From that day onwards Angiras agreed to become the first son of Agni, who received his dharma as usual. (Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapter 217)

(7) How Angiras got the name Aitkharajagras. After the slaughter of Vritavrata, Indra went to the lake known as Amrjasaras and hid himself there in a lotus flower. At this time the gods and demons were fighting each other. The gods were led by Vritavrata, and the demons by him. The gods were supported by the demons, the demons by the gods. Aitkharajagras, who was a great king, was challenged to another war. He accepted the challenge and went to another war. He defeated the demons and won the war. (Mahabharata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 5 to 7)

(8) Angiras and Drona. In the battle of Kuruksetra, between the Pandavas and the Kauravas, the great teacher, Drona began to release his divine darts towards his enemies in all directions. Immediately Angiras with many other hermits came to Drona and told him, “You have burned to death innumerable men with your Brahmanstra (the most powerful of all missiles). Your end is very near. So put your weapons down and stop your fight.” Drona seemed to have paid no heed at all to the advice of the hermits. He did not stop fighting too.

(9) The slaying of Angiras on the mount of Tirathas or holy places (Baths). Dharmaputra asked Bhima about the importance of the holy ghats or tirathas (Baths). Bhima told Dharmaputra, what Angiras had once told Gautama about the merits obtained by going on pilgrimage to holy tirathas or Bath. Angiras described the holy nature and character of holy baths in Bhartara such as Puskarā, Prabhā, Naśīr, Sāgāradhaka, Indramārā, Devkā, Svaranikāndu, Haryavantaka, Indrāyata, and with other numerous tirathas. (Mahabharata, Anusasana Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 7-21).

(10) Other details

(1) Daksya gave his two daughters in marriage to Angiras. (Devi Bhagavata, Skanda 7)

(2) Angiras once saved the Sun. (Mahabharata, Vana Parva, Chapter 92, Stanza 6)

(3) When the Pandavas were in exile in forest, Angiras had been chanting and meditating in Akshaya, the region of the mount Gandhamadhana. (Mahabharata, Aranya Parva, Chapter 142, Stanza 6)

(4) When the hermits had stolen the lotus flowers of Agasya, Angiras gave some hints about the culprits. (Mahabharata, Anusasana Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 23)

(5) Angiras once gave a discourse on lasting and the merits of lasting. (Mahabharata, Anusasana Parva, Chapter 106, Stanza 11 to 16)

(6) Angiras on another occasion delivered lectures on the secrets of duty. (Mahabharata, Anusasana Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 1)

(7) Once Angiras drank the water in the ocean to the last drop. (Mahabharata, Anusasana Parva, Chapter 139, Stanza 3)

(8) When his thirst was not quenched, even though he had drunk the entire water available in the world, he created new springs of water and drank them dry. (Mahabharata, Anusasana Parva, Chapter 153, Stanza 5)

(9) Once Angiras failed to show respect to Angiras, who cursed Agni and then entered a smoke came out from fire. (Mahabharata, Anusasana Parva, Chapter 153, Stanza 8)

(10) Angiras conducted many of the important sacrifices of King Ajasita. (Mahabharata, Avasmechika Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 22)

(11) Indra once gave Angiras a boon. (Mahabharata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 3 to 7)

(12) Angiras blessed Dhruva who had been doing penance. (Visnu Purana, Amsa 1, Chapter 11)

(13) The daughters named Sinivah, Kuh, Rakṣ, Anumati were born to Angiras by his wife Smriti. (Agni Purana, Chapter 29).

(14) Angiras is the first of the Agni devas (Fire-Gods) and a hermit. He had a son called Hiranya-Sēka, who also was a hermit. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvaka 7, Sūkta 31).

(15) The Hermit Angiras began to invoke the Gods to get a son equal to Indra. Then Indra, thinking that nobody should be born as his equal, took birth as the son of Angiras. He was called Savaya. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvaka 10, Sūkta 51).

(16) Indra sent Sarasvati, the daughter of the gods, to find out the place where the cows had been hidden. Indra acted according to the advice of Angiras. At first the buch did not consent to go. But when Desendra promised to feed her young one with milk the aged Sarasvati found out the place where the cows were hidden and informed Indra of it. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvaka 11, Sūkta 62).

(17) Rhibus are the sons of Sudhanva (Son of Angiras). The hermit Kuta also is descended from Angiras. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvaka 10, Sūkta 10).
(18) Angiras was the son of Brahman in the Svayambhuva Manvantara (See Manvantara), but in the Vaivasvata Manvantara he was born from Angi.

(19) Once Vyasa (the Wind-God) had to run away from Angiras and hide himself as he had caused some displeasure to Angiras. On another occasion Angiras taught philosophy and sacred doctrines to the hermit Samanaka. (Mundakaopanishad).

ANGIRAS. In the family of Marici, son of Brahma, another king of the name of Angiras is seen.

Genealogy. Descended from Visnu in the following order: Brahma, Marici, Kasyapa, Vaivasvata Manu, Utanapada, Dharma, Siroti, Kripa, Calastra Manu, Sri, Angiras. (About this Angiras, no other information is available in the Puranas Visnu Purana, Anusha, Chapter 15, Agni Purana, Chapter 18).

ANGIRISHVARA. A hermit named Kaksavan. (Rgveda, Mandala I, Anuvaka 17, Sukta 120).

ANKAVIDHARSHA. A brother of Jayadratha, a king of the kingdom of Sinhub. Aruna killed him. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 203, Verse 12).

ANKAPATA. A Yaksya, one of the attendants of Kuvera. (M.B., Sauda Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 18). He was a descendant of the Anga dynasty. (Agni Purana, Chapter 277).

ANKRNI. A division of the army. (See under AKSHAHINU).

ANILA I. One of the Asu (8) Vasus. His father was Dharma and mother Visva. Anila married Siva and had two sons, Manavaya and Anjugati. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 66, Verses 17-23).

ANILAKA II. He had a son named Anila. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 9).

ANILAKA III. A word used as a synonym of Siva. (M.B., Anushka Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 100). Anila is a word used as a synonym of Visnu. (M.B., Anushka Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 38).

ANILA V. A Ksatriya. King His father, Vrsakaribhi presented him as Dakshin to the Saptarshi (7 seers) at a yajna performed by him (latter). The King expired soon after this. There was then a famine in the country. The Saptarshi, tortured by hunger and thirst got ready to prepare food with the corpse of the King. But the corpse retained its form and they could not cook food with it. (M.B., Anushka Parva, Chapter 96).

ANILA. A famous serpent. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 7).

ANIMADAYA

1) Ge. Lang. How he got the name Mändavya. Once there was a famous Brahman named Mändavya. He did Tapas (penance) for many years standing silent in front of his Árama, under a tree, raising his hands in prayer. At that time some thieves happened to pass by that place, with stolen property belonging to the King. Finding that the King's men were pursuing them, the thieves fled away leaving their stolen property in Mandavya's Árama. The King's men seized Mandavya with the king's property. Even prolonged and repeated questionings did not bring out a single word from Mandavya. At last the thieves were caught. Mándavya had told them how the thieves took all of them to the place of execution and stuck them up at the tip of a trident (Sila). The thieves died, but even after a long time Mandavya did not die. In Mahabhárata, Anuśāsana Parva, Verses 46-53, it is said that at this stage Siva appeared and blessed him with longevity and then vanished. Several Munis in the shape of birds came near Mändavya who was lying on the trident and made enquiries about him. The King came to know of all these stories. Full of repentance, he went and begged pardon of Mändavya. The attempt to pull out the trident from Mändavya's body failed. At last it was removed by cutting it off. Since the tip (Ani) of the trident was left behind in his body he was thereafter known as "Ani Mändavya" (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 107).

2) Curse or Dharma. After going about in the world for many years with the tip of the trident in his body, Ani Mändavya once asked Dharma: "Oh Lord, why is it that an innocent man like me is afflicted with the trident?" Dharma answered: "In your boyhood you once caught small birds and pierced them with a grass reed. It is a result of that sin that you have been pierced with the trident." Mändavya replied: "The Srasas ordain that there shall be no punishment for sins committed in the age of twelve. Therefore the punishment inflicted on me is wrong. As the murder of a Brahman is a greater sin than any other murder, may you be born as a man in the Sídra Caste." By the above curse of Mändavya, Dharma was born a son of a Sídra woman. It was this child who later on became the renowned Vidura of the Mahábharata. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 107).

3) The story of how the Sun did not rise. When Ani Mändavya lay on the tip of the trident another event happened. Atri Muni's son Ugrásravas was the husband of Silavati. No other woman had so far surpassed Silavati in her fidelity to her husband. Once Ugrásravas happened to fall ill. He expressed his desire to visit a prostitute's house. As he was too weak he could not walk. The devoted wife Silavati carried him on her own shoulders and took him to the prostitute's house. They were passing near the place where Ani Mändavya was lying on the trident. Coming to know of the matter, Mändavya pronounced a curse that Ugrásravas should die before sunrise. Silavati shuddered on hearing this. Fearing that she would be widowed by the death of Ugrásravas, she, in her turn, pronounced a curse that the Sun should not rise again.

Next day the sun did not rise. All activities came to a standstill. At last the gods approached Atri Muni. They in need Anasuya, Atri's wife to persuade Silavati to withdraw her curse. Then the sun rose again and Ugrásravas died. (Brahmanda Purãna, Chapter 42).

4) Other details. When the Pandavas were living in Hastinapura, Sri Krishna once paid a visit to them. On his way he met with certain munis. Among them was Ani Mändavya also. (M.B., Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83).

5) Once the King of Vedha told Mändavya that the world is transient and advised him to strive for spiritual peace. Ani Mändavya who was pleased with the King's advice attained moksha (salvation) at once. (M.B., Sisú Parva, Chapter 276, Verses 3-14).

ANIMIŚA. Verse 10, Chapter 101 of Udyoga Parva refers to one Anushaka, son of Gacuda. Also the word is used as a synonym of Siva (M.B., Anushka Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 14, and of Visnu. (M.B., Anushka Parva, Chapter 149, Verse 36).
ANIRUDDHA. Grandson of Sri Krishna
1) Genealogy. From Visnu was born in this order : Brahmā, Ati, Candra, Buddha, Pātāra-vāna, Ayus, Naḥusa, Yayati, Yadu, Simasrajatt, Satrajit, Hṛṣyavak, Dharma, Kunti, Bhadrāskṣa, Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa-gaṇi, Arjuna, Jayadtra, Tagajjanga, Vihiṣṭas, Ananta, Durjaya, Yudhajit, Sinī, Suyaka, Sītyaka, Jaya, Kṛṣṇa, Amatāra, Priyā, Citarama, Vidrāstra, Śrī, Śiṅa, Bhaja, Hirika, Śrāasanā, Vasiṣṭha, Śrī kuṣa, Prādhyāna, Aniruddha
2) Birth. Śri kuṣa had 16008 waves Out of the 16008 from kuṣa was born Prādhyāna, and from Prādhyāna, Aniruddha
3) Kidnapped by Usā. One of the stories about this handsome prince refers to his being kidnapped by Usā daughter of Bhūsara. Bhūsara, chief among the 100 sons of emperor Mahākha had 100000 hands. Śvā pleased by the sacrificial devotion of Eṣuṣa granted, as requested by him, the boon that he himself (Śvā) and Prāvati would guard the fort of the Aṣura, of course with some reluctance. Now none had the prowess to attack this valiant Asura. Overflying with consent at this he challenged Śvā to a fight. Śvā foretold that the flagstaff of Bānu would one day be broken and that the powerful antagonist would defeat him. Bānu impatiently awaited the threatened day. One day Usā happened to witness the scene of Śvā and Prāvati engaged in love-making. Exalted by the sight Usā too desired to enact such a scene with a lover, and she hastened her descent to Prāvati. Prāvati told her that Usā would, within three days, see a dream a handsome prince with whom she might make love. Accordingly, dressed herself in all glory with chosen ornaments Usā awaited the happy day. On the third day a handsome prince appeared before her in her dream. Waking up, she began crying. Seeing Usā crying, Citara-khe, her companion, and daughter of her father's minister, assisted her (Usā), that whoever might be the prince who appeared in her dream shall be brought before the power of Mahākha. Citara-khe drew the pictures of all princes known to her and showed them to Usā. The pictures represented all handsome men from Devas to men. “No, this is not my prince choosing” was Usā’s reply. Then Citara-khe drew the picture of Śri kuṣa of Prādhyāna, and then of Aniruddha When Usā saw Aniruddha’s picture she stretched her hands to embrace that. It was this prince who had appeared before her in her dream. Next night Citara-khe, by the power of her Mantra, brought into Usā’s room from Dvāraka Aniruddha, who was then in his sleep. While Usā and Aniruddha were thus together in the room her father, Bānu, got scent of it and took Aniruddha into custody. The disappearance of Aniruddha brought much commotion in Dvāraka. Then Nārada reached Dvāraka and gave details about the Aniruddha incident Śri kuṣa and Prādhyāna, in all rage, hurried to Bānu’s palace and encircled his palace with a strong army. Then did Bānu’s flagstaff break into two end fell down. The fierce fight, that ensued ended in the defeat of Bānu. Aniruddha married Usā and the elated couple started for Dvāraka. Vajra was the son of Aniruddha. (Dhākṣeyara, Dūnantam Śrāsana, Chapters 61, 62 and 63)
4) More information. (1) It was at the feet of Arjuna that Aniruddha mastered the Dhanurveda (Science of warfare). (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 36)
(2) Aniruddha is also conceived in the forms of Viṣṇu and Brahmā. (M.B., Bhīma Parva, Chapter 65, Verses 69 and 70)
(3) Brahmā was born from the abdominal centre of Aniruddha when the latter had taken the form of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 34, Verses 13-17)
(4) The word Aniruddha is also used as a synonym of Viṣṇu. (M.B., Anāśa Parva, Chapter 146, Verse 33)

ANIRUDDHA II. The Mahābhārata refers to another Aniruddha who belonged to the Viṣṇu dynasty. Both the Aniruddhas were present at the wedding of Pāthcer (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 145, Verses 17-20).

ANIRUDDHA III. The Mahābhārata mentions yet another king Aniruddha. He did not eat flesh (M.B., Anāśa Parva, Chapter 146).

ANJALIKAŚRAṢA. This is a sacred place. One who lives at this Tīrtha for some time, gets the benefit of visiting the sacred tīrtha at Kānyakumāri ten times. (M.B., Anāśa Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 52).

ANJALIKĀVEŚHA(M). This is an art by which an elephant could be made to stand submissive. Bhīma and his horse mastered this art. (M.B., Duṣṣa Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 23).

ANJANA. 1) Mother of Hānūmān—Wife of Kesari, the noble monkey and daughter of Kuṣāna, the monkey leader. She was the mother of Hānūmān. Once while Śvā and Prāvati were gambling in the guise of monkeys, rambling through the woods, Prāvati became pregnant. That pregnancy was given to Śvā. At that time Anjana was doing penance for an one Vāyu transferred the pregnancy he had received from Prāvati to Anjana. Thus Anjana gave birth to Hānūmān. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiskindha Kanda, Sarga 66).

Anjana gave birth to Hanuman in the woods in a valley on the southern side of Mahāmeru. She was frightened at the sight of the child, shitting like the son. Hanumana looked so sad and said to Hanumana; “Monkeys are fond of red ripe fruits Therefore eat whatever you find in red colour.” Saying this Anjana transformed herself into a goddess and went to Heaven.

ANJANA. 2) Pāṇḍavajna (Previous Birth). In her previous birth Anjana was a goddess named Puṣṭikastalā (Māṅgarā). As a result of a curse, this godness was born as a six-monkey in the Hānūmāya region. With the birth of Hanumana, the curse was lifted. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa) For more details see “Puṣṭikastalā”

ANJANA. This is an elephant belonging to the Asuras. His origin is in the family of Ṛṣireṇa. The other three elephants born in this family are: Aravāna, Vayasana and Kuṇadha. (118 Verse 9 was not the Airavata of Devendra) There are references to Rākṣasas coming to the battle-field on the back of elephants. There is another mention of Anjana the elephant standing in the battle-field. (M.B., Udāyoga Parva, Chapter 99, Verse 15; Bhīma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 57; Duṣṣa Parva, Chapter 112, Verse 32)

ANJANA(M). This is the name of a mountain. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 15).

ANJANA PARVAN. He was the son of Ghatotkaca and grandson of Bhīmashena. For genealogy, see BHĪMA-SENA. (M.B., Udāyoga Parva, Chapter 194, Verse 20)
ANUTRA

Aśvarthānā, the son of Drona, killed Aṭṭhanaparva, B. 6, (Bhāma Parva, Chapter 136, Verse 89).

ANUTRA I. Son born to Hriṇaśa by Adharmā. (Vīṣṇu Parāṇa, Chapter 201).

ANKIAM (ASAYA). Hrusa, the wife of Adharmā, gave birth to daughters, Anuta and Nirkita, and from them were born Bhaya, Narakā, Māyā and Vedamā. And, Māyā begot Mṛtyu, the killer of all living beings. ARA (RAJASA) Daughter of Sukra mahārṣi. Iksvāku had three sons, Daṇḍa, Viśukṣa and Nimi. After his father's death Dāndha became king of the country between the Vindhyā and the Himaṇḍas. In the course of a hunting expedition once Dāndha saw and immediately attracted, by the charms of Arā, daughter of Sukra mahārṣi. He committed rape on her and she told her father about the attack by Dāndha. The Mahāra asked his daughter to do tapas, and further told her that he would burn Dāndha's kingdom by a rain of fire. Arā did tapas, and at the behest of the Mahāra Indra destroyed Dāndha's kingdom by a downpour of a rain of fire. Afterwards this place became a terrible forest where neither birds nor animals lived, and came to be known as Dāndakāranya. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

ARAKKILLAM. (Palace of wax). Both the Kaurava and the Pāṇḍava princes lived in Hastinapura. The Pāṇḍavas became experts in archery, and their exemplary character and conduct made them, so to say, the apple of their eyes to the people. This evoked great jealousy in Duryodhana who made up his mind to completely ruin the Pāṇḍavas somehow or other. Duryodhana, with Dhrūrākṣa's consent, built a new palace at Vrānavāt. Though many others did not know that the palace was made of wax the Pāṇḍavas, from secret information knew the fact. But, they only pretended ignorance. Duryodhana and his minister Puroçana, saw to it that the Pāṇḍavas shifted their residence to the waxen palace. Duryodhana had planned to set fire to the palace and burn in death the Pāṇḍavas. But, the shrewd Vidura through his messenger Kanaka gave notice of the conspiracy to the Pāṇḍavas just in time. One night Puroçana set fire to the waxen palace, but the Pāṇḍavas escaped by a secret passage, which the architect of the palace had made while constructing it, and about which the Pāṇḍavas had previous knowledge. The same night a huntsman, with his five children, was also staying in the palace. As they were unconscious with heavy dosage of liquor they could not escape the fire. Those six people, and accidentally Puroçana too were burnt to death. People, who gathered at the spot, saw seven corpses, and the news was broad that the Pāṇḍavas, including their wife Pāñcalī and their mother had been burnt to death. This incident took place one year after the Pāṇḍavas had shifted their residence to the waxen palace. (M.B., Arj Parva, Chapters 141-151).

ARAYANNA. The swan (Hamsa).

1) General. A bird (Hamsa) in Devaana. The prefix ‘ara’ denotes royalty, sublimity, greatness etc. Many puranas describe Arayannam as a bird of the Devas. Mānasarasas at the heights of the Himsāyas is the permanent abode of these divine birds. They do not like the rainy season. So they come down to the earth when rain begins at the Mānasarasas, and go back to the heavens when the earth dries up. This phenomenon explains Cetacari’s (Malayalam poet) statement in his Kṛṣṇagatī that ‘when rain set in hamsas—Arayannam—began flying away’.

2) Orign. Kaṇa, the son of Bhrāma, married the eight daughters of Daśaka. Tūrī became one of them. Tūrī bore five daughters Kṛṣṇa, Bhūṣa, Śyanti, Bhūmatā and Suṣmā. Śyanti gave birth to the kite, Bhārata, to the Hamsa, and the Kṛṣṇa and Suṣmā the Sukas (ducks). Koṇa or the Cakravāki bird is the sister of Hamsa. This is how the Arayannam and the Cakravāki got Devata (divinity). (Vālmikī Rāmāyanam, Arayakāṇḍa, Canto 14).

3) Bhūma and the Arayannam. Śīṇḍapāla, before his death, blabbered a lot of unbecoming things about Bhūma, who was udiśī to his (Śīṇḍapāla’s) enemies and, in relented the story of an Arayannam to elucidate the stand taken by the aged Bhūma. An aged Hamsa (Arayannam) which once dwelt on the seashore preached to all the other birds much about ethical actions. The birds felt great respect for the Arayannam. They flew across the sea in search of prey after entrusting their eggs to the Arayannam. The other birds, when saw the eggs, were afraid of the intelligent bird among the lot, and when it looked for the eggs they were not to be found. That bird informed its colleagues about the treacherous conduct of the Arayannam. The birds organized themselves and attacked the Arayannam to death. Oh! Bhūma, the same will be your end also. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 41, Verses 39-41).

4) Nala and Arayannam. While Nala, the prince of the Nāpadha kingdom was resting in a garden he saw an Arayannam in a tank there. Out of curiosity pleasure Nala caught it, but seeing its mental terror he let it free. Out of gratitude for this generous act, the Arayannam played the role of the messenger for Nala to get his wife Damayanti, the very beautiful daughter of the King of Vidarbha. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 41, Verses 39-41).

5) How the Arayannam (Hamsa) got the white colour. Once king Marutta was conducting the Māheśvara Satra (a yāga) and Devas like Indra came down to receive their share of the Havis (oblations in the sacrificial fire). And, this was the time when Ravaṇa with his attendants was on his triumphal tour. Hearing that the Devas were in the Arayannam, Marutta, Ravaṇa also went there, and Indra and the other Devas, trembling with fear, assumed different disguises and hid themselves away. Indra assumed the guise of the peacock, Yama of the crown, Kubera of the chameleon and Varuṇa of the Arayannam. Thus beguiled Ravaṇa went on his own way. The Devas, who thus escaped being the family of those birds whose forms they assumed, Indra shaped the blue feathers of the peacock with mixed colours and eyes like his own. Moreover, he blessed them that they would never be affected with any disease, and that they would dance with their feathers spread when rain set in. Yamadharmas blessed the crowns that they would get the offerings made on earth by men to their departed ancestors. And Bhagavan Varuna told the Rāja-Hamsas: ‘I escaped the clutches of Rāvana by assuming your shape and form. Therefore, be thee, who are now black and white, in future as purely white as milk’. Kubera blessed the Chameleon with capacity to change colour as and how it pleased, and also for its cheeks to appear golden in colour to the onlookers. After thus blessing the birds the Devas disappeared. (Uttara Rāmāyanam).

ARUBDA. An Asura. Indra killed this Asura. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 10, Śūkta 51).

ARIMEJAYA. A Rāja of the Pūru dynasty. (See Pūru dynasty). (Agni Purāna, Chapter 278).

ARISṬA. Wife of Kaṇa. The Gandharvas were born of her. (Agni Purāna, Chapter 19, M.B., Aśvā Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 4).

ARISṬA (ARISṬAKA). An asura, a servant of Kamsa. Once, at the instance of Kamsa he went to Gokula disguised as an ox to kill Śrī Kṛṣṇa. The ox instilled terror in people by tearing to pieces hills and mountains.
ARISTANEMA (ARISTANEMI)

with its horns and bellowing like hell. But Sri Krishna faced the beast, and raised his bow and hit it with the thousand yojanas away. And the beast died. At the time of death it regained its former form from as Ausra (Bhagavata, Dasaana, Skandha, Chapter 37).

ARISTANEMA (ARISTANEMI): (See Aristanemi).

ARISTANEMI: One of the sons of Vinata.
1) Genealogy. Vianu, Brahma, Kayapa and Aristanemi. Kayapa had a daughter Daksa. Suki was her daughter. Suki had a daughter Nata and she was a daughter of Vianu. Aristanemi, Turkish, Annata, Gavinda, Par一部分 and Sri Varam were the children of Vinita (M.B., Aria Pariva, Chapter 65, Verse 40).
2) Tapadhikarna. Aristanemi. His son was once performing tapa in the forest. The son was impressed in meditation clad in the skin of a deer thus looking like a deer. Parapinayana, the King of Hetha, who happened at the time to be hunting in the forest discharged his arrow against the son of Aristanemi taking him for a deer. When the king found out the real fact, he felt extremely sorry, and he craved pardon of the boy’s father for unwittingly killing his son. Then Aristanemi pointing out his son who was standing aside from the King. "This is the boy whom you killed," he said. The King was naturally wonder-struck. But Aristanemi told the King that there was nothing to grieve at in the case as nobody would be able to kill them because their Tapadahikarna was so great. The King felt so happy at this, and returned to his palace after prostrating at the feet of the sage. (M.B., Aranya Parva, Chapter 45).
3) Some other details. (1) Subati, wife of King Sakara of the Sola dynasty, was the daughter of Aristanemi. (Ramanayana, Malakanda, Canto 30, Verse 46). (2) Kayapa had the synonym Aristanemi also. ARISTANEMI VI. A king Realising the transient nature of worldly life, he gave up his kingdom and went to and did tapas at Mount Gandhamadana. Indra was very much pleased at this and sent a messenger with a yamana (exemplary), to conduct the king to Svarag heaven. When he was told that there was no Svarag also the status of being high or low, and fall happened when the effect of good actions decreased, the king gave up his desire for Svarag and sent back Indra’s messenger. Then Indra sent the king with a messenger to the Apsara of Vilmukti so that he might gain spiritual knowledge. Vilmukti consoled the king with the advice that the telling, hearing and pondering over the story of the Ramayana alone would be enough to get eternal salvation. (Yogavaisnabham).

ARJUNA. The third of the Pandavas.
2) Previous birth. Arjuna and Sri Krishna are often referred to as Narakaryanasa (Nara and Narayana). In their previous life they were two Raks called Nara and Narayana, and from that time onwards they lived as inseparable companions and sons of the same parents. They entered Mahasamadhi at Badaryakarna in the Himlayas. Of the two Narakaryanasa was a partial incarnation of Vimala Ramanayana. However, Arjuna has the following to say. “Dharma had his origin in the heart of Brahma, and he earned great reputation for truthfulness and adherence to Vedic dharma. He married the daughters of Daksa. Dharma had four sons. Hari, Krsna, Nara and Narayana. Of the four sons Hari and Krsna became great yogis, and Nara and Narayana, great tapaswas, and Arjuna and Vimala Ramanayana has the following to say. “Dharma had his origin in the heart of Brahma, and he earned great reputation for truthfulness and adherence to Vedic dharma. He married the daughters of Daksa. Dharma had four sons. Hari, Krsna, Nara and Narayana. Of the four sons Hari and Krsna became great yogis, and Nara and Narayana, great tapaswas. Of the four Arjuna and Vimala Ramanayana occupied a place in the council of Yama.” (M.B., Saha Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 9).

3) Birth. To Victravirya son of Santanu was born Duryodhana by Ambikata, and Pandu by Ambalika. Pandu had two wives. Kunti and Madri. The curse of a Mani made physically impossible for Pandu (see Pandu). Kunti, before her marriage had attended on Maharsi Durvasas who pleased with her service made a gift of five mantras to her. The effect of the mantras was that Kunti would become mother of a son from him: whom she was thinking while she repeated the mantra. As soon as she got the mantras she retired to a solitary place and thinking of the Sun God repeated the first mantra. At once Subhadra appeared and Karna was born to her by him. After assuring her that the incantation would not affect her chastity Sivya disappeared. Kunti abandoned the child to float in the river Ganga, and stayed with Pandu keeping the other four mantras in herself. Since Pandu could not contact the body of his wives, with his permission Kunti began practising the other four mantras one by one. By his four mantras she got three sons. Dharmaputra from Kala, Arjuna from Indra and Bhimasceta from the word God (Viyu). The remaining one mantra Kunti gave to Madri. She repeated it thinking of the Atmala Devas, and two sons, Nakula and Sahadeva were born to her. (M.B., Aria Parva, Chapter 63 onwards).

4) Festival of birth. At the birth of Arjuna Kunti heard a heavenly voice declare as follows: “Oh! Kunti, your son will be equal to Siva in prowess and unconquerable just as Indra is. After defeating all the kings he will perform the Avasamedha thrice. He will please

Śiva and get the great weapon called Pāṇḍava from him. On the order of Indra he will kill Nāyakaśuras. Hearing the above prophecy the Devas played sweet music and flowers were showered from the sky. The Saptarṣi, Prajāpati and other sages arrayed themselves in the sky. Thus, all animate and inanimate objects celebrated the birth of Arjuna.

3) Namak. Sages from the top of the Śaṅkumā mountain came together to perform the auspicious ceremony of Arjuna. While enumerating the various names of Arjuna, it is said in the Vīṇāś Parva that Kṛṣṇa was the name Pāṇḍu gave to his son (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 123, Verse 20).

4) Childhood. The Pandavas spent their childhood at Hastinapura with the Kauravas. Then Arjuna studied the art and science of using weapons, dance, music etc. along with the other boys. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 125, Verse 1). Kavya, the high priest of Vasudeva did for Arjuna the usual Sāmkṣaṇa like Upanayanā (wearing of the holy thread) etc. Arjuna was taught the first lessons in Dhanurveda (Science of archery) by Kāraṇa. Suka. Afterwards, Kṛṣṇa became the preceptor of the Pāṇḍavas in Dhanurveda, and it was through him that Kṛṣṇa taught them. There is a particular story about Droṇacharya about his guru. (See Droṇa)

5) Spiritual favour of Droṇa. Arjuna showed very great interest in the science of the use of weapons. Droṇa, the master, wanted to teach Bhāvānāhā, his son, certain special things, and he began sending all his disciples to fetch water Bhāvānāhā used to be the first to return with the water, and before the others returned Droṇa began teaching Bhāvānāhā special lessons. Arjuna came to understand this programme and he began returning with water along with Bhāvānāhā. Then the guru began teaching the special things to both Bhāvānāhā and Arjuna. Droṇa instructed the cook not to serve Arjuna food in the darkness. While Arjuna was once taking his food, wind blew out the burning lamp, and Arjuna alone continued eating. Because of constant wandering, Arjuna was quite unaware about the position of the hand and the mouth in the process of eating, and Arjuna suffered from this that archery also could be practiced in darkness. He began practising them. The guru came to know of it, and witnessing Arjuna’s performance praised Arjuna as a unique archer. (Bhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 132).

6) Arjuna’s finger was cut. Arjuna, son of Hurvādhanus, King of the Nā⇌sas (a tribe of hunters, forestmen) approached Droṇa to learn the science of the use of weapons. Droṇa, the Brahmīn, refused the prayer of this prince of the forest tribe. Ekālavyā, after practically at the feet of Droṇa returned to the woods, made an image of Droṇa with earth and meditating upon it as guru began practising the use of weapons. The Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas went hunting in the forest. Seeing there Ekālavyā with his matted hair and clad in deer skin the hunting dogs began barking at him. Ekālavyā shot into the mouth of the dog seven arrows at one and the same moment. With the arrows thrust in the mouth the dogs ran back to the Pāṇḍavas and that found out the culprit, Ekālavyā, who claimed himself to be a disciple of Droṇa. Outraged and affected by this claim Arjuna hurried up to Droṇa and said: “You had pronounced me to be your foremost disciple without an equal. But, today Ekālavyā, another disciple of yours has relegated me to the second place”. Thereupon Droṇa went and said: Ekālavyā in the forest, Ekālavyā, in all devotion stood up and saluted the guru. And the guru said as follows: “Oh! Ekālavyā if thou art my disciple give me the dákaṇḍa (hawk) due to the guru, and I desire to get the thumb of your right hand as my leg”. At once Ekālavyā cut his thumb and gave it to Droṇa. Henceforth Arjuna became Droṇa’s unequalled disciple. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 132).

7) Arjuna got Brahmaśāstra. When once Droṇa and his disciples were bathing in the river Ganga, a whale caught hold of the leg of the guru. The combined efforts of the disciples failed to extricate the leg from the grasp of the whale. Ultimately Arjuna shot an arrow and released the guru’s leg. Greatly pleased at this Droṇa imparted to Arjuna knowledge about Brahmaśāstra and Arjuna was enjoined not to use the astra against them, but to use it only when confronting beings than men. (Bhārata, Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 133)

8) Competition in archery. When the training of the princes was almost over Dhrtaśūrīya decided to have a rehearsal of their attainments, and the scene in effect also set. The princes with bows and arrows appeared on the scene. Yudhīśhūrīya and others first exhibited their skill in shooting arrows in the order of their seniority. Every scene was explained to Droṇa by Vidūra and to Gandharī by Śāhaviya. Durvodana and Bhūma clashed with each other. Bhāvānāhā pacified them and kept them apart. And, then Arjuna and Karna appeared on the scene, and the onlookers declared them to be equal in skill in archery. When their shooting exhibition was over, Karna who got angry again rushed to the stage. Arjuna also got ready. Arjuna challenged Karṇa’s eligibility on the ground that he was low-born and not a Kṛṣṇa. At once Durvodana proclaimed him as the King of Arjuna. Though this justified the scene, this competition in archery served much to make the Kauravas and the Pandavas the interest of enemies (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapters 136, 137).

9) Arjuna’s gurudakṣaṇa (Offering of fees to the preceptor). At the starting of training the princes Droṇa told them: “I have one thing to remind and you must do it for me when you have completed the course of training. All the disciples except Arjuna kept silent at this, but Arjuna promised to fulfill the guru’s wish at the proper time.

The training was over, and it was time for gurudakṣaṇa. Droṇa asked to be brought bound before him Drupada, King of Pāṇḍāla. (For Droṇa’s entry towards Druḍapada see Drupada). Thereupon the Pandavas marched to Pāṇḍāla, and in a fierce battle Arjuna defeated Druḍapada. Though Bhūma tried to kill Drupada Arjuna did not permit it, but took him bound to Droṇa. This enraged Droṇa’s hatred towards Drupada, who now gifted half his kingdom to Droṇa. Droṇa was very much pleased with Arjuna for the above act, and advised him to fight even him (Droṇa) if the latter opposed him (Arjuna). To this Arjuna replied “Yes”, (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 139, Verse 14). With this promise to fight even the guru in case the guru attacked him Arjuna became the most reputed archer in Bhārata.
12)  Jetastra of Dhararastra. After the gurudakshina Arjuna made a war against the neighbouring kingdom. He defeated King Babhruvahana, the King of Vatavan, and the King Sadanika, Vaghula and Sumitra. These victories of Arjuna made the Pandavas very anxious, Dhararastra brooded over it (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 136, Verses 29-36).

13)  The fire from the seven palaces. Duryodhana made it his aim to destroy the Pandavas somehow or another. To this end the Pandavas to shift their residence to the palace made of wood at Varanavata, and one year after the palace was set fire. The Pandavas escaped the fire through a tunnel and entered the forest, the next day (Sri Sthiikantha).

14)  Arjuna on the bank of river Ganga. The Pandavas walked and wandered through the forest after midnight reached the banks of the Ganga. At that time Angaraka (Chitragupta), the Gandharva was enjoying his fame in the river with some Apsara women. The presence of men at the scene, the Gandharva did not wish Arjuna and the Pandavas crossed in water, which led to a duel. In the duel the Gandharva was defeated. As the wife of the Gandharva prayed with tears to its husband to save her life. ThePortland Gandharva told the Pandavas many interesting stories. He also made a present of divine horses and imparted to them the cosmic knowledge called Gaksamulu. The Gandharva finally told the Pandavas that they were attacked because they came without Agni and Aham in their horse. He also explained the fact that Arjuna could substitute him on account of his (Arjuna’s) agni and aham and went back to his abode (Chitrasthara).

15)  Parasara converses with Chitrasthara, during his talk with the Gandharvas had pointed out to them the need to have a priest to lead and guide them in all matters, and accordingly they invited Bhishma and Akrura and installed the Mahatma Bhishma as their priest. With utmost devotion thousands of people on their way to the Varanavata (marriage by open choice) of Lady Karna’s (daughter of the King) lady, the Pandavas also followed the crowd Veda Vyas, whom the Pandavas met on their way before them King Drupada wished to give his daughter Kauru in marriage to Arjuna. The news that the lady was killed to death in the palace of was given to Draupada. Yet he had made arrangements for a wedding ceremony at the Varanavata. A tremendous bow was got ready and installed on the ground and a machine constructed which was kept covered in the air. The target was placed inside the machine and then Draupada spoke thus: “My daughter will be married to him who will bend the bow and with the first arrow hit the target placed inside the bow. If he fails to do so, he will be slain.” Arjuna agreed to the challenge.

16)  Drupada lost the bow and hit the target very easily. Draupada put the wedding garland in Arjuna’s neck. When the Pandavas returned to their mother with the garland the wife of the mother from his home said: “What you have got today, I can see that you enjoy among yourselves.” Kunti said thus under the impression that what her sons had got was some Bhagya. At any rate, in obedience to the above injunction of the mother Bhagya became wife to the five Pandavas. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapters 180, 191).

17)  Arjuna at Indraprastha. The city of Indraprastha was built by the Pandavas, and the city was built by the Pandavas and the Pandavas installed in a new palace built at the place called Indraprastha (Indraprastha). Drupada ruled a part of the country with Indraprastha as capital. Nârika went there and advised the Pandavas to guard themselves against marauding quarrists, the five of them claimed one and the same woman as wife. Therefore it was set forth that the Pandavas would live with each husband in turn for one year. It was also settled that during a particular year if any other husband than the one whose turn it was to live with Bhagya saw her at the intruder was to go on a pilgrimage for one year. Once a brahman came to the palace, complaining that his cows were stolen by thieves, and Arjuna was invited to help him. Arjuna did so without remembering that all his weapons were stored in Dharma-prata’s palace. That year Bhagya was living with Dharma-prata. Forgetting the fact Arjuna went to Dharma-prata’s palace, got his weapons and helped the brahman. For thus breaking the rule Arjuna left his palace on a pilgrimage for one year.

17A)  Arjuna married Ulspi and Citravatika. Arjuna with his bow and arrows went into the forest. Many brahmans followed him. Arjuna reached the banks of the Ganga and entered the waters for a bath. Here Arjuna was attracted by Ulspi, daughter of the Naga King and he married her. A son was born to them called Irsh Advances. After visiting Varanavata, the Bhagirathi Arjuna reached Manipura. He married Citravatika, daughter of Citravatika, King of Manipura. After a stay of three months there he went southwards. Citravatika gave birth to a son named Babhrutavahan.

17B)  The mark on Arjuna’s forehead is Hanuman, and the following story is attached to it. Arjuna, once during a tour of the country was much surprised to see the Dam constructed by Sri Rama’s army and Arjuna agreed to a bet that if a monkey broke the dam, made by Arjuna he would end his life by jumping into fire, and if the monkey could not break the dam it would end for ever be Arjuna’s slave. Arjuna constructed a dam with arrows. As, as soon as the monkey set foot on it it was broken. Arjuna tried again. Though now it caused some efforts on the part of the monkey the dam broke. This time also, Arjuna was thus left with no alternative but to die by jumping into fire and a fire was accordingly lit. Before Arjuna jumped into the fire a brahmin boy, who was bathing in the river ran... upto Arjuna and told him that his attempt at self annihilation was not justified as he was made without an arbor. When Arjuna who was very much to burst his head, the boy said: "If you are very insistent about it you (Arjuna and the monkey) compete once again with me as arbiter. This suggestion of the boy was accepted. The monkey child tried his best to break the dam, but it failed. It developed into the size of a mountain and jumped on the dam. Even then it did not break. Then he ran up to the boy who was acting as arbiter and prostrated at his feet crying 'Rama, Rama'. At the same moment Arjuna also prostrated before the boy crying 'Sri Krishna, slave to devotees'. The boy asked both of them to get up, and after admonishing them for their conceit gave them good advice. He also asked the monkey child to keep his word by remaining as the emblem of Arjuna's flag. (The monkey boy was actually Hanuman and the Brahmin boy Sri Krsna.)

17 C) Arjuna married Subhadra. Arjuna went to the holy place called Subhadra's Ghat and described the woman named Vargi from the case she was being suffered under. Vargi, who was very young and regrettably passing away, was told to come and attend the ceremony. Gokarna and Prabhuna, who were there, met Gada, brother of Sri Krsna. Gada described to Arjuna the great beauty of his sister, Subhadra. Arjuna went to Dwarka and paid his respects to Sri Krsna. A few days later the Yadavas celebrated a great festival at Mount Kailasa. Arjuna went there disguised as a Samyag and forcibly took away Subhadra with him with the presence of Sri Krsna. The two went to garrison and lived in the forest, for a fight they were ultimately pacified, and Subhadra was married to Arjuna. (M.B., Adiv Parva, Chapter 218-224.)

17 D) Brahma by saved. When once Arjuna was in Dwarka with Sri Krsna a brahmin appeared on the scene lamenting that his child died as soon as it was born. Nobody could understand how the child died, and Arjuna rose up and assured protection to the next child to be born to the brahmin and asked him to return home in peace. Arjuna also vowed that he would end his life by jumping into fire if he failed to protect the next child of the brahmin.

As the time for the delivery of his wife approached the brahmin took Arjuna home. Arjuna made the house secure by making an enclosure with his arrows. Yet the child died; not only that, at the time of birth itself its body disappeared. And, the brahmin heaped insults on Arjuna, who looked very foolish. Rendered thus an object of ridicule Arjuna began to make a fire for him to jump into. At this Sri Krsna appeared before Arjuna and prevented him from jumping into fire. And then both Krsna and Arjuna went to Vanaloka and submitted the case of the brahmin to him. Vrsam told them: "Oh! Sri Krsna and Arjuna, it was I who took away the brahmin's boys for the pleasure of seeing you both here. You may immediately return with the brahmin boys. And, Krsna and Arjuna returned with the boys to the brahmin, who now felt very happy. (Bhagavata, Dvata Parva, Chapter 89.)

17 E) Burning of Khandava forest. While Krsna and Arjuna were spending their days on the banks of river Yamuna in the summer season, Agni Bhagavatī (the fire-god) requested them to give the Khandava forest as food to him. (See Khandavadvip.) Arjuna agreed to oblige. Bhagavatī, who proceeded to Arjuna, the bow carrier Gāndiva, with a herculean bow and arrows they proved fatal. When Arjuna began burning the forest, Indra sent a heavy shower of rain. By creating a tempest with arrows Arjuna saved the forest from the rain. Arjuna killed Takṣaka's wife, cursed the Nāga called Varana and saved Maya, the architect of the. A rusa who was put up in the forest. Indra was pleased and gifted many divine arrows to Arjuna. In Maya a famous coach, Devadatta, and to Arjuna. By now the one year of the pilgrimage of Arjuna was over and he returned to Indraprastha. (M.B., Adiv Parva, Chapters 239-241.)

18) Fight between Arjuna and Sri Krsna. (See Gita, para 4.)

19) Arjuna to the forest. Maya, who escaped death in Khandava forest, in his great gratitude, went to Indraprastha, and with the permission of Bhagirathas built the Pandavas an exceptionally beautiful palace. And then the Pandavas made the conquest of all the earth, and after killing enemy kings like Jamadagni, the Kuchumaras, the Haridasas, the Ksaundinas, Ksudraka and Bhadradatta returned to Indraprastha and performed a Rajya yajña. The Kausalyas, who were not pleased with the repetition of forest life, a visit to Indraprastha. When they entered the palace built by Maya they were put into many a ludicrous situation. (See Bhandrapravāja.) Insulted and humiliated they returned to Hastinapura and challenged the Pandavas to a game of dice, and in the game the Pandavas lost not only their kingdom and other riches, but Parashurama as well. Devadatta dragged Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna to a visit to Indraprastha when they entered the forest and later to Hastinapura. According to the terms and conditions agreed to with reference to the game of dice, the Pandavas had to lead forest life for twelve years and live for seven years in the city during the period of yajña. The Pandavas again started for the forest. (M.B., Sambha Parva.)

20) Pandavas in Kamyaka forest. A number of brahmans also accompanied the Pandavas to the forest. The noble brahman, Sarntaka consoled the aggrieved Bhagiratha in the Dwara. The Pandavas were afraid of the Kamyaka forest. (M.B., Arjuna Parva, Chapter 26.)

21) Arjuna secured divine arrows. Bhagiratha asked Arjuna to do tapas in the Hantilayas and thus secure divine arrows. Accordingly Arjuna went south and saw Indra in the Indrakira mountain. Indra gave him arrows. There Arjuna killed Mahāratha. And, then Arjuna went to Mount Kailasa and prayerfully concentrated his mind on Siva. Siva appeared in the guise of a forest dweller (See Pampāvā). After that he got the Dāsādāstra from Yama, Pārśa from Varuna and Antraśāstra from Kubera. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapters 37-41.)

22) Arjuna in Indraloka. Indra, who was so pleased that Arjuna got so many divine arrows and decorated his chariot, Mātāri, to bring Arjuna to Devakot and at Devakot he learned more about archery and music. The Apsaras women forgot themselves when they saw the exceptionally handsome Arjuna. Urvaisi, maid with love, sent his messenger Ciratesa to Indra. Being told about Urvashi's love, Arjuna closed both his ears with hands, and reminded the messenger of Urvashi's maternal position with reference to him. Urvashi cursed and turned Arjuna into an eunuch. Indra coaxed Arjuna by assuring him that Urvashi's curse will turn out to be of great benefit to him. Afterwards Arjuna stayed in Devakula for a few days with Ciratesa, and during the period he killed Nvatakevaca and Kâlekeya.

Arjuna became a friend of Mahâraja Lomsha, who had gone to Devakula to see Indra. Promising Arjuna that he would protect Dharmanatura Lomsha returned to the earth. Arjuna left the Kânyaaka forest and returned to his brothers after an absence for five years. He met the brothers at Mount Gandhamâdana. (M.B., Varu Parva, Chapters 42-47).

22) Preparations: At last a witty and humorous brahmin went to Dharmanatra and dictated upon the hardships being suffered by the Pândavas, and Duryodhana and others were extremely pleased and happy to hear it. Yet, they shed crocodile tears. But, Duryodhana was in a mighty hurry to see with his own eyes the pitiable plight of the Pândavas. On the pretext of going out for hunting with Dharma and others with the permission of Dharmanatra, started for the forest with a large retinue of attendants 8,000 chariots, 30,000 elephants, the hounds of infantry soldiers, 9,000 horses, merchants, potters, housewives, thousands of hunters formed this procession into the forest. Just like roaring winds during the rainy season the procession created thunderous noise. Duryodhana approached the pool in the Dwatra forest and stopped at a distance. (M.B., Aranyâ Parva, Chapters 230, Verses 24-25).

Duryodhana and attendants put up tents in the forest. The Gandharvas obstructed Duryodhana, and he and the Gandharvas called Ciratesa clashed with each other. Duryodhana was made a prisoner. Arjuna came on the scene and released him. And, thus humiliated Duryodhana, turned to Hastinapura with the attendants. (M.B., Aranyâ Parva, Chapters 299-253).

23) Arjuna lost consciousness. While once Pachiti was alone King Jayadratha forcibly took her away. Within seconds the Pândavas confronted Jayadratha and regained Pachiti. Jayadratha and his men were killed. The Pândavas, who were very weary and tired walking in the forest felt extremely thirsty. Nakula, at the instance of Dharma, climbed a tree and looked around and sighted a pool of clear water. When Nakula went to the pool and began to draw water a voice from above was heard saying as follows: "Do not be so very daring. This is my ancestral wealth. If you answer my question you may not only drink the water but also take some with you". Without paying any heed to this warning Nakula drank water from the pool, and lo...ne fell down unconscious immediately. Sahadeva, who went to the pool in search of Nakula and drank water from the pool also met with the same fate as Nakula. Arjuna and Bhima also had the same fate at the pool. Lastily Dharma went to the pool and understanding what happened to his brothers requested permission to drink water. At once a Yaka appeared and brought the brothers of Dharma back to consciousness. In fact, the Yaka was none other than Yamadhradama. (For questions and answers of the Yaka see Dharmaaputra.) (M.B., Aranyâ Parva, Chapters 312-315).

24) Left incognito: Now the twelve years of forest life being over the Pândavas decided to spend the one year of life incognito in the Virâta palace. Arjuna disguised himself and deposited his clothes and weapons in the hollow of a Śami tree in the forest. And the Pândavas in various disguises reached the Virâta palace. They assumed false names: Dharmarâja as Kansika, Bhima as Varâsha, Arjuna as Bhramandu, Nakula as Gomukha and Sahadeva as Arjana and Draupadi as Malini. With the help of the incognito of the Pândavas one year was about to expire a rumour reached the Kauravas that the Pândavas were at the Virâta capital, and the Kauravas thought that the Pândavas will appear on the scene if a war was fought against King Virâta. The Kauravas, with this object in view, lifted the cows of Virâta and that led to war. Uttara, the prince of Virâta boasted that he would fight provided he had a good charioteer. Bhramandu (Arjuna) agreed to act as such and they started for the warfield. At the sight of the massive army of the Kauravas Uttara got frightened and tried to run away from the field. But Bhramandu tightly bound Uttara to the chariot, drove it very fast to the forest, took back from the hollow of the Śami tree his weapons and returned to the battle. The Kauravas were absolutely defeated in the war and they took to their huts. They understood that the very clever and terrible warrior in disguise was Arjuna himself. But, by the time the period of the Pândavas life incognito was over. The king of Virâta, greatly pleased over this victory in war gave his daughter, Uttara in marriage to Ahimanyu, son of Arjuna. (M.B., Virâta Parva).

25) Preparations: For one year life incognito the Pândavas returned. The Kauravas refused to give them half the Kingdom. Sri Kṛṣṇa, on behalf of the Pândavas, implored that half the kingdom or five districts or five houses or at least one house be given to them. But the Kauravas took the stand that not even an iota of land would be given to the Pândavas. And, war was performed desired upon. Duryodhana went to Kṛṣṇa at Dwārakā in request for support in war. Kṛṣṇa, who favoured the Pândavas lay in false sleep as he did not want to fight against them. Duryodhana sat at the head of Kṛṣṇa. Arjuna, who came after some time sat at the feet of Kṛṣṇa and remained there standing. Awakening from sleep, it was Arjuna whom Kṛṣṇa saw first. After the greetings were over with Arjuna, Kṛṣṇa saw Duryodhana also. Between Kṛṣṇa without any arms and the armed forces of Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna chose Kṛṣṇa and Duryodhana his armed forces to help each side in the impending war. (Udyoga Parva).

26) War: Both the Parties were encamped in Kuruksetra ready for war. Sri Kṛṣṇa acted as Charintheer to Arjuna. He stopped the chariot in between the opposing armies. Arjuna left deep unquenchable to find his own people arrayed on the opposite side for war. Reluctant to kill relations, elders, friends and preceptors Arjuna laid down his arms in the chariot. Then did Kṛṣṇa instruct him in Karmayoga (the philosophy of action). That instruction and advice of Kṛṣṇa is the world-famous Bhagavad Gītā. The Gītā cleared off Arjuna's illusions and he praised the Lord. Sri Kṛṣṇa, who revealed his all comprehensive form (Vidvṛṣṇa) to Arjuna.

On the first day of the war Arjuna fought a duel with Bhima, and the second day he fought the Kaurava forces with exceptional prowess. And Arjuna prevented Karna from killing Bhishma. But, the Kaurava army faced defeat that day. On the third day Arjuna defeated Bhishma, Avantashana, Drupada, and others. They renewed a fierce battle fight. The war lasted for 18 days. The most important incidents during the 18 days can be summarized as follows:

1. Fierce fight between Arjuna and Bhishma.
2. Fight between Arjuna and Advatasana.
3. Arjuna destroyed the Kaurava army.
4. Drupada, son of Arjuna, was killed.
5. Arjuna fought against Dropha and Sukarma.
6. They fought to kill Bhishma.
7. Sikhandi promised to kill Bhishma.
8. On the appearance of Bhishma, the Kaurava army took fright and fled. In great disarray.
10. Duell with Bhagadatta.
11. Bhagadatta killed.
12. Bhishma fainted and fell on the ground.
13. Duell with Dushasana.
14. With Sikhandi in the front made an attack on Bhishma.
15. Arjuna discharged three arrows to serve as pillow to Bhishma, the shielded from the chariot, lying on a bed of arrows.
16. Cold water sprinkled on Bhishma's face with the aid of divine arrows.
17.enguaged with Bhishma, defeated his forces.
18. Satyajit deputed to remain with Dharmanatra to help him.
19. Dakshatra killed.
20. again with Bhagadatta.
21. Suprabhakta, the elephant of Bhagadatta killed.
22. And after that, Bhagadatta also killed.
23. Vyasaka and Aceala killed by Arjuna.
25. Arjuna killed the three brothers of Karna and confronted Karna.
27. Hearing the news, Arjuna fell down unconscious.
28. Awakened, Arjuna vowed to kill Jayadratha.
29. Arjuna performed Sva Puja.
30. Arjuna dreamt that night to have paid homage to Sva along with Karna and that Sva gave him the arrows like Ashutapa.
31. Marched forth routing the elephant regiment of Dinarasana.
32. Routed Dushasana in fight.
33. Again fought Dropha, Kutavarni, Sudakshina, King of Kamboja.
34. Sudakshina killed in fight.
35. Sutras, Ayutah, Niyati, Urbashta and the Mecchaks army killed.
36. Vinda and Amvinda killed.
37. Warfield converted into a house of arrows, on account of the great collection of arrows.
38. Arjuna defeated Duryodhana.
39. Fought the nine great warriors on the Kaurava side.
40. Arjuna cut off the right hand of Bhurisravas at the instance of Karna.
41. Cut off the head of Jayadratha with arrows. The head and the arrows were thrown on the lap of Jayadratha's father.

(ARJUNA)

(21) Alambusa, King of Rakshasas killed.
(22) Dushasana killed with his elephant.
(23) Arjuna killed the brothers of Sikhandi, viz., Satrasena, Candrasena, Mitrasena, Sutramupa, Saurutti and Mitrasamrata.
(24) Difference of opinion arose between Dharmanatra and Arjuna about the failure to kill Karna, and in the heat of excitement Arjuna called his elder brother 'trout'.
(25) Immediately repenting Arjuna drew sword to kill himself. But, regained mental peace by begging pardon of the brother.
(26) Killed Vyasaka, son of Karna.
(27) Karna brought down Karna's crown by his arrow resembling the face of a serpent. Enraged at this Arjuna killed Karna.
(28) Killed Satyakshesha and Surya and others.
(29) After bowing to Vyasaka, Arjuna withdrew arrow. (M.B., Bhishma, Dropha, Karna, Satiya and Sauripaka Parva).
(30) After the war, in the great war the Kaurava army, to the very last man, was annihilated. The Pandavas assembled together. Thoughts about the future came up to Karna. Karna consoled the sorrowing Dharmanatra. As desired by Vyasa, Karna, Dharmanatra and others returned to Hastinapur and took up the reins of governing the country, and the idea of performing an Asvamedha Yaga was seriously mooted. A King named Maruta agreed to give money needed for the yajna. Arjuna defeated all enemy kings. (M.B., Santi Parva).
(31) Death and rebirth of Arjuna. On his way back after performing the yajna Arjuna was killed by the arrows of his son, Bahlruvahana. Immediately Uulpti, Arjuna's wife brought back to life her husband by Mrpantsvajayanti mantra. Then Arjuna questioned Uulpti about the reason for his son killing him, and also as to how she happened to be present at the time. Uulpti described the story of a curse in answer to Arjuna's query. (M.B., Asvamedha Parva, Chapter 79).
(32) Also a curse. Uulpti said: You shall not get angry. Yes, all is for the best. In war you killed Bhishma by unrighteous means, viz., with the help of Sikhandi. On his death, the Astavajasa and Gangadev cursed you with hell. I told about this curse to your father, who begged the Vaisas for redemption, and they said that you would be saved from this curse when your son, Bahlruvahana, killed you. Accordingly, he has been brought here to kill you.

(33) Asvamedha. Arjuna again defeated Meghasanadi, the King of Magadha, Sukanipatra and others and returned to Hastinapura, where the Asvamedha yajna was performed. The Yadava dynasty was extinguished before long. Arjuna did all the rites due to them on their death. He grieved over the departure of Sri Krsna. (Bhagavata, Skanda 11, Chapter 31). And then he went to Indraprastha with the consorts of Krsna. On the way dacoits overcame Arjuna and snatched away some of the females. Arjuna felt very sad. Then Vyasa appeared and told him that he would be strong and powerful only in the presence of Krsna. (Agni Purana, Chapter 15).

(34) Parhavas' journey to the other world. Now, it was time for the Parhavas to journey to the other world.
34. Origin of certain words. Towards the close of his life, Arjuna went to the Sutri tree to take out Gandiva, kept in its hollow. Uttara also was with Arjuna. Then Arjuna revealed himself to Uttara, and also elaborated the meaning of his various names as follows:—

I shall tell you my ten names. Arjuna, Phâlguna, Jișnu, Kiriti, Śvetavâhna, Bhiññasî, Vîjaya, Kyôsa, Sava-sasâ-sasâ, and Dhanânya. I am called Dhanânya because, even after having conquered all the lands and amassed wealth I stand in the centre of righteousness. I am called Vîjaya because in fights with haughty opponents I always succeed. I am called Śvetavâhna because white horses are harnessed in war to my chariot decked with golden ornaments. I am called Phâlguna because I was born in the month of Phâlguna under the star Phâlguna. I am Kiriti because during my fight with the Daityas I put on my head crown glowing as Sun. I am called Bhiññasî because my hand accepts in use the bow, Gandiva. I am Arjuna because in the world people are rare who possess such fair colour as I, and moreover I do only white (just and ethical) acts. I am called Jișnu, because I am unassailable and unconquerable, and I subjugate and conquer, and also because I am the son of Indra. My father gave me the tenth name of Kyôsa because I was very attractive (Kyôsa = attractive).

[Malayârâtrat (Khâyâratam)].

35. Woes of Arjuna

(1) Phâlcâlì (2) Uûnl (3) Citrâ-fâgâ (4) Subhadra.

36. Sons of Arjuna. Śrîkiriti, Śrîvân, Bâhu, Bhârata, Abhimanyu.

ARJUNA II. A son of Emperor, Nimi

One Arjuna, son of emperor Nimi, got philosophical advice from a Muni named Asita (Brâhmañâpâra, Chapter 47).

ARJUNA III. (See Kirttâvîrâjîn.)

ARJUNA IV. A member of Yama's assembly. The other members are: Kapitâloma, Trpaka, Saudiva, Vîvita, Sāva, Kṛśâva, Saśibûndu and Malâvâra. (M.B., Sâhâ Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 17).

ARJUNABHIGAMANAPARVA. A sub Parva in Mahâbhârata. (See Mahâbhârata.)

ARJUNA. A hunter. Dharmaputra was called to his side by Bhîśma, his body torn by arrows in fight and he felt very sad and sorry to see Bhîśma in that state. To console Dharmaputra Bhîśma related a story and this hunter was one of the characters in the story. The story may be summarised as follows:—

Once, the son of an old Brahmin woman Gautami, died on account of snakebite. A hunter caught and brought before Gautami the snake. His object was to kill it immediately. But the serpent proved its innocence by pleading that it hit the boy unprovoked and prompted by Death. At once death (mṛtyu) appeared on the scene and explained that it was prompted by the God of Death. And, it was the child who was responsible for the cause of death, and Gautami was the cause of the birth of the child. Ultimately Gautami herself assumed responsibility for the sin. Bhîśma consoled Dharmaputra by telling that as in the case of Gautami in the story, the cause for every effect was the chain of Karma. (M.B., Amûshâsa Parva, Chapter 1).
ARUNA NAVAVASAPARVA. A sub-parva in Mahabharata. (See Mahabharata).

ARRKKA I. A synonym of the Sun. (See Surya).

ARRKKA II. A king of olden days. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 32).

ARRKKA III. The royal sage Rukka was Aruka, the son of the Asura, reborn. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verses 32, 33).

ARRKAPARNA. Kasyapa’s son by his wife Muni. He was a Devagandhara. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 4).

ARTHAM. From the forehead of Mahavasu a golden lotus grew up from which Sri Devi was born. Dharma = righteousness and artha = wealth) also were born from Sri. From the forehead of Yama, sprang up a golden lotus and His wise spouse Sri arose there from and on. Yudhava, righteous one, came into being from Sri. (Mahabharata, Santi Parva, Chapter 59, Shansas 130 & 131).

ARUJAM. A sect among the Rakshasas. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Verse 2).

ARULIMOTHEVAR. The Saiva text of the south is called Thirumurai, and it contains twelve songs. The first seven of these songs were composed by Tiruvalluvar, sambandha, Tirumuraiyukkarar and Sundaramurti. The twelfth song is called Petiyapurana composed by Arulimothevar. He is also called Sekular. Tevar was prime minister (A.D. 1063-1112) of Cola. (Some great lives).

ARUNA I.

1) Birth. Son of Kasyapa by Vinata. Kasyapa, son of Brahman, married Vinata and Kardru and being so much pleased by their services he gave them boon. Kardru got the boon to have 1000 nagas (serpents) sons, and Vinata to have two sons more powerful and vital than the sons of Kardru. After this Kasyapa went into the forest again for Tapas. After a period, Kardru gave birth to 1000 eggs and Vinata to two. Both the mothers kept their eggs in pots, but they were in the right temperature. After 500 years the pot broke up and Kardru had her 1000 sons. Vinata felt pleased at this and opened one of her pots. A child only half-developed emerged from the egg and he was Aruna. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 16, Verses 5-7). After another 500 years the other egg of Vinata hatched itself and a glowing son emerged. He was Garuda.

2) Genealogy. While Rama and Lakshmana wandered in the forest searching for Sita they saw the wounded and disabled Jatayu. Jatayu described his genealogy as follows: "Kasyapa, son of Brahman, married the daughters of Daksha. Of the two wives, Vinata delivered two sons, Garuda and Aruna. Sambhata was Aruna’s elder son and he (Jatayu), the younger. (Vrikshi Kambayana, Arjuna, Canto 14). Agni Purana, Chapter 19 also refers to Garuda and Aruna as the sons of Vinata.

3) Aruna curses his mother. The fact of Vinata forcing open one of her eggs prematurely and Aruna emerging out of it with only a half-developed body has been mentioned above. Aruna got angry at the haste of his mother and cursed her to live for 500 years and then Garuda would redeem her from slavery. He also asked her to wait for 500 years so that the birth of another physically deficient son like himself might be avoided. After pronouncing this curse Aruna rose to the sky. This curse was the reason for Vinata’s becoming a slave of Kardru. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 18:23).

4) Aruna became charioteer of Sun. The Sun and the Moon betrayed to the Devas Rahu, who waited at the entrance of Devaloka to snatch off the Nectar (Amritam) got at the burning of the sea of milk (Kamandalu). Then, on the rise of the Sun, that phenomenon is called the eclipse (of the Sun or Moon). Surya-graha and Chandra-graha. Engaged by these frequent attacks of Rahu, the Sun-God began to start like anything. Murmuring that everyone would cooperate when there was something to be achieved, but would go on their own way when the object was achieved, the Sun-God began burning so virulently as to destroy all living forms, and the Devas were frightened. By this and took refuge in Brahma. Brahma called Aruna and asked him to stand as charioteer in front of the Sun-God everyday so that the Sun’s intensity might be reduced. From that day onwards Aruna has been functioning as the charioteer of the Sun (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 24, Verses 15-20).

5) Birth of sons. Syenari, wife of Aruna delivered two sons, Sampati and Jaya. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 71).

6) Aruna assumed female form. Sthavari, the chaste woman, once did naked Tapas to redeem her husband, Ugratapas from the consequences of a curse. The object of her tapas was to prevent the next dawn (Sunrise). Owing to the intensity of her tapas the Sun ceased to rise, and this gave his charioteer Aruna some rest. Then it was that Aruna came to know of a programme of naked dance by the women in Devaloka. Women alone were admitted to the dance hall. Aruna, therefore, assumed female form and sat among the Deva women, and the beautiful female kindled erotic sentiments in Indra and he enjoyed a night with her. Also, a son was born to them. And, before the dawn dawned Aruna, at the instance of Indra entrusted the child to Ahalyadevi and returned to join duty as the Sun-God’s charioteer. (Aruna, while he acted as Indra’s wife was called Arundidevi). Aruna was a bit late to report for duty, and when questioned by Sun he detailed the happenings during the last night. This provoked the chase in the Sun to see Aruna in female form. Aruna then told Indra also to enjoy her. This also resulted in the birth of a son, who too was, at the instance of the Sun, entrusted to Ahalyadevi. Ahalyadevi brought both the children with tender love, which Gattana muni, her husband did not like. He cursed them and turned them into monkeys. After some time Indra went to Ahalya to see his child and he was told the story of Gattana’s curse. Indra searched out both the monkeys. In view of the elder one having a long tail he was called Bali (Valli) and the neck of the second one being very beautiful, he was named Sugriva. At that time, Raksaraja, the monkey King of Kiskindha, was very unhappy because he had no sons. He came to know of Bali and Sugriva, and requested Indra to give both the monkeys to him as sons. Indra gladly obliged him. Indra blessed Bali to the effect that half the strength of anybody who attacked him would be added to his own natural power. Indra then sent him and Sugriva to Kiskindha.

ARUNA II. A king of the solar dynasty, and father of Sīva. \(\text{Devī Bhāgavata, Suparna Skandha.}\)

ARUNA III. A sage in ancient India. A community of Rāis was denoted by this name. These Rais were called Arunas. The Ajās, Piyas, Siṣitras, Keśus and Arunas—they attained Svarga by self study. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 7).

ARUBA V. A Rāi Taittirīya Aranyaka refers to him as born from the flesh of Brahmā at the time of creation.

ARUBA VI. A Banava (Aurā) born in the dynasty of Vijaputras. He did tapas for long years repeating the Gayatri mantra, and got from Brahmā the boon not to die in war. Becoming very arrogant on account of this boon he left Pātala (nether region) for the earth and deputed a messenger to challenge Indra for war. At that time a heavenly voice called out that as long as Aruna did not give up the Gayatri he could not be worried in war. Then the Devas sent Bhṛhati to Aruna to make him give up Gayatri. Aruna questioned Bhratari as to why the Devas camp had come to him (Aruna). Bhratari replied. “You and I are not different; both of us are worshippers of Gayatri Devī. Being told so Aruna gave up worship of Gayatri Devī, and she felt offended at this and sent thousands of beetles against him. Thus, without fighting Aruna and his army were exterminated (Devī Bhāgavata).

ARUBA VII. A son of Narāyana. When Narāyana was killed Aruna along with his six brothers fought against Śrī Krauṣṇa and was killed.

ARUNA I. An Apasurī woman born of Pradīp, wife of Kātyayana Pradīp and Kātyayana had the following children: Alambus, Mihrakṣa, Vidyaparīni, Tiṣṭotama, Rakṣu, Rāmnī and Mahāmahā. (M.B., Adī Parva, Chapter 95, Verses 90-91).

ARUNA II. A tributary of the river Sarasvati. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 15).

ARUNASAMGAMAM The place where Arunā falls into Sarasvati (M.B., Sāya Parva, Chapter 43, Verses 30-45).

ARUNADHIT I. Wife of Sage Vasūtha. (1) Both She was born as the daughter of Kardama Prapātita and Devulītī. (See Vasūtha.)

(2) Other information (1) Once Arundhati got suspicions about the character of Vasūtha and as a result of misunderstanding her chaste husband her beauty suffered a set-back. (M.B., Adī Parva, Chapter 232, Verse 27-29).

(2) Arundhati shone forth in Brahmac’s assembly with all... Devis like, Prudhī, Prudhī, Prajāhāri, Sūrā and Śacī (M.B., Sāya Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 41). She outhead all other chaste women in devotion to her husband. She owed her great power to her chastity and service of her husband. (M.B., Aranya Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 15).

(4) The seven great Rais once offered her an honourable seat. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 226, Verse 8).

(5) There is one story in the Mahābhārata of how Śiva once blessed Arundhati. While the seven great Rais were staying at the Himlayas it did not rain consecutively for twelve years, and the Munis suffered much without either roots or fruits to eat. Then Arundhati began a rigorous tapas, and Śiva appeared before her disguised as a brahmin. Since, due to the failure of rains, Arundhati had no food with her. She cooked food with some cheap roots and served the guest with it, and with that it rained profusely all over the land. Śiva then assumed his own form and blessed Arundhati, and from that day onwards it became a sacred spot. (M.B., Sāya Parva, Chapter 45, Verses 30-34).

(6) Arundhati once pointed out to Vrindāvānī the evils of receiving remuneration (fee). (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 45).

(7) On another occasion she spoke about the secret principles of ethics among others (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 130, Verses 3-11).

(8) Once all the Devas eulogised Arundhati and Brahmā blessed her. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 130, Verses 12 and 13).

(9) Arundhati and Vasiṣṭha did tapas at the sacred Sarasvati tirtha and entered into Samādhī. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 17).

ARUNDHATI II. A wife of Kāla (God of death). Arundhati, Vasū, Yamī, Lāmbī, Bhitī, Madhavi, Vrindāvānī, Vasiṣṭha, and Vīśā are the ten wives of Kāla. (Vṛṣṇis Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 1).

ARUNDHATI-VAJĀM A holy place. If one takes one’s bath during three days in the Sāmadra tirtha nearby and also stores one will get the results of Advamedha yaga. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 41).

ARUKU. Name given to Aruna when he attended Indra’s assembly disguised as a female. (See Aruna).

ARCHA. A river running through the island of Plaka, one of the seven islands of ancient times. The wind around ten yojanas of Plaka is very fragrant; because it carries the divine fragrance being emitted always from the bodies of Pārvatī and her attendants, who drink water from river Arunā. (Devī Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skandha).

ARVĀṢI. One of Dakṣa’s daughters. (M.B., Adī Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 46).

ARUPATTI-MURAT. “The sixty-three.” In ancient times there were sixty-three deities of Sīva in the south. They were called Nāyāmara and they have composed many famous sacred songs. Prominent among them were Tirupātisambandha, Tirunāvakarana and Sundaramūrti.

ARVĀṢI. The son of Ripunjaya (Vīśva Prāpāṇa).

ARVĀSUL An ancient Aśura who had been a luminary in the Durbar hall of King Yudhishṭhira. There is a story in the Mahābhārata showing the merits of penance of Arvāsul. This story was told by the hermit Lomāta to the Pāṇḍavas, when they arrived at the holy bath Madhughūsamāraka, during their exile in the forest. “Long ago two ascetics Raibhya and Bharadvaja had built their hermitages and lived here. A son named Yavakrita was born to Bharadvaja. To Raibhya, two sons called Arvāsul and Parāsul were born. Raibhya and his sons were learned men. Bharadvaja and Yavakrita became ascetics. Yavakrita started doing penance with a view to get the boon of learning coming to him automatically without getting it directly from Brahmās. When his penance became severe Indra appeared and told him that the boon he asked for was an impossibility and tried to dissuade him from his attempt. Yavakrita was not willing to give up penance. Later Indra came in the guise of a Brahmin to the Banks of the Ganges and began to build a dam with sand-masses. Yavakrita said that it was an impossible task. Indra said that the desire of Yavakrita also was as impossible as that. Still Yavakrita did not show any intention of drawing back. Finally Indra granted him the boon.

Yavakrita returned to the hermitage. Full of arrogance he hankered after the daughter-in-law of Raibhya. Raibhya plucked a tuft of hair from his head and put it as an offering in fire and created a giant who killed Yavakrita. Bharadvaja felt sad and cursed Raibhya that he would be killed by his son. Then with Yavakrita he jumped into the fire and died.

At that time Br幻uddhama, a Brahmin performed a sacrifice. He invited Arravasva and Paravasva as helpers. At Paravasva was going along the forest he saw his father covered with the body of a deer. It was a hint sending him to be a deer. He stealthily informed the matter to Arravasva. Arravasva went to the forest completed the funeral rites of his father and returned. Paravasva spread the rumour everywhere that Arravasva had murdered his father. In the innocence of Arravasva, nobody believed. Everyone avoided him. He became sad and forlorn and went to the forest to see the Sun. The Sun appeared before him and blessed him. He returned and brought Yavakrita, Bharadvaja and Raibhya to life again.

All these occurrences happened as in that called Madhubilasamamana. (Mahabh?arta, Aranya Parva, chapters 135, 136, 137, 138).

The report of a conversation between this hermit, and Sri Ka?ya who had been on his way to Hastinapura, is given in the Mahabh?arta, Sam? Parva, Chapter 330, Stanza 7. Arravasva also is counted among the hermits who possessed the Brightness of Brahma like Rudra. "Hermit Vasi?ha! Now I shall give their names in order. Yavakrita, Raibhya, Arravasva, Paravasva, Kek?tha, Aveiga, Bala, Adi?ra, Kavmedha, Tirthasena, Kanva; these are the Bright stars of the height of the Brightness of Brahma, praised by the world and as bright as Rudra, Fire and Vasa." (M.B., Anus?ana Parva, Chapter 130, Stanza 30, 31 & 32).

Arravasva did penance to the Sun for getting children. The Sun-God came down from his way in the sky and gave him children in Aruna directions mentioned in the Kalpa (one of the six Shrâtras or S?stras) regarding Saptami rituals. Arravasva observed them strictly and as a result he got children and wealth. This story is given in Bhavanita Pur?a, Brhma Parva).

ARYASYA. A King of the Shr?ya var?a (Solar dynasty). See the word VAMS?VALI (Genealogy).

ASAMANJASA (ASAMANJA). A King of the Solar dynasty born to Sagara. For genealogy see under SACARA.

1) Birth. There is a story about his birth in the R?m?yana. Once there was a king called Sagara in Ayodhya. He married two women named Ke?ni andSumati. For a long time they had no sons and so they went to the Himalayas and started penance there in the mount of Brgupasravasana. After a hundred years Br?gumahar?i appeared before them and pleased them thus: "Your elder wife Ke?ni will give birth to a son who will continue your dynasty and your second wife will give birth to sixty thousand children." After a few years Ke?ni gave birth to Asamajasa and Sumati to a big ball of flesh. That ball broke and sixty thousand babies came out from it. (V?m?k? Ram?yana, Bhh?k? Parva, Sarga 28).

ASAMPREKSAKARITVA. See under DEVASARMA IV.

ASAN. A holy hermit. While Sri Kesara was going to Hastinapura this hermit met him on the way. (M.B., Ayodhya Parva, Chapter 83).

ASI?KNI 1. A river flowing through the Punjab in India. This is called Chandrabhaga and also Cind (Cim). The N?go also mentions about this (M.B., Bh?sma Parva).

ASI?KNI II. A wife of Daksha. Dakparaipati, son of Brhma, commenced creation with his own mind. When he found that it was not conducive to the propagation of the species he pondered over the subject once more and decided to effect it by the sexual union of the male and the female. He, therefore, married Askin daughter of Vr?napr?japat. There is a version in the seventh Skanda of Dev Bhagavata that Virati was born of Daksha and Brhma. Then the whole Dak?praipati begat by Askin five thousand Hary?vas with a view to propagating his species and the Hary?vas also evinced great desire to increase their number. Knowing this devout N?rada of enchanting words approached them and said "Oh Hary?vas, I understand you, energetic young men; are going to continue creation. Pweh? You are children who have not cared to understand the ins and outs or ups and downs of this earth and then how do you think you can create people? You are all endowed with the power to move about on all sides without any obstruction and you are only foolish if you do not attempt to find out the limits of this earth. Hearing this they started on a tour to different sides of the earth to find out its boundaries. Just like worms fallen into the ocean the Hary?vas have never returned so far.

When he found that the Hary?vas were lost the mighty Daksha begat in the daughter of Vr?n a thousand sons called Sasud?vas. They were also devoirs of propagation but were also perplexed by the words of N?rada to follow the footsteps of their elder brothers. They denounced it among themselves and said "The words of the Maharsi are right. We must also follow the course taken by our brothers. It is wise to commence creation after knowing the size of the earth." They also went to different sides and never returned just like rivers falling into the ocean. The loss of the Sabaśivas infuriated Dakṣa and he cursed Nārada.

Again to commence creation Dakṣa got as Askī sixty gels. Of those ten he gave to Dharmadeva, thirteen to Kaṭṭāpā, twenty-seven to Soma and four to Aṛṣṭāṇumī. Two were given to Bahuputra, two to Angra and two to the scholar Kṛṣṇā. Dharmadeva’s wives were Arṇundhī, Vaṣa, Yami, Lamba, Śāṇu, Naravati, Sankalpa, Mūhārīśa, Śāndhya and Vaṣā. Of Vaṣā were born Vīṣvardevas. Śāndhya delivered the Śāṇyas, Maruva, the Maruvas and Vasu, Vasus. Bhūnas were born of Bhūna. From Muhīrāru came Muhūrīrābhīhmānī and from Lamba, Ghoṣa and from Yami, Nāgavīthi. (Chapter 13, Anuśāsana Parva 1, Vīṣṇu Purāṇa and Skanda 6, Bhāgavata).

ASIṢKRŚA. Son of Aśvamedha, a King of the Lunar dynasty. (Bhāgavata, 5th Skanda).

ASILOMA. Prime Minister of Mahārṣiva. (Devi Bhāgavata, 5th Skanda).

ASIPTA. One of the notorious twentycight hells. If you destroy forests without purpose you will go to this hell. (Chapter 6, Anuśāsana Parva 2, Vīṣṇu Purāṇa). The Debi Bhāgavata describes Asipta ravana like this: “Those who forsake their own natural and go to that of others are thrown into this hell; they die by the ordinances of Yama, the King of Death. There they will be whipped by a whip made of thorny herbs and as they run about with pain they will be followed and whipped. Gradually against the big stones there they will fall fainting and the moment they wake up from the faint they will be stabbed again. This will be repeated (Āṣṭama Skanda, Devi Bhāgavata).

ASIṬA. A celestial maiden. She had taken part in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Sloka 63, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ASIṬA I. One of the Rvīks of the Sarpasatra of Jana-meṣa

Some details. 1) The prominent Rvīks were Bhāgavata, Kuṣṭa, Jūṣṭa, Sāṃgarhā, Pragala, Vīṣṇu, Udālakā, Pranātati, Svetakṣa, Sastra, Deva, Nārada, Parvata, Atreyā, Kuṇḍaṇā, Kālghatī, Vēṣa, Aka, Devaśāmaya, Samaśūraḥā. (Chapter 53, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

2) Asir, Devāla, Vaisampāyana, Suncatula and Jūṣṭula were disciples of Vīṣṇu. (Prāthama Skanda, Debi Bhāgavata).

3) Asir, the sage, got by the blessing of Śiva a son named Devala. (Prāthama Skanda, Debi Bhāgavata).

4) Once Asir went to King Janaka the philosophy of rebirth. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 47).

ASIṬADEVA. Main details. 1) He is one of those who spread the story of Mahābhārata to the public. Vīṣṇu wrote the Mahābhārata into a laks of books and first taught the great epic to his son, the sage Sukha. He later expounded it to many other disciples Nārada spread the story among the devas, Devala among the Pārašu, Sukha among Gandharvas and Yaksas and Vaishampayana among men. (Sloka 107 & 108, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

2) He was present at the Sarpasatra of Jana-meṣa. (Sloka 8, Chapter 53, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

3) He attended the coronation of Yudhishṭhira along with Nārada and Vīṣṇu. (Sloka 10, Chapter 53, Sabha Parva, M.B.). See under herārūmi for more information.

ASIṬADHANAVA. A king of Vedic time. Sāṃkṣayāṇa Sūtra states that the Veda of Asvatīdīvī was written by this King.

ASIṬADHAVAJA. Son of Kaṭṭāpā and Vināta. He was present at a birthday celebration of Arjuna. (Sloka 72, Chapter 122, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

ASIṬAKAṢṭAPĀ (DEVA). For details see under ĀJĪṢVASYĀ and Deva.

ASIṬAPARVATA. A mountain situated on the mountains of the river, Narmadā, in the country of Anām. (Sloka 11, Chapter 89, Yana Parva, M.B.).

ASIṬAM. Son born to Vasūṭha by the wife of Kālaśapāda the King of Ayodhya. (See Ikṣvāku vamsa) while the King Kālaśapāda was walking through the forest hunting he saw Sakti the son of Vasūṭha. As Sakti did not care to give room to the King, Kālaśapāda wounded Sakti, who cursed the King and changed him to a Rākṣasa (giant). The giant immediately killed Sakti. After many years Vasūṭha blessed the King and changed the form of the giant and gave him back his former shape. The King was delighted at having his son back. He took Vasūṭha to his place. Madayaṇi, the wife of the King with his permission went to Vasūṭha and got with child. Vasūṭha returned to the forest. Even after the lapse of a long period she did not give birth to the child. Madayaṇi who was miserable at this, took an ‘āśāmī’ (a small cylindrical piece of the granite used to crush things placed on a flat square piece of granite) and crushed her stomach with it and she died. As he was born by using ‘Asma’ he was named Asma. This King had built a city called Paudhamā. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 176).

ASIṬAM. A woman in the house of Ānāma the son of Ānāma. (Karna Parva).

ASIṬAMA I. A sage. (M.B., Śānti Parva, Chapter 47, Sloka 5).

ASIṬAKĀDAṆĀDA. Son of the King Ānāma. He was a soldier of the Kaurava army. He was killed in the battle by Abhimanyu. (Sloka 22 and 23, Chapter 37, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

ASIṬAM. Wife of Pācīnīva. Kaṭṭāpā was born to Maśī, son of Brahmā. Kaṭṭāpā was born to his wife Adin, daughter of Daksā, Vīṣṇu. Descending in order from Vīṣṇu were born Manu, Hī, Purānas, Ayus, Nāruṣa, Yāṣṭi. Yāṣṭi had two wives, Devaśā and Sarmiṇī. The first was the daughter of Śukra and the second the daughter of Vṛṣaparva. To Devaśā were born two sons, Yādu and Turvasu and to Sarmiṇī were born three sons, Druhyu, Anu-druhyu and Puru. From Yādu came the dynasty of Yādavas and from Puru came the dynasty of Pauravas. Kauśalyā was the wife of Puru and her son was Jana-meṣa. Puru conducted three Asvamedhas and secured the title of Vṛṣaparva (conqueror of the world) and then accepted the ascetic life and went to the forests. Jana-meṣa married Ānāta a śūla and Mādāvī and got a son named Pācīnīva. Because he conquered all the land extending to the eastern horizon he got the name Pācīnīva. Pācīnīva married a yādava girl of name Amākā and got a son named Sarmiṇī. (Sloka 6 to 13, Chapter 95, Ādi Parva, M.B.).
AŚMANAGARA. A city of the nether world. The Uttra Rāmāyana states that Rāvaṇa entered this city when he was going home. It looked like Kālinga (the aeroplane of ancient times) stolen from Kubera.

AŚMA-PṚṢṬA(M). The sacred pond near Gayā known as Preṣṭāli. It is believed that if you perform obeisances here even the sin of killing a brahmin would fade away.

AŚMA. An ancient sage.

AŚMOPĀKHYĀNAM. This is called Aśmāgītā also. After the bhakta Vrindavana Dharanaputra to console him and the philosophy he then expounded is called Aśmopākhyānam. Once King Janaka asked the great scholar Aśman on the changes that occur in Man as wealth comes and goes. Aśman then gave the King the same philosophy which Vyāsā gave to Dharanaputra and Aśman’s oration to King Janaka came to be known as Aśmāgītā. (Chapter 20, Śanti Parva, M.B.).

AŚOKA I. The charioteer of Bhima Sena. When Bhimsena was fighting a battle with Srutānyu the King of Kālinga, this charioteer brought the chariot to him. (M.B., Bhīma Parva, Chapter 54, Sauras 70 and 71). AŚOKA II. A minister of King Daśaratha. Daśaratha was very much grieved. They were Vyāsa, Bhrīṣṭa, Vaijayā, Asidhdhamba, Arthaśākhā, Aṇaka, Mantrapāda and Sumantra. (Vālīśuki Rāmāyana, Bālākāṇḍa, Sarga 7).

AŚOKA III. A King of the family of the famous Asura Aśva. This King had been ruling over Kālinga. (Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Sūtra 14). AŚOKADATTA. Once the Vidyādhara (a class of semi-gods) named Aśokavēga was going through the sky, when he heard the sound of the Garuda. He asked them to come and take him with them. They agreed and took him with them. He was very fond of their company and kept on going with them. (Vālīśuki Rāmāyana, Bālākāṇḍa, Sarga 7).

hanged, for a charge of murder, merely out of personal grudge and without any proof, and this is the third day since I was put in this scaffold. My life has not yet departed from the body. My tongue is dried of thirst. Have the kindness to give me a little water."

"Punished without proof! It will appear only so to him who is punished!" thinking thus the King asked Asokadatta to give the man some water. "Who will go to a burial-ground in the night? I myself shall take water to him." Saying so Asokadatta took water and went to the burial-ground and the King went to the palace. The world was in darkness. With here and there a spark of fire and light of fire-flies and lightning mingled with the shouting of ghosts and the roaring of the demons and occasional cries of birds and animals the burial-ground was a dreadful place, where Asokadatta came and asked, "Who asked the King for water?" He heard a voice saying "Myself" and he went to the place of the voice and saw a man lying on a scaffold. An extremely beautiful woman also was lying under the scaffold crying, and getting ready to jump into the burning fire since she could not bear the separation of her husband on the new moon day. She had plenty of golden ornaments on her body. Asokadatta asked her, "Madam! who are you? Why are you crying here?" She replied, "I, an unfortunate woman, the wife of the man on the scaffold. My intention is to burn myself along with his body. I am waiting for his life to depart. Because of his sin he is not dying. This is the third day since he is lying like this. He will be asking for water now and then. So I have brought some water. But his face being high I cannot reach it and I am seeing him burning with thirst and am swallowing the grief." Asokadatta said, "Sir! The King has sent this water for him. Now climb on my back and you yourself give him this water."

The woman instantly took the water and got on the back of Asokadatta who had stooped down for her to climb on his back. After a while he felt drops of blood falling on his back and looking up he saw her burning flesh from the body of the man on the scaffold and eating it. He got wild with anger and catching hold of her legs he was about to strike her on the ground, when she shook her legs free and ran away and disappeared. Because she dragged away her legs with force one bangle came off from her leg and was left with Asokadatta. Her behaviour aroused in him at first compassion, detestation in the middle stage and fear in the final stage, and when she had disappeared from his sight he looked at the bangle she had left behind with astonishment. When he reached home it was dawn. In the morning ablution he went to the palace. "Did you give him water yesternight?" asked the King and he replied "Yes", and placed the bangle before the King. "Where did you get this from?" the King asked and in reply he said everything that had happened in the night. The King thought that Asokadatta was an extraordinary man and calling his queen showed her the ornament and told her everything. She was filled with joy and wonder. She praised Asokadatta as a good deal. The King said, "Dear queen! This Asokadatta is a young man of greatness, learning, bravery, truth and of good birth. He is handsome too. If he would become the husband of our daughter what a good thing it will be? I have a desire to give him our daughter Madanalakshmi." The queen also said that the thought was pleasing to her. "This youth is the most suitable person to be her husband. Some days ago Madanalakshmi had seen him in Madhu garden and from that day a change is visible in her. All laughing and playing is gone from her, and she spends time in loneliness and thinking. I knew this from her. Because of my sight "Agni" who is always alert did not sleep last night and only just closed my eyes in the dawn. Then it seemed to me that a divine woman appeared and said to me, "My daughter, don't give your daughter Madanalakshmi to anybody else. She had been the wife of Asokadatta in previous birth". I woke up immediately. Believing in the dream I consoled our daughter. I am glad that now you also think so. Let the Jasmine creeper entwine round the Mango tree."

When the King heard these things from his queen, without wasting more time he gave his daughter Madanalakshmi in marriage to Asokadatta. They suited each other so much that not only their relatives, but the others also were delighted. Brahmadev is well experienced in joining suitable things together. As they were all getting on well one day the queen said to the King, "My lord! this Bangle being single doesn't shine well. We must have another bangle made in the same shape and design."

The King immediately had some goldsmiths brought before him. He showed them the bangle and asked them to make one of the same pattern. They turned it on all sides and looked at it, but couldn't make it. Then the Queen said, "This is not made from gold. It is not possible for us to make one of this kind. Precious stones like these are not available in this earth. So the only possible way is to search for its mate in the place where this was found. On hearing these words the King and the queen were crestfallen. Seeing this Asokadatta said that he would bring the mate of the bangle. Hearing danger the King tried to dissuade him. But Asokadatta was not prepared to change his decision. He took the bangle and went to the burial-ground that night. To get the bangle he had to meet the same woman who had left the bangle. He began to think of a means to find her out. He procured a corpse took it on his shoulder and walked about calling out "Do you want flesh?". He heard a voice say "Bring it here" and he walked in that direction. He saw a beautiful woman who appeared to be the mistress, sitting in the midst of so many servant maids on a tree. He called out "Take the flesh." She asked "How much will it cost?" Asokadatta said, "There is a bangle with me. If you will give me another bangle like this you shall have the whole body". Hearing the words of Asokadatta the beautiful woman laughed and said, "That is my bangle. I have its mate with me also. I am the same woman you saw when you came to give water to the man on the scaffold. Now the situation is changed. So you do not recognize me. Tonight is the fourteenth lunar night too. It was good that you thought of coming to night. Otherwise you would not have seen me. Now see; let the flesh be there. If you will consent to do what I say I shall give you the other bangle also." Asokadatta promised to do what she required. Then she began, "There is a city in the Himalayas known as Trighandha. There lived a giant in that city. His name was Lumbajibha. I bearing the name Vidyocchihah, am his wife. Only one daughter Asokadatta was born to me. Then my husband was killed in a fight with his overlord, Kapilasphota, who being kind did not do us any harm; and I live in my house now. My daughter is now a young woman. I was roamong about thinking of a way to find out a man of might and bravery as husband for my daughter. Then I saw you going thus way with the King. The moment I saw you I knew you to be the man I was searching for and I decided to give you my daughter in marriage. You are the most godly of men that I have ever seen. The man on the scaffold was a trick played by me. You brought water to the scaffold and nobody needed water then. With the knowledge I have in Sorcery and witchcraft I put you into a little confustion. I gave you that bangle to bring you again to me and it has served the purpose today. Let us go to my house. It is my earnest wish that you should be the husband of my daughter. And I shall satisfy your immediate need also.

The brave Asokadatta agreed to the request of the giantess. She, with her power, took him to their city through the sky. Asokadatta saw the golden city and wondered if it was the sun taking rest after its tedious journey. There he saw the daughter of the giantess and thought her to be the incarnation of his adventurous spirit. She was very beautiful and a part of her beauty was the bangle he was called Vidyutprabhā. He married her and lived with her for a while. Then he said to his mother-in-law: "Mother! now give me the bangle. I must go to Kāsi. I have promised the King to get the mate of this bangle." Vidyutprabhā gave her son-in-law the bangle and a golden lotus flower which he accepted with great joy. As he went, he heard the voice of the Vidyādhara: "All this is a curse to you. Now you and your people are liberated from the curse. So learn the duties and functions of your class and with your people take your proper place in the society." Having taught them everything they required he disappeared. Thus the Vidyādhara brothers, having plucked golden lotus reached the peak of the Himalayas through the burial-ground of the king. Vidyutprabhā who also having been liberated from curse became a Vidyādhara girl. With that beautiful girl the two brothers continued their journey and reached Kāsi where they bowed before their parents. That reunion appeared to be a dream or something nearing madness to their parents. They could not believe their eyes. Asokadatta and Vijayadatta each saying his name bowed before them. They embraced them up and kissed them on the head, and cried for joy. They did not know what to do or what to say. Their minds were incapable of thinking. Everybody heard this and was amazed at it. The King was also filled with joy. He came there and took them to the palace. Asokadatta gave all the lotus flowers to the King, who were happy and joyful at the achievement of more than he had hoped for. Everybody appreciated them.

Govindavānī, in the presence of the King asked Vijayadatta to tell his story from the moment he turned a giant in the burial-place: "We are very curious to hear it," he said. Vijayadatta began to say, "Father, you have seen how because of my mischief, I had broken that skull and some viscous liquid fell into my mouth and I changed to a giant. After that the others giants gave me the name Kapilasphota. They invited me into their midst. We lived together. After a few days they took me to the presence of the King of the giants. As soon as he saw me he was pleased with me and appointed me as the commander-in-chief of the army. He was overconfident in his power went to war with the Gandharvas and was killed in the fight. From that day onwards all the giants came under my control. Then I met with my brother who came to pluck the golden lotus flowers from my lake. With this all the previous conditions of my life had vanished.
My brother will say the rest of the story. When Vijaya-datta had finished saying Afokadatta continued the story.

Long ago when we were Vidyādharas both of us were going through the sky and we saw the hermit maidens of the hermitage of Gālava, bathing in the Ganges. We wished to get those girls. The hermits who saw this with their divine eyes cursed that we would take birth again in a place where man could not reach and we would be liberated from the curse and learn everything from the teacher, and would become the old Vidyādharas with our people. And according to this curse we took birth as men and separation was effected. You all have heard it today. I went to the lake of the King of the grants, with the help of my mother-in-law the giantess for plucking the golden lotus flowers and recovered my brother, the Vidyādatta. There we learned everything from our teacher Prajñāpi Kavikā and became Vidyādharas and have arrived here as fast as we could."

Thus he informed them everything that had occurred. Afterwards by the learning he received from his teacher he changed his parents and the daughter of the King into Vidyādharas and then bidding adieu to the King Afokadatta, with his two wives, parents and brother went to the emperor of the Vidyādharas through the sky. When they reached there Afokadatta and Vijaya-datta changed their names into Afokavega and Vijnavega. According to the orders of the emperor those Vidyādharas youths went to the mountain of Govindakāśa with their people as it was their abode, and live without any city. Now King Polaku with wonder took one of the golden lotus flowers and placed it in the temple and with the rest he made oblations to god and considered his family to have made wonderful achievements. AŚOKASUNDARI. See the word Nāhuṣa.

AŚOKATIRTHA. A holy place near the temple of Sūpāraka (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Stanza 13).

AŚOKAVANIKA. A famous park in Lankā. It was in this park that Ravana kept Śīta having stolen her from Śrī Kamba. It is described in Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Sundarakāṇḍa, Sarga 14 and Aranyakāṇḍa, Sarga 56 and in Mahābhārata also —

"Thinking of his husband alone, clad in the garments of a hermit woman, eating only roots and fruits, in prayer and fast, in sorrow and sadness, she of the wide eyes lived in the Asoka park which seemed a hermitage." (Bhūta Bhrātra, Aranyā Parva Chapter 289, Stanzas 42 and 43).

AŚṬABANDHA. A kind of planter used for fixing idols in temples. The following eight things are mixed and ground consecutively for forty days and made ready to be put in the cavity around the idol when it is fixed there. Finally, (1) conch-powder (2) powdered myrobolan (3) resin (4) Kolpparal (a kind of rock) (5) river sand (6) powder of emetic myrobolan (7) lac and (8) cotton.

AŚṬABUDDHIGUNA(S). Eight qualities of the intellect. Suśūsā, Śravaṇa, Grahana, Dhāraṇa, Ča, Aplha, Arthavijñāna, and Tatvavijñāna.

AŚṬACORNA. A mixture of eight powders. The eight things are: Cukku (dry ginger), Maluku (chili) Tippali (long pepper) Ayatamodaka (celery seed) Jiraka (barayava seed) Karinjiraka (black caraway seed) Iruppu (sodium chloride) and Kāyam (asafetida).

AŚṬADĀSAPURĀNA(S). The eighteen putrinā. See under Purāna.

AŚṬADHARMAMĀRGĀ(S). Eight ways of attaining mokṣa: Yāga, Vedābhivāya, Dāna, Tapas, Satya, Kāmā, Dāya, lack of desire.

AŚṬADHĀTU(S). Eight minerals: gold, silver, copper, tin, zinc, black lead, iron and mercury.

AŚṬADIJGAJAS and AŚṬADIKKARINIS. There are eight male and eight female elephants standing guard over the eight zones. They are:

Besides these, there are four diggajas (elephants of the universe) who bear the earth standing below in the nether world. It is stated that the sons of Sagara who went into the nether land in search of the last horse of his father saw these elephants. As they went to the east they saw the huge elephant Vīḍūpākṣa, holding the earth on its head. It is said an earthquake occurs when for a change it shakes its head. Going to the left of it they saw Saumana holding the earth on its head in the west and going to the left of it on the north they saw Bhadra holding the earth on its head. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bālakaṇḍa, Sarga 40).

AŚṬADIK(S). (Eight zones). East, South-east, South, South-west, West, North-west, North and North-east.

AŚṬADIKPĀLAKA(S). The Devī Bhāgavata states like this about the eight zones and their guardians. Situated in the eight different zones of the Brahmaloka are eight big cities of the eight guardians of these zones each covering an area of 2500 yojanas. All these are on the top of Mahāmeru and Brahmā sits in the centre in his city called Manovati. Around his city are the others as follows:

1. On the east is Amāravati, city of Indra.
2. On the south-east is Tejovati, city of Agni.
3. On the south is Sambhavathy, city of Yama.
4. On the South-west is Khopāṣṭhanā, city of Nirṛti.

Aṣṭaḍūṭagāna(S). 1. A Rajārī born to Viṣṇu as Madhavī, wife of Yāya. (Sloka 10, Chapter 119, Udyoga Parva, M.B.)

Aṣṭaḍūṭagāna(S). 1. How Asakta went to heaven. This story was told to the Pṛdaṇas by the sage Mārmendya: "Asakta, son of Viṣṇu, performed an Āvāmādirī Yāga. All the kings took part in it: Pratardana, Vasumana and Aṅuṃcita Śiśu, and all the brothers of Asakta attended the function. After the yāga Asakta took his three brothers for an air travel and on the way met the great sage Nārada. Nārada was also taken in and as they continued their flight, Asakta asked Nārada who should stop down from the aeroplane if only four were allowed to go to heaven. "Asakta", replied Nārada and explained the reason also. Once when Nārada stayed at the āśrama of Asakta the former found many varieties of cows there and asked Asakta where they were. Then in self praise Asakta said that all those were cows which he had given away as gifts. Asakta then asked who should get down if only three were allowed to go to heaven. 'Pratardana', said Nārada and explained the reason. Once when Pratardana was taking Nārada in the former's chariot four brahmins one behind the other approached him and begged for a horse each. When Pratardana asked for some time the brahmins were not prepared to wait and so he gave all but one of his four horses and asked the fourth to wait. As he was also found to be persistent he gave the one drawing his chariot also and dragged the chariotor himself but abusing the brahmins all the way. It was that abuse that gave him the shun. Then Asakta asked Nārada who should get down if only two were permitted to enter heaven. 'Vasumana', said Nārada and explained the reason. Nārada went to the house of a large man. Nārada asked only three times and each time the latter spoke highly of his chariot. Nārada also joined in praising his flower-chariot and the brahmins present there also followed suit. Pleased at this Vasumana became proud of his possession and his vainglorious talks made him unite. Then Asakta asked if only one were allowed to go to heaven who should go, 'Śīśu', said Nārada. It is, therefore, only Śīśu would be next only to Śiśu and Nārada explained the reason thus. Once a brahmin went to Śīśu for food. Śīśu asked him what food he relished most and the brahmin said that in order to have the fresh flesh of Śīśu's only son, Brahagāthī. Without even the slightest hesitation Śīśu killed his son and cooked his flesh and when the food was ready he went out to invite the brahmin. But on going out the King, who was watching fire to his palace, treasury, armory, stables, harem and elephant sheds. Without even a quiver on his face, the king respected the brahmin inside and gave him food. The brahmin was amazed at the patience of the King and sitting before his bed for some time told the King that he would be satisfied if the King himself ate that food. Respecting the request the King was about to eat the flesh of his own son when the brahmin who was none other than Buddhā in disguise praised him for his devotion and gave him back his son adorned with sweet smelling flowers and disappeared blessing him. When his ministers questioned him about this Śīśu said, "I do not give for a name or face. Neither do I give for wealth and happiness. I give it because it is the way to be rid of sin". (Chapter 168, Aranyā Parva, M.B.)

AŚTĀMĀRTI(S). Earth, Water, Air, Fire, Ether, Hout, Sun and Moon.

AŚTĀNĀTI(S). Eight snakes, Vāsuki, Tākṣa, Karkotaka, Samkha, Gālka, Padma, Mahāpādina and Anāta.

AŚTĀNGAHĀDAYA. The medical science which deals with eight separate division the treatment of the human body (1) Śāṭra (2) Bāla (3) Graha (4) Ērddhānāga (5) Śātya (6) Dāmātra (7) Vāra and (8) Vīra. Bāla—Body which has not attained maturity; Graha—External elements which damage the health of infants; Śātya—excessive nourishment lodged in the body; Vīra—The semen fluid. (Directions of treatment.)

AŚTĀNGAYOGA(S). Yama, Niyama, Āsana, Prāṇāyāma, Pratyāhāra, Dīyāna, Dīhānā and Samādhi.

1) Yama That which prevents the yogis from doing prohibited things. Ahimsa, Satya, Asteya, Brahmārtya and Aparigraha are yamas.

2) Niyama. Actions leading to Moksha. They are: (1) Śauca—Cleanliness of the mind—cleaning it of such ad qualities like jealousy. (2) TAPAS—Indifference (Samasthitipāra) to the pains of opposites like pleasure and pain, heat and cold etc. (3) Svādhyāya pursuit of the science of salvation chanting of OM.

3) Śantoṣa—remaining happy and contented.

4) ŚYAVARA-PRAVĀDHANA—surrendering all actions.

5) Āsana. Postures of sitting firmly and comfortably. Of the many āsanas the very prominent ones are: Svastikāsana, Virāsana, Padmāsana, Siddhāsana, Vastraśāna, Vṛkṣāsana, Kūwaśāna, Kṛṣṇāsana, Varasanna, Mayurasana and Kūmārasana. Out of these Siddhāsana is considered to be the best of the lot. This āsana strengthens the 22,000 nerves of the human system and all the yogis prefer this to any other. “Kīmamanyaib hahunyaih pithalaih pūṭaih Siddhāsane sat” (of what use are the others when there is Siddhāsana).

6) Prāṇāyāma. Control of Prāṇa (Prāṇa is the life giving breath and Śāṭma is the checking of it). Select an airy place and be seated in an ordinary āsana facing north or east after taking your early morning bath. Sit erect with your breath slightly pushed forward and your head slightly drawn back. Then complete one Prāṇāyāma doing Pūraka, Kumbhakā and Rekaka. The Rudraya-ma states thus about Prāṇāyāma:

Dakṣāngūthena dakṣānā ca.
Ghrangam sampalya mantvritvā
Idaī pūrājeydvānyum
Mātra gosāsabhih kramāt
Ariṣṇāhāniḥakhyāhna
Dhṛtvā nāsādvyayat tataḥ
Tatastvum kumaydevyānun
Pūrakānām ca turvago’ta
Aṇāmaya tathā vāma-
Nāsām dhṛtvā tu dakṣāṇe
Dvātaṃśādībhisto mārābhīr Vayuṣreñcamācārei
d Closing the right nostril by the thumb of the right hand and inhaling air inside through the left nostril taking 16 seconds is called Pūraka. Closing the nostrils by the thumb and ring-finger and keeping the breath for 46 seconds is called Kumbhaka. Closing the left nostril well and then exhaling through the right nostril taking 32 seconds is called Rekaka. Pūrakas should be done through the same nostril through which you have done Rekaka. (You must do at least ten Prāṇāyāmas at a time).

7) Pratyāhāra. Withdrawung the mind from worldly objects and sensual pleasures.

8) Dhyāna. Keeping your mind fixed on the tip of your nose. Meditation.

9) Dhāraṇa. Steadily thinking of things you should know.

10) Samādhi. The union of mind with God. This is a blissful subconscious state in which one perceives the identity of the individual soul and cosmic spirit.

AŚTĀPRAJAMĀNAS. Eight means of getting correct knowledge. Pratyaksha, Anumāna, Upamāna, Sābda (Agama), Athsāpatti, Anupalabdhi (Abhāva), Sambhava, Atithya.

AŚTĀTARANI. Eight names of Śwarādevi. They are: Tārā, Ugrā, Mahāgāra, Vajrā, Kāli, Sarasvatī, Kāmvarī and Gāmudā.

AŚTĀVAKRA

1) Brahma. The sage Uddālaka had a disciple named Khagodara (Kahodara) and a daughter named Sujātā. Appreciating the devotion and good conduct of his disciple, Uddālaka gave his daughter Sujātā in marriage to him. Sujātā became pregnant. When once Khagodara was reciting from the Vedas the baby in the womb of Sujātā said, “I have learnt the mantras you are chanting but the way you chant it is wrong”. (The vibrations of sound created by the utterance of each word is important). Khagodara was angry and he cursed his babe in the womb thus “Since your mind seems to be crooked let your body also be of that type, with curves all over". When Sujata delivered the child it had eight bends and light curves and so the boy was named Astavakra, meaning one with eight bends. (Chapter 132, Vana Parva, M.B.).

2) Father died before he was born. When Sujata was pregnant they suffered much from poverty and at the insistence of Sujata, Khagodara went to the King Janaka, to beg for some money. Janaka was performing a yaga then and so Khagodara had to wait. When at last he was invited to the royal assembly he was asked to enter into a polemical contest with Vaiduna, the court scholar and having been defeated by him was asked to drown himself.

Uddalaka got a son named Svetaiketu and Sujata delivered Astavakra. Both the boys grew in the Astara on great intimacy and Sujata withheld the news of the death of her husband from the boys. (Chapter 132, Vana Parva, M.B.).

3) How Khagodara was got back. One day the two boys went to bathe in the river and during a controversial talk Svetaiketu said that Astavakra had no father. This teased him much and Astavakra went to his mother and gathered all the facts about his father. He went, then, straight to the royal assembly of King Janaka and spoke of his father. The gate keeper said that he was only a boy and only learned men could go inside the sacrificial hall. Astavakra contended that neither size nor age was any indication of one's knowledge or worth and got himself admitted into the hall. There he entered into a polemical contest with the court scholar, Vaiduna, who had killed his father. Vaiduna was defeated and was thrown into the same river in which his father had drowned. Thus Vaiduna fell into the river Khagodara rose up from there and the father and son along with Svetaiketu returned to the Astara. Khagodara then took his son for a bath and when it was over Astavakra became a bright boy without crooks. (Chapter 133, Vana Parva, M.B.).

4) Marriage. Astavakra wanted to marry Suprabha, the daughter of a sage named Vadanaya. When Vadanaya was approached for this the Sage decided to test the love which Astavakra had towards his daughter and said: "I am going to test you. You go to the north to the Himlayas. Pay homage to Siva and Parvati and go farther north. There you will find a very beautiful damsel. You talk to her and return and when you come back I shall give you my daughter." Accepting this challenge Astavakra went north. When he went to the Himlayas Kubera entertained him. He remained there for a year enjoying the dances of celestial maidens and then, after worshipping Siva and Parvati went further north. There he came across seven very estranged women. At the command of Astavakra the eldest of the lot, Utard, remained with him; all the rest left the place immediately she started making love with him and requested him to marry her. But Astavakra did not yield and told her about his promise to Vadanaya. Please at this reply Utard revealed that she was the queen of the north in disguise and was testing him. She then blessed Astavakra who fulfilling his mission successfully, returned to Vadanaya and married the girl he wanted. (Chapter 19, Anushasana Parva, M.B.).

5) Another version of how the body became crooked. There is another story also about Astavakra. Once there lived a sage named Asita. He did great penance to please Siva to bless him with a child. Siva blessed him and he got a son named Devata. Rambha, the queen of devakas, fell in love with him but Devata did not yield to her wishes. Then Rambha cursed him and made him into one with eight crooks. Thus Devata came to be called Astavakra. He then did penance for six thousand years and Bhagavan Krsna accompanied by Radha appeared before him. Radha was shocked by the ugliness of the sage and did not relish his sight. But Krsna asking her to remain quiet occupied him. At the time Astavakra lost all his crooks and became a beautiful man. At that time a chariot descended from heaven and all of them went to heaven in it. (Brahma Vasistha Purana).

6) Other information. (1) Astavakra was also present among the rajas who pariksh in the coronation ceremony conducted after Krsna's return to Ayodhya from Lanka. (Uttararamayana).

(2) Astavakra cursed those celestial maidens who rebuked him for his ugliness and they were born on earth as the wives of Sri Krsna. When after the death of Krsna they were being taken by Asitva to the north they were forcibly taken by some of the shepherds. (Chapter 13, Agni Purana).

ASTAVAKRATRTHA. If one observes complete fasting for twelve days doing tarpana in this sacred pond it is said that he gets the benefit of doing Naramcheda-puja. (Slokas 41, Chapter 25, Anushasana Parva, M.B.).

ASTAVAKTRA. See under Astavakra.

ASTAVARGA(S). Maha, Mahamada, Kukoli, Kastakakoki, Jivaka, Itavaka, Radhi, Vridhi. (These are used in infusions for treating rheumatism).

ASTAVASU(S). The name of the father of Astavakra.

1) Origin. Gapadevatris are called Astavasus. They were born to Dharmadeva of his wife Vasu, daughter of Daksha. They are: Dhar, Dhruva, Sonma, Ahar, Anila, Anala, Pratyya and Prabhala. (Slokas 17 and 18, Chapter 66, Adi Parva, M.B.). There is a version in certain puranas that the Astavasus are the sons of Krsna.

Different puranas give different names to these Astavasus. According to Vivara Purana they are: Ape, Dhruva, Sonma, Dharma, Anila, Pratyya and Prabhala. (Chapter 15 of Amala). In Bhagavata they are Dorna, Prama, Dhruva, Arka, Agni, Dana, Vasu and Vidbavasa. In Harivamsha they are: Akha, Dhara, Dhruva, Sonma, Anila, Anala, Pratyya and Prabhala. This only indicates that some of these have two or more names for them.

2) Course of Vasiṣṭha. Once the Astavasus were enjoying a picnic with their wives and they happened to go to the Astara of Vasiṣṭha. One of the wives got enraged over Nandini, Vasiṣṭha's beautiful cow and wanted it. The Vasu to please his wife took the cow by force and left the place. When the sage found his cow missing after some time he understood by his divine powers who stole the cow and so he cursed the Astavasus saying that all of them would be born on earth as men. The Astavasus were greatly worried and approached the sage apologising and craving for pardon. The sage relaxed the curse and declared that their life on earth would only be for a very short time maintaining that the particular Vasu who committed the theft would live for a long time as man. It was this Vasu, Ape (Dyau) who was born as Bhima.
3) Rebirth of Ājīvaka. The Ājīvaka were wondering over the curse and were thinking of how to bear it when a good friend appeared before them and told them to think: "Devī, if you become the queen on earth of some noble King, we shall be born as your sons and you must throw us into the river as soon as we are born." Ājīvaka accepted their request. Once there was a King called Pratīpā in the Candra dynasty of Śatya. One day when this ascetic King was worshiping the river Gaṅgā on the banks of the river Gaṅgā a beautiful damsel arose from the waters and sat on the right thigh of the King. Surprised the King told her thus, "Oh beautiful maiden, who are you? Do you realize what an unrighteous thing you have done? I am not one who goes after women and it is a bit daring of you to have taken me as a beau. Please understand that the right thigh is intended for a daughter and daughter-in-law. You can claim this right when you become the wife of my son." The beautiful girl was none other than Gaṅgā devī herself and she disappeared soon on receiving the rebuke.

Pratīpā got a son named Śatranu and Gaṅgā devī became the wife of Śatranu. (For more details about this see Ājīvaka). When Gaṅgā devī became the wife of Śatranu, she made a condition to be his queen. "Whether good or bad you should not obstruct any action of mine. You must never give me any opinion of yours on any matter. You must obey what I order. If at any time you break any of these promises I will leave you that instant." It was while Gaṅgā devī was living on earth as the wife of Gaṅgā, the Ājīvaka were born to her. One after the other she threw into the river seven sons but when she was about to throw the eighth the King objected to it and Gaṅgā disappeared immediately. That son was Bhūtāna, who was none other than Dvāra born on earth by the curse of Vaiṣṇava. All the others, released from the curse, went to heaven. (More details under Bhūtāna).

4) A missile to Bhūtāna. When Bhūtāna had to fight against his guru, Puruṣārtha, the Ājīvaka gave him the missile, Pravāpā. (See Ambā). (Slokas 11 to 13, Chapter 193, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

5) Sons of Ājīvaka. The sons of Āja, the first of the Vāruṇas, are: Vaiṣṇava, Śrama, Śaha and Dvāra. Kāla, the destroyer of all, is the son of Dvāra. Varaha is the son of Soma. Dharma got his wife Manohari five sons Dravins, Hityavāsvāna, Śiśu, Prāṇa and Varuṇa. Śiva was Anila's wife and she got two sons, Manojava and Ajaṇṭai. Agni's son Kumāra was born at Śaraśīrā. Kumāra got three brothers, Viṣṇa, Viṣṇa and Nāgadeva. Kumāra is known as Kārtikkeya because he was born of Kṛṣṇa. The sage, Devala is the son of Āja. Devala got two sons of great intelligence and forbearance. Vāranasi, sister of Viṣṇu and a woman of great yogic powers and world-wide travels became the wife of Prabāhita. She gave birth to the famous Viṣṇukarmaprajāpati. He was the inventor of a great many handicrafts and ornaments. He became the consulting architect of the devas and ranked first in that art. The devas were renamed by him.

6) Menearth the same as the gods, he was described as: Men on earth depend on his art even now. That architect had four sons: Ajivikapāta, Akrūrabhuṣya, Viṣṇu and Rudra, the bold. The great sages, Viśvānapa, Harabahu, Tryambaka, Aparajita, Viṣṇukapī, Śambhu, Kaṇḍari, Rāivata, Mrgavāśāna, Śava and Kaṇḍari were the sons of Viṣṇu. These are known as the twelve Rudra. Pūrṇa says that there are a hundred Rudras like this. (Chapter 15, Aitā 1, Visva Purāṇa).

ASTAVIDHANAYIKĀ(S). Eight kinds of heroines of the stage:
1) Śṛddhāparītā. Be fit to be a counterpart in a love scene and play the role of one who is always fondeled by her husband.
2) Vīrakasākṣī (Vīrakasākṣī). Adorning herself well and waiting for her lover in a well decorated bedroom.
3) Vīrakasākṣī. Exhausted by the sorrow of separation from her lover.
4) Vīvāsākṣī. Cheated by her lover after fixing a date and a rendezvous.

ASTAVIDHAPRAKRITAYAVASTHĀ(S). Earth, Water, Agni, Air, Ether, Mind, Intelligence and Egotism.

ASTAVIDHAPRATIMĀ(S). Siṣunayi, Sāhukar, Lohamah, Lepyā, Lekha, Māmā, Mahāma and Manomayā.

ASTAVIDHAKUŚTHA(S). Vinmaricall, Bhādraka, Mahāna, Sukti, Sidhohamana, Kṛṣṇa, Vahara and Taruṇa. (Aṣṭādgaśāda).

ASTAVIVĀHA(S). Eight kinds of marriage (1) Brāhmaṇa (2) Daiva (3) Aśva (4) Prājapati (5) Gāndharva (6) Ājīvaka (7) Aṇāpā (8) Pāiṣāka. Brāhmaṇa is the one where the father gives her daughter with sacred water to a bachelor without accepting anything in return. When the father gives his daughter to the priest at the time of a yajña it is called Daiva. It is Ājīvaka if the father gives the daughter and gets in return a cow or bulllock. When the father gives the daughter with her blessings it is Prājapati. The marriage between two lovers is Gāndharva. It is Ājīvaka when the male takes his mate by force and it is Pāiṣāka (most cruel and mean) when the girl is taken as his wife when she is in a state of unconsciousness.

ASTAYOGINI(S). The eight hermit-mandens who are the attendants of the goddess, Durgā. (1) Mārjita (2) Karpārraka (3) Malayagandhini (4) Kaumuddhi (5) Bheruṃdha (6) Māctā (7) Nāyikā (8) Jayā (Subhācā).}

ASTOPĀYA(S). Eight ways of attaining salvation. Yājñā, Dāna, Vedādhyayana, Tapas, Dama, Satya, Rūjśa and Márdava. These are the qualities required for attaining salvation.

ASTAL. Daughter of Jārsanatha, King of Magadha. Katha married Asti and also another daughter of Jārsanatha. (Slokas 29 to 32, Chapter 14, Sabhā Parva, M.B.). Chapter 12 of Agni Purāṇa states that Jārsanatha went to war with the Yadavas because of the persuasion of these daughters.

ASTRA. After killing the demoness, Tātākā, Viśvāsītā reveals to Rāma and Lakṣman to the secret of using a great many varieties of Divyāstras (Divyāstra is a missile charged with power by holy incantation). Some of those astras are named below:

1. Daṇḍacakra
2. Dharmacakra
3. Kālačakra
4. Veṣṭacakra
5. Daṇḍa cakra
6. Vaiṣṇavacakra
7. Sāvuḍāṇa
8. Aśikā
9. Brahmasaṅkṣāra
10. Brahmsātra
11. Modakamūkha
12. Dharmaṇāḍa
13. Kālapiṇa
14. Varaṇaṇātra
15. Vīrāngaṇaṇātra
16. Panamātra
17. Piṇiṣātra
18. Nārāyaṇanātra
19. Prakṛta
20. Śrīśa
21. Vaiṣṇavātra
22. Pracchānaṇaṇātra
23. Krauṇaṇātra
24. Hayāsaṅkṣāra
25. Kāṇkālaṇaṇātra
26. Musalātra
27. Kapālaṇaṇātra
28. Kaṭakaṇaṇātra
29. Mānavaṇaṇātra
30. Pratikaṇaṇātra
31. Prasaktanātra
32. Sauratātra
33. Vaiṣṇavātra
34. Vaiṣṇavātra
35. Sāvatātra
36. Viśālaṇaṇātra
37. Madanaṇaṇātra
38. Moliṇaṇātra
39. Saumaṇaṇaṇātra
40. Sainvātra
41. Satyātra
42. Māyāḥaṇaṇātra
43. Tejasrabhātra
44. Saumyātra
45. Sīrātra
46. Viśālaṇaṇātra
47. Vaiṣṇavaṇaṇātra

Śrī Rāma received all these astras standing facing east. (Sarga 27, Bālakândana, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa)

ASURA. Those born to Kāyapa of his wife Danu are called Dānavas and those born of his wife Diti are called Daityas. They belong to the demonic dynasty (Refr. under "Aśuraṭāvāsī" in the genealogy chart). Renowned among the asuras were the following:

ASURA. One of the eight daughters of Kāyapa is the wife of Pradā. (Slōka 41, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

ĀŚŪRAŅIPAL. (See under Gilgamis, Jalaprāla). ĀŚŪTRĀJASA. A son born to King Kūsa of his wife Vaiḍūrā, Kukāmbha, Kukāmbha, Asūtrajasu and Vāsu are the two sons of Kūsa. (Sarga 32, Bālakândana, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa)

ASVĀ. A demon. This was the demon who later was born as Aśoka, King of Kaśyapa. (The same chapter, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

ASVĀ. A mahanāra. The sage Vāsa is the son of this king of Kaśyapa. (Sarga 25, Chapter 9)

ASVĀ (Horse). Horses and camels are born in this world, of Jamrā, wife of Kaśyapa, grandson of Bhrāmatā. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

ASVĀGAČHA. A famous Sanskrit poet. He has written many Sanskrit books prominent among which are the two great poems, Buddhacarita and Saundarananda and a drama called Śāripadapramakaraṇa. He lived in the 2nd Century A.D. His history of Buddha (Buddhacarita) was translated into Chinese during the period 414 to 421 A.D. He was known under the following names also: Āśraya, Bhaṇḍanta, Mahāvaiḍūy and Bhāṣāku.

ASVAGRIVA. Son born to the Sages Kṣayapa by his wife Danu. (Slōka 24, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

ASVĀHRDAYA. A mantra (sacred incantation) for controlling the horse. (See under 'Aśkarahdaya').

ASVĀKETU. Son of King Gāndhāra. He fought on the side of the Kauravas and was killed in the battle by Arjuna. (Slōka 7, Chapter 48, Drona Parva, M.B.)

ASVĀKTRA. A river. Once a sage called Prīka went to Gāndhāra and asked for the head of his daughter, Satyavati, in marriage. He demanded as dowry a thousand horses black in colour and with only one ear for each. Prīka prayed to Varuṇa and gave him the horses required. The river Aśvaktra (created by horse) was made by the flow of urine from these horses. (Chapter 57, Bhrūnāḍa Purāṇa).

ASVĀMEDHA I. A country of ancient India which was ruled by a King named Rucamān. Bhīmasena conquered him during the world-wide conquering campaign. (Slōka 6, Chapter 29, Satbhā Parva)

ASVĀMEDHA II. A yāga Kings used to conduct this in order to get absolved of all sins. Fixing a victory card on the head of a horse it is allowed to roam about freely. If anybody stops the horse and ties it, the King should go and defeat him in battle and bring back the horse. If you do a hundred such yāgas you can become Indra.

ASVĀMEDHA. Son of King Sahaśārāṇa. (Refer under Sahaśārāṇa).

ASVĀMEDHADATTĀ. Son born to Sat labour of the princess of Videha. (Slōka 86, Chapter 90, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

ASVĀMEDHAPARVA. A parva of the Mahābhārata. See under Bharata.

ASVĀNADI. A river in the country of Kunitboha. Atvanadi joins Carnaśvati and the latter joins the Yamunā and the Yamunā joining Ganges falls into the ocean. It was through this river that Kūntidevi floated in a box the infant Kartha. At night accompanied by her maid, Kūnti floated the box containing her illegitimate son and stood on the banks of Atvanadi weeping bitterly. The box floated and reached the country, Cuntapuri, ruled by a chaste woman. (Slōka 82 to 86, Chapter 308, Aranyaka Parva, M.B.)

ASVĀRAṬHĀ. A river in the Gandhāravāna valley flowing near the Arāma of the sage Arjuna. Many kings of the Candra dynasty used to come and stay in this Arāma. (Slōka 10, Chapter 160, Vana Parva, M.B.)

ASVĀSĀNKU. Son of Kṣayapa born of his wife Danu. (Slōka 21, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

ASVĀPATT I. Father of the most chaste woman, Śāveti. He was King of Madra. He was without children for a long period and for eighteen years he worshipped the goddess, Śāveti and got a maiden from Agnibhūts, whom he named at Sāvitrī. For more details see under Sāvitrī. (Chapter 299, Vana Parva, M.B.)

AŚVATTHĀMĀ A serpent which lived in the forest of Kāndavana. This was the son of Taksaka and he tried his best to escape from the fire that burned the forest. (Sloka 5, Chapter 298, Adi Parva, M.B.)

Once when Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa were sitting on the banks of the river Kāndavā, they got threatened and requested them to help him burn the forest of Kāndavana (see under Kāndavādāhā). They agreed to help him and Arjuna started burning the forest. Indra poured rains over the fire; Arjuna created a canopy of arrows and prevented the rains from falling down. A查看详情ena, son of Taksaka tried to escape from the fire but Arjuna obstructed his way with arrows. Then A查看详情ena’s mother swallowed him and kept him in her stomach. Arjuna cut off her head. Seeing this Indra sent a cyclone to smash the canopy of arrows and Arjuna fell fainting. Taking the opportunity A查看详情ena escaped. When Arjuna woke up from his unconscious state he found A查看详情ena missing. Then Arjuna cursed him thus: “Let not you get what anybody else has got!” (Chapter 288, Adi Parva, M.B.)

A查看详情ena kept his grudge against Arjuna till the end. In the great battle Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa met for a fight and when Kṛṣṇa sent his Nāgūṭrā (serpent missile) against Arjuna, A查看详情ena hid himself in that missile and burnt the beautiful headwear of Arjuna. But Kṛṣṇa did not like this fool play and refused to accept him when he came back. Enraged at this the serpent attacked Arjuna fiercely and was cut in pieces with arrows. See him meet with Arjuna. (Chapter 46, Kṛṣṇa Parva, M.B.)

AŚVĀSIRAS I A son born to Kaśyapa of Danu. (Sloka 24, Chapter 60, Adi Parva, M.B.)

AŚVĀSIRAS II Bhagavati Hayagriva who was teaching the Vedas at Vatsyāya Kṣattra near Naraṇarāyaṇa (Sloka 3, Chapter 127, Śatapatha Parva, M.B.)

AŚVĀSIRASTHĀNA M A sacred place in ancient India. Arjuna dreams of going to Śiva with Kṛṣṇa and in that dream they visit this place also. (Chapter 80, Drona Parva, M.B.)

AŚVĀTAKA A country of ancient India. (Sloka 15, Chapter 51, Bhīṣma Parva, M.B.)

AŚVĀTAKA A serpent. A sacred pond built in Pratyaṅga also carries this name. (Sloka 76, Chapter 55, Vana Parva and Sloka 10, Chapter 35, Adi Parva, M.B.)

AŚVĀṬHĀMĀ (Vṛkṣa) An ancient holy place on the banks of the river, Kāndava near Kāndava. It was at this place that the horses rose from the earth at the request of Kṛṣṇa to Varuna (See under Aḥkṛṣṇa). (Sloka 12, Chapter 35, Adi Parva, M.B.)

AŚVĀTTHĀMĀ

1) Birth and genealogy The stem of Bharadvāja Kṛṣṇa fell into the hollow of a bamboo and from there was born Drona. As per the instructions of his father Drona married Kṛṣṇa, daughter of the sage, Śraddhava. The good-natured Kṛṣṇa gave birth to Aśvāṭhāmā (See under Drona for genealogy) (Chapter 130, Adi Parva, M.B.)

2) How he got his name The moment he was born he made a loud noise like Ucchāśiras and the sound resembled the braying of a horse. Immediately a voice from heaven said that the boy should be named Aśvāṭhāmā.

The boy was, therefore, named so. (Slokas 48 and 49, Chapter 130, M.B.)

3) Training in archery Aśvāṭhāmā took his lessons in archery from his father Drona. At that time Drona got new lessons from Paraskūra and they were also imparted to Drona’s disciples. When Drona became the preceptor of the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas Aśvāṭhāmā also went with him. (Slokas 52 to 64, Chapter 130, Adi Parva, M.B.)

Aśvāṭhāmā was the affection for his son. Drona was very affectionate to his son and wanted to teach him something special in archery. So he used to instruct him during the time the other disciples went to fetch water for the Aśvāṇa. Arjuna came to know of this and he, thereafter, started bringing his quota of water quickly enough to join the special class of Drona. Thus Arjuna and Aśvāṭhāmā learned a lot more than the others in the military art. (Slokas 17-19, Chapter 132, Adi Parva, M.B.)

4) Drona’s affection for his son Drona was affectionate to his son and wanted to teach him something special in archery. So he used to instruct him during the time the other disciples went to fetch water for the Aśvāṇa. Arjuna came to know of this and he, thereafter, started bringing his quota of water quickly enough to join the special class of Drona. Thus Arjuna and Aśvāṭhāmā learned a lot more than the others in the military art. (Slokas 17-19, Chapter 132, Adi Parva, M.B.)

5) The Mahābhārata Battle and Aśvāṭhāmā In Sabhā Parva we find Aśvāṭhāmā participating in the Raśamūla of Yudhīśṭhīra. After that we meet him only at the Kurukṣetra war. Fighting on the side of the Kauravas he played a very important role in that war. He killed many enemies in the campaign including the following: Nila, Arjana, Pārāśakra, Dushasana, Pārīṇāja, Bhīma, Dvārapāla, Bāhīrāja, Indra, Dvāreru, Bhīma, Ashvathā, Bālāsena, Janāśika, Jayaśika, Surasena, Hemamēla, Vṛṣadhara, Candrasena, the ten sons of Kuntubhūja, Sudarśana, Vṛṣabha, Parīṇāja, Caturja, Mahādeva and Surath. He defeated many including Śikhandin, Uchmānuyu, Vīrsīka, Śāyati and Vindhyā. By using Agneyāstra (the arrow of fire) he made Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna fall fainting in the battle-field. He commanded the Kaurava army once. He killed many Pāṇḍavas and Somakas while they were sleeping. In Chapter 139 of Drona Parva we read about Arjuna defeating Aśvāṭhāmā in a single combat one day.

6) Aśvāṭhāmā sees a ghost Dhṛṣṭadyumna, son of King Pāṇḍāla, killed Drona. When Aśvāṭhāmā heard of it, he went to the place of Drona’s death and immediately went to the heart of the military camp of the Pāṇḍavaas. Kṛṣṇa and Śāyati followed him. There at the gate of the camp he beheld a ghostly apparition. It is described in the Bhāṣa Bhīrata (Malāvāḷam version of M.B.) as follows: He saw a huge figure standing at the door with a body shining like the Sun and the Moon. Bathed in blood and wearing a tiger’s skin in the form the figure wore a snake as his sacred thread and covered his upper body with a deer-skin. There were innumerable hands for this ghost and in each hand adorned with snake-banglelid he held a deadly weapon. With crooked teeth and a ghastly face the ghoul gave a shiver to those who saw him. Flames bursting forth from his eyes, ears, nose and mouth he scared the way of Aśvāṭhāmā. Undaunted the son of Drona showed divine arrows on the figure. But the ghost by his supreme powers absorbed the arrows to his body the moment they touched him. In despair Aśvāṭhāmā meditated on Śiva and the latter appearing before him in person gave him a divine dagger. With that he entered the bed-chamber of Dhṛṣṭadyumna, woke him up by striking him with his foot, caught a hold of him by the hair on his head and killed him.

7) Aśvāṭhāmā and his jewel The anger of Aśvāṭhāmā did not abate even after killing Dhṛṣṭadyumna, the butcher of his father. With a view to destroying the whole Pândava dynasty he sent against the Pândavas the all-powerful Brahmástra (a missile charged with great power by a holy incantation). But Droga had got only one type of missile to Arjuna and also he had no lord to meet the other. It created such a great explosion that all the elders on both the sides joined together and requested them to withdraw the missiles. Arjuna demanded the jewel on Aśvatthāma’s head to withdraw his missile. But Aśvatthāma refused to part with it. He said, “This jewel of mine is more valuable than both the Pândavas and Kauravas put together. If you wear this you need not be afraid of your enemies, disease, hunger and thirst. No harm will come to you from Yaksas, Nágas or thieves. I will never part with such a jewel!” (Ślokas 20-30, M.B., Chapter 15, Sautika Parva). After great persuasion Aśvatthāma surrendered his jewel but without withdrawing the missile directed it towards the womb of Udraka who was bearing a child then. We are reminded of an incident which happened when the Pândavas were residing in Uppalipuyā; a poor brahmin looking at Udraka said, “When the Kauravas will be weakening in power a child will be born to you. The boy will have to bear a test even while in the womb and you must name the child Parikṣit (One who has been tested)!”. When the powerful missile was flying straight towards Udraka’s womb Śri Kṛṣṇa said, “Even though the child in the womb will die; of this arrow it will be reborn. Oh, Aśvatthāma, you will be denounced by all as a stoner for killing this unborn babe. To suffer for this evil deed you will roam about in the earth for three thousand years. Nobody will associate with you. You will be shunned by society. You will be tormented by all diseases on earth. But the babe which you have now killed will be a famous scholar and brave King. He will rule this country for sixty years. He will be known as the next Kurūrya. Look, I am giving life to the babe you have killed.” Vīṣṇu supported Kṛṣṇa, and Aśvatthāma repenting his hasty act gave the jewel to the Pândavas and left for the forest with Vīṣṇa. (Sautika Parva, M.B.).

8) Symonym of Aśvatthāmā. The Mahābhārata has used the following name also for Aśvatthāmā. Acáryānarādana, Acāryaputra, Acāryavatya, Acāryasthāna, Druva, Dracñjñi, Drachaputra, Dronaśrama, Gauriputra, Gauravas and Bhāratakṛṣṇaputra.

AŚVATTHĀMĀ II. Indevarūṇa, King of Mālaṇa, had an elephant of this name and it was killed in the battle by Bīhmasena. (Ślokas 15, Chapter 190, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

AŚVĀVĀTI. A river. It is believed that if one just thinks about it at daybreak, midday and sunset one will get salvation. (M.B., Aruśasana Parva, Chapter 163, Śloka 25).

AŚVĀVĀN. The first child of King Kurū. (See under genealogy of Kurū). His mother was Vāhini. He is known as Avikṣit also. He got eight sons: Parikṣit, Sāralāśva, Adrāṇa, Virāja, Sūmṛt, Ucchāsana, Rājikṣita and Jīta. (Ślokas 50 to 53, Chapter 94, Aḍī Parva, M.B.).

AŚVĪNIKUMĀRA (8) (ASVINDEVAS). Satya and Dāsa, the two sons of Śrīyā (The Sun) are called Aśvīnikumāras. (Ślokas 17 and 18, Chapter 150, Aruṇāśana Parva, M.B.). They are also known as Aśvīna, and Aśvīnidevas. These two are the physicians of the devas. (Śloka 12, Chapter 123, Aruṇāśana Parva, M.B.).

1) Genealogy. Descending from Viṣṇu in order are: Brahmā, Marā, Kātyāya, Viśvāra (The Sun), Aśvīnikumāras.

2) Birth. The Viṣṇu Purāṇa describes the birth thus: “Śrīmat, daughter of Viśvakārmā, was the wife of Śrīyā. She got three children: Manu, Yāma and Yāṇi. Once having the effulgence of Śrīyā unbarable she engaged Śrīyā to look after Śrīyā and left for the forest to do penance there. Śrīyā took Śrīyā to be Śrīyā and got three children of her: Sahakāra, (another) Manu and Tatāpi. Once Śrīyā got angry and cursed Yāma. It was then that Śrīyā and Yāma came to know that she was not Śrīyā, getting more details from Śrīyā, Śrīyā found out by his Jñānabhrīṣṭi (a power of sight developed by Vīṣṇu by which one could see things far beyond the limits of his vision) that Śrīyā was practising austerities taking the form of a mare. Then Śrīyā went to her disguised as a horse and with her cooperation produced three children of which the first two bore are known as Aśvīnikumāras. The third son was called Revant. Then Śrīyā took Śrīyā to his place (Chapter 2, Aṇīka 3, Viṣṇu Purāṇa). Ślok 35 of Chapter 96 of Aḍī Parva states that Aśvīnikumāras were born from the nose of Śrīyā.

In the neighbourhood of the palace of Śrīyā there was a tapovan or a garden named Śrīnandana and it contained a lake similar to the Mānasī lake. In one corner of this tapovan a sage named Gāvanva was doing penance. He had been sitting there for so long a period without food meditating on a goddess that he was covered with plants and shrubs had grown over him. He was unaware of the growth around him. Once at this time Śrīyā with his wives and child followed by a large retinue entered the tapovan for recreation. The King and his wives entered the lake and Sukanyā with her friends moved about in the garden plucking flowers and playing. Moving about thus aimlessly Sukanyā and party reached the place where Gāvanva was doing penance. She saw the huge shrubry growth and while looking at it saw two gleaming points inside the shrubbery. She was about to break open the thing when from inside the bush she heard a voice address thus: “Oh, innocent girl, why do you think of doing this mischief? Please do go your way. I am an ascetic. What wrong have I done to you for you to disturb me like this?” But Sukanyā brought up as she was, as a very pet girl did not like anybody advising her like this and so taking a pointed stick gave two pricks at the site of the gleaming points and left the place thereby. The gleaming points were the eyes of Gāvanva and so he lost his eyes and suffered much from the pain. Though he felt angry he did not curse anybody. But slowly the country began to witness the evil effects of this cruel deed. People stepped out of their houses. Even animals were affected. The King and his ministers were worried. People came on deputation to the King to describe the disaster that had gripped the state. The King began to doubt that somebody must have done some great injury to the sage, Cyavana. He started enquiries asking his subjects one by one about this. But everybody replied in the negative. He searched the result was the same. Then one day while the King and his courtiers were sitting despondent Sukanyā approached her father and confessed what she had done. She said: "While I was playing with my friends in the tapawana I saw this huge shrub-brush and two points gleaming from it. I took a pin-stick and pricked them both and on drawing it out I found it wet also. But I left the matter there and never made any enquiries thereafter." Sāryāti now knew the cause of this national disaster and so immediately rushed to the sage for forgiveness. Prostrating before the āgho the King pleaded: "Oh, best of ātis, forgive us for this injury done unknowingly. My daughter who is only an innocent child did this playfully while she was playing in this garden with her friends. She pricked them without knowing that they were your eyes. Oh, the best of sages, thou art rich in forgivenesses and so please do condone this mischief and bless us!" Cyavana replied that he would forgive if he gave Sukanyā in marriage to him. Sāryāti was depressed. How could he give his only and beautiful daughter to this aged screech owl and blind rāja? While the King was thus pondering the matter, Sukriya, the friend of Cyavana, and said, "Oh, dear father, please do not worry on my account. I shall go as his wife. If he is satisfied the nation would be saved from a calamity and I am prepared to sacrifice my happiness for the sake of the country. I will be only too glad to do so." With suppressed unwillingness the King gave his daughter in marriage to Cyavana.

Sukanyā after her marriage engaged herself fully in the service of looking after the welfare of her husband. She gave her husband healthy and tasty fruits and vegetables, bathed him daily in hot water, placed before him all the materials for his puṣṭha and when the time came for his meal she gave him his food sitting by his side. After the meal she gave him a bath and only after putting him to bed would she go to attend to her own affairs. After finishing her meal she would come again to her husband and sit by his side massaging him. In the evening she would make ready all the things required for the puṣṭha and after the puṣṭha feed him with nourishing food. When she remained after the feed would be taken by her. At night she would be at the foot of her husband and take a nap. In the morning she would attend to all the ablutions of her husband. Thus Sukanyā lived true to her husband always anxious to please him. Then one day the Āśvinikumāras saw her going to the āśrama after her bath. They were very much attracted by the stunning beauty of the maiden they approached her and asked: "Oh, beautiful maiden, who are you? We are Āśvinikumāras. You seem to be alone. How did you happen to come to this place? Are you one who should always move about with friends and courtiers and what is the reason for your living like this?"

Sukanyā replied, "Revered Dēvas, I am the daughter of Sāryāti and wife of Cyavana. Forced by certain circumstances my father gave me in marriage to this sage who is very old and kind. He is living in the āśrama nearby. I am living with him looking after his comfort. If you think it convenient you can come and accept our hospitality." Hearing this the Āśvinikumāras told her thus: "Sweet girl, you are fit to be the wife of one who is better than this blind old ascetic. So please do accept one of us as your husband." Sukanyā did not wish to talk and thus answered them: "If they did not force me to draw stopping such blubbering she would curse them to ashes. The Āśvindevas were a bit surprised and also frightened at the attitude of Sukanyā. "Oh, Princess, we are immensely pleased at your sense of righteousness and chastity and you can ask of us a boon. We are physicians of the devas and can give your husband his sight and can also make him young and virile. But there is a condition for this. As soon as your husband becomes young and handsome we will also become like him and then you can select one among us. Are you willing? If so we will make your husband charming and handsome at this instant.

Sukanyā was well pleased with this offer but the condition placed did not satisfy her. She ran to the āśrama and told her husband thus: "He is the one who has given the Āśvindevas on my way from the river after my bath and enamoured of my beauty they have made this offer. We will make your husband young and beautiful giving him back his eyesight and then we will change ourselves to resemble him. You have then to select one of us as your husband. I am not able to understand their cunning and so I have come to ask you. Please answer my question. I am anxious to see you young and handsome with your eyesight regained. I shall do as you direct."

Cyavana said: "There is nothing in this for great thinking. You go and tell them that you would do as they wish and bring them down here. On hearing this Sukanyā went to the Āśvinikumāras and took them to the āśrama. They asked Cyavana to take a dip in the lake nearby and as he entered the lake the Āśvindevas also entered it and took a dip in its waters along with Cyavana. Lo! As they rose from the waters all the three became young and handsome looking alike. The Āśvindevas then requested Sukanyā to select one among them. Sukanyā was in a fix and she prayed to her goddess to give her power to identify her husband. She was blessed with that power and she selected Cyavana from the lot at which the Āśvindevas were also pleased. (Seventh Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata.)

4) Cyavana's gratitude. Cyavana who got back his eyesight and youth and asked the Āśvinikumāras what boon they wanted. They then told him thus: "We are the physicians of the devas Dēvendra has unnecessarily put a ban on our drinking Soma (juice extracted from the creeper Soma). When Brahmin performed a yāga at Mahāmeru this leader of the devas did not allow us to take a soma drink. If you are capable of doing it you should get us the right to take this celestial drink." Cyavana promised to do that.

Before long, King Sāryāti and his wife came to the āśrama to enquire about the welfare of their daughter. To their great amazement they found a young and handsome ascetic at the āśrama and were a bit suspicious of the character of their daughter. But soon all doubts were cleared and they were immensely pleased. Cyavana then told the King the request of the Aśvinidevas and Śaryāti also promised his help on this matter. On their return to their palace Śaryāti decided to perform a big yāga to which all the devas were also invited. Cyavana officiated as priest. The Aśvinidevas were also present quite to the dislike of Indra. The time came for distributing soma, and when Cyavana called the Aśvinikumāras to take their share Indra objected saying that since they were magicians of the devas they could not be given that drink. Cyavana argued against that and after a great verbal combat Cyavana succeeded in making the Aśvinikumāras take the drink. For more details look under ‘Cyavana’. (Seventh Skanda, Devī Bhāgavata).

5) Other information regarding Aśvinikumāras.
(1) How they tested Upamaṇu. This story is given under the word Apoḍadānya.
(2) Birth of Nakula and Sahadeva. Kunti, wife of Pāṇḍu, had obtained from Sage Durvāsas five sacred mantras, the chanting of each of which would give her a child. Even before her marriage Kunti tested the power of the mantras by chanting one of them. Śrīya appeared and she had to take a son from him who became the famous Kṛṣṇa. Kunti then chanted the second, third and fourth mantras on Yama, Vāyu and Indra. Kunti got respectively the sons Dharma, Bhima and Arjuna. The fifth mantra she gave to Mādrī and she mediated on the Aśvinidevas and got Nakula and Sahadeva.
(3) The Aśvinidevas were present for the marriage of Pāṇḍu. (Śloka 6, Chapter 186, Aśva Parva, M.B.).
(4) During the marriage ceremony the Kāṇḍava the Aśvinideva stood on the side of Arjuna.
(5) King Yuvanaśīva became pregnant and bore a child. It was the Aśvinideva who took the child out by surgery. The boy became known as Māndhātā later. (Śloka 3, Chapter 62, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).
(6) During the Mahābhārata battle the Aśvinidevas handed over some Paradās to the god, Śakunda. (Śloka 28, Chapter 43, Śaiva Parva, M.B.).
(7) The Aśvinidevas like very much oblations of Ghee. The others who like it are Brhpaśā, Paṇḍu, Bhṛga and Pānaka (Śloka 7, Chapter 65, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).
(8) The month of Āśvin (October-November) is the month of Aśvinikumāras and if a man gives ghee to the Brahmins freely in that month he will acquire more physical beauty. (Śloka 10, Chapter 65, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).
(9) One who offers Ghee as oblation to the fire for twelve months in succession will reach the country of the Aśvinikumāras. (Śloka 95, Chapter 107, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).
(10) The great poet of Kerala, Vallathur, in his commentary on the 93rd Śūkla of the Rgveda states that there is a belief that the Aśvins and Āditi (the Sun and Moon) are one and the same.
(11) Dīghaṇḍravas son of Dīghaṇḍras was once prayed to the Aśvinidevas to get rain and it is said that they gave a downpour of sweet water. (Rgveda, Śūkta 112, Rk 11).
(12) Once a sage named Gavanna was lost in a desert and craved bitterly for drinking water. He prayed to the Aśvinidevas for water and they dug a well itself in the desert and quenched the thirst of the sage. (Rk 9, Śūkta 16, Rgveda).
(13) The sage Dādhyānce taught the Aśvinidevas the technique, Madhuvidī. There is an interesting story about it. It was Indra who taught this to Dādhyānce and while teaching him he had threatened that if he gave away that secret to anybody else his head would be cut off. Aśvinidevas found a way to tide over this difficulty. They at first cut off his head and fixed the head of a horse on him. It was with the head of a horse that Dādhyānce taught them Madhuvidī and as soon as the teaching was over his head was cut off and the real head placed in its p.l.c. (Rk 22, Śūkta 116, Rgveda).
(14) Once a boy named Durvāsas who was a flute player. The Aśvinidevas were present and they meditated on him by prayer and offerings. (Rk 16, Śūkta 115, Rgveda).
(15) Once Śrīya decided to give his daughter in marriage to the owner of the horse which would win a horse-race which Śrīya would conduct. In the race the horse of the Aśvinidevas won and they thus married Śrīya’s daughter. (Rk 17, Śūkta 117, Rgveda).
(16) The Aśvinikumāras killed an asura of name Visvak and destroyed his dynasty also. (Rk 16, Śūkta 117, Rgveda).

AŚVINIKUMĀRATIRTHA. It is believed that the physical beauty of man would be increased if he bathe in this lake. (Śloka 17, Chapter 83, Vana Parva, P.B.).

AŚVINISUTA. A son born to Śrīya of the wife of Sutapā. There is this story about it in Brhamvata Purāṇa. Once when the wife of Sutapā was on a pilgrimage Śrīya happened to see her. The beautiful and venerable lady refused to accede to the desire of Śrīya and so the latter used force and took her. They had a son who was named Aśvinisuta. On her return after the pilgrimage with her son she explained all that happened and the sage sent both of them out. Śrīya taught his son Aśvinisuta astrology and made him a master in that science. Knowing that, Sutapā cursed him and said he would turn to be one very diseased. Later the sage amended his curse and added that he would be free from disease if he worshipped the sun.

AŚVINITIRTHA. Promises bodily splendor if one takes a bath in this lake. (Śloka 21, Chapter 25, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

ATALA. This is one of the seven sections of Pātañā. The seven sections are: Atalā, Vīnatā, Sutatā, Tālātāla, Mahātāla, Raśatāla, Pātañā. Of them Atalā has been described as follows: Atalā is the first world of Pātañā. There resides Bāla, the son of Maya who is the famous but hungry magician. He has created 96 Mayas who are capable of granting all kinds of desires. Even now certain persons who are interested in the practice of Black magic, learn some of these 96 arts and practice them. When this mighty fellow opens his mouth for yawning, three groups of women known as Pundālis, Śvātanī and Kāminī emerge from his mouth. He has with him a ray of light called hintaka with which he can easily enter and seduce all who enter Atalā and try to strengthen them for satisfying his lust. After enticing them with it, he enjoys uncontrolled pleasure with them, showering on them his amorous glances, bewitching smiles and embraces. (Devī Bhāgavata, Asāma Skandha).

ATAVISIKHARA. Name of a village in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 48).

ATHARVA. Among the Vedas, this has the fourth place. It comprises different kinds of incantations of occult powers for the destruction of enemies. Atharvan, the son of Vaśiṣṭha was the author of this Veda. In Chapter 46, the third section of Vīṣṇu Purāṇa the following reference is made to Atharvaveda: "Sumanu Mahāraśi who was of infinite glory, first taught this Atharvaveda to his disciple Kābdanā. (Sumanu Mahāraśi was the son of Jaimini, who was the disciple of Vedavyāsa). Kābdanā divided Atharvaveda into two parts and communicated them to two Mahāraśis named Devavāda and Pathya. Devavāda's disciple was Medhā, Brahmagaj, Sauktikāyana and Pippalāda. Pathya had three disciples named Jāmeli, Kumuddādhi and Śāmakā. They also made Atharvaveda compilations, Sāmaka divided his composition into two and gave one part to Bāhrū and the other to Śaṅdhave. Mūtikāśa divided it into three parts. The four divisions of the Atharvaveda—Nakṣatrakalpa, Vedukalpa, Śaṅkārkāpa, Āngiraskaḷa and Śāntikalpa—were made by Mūtikēśa Nakṣatrakalpa contains Bāhrū's works. Śaṅkārkāpa contains Mantra Viniśca. Āngiraskaḷa contains Śaṅkārakaṇa and Śāntikalpa contains names of horses, elephants etc.

The mantras (incantations) in Atharvaveda and their uses are as below:

ATIBALA I. This muni is referred to in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 50, as a professional chaplain of Chandaveda. Once under the curse of Bṛhad Mahāraśi, Agni hid himself under the sea. (See "AGNI"). At that time, it was Atharvā who, as the suggestion of the Devas, went under the water and discovered Agni. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 8).

Atharvā recovered Agni and re-created the worlds which were lying dormant owing to the absence of fire. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 19).

Atharvā was born from Brahmā's late Wife. His wife was Śānti, the daughter of Kardama. Gitti was another name for Śānti. But there are some Purāṇas which refer to Gitti as another wife of Atharvā. Also, there are Purāṇas which say that Atharvā was Āṅgiras himself.

ATIBALA II. This name has been used as a synonym of Śiva. (M.B., Anukśa Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 91).

ATIBALA III. In Rigveda another Atharvā may be seen. It is said that he was the author of the Atharvaveda. After learning Brahmāvīrā from Brahmā, it was this Atharvā who first brought fire to the earth from heaven. Atharvā had two wives named Śānti and Gitti. Thus Atharvā was the same person as Atharvāna, the son of Vaśiṣṭha. (Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha, Chapter 1).

ATHARVĀNGIRAS. See ĀNGIRAS.

ATHARVANA. A son of Vaśiṣṭha. (Bhāgavata, Fourth Skandha, Verse 42).

ĀTTHIKA (M). Name of a Janasthāna (Town) in ancient India. (M.B., Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 64).

ĀTTHU. He was a Gandharva born to Kaśyapa by his wife Pradhā. He had three brothers: Hāha, Hiḥhū and Tumburu. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 51).

ĀTIBALA. A matrika. Vaśāṃtira who took the boys Rāma and Lakṣmana to the forest taught them two mantras, Balā and Atibala, to liberate them from hunger and thirst. Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bālapāda, Sarga 22).

ATIBALA I. The Maharsi Atibala was the cause of the death of Śri Rāma and Lakṣmana.

After the war with Rāvaṇa, Śri Rāma returned to Ayodhya with his remise and began his reign. After renouncing Sītā while Śri Rāma was living in the palace with Lakṣmana, Śatrughna and their families, one day Brahmā summoned Yama and said: "Śri Rāma is the incarnation of Mahāviṣṇu. He has fulfilled all the purposes of the incarnation. Now Viṣṇu has to be recalled to Vaikuntha."

On hearing this, Yama assuming the guise of a Sanāyāsī named Atibala appeared before Śri Rāma. He said he had to tell a secret to Śri Rāma. Accordingly Śri Rāma sent everyone else out of the audience chamber.
Lakṣmīna was asked to guard the entrance. It was announced that if anyone entered the hall, Lakṣmīna would be killed. At this stage, Mahārāja Duṣṭodvas arrived at the entrance accompanied by many of his disciples. He had come after havng performed penance for a thousand years and in great hunger and thirst. He wanted to see the king as a sign of auspicious food. Lakṣmīna refused him, but Duṣṭodvas refused to do so. He even threatened, that he would reduce all of them to ashes by his curse. Finding no alternative, Lakṣmīna entered the hall and informed Śrī Rāma of the situation. Duṣṭodvas was given a sumptuous meal. But for the fulfillment of the condition Lakṣmīna's death became necessary. Śrī Rāma cried with a broken heart. The honest Lakṣmīna went alone to the Sarayū river and drowned himself in its depths. Soon after, Śrī Rāma entrusting the affairs of the state to others and in the absence of thousands of spectators plunged into the Sarayū river and renouncing his earthly life, returned to Vaikunṭha.

(Uttara Rāmāyana)

ATĪBALA II. The name of a follower given to Skanda by his father in battle-field. (M.B., Śāliya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 14)

ATĪBALA III. There was another King named Atībala, who was a great scholar in Nītikāśa. From the time of his accession to the throne, he began to lead a virtuous life. This Atībala's father was a King named Anangā. (M.B., Śāliya Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 92)

ATĪBHĪMA. One of the sons of the Agni, Tapa. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 79)

ATIKAYA. One of the sons of Rāvana.

1) Purusā Birth. This is a story concerning the initial stage of the creation of the Universe. After completing the task of creation Brahmā, in his pride fell into a sleep. In order to slight Brahmā a little, Mahāviṣṇu produced two Rākṣasas called Madhu and Kaśītabha from his ears. Having their territory near Brahmā woke up in fear and fled to Mahāviṣṇu seeking refuge. Viṣṇu called Madhu and Kaśītabha and asked them what boon they would like to ask. They proudly replied that they would grant a boon to Viṣṇu. In that case Mahāviṣṇu wanted them to grant him leave to kill them. They answered: “We will not break our promise about granting the boon. But since our passion for fighting has not been aborted, you must fulfill our eager desire.” Mahāviṣṇu said: “I agree. But let my boon be carried out first. After that I shall see that your wish is properly fulfilled. After your death, one of you will be reborn under the name of Kharā and the other under the name of Atīkāya. In the Tretāyuga I shall kill Kharā in single combat after allaying his passion for fighting. Lakṣmīna, who is the incarnation of Ananta will fight with Atīkāya to his full satisfaction and kill him. Thus both of you will get Virakti and Mukti.”

2) Birth. There is a story about the birth of Atīkāya in the Yuddha Kāṇḍa of Kamba Rāmāyana, Yuddha Kāṇḍa.

3) Birth. There is a story about the birth of Atīkāya and the Yuddha Kāṇḍa of Kamba Rāmāyana, Yuddha Kāṇḍa. After his victory over Kubera Rāvana was returning in his Purpaka Viṁāna. On his way he saw some beautiful Gandharva women playing in the valley of Mayūragiri. Their leader was Cīṅgū, the wife of Cīṅgūgada. Rāvana seduced her and had a secret union with her. At once she became pregnant and gave birth to a dazzlingly bright baby. The mother handed over the child to Rāvana and returned to the world. The Gandharva, Rāvana, in his paternal love, took the child into the Viṁāna and proceeded. On the way, the Viṁāna knocked against a mountain peak and the baby was thrown overboard and fell in the forest. Rāvana stopped the Viṁāna and brought the child to the forest. He found the child without the slightest injury. smiling and lying on a flat rock in the deep woods. He failed in his attempt to take it up even though he used ten of his hands. The child began to grow steadily in size. Then he tried again to lift the baby up using all his twenty arms. The boy, who had by this time grown into enormous size, suddenly sprang up and getting into the Viṁāna took his seat in it. Rāvana gave him the name Atīkāya. On his arrival in Lanka, he presented him as adopted son to the barren Bhāyamasā. Atīkāya was brought up by Bhāyamasā.

4) The Birth. Atīkāya went to Gokarna and did penance to please Brahmā. Brahmā appeared, but being fully absorbed in salvation Atīkāya was not aware of his presence. Even his idol-breadth had been absorbed by Brahmā, by his power, instilled life-breath into him and restored him to consciousness. He granted Atīkāya all the boons he asked for. They were three in number. The first was the gift of Brahmā's which could smash anyone. The second was the gift of an arm which was unassailable by anyone. The third was absence of thirst, desire and other craving.

5) Education. Atīkāya went to Kaikīṣa and received his education from Śīva. He learnt all the sciences, Arts, Sruti, Smṛti etc. from there. On the completion of his course he asked what Giriḍakāśī he should pay. Śīva made him promise that he would never practice Black magic. Pleased with him, Śīva awarded him the Pārākṣa.

6) Victory in Battle. Atīkāya had an uncle, a Rākṣasa named Candra. Once he was defeated by Indra. It was at this time of chagrin that he came to know that Atīkāya had reached Lanka with the Pārākṣa. Candra Rākṣasa ordered Atīkāya to bring Indra as a captive. Atīkāya went to Śvarga (Heaven) and began a war with Indra. Mahāviṣṇu who came to help Indra used his Sudarshana Cakra over the Pārākṣa. Knowing Atīkāya's history well, Mahāviṣṇu brought the battle to a close. Both parties accepted the position that Devendra had lost the battle and Atīkāya had won.

7) Death. In the Rāmāyaṇa battle Atīkāya fought on the side of Rāvana. After a most terrible conflict, Lakṣmīna killed Atīkāya. (Kamba Rāmāyana, Yuddha Kāṇḍa)

ATILOMA. An Asura who was killed by Śrī Kaśṭa. (M.B., Śabha Parva, Chapter 38)

ATIMANYU. He was one of the ten sons of Maru.

ATIRRATHA. There was a King named Matācirā in Puruṣvāna. (See Pārvatvāma). Four sons were born to him: Taunu, Mahāva, Pārītha and Druhyu. (M.B., Arika Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 11)

ATIRRATHA. He was one of the ten children born to Manu by Nadvākā. (See MANU VĀMA). Kuru, Puru, Sudāvyāna, Tapaśvā, Sātyavān, Śuci, Agniṣṭoma, Atīrratha, Sudāvyāna and Atīrratha were the names of the ten brilliant sons of Nalvalá. (Vśnu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 15).

ATIṢĀDA. After his death Balabhadra Rāma went to Pāṭāla in the guts of Agastya. All the serpents worshipped him. Among them was a serpent named Atiṣāda. (M.B., Māvasīla Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

ATIṢĀKRVĀNA Vīndhyā presented two ārāṇḍas to Skanda on the battlefield. They were Atiṣākṛavāna and Uetchhīraga. (M.B., Sāya Parva, Chapter 43, Verses 49, 50).

ATIṢIHIRA Mahāśeṇu presented two ārāṇḍas named Atiṣīhaira and Sīhara to Skanda on the battlefield. (M.B., Sāya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 48).

ATIṬI (guest). In ancient Bhārata Atithi-sāvatikara (hospitality to a guest) was considered as a yajña. In Manusmṛti, Chapter 100, Verse 3, it is said that even if one lives on the scattered grains in the fields after harvest, and even if penance is offered in the midst of Pāṛcīgnī (five fires) unless the Brahmin who comes as a guest is fed, all virtuous deeds would be useless. Besides, Manus has made the following remarks about the Atithi (guest).

“A new visitor at night must be treated as an Atithi. An Atithi is one who comes occasionally, not daily. But he is like a village and goes about as a vagabond for a living, does not deserve to be treated as an Atithi. The guest who comes either before or after mealtime should not be sent away without being fed. Even a Vāsya or Sūdra who comes as a guest to a Brahmin’s house has to be given food when the servants are given food.”

ATĪVĀCA. He was a King referred to in the Rgveda. He had another name, “Divodāsa.” This King had fought several battles against Asuras with the help of Indra. It is said that once, being afraid of the Asuras, he tried to hide himself under the water. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 10; Sākta 53; Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 10, Sākta 112).

ATIVĀCARA Himavān gave Skanda two ārāṇḍas on the battlefield. They were Avavācaras and Suvavācaras. (M.B., Sāya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 46).

ATIVĀCARA. God Varuna gave Skanda on the battlefield two ārāṇḍas (attendant soldiers). One of them was Yama and the other was Atiyāma. (M.B., Sāya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 45).

ATRI.

1) The son of Brahmā. Atri Mahārāja was one of the mānasputras of Brahmā. The mānasputras were: Marici, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, and Kratu. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 10).

2) Or of the Sāysters. Brahmā’s sons, Marici, Aṅgiras, Atri, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu and Vāsiṣṭha are known as: Sāysteryas (seven sages). (M.B., Santi Parva, Chapter 206).

3) Great of the practitioners. The sage Prācinabhāraka was born in the family of Atri Mahārāja Ten Pracetas (Prapātās) were born as the sons of this Muni. (M.B., Sakti Parva, Chapter 208).

4) Cita Śikhandi. Among the seven Munis known as Cita Śikhanda, we see Atri Mahārāja as one of the Aṣṭapracetas which form the basis of the Upaniṣads. (M.B., Sakti Parva, Chapter 208).

ATRI became Atri’s son. Kayapa had a son named Kaśipu. He was a very mighty ruler and carried on his reign in an ungodly manner. In a terrible battle which took place at that time between the Devas and Asuras Kaśipu was killed Prablītā became the Asura King. Then there was a battle between Indra and Prahlāda. After six years’ war, Prahlāda withdrew. Later Mahāvīra, the son of Vīroczana (grandson of Prahlāda) became emperor of Asuras. War broke out again between Mahāvīra and Indra. In this war, Mahāvīra helped Indra. The Asuras were utterly defeated. They sought refuge with Śukra, the Asura guru. Śukra promised to help them. He set out to the Himālaya to receive a posthumous remembrance from Śiva. The Asuras kept waiting for Śukra’s return. At this stage, Mahāvīra who was the protector of Indra, came to Śukra’s abode and killed Śukra’s mother, Kāyavāmā. Seeing this impudence of Mahāvīra, Bhṛgu Mahārāja was enraged and cursed him that he should be born many times in human births. It is on account of this that Mahāvīra had to take many avatāras (incarnations). It was in this way that Mahāvīra incarnated as Dattatreyā, the son of Atri (Devī Bhāgavata, 4th Skanda).

(2) Atri and Parāśara. It was a time when Vāsīṣṭha and Viśvāmitra were in a state of mutual ill-will. Once King Kalmāśāpāda was going about in the forest on a hunting expedition. He met Śakti, the eldest son of Vāsīṣṭha in the forest. The King did not respect him properly. Śakti transformed Kalmāśāpāda into a Rākṣasa by his curse. The Rākṣasa who was also a cannibal, first swallowed Śakti himself Viśvāmitra offered whatever help he could, to destroy Vāsīṣṭha’s family Kalmāśāpāda ate successively all the 100 sons of Vāsīṣṭha Vāsīṣṭha, in great sorrow and Śakti’s wife, Advīṣṭa lived in an āśrama. Atri Mahārāja was present there with Parāśara. In due course, she gave birth to a boy who was called Parāśara and who later on became the father of Viśvāsa when Parāśara grew up, he came to know that his father Śakti was eaten by the Rākṣasa. Enraged at this, he started a yajña to annihilate the whole race of Rākṣasas. As the yajña gained intensity and force Atri Muni arrived there with certain other Mahārājas and transformed Parāśara from the yajña. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 161).

(3) Atri’s dispute with Vaiṇya. Atri Mahārāja and his wife once got ready to go for Vaiṇya. At that time the poor Mahārāja’s wife was in great distress because they had no money to be distributed to their disciples and children. She requested her husband to go to King Vaiṇya and to beg for some money. Accordingly, the Mahārāja visited King Vaiṇya at his yāgaśāla (The shed where a yāga is held). He began to flatter Vaiṇya by saying that he was the first among kings and so on. Vaiṇya did not like it. He began to dispute with Atri. Vaiṇya remarked that Indra was the first King. To settle the dispute they went together to Sanākūmāra Muni. Sanākūmāra sent them away reconciled. After that Vaiṇya gave Atri much wealth. After distributing all this wealth among their sons and disciples Atri and his wife set out to the forest to perform penance.

(4) Atri became Sun and Moon. Once there was a fierce battle between Devas and Asuras. Owing to the shower of arrows from the Asuras, the Sun and Moon became dim. Darkness spread everywhere. The Devas began to grope in the dark. They requested Atri Mahārāja to find a remedy for this. Moved by their distress, Atri suddenly transformed himself into the Sun and Moon. The Moon gave light to the Devas. The Sun burnt up the Asuras by his intense heat. Thus the Devas were saved. This story was told by Vaiṇya Bhaga-vana, to Arjuna. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 136).

6. Atri and King Vṛṣāṇiti. In the Mahābhārata we find a different of opinion between King Vṛṣāṇiti and some Mahārāṣṭra. This story was told by Bhishma to Yudhishṭhira about the kind of persons from whom Brahmans may accept gifts. Once the Munis, Kāśyapa, Atri, Vasīṣṭha, Bharadvaja, Gautama, Viśvamitra, Jamadagni, and Pañcarṣaṇa, with Aruṇadhiti and Gandā, who were the wives of two Munis, came around the world. Their object was to go to Brahmaloka. At that time there was drought in the world. King Vṛṣāṇiti, the son of Sibi, suggested that the above-mentioned Munis should be called and given wealth. They refused to accept it. Vṛṣāṇiti became angry. He performed Homa in Āhavantyagnā and from the aṅgukūṭa, the Kāṣaṇi Yatudhāni (Kṣatya) arose. Vṛṣāṇiti sent Yatudhāni to destroy Atri and all other Munis. As Yatudhāni was guarding a lotus pond in the forest, the munis led by Atri happened to come that way. The Mahārāṣṭra were able to recognize Yatudhāni. They beat her with their tridāṇḍa (Trident or a kind of magic wand) and reduced her to ashes. After satisfying their hunger by eating the lotus flowers that the Mahārāṣṭra went to Brahmaloka. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 49).

6. Atri and Śraddhā. There is a passage in the Mahābhārata in which Atri gives advice to the emperor Nimi who belonged to Atri’s family. The story of how Śraddhā originated in the world into which Bhishma had told Dharma-patna was told by Atri. A son named Dattātreya was born to Atri, the son of Brahmā. Dattātreya became King. Nimi was his son. Nimi’s son died after one thousand years. Nimi, who was in deep grief at the death of his son, ordained a Śraddhā in memory of his son. On that occasion Atri Mahārāṣṭra came there and explained to Nimi the importance of Śraddhā. (M.B., Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 91, Verses 20-44).

7. How Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Mahāviṣṇu (Śaiva) were born as sons of Atri. There was no other woman in the Purāṇas who surpasses Śilāvati in her beauty. In order to be Ugraśārvas, her husband, in order to satisfy his passion, she once carried him on her own shoulders to a prostitute’s house. On the way, Māṇḍavya Nimi pronounced a curse that Ugraśārvas should die before sunrise. The grief-stricken Śilāvati pronounced a counter-curse that the sun should not rise on the next day. As the sun failed to rise, the Trimūrti (Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva), accompanied by Anuśaṇā, Atri’s wife, went to Śilāvati. Anuśaṇā persuaded Śilāvati to withdraw her curse. The Trimūrti who were happy at the success of their mission (of bringing about the Sunrise) asked Anuśaṇā to demand any boon she wanted. Anuśaṇā expressed her wish that the Trimūrti (Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Śiva) should be born as her sons and they agreed.

Mahāviṣṇu, under the name of Dattātreya, was born as the son of Anuśaṇā. Śiva was born to her under the name of Durgā. There is a story about it in the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa. Once Śiva got angry with the Devas. They began to flee for life. But Brahmā alone did not run away. Śiva, who became more furious at this, chased off one of the heads of Brahmā. Still he was not pacified. Pārvati who was alarmed, approached Śiva and begged him to suppress his anger. At her request, Śiva’s fury was transferred and deposited in Anuśaṇā, Atri’s wife. Durgā is the embodiment of that element of Śiva’s fury.

According to the promise, Brahmā also took his bath at the moon from Anuśaṇā, the wife of Atri. (For that story, see PURUŚVARVAS). There is a story about that also in the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa. Once when Brahmā was performing the task of creation, he experienced carnal passion. Śravaṇavi was the offspring of that passion. When Brahmā saw her, he fell in love with her also. This made him feel angry towards Anuśaṇā. He pronounced a curse that Anuśaṇā should be burnt up in the fire from Śiva’s eye. (This is why Kāma was later burnt to death by Śiva). Although Kāma had retreated from Brahmā his passion had not been suppressed. Brahmā transferred his passion to Atri Mahārāṣṭra. The Mahārāṣṭra gave it to Anuśaṇā, his wife. Since she was unable to bear such a violent passion, she gave it back to her husband. That passion emerged from Atri’s eye in the form of the Moon. This is why lovers experience strong passion for each other at the time of the rising of the moon (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 39-43).

8. Atri and Gāngā Devī. Once, while Atri Mahārāṣṭra was performing penance in Kāmātaka, there was a terrible drought in the country. At that time, his wife Anuśaṇā made a Śiva-līṅga and offered worship to it. Then Atri asked her to give him a little water. There was no water anywhere. Suddenly Gāṅgā Devī appeared there and said to Anuśaṇā: “There will be a hole here. Water will come out of it in a torrent.” Pure water began to flow from the place pointed out by Gāṅgā Devī. Anuśaṇā begged Gāṅgā Devī to stay there for a month. Gāṅgā Devī agreed to do so on condition that Anuśaṇā would transfer her Tapṣa (siṣṭi) to her for one month.

Atri was pleased by drinking the water. He asked Anuśaṇā where she got such sweet fresh water. She explained to him all matters Atri expressed his desire to see Gāṅgā Devī. She appeared before him at once. Anuśaṇā said to Gāṅgā: “You should continue to exist in the world always Gāṅgā Devī answered her that she would do so if Anuśaṇā was prepared to give her the fruit of one year’s Tapas, and of devoted service to her husband Anuśaṇā agreed to that condition. Suddenly Śiva appeared there in the shape of a Linga. At the request of Atri and Anuśaṇā Śiva blessed both and blessed Anuśaṇā, the mahā Viṣṇu in the present. Anuśaṇā, assuming the name of “Atriśaṇa”, (Śiva Purāṇa).

9. Other Details. 1. Besides Dattātreya, Durgā and Candra, Atri had another son, Prāchārāṇu (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 6).
2. Many Pārvatīs had been born in Atri Vanśa. (M.B., Van Parva, Chapter 222, Verses 27-29).
3. When the Kaurava-Pandava war was raging with great fury, many Mahārāṣṭra went to Droṇa and advised him to stop the battle. Atri Mahārāṣṭra was one of them. (M.B., Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190, Verse 35).
4. On another occasion, a King named Sūra performed a Rājājyot (Royal sacrifice). Atri Mahārāṣṭra was the chief priest at this yajña. (M.B., Sūrya Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 47).
5. Atri was also among the Mahārāṣṭra who had gone to witness Parākṣārāma’s tapas. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 64).
6. Rgveda. 5th Mandala was composed by Atri. (Rgveda Samhita, Preface).
7. Once the Asuras put Atri Maharsi into the Satakavya yantra (a machine of torture with a hundred holes). Rgveda, 1st Mandala, 16th Anuvaka, Sukta 31).
8. Once the Asuras tried to burn Atri alive. (Rgveda, 1st Mandala, 16th Anuvaka, Sukta 12).
9. This happened at another time. Atri lied down in a machine with a large number of holes and tried to burn him alive in that time. At that time he prayed to the Asuras and they liberate him. (Rgveda, 1st Mandala, 17th Anuvaka, Sukta 116).
10. Atri was among the Maharsis who visited Sri Rama, on his return to Ayodhya after the war with Karna. (Uttara Ramayana).
11. From the navel lotus of Vishnu Brahman was born, Atri from Brahma, Soma from Atri, and Purusha from Soma were born. (Agni Purana, Chapter 12).

Atri III. In the Puranas another Atri, the son of Suka, is also seen. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 27).

Atri III. The term Atri has been used as an epithet of Siva. (M.B., Aniśāna Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 38).

Atri. This word means Mahasvami (Siva). (Agni Purana, Chapter 48).

Auddaka. This is the place where Narasimha with his two daughters was once imprisoned. It is a plateau on the top of Mathapavata. Because water was in plenty there the place was called "Audhaka". An asura named Naru was the keeper of this plateau. (Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

Auddakasha A holy place of ancient India. The place got this name because the sage Audhaka lived there. It is believed that one bath in this holy place one will be absolved of all his sins.

Auddakasha A king of the state of Udumbra. This king once paid respects to emperor Yadugiriva and gave him several presents and gifts. (Sloka 12, Chapter 53, Sabhā Parva, M.B.).

Aukhyā A glorifying prayer in Sarasveda. (Sloka 134, Vana Parva, M.B.).

Aurisaka A country of ancient India. Sri Karna conquered this land. (Sloka 19, Chapter 11, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

Aurla (Urvā, Uṛgā). A fierce saint of the line of Bhrgu Maharsi.

Vāvana Maharsi married Āra, daughter of Manu. Ayurva was her child who was the grandfather of Jamadagni and the great-grandfather of Parāśurāma.

2. Birth The Preceptors of the Bhrgu dynasty were the hereditary gurus of the Kings of Hehaya. Kṛṣṇavaṇi a famous King of the Hehaya dynasty and father of Kṛṣṇavaṇi-jena had his education from a Bhrgu guru living in his Śama. On completing his education the king paid lavishly and the Bhrgus became rich thereafter. Kṛṣṇavaṇi died and his son did not very much like the Bhrgus (Bhrgus) becoming rich with the wealth of their ancestors. Knowing this the Bhrgus started burying their wealth underground. Once a Kṛṣṇa king forcibly dug out from the house of a Bhrgu the wealth he had safely buried and from that day onwards the Kṛṣṇayas and the Bhārgavas became enemies. The Bhrgus were hunted down by the Kṛṣṇayas kings and the Bhārgavas frightened by this move left their abode and went and hid in caves in mountains far away. Among those who thus fled was Arjuna, wife of Cevana. Arjuna was pregnant at that time and she hid her 'Gurhas' in her thighs while fleeing. She bore a boy who saw this and informed the Kṛṣṇayas and they immediately went and caught hold of her. Then the thief broke and a boy came out of it. Because he was born from the thighs the boy was named Ayurva. (Uṛgā - Thigh and so, born of a thigh). (Chapter 179, Adi Parva, M.B.).

4. Auvira and Badalvā. Ayurva bore a deep grudge against the Kṛṣṇayas who had massacred his forefathers. Ayurva started doing rigorous penance and by the force of his austeritys the world started to burn. At this stage the Pīrs appeared before him and persuaded him to withdraw from his penance. Ayurva then told them thus: - "Pīrs, while I was lying in the thigh-womb of my mother I heard hideous groans from outside and they were of our mothers when they saw the heads of our fathers being cuffed by the swords of the Kṛṣṇayas. Even from the womb itself I murmured a fierce hatred towards the Kṛṣṇayas. The Bhrgu wealth was raised before the pitiable walls of our mothers'.

The Pīrs were astounded at the firmness of the vow of Ayurva and horrified at the thought of what would happen if the penance was continued. They pleaded again to cease his austeritys and then submitting to their request Ayurva withdrew the fire of his penance and forced it down into the sea. It is now believed that this fire taking the shape of a horse-head is still living underneath the sea vomiting heat at all times. This fire is called Badalvā. More about this can be had under the head Badalvā. (Chapter 180, Adi Parva, M.B.).

5. Ayurva and the birth of Sagara. Ayodhya was once ruled by a celebrated King of Ikshvaku dynasty named Subhā. He had as his wife Yādavi a good natured and well behaved woman who was a gem among queens. One day Śāljarṣa, a King of the Hehaya line of rulers who was then the King of Māhiṣmati defeated Subhā in a battle. Yādavi was then pregnant. Jealous co-wives poisoned her; Yādavi did not die but the poison affected the child in the womb.

After the defeat, Subhā and Yādavi went and stayed with Ayurva in his Āśrama. For seven years they lived there and then Subhā died. Grief-stricken Yādavi was about to jump into the funeral pyre and end her life when Ayurva stopped her from the act pointing out that she was soon to deliver a child. After a few months she delivered a son and Ayurva called him 'Sagara' meaning one with 'gāra' (poison) in him. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapters 16, 17).

6. Ayurva and the sister of Garguṇa. Garguṇa, son of Vināśa, had a sister named Sumati. Upāmanu, a sage, wanted to marry her but neither she nor her relatives liked it. Enraged at this the sage cursed Sumati saying that the brahmin who married her would have his head burnt. The marriage of Sumati thus remained a problem for her parents. There was a friend of Vinaśa, a sannyāsī, living in a forest and to find a way to escape from the curse Vinaśa sent Garuda to him. The sannyāsī advised Garuda to approach Aura to find a solution for the problem and Aura was therefore approached for advice.

It was at this time that the people of Ayodhyā came in search of Subāhu and Yadavi who had left them years before. When they were plunged in sorrow but were glad to know a son of Subāhu, Sagara, had grown up to be a successor to Subāhu. When Garuda made Aura acquainted with the pitiable tale of his sister Aura declared that Sumati should marry a Kaśṭriya instead of a brahmin and thus relieve the curse. He then asked Sagara to marry Sumati to whom he had already given three thousand years. He had besides Sumati another wife, Keśi. Both at that time bore no sons for Sagara. Dejected he entrusted the administration of the state with his ministers and left for the abode of Aura. Aura blessed them and propounded that Keśi would deliver a son to continue the dynasty and that Sagara would deliver sixty thousand sons of which one son would be at all. Sagara and his wife returned to the palace and very soon a child was born. The child was named Astrāma when he grew up. In due time Keśi delivered a son who was named Asmañjītas. But Sumati gave birth to a lump of flesh. Greedily pained the King was about to throw it away when Aura appeared there and stopped him from doing that. He directed him to cut the piece of flesh into sixty thousand pieces and put one piece each in a fruit of the holy santa. She told him that he would bear from one of them thus Sumati got sixty thousand sons (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 92).

8) Teaching of Aura. In the evening of his life Sagara went and stayed in the abode of Aura. Aura gave him instructions on many divine subjects. He taught him about the importance of the four āramas, the rituals to be practised by the different castes of Brahmaṇa, Kaśṭriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra and many such other things. Finally Aura gave Sagara Brahmaṇḍājīna. (Chapter 8, Amāran, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

9) Ārugrama. All the Bhārgava rājas together once stayed in the āramās of Aura. Parāsurāma visited the ārama one day during that time and paid respect to Bhārgava, Kaśṭriya, woman of Bhūg, Kaṭavā, son of Bhūg and Aura, son of Cūvakā. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 63).

AURVA II. A brahmin living in the country of Mālava. This brahmin got a daughter named Śamika by his wife Sumedha. She was married very early to Mandāra, son of Dhaumya and disciple of Śaunaka. After some days when Mandāra found his wife fully grown he went to Aura to bring his wife home. Aura sent them home to the house of Mandāra with his blessings. On their way home they met the Mahaṛi Bhūshūṇḍi and burst into laughter at his sight. The sage cursed them and made them into two trees. When Aura found his daughter and son-in-law missing he started a search for them. Then he came to know that both of them had changed into trees. A friend of Vasa who had already prayed to God for help. Aura then lived in the tree of Śaunaka in the shape of Āgni and Śaunaka made an idol of Ganapati with the roof of the Mandāra and worshipped him. Ganapati was pleased by the devotion of Aura and Śaunaka and changed the trees again into Śaunaka and Mandāra. (Ganapati Purāṇa).

AUSIJA I. (Kapālakamocana). A holy place on the banks of the river, Sarasvati, Brahmaṇa, the devas and many mahaṛis lived here once. (Chapter 83, Vana Parva)

This place is called Kapālakamocana also. There is a story behind the place getting this name. At the forest of Dānaka Śrī Karna killed many demons. The force of the arrows struck the skulls of the demons to far off places in the forest. One of the skulls then fell on the feet of a sage named Mahādāra who was then going that way. The skull went deep into his foot and not only did it wound his foot but it stuck to his foot so hard that it could not be drawn out also. With his foot in pain the sage visited all the holy places but with no relief to his pain. At last Mahādara came to Aura and to his surprise the skull came off from his foot healing his wound. He remained there for some time and obtained many divine attainments. From then onwards the place was called 'Kapālakamocana'. After this incident Bhūmā, Viśvāmitra, Bāibhārāma and many such divinities visited the place. (Chapter 39, Sāya Parva, M.B.).

AUSIJA II. An ancient sage. There is a reference to this sage who is the son of Angiras in Rgveda. This sage was a brilliant member of the royal council of Dharmapura (Chapter 208, Samiti Parva, M.B).

AUSIṣNARA (AUSIṣNARI). Sibi, son of the King of Mālava. He was a renowned sage. (Sāya Parva, M.B.).

AUSIṣNARI (AUSIṣNARI). A śīdra girl born in the country of Uḍhara. Gautama Muni got her son Kaśkīvan and others of this girl. (Sūkn 5, Chapter 21, Siṁha Parva, M.B.).

AUSIṣnika(M). An ancient place in Indra. The King of this country paid respects to Dharmaputra offering him several gifts. (Sūkn 17, Chapter 21, Siṁha Parva, M.B.).

AUTATHYAJA. Son of Uṭathya (See under Uṭathya).

AUVAYAṉ. A celebrated Tamil poet. She was born in a Parva (lowest of the Hindu castes) family. Her mother left her as soon as she was delivered and a low caste śīdra brought her up. She lived for 420 years before she left on a Sōng journey never to return. She wrote several books in Tamil. The important ones are Āṭṭuṭṭi, Kontaventa, Muttura, Natval, Kavati slukka, Nannūtkova, Nanuṇiñka, Aruttamamlā, Daranappattu, and Jnānakuri. She has made a dictionary in verses also.

AVABHRUTHAM. The bath taken at the end of a sacrifice.

"Then all the Kaśṭriya Kings approached Dharmantuja (Dharmaputra) who had completed successfully, under the protection of the Mighty Lord of the bow, the cudgel and the wheel, the great sacrifice of theṚja-AYACA. The family of the Haihayas was split into five. They were the Bhujas, the Avanti family, the Vinuhotra family, the Suyamplakas family and the Sauṇḍikṣeyas family. (Agni: Puranā, Chapter 27).

AVADHOTESVARA. An incarnation of Siva. Once Indra and Bhapisati went to Kailasa to do homage to Siva who had offered sacrifices in the fire, called by Arya. Indra, in his beauty and power, convinced the god of Siva. When Siva was crossing the river, Indra saw Siva's emanation and decided to conquer him. At the request of Bhapisati, Siva, who was a powerful god, could not be conquered. So, Siva turned the fire into an ocean of water. Siva was killed by Siva who had abandoned the fire. (Siva Purana).

AVAGAYA. A warrior of the Vṛṣṇi dynasty. (Mahābhārata, Droop Varsha, Chapter 17, Stanza 27).

AVAIKSA. (See Dhanurakṣa).

AVAKIRNA (M). A holy place on the bank of the river Sarasvatī. (M.B., Śāla Varsha, Chapter 41).

AVANTI. A country called Mālava, an ancient India. The famous Ujjaini was the capital of Avanti. This city is situated on the bank of the Ganges. The renowned poets such as Kālidāsa and others lived in this city. This is one of the seven cities considered to be capable of giving Mokṣa (heavenly bliss). (M.B., Bhīma Varsha, Chapter 9, Stanza 43).

AVANTI VAMS. (The Dynasty of Avanti). The dynasty of Avanti Kings had its origin in the Yadu dynasty. Candras was born to Atri the son of Brahman. Buddha was born to Candras, Puruvadas to Budha, Ajas to Puruvadas, Nahuja to Ajas, Yavāti to Nahuja and Yadu to Yavāti. Budha had five sons, the eldest of whom was known by the name Sahasrajā. The rest of them were known as Nilagjika, Raguja, Krṣṇa and Sahasrajā. Sahasrajā had three sons called Saavati, Haihva and Renuhva. Dharmaṇa was born to Haihva, Sahanā to Dharmaṇa, Mahāpūrṇa to Sahanā, Bhradrasena to Mahāpūrṇa, Durgama to Bhradrasena and Kāra to Durgama. From Kāra were born the four sons Kṛtavṛṣa, Kṛṣṇa, Karavira and Kṛṣṇa. Arjuna (Kṛtavṛṣa) was born to the son of Kṛtavṛṣa.

ARA. Kṛtavṛṣa became the supreme ruler of the earth conquering the whole earth (Seven Earths) by the merits of his penance. He got invincibility and thousands hands in battles, as soon. He performed ten thousand sacrifices all in conformity with the rules and regulations. To escape from loss of wealth he had only to remember his name. It was ordered that Kings other than Kṛtavṛṣa, however great the extent of their might and prowess, and the number of sacrifices, offering of alms and penance done be, would not stand on a par with him.

Kṛtavṛṣa had a hundred sons, of whom the most famous were Sūrasena, Bṛha, Dṛṣṭa, Kṛṣṇa, and Jaya. Jaya had the most renowned of these five ruled in Avanti as King Tālajāgha who had several sons, was born from Jaya. The family of the Haihayas was split into five. They were the Bhujas, the Avanti family, the Vinuhotra family, the Suyamplakas family and the Sauṇḍikṣeyas family. (Agni: Puranā, Chapter 27).

AVARODHA. A king of the family of Bharata

AVISANAM. An ancient Bath in Bharata. One could attain the merit of Sambhagodāna (giving a thousand cows as alms) by bathing in this holy bath. (M.B., Vana Varsha, Chapter 82, Stanza 128).

AVATARA. (Incarnation). The incarnations of Mahāvīra are:

1) General information. God takes three kinds of incarnations such as avatāra, āvesa and āra. That which has full power is avatāra; that which has power only for the time being is āvesa and partial incarnation in anāvātāra. The incarnations of Viṣṇu are countless. Hermits, Manus, Devas (gods) and sons of Manus are incarnations in part (anāvātāras) of Viṣṇu. Complete avatāras are ten in numbers of which Balabhadra Rāma is not considered as an avatāra by some. Instead of him they place Buddha.

2) Rezon for the incarnations. Mahāvīra has taken so many incarnations in the world. In the Sri Mahādevi Bhāgavata a story occurs to the effect that Mahāvīra was forced to take so large a number of incarnations due to the curse of the great hermit Bhīṣma. The story is as follows: Kalyāpa had a son called Kaśipu. He was daring and brave and ruled the country as an enemy of the Gods. There arose a severe battle between the gods and the Asuras. Kaśipu was killed in that battle. After Kaśipu his son Prabhāla became king. He too was an enemy of the Gods. So there was a battle between Indra and Prabhāla. The battle continued for a hundred years. At last Prabhāla was defeated. He felt very sorry at the defeat. So he anointed Bāl, son of Vrṣeṣaṇa, as King and leaving the kingdom, he went to the Gandhamadana and began to do penance. The fight continued between Bāl and Indra. In this fight Mahāvīra helped Indra. The Asuras were completely destroyed. The defeated Asuras went to their teacher Śukra, who promised to protect them by spells and incantations and herbs. The Gods knew that Śukra had undertaken to protect the asuras. Leaving the asuras behind, Śukra went to Kailasa to get more power of spells and incantations from Śiva. Before going to Kailasa Śukra had asked the Asuras to wait for him with faith. After this the Asuras sent Prabhāla to the Gods for a truce. Prabhāla, though an Asura, was in great favour with the Gods. He reached the court of Indra and said, 'Gods, we have no desire at all for war. We have decided to spend the remaining period in penance wearing barks of trees and tufts of hair. How wicked a deed is battle and how delightful it is to become a devotee of God! So hereafter you will not be troubled by us. Likewiser I hope you will not do us innocent people any harm.' The gods believed Prabhāla. The Asuras, in the guise of hermits waited for Śukra in the hermitage of Kaśyapa. Śukra reached Kaśyapa and bowed before Śiva and requested that he might be given the power of defeating the Gods by some means quite unknown to Bhraspati the teacher of the devas (Gods). Śiva was in trouble. He could refuse neither Sūkra nor the Gods. At last he told hermit Sūkra that to come by such a spell he had to stand head downwards, inhaling smoke for a thousand years. Siva said so, thinking that when the dreadful nature of the feat was considered, Sūkra might desist from the attempt. But Sūkra began his penance instantly.

The Gods understood everything. The deceit of the Asuras, the crookedness of Sūkra was all now clear to them. They trembled with fear and began to consult how to get out of this difficult situation. Finally, they decided to go to war with the Asuras. The Gods did accordingly. The Asuras were in trouble. They were not strong enough to face the Gods. So they all went to Kāyamāṁi, the mother of Sūkra. The devas (gods) with Mahāvīnu at their head chased the Asuras, Kāyamāṁi, by the merits of her devotional meditation petitioned Mahāvīnu and India, Mahāvīnu thought of his Sudarśana (wheel-weapon of Viṣṇu) which instantly made its appearance and cut off the head of Kāyamāṁi. The great hermit Bṛhaspati got angry because Mahāvīnu committed woman-slaughter, and cursed him thus. “You are a crooked being, a viper, a deceit. The hermits who adore you as the seat of all that is good are deceived. You are wicked of a black character, and I curse you to take countless incarnations in the world, and painful confinement by and by because of your sins.” (Śrī Mahādevī Bhāgavata, 4th Skandha).

Thus having cursed Viṣṇu, the hermit Bṛhaspati took some water from his water-pot and sprinkled it on the face of Kāyamāṁi, who woke up as if from sleep. (For the remaining portion of the story see 2)

2. Daśāvatāras (The Ten Incarnations). Owing to the curse of Bṛhaspati, mentioned above, Mahāvīnu had to undertake so many incarnations, complete as well as partial. Complete incarnations are ten in number. They are called Daśāvatāras (The Ten Incarnations).

Mañjūśīrāma Varaha (Naraśimha) / Rāma, Rāma / Kṛṣṇa Kalki jñānādāna //
Mañjūśī (Fish), Kūrma (Turtle), Varāha (Pig), Naraśimha (Lion-man), Vāmana (Dwarf), Rāma (Parāvāra), Rāma (Sūrī Rāma), Rāma (Balañānārāma), Kṛṣṇa (Śrī Kṛṣṇa), Kalki (Yet to come). These are the ten incarnations of Mahāvīnu.

The daśāvatāras are described one by one below.

1. Matsya-vatara: (Fish Incarnation). To Kāyamāṁi, the son of Marici, and the grandson of Brahmā a son was born, by his wife Aditi. He was called Viśvas and the Manu who was the son of Viśvas is known as Vaivasvata Manu or Sārvatāra Manu. It was during the time of this Manu that Viṣṇu incarnated as a Matsya. Once while Brahmā was reciting the Vedas (the Scriptures) Hayaṅrāva, an asura, stole the Vedas from the side of Brahmā and with them he went under water to the bottom of the ocean and hid himself there. So Mahāvīnu decided to take the form of a fish to recover the stolen Vedas.

Viśvas and Manu, the first and foremost of the god-bearing, were doing penance in a place known as Bādrañ. He got down into the river Kṛṣṇām to take a bath. Then a small fish said to the Manu: “Oh King, I am afraid of large fishes. So please don’t forsake me”. Hearing this the King Manu took the fish in his hand and put it in an earthenware pot and brought it up. In a few days the fish began to grow. When the pot became insufficient the King put it in a larger pot. When that also became too small, the King put the fish in a pond. When the pond could not hold the fish any longer the King put it in the Ganges at its request. After a few days the Ganges also became too small for the fish. Finally the fish told the King: “Oh, King, within seven days there will be a great flood in the world. You should make a boat and take the ten hermit-sages with you in the boat and escape. I will help you.”

Hearing this he got an immensely large boat ready and obeyed the instructions of the fish. Within seven days rain started in torrents. Everything in the world, the moving and the not moving, were under the flood. A horn began to sprout from the head of the fish. Manu tied his boat on that horn. The fish started reaching the shore of the Himalayas with the boat, which was tied to the highest peak. Since the peak came to be called ‘Nauānānā Sringa’ (The peak to which boat is tied). The rain ceased to pour. It was seen that everything in the world had been destroyed except the Manu and the seven hermit-sages and some of the germs, saved in the boat. (This story occurs in the great Hindu work Kaumāyantī of Jayatārakā Prakīndī). (M.B. Aranava Parva, Chapter 187; Agni Puṇa, Chapter 2, Bhāgavata 8th Skandha, Chapter 24).

This story of the incarnation of Viṣṇu as fish is seen in the Bible figuratively. ‘In the order of the generations of Adam, the first creation of God, Seth, Enos; Kenan, Mahalāli, Jāred, Enoch, Methushelach, Lamech and Noah were born to Enoch hundred years old. And Seth begat Shem, Ham and Japheth. There was a great flood during the time of Noah. God said to him: “The end of all flesh is come before one; for the earth is filled with violence through them, and behold, I will destroy them with the earth. Make thee an ark of gopher wood; rooms shalt thou make in the ark, and shalt shing it with Cedars, and shalt cover it with pitch within and without. And this is the fashion which thou shalt make it of: The length of the ark should be three hundred cubits, the breadth of it fifty cubits, and the height of it thirty cubits. A window shalt thou make in the ark, and in a cubit shalt thou finish it above; and the door of the ark shalt thou set in the side thereof, with lower, second and third stories shalt thou make it. And behold, I, even I, do bring a flood of water upon the earth, to destroy all flesh wherein is the breath of life from under heaven and everything that is in the earth shall die. But with thee will I establish my covenant, and thou shalt come into the ark, thou, and thy sons and thy wife and thy sons’ wives with thee, and of every living thing of all flesh, two of every sort shalt thou bring into the ark, to keep them alive with thee; they shall be male and female. Of fowls after their kind, and of cattle after their kind, and of every creeping thing of the earth after their kind, two of every sort shalt come unto thee to keep them alive. And take thou unto thee of all food that is eaten, and thou shalt gather it to thee; and it shall be for food for thee and for them.” Thus did Noah according to all that the Lord commanded him. And the Lord said unto Noah, “Come thou and all thy house into the ark, for thee Have I seen righteous before me in this generation. Of every clean beast thou shall take to thee by seven the male and his female and of beasts that are not clean by two the male and his female. And God also commanded him by seven the male and the female to keep seed alive up on the face of all the earth. For yet seven days and I will cause it to rain up on the earth forty days and forty nights, and every living substance that I have made will I destroy from off the earth." And Noah did according unto all that the Lord commanded him.

And Noah was six hundred years old when the flood of waters was upon the earth. And Noah went in, and his sons and his wife and his sons' wives with him into the ark because of the waters of the flood. Of clean beasts and of beasts that are not clean and of fowls and of everything that creepeth upon the earth. There went in two and two unto Noah into the ark, the male and the female of every beast as God had commanded Noah. And it came to pass after seven days that the waters of the flood were upon the earth. In the six hundredth year of Noah's life in the second month on the seventeenth day of the month the same day were all the fountains of the great deep broken up and the windows of heaven were opened and the rain was upon the earth forty days and forty nights. In the self-same day entered Noah and his sons and his wife and the sons of Noah and Noah's wife and the wives of the sons with them into the ark. They and every beast after his kind and all the cattle after their kind and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth and every fowl after his kind after his kind. And they were according to their families. And it came to pass after they were entered into the ark the waters increased on the earth thirty days. And the waters increased and were multiplied upon the earth and were over the ark. And Noah looked when the waters were over the ark. And the waters prevailed and were increased greatly upon the earth and the ark went up on the face of the waters. And the waters prevailed exceedingly upon the earth and all the high hills that were under the whole heaven were covered. Fifteen cubits upward did the waters prevail and the mountains were covered. And all the flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl and of cattle and of beast and of every creeping thing that creepeth up upon the earth and every man. All in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land, died. And every living thing was destroyed which was upon the face of the ground both man and cattle and the creeping things and the fowl of the heaven and they were destroyed from the earth. And Noah only remained alive and they that were with him in the ark. And the waters prevailed upon the earth hundred and fifty days. And God remembered Noah and every living thing and all the cattle that was with him in the ark and God made a wind to pass over the earth and the waters became calm. The fountains also of the deep and the windows of heaven were stopped and the rain from heaven was restrained. And the waters returned from off the earth continually and after the end of the hundred and fifty days the waters were abated. And the ark rested in the seventh month on the seventeenth day of the month upon the mountains of Ararat. And the waters decreased continually until the tenth month.

In the tenth month on the first day of the month were the tops of the mountains seen. And it came to pass at the end of forty days that Noah opened the window of the ark which he had made. And he sent forth a raven which went forth to and fro until the waters were dried up from off the earth. Also he sent forth a dove from him to see if the waters were abated from off the face of the ground. But the dove found no rest for the sole of her foot and she returned unto him into the ark for the waters were upon the face of the whole earth. Then Noah put forth his hand and took her and pulled her to the ark. And he stayed yet other seven days. And again he sent forth the dove out of the ark. And the dove came in to him in the evening and lo, in her mouth was an olive leaf plucked off. So Noah knew that the waters were abated from off the earth. And he stayed yet other seven days and sent forth the dove, which returned not again unto him anymore. And it came to pass in the six hundredth and first year in the first month, the first day of the month the waters were dried up from off the earth and Noah removed the covering of the ark and looked and beheld the face of the ground was dry. And in the second month on the seven and twentieth day of the month it was dry. And God spake unto Noah saying: 'Go forth of the ark, thou and thy wife and thy sons and thy sons' wives with thee. Bring forth with thee every living thing that is with thee, of all flesh both of fowl and of cattle and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, that they may breed abundantly in the earth and be fruitful and multiply upon the earth. And he went forth and his sons and his wife and his sons' wives with him. Every beast, every creeping thing and every fowl and whatsoever creepeth up on the earth after theirs kinds went forth out of the ark. And Noah built an altar unto the Lord and took of every clean beast and of every clean fowl and offered burnt offerings on the altar. And the Lord smelled a sweet savor and the Lord said in his heart: 'I will not again curse the ground for man's sake. For the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth. Neither will I again curse the earth anymore for man's sake.' (Holy Bible, Genesis, Chapters 6, 7 and 8).

2) Arambāvātra. (Invocation as a test). Long ago when Durvāsās visited the realm of Gods he presented Devendra with a garland made of flowers of exquisite fragrance. Indra tied it on to the task of Ārāvātā (the elephant of Indra). When the beetles which gathered on the garland for honey became a nuisance, Ārāvātā destroyed that garland. Durvāsās who got angry at this cursed the gods as a whole that they would get wrinkles and grey hair. The gods were advised by Mahāvīru that if they got Ambrosia (Āmṛta—celestial honey) from the sea of Milk by churning it they would escape from this. Accordingly the Gods called the asuras for help, and they approached the sea of Milk. They made use of the Mountain of Mandara as churn-drill, and the huge snake Vasūku as churning rope, and the churning commenced. The gods took hold of the tail of the snake and as the churning was proceeding the churn-drill, the mountain of Mandara, having no fixation at the bottom sank down. Then Mahāvīru took the form of a turtle, and got under the Mandara mountain and lifted it up on his back. By the force of lifting, the turtle rose higher and higher up. Then Mahāviṣṇu took the form of an eagle and sat on the top of the mountain and it came down a little and placed itself in the right position. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8, Chapter 7; Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 3; Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Ballakāda, Sarpa 45).

3) Virānasūrya. (Incarnation as a Pig). Jaya and Vijaya were the two watchers who stood at the gate of Mahāviṣṇu. Once the great hermit-sages Sanaka and others reached Vaikuṇṭha to visit Mahāviṣṇu. Then Jaya and Vijaya treated the hermits without respect. The hermits cursed them that they would become Dānavas (Auras or giants). They also said that when they were slain three by Mahāviṣṇu they would reach heaven. At that period when hermit Kātyāya was carrying on his evening prayer and devotional rites, his wife Diti approached him with lustful desire. Kātyāya told her that as he was engaged in prayer and meditation it was not proper on her part to select that particular moment for her lustful desire. But she persisted and the sage yielded and out of that union two sons were born to them, two asura Hiranayakṣipu and Hiranayakaśipu. Of these Hiranayakṣipu was the incarnation of Jaya and Hiranyakāśipu that of Vijaya.* With the birth of these two the whole world began to tremble. These two asura brothers began to terrorize the world. They wandered about causing destruction and devastation wherever they went. Once Hiranayakṣipu got down into the ocean and began to beat the waves in the ocean. When the waves were raised, two asura Hiranayakṣipu and Hiranayakaśipu. Of these Hiranyakṣipu was the incarnation of Jaya and Hiranyakāśipu.

4) Narāsinhākṣipūra. (Incarnation as a lion-man). With the death of Hiranayakṣipu, his brother Hiranyakāśipu became furious more than ever. He wanted to avenge the death of his brother. His fury was turned towards Mahāviṣṇu. So he got on the top of the Mountain of Mandara and did penance before Brahmā and Brahmā appeared and granted him boon, one of which was that nobody but Viṣṇu should be able to kill him. He returned with gladness and began to roam about torturing devotees of Viṣṇu everywhere.

A son named Prahlāda was born to him. He was a god-fearing child and from birth an ardent believer in Viṣṇu. Hiranyakāśipu tried his utmost to change his son to a hater of Viṣṇu. He got a special teacher for the purpose and Prahlāda was taken to the house of the teacher to live with him until he changed his mind. The result was that the teacher and all others who advised him ultimately became believers in Viṣṇu. Anger overpowered Hiranyakāśipu. Prahlāda was thrown before mad elephants. But the tusks of the elephant missed the aim and were driven into his body. Many maces were employed and those which hit him had their fangs broken. Finally the child was put in blazing fire. But the child felt the fire to be cool and soothing. From that fire a ghost emerged and tried to kill Prahlāda. Immediately the Sudarśana, the wheel-bearer of Viṣṇu came down and cut off the head of the ghost. Hiranyakāśipu jumped with anger and called out. "Where is your Viṣṇu?" His son replied that his Viṣṇu dwelt in every movable and immovable thing. Hiranyakāśipu kicked at a stone pillar close by and asked him, "Is your Viṣṇu in this pillar?" Prahlāda replied, "My Viṣṇu is in Pillar and in forest. So far as he had finished, the Pillar broke open and a monster as horrible as the Destroyer Śiva, in the shape of a lion-man made its appearance.

"Mimāṃsāsānaḥ samāṃsthito grato
Naṁ hariṁ puruṣottamahahviṣṇuḥ Pratapaśākāraṇaḥ kāmaḥ dharmottaraṁ bhūtānām.

Kṣīram uciśvetāṁ sarvaṁ dharmottaraṁ bhrūṣṣūnām svādīnām
dharmottaraṁ bhrūṣṣūnām svādīnām
dharmottaraṁ bhrūṣṣūnām svādīnām
dharmottaraṁ bhrūṣṣūnām svādīnām.

"Before him who was waiting with curiosity to see what would happen, with eyes blazing as molten gold, mouth wide open in the middle of long bushy mane, tusks long and curved and protruding fearfully, tongue swaying like a sword, eyebrows fierce looking, ears standing erect and still, two nostrils as wide and deep as mountains, cypresses, jaws open, he roared aloud, "I am the king of the elephants, the lion, the tiger, the elephant, the king of elephants, the tiger, this is my land.""

This was the figure of Narāsinhā. Mr. S. Paramesvaradar Iyer, Ulloor, has described this figure in his "Bhakti-dīpikā" as follows:

"Claring eyes burning as blazing cinder, tongue as a dagger just used in piercing to death, neck with folds, eyebrows looking mad, tusks like young moon, fierce face with bushy mane grown to it, hair long and sharp like pointed wire, claws looking like having drunk blood, body shining as if countless suns had risen together, all combined as if the fire of anger burning inside had incarnated, in the shape of a lion up to neck and human shape beyond the neck." (Bhakti-dīpikā).

The horrid monster caught hold of Hiranyakāśipu the King of the Asuras, picked him to the ground and opened his heart with its fierce claws. Blood spouted like a spring. With great ferocity he pulled out the intestines of Hiranyakāśipu and wore them round his neck as a garland and roared loudly. Prahlāda, with songs of praise and chanting of hymns of adoration packed the stormy Narāsinhā and bowed low before him. The Narāsinhā was pleased with the devotion of Prahlāda. He blessed the child and then disappeared. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 7, Chapter 8).

Kumbhakārṇa and during the third birth they were Śiśuśa and

*During their next birth they made their appearance as Rāvana and Duryodhāna.
5) Vānaprayāṇa. (Incarnation as a Dwarf). It was to expel the Emperor Mahābali, that Mahāvīru, incarnated as a dwarf. To Kaśyapa, the son of Marici and the grandson of Brāhma, was born Diti, Hiranyakasipu. And from Prahlāda the son of Hiranyakasipu was born Virocana and Bali was the son of Virocana. Bali got the name Mahābali because of his prowess. He was the emperor of the Asuras. A fierce battle began over the Ambrosia got from charming the sea of Milk, which the gods and the demons consumed. In the battle Indra cut Mahābali down with his Vijayāyuha. The Asuras took the body of Mahābali to Paṭāla (the nether world) where their teacher Sukra brought him to life again. Then Mahābali worshipped the Bhārgavas and became more powerful than before and went to heaven again and renewed the battle. This time he defeated his father and subjugated the realm of the Gods who were scattered to all sides. The devas or gods are the sons of Kaśyapa born by his wife, Aditi. She felt very sorry at the defeat of the gods. Seeing that she was silent and sad Kaśyapa asked her the reason. She replied that she was thinking of ways to enable the gods to recover their lost power and position. Kaśyapa advised her to pray Mahāvīru by observing Dwādaśa ārava (fast of the twelve lunar nights). Aditi did so and Vīṣṇu appeared before her and asked her what she desired. Her request was that Vīṣṇu should take birth in her womb and recover Indra to his lost power and position. Thus Vīṣṇu took birth as the younger brother of Indra in the shape of Vāmana (dwarf.) At this time Emperor Mahābali was celebrating a sacrifice on the banks of the Ganges after having subjugated the whole of the world. A large number of hermits gathered there. Vāmana also was among them. He requested Mahābali to grant him three feet of ground as alms. The teacher Sukra warned Mahābali against granting the request. But the emperor granted the request and asked Vāmana to measure the ground. Vāmana stood on the bank of the Ganges and measured the heaven, the earth and the Paṭāla (the upper realm, the earth and the lower realm) in two steps and asked for place for the third step. The honest Mahābali showed his head and requested to complete the three steps. Vāmana put his step on the head of Mahābali and pushed him down to Paṭāla. Thus the gods regained their lost power. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9, Chapter 19). A description that by the toe of Vāmana’s raised foot (raised for measuring the third step) the pedestal of Brāhma was cut open where from the Ganges originated, is seen in the Bhāgavata, Skanda 5.

When Vīṣṇu took Rāma and Lakṣmana to the forest they entered a holy hermitage and Vīṣṇu said, "Tell me that it was the hermitage where Aditi, long ago had observed Dwādaśa ārava. It was in that same place that Vāmana incarnated and placed his step on the head of Mahābali.

"The bright Madhava took birth in Aditi as Vāmana and went to Mahābali, requested for three feet of ground and brought under control the three worlds for the good of all. By binding Bali by might, he gave to Indra the three worlds and this hermitage is the place where Vīṣṇu once placed his steps. I am a devotee of that Vāmana." (Vāmanī Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kānda, Sarga 29).

6) Parāsuraṁbhūta, (Incarnation as Parāśurāma). Once Kārttivirājyuna pleased the hermit-sage Dattātreya the son of Atri, by doing penance and got the boon of one thousand hands. One day he went to forest for hunting and entered the banks of Narmada. The hermit Jamadagni had been living there with his wife Repukā and sons Parāśurāma and others. The King being tired of hunting got into the hermitage. Parāśurāma was not there. The hermit called his divine cow Kāmādhenu, which provided the King and his followers with a very good supper.

When the King departed he asked for the wonderful cow. The hermit did not consent. The King caught hold of the cow by force and went to his city. Parāśurāma went to Māhāsthānagārī, the capital of Kārttivirājyuna, killed the King and took Kāmādhenu back. From that day onwards the sons of Kārttivirāya were waiting for an opportunity to take revenge.

Once Repukā went to the river to bring water. A gandhabha (semi god) named Cītara had bathed in the river. She happened to look at him for a little while. When she returned the hermit was very angry and asked each of his sons to cut off the head of their mother. They all refused. But Parāśurāma immediately obeyed his father and cut off her head. His father was pleased and said that he might ask any boon. He requested his father to bring his mother back to life. Accordingly Repukā was brought back to life.

Once the sons of Kārttivirāya got into the hermitage, at a time when Parāśurāma was away and cut off the head of the hermit Jamadagni and took it off. When he returned his mother told him how his father was killed. She cried and beat her breast twentyone times. Parāśurāma became an incarnation of revenge, and travelled over the world twentytwo times and killed every Kārttiya King. The blood of all those Kings flowed into one channel and gathered in a holy bath called Śyantasundaśatapatā. Thus Mahāvīru took his sixth incarnation as Parāśurāma and fulfilled his duty of destroying the wicked Kārttiya Kings (For details about Parāśurāma see under Parāśurāma and Kārttivirājyuna) (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9, Chapter 16).

7) Śri Rāmāvātāra. Mahāvīru took the incarnation of Śri Rāma to kill Rāvana. (For further information see the words Śri Rāma and Rāvana).

8) Balabhadrāvātāra, (The incarnation of Balabhadrarāma) (See the word Balabhadrarāma).

9) Śri Kṛṣṇavātāra, (The incarnation of Śri Kṛṣṇa) (See the word Kṛṣṇa).

10) Kālīya-vātāra (The incarnation as Kali). At the end of Kaliyuga (the Age of Kali) all the people would become atheists and sceptics. Rewards will be received from the depraved. The classes will be mixed. People would become degenerate having no good qualities. A religion called 'Vājasaneyam' with its fifteen doctrines only will be acceptable. People would become irresponsible wearing the garment of duty. Lawless people would take the form of Kings and will begin to eat men. In those days Lord Vīṣṇu will incarnate as Kali, the son of Vīṣṇuvasas and the priest of YāHVākhyā and learn the arts of wielding weapon and handling muskets and destroy all lawless ones. The subjects will be brought back to the four castes and the four śāstras or stages of life and the doctrines and directions of the long-established religion and peace and order will be restored. Then the Lord will cast away the form of Kāli and go to heaven. After that, as of old, Kṛṣṇa will return and the four stages of life and such other establishments will once more prevail. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 16).

3) The Incarnations of Mahāviṣṇu.

It is mentioned in Śrī Mahādevi Bhāgavata, Skanda 1, Chapter 3 that Mahāviṣṇu had taken the twenty-six incarnations given below:

1) Sansāra (pig)
2) Sansāra (bird)
3) Nārāyaṇa (lion)
4) Vāmana (dwarf)
5) Īśvara (lion)
6) Gaurī (owl)
7) Māna (monkey)
8) Rohini (owl)
9) Köśa (swallow)
10) Gaja (elephant)
11) Rāma (deer)
12) Kṛṣṇa (calf)
13) Pāturāṇa (goat)
14) Rāma (dwarf)
15) Vāmana (dwarf)
16) Gaurī (owl)
17) Pāturāṇa (goat)
18) Nārāyaṇa (serpent)
19) Gaja (elephant)
20) Rāma (deer)
21) Vāmana (dwarf)
22) Śrī Rāma (great elephant)
23) Nārāyaṇa (serpent)
24) Vāmana (dwarf)
25) Kṛṣṇa (calf)
26) Gaurī (owl)

Information about Matsya, Kūrma, Varahā, Nārāyaṇa, Vāmana and Vāsanta, are given under the word Avatāras and for the rest see the same words.

In the first Skanda of "Bhāgavata Kilipattu" the incarnations are exhaustively dealt with in the following:

And after that to make it possible for the Lord with four faces to rule his subjects justly and well. He took various incarnations in his portions, the first four of which are four persons, Nārāyaṇa, Sansāra, Sansāra, Nārāyaṇa and Sansāra, in the order given, four or five-year-old children, well-versed in the four Vedas, the four always inseparable wandered everywhere come to the world to show the merits of Brahmacarya (the vow of celibacy). To kill Hiranyakṣa and to lift up the earth He took the form of Śūkra (pig). To show the world the tattva (essence) of Sat (good) and tama (darkness) He took the form of hermit Nārāyaṇa. To impart to the world the meaning of Sāmkhya Yoga (Indian Philosophy dealing with evolution and union with the Supreme Spirit), He came as Kapila the learned. To teach the world the laws of chasteinment He was born as Dattā of the wife of Atri. Then He came as Yajña to become Indra. The next incarnation He took was Raša, the noble King. To shorten and flatten the earth He came as Parīṇa. To recover the Vedas He took the form of Matsya (fish). To remove wrinkles and grey hair the gods had churned the sea of Milk and then to lift the mount Mandara He went under it and as a bird He got up on it. To give the world Ayurveda (the science of medicine) He came as Dāvanautari.

To entice Asuras and to recover Ambrosia from them He took the form of Mohini. To save the devoted Prahlāda and to slay his father He came in the form of Nārāyaṇa. Then as Vāmana the younger brother of the Indra to deceive Mahābhārata and to recover the lost worlds for the gods He came. To destroy the Kings who were haters of Brahmā He came as the son of Jamadagni. Then He took the incarnation of Veda Vāsaka. And to slay the giant Rāvana He became Śrī Rāma.

Next we see Him as Balabhadrārāma. Then He came as Devakī [son of Devaki (Kṛṣṇa)]. Next He came in the Kaliyugā as Śrī Buddha and at the end of Kaliyugā He will come as Kalki. And there are many incarnations still to speak of.

AVICI. One of the twenty-eight hells. The following are the twenty-eight hells:

The hell called Avici is described thus: "This is the hell meant for those who stand false witness, who take false oath and false name. The soldiers of Yama will push these false people into the hell of Avici, from the top of a mountain which is a hundred yojanas (league) high. The place of Avici, like the waves of the ocean, is swelling and falling and swaying and surging always. When sinners fall there their bodies will be crumbled into pieces. Their life will enter into new bodies and then the punishment will be repeated again and again." (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 8).

AVIJNATAGATI. Two sons were born to Anila, a vasu by his wife Śivī. They were called Avijnatagati and Manojaya. (M.B., Śiśi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 25).

AVIKAMPAKA. Thus ancient King got from the hermit Jyeṣṭha Sāvatvarāma (righteousness). (M.B., Śiśi Parva, Chapter 39, Stanza 47).

AVIKŚIT I. A famous King. The son of Karandhama and father of Marutta. He was honoured even by Bhṛaspati, having performed a hundred horse sacrifices. Mention is made in the Mārāṇḍeṇa Purāṇa that Avikṣit had seven wives: Varā, Gaurī, Subhadra, Līlāvati, Vīlā, Māngavati, and Kuntudvati. Besides them Valī was the princess of Viśākha who was his wife. He had taken this Vaisālini from her Svanvarī dais (the bride herself selecting a husband from those who are present), defeating the Kings who were present there. Those defeated Kings, later, joined together and defeated Avikṣit and took him a prisoner. Finally Karandhama rescued him. His greatness is described as follows:

"The righteous man Avikṣit is equal to Indra in prowess. This austere and righteous man has become a great sacrificer. In brightness he is equal to the Sun, as forgiving as the earth, in intelligence equal to Bhṛaspati, and as firm as the Himālayas. By his thought, word, and deed and self control and noble actions he kept his subjects in peace and prosperity." (Bhāṣa Bhārata, Alavetūlī Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 19-21).

AVIKŚIT II. Five sons were born to King Kuru by his wife Vaihini. Avikṣit was one of them. [See the word Vaiśāvali (Genealogy)].

AVIMUKTA (M). The middle part of the city of Kašī. There is a holy temple here. It is said that those who commit suicide in this temple will attain heaven. (Vana Parva, Chapter 64, Stanza 78 and 79). For more information see the word Divodāsa.

AVINDHYA. A giant in whom Rāvana had confidence. But he held the opinion that Śītā should be returned to Rāma.

The aged giant and noble leader Avindhya, who had earned the confidence of Rāvana, brave, learned and of good qualities, pleaded with Rāvana and said that Rāma would exterminate the entire race of the giants.
but the wicked Rāvana would not pay heed to his words.

(Sri Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kāṇḍa, Sarga 37, Stanza 12 and 13). This aged giant had sent Trijñātā to the Aṭoka path to converse with Sītā. Hear what she says: "The famous giant leader, the noble aged well-wisher of Rāma, Avindhiya, had told me about you." (M.B., Aroṣṭa Parva, Stanza 56). There is a situation in Vana Parva when this noble giant prevented Rāvana from his attempt to kill Sītā. "When he saw the decision of Rāvana to kill Sītā, Avindhiya pacified Rāvana" and said, "you, a great King of a great kingdom should not deteriorate to the level of killing a woman. A woman who is in prison and at your disposal is as good as dead. But in my opinion, even if you cut her body into pieces she would not die and if she must die, you will have to kill her husband." (M.B., Avindhiya Parva, Chapter 289, Stanza 28 to 30).

From this statement the wonderful intelligence of Avindhiya could be understood. It is seen in Stanza 6 and 7 of Chapter 291 of M.B., Vana Parva that it was Avindhiya who had taken Sītā before Sīr Rāma when he had conquered Lankā.

AVIRATHA. A hermit of the family of Kardama.

AVIVĀΗTA. (Spinster). In the Mahābhārata a statement regarding spinners and widows is seen. "Peace meet on the ground and many birds will come to it. So also men will gather round the woman who has no husband." (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 150, Stanza 12).

AVAYA. A serpent of the Dhrāṣṭāra family. This serpent fell in the sacrificial fire meant for serpents, prepared by Janamejaya. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 15).

AYASSĀΝΚU. A great Asura. He was born as a Prince of the Kayka kingdom. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 10).

AYASSIKĀ. A son of Kayka by his wife, Dam. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 25). He was born a prince of Kayka (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 10).

AYĀTAYAMA(S). Son of Guruparamparā.

AYAṬ. Son of King Nāhūṣa and brother of Yāyā. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 30).

AYAVAHA(M). A place in ancient India. (M.B., Bhūma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 5).

AYODHA. (A yogurt). (A yogurt). A Yogadhanumya, Yogadhanumya, Dhanumya. A great Muni (sage). He had three disciples, Aruni, Upamanyu and Vedú. 1) Disciple Aruni. He belonged to Pāñcāla, and once his guru deputed him to construct embankments in the field. But, his attempt to construct embankments didn’t succeed. Finally he lay himself in the field where the embankment was required, and then the flow of water stopped. The guru enquired about Aruni, who was thus lying in the field. Then only he knew the reason for Aruni’s absence. The guru went to the field and called Aruni. Then the embankment burst open and Aruni came out, and because of that Aruni got the name Uddālaka. (M.B., Chapter 3, Verse 21-23). 2) Disciple Upamanyu. Once Dhanumya (the guru) asked his second disciple Upamanyu to tend the cows. He used to take care of the animals grazing in the woods during daytime and return home at dusk and prostrate before the guru. Looking at the plump and healthy body of Upamanyu the guru asked him how he was feeding himself. His reply was that he was begging alms and feeding himself with what he got thus. Then the guru asked him to hand over to him (guru) all alms got in future. After that he used to give everything he got by way of alms to the guru. And, he continued returning to the Gurukula at dusk and prostrating before the guru. Finding Upamanyu even then as plump and healthy as he was formerly, the guru said: "My son Upamanyu, you hand over to me all alms you get, and yet your body looks as trim as of old. How happens it so?" Upamanyu replied: "After giving the alms I get first to you, my guru, I do again beg for alms and feed myself". To this the guru reacted thus: My boy, what you do is not the proper thing. By the second course of alms-taking you found in the way of other people getting their food. It is gross injustice to do so.

Upamanyu, from that day onwards strictly followed his guru’s instruction, and continued returning at dusk to the guru and doing obeisance to him. Even then finding Upamanyu to be quite plump and healthy the guru told him: "Well, no need of you. You do not take alms a second time the same day. Yet you are quite fit and fat. How is it so?" To this Upamanyu’s reply was that he was feeding himself on the milk of the cows he tended. The guru told him that this too was not just and proper on his part. The guru had not permitted him to drink milk thus Upamanyu agreed to obey his orders. As usual he continued tending the cows and returning at dusk. Even then he maintained the same plump and healthy physique. And the guru told him as follows: "You do not eat the food you get at the first alms-taking, you do not go in for alms a second time the same day, nor do you drink milk. Yet, how is it that you maintain the same fat and healthy physique as in former days?"
guru felt that Upamanyu was staying away late in the forest since he had been prevented from doing everything but to give to the forest accompanied by other disciples and called out for Upamanyu, and Upamanyu responded from deep down the well. He also told the guru how he happened to fall into the well. After telling him that if only he would pray to the Asvinidevas they would cure his blindness the guru returned to the Akrama with other disciples. Upamanyu, accordingly, offered praises and prayed to the Asvinidevas, who were so pleased with him that they gave him a bread. Upamanyu refused to eat the bread without giving it to the guru. Then the Asvinidevas told him thus: “In the past when we gave you a bread like this he ate the same without giving it to his guru. You may just imitate him and eat the bread yourself.” Even then Upamanyu did not eat the bread. The Asvinidevas were so pleased at this that they blessed Upamanyu thus: “The teeth of your guru will turn into hard iron and yours into pure gold. Your blindness will be cured and all happiness and prosperity will be yours.”

The blessings of the Asvinidevas took effect, and Upamanyu hurried to his guru and prostrated at his feet. The guru and the other disciples congratulated Upamanyu. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 5, Verses 34-77.)

3) Disciple, Veda. Agyadhamaanya one day said to Veda, his third disciple: “You stay with me for sometime serving me. That will bring you all prosperity in life.” Veda agreed, and stayed for a long time in the Akrama in the service of the guru. Without even the slightest murmur he put up with every disorder and hardship, be it acute hunger and thirst or extreme cold or heat, and gladly performed all the work and duties the master imposed on him. The guru was absolutely pleased and his blessings resulted in all prosperity and opulence for the disciple. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 78-80.)

AYODHYĀ. A city in North India which enjoyed great importance and reputation for many years as the capital of the King of the solar dynasty. (See Ikṣvaku dynasty). All the Kings of this dynasty ruled the country from this city as their capital. Vasishtha, the great preceptor of the Ikṣvaku Ṛajjas, came to Ayodhya during the period of the reign of Kalmāṣapāda, who was the thirty-fifth ruler in succession to Ikṣvaku. A quarrel broke out between Kalmāṣapāda and Vasishtha during a hunting expedition, and Vasishtha cursed the King and as the result the latter became a Rākṣasa. After regaining his former form as King, he apologised to Vasishtha and they became friends again. At the request of the King in the interests of his dynasty Vasishtha came to Ayodhya and the people were greatly elated. A son was born to Vasishtha by Kalmāṣapāda’s wife and that son was Atmaka. After that Vasishtha used to go to Ayodhya frequently and was installed as family preceptor of the Ikṣvaku. Till the time of Śrī Rāma the city of Ayodhya maintained its pomp and glory, and after that gradually its decay and fall set in. Laudatory references to the city are found in most of the Purāṇas like the Mahābhārata, Brahmapāta Purāṇa etc. (See Kosala.)

AYOMUKHĪ. A Rākṣasa woman. She met Śrī Rāma and Laksāmaṇa on their way to Matarāgārama in search of Śītā, and requested Laksāmaṇa to marry her. Laksāmaṇa, as in the case of Śūrparākṣa cut off her nose and breasts and gave her away. (Valmiki: Rāmāyana, Aranyaka Kāṇḍa, Chapter 60.)

AYUTANAYI. A king of the Pūru Vansha; he was the son of Mahāraja Bhuma. Suyajñi, Kāma and Akroha were the names respectively of his mother, wife and son. He came to be known as Aytanayi because of his having performed 10,000 Puruṣamālās. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verses 19-20.)

AYUTĀYU. A king who ruled his state for 1000 years. The Purāṇas like Bhāgavata, the Matsya and the Vāyu refer to him as the son of Śrutāravas.

AYUTĀYUS. Father of King śrutāravas. (Bhāgavata, Navamā Sanshāda.) For genealogy see Ikṣvaku dynasty.

A (91) This word means brahmaṇa and also auśāra-vākyya (a word showing disrespect). In the indefinite form it means limit, anger and pain.

ĀBHĪRAS. A few details. 1) A low-caste people. People living in the estuary of the rivers of Sindhu and Sarasvati were generally called Ābhīras. In the Sabha Parva of Mahābhārata we find Nakula defeating these people during his victory march after the great Mahābhārata battle. 2) Since Ābhīras were poor, they took Dharmapūrtha with many gifts. (Ślokas 11-13, Chapter 51, Sabha Parva, M.B.) 3) Once it was prophesied by Māraṇḍeṣṭya Kṛiṣṇa that low-caste people like Ābhīras and Kālekas would become rulers of states in different parts of Bharata during Kaliyuga. (Ślokas 35-36, Chapter 180, Vana Parva, M.B.) 4) In the Garudacarita (Battle army named after Garuda) which Drona created during the Kurukṣetra battle he included Ābhīras also. (Ślokas 6, Chapter 20, Drona Parva, M.B.) 5) Because of the hatred of Śudras and Ābhīras a sacred lake named Viśākha disappeared from the river, Sarasvati. (Ślokas 1 and 2, Chapter 37, Śalya Parva, M.B.) 6) Ābhīras were Kṣatriyas formerly. Afraid of Parasurāma they fled and lived in mountain-caves not continuing their hereditary work and thus became Śudras. (Ślokas 16, Chapter 29, Aśvamedhika Parva, M.B.) 7) When Dvārakā was destroyed by floods and all the Yadavas were killed, Arjuna went north taking along with him the wives of Šri Rāma. At that time Ābhīras were among those who attacked and carried away the women. (Ślokas 47-63, Chapter 7, Mānasula Parva, M.B.)

ĀCAMAṆA. First drink water three times accompanied by incantations and then with water wipe your face twice and your eyes, ears, nose, shoulders, breast and head once. This act is called ĀcamaṆa. Ṭrīṣṇam ca savedādibhir Ātmanāh kira eva ca” (Manusmṛti, Śloka 66, Chapter 2). Devī Bhāgavata in its eleventh Skandha says about ĀcamaṆa like this: ‘Drinking water by your right hand is called ācamaṆa. Curve your palm into the shape of a spoon, hold water in it and drink. There must be enough water in the palm to cover a green-grain seed, not less nor more. If it falls short or exceeds the measure it is considered to be like drinking alcohol. While shaping your palm neither your little finger nor your thumb should touch the other fingers. At the time of ācārama you should support your right hand by your left hand and let the water fall into the palm; otherwise the water will turn impure.

ACĀRAMARYĀDĀŚ. See under Pañjadvīdu.

ĀDĀMBARA. One of the five Pārśadas whom Brahmā gave to Skandadeva. Brahmā gave Kunda, Kusuma, Kutsuna, Dānaka and Ādāmbara.

ĀDI. A mighty son of the demon, Andhakāśura. He did penance to please Brahmā and obtained the boon to seek vengeance on Śiva who had murdered his father. The boon was that Ādi would die only when he left his present form and took another form. After obtaining the boon Ādi went to Kailāsa and outwitted the sentinels entrusting the abode of Śiva in the shape of a serpent. After that he disguised himself as Parvati and went near Śiva. But Śiva knew the trick and killed him. (Śrī Śiva Kanda of Rāmāyana Purāna.)

ĀDIRAKSHA. A combat without serving any useful purpose and conducted out of sheer spite between two people to the surprise of others. The fight between Vasuki and Vāmana was of this kind. (Skanda 6 of Devī Bhāgavata.)

ĀDĪGADĀDHIKĀRA. It was with the boon of an asura demigod, Nara Gada, that Mahāviśvamāna made the first gada (mace). By that mace Viṣṇu killed Hēiti and other asuras of that lot and got the name Ādīgadādhi (He who first handled the mace). (See under Gada.)

ĀDIKŪRA. The mountain of Mandara which was used as a churn-stick to churn the great milky ocean, Kurūndāva, and then Mahāviśvamāna took the shape of a bull to hold the churning pond of this churn, which was called Ādi-Kūra. (Skokha 12, Chapter 18, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

ĀDHĪPARVA. One of the parvas of the epic Mahābhārata. It is the first parva. (See under Bhārata.)

ĀDHĪPARVATA. The place of abode of Śiva in the Himalayas. (Skokha 22, Chapter 327, Śrī Parva, M.B.)

ĀDIRĀJA. The son of Kuru, who was a king of the Nauravas dynasty. (See under Puru.)

ĀDISĪKRA. One of the disciples of Śākalya. Vyāsa made the Vedas and taught his son Śākalya a portion of it. Śākalya divided his portion into five different and equal divisions and taught each of his five disciples, Vyāsāyana, Mādudāyana, Śāli, Ādīśīkra and Gokha li a division. (Skanda 12, Bhāgavata.)

ĀDIŚTĪ. The disciple who was ordained by his preceptor to observe celibacy for a stipulated number of years.

ĀDIRA. The twelve sons born to the sage Kaśyapa of his wife Ādīti. They are known as the twelve Ādiras. They are the following: Dāhūta, Miśra, Aranyā, Rudra, Vaṭā, Śūrya, Bhāga, Vivasvan, Pāṭa, Sāvīti, Tvaṣṭī and Vaṣṇu. Besides these Ādiras had twenty-four children including Indra. All of them are called Ādiras meaning children of Ādira. From the thirty-three sons of Ādira were born the thirty-three crores of devatas. Of these the eldest is Indra and the youngest, Vāmana. (Skokha 36, Chapter 56, Ādi Parva, M.B.). (There is corroboration for this in Skoka 14, Sārpa 14, Aranya Kaṇḍa, Vāmana Rāmāyana.)

Sūrūkva, a friend of Pānkara in his preface to the book Rgvedadīnivāśī writes thus about Ādīti: "Generally we think of Śūrya (the Sun) when we hear the word Ādīti. But there are many different Ādītas in Rgveda, chief of them is Varuna. Though Sāvīti, Pāṭa and Mitra are all synonyms of Śūrya in Rgveda they are all separate deities. There is no end to the varieties of Ādītas and their prominence in the Vedas. Summarising we can say thus. The familiar deities like Indra, Agni, Varuna and Śūrya are not found in the same form or power as we are taught to believe. Those whom we have lowered down to the pests of the eight sentinels of the universe are very prominent devatās in the Vedas. Many Ādītas have merged in Śūrya and who is the god of Vāyu. Rudra has merged in Śiva. Who will believe that the all-powerful Deva of the Rgveda and the vanglourous Indra who lives in fear of men doing penance are one and the same person?"

ĀDIRAYA. A mandala (incantation) of great power to destroy all enemies. During the combat with Rāvana at one time Rāma fell exhausted in the battlefield. Seeing this the sage Agastya rushed to him and taught him this mantra. (Śrīga 109, Yuddha Kaṇḍa, Vālmīki Rāmāyana.)

ĀDIRAYAKETU. One of the sons of Dīrghatāna. Bhima sena killed him in the great battle of Kurukṣetra. (Skokha 102, Chapter 67, Ādi Parva and Skokha 28, Chapter 88, Bhāma Parva, M.B.)

ĀDIRAYASENA. A very brave King. Stories about this King are found in Kathāsūrīrāgā (Tarāgita 4, Kathāpīṭhālambakā.)

ĀDIRAYATIRIKHA. An ancient holy place on the banks of the river, Sarasvati. (Skoka 17, Chapter 99, Sālīya Parva, M.B.)

ĀDIRAYAVARSHA. A king who always ordered without thinking and repealed later. The book Kathāsūrīrāgā tells the story of this king in the fifth tāranga of its part, Kathāpīṭhālambakā.

ĀDIRAYAKHATHA. A sage of old. He attended the sacrifice conducted by the King Upārīcara. (Skoka 9, Chapter 336, Śrī Parva, M.B.)

ĀDIRAYAPURĀNA. See under Ṭhūparūṇa, ĀDIRAYĀSTRA. A powerful weapon or missile. One night Arjuna fought against ādīgarāpaṇa, the king of the river Ganges. Arjuna then described to him how he came into possession of this missile. This powerful missile was given first to Bhāradvāja by Bhārapati and Bhāradvāja gave it to Āgneya who in turn gave it to Droṇa and the latter gave it to Arjuna, his most favourite disciple. (Skokha 29-30, Chapter 170, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

ĀDIRYI. Wife of Kuru, son of Manu. Sambhūwa wife of Dhruva gave birth to two sons, Śūṛi and Bhavīya. Sūrūkva, a friend of Pānkara in his preface to the book Rgvedadīnivāśī writes thus about Ādiri: "Generally we think of Śūrya (the Sun) when we hear the word Ādiri. But there are many different Ādiris in Rgveda, chief of them is Varuna. Though Sāvīti, Pāṭa and Mitra are all synonyms of Śūrya in Rgveda they are all separate deities. There is no end to the varieties of Ādiris and their prominence in the Vedas. Summarising we can say thus. The familiar deities like Indra, Agni, Varuna and Śūrya are not found in the same form or power as we are taught to believe. Those whom we have lowered down to the pests of the eight sentinels of the universe are very prominent devatās in the Vedas. Many Ādiris have merged in Śūrya and who is the god of Vāyu. Rudra has merged in Śiva. Who will believe that the all-powerful Deva of the Rgveda and the vanglourous Indra who lives in fear of men doing penance are one and the same person?"

ĀDIRYVASA. A powerful weapon or missile. One night Arjuna fought against ādīgarāpaṇa, the king of the river Ganges. Arjuna then described to him how he came into possession of this missile. This powerful missile was given first to Bhāradvāja by Bhārapati and Bhāradvāja gave it to Āgneya who in turn gave it to Droṇa and the latter gave it to Arjuna, his most favourite disciple. (Skokha 29-30, Chapter 170, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

the revered preceptor of Drona. (Ślokas 67 and 68, Chapter 14, Vana Parva, M.B.)

AGRAVYANA. The fourth son of the Agni, Bhūnu. (Śloka 13, Chapter 221, Vana Parva, M.B.)

AGREYA. A country conquered by Karna. (Ślokas 19-21, Chapter 254, Vana Parva, M.B.)

AHAVANIYA. An agni. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 67).

AHUKA. A king of Yadu Vamśa. He was the father of Ugrasena, the father of Karna. (Some Puranas say that Ahuka and Ugrasena were the names of the same person). For genealogy see "YADU VAMŚA". In M.B., Sahbhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 23, we find that Akūra had married Sutunā, the daughter of Ahuka. Ahuka had a hundred sons. (M.B., Sahbhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 36). There were constant quarrels between Ahuka and Akūra. (M.B., Sānti Parva, Chapter 81, Verses 26 and 27).

AHUTI. A Kṣatriya king. Śri Kṛṣṇa defeated this king in the city called Jārūṭh. (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 30).

AJAGARA. An ascetic Sānti Parva of Mahābhārata in its 178th Chapter states that Prabhāda conversed with this ascetic. (Verses 2 and 3).

AJAGARA PARVA. A sub-division of the Vana Parva of Mahābhārata. (See under M.B.).

AJAGARAVRATA. The vratā practised by the sage Ajagara. (A vratā is a predetermined course of action which is followed with continued persistence). In his own words it is the following: "If I get a grand feast I will accept it but I will go without food for days together if I do not get any food at all. People used to feed me well sometimes, sometimes a little and sometimes not at all. I eat vegetables and cakes sometimes. I eat meat and any kind of food. I will lie on soft bed or on bare earth sometimes and in bog houses if I get the chance. I will wear costly clothes if I get them or I will wear dried leaves and animal skins. If I get meat sometimes I will never reject it, but I will never go seeking for it." (Ślokas 19-25, Chapter 179, Sānti Parva, M.B.)

AJAGAVA. The bow of Māndhātā and Priyu and the Gandiva of Arjuna bear the name Ajagava. (Ślokas 33 and 34, Chapter 126, Vana Parva; Śloka 94, Chapter 143, Droga Parva, M.B. and Chapter 13, Amśāk 1 of Vana Parva).

AJAMIDHA. A king born of the family of Ajamidha.

AJANEYA. A species of good horses. (Śloka 10, Chapter 270, Vana Parva, M.B.).

AJAYAPA (S). A community of Piris belonging to the dynasty of Pulaha. They are called so because they drink during yagus the ghee made out of goats milk (Ajyam). (Matyā Parāṇa). They live in the land of Kardama Prajapati. Their daughter Viraja is the wife of Nahuja. (Śrītī Khaṇḍa, Padma Parāṇa).

AKARSA. People living in the land named Akarsa are called Ākaraṇas. (Śloka 11, Chapter 34, Sahbhā Parva, M.B.).

AKASHAṆAṆI. Holes made on the walls of a fort. Bullets are sent out from the fort through these holes.

AKATHA. A story. It was a great devotee of Sīva and once when his house was burnt completely the idol of Sīva inside his house was partially destroyed. Worried much over this loss Ākatha was about to give a portion of his body also to the flames when Sīva appeared before him and blessed him. (Pātīla Khaṇḍa, Padma Parāṇa).

AKROṢA. A king of ancient Bhūrata. He was king over the land of Mahotta. Nakula conquered him during his victory march. (Ślokas 5 and 6, Chapter 32, Sahbhā Parva, M.B.).

AKRTI. A king of ancient Bhūrata. This king ruled over the land of Saurāstra. (Śloka 61, Chapter 31, Droga Parva, M.B.).

AKRITIPUTRA. Rucirapāva, son of Ākriti. He fought on the side of the Pándavas and was killed by Bhīma. (Ślokas 40 to 47, Chapter 27, Droga Parva, M.B.).

AKUṬI. Wife of Rudraprajapati. Brahmad's son Svañyambhava Manu got of his wife Satarūpa two sons Priyavrata and Uttanapāda and two daughters Praśiṇī and Ākūṭi. Praśiṇī was married to Dakṣaprājapati and Ākūṭi to Rudraprajapati. Akrutī delivered twins named Yajña, a son, and Dakṣa, a daughter. (Chapter 7, Vamśa 1, Vamśa Parāṇa).

ALAJALA. See under "YAMAIHVA".

ALAMB. An ancient sage He flourished in Yudhūthra's court (M.B., Sahbhā Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 5).

ALAMBAYANA. A commander of Indra. (M.B., Anuśāk 1 of Vana Parva).

ALAR. See the word NAMMALVAR.

AM. See under AVATARA.

AMARATHA. A place in ancient Bhūrata. (Śloka 54, Chapter 9, Bhūṣa Parva, M.B.).

ANA (A Malayalam word meaning elephant). Bhīma's chariot relates the story of how Indrayuddha became the elephant (See under Indrāyuddha).

ANA II. (Elephant) Valihiti Rāmāyana narrates the origin of elephants thus. "Kaśyapa was born to Marici, son of Brahma. Kaśyapa married the daughters, Adui, Diti, Danu, Kālikā, Tāmā, Krodhyāvā, Manu and Anala, of Dakṣaprājapati. Of these Krodhvāvā gave birth to ten gṛs, Mrg, Megumath, Hār, Bhadrmatā, Mārangi, Sād, Śrise, Sātī, Surabhī, Śrīvala, and Kadsura. Elephants were born as sons of Mārangi. (Sarga 14, Aranyā Khaṇḍa, Valihiti Rāmāyana).

There is a story in the Mahābhārata to explain why the tongue of the elephant is curved inside. "Bhrigu Maharṣi cursed Agni and greatly deprieved over this he disappeared from public and hid somewhere. The Devas started searching for him and it was an elephant that showed the devas the hiding place of Agni. Agni then cursed the elephants and said that thereafter all the elephants would have their tongues curved inside. (Śloka 36, Chapter 85, Anuśāk 3, Vana Parva, M.B.).

The signs of good elephants and the treatment to be accorded to sick ones are detailed in Agni Parāṇa. Elephants with long tails and heavy breathing belong to the top class and they will possess great endurance power. Those who have nails eighteen or twenty in number and who become turbulent during winter belong to a superior class. Those ones whose right tusks are a bit raised, whose cry is stentorian as that of thunder whose ears are very big and whose skins are spotted are the best of the species. Other varieties especially the dwarfed type and nine-elephants in the early stage of pregnancy are not good and not fit to be tamed. Elephants who have Vāra, Sattva, Bala, Rēpa, Kānti, Sarirguna and Vēga will conquer enemies in a battle, there is no doubt about it. Elephants are an ornament for any battle-array. The victory earned by a King with his elephants is more respected.
For all diseases of an elephant Anuvāsana or Suhlavasti is recommended. A bath after anointing it with oil or ghee is good. For skin diseases the ghee may be combined with Maijal (Turmeric), Maramañjal or gomutra (cow urine). If it suffers from enlargement of the belly, giving it a bath with sesame oil is good. It can be given Fodacalavanas and Vārūpanišūya to drink. If there is fainting it must be given rice mixed with Vīlāni, Tripāla, Cukku, Mulaku and Tippali and water mixed with honey to drink. If there is headache anointing the head with sesame oil and inhalation of the same is good.
For diseases of the foot, treatment with Suchaputas is prescribed. To get motion of the bowels Kalkanuj Kāśīya (infusion of sugar candy) is good. To those who have shivers should be given the flesh of peacock, Tittirī bird and Lava bird mixed with Tippali and pepper. For dysentery the tender fruit of Kāvāla, skin of Paccoitti, flower of Tittirī should be dried and powdeered and be given mixed with sugar along with rice.
For Karagahā (pain inside the trunk) Nāysam of ghee with Lavapana mixed in it should be done. It must be given in Muttaga Kāhepi with tippali, Cukku and Jiraka in it. For Utakamaku (pain in the ear) flesh of pigs should be given. For Galagahā (pain in the neck) a liniment made of Dākamla, Muttappuli and Kakkapanacci in oil should be rubbed at the site of pain and the elephant kept under chains. If there is difficulty in passing urine light honey containing powdered Aṭākavag as should be given. For all skin diseases use Vepp oil as an ointment and give the infusion of Aṭālotaka to drink. For worms (inside the stomach) give cow’s urine with powdeered Vīlāni in it. If the elephant is getting reduced and weak it should be given milk or meat soup with Cuk-ku, Tippali and ghee well mixed in it. If there is lack of appetite it is to be given Muṅgaudana (rice boiled along with Čerupaya) to which it is added Cukku, Mulaku and Tippali. If it is Gūlma it should be given sesame oil boiled with the following: Trikoṭakonna, Cukku, Mulaku Tippali, Kottuvulikillaṅg, Nāgadantiveru, Erikkivenru, Nākkotakonna, Milk and Aṭītippali.
Navara rice with sort of Čerupaya can also be given.
For swellings on the face, a paste made of tender
Kīvāla fruits can be rubbed at the site of the swelling.
For all sorts of pains in the stomach rice well mixed with the powder made by grinding together Vīlāni, Kutakappālayari, Asafoiti, Carula, Maijal, Maramañjal may be given.
The best food for elephants is the rice of Navara, Vīri and connellu. Yava and wheat are next to the above.
Any other food is inferior to these. Yava and sugarcane will give strength to elephants. Dry yava rice is not good. Milk and meat cooked with carminative ingredients are good for elephants who have gone lean.
If the elephants receive great injuries in a battle the meat of birds like Crow, Sowl, Cuckoo and Hari mixed with honey is good. Fumigation by the burning of chili, fish, Vīlāni, caustic soda, Pottal, Piram and maramañjal mixed together is effective. Dropping honey medicated with tippali tadhula, sesame oil, and fruit honey in the eyes is not only good for the eyes but is also inductive of digestion. Make an ointment with the faces of the birds ečaka and Pālvata mixed with the burnt skin of Nāṭpamara dissolved in light spirit.
If this ointment is applied, the elephant would defeat all enemies in a battle. Powder Nilottala, Muttaga and Takara and make an ointment using rice griel.
Applying this ointment in the eye is excellent.
If the nails grow they should be cut at least once a month. Once in a month an oil bath is good for the elephants. Elephant sheds should be spread with cow-dung discs and dust. Doing Seka with ghee during autumn and summer is advisable. (Chapter 287, Agni Prāṇa).

1. Vīlāni—The grain of Vīlā—Vṛdesa (Rabreng)
2. Tripāla—A combination of the three fruits:
   a) Sāmicā (Emblic Myrobalan)
   b) Viḥītakī (Beleri, Myrobalan) and c) Hariṇī (Myrobalam)
3. Cukku—Sunthi (dry ginger)
4. Mulaku—Raktaimla (chili)
5. Tippali—Pappali (long pepper)
6. Kōvēla—Vīlā (Bengal Khes)
7. Paccoitti—Lodhra (syneplocos Racemosa)
8. Tittirī—Dhālī (Grindis Tomentosa)
9. Nāysam—A method of introducing medicine through the nose
10. Lōtappi—Salekī Puppa (Flower of Bombilla Thunberga)
11. Muttaga—Mūtā (Cyperus Rotundus) Kāhepi means rice boiled with water and Muttaga Kāhepi means rice and muttaga boiled together.
12. Jiraka—Jiraka (cumin seeds)
13. Dākamla—A combination of ten herbs
14. Muttaga—Mūtā (Cyperus Rotundus)
15. Kakkapanacci—Kākāntaṇu
16. Aṭālotaka—Eight salts like common salt, rock salt, magnesium sulphate etc.
17. Aṭākavag—Aṭākavag (Vasa, Graped)
18. Čerupaya—Nūgga (green grain)
19. Gūlma
20. Trikoṭakonna—Thīṭṭī (Turbithroot)
21. Kottuvulikillaṅg—Gīratha (Thumbago rose)
22. Nāgadantiveru—Root of Nāgadantiveru (Glossous leaved Physienut)
23. Erikkivenru—Root of Errick (Giganie swallow wort)
24. Nākkotakonna—Kīrā Thīṭṭī
25. Aṭītippali—Hastīppali
27. Carula—Sāru (long leaved pate)
28. Maijal—Habāli (Turmeric)
29. Maramañjal—Dārvi
30. Vīri—Gandu (A kind of paddy)

ĀNAKA. A person of the Yādava dynasty. (See under YADAVAVAMŚA)

ĀNADUDEHUBHĪ. An epithet of Vasudeva, father of Śri Kṛṣṇa.

ĀNADĀ. A forest on the top of the mountain Mahāmeru. It was inhabited by celestial damsels, devas, gandharvas and maharśas. (Chapter 93, Bīhām Khaṇḍa, Patada Purāṇa)

ĀNADĀ (CAKṢUSĀ). Son of Mahārāja Anandivīra. It was he who was born as Cākṣusā, the sixth Manu. There is a story behind his birth. One day, while his mother was keeping him in her lap and caressing him the baby laughed and questioned “Oh mother why are you caressing me, but look at those two cats. They consider me as their food!” After some time one of the cats took the child away and put it in the cradle of the child of King Vīrānā. Vīrānā took the child as his granted and reared him. At the time of Upamaṇya the king asked the boy to proclaim before his mother at which the boy exclaimed “Oh King, I am not your son. Your son is at some other place. Be births and rebirths all of us have many mothers and so it is better to be above rebirths”. After having said so much Ananda went to the forest and started doing penance. Brahāma appeared before him and blessing him said that he would become the sixth Manu and lead the world to righteousness. By the blessing of Brahāma Ananda was reborn as Cākṣusamun. (See under Cākṣusā). (Marudeva Purāṇa)

ĀNANDAVARDHANA. A great critic of Sanskrit literature. He lived in the 9th century A.D. He expounded his theory of Dharmāvāda by 120 Kārikās. His own commentary of the Kārikās is the book called Dharmāvāda. There are four parts for Dharmāvāda and each part is called an Udyma. There is a belief among a few that the Kārikās were written by another scholar, Śrīdhara, and that Anandavardhana had written an commentary on it. He was a member of the royal council of Avantivarman who ruled Kālīkund during the period 854-884 A.D. It is believed that he wrote Dharmāvāda in 850 A.D. Many commentaries have been written on Dharmāvāda of which the one written by Abhinavagupta is considered to be the best.

ĀNARITA. Grandson of Vayavatamanu. He was a king, son of Śrīyāti.

Sixteen sons were born to Vayavatamanu: Manu, Yama, Yami, Adivintrimāra, Revanta, Sudyumna, Kṛṣyāka, Nirgu, Sāryāti, Dīṛṭa, Dṛjra, Kaṭaṣa, Nārīṣya, Nābhaga, Pradhura and Kavi. Of these, Śrīyāti got two children, Sūkyā and Anarita. Sūkyā and Anarita became the wife of Gyavama.

2. Other details. It was this king who built the fortresses at the town of Kuśasthali (Dvārakā). Vayavā submergeed in the ocean all the fortresses built by him and the place for some time remained as a forest land. (Kāndva Sandhīna, Bhāgavata Kliśpāra). It was later that Śrī Kṛṣṇa made the land beautiful and called it Dvārakā. The country ruled over by Anarita was called Anaritam. During his regime there lived in his land a very great scholar named Vairājī (Umaśānātara, Śrī Purāṇa). See under Vedaratha.

ĀNARITA (M). A place in ancient Bāṅgāra. Aparna conquered this place. (Śloka 4, Chapter 20, Sābhā Parāva, M B.)

ĀNDIRA. The present Andhira Pradeśa. It was famous even from prehistoric times and it was annexed by Saiva by defeating its ruler. In a game of dice

ĀNGARASTH. A king of ancient Bhūmī. (Ślokas 13 and 14, Chapter 125, Pārśva, M B.)

ĀNGIRASAKALPA. A sandhi šāstra of Aśvāvatāra. The five sandhi śāstras known as Aśvāvatāra written by Maṅgikēsā are the best. They are The Naksatra Kalpa dealing with the pītha rites of the stars; The Veda Kalpa dealing with the rites associated with Brahāna, the Rikvil; The Sambhlā Kalpa, dealing with the use and practice of Mantras, the Anugālas Kalpa dealing with sanskriti and the Sūktā Kalpa dealing with matters relating to the welfare and control of animals like horses and elephants (Chapter 6, Amālam 3 of Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

ĀNGIRASI. A very chaste wife of a Brahmin. By the curse of Śrīkṣetra, son of Vasu, Mahānāpadu, a king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty became a demon. That demon killed and devoured the husband of Āṅgirasi. Enraged at this the Brahmin lady cursed Mahānāpadu saying that if he touched his wife thereafter he would die. That was why Vasu had to beg a son for Mahānāpadu of his wife. (Śloka 16-22, Chapter 101, Asvā Parāva, M B.)

ĀNGHRIKI. One of the sons of Viśāntaka who were Brahmarādas. (Śloka 54, Chapter 4, Anūsana Parāva, M B.)

ĀJALI. A sage who was a classmate of Sāntaka (Sandhīna 12, Bhāgavata).

ĀJANA RULA. A division of elephants (in the army). (Ślokas 17 and 18, Chapter 112, Drona Parāva, M B.)

ĀMUṢASANIKA PARVA. One of the Parvams of the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata)

ĀPA. One of the Asvāvas. The Asvāvas are Āpa, Dhruva, Soma, Dharna, Anila, Agni, Pratyā and Prabhu. The sons of Āpa are Vayavāna, Srama, Sānta and Svāni. (See under Asvāvas). (Chapter 13, Amālam 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa)

ĀPAGA. A sacred river. It is said that if one goes food to one Brahmin on the banks of this river it will be equivalent to giving food to a cow of brahmin elsewhere. (Śloka 68, Chapter 82, Vayu Parāva, M B.)
APASTAMBHA. An ancient sage. He once consoloed King Dyumatra. (Stotka 16, Chapter 299, Vana Parva, M.B.).

1) How he got his name. Once a Brahmin did not get a suitable man to officiate as priest for a śraddha ceremony. He then prayed to his ancestors, Viśvedevas and Mahāvyāna for help and then Apastamba appeared before him. The Brahmin gave him food to his heart's content and asked him how he felt. To the surprise of the Brahmin Apastamba replied, he wanted some more and thus made the Śraddha ineffective. The Brahmin got angry and cursed him by sprinkling on his face water taken in his palm. But before the water-particles reached his face Apastamba ordered the water-drops to remain still. Water stopped stiff and still midway by the power of the sage because water (Āpa) became stiff (Stambha) the rṣi was named Apastamba. (Brahma Parākṣa).

2) How Apastamba tirtha came into existence. Once he met Agastya Muni and asked him who was superior among the gods Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Siva. Agastya declared that Siva stood supreme of the three and gave him advice as to how to please Siva. Following his instructions Apastamba did penance on the banks of the r. Gau- tanī and Siva appeared before him, blessed him, and made that place a holy one. Siva declared that those who, basking at that place would obtain ‘Divyajñāna’ (Divine knowledge enabling one to know the past, present and future). From that onwards that place was known as Apastamba tirtha.

3) Other details. Apastamba had a very chaste and humble wife named Akāsātra. Their son was Gārī. ‘Gṛhasthātramgraha’ containing a prayer and two mantras is a contribution to the holy science by Apastamba. Many Hindus follow it even now. He had stated that the decrease in the number of great sages was because of the fact that people were not practising the control of the senses as before.

APADDHARMA PARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

1) Another name of sage: Vaśishtha. (Stotka 5, Chapter 99, Adi Parva, M.B.).

2) An ancient sage: Kārttiriyārjuna once cursed Ātrya by saying this rśi, and thus Agni and Kārttiriyārjuna (Stotka 42 and 43, Chapter 49, Śanti Parv, M.B.).

APO’ADHAUMLYA. (See Ayodhadaumya).

APTA. A well-known dynasty of the Kāśyapa dynasty. (Stotka 8, Chapter 39, Adi Parva, M.B.).

APR. The significance of the number six among the ancients, as given below. (In Malayalam, ak means six).

1) Six factors which reduce the span of life. Eating dry meat, Drinking curd at night, Sleeping at dawn, Drinking impure water, Exposure to sun's heat in the morning. Inhaling fumes from dead body.

2) Six diverse qualities: Omiscience, Omipresence, Omipotence, Omipervasion, Omisupersisko, Omisupersicosa (being the cause of everything); Sarvajñāyatā (omniscience), and Sarvekṣāvatāramatta (having domination over everything).

4) Six Rū Dharmas (Duties of Sage). Brahmacarya, Absolute truth, Japa, Jāna (wisdom), Niyama, Sense of Justice.

5) Six qualities of nobles' wives. A minister in business, a servant-maid in action, the goddess Lakṣmī in appearance, the Earth in patience, a mother in love and a prostitute in bed.

6) Six qualities of a bad wife. Habit of dispute, stealing of money, showing favour to strangers, scandal-mongering, taking food earlier than the husband, spending money out of the time in one hand.

7) Six Vedāngas. Śiśuka, Kāliya, Vṛṣātra, Nirukta, Jyotiṣa, Chandas.

ARALIKHA. A mahout who could control elephants that had gone mad temporarily. (Stotka 9, Chapter 2, Virāṭa Parva, M.B.).

ARANAYAPARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

AROKHA. A mountain in front of the forest Saindhava inhabited by Manitpurisās. (Stotka 16, Chapter 125, Vana Parva, M.B.).

ARJAVA. Son of Subala and brother of Śakuni. He was killed by Irāivan son of Ārjuna. (Bṛhaspati Parva, M.B.).

AROKA(M). A country of ancient Bhārata. The people of this place are called Aroakas. (Stotka 7, Chapter 51, Bṛhaspati Parva, M.B.).

ARSA(M). A form of marriage. Brahma is the form of marriage in which the bride is given to a man of good ancestry and fine character. Marriage by giving the bride after receiving a pair of cows from the bridegroom is called Ārṣa. Priyaputrya is the form of marriage in which the bride is given to the man who asks for her. When the bride is given with dairy, the marriage is known as Āsuram. Marriage with the mutual love and consent is Gāndharvam. Capturing the bride after a fight and marrying her by force is Rākṣasa. Marriage after deceiving the bride is called Pāñcika. These are the seven types of marriage. According to the author of the Śruti another form of marriage known as DAIVA is also mentioned (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 15).

ARŚĪŚENA. A Maharsi. In the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 159 there is a reference to the Pāṇḍavas visiting this tirtha during their life in the forest. Arśīśena’s āśrama was midway between Badaryārāma and Kubera’s capital, Paurī.

ARVĀṇI. In Kṛtyuga, this sage did rigorous tapas in Pṛthudakakṣithā. owing to the rigour of the tapsa he obtained all the chief vedas. He gave three boons to that sacred tirtha —

1. Those who bathe in this tirtha will get the benefit of Aśvamedha yāga.

2. There will be no fear of snakes in this tirtha.

3. A slight effort made here, will be rewarded with greater results.

After giving these three boons to the river Sarasvatī which is Pṛthudakakṣithā, the sage attained Brahmānhood and entered Devakā. (M.B., Sāya Parva, Chapter 40, Verses 3-9).

ARTAVYANI. Salya, son of Kṛṣṇa. He was noted for his great honesty and love of truth. (Stotka 56, Chapter 2, Sāya Parva, M.B.).

ARTIMAN. A mantra which eliminates all kinds of fear. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 23-26).

ARUNI I. A disciple of the sage Ayodhadaumya. (For details see under Ayodhadaumya).
ARUN II

ARUN II. A cobra born in the family of the serpent, Bhārata. This cobra fell dead at the Sapastra of Janamejya (Sūtra 19, Chapter 57, Adi Parva, M.B.).

ARUN III. A son born of Varaha by his wife Vīnaiśa. (Sūtra 49, Chapter 53, Adi Parva, M.B.).

ARUN IV. A soldier of the Kaurava army. He fought against Arjuna along with Sakuni. (Sūtra 122, Chapter 156, Drōṇa Parva, M.B.).

ARUN V. One of the one hundred and eight Upanisads.

ARUN. A daughter of Manu. Gṛiva got married with her. They got a son named Auruva. The child was taken from the thigh of Aruva. Reika was the son of this Auruva. Reika was the father of Jamadagni, father of Pārashurāma. Even from childhood Auruva was a bold, bright and good boy. (Sūtras 47 and 48, Chapter 66, Adi Parva, M.B.).

ARYAS

The Rgveda gives us most of the information regarding the Aryas who came to the north of India during the times of the Vedas through the passes on that north-western side of Bhārata. Sūtra 6.51 K.R. Panikkar writing in his preface to the Rgveda-samhita states that the Vedas were transmitted to the Aryas by the Gāndhāran trader to breed goats, dogs, donkeys, and horses. The elephant was unknown to them. In the Vedas the vehicle of Indra is a horse and not an elephant. When Indra was the vehicle of the god Indra, the Veda did not say anything about how Indra got the elephant. Airāvata was his vehicle. Sing to the glory of Indra who was in his chariot driven by two horses no enemy would dare to face.

The Rgveda gives great importance to agriculture. Areas under cultivation were called Urva and ‘Kṣetra’. Fields were ploughed by teams of six, eight and even twelve bullocks to the plough. Water was taken from bradai and Kalyakas (ponds and tanks) for the purpose of irrigation. Agriculture was a very familiar art to the Arya, which was successfully cared for by grains and yava. They conducted trade by the exchange of goods generally. There is a reference in one place of the use of a coin ‘Nāśaka’.

The Aryas were clever in the art of leather work, woodwork and metallurgy. They were well versed in medicine also. In a sūtra of the ninth mandala it is stated that the father of a rāja was a medical practitioner. There are references to many industries also. Weaving was a very important industry at that time. Cotton cloth and woollen blankets were made by them on a large scale. Iron was used by them with great skill. The manufacture of armours and the descriptions about them in the Rgveda are ample evidence of the proficiency of the Arya in iron working. Travelling by sea, voyage was not familiar to them. References to traders cruising in boats in the Sindh river do not give much importance to the cruising. In food rice and ghee were important. Meat was also relished. Ṛṣis wore animal skins but others wore choti and shawls.

During the Rgvedic times their social structure was divided into four stages. Grāma was a colony of families and was the nucleus of a family. Gramas formed into a place called Vīṣṇya. A number of Vīṣṇyas became what was known as ‘Janam’. The importance of Janas can be understood by the statements made about Paścajanas and the existence of special Janas like Vedāya Janas and Bhārata Janas.

There is no wonder why the Aryas had to take a strong counter to the excavated kingship. The Rgveda narrates the difficulties people would have to encounter if they were left to fight their enemies without a proper leader and so advocates Kingship and gives it an exalted position in their social structure. Sūtra 22, Anuvāka 12 of Manu 10 describes the coronation of a King thus: ‘Let us hereby crown you as King. Come to our man. Rule us with censure and in the strong spirit. Let all your subjects love you. Let thy kingdom remain with you for ever’. The next mantra is also of the same idea. A King is above punishment. The veda speaks about many famous kings of which the following are worth mentioning. Dhruvāśa, Sudās, Ambarisha, Mahāsīna and Purovitraśa.

The chief priest of the Vaisāṇa are the political advisor also. Viśvāmītīram and Varāthā were two great priests of the Bhārata dynasty. There were other priests also. Mention is there about a Rājaśaḥ with nothing said about their power or functions. It can be surmised that the Sāḥā was constituted of only men of character and learning.

It is interesting to note the type of domestic life in those days. A father had the right to sell his children. To cite an example is the story of Suṇḍaṇa who was made into a cow and sold to Viśvāmitra who looked after him well. The father had the right to make his children lose all rights over his properties. Viśvāmitra sent out from his family fifty sons who refused to obey him. Dowry was current then. Sūtra 21, Anuvāka 5, Manu 10 orders that the bride’s father must sell the house of his daughter after the marriage. Polygamy was not objected to. There is a mantra to harass the co-wife and its purpose is to make the husband more attached to her who hates the co-wife. The originator of this mantra was Indrajit, the son of Indra. Indra had many wives. Marriage was considered as a necessary duty. Widow marriage is also a part of traditional Hinduism. The Rgveda gives the picture of a society of people who were always at war with each other. ‘We are surrounded by mighty enemies. Help us’. This is the slogan that rings out from the Rgveda.

The Rgveda is a history of the Aryas. The march from Kūbhāta (Kabul) to the banks of Yamunā is depicted there. It was at Kūbhāta that the mantras were first made. When they reach the banks of the Gaṅgā the period of Rgveda ends. The crossing of each of the five rivers of Paścajanas is treated as a big event by the Ṛṣis. When they saw the huge and deep river, Sindhu, they were amazed. The wonder is reflected in a lovely mantra. It was after crossing Sindhu that they had to cross the ‘Daśaurī’. The Rgveda itself records that the Daśaurī were more cultured than the Aryas. Sambhāra, a Daśaurī King, was the ruler of a hundred cities. Their fortresses were strong. They have been described in the Rgveda as Alvaṇa, Ayāṣa and Satabhūja.

The chief opponents of the Aryas were a tribe of people called Paṇi. From the Nīrūka of Yāṣa we are given to understand that the Paṇis were mainly engaged in trade. The Rgveda names many Daśaurī kings of which the following few were more daring and brave and the Aryas acknowledged their superior strength and courage: Dhūni, Cumaṇi, Viṣṇu, Varaha and Sambhara. Among the several divisions of the Dravidas, the Simyus, Kikoras, Maras, and Yaksus, ranked foremost in power. They are described as having black colour and flat noses and speaking a language different from that of the Aryas. We may surmise from these facts that they belonged to the Dravidian class of people. They never conducted yaga nor did they worship gods like Istra. They were idol worshippers; so they have been assumed as Shikaras. The other Aryas were the Dwimalas, the Bhramaras, the Dravidas, the Siyus, and the Kikoras. The Aryas, who settled down in Paicandana, were strong and to prevent them from coming and conquering them, Bharastra tried to keep them on the other side of Subudri (Sutcli). This led to a war called Dasaratja. This war is to be considered as one of the most important events in the war of the world. Those who opposed Suddha were Aryas, though among the supporters of Suddha, there were also Aryas. When the fighting took place, the Aryas were killed by Suddhas, who came out victorious in that war and put an end to further conquests by the Aryas. From thereon, the Aryas joined hands with the Mahodaras and founded the town of the great Bhima in civilization. Thereafter the Ryveda stayed about places for help to combat their enemies of Aryas and Dravida. The gods who were recognized in that town were later worshiped in the vest of the Aryas. The worship of Mahodyogi and Devi found in Mohopadana is an evidence of this change.

ARYA: One of the seven mothers who were present at the birth of Sub-Jainamayu (Stoka 13, Chapter 228, Vatsa Parva, M.B.).

ARYAKA: A famous serpent. (Stoka 7, Chapter 33, Adi Parva, M.B.) Aryaka is associated with Jina in the following story: When Duryodhana was required to give poison to Bhima's body, the king of the serpents and his people under Suddha had promised to send him the poison to his friend Bhima. Udrakriva Bhima took his food and went to bathe in the river. After some time Bhima became unconscious due to the effect of the poison and fell flat in the river. Immediately Duryodhana bound him by ropes and put him in deep waters. Bhima reaching the bottom was saved by all the snakes there. This fortunate served as an antidote and the poison in Bhima's body was neutralized, and Bhima became his old self again and killed all the serpents. Those serpents who escaped were and brought their chief Vasku. At that time it was Arokha who advised Vasku to give him "rastapanam." (Stoka 64-68, Chapter 227, Adi Parva, M.B.).

ARUKA: Another name for Durgadavi. (Chapter 12, Agra Purana.)

ARYAVARTA: Another name for Bharastra. There is also a place of that name. According to Sarali, the land lying between the Himayala and the Vindhyas is called Aryavarta (Stoka 15, Chapter 327, Sani Parva, M.B.).

ARYAVARTA: A king of the dynasty of Vivasvan. Genealogy Descending in order from Vivasvan are Brahlun, Bhramaras, Bhrratha, Yavakaras, Pravatras, Agudhara, Naatu, Rasgh and Arayavarta. Of these, Kuchu got his wife Javan twenty sons: Bharata, Kuskavarta, Hvarata, Brahmanavarta, Arayavarta, Malya, Keuru, Bharmesta, Indraprak, Vidhriva, Kikata, Kau, Hari, Antariksa, Prabuddha, Prapala, Aifterota, Damaida, Cunawa, and Karbarhjyana. On these Bharatas ruled over this land and gave it the name Bharastra. Brothers of Bharata ruled different parts of this land. Damaida's land became known later as Dravida (Dakshinbahara). (Stoka 1, Chapter 2, Adi Parva, M.B.)

ASADA: A Kaatriya King. He was the instigator of a Kausika called Krodhavatya. Kalyapa was the son of Marku, Brhma's son. Kalyapa married Krodhavatya, daughter of Daksa. The Kausika group called Krodhavatya were the children of Krodhavatya. Many Kaatriya kings trace their descent from this group of Kausikas. The names of such Kaatriya Kings are given below: Madhaka, Karmavatya, Siddhartha, Kajarathuka, Subhibu, Balika, Kritisi, Vrista, Srinatha, Gavvasa, Karayya, Daknavatya, Durpeya, Krikas, Jumayya, Aaskha, Vayavanga, Bhruhras, Ekalvya, Sumitra, Gomukha, Vastadhana, and Ksemdhara. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 6, Verses 99-64.)

ASADA II: Sava. (M.B., Anusaana Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 121.)

ASADHAVATI: See under Paicandana.

ASADA: A month of a month. By fasting in this month, one will have many sons and plenty of wealth. (M.B., Anusaana Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 26.)

ASADA: Name of a war. After observing a fast on the day of this star, if curd is given to a Brahmin of noble birth, one can take rebirth in a family having many cows. (M.B., Anusaana Parva, Chapter 54, Verses 26-29.)

ASAMAKA: A mahout in the Udyanaya story. In Katharangasara, Kathamukhalamamuka, 5th Taranga, we find a reference to an elephant called Vudравata and a mahout named Asadhaka in the palace of the hero, Vasudatta. (M.B., Anusaana Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 121.)

ASAMGA: See under ASADA.

ASAMGAALAYOGI: A King, who was generous by nature. In the Ryveda, there is a reference to this King who once lost his son and gave him back to the god who had stolen him, and was restored to manhood by a Manu named Medhyath. (M.B., Anusaana Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 30.)

ASANA: Poign in Yogyabiyan. There are different types of Asanas. The chief of them are given below:

1) Bhagasana: Lying flat, face downwards on a sheet with hands placed close to the body on either side. After relaxing all the muscles of the body, concentrate the mind on health. Keeping the feet close together and pressing the knees against the ground, raise the soles upwards to the sky. Place both palms, pressing against the ground, touching the shoulders on both sides. Then raise the head and bend the neck backwards as far as possible. At this time, the trunk and legs should be in close contact with the ground. Gradually raise the chest, supported by the hands on the ground. Bring the head down in the same way as it was raised and restore the body to its former position. This asana strengthens the backbone.

2) Salabhasana: Lying flat on the sheet, face downwards. Keep the legs close together and raise the feet up with the heels touching each other. Place the hands close to the body on either side and close the fists upwards. Place the fists and shoulders close to the ground and make the whole body stiff after inhaling the breath. Then try to raise the legs. Support the weight of the body with the breast and hands. This is possible by pressing the fists, firmly against the ground. Until the Āsana is completed, do not send out the breath. Keep the legs straight, keep the body upright. When the Āsana is complete, you may be raised slightly. This makes the Āsana complete. On feeling suffocation, the legs must be brought down slowly.

Besides this, there are many other Āsanas like Dhanur-āsana, Padmānāthāsana, H̄lāsana, Mayārasana, Sarvākāsana, Matyāsana, Śīrāsana, Ardhaśatāyāsana, Ardha-padhānāsana, Padhānāsana, Udyāsana, Naub, Vipartikāsana, Vajraśūla, Śavasāna, etc. (See under Yogā).

ĀŚAṆHA I. A son of Kaśyapa and Aditi. From Vīśṇu the Brahmin, from Vīśṇu the Marici and from Marici the Kaśyapa were born. Kaśyapa married Aditi, daughter of Dakṣa. Aditi gave birth to ten sons: Bhaudāśana, Cakubāśana, Vībhāśvan, Rikṣa, Savās, Arka, Bhūma, Āśāvaha, Ravi and Vīśvasān. Vīśvasāna Manu was born to Vīśvasān (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 42).

ĀŚAṆHA II. A prince of the Vṛṣa dynasty. He was present at the Swayamvara of Draupadi. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 19).

ĀŚRA: Āsramites (Inmates of an Āśrama) have to pass through four stages. The four stages of the Śravakārya Garbhaśāstra, Garbhakṣaṇa, Garbhakṣaṇa and Garbhaśāstra are known as the four Āśramas. Vīṣṇu Purāṇa, Part III, Chapter 9 describes each of the Āśramas as follows:

1. Brahmāśārya. “After Upanayana a boy should maintain a Brahmācāri’s vrata, engage himself in the study of the Vedas, suppress his indriyas (the five senses) and live in the house of the preceptor. Living therefore with dharmic discipline, he should study the vrata and vratas he should serve and attend on the Guru. The study of Vedas should be with proper observance of Vratas and steady attention. A Brahmācāri should worship with concentration, the Sun and Agni at the time of the two sandhyās (dawn and dusk) and after that he should do obeisance to the Guru. When the Guru stands, he should also be standing. When the guru walks, he should also walk behind him and when he sits, he should sit in a lower position. The Śīṣya (disciple-pupil) should not do anything against the guru. When the guru himself asks, the Śīṣya should sit in front of him and recite Vedas without attending to anything else. After that, with his permission he may eat food which has been got by begging. The Śīṣya may take his bath in the water only after the Ācārya (guru) has taken his bath in it. Everyday the Camata, darbha, water and flowers which the guru needs, must be brought and supplied (by the Śīṣya).

2. Gṛhaśāla. After the study of the Vedas the intelligent Śīṣya gives Garudāśrama (Payment to the preceptor) and with the consent of the Guru, enters into Gṛhaśāla. Then he is to marry by earning money from a suitable occupation, should fulfill all obligations of a Gṛhaśāla according to his capacity. The Gṛhaśāla who worships the Pīthas with Pīndādāna (offerings of rice balls),Devas with Yāgas (sacrifices), Rāis with Śvādhyāya (self discipline), Prajāpati with begetting of children, spirits with bal (offering of food etc.) and the whole world with love, attains the holy world by his own virtues. Gṛhaśāla is the only source of support for sannyāsī and brahmācāris who beg their food. Therefore feeding them is an act of nobility. Brahmānas travel from country to country to study Vedas, for pilgrimage and for seeing the places. The Gṛhaśāla is the only refuge and support of those who are homeless and without homesteads. The rule is for them and those who spend the night wherever they reach. If such people come to his house, the Gṛhaśāla should welcome them with kind and loving words, and give them bed, seat and food. The guest who leaves a house disappointed, is really departing after transferring his own sins to that householder and taking away all the virtuous deeds of the householder. It is not proper for the Gṛhaśāla to treat a guest with disrespect, to behave rudely or treacherously towards him, to reject what has been given to the guest, or to obstruct or rebuke him. The Gṛhaśāla who performs the supreme duty of Gṛhaśālākrama in this way properly, is liberated from all secular bonds and reaches the noblest worlds.

3. Vānaprasthā. After having finished all his duties in this way, to his satisfaction the Gṛhaśāla, with the commencement of old age, should go to the forest, either after entrusting his wife to his sons or taking her also with him. There, he should use leaves, roots and fruits for his food, grow hair and beard, sleep on the bare ground, lead the life of a āśrama and receive and honour all classes of guests. His clothes, sheets and blankets should be of deer-skin and darbha grass. The rule is that he should bathe three times a day. Worship of gods, performing homas, hospitality to all guests, meedancy—all these are the laudable features of Vānaprasthā. Any oil that is available in the forest is to be used for his oil bath. Enduring heat and cold, performing tapas, are also his duties. The Muni who observes this rule in Vānaprasthā is freed from all his evils as with fire and attains the eternal worlds.

4. Sannyāsa. The fourth Āśrama is that of the Sannyāsa. Before entering upon the fourth Āśrama one has to renounce the love of travel, wealth and wife and also give up all spirit of rivalry. One who embraces sannyāsa should abandon completely the efforts for the three Puruṣārthas of Dharmas, Artha and Kāma, treat friends and foes alike and continue to love all living beings. Not even a single creature should be offended by thought, word or deed. Conquering all passions, the Sannyāsī should renounce all bonds and attachments. He should not stay in a village more than one night and in a town more than five nights. Even that should be in such a way that no one should have any love or hatred towards him. For sustaining life, he should go about begging food from the houses of the people of the three castes—Brahmā, Śvētāśrama and Vājīśva. It should be after all people have taken their food and put out the cooking fire. The Sannyāsī should cast away all vices like Kāma, Krodha, Garva, Lobha, and Moha and should not have any thought of self in anything. The Muni who goes about giving shelter to all creatures will not have to fear any creature. The Brahmāna who follows the Sannyāsārama as described above with a pure heart and without difficulty will shine like fire without fuel and attain Brahmāloka in peace.

ĀŚRAWA VASIKARA PARVA. One of the Parvas in the Mahābhārata. (See under Mahabhārata).

ĀŚRAYA. A muni (sage) in Indra's assembly. (M.B., Śabha Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 18).
ASTIKA

ASTIKA. The son of the Maharsi Jaratkaru and his wife, also named Jaratkaru. He stopped King Janamejaya’s Sapa to ask leave and the nagas

1) Bush. There is a story about Astika’s birth in the Devi Bhagavata. Long ago the people of the world were so much troubled by the serpents, that they sought protection from Kasyapa Prajapati. To find a remedy for this, Kasyapa discussed the matter with Brahma. To put an end to the trouble from the serpents, Brahma suggested that a number of mantras and a deity as the basis of these mantras should be created. Accordingly Kasyapa created many mantras and Manasa Devi as the basic deity of those mantras. She is named “Manasa Devi” because Kasyapa created her by her mental power. Manasa Devi has eleven other names also, namely Jaratkura, Jagathguru, Suddhavetri, Vasagri, Nagalakshma, Sarvi, Nagaraja, Jaratkarupriya, Anikamata, Vasi and Manasa Avatari.

Manasa Devi (Jaratkaru) when quite young, went to Kailasa for doing tapas (penance). There she did tapas to Siva for a thousand years. At last Siva appeared and blessed her with divine wisdom. She returned with great learning and devotion. (Devi Bhagavata, Navarna Sandhini).

At this time, a Muni (sage) named Jaratkaru, when travelling through the forest happened to see his pits (souls of forefathers) hanging over a precipice at the end of a blade of grass. They were hanging precariously at the end of a reed grass, head downwards, about to fall into the abyss. Jaratkaru enquired why they were lying in that condition. They explained that they were in that plight because their descendant Jaratkura had no children. As he is a bachelor there is no hope either of his having any issue. Since he has no children, we will not get to heaven, they added. To save the pits from their predicament, Jaratkura decided to marry. But he wished to marry a woman who had the same name as his. Once Vasi met Jaratkura and told him that he had a sister named Jaratkura. He would be very happy if Jaratkura married her. Jaratkura accepted the offer readily and married Jaratkura.

After their marriage, while they were living together in a place called Pushkara uttha, an unexpected event happened which interrupted the happy course of their life. One evening, the husband was sleeping with his head in the wife’s lap, under a tree. The sun was about to set. As the Maharsi did not wake up before sunset, the wife became anxious. It is believed that he who does not wake up before sunset and who does not offer prayer at dusk will be guilty of the sin of Brahmatya (killing a Brahman). Nor was it proper to wake him up from a sound sleep. But in the end, she did wake him up. This frightened Jaratkura and sprang up in great fury. He denounced the wife then and there. Weeping bitterly, she begged for his forgiveness. At last Jaratkura relented and told her: “You will have a very noble, brilliant, renowned, virtuous, scholarly and devout son who will be a devotee of Vishnu and a preserver of the family.”

After this Manasa Devi set out to Kailasa. When she reached there Parama-Siva and Parvatii comforted her. Manasa Devi gave birth to a son. The priests were afraid that the child in the womb and so even before his birth he became a Jhâni and a yogi. In due course Manasa Devi gave birth to a son who was a part of Narsayya (Vishnu). Since he was the son of Manasa Devi who had deep devotion to the Guru and to the Gods, the boy was named Astika. The Mahabhrata, Adi Parva, gives another reason for giving this name to the boy. When the sage Jaratkura abandoned his wife, he had blessed her saying that the child in her womb would be a brilliant and devoted son. That is why this boy came to be called Astika.

2) Bhopad Astika was taught Vedas, Vedangas etc. by Parama-Siva himself. After receiving the blessings of Parama-Siva, Astika went to Pushkara uttha and did tapas to Vishnu for many years. Having received Vishnu’s blessings also, he returned to Kailasa. After living there happily with his mother for some time, once a day they started to the Aarama of Kasyapa Prajapati, the father of Manasa Devi. Kasyapa was very much pleased to see his noble hearted daughter and her brilliant son. To enhance the fame and accomplishments of the boy Kasyapa gave a sumptuous feast to ten crores of Brahmans. (Devi Bhagavata, Navarna Sandhini).

Vasuki was Manasa Devi’s brother. Astika grew up there under the care of Vasuki. It was Cyavana Muni who taught Sâhâgavadas to Astika, at this time. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 18).

3) Astika at the Sapticity. Once King Parikshit, the son of Abhimanyu was travelling through the forest for hunting animals. He picked up a dead snake with the tip of his bow and put it on the shoulder of a sage named “Samika”. Samika’s son, Shrâdi came to know of this. In his anger, Shrâdi pronounced a curse that King Parikshit should die within seven days by the bite of Takshaka. When Parikshit heard of this, he had a palace built on a single pillar in the middle of the ocean, quite inaccessible to Takshaka and took shelter there. The most famous physicians and wizards were engaged to ward off the approach of Takshaka to that place. Six days passed like this. On the seventh day, determined to make a final attempt, Takshaka disguised himself as an old sage and came to the King’s palace of shelter. On his way he met Dhanvantari who was proceeding to Parikshit to protect him. They became friends and as a result of it, Dhanvantari returned after receiving a large number of rare precious stones given to him by Takshaka. Assuming the form of a small worm, Takshaka secretly entered into a fruit which was to be presented to the King. As soon as the King took that fruit in his hand, Takshaka took his own shape and size and bit the King who died immediately. Janamejaya performed all the obsequies of his father. After that, in a spirit of revenge, with the object of annihilating the whole race of serpents, he summoned Brahmagay to conduct a sarpa sanra (snake sacrifice). In the sacrificial fire specially prepared at that time, many serpents were being burnt up. It seemed that the whole race of serpents would shortly be wiped out. But Takshaka alone was not to be seen. The officiating priests were beginning to get angry. Impatient cries of Where is Takshaka rent the air. The frightened priests fled for life to the palace of the friend Indra and there lay down and, pining for Takshaka, the priests understood this they decided to use their charms and mantras which would bring Indra, his bed, cot and all, along with Takshaka to the sacrificial fire.

ASTIKA
At this stage, all the gods rushed to Manasa Devi and fell at her feet and begged her to save the situation. The kindhearted Devi called her son Aṣṭikā and advised him to persuade Janamejaya to stop the sarpasatras. Aṣṭikā went to Janamejaya and requested him to give him the lives of Taksaka and Indra as a gift. Janamejaya, after consulting the munis and priests and at their advice, agreed to do so. In this way, the Sarpasatra was stopped and the remaining serpents escaped with their lives. (Devī Bhāgavatam, Navamā Śandha, M.B., Aṭṭikā Parva).

Aṣṭikā Parva. One of the Parvas in the Mahābhārata. See Mahābhārata.

Aṣura. A form of marriage. (See Vīvāha.)

Aṣurāyana. A son of Vīvāṃtira. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 56).

Aṣuri. An ancient Mahārāṣtra. He was the ācārya of Kapila Śūnyāttarā, and the guru of the mahārāṣtra Paṇḍiśūtha. Once Aṣuri had a full vision of God. He gave many precepts on spiritual matters to other Mahārāṣtras. The Bhāgavata says that Aṣuri received his spiritual enlightenment from his wife, Kapīḷā. (M.B., Śānta Parva, Chapter 216, Verses 16-14).

Aṣunā. A son of Vīvāṃtira. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 54).

Aṣvalayana II. An ācārya. He was a disciple of Saunaka. Asvalayana composed three famous works: Saunakamulū, Asvalayana Śravatsa, and Asvalayana Stuti.

Aṭṭakā. A serpents born of the Kaurava dynasty. This serpent was stopped by the son of Janamejaya. (Śloka 12, Chapter 57, Aḍī Parva, M.B.).

BABBHUVĀHANA. A son of Arjuna.
1) Birth. When the Kṛṣṇas were residing in Indraprastha after marrying Pāṇḍalī, Nārada went to see them once. With a view to avoiding any quarrel between the Kṛṣṇas and the Arjuna, Nārada suggested that each should take Pāṇḍalī for a year in turn and who violated the arrangement should go to the forest for a year. Once Arjuna went to the house of Yuddhiṣṭhira who was with Pāṇḍalī and for thus violating the arrangement Arjuna had to go to the forest for a year. During this exile while he was staying at Gaurikāla he married the serpent girl, Uṣipī and got a son called Iśāva of her.
After that he went to a country called Maṇḍūr. At that time that country was being ruled by a king called Citrāṅgada. Prabhāṇjana, one of the forefathers of Citrāṅgada had, by hard penance for a progeny, acquired from Śiva a boon and each of his successors got a son each to maintain the line. But when it came to Citrāṅgada to his surprise he got a girl instead of a son. But he got her up as a son and named her Citrāṅgada. It was when she was ready for marriage that Arjuna went there. The king received Arjuna with respect and after enquiring about his welfare requested him to marry his daughter. Arjuna married her and stayed there for three months. Leaving that place Arjuna went to Pāvalakirtī and there he gave salvation to the celestial maidens who were lying in the terras as crocodiles. When he went back to Maṇḍūr Citrāṅgada had delivered a son whom he named Babbhuvāhana. Promising them that he would take them later to Hastināpura, he left the place.

2) His fate to kill his own father. It was by a ruse that Arjuna made Bhīma's son. Arjuna put Sākhaṇḍī before his chariot and Bhīma refused to take arms against a man and accepted defeat. But Gaṅgadevī witnessing the battle between Bhīma, the son, and Arjuna from above could not bear this foul play and so cursed that Arjuna would die at the hands of his son. Uliphī the serpent wife of Arjuna heard the curse and went to her father Kauṭavya who in turn went to Gaṅgā and begged for a relief from the curse. Gaṅgadevī then said that Arjuna would be killed by Bahirvāhana but would be brought to life by Uliphī by placing the Mṛtasāṭhvīvī stone on the dead man's breast.

3) The killing of Arjuna. The Mahābhārata battle was over. When Yudhiṣṭhīra was performing the Āśvamedha yāga Arjuna conducted a victory march with the yāga horse. On his way he reached Mañḍūrī. At once Uliphī called Bahirvāhana and asked him to challenge Arjuna. Bahirvāhana with his bow and arrows attacked Arjuna in and on the grīm battle that followed Arjuna fell dead. Seeing this Gaṅgadevī came to the place of battle weeping and above Uliphī persuading Bahirvāhana to kill his own father, Uliphī immediately went to the serpent world and brought the Mṛtasāṭhvīvī stone and as she placed it on Arjuna's breast he came to life as if waking up from a sleep. When she saw Gaṅgadevī, Bahirvāhana and Uliphī smiled and asked them why they had all come there. Uliphī then explained to him the story of the curse and the remedy pleased over the end of the curse Arjuna took them all to Hastināpura. (Chapters 218 to 210 of Ādi Parva and Chapters 79 to 82 of Āśvamedha Parva, M.B.)

4) Other details. (1) On reaching Hastināpura Śrī Kṛṣṇa gave Bahirvāhana as a present a chariot drawn by divine horses. (Śloka 6, Chapter 88, Āśvamedha Parva, M.B.).

(2) The different names given to him in the Puraṇas are as follows: Gaṅgadevī, Maṇipāṭṭapati, Dhanāśayānata and Manipūrāvata.

These five sons became famous as Pāṇcāla. Of these, the family of Mukula became the Mukulaśya, who were having temples and were of two classes. A son named Pāṇḍāśva was born to Mukula. A son named Divoddāsa and a daughter named Ahalaya were born to Pāṇḍāśva. Ahalaya got with child from the hermit Sāravata and gave birth to a son named Sātānanda. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

BĀKA. Daughter of the demon, Sumāli. He had four daughters; Bākā, Puspotkaṭā, Kailakṣa and Kumbhakāla. Rāvana is the son of Kailakṣa. (Uttara Kāmīyana).

BĀKA I. A demon. The Pāṇḍavas escaping from the trap of Arakīlā (lair-house) through a secret tunnel went to the village Bkaacākrā on the banks of the river Gaṅgā and stayed there in the house of a brahmin. Bāka was a demon who was terrorising the villagers there. He used to come to the village freely and carry away people for his boon. Because of this nobody lived in peace and so they all joined together and decided to send one man daily with plenty of other eatables to the demon in this cave. Days went by like that and one day the turn came to the brahmin who was sheltering the Pāṇḍavas. That brahmin had beside his wife one son and a daughter. The problem arose as to who should go to the demon. The father was willing but the wife did not want him to go and vice versa. The children began to cry and hearing the noise Kunti, mother of the Pāṇḍavas, went there to enquire and learned the tragic story of the family. She immediately went to Bāhma and acquainted him with the problem before the brahmin. Bāhma at once volunteered to go to the demon deciding to kill the man-eater and thus putting an end to his depredations. But Bāhma started on his journey to the demon carrying a cartoad of rice and curry. Deliberately Bāhma arrived at the place of the demon very late. Bāka rolled his eyes in anger at the sight of the late-comer. But Bāhma without heeding him sat in front of the demon and started eating the rice and curry. Bāka charged at Bāhma with fury but Bāhma defended and at a little ensured in which Bāka was killed and lie fell dead like a mountain-head dropping down. (Chapters 157-164, Adi Parva, M.B.).

BĀKA II. A demon. As young boys Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balarāmaḥadra were once playing in Ambādā (Gokula) on the banks of the river Yamuna when the demon, Bāka, despached by Rāma, went to them in the form of a huge terrible-looking stork. In no time opening its ferocious beaks the stork swallowed Kṛṣṇa. But the touch of Kṛṣṇa burnt the throat of the bird and vomiting Kṛṣṇa the bird fell dead.

*Kṛṣṇa, a demon, was the brother of Bāka. (Ślokā 23, Chapter 11, Anuvāya Parva, M.B.).

(Translated from the Sanskrit. The story of this Bāka occurs. But in the vernacular translation of the same the story is not so clear. Hence the original in Sanskrit is quoted below:)

Sa vai Bāka nāṁ mahāśraṇa bhūryavāpasthak Āgaya mahaśa Kṛṣṇaṁ tathuvedo 'graṇdaṁbhali
Kṛṣṇaṁ mahābhaktagarbhaṁ dṛṣṭe Rāmkṛṣṇaṁ 'vahekaṁ

They had with them a potent substance called Hātaka which they gave to men whom they liked and after enkindling the sex impulse in them, enjoyed a sexual life with them to their heart's content. (Pañcarana Skandha, Bhágavata).

Once during a fight between Indra and Jālendhara Bala defeated Indra in a pathetic way. Indra then sought refuge in him and praised him with songs. Flattered by this Bala asked Indra to ask of him whatever he wanted and the sly Indra requested for the physical body of Bala. Without the least hesitation Bala cut his body into pieces and gave him. Indra threw away the cut pieces to different sides and all the places where these pieces fell were at once transformed into diamond mines.

After the death of Balaśura his wife Prahlâdâvati went to their preceptor (Kulâ guru) Sukrâchârya and told him all that took place and requested to bring back to life her lost husband. But Sukrâchârya regretted that he could not give life again to her dead husband but could by his powers make her hear his voice again. Prahlâdâvati agreed to that and then she heard her husband say "Leave your body and come." Thus with immediate force death and joining Bala became a river. (Padma Purâna, Uttara Khanda, Chapter 6).

Balbhâdra. (Balaßhadrañâma, Balarâma, Balaçeva). The elder brother of Śrî Cûpa and the eighth incarnation of Mahâvîśu.

1) Birth. When the number of wicked kings increased Bhûmâdevi (goddess of Earth) turned herself into a cow and took refuge in Mahâvîśu. Mahâvîśu then promised to be born as the sons of Vasudevá named Balaßhadrañâma and Śrî Cûpa and destroy the wicked. Vasudevá was the son of the Yâdava, Sûrásena, King of Madhura. To Devaki the brother of another Yâdava King, Ugrasena, was born a daughter Devaki. The marriage of Devaki with Vasudevá was celebrated but on the same day an Asârin (a heavenly voice from above) said that the eighth child of Devaki would kill Kûmañca. Instantly Kûmañca put both Vasudevá and Devaki in jail. The first six sons born to Devaki were killed the moment they were born by striking them against the ground. Devaki became pregnant for the seventh time. The babe in the womb was Ananta incarnate by Viśu's directive to be of help to him when he would also be born soon as Cûpa. Therefore it was necessary to save the child from the cruel hands of Kûmañca as it was certain he would, kill the babe the same way he had killed all the others before. So he ordered Mâyâdevi to take the child from the womb of Devaki and place it in that of Rohini, another wife of Vasudevá. Mâyâdevi did so and the boy got the name Sanghârâsha, also because of this. The news spread that Devaki aborted. Rohini delivered a boy and was named Sanghârâsha kisâ Balabhâdramîma. (Daśa Skandha, Bhágavata).

2) The colour of Balarâma and Śrî Cûpa. Śrî Cûpa is the eighth child of Devaki. The elder brother Balarâma is white in complexion while the younger, Śrî Cûpa is black in complexion. There is a story behind this. The Mats decided to have his born as Gopâla (shepherd) in the earth to be of help to Cûpa in his duty of killing the wicked. They informed Mahâvîšu of their decision and the Lord was immensely pleased. He then took one white hair from his head and said that it would go to Rohini's womb and change into Balarâma and taking a black hair said that it would go into Devaki's womb and change into Sri Krishna. It was thus that Balabhadrā became white and Sri Krishna black. (Chapter 199, Adi Parva, M.B.).

3) Brothers: Balabhadrā had six brothers born of his mother Rohini! They were: Gada, Sārana, Durđāna, Vipula, Dhiruva, and Kṛṣṇa. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

4) Till their marriage Sri Krishna spent his childhood in Ambādi and Balarāma, in Madhurā. Once the sage Garga went to the house of Vasudeva and it was he who then told the story behind the births of Balarāma and Krishna. Hearing this Vasudeva went to Madhurā and brought Balabhadrā also to Ambādi. Gargasūmi then performed all those sacred rites which were usually done to boys of that age and both of them remained in Ambādi. Several important events happened during their stay here, notable among which are: Parāshurāma's preceptor giving her salvation; Sakatāśuravadhā (killing the asura, Sakatā), Tripratīṣṭavadhā (killing the asura, Tripratīṣṭa), Vatāśuravadhā (killing the asura, Vata), Bakavadā (killing the demon bird, Baka), Agraśuravadhā (killing the asura, Aga), Uhemūkṣuravadhā (killing the asura, Uhemūkṣa), Kālāśuravadhā (killing the makara, Kāla) and Pralambavadhā (killing Pralamba). (See under Krishna for more details).

Kama conducted a Cāpadāpyā (worship of the bow) to kill Kṛṣṇa. It was on a festive scale and both Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma went to Madhurā to attend the same. There they killed Kama and after that went to the āśrama of Sandipani Mahārāja for education. When they completed their education they at the request of the preceptor gave as Guruḍasāya (The fee you pay in the end for the instructions given) the last child of the guru. Then they went to Madhurā and there several events took place, important among which was the fight between Kṛṣṇa and Jārāndhara. By this time the Yadavas were becoming lean financially and so they asked Kṛṣṇa and Rāma to become the diamond-infested mountain of Gomantaka. On their way they met Parāshurāma doing penance under a Banyan tree. On the advice of Parāshurāma they killed Sīgālāvasudeva and got immense wealth. On their return Rāma and Kṛṣṇa along with many Yadavas went and settled down in the island, Dvārakā, in the western ocean. (Daśamā Skandha, Bhāgavata).

5) Marriage: Before the advent of Balarāma and Kṛṣṇa the island Dvārakā was known as Kukasthāli. It was used over by a famous Rājārāja Rāvata. This king was the son of King Anartha and grandson of emperor Bālakarta. Rāvata got a hundred sons, Kukudin being the last and a daughter named Rāvata. When the time for marriage of his son came the king was anxious to find out a fitting husband for her and he went to Brahmāloka to take the advice of Brahmā. Rāvata also accompanied him. There they saw the Vedas, Yājñas, mountains, rivers, oceans, Rta, all in divine figures standing before Brahmā, worshipping him. The sweet celestial songs gave them both untold happiness. The king told Brahmā the purpose of his visit and Brahmā meditating for some time told him that Balabhadrā, son of Vasudeva, was the only one person suited for her. The king returned to Dvārakā and gave his daughter in marriage to Balarāma. (Saptakama Skandha, Devī Bhāgavata).

6) A pilgrimage. When the great Pāñḍava-Kaurava battle started Kṛṣṇa became the charioteer of Arjuna and Balarāma went to the forest, Naimishā. He was not much interested in the battle. At the forest of Naimishā he saw Śūta telling Purāṇic stories to the several sages assembled there before him. Śūta did not rise up when he saw Balarāma and the latter moved to auger very soon cut off the head of Śūta. The sages assembled there decried the act of Balarāma and lamented deeply over the incident. At this Balarāma promised that he would give birth, from the dead body of Śūta, to one who will be very well versed in all the Vedas, śastras and sciences. The sages then blessed Balarāma.

During that time there lived in the vicinity of Naimishā a forest a demon called Balvata (Vatuka). He used to annoy the sages there and the sages requested Balarāma to put a stop to the atrocities of that demon. He immediately killed the demon by his weapon, Hala, and then raised from the dead body of Śūta a pandita of great erudition. Later, to remedy the sin of killing Śūta, Balarāma, repentant, visited all the sacred places in Bharatā. Once when he heard about the grim battle between Duryodhana and Bhīma, he went to the battle-field and tried his best to stop the war. Disappointed he returned to Dvārakā. (Daśamā Skandha, Chapter 79, Bhāgavata).

7) Death. Once the rāja Nārāyaṇa, Kaśyapa and Vāsini came to Dvārakā. To make fun of them some of the Yadavas dressed a Yādava like a pregnant woman and producing her before the sages asked them what child would deliver. Enraged at this the men said in one voice that she would deliver a mace and that iron mace would be the cause of the end of all Yadavas. After the Mahābhārata battle the Yadava dynasty remained alive only for thirteen years. After that by the curse of the brahmā the Yadavas were all killed in a drunken brawl between themselves in the very presence of Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadrā. This happened on the shore of Prabhāsa tīrtha and Balarāma was sitting there then in deep meditation. Suddenly the soul of Balarāma went out from his mouth in the shape of a white serpent and the serpent entering the nether world was given a warm welcome by the prominent serpents there. (Maṇuṣa Parva, M.B.).

8) Other details.

(1) It was Balabhadrā who taught Bhīmasena the mace-fight. (Sloka 4, Chapter 136, Adi Parva, M.B.).
(2) Balabhadrā was present along with Sri Kṛṣṇa at the marriage of Pāñḍava. (Sloka 17, Chapter 165, Adi Parva, M.B.).
(3) Balabhadrā became very indignant when he heard about Arjuna carrying away Subhadrā and it was Kṛṣṇa who pacified him. (Chapter 22, Adi Parva, M.B.).
(4) He was present at the marriage of Abhimanyu conducted at the city of Upāplāvya. (Sloka 21, Chapter 72, Viśrāma Parva, M.B.).
(5) He was very insistent that the Pāñḍavas and Kauravas should come to a truce. (Chapter 2, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).
(6) He witnessed the battle of mates between Duryodhana and Bhīmasena at Kurukṣetra. (Chapter 34, Śalya Parva, M.B.).
BALKHYLYA (8) (VāLAKHYL\YS)

It was a peculiar creature. That creature had done penance before Brahmā, in his youth, with this vow of destroying everything. Brahmā appeared before the creature and granted the boon that it would have the power to make anything blind. Brahmadeva also said that anybody who killed the creature would be given a place in the realm of Gods. The creature had been wandering in the forest making blind every creature it met, and one day it was drinking water and it was then that Valaka shot it down. As soon as the creature fell down the gods showered flowers, and took him to the realm of Gods in a divine chariot. (M.B., Karna Parva, Chapter 69).

BALKHYLYA (s) (VāLAKHYL\YS) (A group of hermits.

1) Orug. Sixty thousand hermits were born to Krau, one of the Saptarṣis (seven hermits), by his wife, Santati. They are called Balkhylyas. Everyone of them was only the size of half a thumb, but they were as bright as the blazing sun and had attained control over their senses. (Vipūn Putāṇa, Anuta 1, Chapter 10).

2) Garuḍa (Eagle) and Balkhylya (s). A story connecting the birth of Garuḍa with Balkhylyas occurs in the Purāṇas.

Once Kaśyapa Pratapātī performed a sacrifice to obtain children. The work of bringing firewood for the sacrifice was entrusted to Indra and the other devas (Gods) and the Balkhylyas. When Indra was bringing up huge pieces of log logs the Balkhylyas who were very small were bringing in chips of wood. Seeing this Indra laughed. The Balkhylyas got angry and stopping the work entrusted to them began to do penance with a view to create another Indra. Kaśyapa, Indra's father, was thus pleased. He went to Kaśyapa and told him everything. Kaśyapa went to the Balkhylyas and pacified them. At this time Vināṭa, a wife of Kaśyapa, was doing penance to obtain a son. Kaśyapa said that the penance of the Balkhylyas would not be fruitless and that as a result of their penance a son who would overpower Indra would be born to Vināṭa. Accordingly a son was born to her. Garuḍa was that son. The fact that Garuḍa overthrew Indra when he went to heaven for ambrosia is well known. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 51).

3) Routine of life. The Balkhylyas live in the midgala of Sīrya (solar region). They travel in front of the sun in the shape of birds. They wear hides of animals, They are righteous and are only as big as a thumb. They are very ardent in doing the works of devas (Gods). They are sages. There are Balkhylyas living in the lunar region also. They worship the Sun during all the world and firm in truth because of the penance of the Balkhylyas. (M.B., Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 141).

*In some other Purāṇas the mother of Balkhylyas is given the name 'Saneah'. This may be a mistake in the manuscript.
4) Other information. (1) Garuda (Fugie) who went to the realm of devas (gods) for Asura (Ambrosia) took rest on the branch of a banyan tree, and that branch was broken from the tree. Sixty thousand Bālakhiyas were doing penance hanging head downwards on that branch. Garuda knew this only after the branch was broken. Bearing the curse from him, he took the branch in his beak and flew about here and there. At last, according to the advice of Kāşāya, he took the branch to the mount Gaudhranandin and without causing any harm to the small hermits placed it there. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 39).

(2) When Dushyantha entered the hermitage of Kanva, he saw the Bālakhiyas doing penance, hanging down on the tree in the vicinity. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 7).

(3) In Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇṭha, Sarga 51, it is mentioned that the Bālakhiyas were engaged in prayer and meditations and offering oblations to fire in the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha.

(4) It is mentioned in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇṭha, Sarga 51, that in the period of the Rāmāyaṇa, in South India, when Rāma was going to the house of Māyā, Bālakāṇṭha was doing penance.

(5) The Bālakhiyas learned the Vedas and Śāstras (scriptures) sitting in the chariot of the sun (Kamāpa Rāmāyaṇa, Pūrvakāṇḍa).

BĀLAKHIYA SAMHĪṬA. See the word Garuparampara.

BĀLĀKI. (VALĀKI). One of the hundred sons of Dīrmara. Mention is made in the Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 195, Stanza 2, that Valāki had been present on the occasion of the swayamvara (wedding) of Draupadī.

BĀLĀKI. A hermit. He is called Gāryga also as he is a son of Garga. He acquired much knowledge and so he became arrogant. Because of this some called him Dhruvabhāki.

Once the hermit went to the King of Kaśći and told him that he would impart to him the knowledge of Brahma. The king replied that he would give thousands of cows in return. Bālāki declared that the sun-god was Brahman. The king said that he had known it. Everything that Bālāki said had been known to the king earlier. Still in the end Bālāki had to become the disciple of the king. Then the king took him to a man who was sleeping. The King called the sleeping man. But he did not wake up. The king woke him up and then asked the hermit, where he had gone when he was sleeping. Bālāki could not say where men go when they are sleeping and where they return from when they wake up. The king said: "In our sleep we attain Sārūpya (assimilation to god). But we are not aware of it. Though we get eternal bliss we do not know it. If we can get eternal bliss when we keep awake that is Ātmajānā (knowledge of Supreme Soul). As the flames emanate from fire, and as the spider weaves its net and sits in its center, the soul creates everything, controls everything and pervades everything." (Bythadāranayakopanipād).

BĀLĀKĀṆṬHA. An ancient king of Bārśa. While the Pāndavas were living unceasingly in the kingdom of Vṛṣīka, Durvōthana and his brothers stole the cows of Vṛṣīka, in consequence of which there was a battle. The devas (gods) came in planes to see the fight between Arjuna and the hero. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Vṛṣīka Parva, Chapter 56, that the King Bālāka was there with the gods when they came to see the fight.

BĀLĀMITRA. A king. Śatrubhu who led the yāga horse of Śrī Rāma fought with Viraṇami and at that time Bālāmitra fought on the side of Viraṇami. (Chapter 40, Pāṭkā Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa).

BĀLĀMODĀKA. The son of Suraṭha, the King of Kūṇḍālanagarī. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 40).

BĀLĀNITKA (VALĀNITKA). I. A son of the King Drupada. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Droupa Parva, Chapter 156, that Āyathāmaṇi killed him in the battle of Kurukṣetra.

BĀLĀNITKA (VALĀNITKA). II. A brother of Matya, the King of Vṛṣīka. During the battle of Kurukṣetra he had taken the side of the Pāṇḍavas and had fought against the Kauravas. (M.B., Droupa Parva, Chapter 158).

BĀLĀSVĀMI. A warrior of Subrahmapāṇi. (M.B., Sāya Parva, Chapter 24, Sūtra 74).

BĀLĀVATI. The daughter of hermit Kanva. She did penance to please the Sun to obtain a husband of a very good nature. The Sun appeared before her and gave her some dates and asked her to prepare food with them and bring them back. Bālāvati began to cook the dates. Though all the faggots she had gathered were consumed it was not properly boiled. As there was no more firewood she put her leg into the oven. Seeing this the Sun God was pleased and said: "All your wishes will be realized". From that day onwards that place was called by the name Bālāpa. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa, Chapter 152).

BĀLĀVINAṢṬAKA. The hero of a story, given in Kathāsūraṭiṣagana, Kāthāmukhālaśambaka, Tarāṭaṇa six, to show that it is not good to make others angry. The story is as follows —

Long ago there was a Brahmin named Rudra Sārmā. He had two wives. Both gave birth to a son each. The elder wife died and her son also was brought up by the younger wife. Being jealous she fed the child with food too hard for the child and it became lean with stomach swollen and the bones projecting. It looked an uncouth figure. Seeing him like this Rudra Sārmā called him Bālāvinasṭaka (one who is lost when he is a boy). He gradually grew up. When I was five years old he showed extraordinary intelligence. One day he decided to teach his foster-mother a lesson. On that day he was sitting alone on the lap of his father. He said to his father, "Father, I have two fathers". Thenceforward the father began to doubt his wife, that she was having a lover. He grew jealous. He would not talk to her. The foster-mother thought Bālāvinasṭaka was the cause for this change in her husband's behaviour. One day she called the boy to her mildly and asked him for the reason for the change in the behaviour of his father towards her. He said that he would bring about a change in the behaviour of his father if he would be cared for properly. She agreed. Then he took a mirror and held it before his father and when the reflection of his father fell in to the mirror he said, "Father, I have two fathers". Immediately the doubt of his father was removed. It is not right to make even a boy angry.

BĀLĀYANI. An Aśrya (Teacher). In Bhāgavata, Skanda 10, it is seen that Bālāyani was taught Bālākhīya samhitā by Bākāla.
BĀLAYOGI. A king of the Aṅga dynasty. He was the son of Bāli, who had six sons named Āṅga, Vatūga, Kalīṅga, Pupūdā, Bālyya and Bālayogī. (Agnī Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

BĀLĀYUS. One of the eight sons born to Parārvas by Urvāsī. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi, Chapter 12).

BĀLHIKA II. A king who in his previous life was the asura called Krodhavāta. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 96, Stanza 12, that this king helped the Kauravas in the battle of Kurukṣetra.

BĀLHIKA III. A king who was the third son of Janamejaya and the grandson of King Kuru. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 56).

BĀLHIKA IV. A son of Pratapā, a king of the Kuru dynasty. He had two brothers, Devaśi and Sāntantu. It is said in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 94 that Suśandhā, the princess of the country of Śibi was their mother. Mention is made in Bhāgavata, Skanda 9, Chapter 22, Stanza 10, that this king Bālhiha had a son named Sanandhā. Bālhiha was a friend of the Kauravas and the Pāndavas. Bālhiha exhorted them strongly, not to engage in a battle. Still, when the battle was begun, Bālhiha sided with the Kauravas. Bālhiha was once elected as the general of eleven divisions of the army of Duryodhana.

The achievements of Bālhiha in the battle of Kurukṣetra are given below:

1) There was a combat on the first day of the battle between Bālhiha and Drātuketu. (M.B., Bhāsya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 38).
2) Bāmsasena defeated Bālhiha. (M.B., Bhāsya Parva, Chapter 104, Stanza 25).
3) Fought with Drupada (Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 18).
4) Bālhiha fought with Śiṅkhandi (Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 96, Stanza 7).
5) Bāmsasena killed Bālhiha. (Droṇa Parva, Chapter 157, Stanza 15).

BĀLHIKA V. The charioteer of Dharmaputra. (M.B., Sahita Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 20).

BĀLHIKADESA. A country in ancient Bhārat. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhāsya Parva, Chapter 9.

BALI (MAHĀBALI) I. An emperor of the Asuras. He was the son of Virocana and the grandson of Prahlāda. 1) Genealogy and Birth. The Asuras or the Daityas are the sons born, of his wife Diti, to Kaśyapa Prajapati, son of Marici and grandson of Brahmapūra. There were so many Asuras born to the sons of Diti. But among them Hiranyakṣa, Hiranyakāśipu, Sūrabhadra, Simhavaktra, Tārakāsura and Gomukha were notorious. Of their sisters Simhakā and Ajanukhi were famous.

Four sons called Prahlāda, Sāmabhāra, Hṛāda and Anuhrāda were born to Hiranyakāśipu. Virocana was the son of Prahlāda and Mahābalī was the son of Virocana. Bāna was born from Mahābalī and four crores of Asuras called Nilaṅkavacas were born from Bāna.

2) The charming of the ocean. Once Mahābalī had stolen the wealth of Devendra. While he was carrying it to his house, it all fell in the ocean. Mahāvīru ordered the devas (gods) to recover the lost wealth from the ocean. It was impossible to churn the ocean without the help of Mahāvīru. So the devas went to Mahābalī and sought his help. Mahābalī agreed to help them. The real aim of the devas was not to regain the lost wealth but to obtain the celestial nectar known as Nectar of Immortality (Amṛta) and to defeat the Asuras in battle. On the side of the Asuras there was the knowledge of the Mṛtaśāhjīvani (life-restoring remedy). So the devas were brought to life, but it was not possible for devas to do so. It was to make up this deficiency, by obtaining Amṛta from the sea, that the devas used to churn the sea, under the pretense of recovering the lost wealth. Mention is made in the Vījaya Purāṇa, Amrta 1, Chapter 9 and Matsya Purāṇa, Chapters 250 and 251 that these events took place during the regime of the Indra named Mantraundrama in the Adiyugamanavantara (the period of the man named Caksusya).

3) War with Indra. The great teacher Śukra again appointed Bāli, who was brought to life again, as Indra. After that he performed the sacrifice of Vāsuvij (conqueror of the world) on behalf of Bāli assuming the responsibilities of government, Bāli performed one hundred Avadhudha yāgas (Heerā sacrifice) (Bhāgavata, Skanda 8). After the Vāsuvij sacrifice, Yaśafadeva (god of sacrifice) who was greatly pleased at the sacrifice, presented Bāli with a divine chariot, equal in all aspects to that of Indra, a golden bow, two quivers, which would never become empty and a divine armour, and his grandfather gave him a garland that would never fade, and the teacher Śukra gave him a divine mace and Bāma presented a garland (M.B., Śanti Parva, Chapter 215).
4) Assignment of the Position of Indra. Mahāvīru had not been on good terms with the devas, for a time. Taking this opportunity, Śukrā, the teacher of the Asuras, persuaded Bāli to engage the devas in a battle. Bāli defeated the devas completely in a pitched battle. Thus the realm of the gods came under the sway of Mahābalī. Once, during that period Bāli invited his grandfather Prahlāda to heaven and requested him to accept the most honourable seat there. Prahlāda accepted his invitation and appointed Bāli as Indra. Bāli enquired of Prahlāda as to the method of carrying on the government of heaven. Prahlāda said that in reply: "Only virtue will always win. Rule the kingdom not deviating from virtue." (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 74).

Because Bāli had ruled his kingdom according to the advice of Prahlāda, he became famous in the three worlds (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 75).

According to the version of Bhāgavata, Prahlāda when he grew old, left his kingdom in the hands of his son Virocana and went to the forest for penance. Virocana was not as famous as Prahlāda. After the period of Virocana, Mahābalī came to the throne. He was a mighty king. Within a short time he became the emperor of the Asuras. It was during this period that the churning of the Milk Sea took place. The Asuras and the Devas (gods) sat on either side and using the mount Mandara as churn-dish, churned the Milk Sea and obtained Amṛta, the celestial nectar of immortality. A battle took place between the Asuras and the Devas for the possession of Amṛta (the Ambrosia and the container) and the emperor Mahābalī was killed in the battle. The Asuras carried the dead body of Mahābalī.
bali to his capital, where Sukrāchārya (their teacher-prince, Sukra) brought him to life again by the help of sacred herbs. Mahābali instantly regained another war, fiercer than the previous ones, with the devas, and having defeated them, he drove them out of their realm and brought it under control. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 8.)

5) The curse of Prahlāda. As the whole of heaven came under the sway of Bali, the devas began to leave the courts of the asuras. Everybody was happy and comfortable under the rule of Bali. But the devas and Brahmans were denied the privileges they deserved. They approached Viṣṇu and represented their grievances. Viṣṇu told them thus: "Bali is devoted to me. Still, to redress your grievances I shall take the incarnation of Vamana shortly."

In course of time the Asuras and their countries began to be weakened. Seeing the approach of destruction, emperor Bali became thoughtful. He approached Prahlāda to learn the reason. Prahlāda told Bali thus: "Lord Viṣṇu is now staying in the womb of Aditi for his incarnation in Vāmana. That is why the country and the Asuras are subjected to destruction. Hearing this Mahābali became angry and cursed Bali. Let your country be destroyed." Bali requested Prahlāda to pardon him Prahlāda advised Bali: "You will get salvation only by relying on Viṣṇu." (Vāmana Purāṇa 77.)

6) Defeated by Vamana. The defeated devas had taken refuge in heras. Aditi the mother of the devas was very distressed. She shed tears before her husband. Kaiśapa Prīṣapati, who advised his wife to take a fast of twelve days, and taught her the rules and rituals of the fast. Accordingly she took the fast, Viṣṇu appeared before her and asked her what boon she wanted. She requested Viṣṇu to take birth as her son, to drive away Bali and to restore her sons, the devas (gods), to their kingdom of heaven. Mahāvīra agreed.

Aditi bore the son pregnant and gave birth to the son Vāmana. He was an incarnation of Mahāvīra. (The 5th incarnation (avatāra) of Viṣṇu).

At this time Mahābali was performing a sacrifice on the banks of the river Narmadā. Vāmana came to the place of sacrifice in the dress of a hermit boy and told Mahābali that he was a helpless hermit boy and requested him that he might be given three steps of ground. Mahābali decided to grant the wish of the boy and as a token of his gift he began to offer the boy water from a waterpot. Then the teacher got into the mouth of the pot in the shape of a male and water would not flow freely out of the mouth of the pot. Knowing this Vāmana took a grass piece of grass and pushed it at the mouth of the pot. The grass pierced one eye of Sukrāchārya. From that time onwards Sukrāchārya had only one eye. Water flowed freely into the hands of Vāmana. Sukra got angry and cursed Bali Vāmana began to measure the ground and simultaneously began to grow. The asuras who were horrified at this, began to attack Vāmana with anything they could lay hands on. Still Vāmana was growing. Finally he became an immensely large being. With one step he measured the whole of earth and with the second step he took the whole of heaven. Then he asked Bali, where to place the third step. Mahābali said that he had only his body left, as his own, and that Vāmana might take it and complete three steps. Vāmana placed his foot on the head of Bali and pushed him down to Pātāla (the Netherworld). Thenceforward the asuras became the inhabitants of Pātāla. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 8.)

7) Bali and Rāvana. Once Rāvana visited Bali who was under custody in Pātāla, and said to him, "I have come to save you from here. So get yourself free from the custody of Mahāvīra, with my help." Hearing this, Bali asked Rāvana to fetch the two earrings of Hiranyaśaṅku, which were shining like blazing fire a little away from them. Rāvana moved forward to take them. But he fell unconscious. Bali caused him to recover and said: "These earrings were worn by my great grandchild Hiranyaśaṅku. How could you, who are not even capable of taking his earrings, save him from his slander, Viṣṇu? Viṣṇu is Almighty and All-powerful and Supreme Lord of everything." Hearing this, Rāvana was filled with shame and he returned. (Valmiki Rāmāyana, Uttara Kānda, Prākṛti Sarga.)

Bali born as a Gardāvha (Asr). Bali, who was fallen from power took birth in the womb of an ass and roamed about. Brahma instructed Indra to find out Bali. (M.B., Śatā Parvā, Chapters 216-216.)

8) Other information.

(1) Mahābali shires in the durbar of Varuna. (M.B., Sabhā Parvā, Chapter 9, Stanza 12.)

(2) Once Mahābali went to Prahlāda and repented of his sins and begged for pardon. Then he began to make enquiries on spiritual matters. (M.B., Vāna Parvā, Chapter 26, Stanza 9.)

(3) From his childhood Mahābali was a hater of the Brāhmaṇas. (M.B., Śatā Parvā, Chapter 90, Stanza 24.)

(4) Once Mahābali was engaged in a serious contest with Indra. (M.B., Śatā Parvā, Chapter 223.)

(5) After having lost his kingdom Mahābali ridiculed Indra in various ways. (M.B., Śatā Parvā, Chapter 227, Stanza 30.)

(6) Once Mahābali talked with Sukrāchārya about giving gifts of flower, smoke and light. (M.B., Anūṣasana Parvā, Chapter 98, Stanza 15.)

(7) Lakṣmi Devī had forsaken Mahābali because he behaved thoughtlessly towards Brāhmaṇas. (M.B., Śatā Parvā, Chapters 216-216.)

(8) In the religious Books such as Yogavaisiṣṭha the story of Mahābali is given to illustrate disinterestedness (Anāsakti).

BALI II. A hermit. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parvā, Chapter 4, Stanza 10, that this hermit lived in Hustānpūra.

BALI III. An incarnation of Śiva. Śiva incarnated in the hermitage of the Bālakālāśyā in the mount of Gandhamadāna during the period of Varāha Kalpa (Kalpa—one day of Brahma or the period of 14 manasa.) It is seen in Śiva Purāṇa, Satapatha Brāhmaṇa that Bali had four sons, called Sudhāma, Kaiśapa, Vaśiṣtha and Virājas.
Báli IV. A king of the Yásavas. He was the son of Kṛttavarma. Báli married Cúramati, the daughter of Rukmiṇī. (Báhgavata, Sandhá 10).

Báli IV. A famous monkey-king of the country of Ávana. This king who was the son of Sutapasa was a contemporary of the great king Ságara. Báli did penance and Brahmá appeared before him, and blessed him and said, "You will become a great sage and will live till the end of the Kálpas (period of world age). Your power will be immense. Nobody will overthrow you in battle. You will be loved by your subjects and they will obey you. You will be well-versed in the knowledge of law and its observance and the learned will recognize your knowledge. You will re-establish caste system in your kingdom." (Harivánśa, 1, 31.35-39).

Súdepdá was the wife of Báli. The couple had no children. At last they appealed to Dhrghatama a hermit, from whom they got five sons called Ánga, Varga, Káthega, Pándú and Súhuna (Brahma Puráṇa). In Bágavata it is mentioned that he had one more son called Andhra.

Báli left his body at the end of the Kálap and entered heaven. Before his death he had divided his kingdom equally among his sons. (Báhgavata, Sandhá 9, Mahábhárata, Ádi Parva, Chapter 92).

Báli IV. A mighty monkey-king.

1) Birth. Báli is the son of Indra. There is a story about the birth of Báli as follows:—

Silvati who was devoted to her husband once carried her husband Ugratapa who was a king, to his palace. She ordered a bantam to be placed at the door of a house at sunset one night. On the way they saw the hermit Anibándávaya, who had been placed on a trident by the order of the king, beating his limbs with agony. Lying on the trident he saw Ugratapa. Seeing the amorous nature of Ugratapa Anibándávaya cursed him that before sunrise he would die. Silvati who was a woman of great purity and loyalty hearing the curse said, "Let the Sun not rise tomorrow." The night prolonged. Aruna the chariot of the sun was ready at the usual time but saw the Sun sitting motionless. Waiting time was intolerable to the chariot of. So he decided to make the best use of the time at his disposal by witnessing a little of the dance of the celestial beauties in the realm of the devas. But males had no admittance there. So Aruna took the shape of a beautiful woman and got in. Seeing a new person, very beautiful to look at, sitting in the midst of the celestial maids Indra grew amorous. He secretly took her to a dark place and a soft was born out of that coition. That son is Báli. When Aruna returned the Sun was standing full of anger. Being afraid of him Aruna confessed everything to the Sun. When he heard the whole story the Sun expressed his desire to see that figure which Aruna had adopted. Accordingly Aruna again became a woman.

The Sun also had coition with her and Sugráva was the son born out of this coition. Báli and Sugráva were brought up by Áhalyádevi in the hermitage of Gautama.

At that time a monkey-king named Rksarajá had been ruling over the forest with Kikinda as his capital. He had no sons and so he approached Indra and placed before him his grievances. Indra brought Báli and Sugráva from the hermitage of Gautama and handed them over to Rksarajá. (M.B., Ádi Parva, Chapter 107; Brahmanda Puráṇa, Chapter 42; Uttara Ramáyana and Kampa Ramáyana, Purvakinda).

2) Marriage and Kingship. Owing to difference of opinion, Báli defeated the asuras who came for the churning of the Sea of Milk. The devas who were pleased at this, gave Báli a woman named Tára, derived from the Sea of Milk. Thus Tára became his wife and he got a son by her, named Ángada who became famous as a mighty warrior- prince. Sugráva married Rámadá. At that time Rksarajá died and Báli became king. (Kampa Ramáyana, Purvakinda).

3) Envy with Hanumán. It was during this period that Hanumán was born. While Siva and Parvati were living in the forest as monkeys Parvati got with child. The child was given to Bágaván Váyu (Wind-God) with the womb. Váyu placed the womb with the child in Amjá Devi's stomach Nárada informed Báli all these things. Báli thought that his position would be lost, if a being born of Siva, grew up in the form of a monkey. In accordance with the advice of Nárada, Báli melted with the metals into the womb of Amjá. Still the child was born as it was the wish of Siva. The metals became earrings of the child in the womb. (Kampa Ramáyana, Purvakinda).

4) Sugráva separated. Once, the son of Maya, the carpenter of the asuras, wanted to defeat Báli by a combat or cunning sleights as he was an expert wrestler and magician. He came to Kikinda in the midnight and standing before the palace, challenged Báli, who getting angry came out followed by Sugráva. Seeing the two of them the magician began to run Báli and Sugráva chased him to a cave. Placing Sugráva at the mouth of the cave Báli followed the magician. Before going, Báli said to Sugráva: "Brother, I will go in and kill the magician and return. Be brave and stay here. If the asura does not return with you at the mouth of the cave and if he kills me blood will be seen. If the latter happens close the mouth of the cave firmly and return to Kikinda and live happily there." Báli did not return even after a year. Finally the asura was killed. But by the cunning sleights of the magician it was blood that appeared at the mouth of the cave. Thinking that his brother was slain by the magician Sugráva felt sorry. Then he closed the mouth of the cave firmly with stone and returned to Kikinda. Hearing about the death of Báli the monkeys anointed Sugráva as King. After a time Báli returned stronger than before and saw the mouth of the cave closed. He thought that Sugráva had closed the mouth of the cave deliberately to kill him and to usurp his throne. Báli reached Kikinda and drove Sugráva away. Sugráva fled to Mount Rśyamukhaka which was prohibited area for Báli due to a curse. Mārtańga had cursed him that if he entered that mountain his head would be broken. So Sugráva was safe in that mountain.

The desire of Báli to take revenge on Sugráva increased everyday. Everyday he used to go to the four shores and conduct bath, prayer, meditation etc. and return to Kikinda within a short time. With one jump he will reach one place from another, and in each jump he would put one step on the head of Sugráva in the Rśyamukhaka. Hanumán was the Bālī was stabbed on the head of Sugrīva to jump to another place, when Hanumān caught hold of Bālī by his waist. Hanumān thought that if Bālī was dragged down on the mountain somehow or other, his head would break and there would be an end of his wicked deeds. Bālī thought that if he could jump into Kiśkindhā with Hanumān it would be easy for him to destroy Sugrīva. But both were of equal strength. So Bālī did not jump with Hanumān to Kiśkindhā and Hanumān did not drag Bālī to the ground. Both did not know how to stop the fight. At last they made a treaty. Bālī agreed to stop torturing Sugrīva and Hanumān agreed not to cause any trouble to Bālī. Both returned to their own places. After that Sugrīva lived at Rājamukkāla with his ministers and Bālī at Kiśkindhā. (Vālmikī Rāmāyaṇa, Kiśkindhā Kānda, Sarga 10; Kāmpa Rāmāyaṇa, Pūrvakāṇḍa).

5) Bālī was cursed by Mātanga the great hermit. See the word Dundubhi para 4.

6) Defeating Rāvana. Bālī had got a boon from the gods that he would get half the strength of his opponent when he faced him in fight. This power enabled Bālī to defeat all his foes and bring the countries in all directions under his sway. Rāvana heard about this and decided to overpower Bālī somehow or other and approached Kiśkindhā. Bālī knew this. His minister, Tārā, went to Rāvana and told him about the power of Bālī and of the boon by which Bālī got half the strength. Tārā faced Bālī. When Rāvana heard of this peculiar boon he decided to kill Bālī. His idea was to kill Bālī by going behind him when he went to the sea-shore to take bath in the morning.

Next morning Bālī went to the eastern sea-shore and began his prayer and meditation. Rāvana approached Bālī from behind and sat close to him. Perhaps the idea of Rāvana might have been to take Bālī by his tail and bear him on the ground. Bālī knew that Rāvana was sitting behind him. But pretending that he knew nothing put his long tail on the body of Rāvana, and passed it lengthwise and breadthwise through every part of his body and tied him like a bundle of faggots, and made a jump into the air. Within a short time he visited all the usual places and reached Kiśkindhā. Seeing Rāvana hanging by the tail of Bālī, even the women folk laughed. Thus Rāvana admitted defeat. Bālī let him go unhurt. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

7) Death. After Śītā had been stolen away Rāma and Śakṁsana wandered about in the forest. Then they met with Hanumān, who took them to his King Sugrīva. Śrī Rāma and Sugrīva entered into a treaty, by which Śrī Rāma was to kill Bālī and to restore to Sugrīva his wife who was under the custody of Bālī, and to make him the King of Kiśkindhā, in return for which Sugrīva and his men had to help Śrī Rāma to find out and recover Śītā. In accordance with the conditions of the treaty Śrī Rāma and Sugrīva reached Kiśkindhā, to confront with Bālī. Śrī Rāma and Sugrīva laid down a plan, by which Śrī Rāma was to shoot Bālī down, when Sugrīva was engaged in boxing with Bālī. Sugrīva challenged Bālī to a single combat. Bālī came out and a horrible boxing began between the two. But Śrī Rāma could not distinguish one from the other. Thier faces were so alike, Sugrīva, being defeated, retreated from fight. Śrī Rāma and Sugrīva returned to Rājamukkāla. Sugrīva spoke ill of Śrī Rāma. But Śrī Rāma revealed the truth, and Sugrīva believed it. Next day morning both of them started for Kiśkindhā to kill Bālī. Śrī Rāma had put a flower garland around the neck of Sugrīva to distinguish him from Bālī. This time Tārā tried to use the utmost to dissuade Bālī from fighting. But without paying any heed to her words Bālī engaged Sugrīva in fighting. Śrī Rāma, sitting in ambush, instantly sent an arrow to the breast of Bālī who looked to the side from which the arrow came. Before falling down, looking at Śrī Rāma Bālī said "It is not right on the part of the King of Ayodhyā to have shot an arrow from ambush". Hearing that Śrī Rāma said, "If you see me face to face you will become devoted to me. It is not right to kill one's devotee. You are a friend of Rāvana, who as you know, is my foe. If I let you alone Rāvana is likely to get your help. Besides, you have a boon that you will get half the strength of the foe who faces you, and as such you cannot be killed by anybody in direct fight. It is unavoidable for the safety of Sugrīva, for my interest, for the protection of the world at large, and for the preservation of law and order that you should be killed. Was it not a violation of duty on your part to steal the wife of Sugrīva?"

Bālī fell down. Immediately Tārādevi and Angada arrived there. Tārā spoke very harsh words to Śrī Rāma. At last Bālī entrusted Tārā and Angada with Rāma and then he died. (Kāmpa Rāmāyaṇa, Kiśkindhākānda).

Balinah. A dynasty of Kaśtriyas. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyogā Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 14 that there was a king named Arjaka in this dynasty.

Balisikha. A serpent born to Kalyāṇa, pressing his wife Kadru. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 9).

Bālvāk. A hermit. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sahlī Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 14 that this hermit had been a member of the durbar of Yuddhisthira.

Bailāla. Son of a Vaśīya named Kalyāṇa. From childhood Bailāla was an ardent devotee of Gaṇapati. When he was a child he used to gather pebbles and made a heap and then worship it, imagining it to be Gaṇapati (Gaṇapati).

His parents did not like this. They tried their best to dissuade him from this habit. Once they tied him to a tree and gave him severe cuts. But their attempts were futile. One day an image of Gaṇapati arose in the place where the child used to worship. (Gaṇapati Parāṇa 1 : 2).

Baliyava (Valliava). A country in Bhārata. Mention is made about this country in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9.

Baliyava (Valliava). This is the pseudo-name assumed by Bhīmasena, while the Pāṇḍavas were living in pseudo-anonymity in the kingdom of Virāṭa. In some Pūrāṇas this name is shown as 'Valīa'. (M.B., Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 1).

Balivala (Valkala). An asura. This asura had been tormenting the hermits of the forest of Nālmāla.
This asura was killed by Balabhadrārāma. For detailed story see para 6 of the word Balabhadrārāma.

BANA (BANABHĀTTA) I. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 7th century A.D. He was a member of the assembly of emperor Harṣavardhana. Harṣacarita ['prose'] is the most important work of Bana. Though many of the descriptions in this book contain exaggerations it affords plenty of scope for investigation into the features of ancient Sanskrit literature. He has mentioned about Vyasa, Bhāratas, Māyā, Pārvatī, Mahābhārata, Pāñcakāśi, Jātaka, Kālidāsa and such others.

Harṣacarita, in a sense, is a Romance. It is divided into eight Ucchvasa. From the first two or three chapters informations could be had of Bana's life. His son Purandara died when he was a little boy. At the age of fourteen his father also died. After that he arrived at the palace of Harṣa. The story of Harṣacarita begins with the death of Prabhakara-Vardhana, father of Harṣa. The Book ends with the story incomplete. Harṣacarita is the only historic prose work available in Sanskrit.

BANA II. A mighty and powerful Asura.

2. Getting a boon. Bāna began his reign with the city of Suvastu made his capital. He went to the land of the Himālayas and began to do penance thinking of Siva. Siva made his appearance and asked him 'what he wanted. He requested to be ensured the son of Pārvatī, and that he should be given thousands of hands so as to destroy all his enemies. Siva granted his wish. From that day onwards Pārvatī considered him as the younger brother of Subrahmanya. He returned to his Kingdom and began to reign.

3. Battle with Śrī Rāma and his fall. (See the word Anuradha).

4. Other information. In the Purāṇas Bana is often called ‘Śrī Rāma’ and ‘Mahābhārata’, which is the name of an attendant of Śiva. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 55, Stanza 20).

5. Śukrācārya (the teacher of the Asuras) always worked for the uplift of Bana. (M.B., Sañjha Parva, Chapter 38, Stanza 23).

6. In the battle with Śrī Rāma, Bāna was helped by Siva, Subrahmanya, and the Gods like Agni (fire) and others. (M.B., Sañjha Parva, Chapter 38).

7. Śrī Rāma cut down the thousand hands of Bāna with his Cakravinda (the wheel weapon). (M.B., Sañjha Parva, Chapter 38).

8. Bāna often stood under the cover of the mountain Krauka and attacked the devas (gods). So once Subrahmanya had to cut the mountain Krauka with his arrows. (M.B., Sañjha Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 29).

BANA III. A warrior of Subrahmanya. Mention is made about this Bana in Mahābhārata, Sañjha Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 67.

BANA IV. An asura. During the regime of Śrī Rāma this Asura fought against the King and his brothers. A Sivalinga was consecrated in the throat of this asura. So it was not possible for Lakṣmana to defeat him though he had fought with him for so many days. Lakṣmana heard an ethereal voice saying: “Unless the image of Siva is removed from his throat Bāna could not be killed.” By the operation of arrows Lakṣmana smashed the image of Sivalinga in his throat. With the same arrow he cut the throat of the asura also and thus Bāna was killed. (Kampanāyana, Uttra Kāṇḍa).

BANDHUDAYADA. A son who can claim to be a heir. The Purāṇas state about six different kinds of Bandhudaivas:

1. Suvaṇṇajiva. A son born to one’s wife without a progenitor.
2. Praśita. A son born to one’s wife by the blessing of any holy man.
3. Purukṣerendra. Son of one’s daughter.
4. Purvarāhaka. A son born after a re-marriage.
5. Kīmō. A son born before marriage.
6. Bhāṣya. Son of one’s sister. All these sons are heirs. (Chapter 119, Adi Parva, M.B.).

BANDHUMAN. A king of the country of Videha. (Chapter 6, Brahmānanda Purāṇa).

BANDHUMANI. A lady attendant of Vasuvalattā, wife of Udayana. (See Vasuvalattā).

BANDHURA. A country of puranic fame. The people living there were called Barbaras. They were considered as low caste people. There is also a statement that these people were born of the sides of the cow, Nandi. (Skokha 37, Chapter 174, Adi Parva, M.B.). During the victory march of the Pāñcadasa Bāṇasena conquered the Barbaras. Nakula also conquered these people. (Chapter 35, Sañjha Parva, M.B.). In the Rajasthāna yajña of Dharmapura the Barbaras were present with gifts.

BĀRBAKARA. Son of Maurvi born of Gaṅgātūkā, son of Bhima. Skanda Purāṇa gives the following details about him.

Barbarika was a Yaka in his previous life. Once the devas unable to bear the insufferable born done to them by the Dānavas approached Lord Mahāviṣṇu for help and then the Yaka who was present there at that time said with arrogance, “There is no need for Viśnu to curb the activities of the Dānavas. I shall do it myself.” Hearing these arrogant words Brahmī cursed him saying that in his next life he would be killed by Viśnu.

True to the curse the Yaka was born in his next life at Barbarika, son of Gaṅgātūkā. To lessen the force of the curse Kṛṣṇa advised him to worship Devī. At last pleasing the goddess by the kindly help of a brahmin named Viṣṇya Barbākīa killed a demon named Mahājīva and a demon of name Rupendirā. The brähmin further gave him a weapon named Vīshnū which could split the vital centres of the body of an enemy and said, “Use this weapon against the Kauravaus who oppose the Pāñcadasas.”

Once Barbarika defeated his grandfather Bhima in a battle and greatly grieved over the injury done started to commit suicide. Then Devi appeared before him and reminded him thus, “You will get salvation only if you are killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and so desist from committing suicide.”
The great war started and Barhikva fighting on the side of the Pándavas started using his weapon Vīdhūti. He sent it against all excepting the Pándavas, Kṛṣṇa and Aśvatthāmā. He did not leave even Kṛṣṇa alone and the weapon fell on the feet of Kṛṣṇa also. Furaged at this Kṛṣṇa used his Sudarśana Cakra and cut off his head. At once Devī appeared and brought him to life. After the great battle on the advice of Kṛṣṇa Barhikva went and lived in Guptakṣetra.

Bharhikva

A king born of the dynasty of emperor Pitha Descending in order: Pitha-Vyvacandī-Gandara-Yuvanāśa-Svānta - Bharāśva - Bhindhunāra (alias Valyāška) - Durlāśa - Vaiśnavī - Nākumbara and to Nākumbara was born Bharhikva and from him Kṛṣṇa-Vrṣenāji-Yuvanāśa-Māṇikha. (Saptama Sandhā, Devī Bhagavata).

Barhikva A devagandharva clan. Those were born to Kaṭyāpa prajāpatī of his wife Pitha. (Chapter 55, Ādi Parva, MB.).

Barhiksad (Ś) A class of Manes. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 20 that some classes of Manes such as Agniśvaṭas, Barhikas, Anagrus, and Śāgras are said to have descended from Brahmā. Brahmā created two different sets of Manes. Pitha, Agniśvaṭas and Barhikas. (Chapter 10, Ādam 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa). These Barhikas who are members of the Yatanāgha (council of the God of Death) perform the sanātī rites for the dead. The name brings into its fold the world of the seven sacred tages also. (Chapter 153, Sūnti Parva, MB.). It was through these Barhivās that Brahmā taught the main sacred tages to the Manes. The Manes became well-known later as Jyeta (Chapter 34, Śloka 45, Sūnti Parva, MB.).

Manusmṛti states that the Barhikas are the sons of the Mahāsi Uṇ at and the Pīṭhas of all the Dīrvat, Dāsāvās, Yākṣas, Guṇḍacarvās, Urugas, Rākṣasas, Suvarnas and Kūrmatas.

Dārjñi Aṣṭāvyānaśī Śumūrka Vaiśnavabhaṅgī śūravamārakaraśī Śunātanamārakaraṇī Śurī Barhiksvadatra (Manusmṛti, Śloka 196, Chapter 3).

Barhsimati Wife of Priyavrata, son of Śvāyambhuva Manu and brother of Utarnāpāda. She was the daughter of Vivasvaranāpītra. Priyavrata married another daughter of Śvāyambhuva Manu and had ten sons and a daughter. They were: Agnidsa, Idhuna, Jyotishā, Mahāvira, Kukmahāvya, Carya, Jīva, Savitā, Viṣṇu and a daughter Nirgratvari. Priyavrata got of his wife Barhismati three sons, Utama, Tamas and Rāvastra. These sons became in due course the Manusvarādhipatis. (Āstama Sandhā, Devī Bhagavata).

Barhivāśa The Nārāyaṇa of Brahmā. Brahmā crowned and cursed the Ethnic of Brahmā. This was compiled by Bṛhadāśī. This book contains three thousand chapters. Mention is made about this book in Mahābhārata, Sūnti Parva, Chapter 59, Stanza 56.

Bāṣkala A king of the anuras

1) Both two sons, Hariyāksha and Hariyākṣakāpa and a daughter Suḥā was born to Kaṭyāpa prajāpatī of his wife Dēśi. Suḥā was the wife of Vipravatas. Four sons, Anurāda, Huḍa, Prabhāda and Saṁbhāda were born to Hariyākṣakāpa. Huḍa was the son of Huḍa. Three sons, Aṣvin, Śibi and Bāṣkala were born to Saṁbhāda.

2) Later history. Bāṣkala became one of the ministers of the famous and mighty hero Mahāśaṇu. Ājīvarṣu was the minister of law and order. Tāmra was the Finance Minister. Asthoma was the Prime Minister and Bīśāla the minister of foreign affairs. Uddāka was the general of the army. Bāṣkala, Trīnātra and Kālakṣatru were members of the administrative council. Kṛṣṇācara was the minister of education. Bāṣkala played an important part in the battle between Mahāśaṇu and Indra. When soldiers were killed by thousands, Mahāśaṇu sent lastly, Bāṣkala and Durnikha. Bāṣkala engaged himself in a combat with Devī who fought on the side of the Devas. Bāṣkala became angry and aiming at the breast of Devī he gave a severe blow with his club. But Devī evaded him with her club and gave him a severe thrust with her trident at his breast and Bāṣkala fell dead. (Agrī Purāṇa, Chapter 19; Devī Bhagavata, Skanda 5).

Bātu (Vāju) A brahmin who reads the Gītā daily. Because in life he held fast to duty he was carried to heaven after death. The dead body was eaten away by birds and the bony skeleton remained. When rains started the empty skull was filled with water and a sinner passing that way touched the skull and the sinner got salvation. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khaṇḍa).

Bāudhāyana A teacher-priest who acted according to Kalā Sātras (rituals of sacrifices).

Bhādāra II. One of the four elephants which, from Pāṇḍu, support the world. (See Asjadigajaya).

Bhādāra III. Son of Saḍadhā, daughter born to Śvāyambhuva Manu by his wife Satrūpā. Saḍadhā had the following sons: Suḥā, Pravāla, Maṇipravāla, Ahāya, Dayāmaya, Śantīja, Bhādāra, Maṇḍa, Tāṣṭāja and Sīmaya, Puṣṭja and Yagya. (Bhagavata, Gauriha Sandhā).

Bhādāra IV. A yaka, one of the ministers of Kubera. He had to be born as a lion on account of the curse of gātu Gātama.

Bhādāra V. People of the kingdom of Bhadrāra are generally called Bhādāras. It is stated in the Sāhā Parva that the Kaśtriya princes of Bhadrāra presented lots of money in connection with the Kaśtriya yajña of Yudhishṭhīra.

Bhādāra VI. A maharṣi, son of Pramati, and father of Upamanyu.

Bhādāra VII. A son born to Śī Kṛṣṇa of Kālindī. (Bhagavata, Daśama Sandhā).

Bhādāra I. See Bhadrakāli.

Bhādāra II. The beautiful daughter of King Kākuśāṇ. She was married to King Vṛṣṇikavāna of the Pāṇḍu dynasty. When Bhadrā, the unbearable grief lamented the death of her husband, his soul appeared on the skies and blessed her. Accordingly she got pregnant by the corpse of her husband and delivered six sons. (Ādī Parva, Chapter 120, Verse 38).

Bhādāra III. One of the wives of Kubera. Kunti once related the story of Bhadrā to Pāṇčāli and exhorted her to live like Bhadrā. (Ādī Parva, Chapter 198, Verse 6).
BHADRĀ IV. The word Bhadrā is used as another name of Subhadrā, sister of Śrī Krṣṇa in Verse 14, Chapter 218 of Ādi-Purāṇa.

BHADRĀ V. Yet another Bhadrā, daughter of the King of Viśāla is mentioned in Chapter 45 of the Mahābhārata. She did penance for getting the kingdom of Karūra, when Subhārā, disguised as King Karūra appeared on the scene and carried her away.

BHADRĀ VI. There is reference to another Bhadrā, daughter of Soma in Chapter 154 of the Aruṣāsana Parva. She caused penance to secure Utathya as her husband. Atri mahrāja, father of Soma, came to know of the desire of his granddaughter, and got her married to Utathya. Varuṇa once fell in love with Bhadrā, who was an exceptionally beautiful woman, and abducted and concealed her in the sea. When Utathya returned to the Aṣārama, his wife was missing. He understood what had happened to Bhadrā by the light of his divine knowledge (television of mind). Burning with anger he drank up the sea completely dry, and Varuṇa shrinking with fear returned Bhadrā to Utathya and profusely apologized. Thus ended the problem.

BHADRĀ VII. Verse 24, Chapter 7 of the Manuha Parva, states that Bhadrā, one of the four wives of Vaudeva, father of Śrī Krṣṇa died by jumping into the funeral pyre of her husband.

BHADRĀ VIII. A daughter of the King of Kāśi. The grandson of Sagārā, a king of the Solar dynasty married Bhadrā, daughter of the King of Kāśi. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 96).

BHADRĀ IX. One Bhadrā, daughter of Meru was married by King Agūdrā. She had eight sisters, viz. Meru Devi, Parvati, Ugradāmpā, Lati, Ramāy, Śyāmā, Nari and Devavī. (Bhāgavata, Pañcama Skandha).

BHADRĀ X. See Vidūṣāka.

BHADRĀ(l). A kingdom in ancient India. The Kṣatriya princes of Dhranjana gave costly presents to Dhanamūrtta at the Rājaśya Yāga (Sabbha Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 14). Karna, in the course of his disguises in most of the countries, subjected this kingdom. (Vana Parva, Chapter 254).

BHADRĀBHĀ. A king of Pārvanā. (Navama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

BHADRĀGARU A son of Pradyumna. (Bhāgavata, Daśama Skandha).

BHADRĀDEHA. A king. According to the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, he was one of the sons of Vaudeva by Deveki.

BHADRĀKĀ. A king belonging to the Anga dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

BHADRĀKĀ II. A brahmin outcaste. This brahmin, who spent his whole life in committing sins, by chance, took māgha bath for three days at Prayāga, and thus got himself sanctified. King Viraśena, who was then ruling the Avanti kingdom had earned ample sanctity by the performance of seventeen śaiva prāṇīs. The Deaths of King Viraśena and Bhadrāka took place on one and the same day. Though Bhadrāka was morose in his life, he went to heaven along with Viraśena after death as he had taken the māgha bath. (Pañcama Purāṇa, Uttara-khaṇḍa).

BHADRĀKĀLI. Another form of Parvati. 1) General, Lord Śiva, on hearing about the self-immolation in fire of his wife, Satī at the famous yajña conducted by Dakṣa, rushed in all anger to the spot, and beat the earth with his matted hair, and there ensued two forces called Viradhāra and Bhadrākāli. This Bhadrākāli was really Satī or Parvati in another form. 2) Bhadrākāli and Kamā. There is a story in the Daśa Purāṇa of Bhadrākāli, the child of Yāsoda, by whom Krṣṇa had been replaced, and dashed the child against a rock, and that the child then escaped from his clutches and rose up to the sky. That child was Bhadrākāli in another form. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 12).

3) Kamā, Labhākāmi and Bhadrākāli. Labhākāmi, who was guarding the city of Lakkā, was the first to prevent Hanumān from entering the city. Tamil Purāṇas aver that this Labhākāmi was an incarnation of Bhadrākāli. Hanumān thrashed Labhākāmi with his left hand at which she vomited blood and fell down unconscious. On regaining consciousness, remembrance of the past occurred to her, and after thanking Hanumān, who restored her to her former form, she returned to Kailāsa. She complained to Śiva that she could not witness the Kama-Rāvaṇa war. Then Śiva told her thus: ‘You go to the Dravida country and be put up in the Śvayambhūvāna temple there. I shall be born there as Kamā, compose the Kāmīnavya in Tamil and get connected with the dolls-play. Then you would be able to enjoy the story of Śrī Kama, especially the Kama-Rāvaṇa war, both by hearing and seeing the same in better manner than by actually seeing the war. Bhadrākāli acted according to this bidding of Śiva. Then lived a great scholar named Sāṅkara-Śrīvaiṣṇava close to the temple. His wife was Gṅakārvāla. Lord Śiva, as decided upon previously was born as the son of Ācāryavaṇi. He came to the temple as a widow woman. She was worshiping Śvayambhūvāna for the gift of a child. But, Gṅakārvāla, who feared scandal in her, was a widower, becoming a widow, forsook the child in the temple precincts and left the place. One Gaṇeśa could see the orphan child, and took it to Jayaśimha, and the Gaṇa chief, that Kamā, without children brought up the orphan child as though it had been his own child! Since the child was recovered from the foot of the flagstaff, it was named Kamā. Kamā, who was very intelligent even in his infancy, but lazy by nature turned out to be a great scholar and good poet in Tamil by the time he grew up to be a youth. And he became, consequently a prominent member in the ‘poets’ assembly of King Gola. When to his name was added the plural suffix ‘iḥ’ as a token of great respect he came to be known as Kamāpā." Once King Gola asked Kamāpar and Orṭakkūṭa another member of the poets’ assembly to compose in Tamil poetry the story of Śrī Kama. The King’s direction was that Orṭakkūṭa should compose his poem upon the incident, Sātvāmbhandana (building a bridge in the sea up to Lanka) and Kamāpar should write the story of the war in his poem. Orṭakkūṭa completed the task allotted to him within six months. But Kamāpar had not attempted to write even a single line. Having been informed about the matter the King ordered that the poem, Rāma-yān, should be recited in the Kama-Rāvaṇa war day itself. Kamāpar, who began writing his poem the same day with the object of completing it in the night itself fell asleep without writing anything at all. When
BHADRAKĀLIPPĀTṭU

Kampar awoke early in the morning he saw a divine form disappearing from his room, and exclaimed, "Oh mother! you have slipped away!" To this the divine form replies, "Oh Kampar! I have finished writing." And, then the divine form vanished completely.

When Kampar got completely out of sleep and looked about he found the Rāmagāna story fully written in verse on his desk. Kampar inferred that the poem was composed by Sāndhībhāgavat, the presiding deity of his learning and literature, and he was wonder-struck. He recited the poem in the royal assembly, and the King and others too were wonder-struck. And, afterwards, according to the orders of the King the story of the war (Yudhākāna Kathā) began to be exhibited as dolls-play in the presence of the idol of the Devi in the temple. Thus Siva incarnated himself as Kampar, recited the story of the Rāma-Rāma war in the temple, and hearing it Bhadrakali danced.

The above is the chief legend about Kampar.

BHADRAKĀLIPPĀTṭU (Pāṭṭu-Song). Folk song very popular in Kerala temples. The practice is to sing songs in praise of Bhadrakali.

BHADRĀKALIPAṭṭU. A king of ancient India he once left his kingdom of Jāckṣa, Jathaka, and took refuge in South India (Sāhā Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 26).

BHADRĀKĀLIPĀṭṭU. A sacred place. He who visits this place conducts worship will never have to face ill fate. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 39).

BHADRĀKĀLIPĀṬṭU. Daughter born to Kṣiṣita prajāpati of his wife, Krodhavāgī. The ten daughters of Krodhavāgī are: Mṛgās, Mrganāvadī, Harī, Bhadrākālimā, Mārṇa, Ārdvā, Śvetā, Surabhi, Śrīrā and Kadru. (Sarga 14, Aranyā Kṣāra, Vāṃbikī Rāmāyana).

BHADRĀKĀLIPĀṬṭU. A very poor brahmin. This brahmin had six wives and two hundred and forty-four daughters. (Nārada Purāṇam).

Once, hearing the glory of Bhadrākāla (giving away land to the poor), he was much impressed and from then onwards he became filled with a strong desire to give land free to the poor. He had no land of his own. But he went to the king of Kāśmīr and begged for some land which when received was immediately given as gift to poor brahmans. After that he went and bathed in the Pāpanākana (whora situated in the mount of Veṣṭā Valley) Bhadrākali got salvation by this good act. (Skanda 2.1.19).

BHADRĀKALIPAṭṭU. A name of Subrahmaṇya. It is the figure of Subrahmaṇya in the shape of a goat that is known as Bhadrākāla. (Śloka 4, Chapter 228, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHADRĀKALIPAṭṭU. A forest on the top of the Mountain where the river which lies to the east of Mahākami. This is a tree called Kāliyana in this forest. This is a very sacred tree standing miles high above other trees and is being worshipped by the Vṛddhacāraṇa. By worshipping this tree the men have become white and majestic and by drinking a juice prepared from its leaves the women keep themselves eternally young. Chapter seven of Bhāṣa mention the tree. (Kāliyana Parva).

Parva says that this tree Kāliyana stands towering miles high bearing flowers and fruits at all times of the year. The Vṛddhacāraṇa worshipping it are white, strong and majestic. The women drinking its juice are lotus-complexioned, beautiful, Moon-faced, well versed in music and dance and having a life-span of over a thousand years, remaining young all the time."

BHADRĀKALIPAṭṭU. A king in the region of Kāmaṇḍ. His only son, Sudhaman, was very much devoted to Siva and spent most of his time worshipping him. The father tried his best to withdraw his son from this excessive devotion but failed.

Then one day the great sage, Parāśara, came to the King at his guest and the King then requested him to make his son withdraw from his Siva-worship. But Parāśara then told him about the previous life of Sudhaman and consoling him persuaded the King to do the Rūdhribhiseka (uninterrupted pouring of cold water over an idol of Siva) by himself. The King then entrusted the state with his son and left for the forest accepting an ascetic life. (Śakunda Purāṇa, 3.3.20-21).

BHADRĀKALIPAṭṭU. A king Uṛdabala Mahārāja performed a demoniac yāga to destroy this king. (Śatapatha-brāhmaṇa).

BHADRĀKALIPAṬṭU. A king whom the Purāṇa extol as having ruled Saurasiṇḍa in Daṇḍaparayaṇya. At the forest of Naimisha sage Sūta told the following story to explain how Lakṣāṇa (godless of wealth) took her abode in the forest.

Bhadrākali (Bhadrākaliṇa) who was ruling Saurasiṇḍa had seven sons and a daughter of his wife, Sureciaṇḍikā. The daughter was named Śyāmbalī. Once truthful, Śyāmbalī was sitting under a green-wood tree with her playmates playing with diamonds and gold and when the godess of wealth disguised as an aged brahmin woman went to the gates of the palace and asked for permission to see the queen, Sureciaṇḍikā. The servants pressed for details about her and then she said this: "My name is Kamalā. My husband is a man named Bhuvanāśava and we live in Daṇḍakā. Your queen in her previous birth was a Vaśyā woman. One day she quarrelled with her husband and beat her hard and then crying loudly she ran out of the house. I met her and when she told me her story instructed her to perform a Pūṇyavrata (Fasting to any particular deity). She did it willingly and as a result she acquired great wealth and happiness.

One day the husband and wife died. Yamā, the king of Death, then sent his orderlies to bring before him that couple who had always quarrelled with each other while living. Bound by ropes the ghastly servants of Yamā were about to drag them to their land when the angelic servants of Viṣṇu with the insignia of Śaṁkha-Cakra-Gāda on their lapela arrived there and those messengers of Lakṣāṇa held by Śvapakāṣā cut off the ropes and carrying them in a Rajālakṣa chariot took them through noble paths to the land of Lakṣāṇa. They lived there happily for a period calculated at the rate of a thousand years for one week of Pūṇyavrata observed. In the end to complete the goodness remaining they were born as King and queen on earth with plenty of wealth and happiness. But they have now forgotten about the Pūṇyavrata and I come here to remind them of it."
enquired about the incident. On hearing the story from the woman Syāmābālī got instructions regarding that Punyavrata from the old woman and started observing it. Within four weeks she got married and went to her husband's house. After Syāmābālī's departure from the palace the wealth of the King began to wane and they became too poor that at the request of the king Bhadrāvāvā went to his daughter to ask for help. The daughter gave his father a block of solid gold dropped in a paper. But on his return he found the palace when he opened the bundle he found there a block of charcoal instead of gold. On seeing the mishap the king burst into a cry.

Suratīcandrīkā then went to her daughter and was well received and attended to. During her stay there the Punyavrata day of the month came and the daughter tried her best to make the mother also observe the fast. But the poverty-stricken queen broke the fast without her daughter's knowledge by eating what remained in the dishes of the children. But the next month Syāmābālī compelled her mother to observe the fast and Suratīcandrīkā took the Vrata successfully. A few days after that Suratīcandrīkā returned home and to her amazement found everything in plenty which were once more. (Chapter 11, Bhaga 2, Padma Purāṇa).

BHADRAŚRENYA. A Helaya King who was ruling a state with Māhīmatī as capital. He had fought many wars with Dīvodāsa, king of Kāśi. (See under Divodāsa).

BHADRAŚYAVĀ I. A king of Pūruvamā. He was the son of Pūruvavādī. Bhadrāśvā had ten sons: Rāghu, Kṛṣṇa, Samruddhyā, Gṛiṣṭhyā, Cī currently, Śrīhāsdeśa, Dvārakā, Mānibhāṣa, Kṛṣṇa and Mānibhāṣyā. (Chapter 278, Agni Purāṇa).

Once Agastya went and stayed for seven days in the palace of Bhadrāśvā and his wife Kāntimati. Everyday Agastya used to speak in glowing terms about Kāntimati and asked about the reason for it, replied, 'The previous birth Kāntamati was a servant girl in a wealthy house. The master of the house once entrusted her with the task of seeing that none of the temple lights went out on the night of Dwadashi in the month of Tulā (August-October). She did her duty so willingly and sincerely that she was born as a queen and you a king'. Then Agastya gave them instructions about that Vrata which both Bhadrāśvā and Kāntimati observed sincerely, receiving as a result a benediction from Visnu. (Vāyu Purāṇa).

BHADRAŚRENYA II. Agnīdhra, son of Priyavrata and grandson of Manu, got nine sons of his wife Pūrvacitti, a celestial maiden. One of the sons was Bhadrāśvā. His brothers were Nābhi, Kīṁpurava, Hari, Nāyaka, Darma, Ghatamaya, Kuru and Ketumāla. The country ruled by Bhadrāśvā was called Bhadrāśvā lying to the east of the mountain Gandhamadāna. (Pañcatama Skandaḥ, Bhāgavata).

BHADRAŚVĀ. An island near the mountain of Meru. Dharmaputra was ruling this land and Sahajāya once described this land to Dharitāryā. (Chapter 14, Śatā Purāṇa and Chapter 7, Bhāma Purāṇa).

BHADRĀYU. A king who was a devotee of Śiva. He was a lover and in his life he suffered much, even the pangs of death. His wife was the dutiful and good natured lady, Kāntimati.

On the sixteenth birthday of Bhadrāyuvī the Saiva appeared before him in the name of Rāma and blessed him after instructing him on the precepts of Rājadharma. He further gave him a dagger and a coach as weapons and twelve thousand elephants. With the might of all these, Bhadrāyuvī became unconquerable. (Śiva Purāṇa, Sāmrudrāsanahitā).

One day, while Bhadrāyuvī was ruling the country, Śiva came in the guise of a tiger and carried away the wife of a brahmin. Bhadrāyuvī, a firm protector of his subjects gave his own wife to the brahmin and prepared himself to give up his life in fire. Śiva greatly pleased at this selfless act of Bhadrāyuvī befriended a true King appeared before him and blessed him and gave back the brahmin his wife. Bhadrāyuvī in his previous birth was a King named Mandarā and Kāntimati in her previous birth was Vīshālī, queen of Mandarā. (Śanda Purāṇa, 3.3.12; 3.14).

BHAGA I.

1) General. One of the twelve Ādityas born as sons of Kaḥya-prajāpati by his wife, Aditi. Viṣṇu, Sakra, Arvāmuna, Dēśā, Viśā, Viśvāsā, Savitā, Mitra, Varuna, Anu and Bhaga—these are the Dvādāṣṭādyas, and they were Devas famous as Tūṣās in the last Ātmāsamantavarta.

2) Other information. (1) Bhaga married Siddhā, and the couple begot three sons called Mahīma, Viṣnava and Prabhā and three daughters called Siṃhavatā, Varanahā, and Ādi.(2) Bhaga participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 66).

BHAGAVATA. One of the eighteen famous Puranas. Gaya is the main theme of this Purana and based on it it dwells on the greatness of Dharma (duty) and states about the dharmas of Sivas and Viakalpa. (See under Purana).

BHAGAVAD GITA.

1. General. The Bhagavad Gita is a poem consisting of 650 verses divided into eighteen chapters. The Gita covers chapters 25-45 in the Bhishma Parva of the Mahabharata, and it is in the form of a talk or discussion between Arjuna and Lord Krishna. The mighty armies of the Pandavas and the Kauravas were arrayed on opposite sides for mortal combat on the field of Kuruksetra when Arjuna, overcome by grief at the prospect of fathers, brothers, preceptors and other kinsmen fighting and killing one another expressed to his charioteer, Sri Krishna his aversion to fighting. But, the Lord pointed out to the unwilling Arjuna, by unique and various arguments, his imperative duty, under the circumstances, to fight and fight in heroic earnestness with the result that Arjuna shed his disinclination to fight and entered the fray, which ended in the ultimate victory of the Pandavas. And the dialogue between Arjuna and Krishna, and especially the great teaching of Krishna on the field form the theme of the Gita. The Gita contains three spheres or fields of teaching; the krama yoga (philosophy of action), bhava yoga (philosophy of knowledge) and bhaktya yoga (philosophy of devotion). The three yogas are treated each in six chapters. The theme of the Gita is philosophy, and it is revered as one of the most sublime philosophical texts of the Hindu religion. Many a great thinker and philosopher like Acharya Shankara, Ramanujacharya and Madhvacarya have annotated, and written commentaries on the Gita. There is a school of thought which believes that the Gita was taught to Arjuna by Krishna himself on the battlefield in something like tabloid form and that Vyasa accumulated the mighty teaching in its present form. The poet, Bana, who flourished in the 7th century A.D. and the great Shankara, who lived in the 8th century believed that the Gita was sung by Krishna himself. But there are some modern thinkers, who argue that the Gita was composed some time between the third and fourth centuries B.C. and it was interpolated into the Mahabharata in the second century A.D.

The Gita has translations in all the languages of the world. The whole world has acclaimed it as a very weighty and valuable contribution in the sphere of philosophy.

2) Theme of the Gitā. It has been mentioned above that the Gitā forms chapters 25-45 in the Bhāgavata Purāṇa of the Mahābhārata. The subject-matter of each chapter of the Gitā is given below

Chapter 25. Arjunaśāstra:—Both the armies take positions in Kuruksetra. At the sound of the conches Arjuna is tormented and sorrowful at the prospect of killing relations, preceptors and kinsmen.

Chapter 26. Śrīsākhyā yuga.—The greatness and majesty of the Śrīsākhyā and the Karma yugas.

Chapter 27. Karma yuga:—The need for action according to the Jñāna and the Karma yugas.

(Another story about the greatness of the Gitā, see Duṣṭāsana II.)

BHAGAVATI. The words Bhagavān and Bhagavati mean Paramātmā (universal self) and Prakrti (Nature and its modifications) respectively. Prakrti is also called by the name Śakti. The following elucidation once given by Mahāvīra about Bhagavān and Bhagavati is greatly illuminating.

Time, space, atmosphere and the universe (Brāhmaṇda) are, just like Paramātmā, eternal. This is the truth and reality. Below this eternal Gokula exists Vaikunthahloka, which also is, like the former, eternal. Just like this, Prakṛti, which is a supporter of bhakti and is also without beginning or end (Sanātana) too is eternal. In the same manner as flame exists in fire inseparable from it, moonlight in moon, beauty in the lotus flower and brightness in the sun, so does nature exist in soul inseparable from it. In the same way as the goldsmith cannot make gold ornaments without gold and the potter cannot make pots without clay, the Paramātmā and Panātman cannot be unattended by Prakṛti. Prakṛti (Nature, Devī) is all powerful. ‘Para’ becomes powerful enough to do everything when he joins the Devī.

The sound ‘Sa’ means welfare and good fortune, and the sound ‘ki’ means prowess. Hence “Śakti” means the embodiment of welfare and prowess or she, who is the giver of welfare and prowess Bhagavati comes in her own knowledge, affluence, riches, fame and strength. As the Paramātmā is always with and inseparable from such Bhagavatī he is called Bhagavatī also. When Prakṛti and Paramātmā remain combined it is called Prabhābhma, which possesses neither form nor attributes. And, when Prakṛti and Purusa separate, of their own accord, they assume forms and attributes.

The above is Saiva doctrine in a nutshell. The Vaisnavas do not accept this position. They ask, “How is it possible to have brightness or effulgence without there being an effulgent one?” Therefore, the Vaisnavas believe in the existence, at the centre of an effulgent sphere, of a thing possessing the utmost effulgence and brightness equal to that of Brahma. This ‘thing’—Deva—is very efficient and effective to remedy sorrows due to birth, death, disease etc. and to bring the lifetime of Brahma is just one minute only. This Deva is called Paramātmā, Paramāḥbrahma and Kraṇa by the Vaisnavas. ‘Kraṇa’ means maximum devotion (love) towards Paramātmā, and ‘na’ means he who becomes slave to such devotion. Hence Kraṇa means he who becomes a slave to the love of his devotees. There is another meaning also for the word Kraṇa. Kraṇa means all and ‘na’ means seed or root; and thus Kraṇa means he, who is the root of everything. In the very beginning there was only this Kraṇa; and this Lord, subject only to his own will and pleasure, divided himself into two, the left side becoming woman and the right side man. (Devī is the least he wants to be marked.)

BHAGINI. A word used in addressing women. Verse 129 in chapter two of the Manusmriti lays down that the wife of another person and women who are not one’s relatives should be addressed either as Bhavati, Subhage or Bhagini.

BHAGIRATHA.

BHAGIRATHA

2) Reclus: Many years had not lapsed after his coronation as King when, in the heart of Bhagiratha spiritual thoughts began to crop up. A great sage called Triloka was his guru. Once Bhagiratha asked the guru what was the means to get rid of worldly sorrows, and the guru replied as follows:—

The ego will be annihilated when the tendencies and cravings towards objects of the senses are absolutely suppressed and the whole and perfect truth is realised through knowledge, the practice of concentration etc. The ego will not disappear as long as one does not become one's real self by completely overcoming the sense of pride, shame etc. which form the outer case of worldly life. The egoless state is the ultimate achievement and most supreme state. Oh! Bhagiratha! if you would get rid of sentiments like pride etc., give up all attachment to material objects, become fearless and gift away, with thoughts concentrated on the inner self, all your wealth to enemies, and then move among those enemies, without any sense of ego and pride about that material body, and take alms from them (enemies) and also give up me, who am your preceptor in the matter of knowledge; then you will become the most sublime Brahma'. This advice of the guru affected him so much that Bhagiratha, holding his duties firmly in mind, engaged himself in spiritual practices, and after spending some time thus he performed, according to rules, the Agnistoma yajña aimed at gifting away everything. All wealth like cows, land, horses, gold etc. were distributed in gifts to noble brahmans and the poor folk according to their eligibility for the same. Within three days he had gifted away everything except the clothes he was wearing. And, then he invited his neighbouring enemy king and gave to him, without the least hesitation, the kingdom which he had been heir of all wealth. The ministers and other citizens felt very sorry about the whole thing. But, Bhagiratha left the country at once for other places having with him only the clothes he was wearing. He spent his days in various places and forests where he was not known even by name. Ere long, Bhagiratha attained ultimate spiritual solace. And, then he accidentally came to his former kingdom, which was then being ruled by the enemy King. The ministers and other citizens to whose houses he went begging for alms recognised him, and with sorrow unborne they prevailed upon him to accept the throne again and rule the country. Bhagiratha rejected their request, and, after staying there for some time, he started for other places. During this wandering of his he met his old preceptor, Triloka, and both of them, in company, toured for some time cities and forests. They felt it very painful to keep on to their body like that. They thought like this: Why should the body be kept like this? What if this material object continues to exist or perishes? But let it (the body) continue as long as it wills, without any way being against the order of things and ethical practices? And, in this frame of mind they traversed the forests. Now, the minister of a distant kingdom who was on the look out for a successor to the King who had died heirless, persuaded Bhagiratha to accept the kingship of that country. The ministers of Bhagiratha's former kingdom also now requested him to resume his old kingship, especially since its new ruler had already expired. Bhagiratha obliged them, and became once again King of his own country. (Jñānavāsīgham).

3) Bhagirathaprayasam, (Humatayon or Humaless effort). Sagara, an old predecessor of Bhagiratha had two wives called Keśi and Sumati. Keśi had one son named Asamajña and Sumati had 60,000 sons. Sagara once conducted an Aitavendra yajña in the Indo-Gangetic plain, when Indra stole away the sacrificial horse and kept it quite near to sage Kapila who was doing tapas in Pātaḷa. The 60,000 sons of Sagara set out in search of the horse and found it out in Pātaḷa. At the sight of the horse they shouted themselves hoarse. Enraged at this sage Kapila reduced those sons of Sagara to ashes which emanated from his eyes.

After entrusting Asamajñas with the duty of performing the funeral rites of his 60,000 sons Sagara expired. Asamajña transferred that duty on to Anumāṇa, and he to Bhagiratha. Bhagiratha did penance on the sea shore concentrating his mind on Gaṅgadevi. The Devī appeared before Bhagiratha and asked him to choose what boon he would, and he requested the Devī to perform the funeral rites of 60,000 sons of Sagara remaining in the form of ashes in Pātaḷa. To this Gaṅgadevi replied that the earth will not be able to withstand the impact of her powerful flow, but she shall, if Śiva permits, flow into his matted hair. And, Gaṅgadevi asked Bhagiratha to first get that permission. This did not dishearten Bhagiratha, who went to mount Kailāsa to do penance so that Śiva might grant him his prayer. He thus did penance for 1000 years. Śiva appeared to him and agreed to receive the rushing flow of Gaṅgā water on his matted head and, accordingly Śiva stood in position to receive the rushing waters of Gaṅgā, and Gaṅgā flowed on to his head. Even the most powerful flow of Gaṅgā water on his head did not cause Śiva to move from his position even by a hair's breadth. This awakened the conceit in Gaṅgadevi, understanding which Śiva contained her on his head. Without finding any outlet the waters of river Gaṅgā flowed along the matted hairs of Śiva for thousand years. So, Bhagiratha had once again to please Śiva. Thus pleased again Śiva shook his matted head and one drop of water fell on the ground, and that is the river Gaṅgās in North India. The Gaṅgā flowed along plane ground to Pātaḷa and performed the funeral rites of Sagara's sons. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 105; Vālmikī Rāmāyaṇa, Bāl Kanda, Canto 42; Brahmāṇḍa purāṇa, Chapter 97; Bhāgavata, Navamā Skanda, Kampa Rāmāyaṇa (Tamul), Yuddha Kānda, Padma Purāṇa, Part 4, Chapter 21).

4) Other Information.

(1) Bhagiratha is a member of Yāna's assembly and so were his. (M.B., Sabhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 11).
(2) Śiva bestowed boons on him. (Vana Parva, Chapter 180, Verse 1).

*According to verse 12, Chapter 25, of Vana Parva, Bhagiratha is the son of Dilipa. But most of the Purāṇas refer to him a the son of Anumāṇa.
BHĀGIRATHI had faith in the great efficacy of making a gift of cows. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 25)

(4) He married his daughter to Kautsa. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 131, Verse 25).

(5) Once Bhāgiratha made a gift of one lakh of cows with calves to Mahārṣi Kekhāla, and attained Uttamolaka. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 27).

BHĀGIRATHI. Another name of Gaṅgī. (See under Gaṅgī).

BHĀGNARATHA. A synonym of Citaratha. (Citaratha).

BHĀGURI. A man of great erudition. Bhāguri was noted for his proficiency as a Sarvāstiva Pandit (scholar of all sciences), Vyākaranakāra (grammarians), Kolaśāra (etymologists), Jtvitāśāstra (Astronomer) and Sutrādāra (authority on Sūtras).

BHĀIRAVA, 1. A nāga belonging to the Bhūrataṛtra Vanśa. There is a reference to this nāga in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 17. He was burnt up at the Sarpasatra performed by King Janamejaya.

BHĀIRAVA II. A Pārṣada of Siva.

1) Āraha. Immediately after his birth, this terrible nāga subjugated all the Devas without getting the permission of Siva. Enraged at it, Siva turned him into a tree by a curse. But Siva was soon pacified and lifted the curse by declaring that those who offered pūjā to the gods would get the full reward for their worship only if they offered pūjā to Bhāirava also. Bhāirava became a tree at once as he was cursed. He became a tree because he subjugated the gods Therefore that tree came to be called "DAMANAKA" tree (Damana=Subdue). It has another name, "TĀTIRI" tree. Even now, pious people offer pūjā to this tree. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapters 52-80).

2) Birth. Once Brahmā and Viṣṇu became swollen with pride. In his haughty way, Brahmā insulted Siva. Under the insult, Siva was infuriated and out of the fire of his fury was born Bhāirava with his black form. (Liṅga Purāṇa I 90).

3) Brahmadhātus. As soon as he was born, Bhāirava rushed towards Brahmā and pinched off his fifth head which had insulted Siva. By this, he incurred the sin of Brahmadhātus. For the expiation of this sin, as ordered by Siva, Bhāirava started on a journey to go abegging, with Brahmā’s severed head in his hand. Siva then created a woman named "Brahmadhātus" and asked her to follow Bhāirava. Although Bhāirava visited many holy places, he was not able to liberate himself from the sin of Brahmadhātus. At last, at the suggestion of Siva, he went to Vāraṇasī and washed off his sin. Brahmā’s head which he carried, was also deposed there and the place became famous under the name of "Kapilamocana tirtha". (Siva Purāṇa, Satarudra Samhita).

4) Family. In Kālīkā Purāṇa, there is an elaborate account of the family of Bhāirava. According to this Purāṇa, Vijaya, the repaid King of Vāraṇasī was born in the family of Bhāirava. Kālīkā Purāṇa also says that Vijaya destroyed the Khāṇḍavi city and set up the Khāṇḍavi forest in its place. According to Kālīkā Purāṇa, Bhāirava and Vetasī were, in their previous births, two Śivaparāsadas named Mahākāla and Bhṛṇi. It was by the curse of Pārvati that they were born as mortals in their next birth. (Kālīkā Purāṇa 59).

The Purāṇas mention eight Bhāiravas called Asītāngka, Runa, Cāgṛa, Krodha, Unmatta, Kapali, Bhīṣaṇa and Samhāra.

5) Shape. Bhāirava has a terrible shape. He wears the crescent moon and plaited hair on his head. His weapons are, sword, arrow, dagger, bow, trident, rope etc. At times he is dressed in elephantskin. He has five faces. Serpents are his ornaments. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapters 52-80).

BHĀIRAVI. One of the eight Ambas. They are: Rudrācākara, Rudracandana, Nāṭakā, Mahākās, Siddhācāmugdikā, Siddhayogeśvari, Bhāiravi and Rāpavidyā. All these are the eight different forms of Devī. (See the word DEVI).

BHĀJAMAN. A Yādava King, whose father was Satvata and mother Kaumāliyā, and they had, beside Bhājaman, another son called Saivata or Andhaka. Bhajaman married the two daughters of Śrījaya, named Bahyakā and Upabhuyakā, whom by him got six sons. (Bhāgavata, Namavarna Sandhā).

BHĀJYA. An acarya in the line of the Rākṣa disciples of Vyasa. Bhājya studied Vaiṣṇavism under the feet of his guru Bhājai. (Bhāgavata, Dvīpāda Sandhā).

BHĀJSAKA. A Śūdra singer. In Purāṇa Purāṇa the following story is related about this Śūdra. Bhājsaka, who was once going aimlessly somewhere, felt extremely thirsty and quenched his thirst by drinking water which was found near the small platform raised for the holy Tulsi shrub. The sanctity of the water thus drunk was washed away all the sin attached to him. Some time later he was killed by a forest-dweller, and he attained swargaloka (heaven). Bhājsaka, in his previous birth, was a king who led a voluptuous life, and he, once, robbed a very beautiful woman of her chastity, and it was as a punishment for the sin that the King had to be born, in the next birth, in the womb of a Śūdra woman. (Purāṇa Purāṇa, Brahma Kanda, Chapter 22).

BHAKTI. A Devī born in Drāvida deśa (Southern India). Once Devī, along with her two sons, Jāna and Vauṣījā, started on a walking tour to Gokula and Vindavāna via Karpātaka, Mahārṣi Vagīja (Gujarat). During the long tour the mother and her sons became aged. But, as soon as they set foot on Gokula and Vindavāna old age quitted Bhākati and she became young again. But, her sons remained old. So the mother requested Nārada to turn them young again. Nārada read out to them the Vedas, the Vedānta (Upaniṣads) and the Bhagavad Gītā, all to no purpose. Bhākati’s sons still remained old. Then Sanakā, Sanandā and Sanatkuṇāra asked Nārada to read out the Bhāgavata to them. Nārada did so, and the sons of Bhakti Devi became young again. (Purāṇa Purāṇa).

BHALARANA. A king. Though by birth he was a brahmin he became a Vaiśya because of doing things belonging to the Vaiśya community like trade and commerce (Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa). According to the Bhāgavata, Viṣṇu Purāṇa and Vaiṣṇav Purāṇa, Bhalādana was the son of Nābhaṅga.

BHALLĀTA. A king of the line of Bhārata. He was the son of King Visvavaksa and father of King Bhārada. (Namavarna Sandhā, Bhāgavata).
BHALLĀTA(M) A place of habitation in ancient India. Bhīmasena conquered this land during his victory march. (Śloka 5, Chapter 30, Sañhā Parva, M.B.)

BHĀLUKI I A boy, who was a member of Yudhiṣṭhīra's assembly. (Sañhā Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 15).

BHĀLUKI II A maharāja. He also accompanied the Pāndavas to Dvārakā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 27).

BHĀLUKI III An ārya. He was a disciple of Lāṅgali, a member of the Sāma line of disciples of Vyāsa. (Vīva Parāṇa).

BHĀMAHA A critic who lived in the sixth century A.D. He was one of the top critics in the Sanskrit language. His important work is "Kāvyālaṃkāra." This is also called Bhāmalālmkāra by a few. There are six chapters in this. The first chapter deals with Kāvyāśāstra, the second and third with Alāṃkār, the fourth with Kāvyādhyāya, the fifth with Nātya and the sixth with Sabdādhyāya. As against Daṇḍi Bhāmaha separates "Kathā" from "Ākhyāyika." According to him the requisites of a good Kāvyā are sweetness, pleasantness and liveliness. Dāndi prescribes ten attributes for a good Kāvyā. Bhāmaha expresses the opinion that Vaiṣṇavi is no Alāṃkāra at all. In a wider sense it is 'atitāvyākta' (exaggeration). But Bhāmaha admits it has a place in Kāvyā.

BHĀMINI Wife of Avikīt, King of Vaiśali. The famous Marutta is the son born to this couple. The Markandeya Purāṇa states that Bhāminī once went to Nāgala to give refuge to the serpents there.

BHĀNĀVI A river. Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmana on their way to the forest from Cītrakūṭa crossed this river. Bhānāvi. (Sarga 52, Ayodhyā Kañcā, Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

BHĀNĀYANI A maharāṇi. This sage sits in Devaloka and worships Indra. (Śloka 12, Chapter 7, Sañhā Parva, M.B.)

BHĀNDIRA(M) An ancient forest. It was in this forest situated in Andhak that Śrī Kṛṣṇa with his cowherd champs conducted his childhood exploits. There was a very huge tree of name Bhāndira in this forest and it was under this great tree that Kṛṣṇa and his friends met daily for their play. This forest is on the northern bank of Ganga in front of Kṛṣṇaghat in Vṛndavana. The Purāṇas proclaim it was there that Brhatā śrama conducted the marriage of Kṛṣṇa with Radhā. (Chapter 23, Sañhā Parva, Dākṣigālā Pāṭha, M.B.)

BHĀNGA A serpent born in the Takṣaka dynasty. Bhūṣa was burnt to ashes at the Serpent Vajra performed by King Janamejaya. (M.B., Chapter 57, Verse 91).

BHĀNGAKĀRA I A king, son of Avikīt and grandson of King Karu of the Lunar dynasty. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 53).

BHĀNGAKĀRA II A king of the Yadu dynasty. He attended the grand celebrations held at Mount Raivata. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 11).

BHĀNGASURI I Another name of King Rutaparna.

BHĀNGASVANI (BHĀNGASVANA) A king in ancient India. For the story of his transformation into a woman refer to para 42 under 'Indra'.

BHĀNU I A son born to Kṛṣṇa of Satybhabāma. (Dañama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

BHĀNU II Son of Dyau; this Bhānu as a guru of Śūrya. (Śloka 42, Chapter 1, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BHĀNU III A devangadhara born to Kaśyapa prajāpati of his wife Śrī. (Śloka 47, Chapter 65, Ādi Parva, M.B.).

BHĀNU IV He is the son of an agni called Purāṇa. He is born of the spiritual essence of Agīra and Cyavana. This Bhānu is called Manu and Brhadbhānu. (Chapters 220 and 221, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHĀNU V A king of ancient Bhārata. This king took a flying tour of Kurukṣetra in Indra's acropod to witness the battle between Arjuna and Droṇa. (Śloka 9, Chapter 56, Virāṭa Parva, M.B.).

BHĀNU VI A vādāva. He learnt the art of archery from Pradhyumna. Sañhadeva married the daughter of this Bhānu called Bhūmamati. (Vana Parva, 180, 27 and Harivamsa 229.12).

BHĀNUDEVA A brother of Sakuni. In the Mahābhārata battle he fought against Bhīma and died. (Śloka 24, Chapter 157, Droṇa Parva, M.B.).

BHĀNUKOPA A demon. He fought against Sañkarṣaṇa. (Aurava Kañcā, Skanda Parāṇa).

BHĀNOUMATI I A king of the dynasty of Śrī Rāma. He was the father of a king called Sañkṛadvana. (Navaśa Skan, Bhāgavata).

BHĀNOUMATI II A son born to Kṛṣṇa of Satybhabāma. (Dañama Skandha, Bhāgavata).

BHĀNOUMATI III A prince of Kaliṅga. He fought on the side of the Kuravas and was killed by Bhīmasena. (Chapter 54, Bhīma Parva, M.B.).

BHĀNUMATI I The daughter of Bhāru, a leader of the Yadavas. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa went with his retinue of Yadavas to visit the holy palace called Pandaraśaka the Yadavas conducted a wine festival. During that festival a demon of the name Nīlukṛta carried away Bhūmamati. This was because of a curse to Bhūmamati from Durvasa when Bhūmamati did not respect once when they met at the garden of Raivata. Durvasa had after the curse consorted her by assuring her that she would be saved and married by Sañhadeva, one of the Pāndavas. True to this, Bhūmamati was married to Sañhadeva in the presence of Nārada and Kṛṣṇa. (Viśva Parva, Chapter 80).

BHĀNUMATI II Daughter of Kṛṣṇa. She was the wife of Ahimayat, a king of the Pīru line of monarchs. They had a son named Sañkarṣaṇa.

BHĀNUMATI III Daughter of Agīras. She was extraordinarily beautiful. (Śloka 2, Chapter 218, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHĀNUSENĀ A son of Karna. He was killed in the battle by Bhīmasena. (Śloka 27, Chapter 48, Karna Parva, M.B.).

BHĀRADVĀJA I Another name of Dirghatama.

 Dirghatamas is also called Bhāradvāja. But the Bhāradvāja of poetic fame is not Dirghatamas. Dirghesravas is the son whom Bhāraṣṭra illegitimately got of Manu. His brother's wife. There was then another legitimate child in the womb of Manu. Knowing thus the devas told her 'Bhūmamati' meaning 'bear the fruit of two' and to the son of Bhūmamati the name of Bhāradvāja also. The real name of this son was Dirghatamas or Viśratha. Dirghatamas is not the Bhāradvāja who was the father of Droṇa. The famous Bhāradvāja was the one who was vanquished. Dirghatamas or Viśratha was the adopted son of Bhārata, son of Duryodana. (Bhāgavata and Kāmaṇḍūkāyana). For details see under Bhārado I and Dirghatamas.
Bharadvāja II. The sage Bharadvāja of Purānic fame.

1) General information. Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa of Kaṇṭha Rāmacarita states that this sage was the son of Atri Mahāraja. He lived for many thousands of years. He was connected with Vālmikī and the story of Śrī Rāma. Bharadvāja was for many years a disciple of Vālmikī. He was present with Vālmikī when the hunter killed one of the couple of Kṛṣṇa when Vālmikī and Bharadvāja reached the shores of the river, Tamaśa, that day Vālmikī told Bharadvāja thus: "Look, Bharadvāja, what a clean ghat this is! The water is pure and clear. Place your water-jug here and give me my vaikaśa. We will go down here in this second water". Then Vālmikī taking the vaikaśa from the disciple walked along the shore admiring the beauty of the forest trees and found on his way the historic Kṛṣṇa couple. (Sarga 2, Bāja Kāṇḍa, Vālmikī Rāmacarita).

2) Bharadvāja and the study of Vedas. Bharadvāja gave himself mutually to the study of the Vedas. He obtained from Indra a boon to extend his term of life on earth to many thousands of years by different stages, each stage covering a span of a thousand years of life. All these years he devoted to an incessant study of the Vedas. Finding the term not sufficient for completing the study of the Vedas he appealed to Indra again for extension and Indra appearing to him before three mountains and giving him three handfuls of sand told him thus: "What you have studied about Vedas till this time is equivalent to the amount of sand I have now given and what is yet to be studied about the Vedas is as big as the three mountains before you". Any other mortal being would have been disheartened by this revelation made by Indra, but not Bharadvāja. Undaunted he continued his studies. (Bhāgavata).

3) Bharadvāja in the role of a seer. The śūraṇa of Bharadvāja was in Čitrakotī and Śrī Rama and Laksmanā were in the beginning of their exile went to Śrī Rama accepting his blessings. Bharata on his return from Kekaya knew about the exiles of his brothers and hoped to bring them back to Ayodhyā. He went in search of them with a large retinue of soldiers and men. Keeping the rear outside, Bharata went to the śūraṇa of Bharadvāja. The latter decided to give Bharata some advice and his people a grand reception and calling Viśvakarmā to his side asked him to arrange a royal banquet that night. Devas, Gauḍhaśvams, Apsarasas, Asādikās and all such people were invited for the night. Renowned dancers from devalika like Gṛhadūsti, Hemā, Viśvēti Mitrākṣi and Akanbhāsa appeared for entertainment. Even Vaṁśarī took part in the dance. Dehes of food came to the guests of their own accord. The night came to an end wonderfully and at daybreak everything vanished and all were amazed at the magic of the night. (Sarga 91, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Vālmikī Rāmacarita).

4) Drona's origin. Drona was the son born to Bharadvāja of a celestial woman, Ghrācā. (see under Drona).

5) How Bharadvāja died once but was born again. See under Arvāvan.

6) The name Bharadvāja. This is how the connotation of the word is explained. Bharadvāja: bhare āśayān

Bhāre devān bhare dvījān

Bhāre ca bhāryāmavvijād

Bharadvājaṁśi jāthahān

I protect even those who are not my sons, I protect my disciples, I protect devas and the brahmāns. I protect my wife and all there I do with ease and so I am named Bharadvāja. (Bhāgavata).

7) Other details.

(1) Bharadvāja once gave refuge in his śūraṇa to Manōrāma, daughter of the King of Kalinga and her son (See under Manōrāma).

(2) The sixth mandala of Āgṛveda contains the songs of Bharadvāja.

(3) He was among the sages who once went to Dvārrakā and cursed Śiṃba. (See under Śiṃba).

(4) Bharadvāja had a daughter Devavatāni whom Viśvāvas married and got the son, Kubera. (See under Kubera).

(5) Once Bharadvāja was travelling through an uninhabited forest with his son when he became exhausted by hunger and in then begged of a śūrakśa, Prthu, several cows (Śloka 107, Chapter 1, Manuḥmārti).

(6) This sage took part in a birthday celebrations of Agnā (Śloka 57, Chapter 122, Atri Parva, M.B.).

(7) Because of the blessing of Bharadvāja Bharata got a son named Manōrāma. (Śloka 14, Chapter 129, Atri Parva, M.B.).

(8) Bharadvāja taught the secret of the missile Āgniya to Agnāveda. (Śloka 33, Chapter 129, Atri Parva, M.B.).

(9) He worshipped Ṣrīnara sitting in the council of brahmās. (Śloka 22, Chapter 11, Saṁsāra Parva, M.B.).

(10) This sage came to the battlefield during the Mahabharata battle and requested Drona to lay down his missile. (Śloka 25, Chapter 196, Drona Parva, M.B.).

(11) Once Brahma Mahāraja asked him some questions on the creation of this universe and Bharadvāja gave him satisfactory answers. (Chapter 162, Saṁsāra Parva, M.B.).

(12) This sage performed the sārvabhauma-Purāṇa and gave a son to Duvedaśa. (Chapter 35, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

Bharadvāja III. The eldest son of the Agni, Śamya. (Śloka 5, Chapter 219, Vana Parva, M.B.).

7) Bharadvāja IV. A renowned sage. Bharata, a King of the Pūrā line of kings, had no son and as he was spending his days in sorrow Manuṛa gave Bharadvāja this Bharadvāja as a son. Bharadvāja who was by birth a brahmān from then onwards became a Kṣatriya. (Maṇya Purāṇa 49. 27-39 and Vāyu Purāṇa 99. 152-158).

Bharadvāja V. A mahārasa born of the line of Anīras. He was the father of Yavakritā and a friend of Raibhya, son of Viśvāmitra. Once Raibhya created a Kriyā and that Kriyā killed Bharadvāja's son Yavakritā. Unable to bear the loss of his son Bharadvāja was preparing to give up his own life by jumping into the fire when Arvāvan brought to the life Yavakritā and gave him to the sage. Immensely pleased at the regain of his son Bharadvāja ended his life on earth and went to heaven. (M.B., Vana Parva, 165-168).

Bharadvāja VI. A brahmāra who lived in the Parvamavanāra. He was living on the shore of Gaṅgā doing rigorous penance. One day desiring of conducting a special type of Yajña he went to bathe in the river along with other sages. There he saw the celestial cow, Ghrudā, standing in all splendour after her bath. Bharadvāja had seminal emission and from that was born a daughter, Śrutavatī, to him. (Chapter 47, Śaṅkha Parva, M.B.).

BHARADVĀJA VII. A great scholar well-versed in all the Sūtras. He is the author of ‘Bhārataastra’ and ‘Grahaastra’. (The Vārāhīyāśa of Bombay keeps a hand-written copy of his work Grahaastra written in Pāṇḍeya script).

BHARADVĀJA I. A Mahārāja. It was he who convinced Dvaitasena, father of Suyāvāna that he (Suyāvāna) would be endowed with long life. (Vana Parva, Chapter 286, Verse 16).

BHARADVĀJA II. The collective name of a particular sect of preceptors mentioned in the Upāsanas. The Bhrāhaśāmya Upanisad refers to this sect of preceptors as disciples of Bharadvāja, Pārabhāya, Valaka, Kuśikā, Aitareya, Āsūrāyaṇa and Bajjavāpāyaṇa.

BHARADVĀJA IIII. A grammarian. According to the Rkṣtratri, prāśikāsya of Śāmaveda, it was Brahmā, who first composed the science of grammar. This science was handed over by Brahmā to others in the following order: Brahmā → Brhaspati, he to Indra, Indra to Bharadvāja and he to his disciples. Pāṇini has discussed the grammatical concepts of Bharadvāja. Āryaśāmya and Vaiśeṣikā have quoted the opinions of this grammarians.

BHARADVĀJA JĀTÍRTHA. One of the five sacred places (balīing grītis in sacred rivers). (See Varga).

BHARADVĀJA. A famous Indian river mentioned in the Purāṇas. (Bhūmika Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 29).

BHARADVĀJA PUTRA. A preceptor, who was a disciple of Parāśarputra. In the Brhad-tyākṣopanisad he is referred to in many contexts as Vatsamānāputra.

BHARANI. One of the twentyseven constellations. Punya is assured if one gives as gift a cow to a brahmā on that day. (Śloka 35, Chapter 30, Avanīśāna Parva, M.B.)

BHARATA I Son of Dusyanta born of Śakuntalā.

BHARATA II. Son of Dusyanta born of Śakuntalā.

Birth. Dusyanta was once hunting in the forests when he hit a fawn with his arrow. The fawn fled to the śrama of Kañava Muni and the king followed it. On reaching the śrama grounds he saw Kañava watering the plants helped by his companions Anasāyā and Priyamvāda. Dusyanta and Śakuntalā fell in love with each other at first sight. Kañava was absent from the śrama and they married according to the Gāndhavita rites and Śakuntalā became pregnant soon. The king gave her his signet ring as a sign of faith and left for his palace. When Priyamvāda left her Śakuntalā fell into a deep revieve and she never knew about the arrival of the sūtra pregant sages. Durvasa to the śrama Durvākas mistook her as duece-pectful and cursed her saying that she would be forgotten by the man of whom she was thinking then. Śakuntalā never knew about the curse also.

Kañava Muni when he returned to the śrama and knew everything, sent Śakuntalā to the palace of Dusyanta. But King Dusyanta never recognised her and when Śakuntalā was returning deeply grieved Menākha her mother, took her and left her in the śrama of Kañava. There Śakuntalā delivered a son. The boy grew brave and fearless and he could subdue even the wildest of animals around there. Kañava, therefore, named him Sarvavāmanas.

Once when Dusyanta was returning home after visiting Indra he saw Śakuntalā, recognised her, and took her and the boy to his palace. This was the boy who later on became known as Bharata. (Chapter 37, Śaṅkha Parva, M.B.).

3) Marriage and explan. Bharata was a partial incarnation of Mahārāja. Even while he was young he became a ruler and conquering the world destroyed the wicked. Bharata had three wives. All the sons born to them were bad and so the mothers killed them all. Agrieved over the loss of his sons he worshipped the devas to get a son for him. At that time the great preceptor Brhaspati forcibly married Manātā the wife of his brother. Manātā was pregnant then and when the child born from Brhaspati was a boy with two children. On delivery she threw the child of Brhaspati in the forests and went away with the other son.

The Devas took care of the discarded child and named him Bharadvāja and gave the child to Bharata. Bharata gave the boy the name Vītātha (Dirghatama). Bharata ruled over his land for twentyseven thousand years and the land was, therefore, called Bharata. (Śloka 90, Chapter 2, Śaṅkha Parva, M.B.).

After ruling the land ideally he left for the forests entrusting the land to his son, Vītātha. (Navamārī, Bhāgavata).

Vītātha also was called Bharata and he had five sons: Sihotra, Suhotra, Gaya, Gārbiha and Suketra. (Chapter 10, Śaṅkha Parva).

BHARATA II. Son of Dārakatha.

2) Birth. Dārakatha, King of Ayodhya, had three wives: Kausalyā, Kaikēy and Sunitī. Kausalyā gave birth to Śri Rāma, Kaikēy to Bharata and Sunitī to Laksmana and Sātrughna. Kaikēy, mother of Bharata, was the sister of Yuddhājīrā, Raja of Kekyra. Bharata was born on the day of Pūjya. (Śloka 14, Sarga 18, Vālmīkī Rāmāyana).

Dārakatha remained in sorrow without children for a very long time and then he performed a Pratikāmēṣṭi-yāga (A sacrificial ceremony to get children) with the Mahārāja Rāyānāja as the officiating priest. From the sacred fire arose a divine figure carrying a pot of pudding and it was after taking that pudding that the wives of Dārakatha became pregnant. (Sarga 15, Bālākāṇṭha, Vālmīkī Rāmāyana).
3) Till the end of Śrī Rāma’s forest life. The sons of Dārarātha married the daughters of Janaka, King of Mithilā. Śrī Rāma married Sītā, Bhārata, Mūrdhva, Lakṣman, Urmālī and Satrughna, Sruṭakṣir. Dārarātha made arrangements to crown Rāma as King and then leave for the forests and lead an ascetic life. At that time Bhārata and Satrughna were in the country of Kekaya with their uncle, Yudhājīt. When the day of coronation was drawing near, Kāikeyī demanded of Dārarātha the execution of two boon which were once promised by Dārarātha to her long ago during a battle between the devas and asuras. One of them was to crown her son, Bhārata, as king and the other to send Rāma to the forests for a period of fourteen years. Dārarātha was shocked to hear that, but, without any hesitation, Rāma and Lakṣman accompanied by Sītā went to the forests and Dārarātha overcame with immense grief caused by this unpleasant turn of events fell dead. Messengers were sent then to Kekaya to bring Bhārata and after traveling for three days Bhārata and Satrughna reached Ayodhyā. Though they were not informed of the death of their father they were worried all the way because of the news about the two boon which their father had given them. On reaching Ayodhyā they were shocked to find all the roads deserted and arriving at the palace they found it silent and gloomy. Kāikeyī then told them that had happened and when Bhārata knew that his mother was at the root of all this calamity his rage knew no bounds. Forgetting himself he drew from the sheath the glittering sword and stood before his mother with the drawn sword wavering to strike or not to strike and musing to himself “No. Not a woman and not one’s own mother, No, it should not be done”. Immediately after this was decided, he swung the sword straight to his throat. But adroitly Satrughna intervened and swept away the sword before it fell at its aim. This strong move of Satrughna brought Bhārata to his senses and he looked at his mother and immediately that he said his words turned pale like a flower brought near a burning flame. Bhārata immediately changed into the dress of a Saṃyāṣī and started to go to the forests. Satrughna followed his brother. Vasiṣṭha also started. The news spread like wildfire and people began to crowd at the palace eager to follow the brothers. Very soon a huge procession was seen moving towards the forests. Vasiṣṭha and Arunātśā in a chariot in the front, Kauśalyā and Sūmitrā in another next to it and Bhārata and Satrughna closely following the chariots, walking. People joined the procession from behind. The great crowd of people reached the banks of the river Gaṅga. Goja coming to know of the great exile of people from Ayodhyā through spies went and saw Bhārata, at first in disguise, and later as himself made his acquaintance. He then took Bhārata and Satrughna across the river to the presence of Śrī Rāma at Cīitrakūṭa. When they reached Cīitrakūṭa only Bharata-Satrughna, Vasiṣṭha and Arunātśā, Kauśalyā and Sūmitrā entered the Āraṇa of Śrī Rāma, all the others remaining outside. When Rāma and Lakṣman were told about the death of their father they were filled with grief. All the sons, then, Vasiṣṭha officiating performed the obsequies of their father. Rāma and Bharata then discussed the future. Śrī Rāma persisted in his vow and said he would return to his country only after fourteen years and insisted that Bharata should rule the country during that period. Bharata accepted the arrangement saying that if his brother did not come back after fourteen years he would give up his life by jumping into the fire. Śrī Rāma then gave his sandals to Bhārata who accepting the same with due respect returned home followed by others. On reaching Ayodhyā Bhārata did not go to the royal palace which he considered as empty because of the absence of his brother, Rāma and abhorrent because of the presence of his mother, Kāikeyī. Instead, he went to a nearby village called Nandī and installing the sandals there lived there and ruled the country.

4) Return of Śrī Rāma. Śrī Rāma when he came back to Ayodhyā after fourteen years was crowned King. Bhārata got two sons of his wife Māndvī, Subhashī and Sūrāsena. While they were thus living happily in Ayodhyā, message was sent through an ascetic by Yudhājīt from Kekaya that some gandharvas were creating trouble in that country. It was the state of Sūndhu in Kekaya which was subjected to this molestation and on the advice of Rāma Bharata went and subdued the trouble, killing the gandharvas. He then created two towns on either side of Sūndhu and made his two sons the Kings of those states. When Śrī Rāma gave up his life in Saryā river and rose to heaven as Viṣṇu Bhārata and Satrughna also gave up their lives and took the forms of the conch and the wheel which adorn the hands of Viṣṇu. Utara Rāmāyana.

BHARAT III

I. Birth of Rāṣṭha.

1) Genealogy and birth. Descending in order from Vissu-Brahma - Śva-vamhitavanam - Priyavrata - Agnīdhra-Nābhi-Rāṣṭha-Bhārata

Emperor Priyavrata partitioned his empire to his eight children. Agnīthra got Jambudvīpa. Agnīdhra had nine sons: Nābhi, Kampanāra, Harivāra, Ḫaltā, Bhūnya, Hravaṇa, Kuru, Bhabha and Kumbha. Nābhi's son Marudivei got the land called Hamā. Nābhi married Merudivei and got a son, Rāṣṭha. Rāṣṭha had a hundred sons and Bhārata was the eldest. (Chapter 1, Anumāṇ 2, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

2) Marriage, administration and entry into Āraṇa life. Bharata took over the administration of the country at the death of his father, Kāśītha. He married Pācājāi daughter of Viṣṇu-pūraṇa. They had five sons, Sumati, Rāṇṭrābhīti, Sūdrāsana, Avaraṇa and Dḥūṃrakete. The Pācācama Skandha of Bhāgavata contains a statement to the effect that India got the name Bhārata from this king. (It is worthwhile remembering at this juncture a previous statement that the name Bhārata was obtained from Bhārata, son of Dvayānta). Bhārata like his forefather was very erudite and affectionate and always respected his duties. He always meditated on Brahmā and in his heart there shone the Parama-puruṣa in the figure of Vīśvdeva adorned with Śrivatava, Kuṣṭubha, Bhaumā, Sankhā, Cakra, Gāḍa and Padma. He ruled the country for a crore of years and after that dividing the country among his sons went to the Āraṇa of Paṇāka Mahārāja to spend the rest of his life there. On the rocks lying in the river flowing in front of the Āraṇa were the marks of Cakra on one side and Nābhi on the other and the river therefore came to be known as Cakranābhi. Bathing in this river
BHARATA (MAHĀBHĀRATA)

An epic written by Vyāsa.

1) General information. The Mahābhārata is an epic. Bharata is acclaimed as the first emperor of Bharata. The theme of this great epic is the fight between the two lines of princes belonging to the dynasty of Bharata. That is why the book is called Mahābhārata. The great size of the volume and the greatness of the wisdom contained therein have contributed much to its getting the name, Mahābhārata. Once the devas put the Mahābhārata in one pan of a balance and the Vedas in the other pan. Then the devas were convinced that the Mahābhārata weighed more than all the Vedas put together. (Sūkta 269-271, Chapter 1, Adi Parva, M.B.).* This book contains over a lakh of verses. There is no subject on earth which is not dealt with in the Mahābhārata. None of

* Purāṇaśāstra sarvaḥ samayaḥ tulyaḥ dīgām
   Āstivṛhīnyāh sarvarheshvyaḥ Vedābhyaḥ bhūyadhikāḥ yadda
   Tadā prabhūtā dharmamahābhāratatamastu
   Mahātvaḥ ca guruvāḥ ca dharmamann vatsyaḥbhū Mahābhārataḥ bhāraviyac ca Mahābhāratasyayac.
the world's epics is so big as Mahābhārata. In size the Mahābhārata is double that of Homer's Iliad and Odyssey put together. The following points about it is worth mentioning now:

Yathā samudra bhagavan
Yathā ca himavān gīrīḥ
Khyāṭāvābhubhā ratisnādhi
Tathā bhāratamucyate

Mahābhārata is not a mere epic. It is a whole literature in itself containing a philosophy which has been an unceasing and perennial source of spiritual strength to the people of India. Above all, it has for its core the Gītā which is perhaps the noblest of scriptures.

The Mahābhārata comprises eighteen books, each book being called a Parva. There are 2109 chapters in it, the chapters differing in size. Besides, there is an annex called Harivamsa which deals with the life and history of Lord Kṛṣṇa.

2) Contents: The contents of each Parva are succinctly given below: The Parvas are so named as to give a hint of their central theme.

(1) Ādi Parva. (Ādi—beginning). Pāndu and Dhṛtarāṣṭra, king of the Candra dynasty, are brothers. Bhīṣma brought them up. Dhṛtarāṣṭra was born blind and he got as his hundred children of his wife Gāndhāri. They were called the Kauravas. Pāṇḍu had two wives Kunti and Madri and got of them five sons called the Pāṇḍavas headed by the eldest Yudhishṭhira.

(2) Subha Parva (Subha—court). The Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas lived together in the court at Hastinapura. There, the Kauravas entered into a game of dice with Yudhishṭhira and through the devious tactics employed by the keen-witted Śakuni, Yudhishṭhira was defeated and he lost everything he possessed. The Pāṇḍavas were then compelled to go into exile to the forests for twelve years and spend another year after that incognito. If they were found during that period of incognito they were to go into exile for another term of twelve years. The Pāṇḍavas accompanied by Pāṇḍu left for the forest for the first time.

(3) Vana Parva (Vana—forest). This is one of the longest of Parvas and describes the life of the Pāṇḍavas in the forest Kānyaaka. The well-known stories of "Nala Carita" and "Kīrtiñjñāyī" are told in this Parva.

(4) Virāṭa Parva. (Virāṭa—Name of a King). The Pāṇḍavas after completing their term of exile in the forests spent the year of their life in incognito at the court of King Virāṭa. Many wonderful events took place during their stay there and this Parva deals in detail about them.

(5) Bhīṣma Parva (Bhīṣma—The First Generalissimo of the Kauravas). The great Mahābhārata war was fought in the vast expanse of Kurukṣetra lying to the north-west of Kṛṣṇa. Bhīṣma was the first generalissimo of the Kauravas and Dhṛṣṭadyumna of the Pāṇḍavas. Vyāsa describes the events of the battle classifying it according to the generalissimos of the Kaurava army giving the four generalissimos a Parva each. Bhīṣma fought for ten days and was struck down on the tenth day by an arrow from Arjuna.

(6) Droṇa Parva (Droṇa—The second Generalissimo). When Bhīṣma fell Droṇa took charge as the supreme commander. This Parva deals with the fight under his command. Droṇa was killed in the end by Dhṛṣṭadyumna.

(7) Karna Parva. (Karna—The third generalissimo). This Parva deals with the war under the command of Karna. Karna fell in the end at the hands of Arjuna.

(8) Subha Parva. (Subha—The fourth and last of the Generalissimos). When Karna fell Subha took over charge of the Kaurava army. As the war was coming to an end most of the big warriors of the Kaurava army were killed. In the end Bhīṣma and Duryodhana met in a grim fight with maces in which Duryodhana was killed. This Parva deals with the final stage of the battle.

(9) Suptika Parva. (Suptika—pertaining to sleep). This Parva tells us the tragic story of how Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇabhauma and Atavatthāmā who were the only three left with Duryodhana after the great battle went into the camp of the Pāṇḍavas at night and killed all the brave warriors of the Pāṇḍava army, excepting the Pāṇḍavas, who were sleeping in their camp unaware of the foul play lying ahead.

(10) Śrī Parva. (Śrī—woman). This Parva deals with the great lamentation in the battlefield, after the war, of Gāndhāri and other women.

(11) Śantī Parva. Yudhishṭhira was crowned king and even at that time Bhīṣma was lying on his bed of arrows awaiting death. Before taking up his duties of the state Yudhishṭhira went to where the grandure lay dying and took his blessing and instruction in dharma. This instruction of Bhīṣmabhauma to King Yudhishṭhira of the three dharmas, Rajadharmā, Apo-dharmā and Mokṣadharmā is the famous Śantī Parva.

(12) Anuśāsana Parva. (Anuśāsana—Instruction). Bhīṣma still on his deathbed continues his instructions on several topics, like duty, freedom and lasting, giving entertaining stories to illustrate the essence of his teaching. This Parva is devoted to this.

(13) Aṣvamedha Parva. (Aṣvamedha—yaga conducted by emperors). This Parva deals with the yaga conducted by Yudhishṭhira when he became the emperor of Bhārata.

(14) Aśvamedhīkā Parva. (Aśvamedhīkā—yaga conducted by emperors). This Parva deals with the yaga conducted by Yudhishṭhira when he became the emperor of Bhārata.

(15) Kauravas Parva. (Kauravas—Life in a hermitage). Dhṛtarāṣṭra, the blind and his wife Gāndhāri accompanied by Kunti left for the forest and lived there for two years in a hermitage. One day the forest caught fire and the three without trying to escape sat on the ground facing eastwards in yoga posture and calmly gave themselves to the flames. This is dealt with in the Ādi Parva.

(16) Māsaka Parva. (Māsaka—Mace). This Parva gives the story of how the Yādavas fought against each other with maces and were destroyed and how Dvārakā sank down into the ocean. It describes the death of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma also.

(17) Mahāprāṇahita Parva. (Mahāprāṇahita—Death). Dharmaputra entrusts his kingdom to his successor and along with his four brothers and wife Pāńcī sets out on a long journey to Mahānru to never to return. This journey to death is detailed in this Parva.

(18) Vayugrahita Parva. (Vayugrahita—Heaven). This Parva describes the entry of the Pāṇḍavas and their relatives into Svarga, Heaven.

(19) Mode of Narration. Most of the verses in the Mahābhārata are in the Anātup metre. At certain places other metres also have been used. There are prose pieces also in it. There are twenty notable pieces, three in Ādi Parva, seven in Vana Parva, seven in Śantī
BHARATA (MAHABHARATA)

Parva and three in Anusāna Parva. All the pieces are statements by realized souls. The style of the poetry is simple and the method of presentation lively. At times the imagination of the poet extends up to the horizon. Though there is a flow of spiritualism throughout the matter is purely mundane.

4) Authorship. Bhagavān Vyāsa is believed to be the author of Mahābhārata. He was a contemporary of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas. Many of the events of the Mahābhārata were personally witnessed by Vyāsa. He took three years to write this book. The following slokas will support the above:

Kurvajaya kulaśāhānām
Drayam vyātum ca yateḥstham /
Tāsrayam bhagavān Vyāsa
Vargayāmśa Bhārata. //

(Padma purāṇa)

Tribhūvānādhi sadaśodhīyādhi
Kṛṣṇagadāpyaṇya muniḥ /
Mahābhāratavāmaśkhyānām
Krīvamāṇamūrtamāt. //

(Sloka 35, Chapter 2, Ādi Parva.)

The Varāha Purāṇa states that Vyāsa composed the Mahābhārata at a period when the end of Devapura yuga merged with the dawn of the Kaliyuga. The Bhagavata states that Śrī Kṛṣṇa paved away on the first day of Kaliyuga. The Bhagavata is devoted to admire and praise the life of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. This book is also written by Vyāsa. This sloka found in the first Chapter of Ādi Parva clears the doubt:

Vāsudevasya māhātmayam
Pāṇḍavānām ca satyātma /
Durvṛtyaṁ Bhāratarāpyaṇām
Uktavān Bhagavānṛ. //

The original name of the Bhārata which Vyāsa composed was Jayā. In the first Chapter of Ādi Parva is this sloka to support this statement:

Nārāyanaṁ namakṣraya
Nara caiva nara-viṣhnaḥ /
Devī Sarasarati caiva
Tato Jayamudrayast//

After the death of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas the disciples of Vyāsa, Saṁjña, Jaimini, Païla, Suka and Vaiśampāyana gave this book great publicity. They wrote books based on this story of Bhārata of which only the Bhārata of Vaiśampāyana and the Āṣva-medha Parva of Jaimini are now available.

Vyāsa's Bhārata was first expounded by Vaiśampāyana at the Sarpa-satra of Janamejaya. At the request of Janamejaya, Vaiśampāyana added some more facts to the original work known then as Jayā. Jayā with the accretions came to be known as Bhāratasamhitā. Śrīva who narrated this story to Saunaka and others at the forest of Naimiṣāṇa added some more matter to the Bhāratasamhitā and made it larger. The present Mahābhārata is this expanded edition.

The following facts prove that the Mahābhārata has thus passed through three stages of evolution:

1) This book is known by three names: Jaya, Bhāratasamhitā and Mahābhārata.

2) There is a reference to the three parts of the book in Sloka 66, Chapter 1 of Ādi Parva.

3) There are three different opinions regarding the total number of slokas in the Mahābhārata. According to Ugrāravas there are 8800 verses, according to Vyāsa 24000 verses and according to another statement a lakh of verses.

4) The narration appears to be of three different kinds, descriptive, philosophical and oratorical, indicative of three different authorships.

5) Śrīva and Vaiśampāyana have made accretions to the original work 'Jaya' of Vyāsa.

Viewed with these facts we are led to believe that Vyāsa has composed only the very essence of Mahābhārata comprising 8800 slokas and that work was known as 'Jaya' as referred to in the first invocatory verse of the epic. Vaiśampāyana added a few verses of his own and brought the number to 24,000 and gave the book the name of Bhāratasamhitā. It was Śrīva who made many more additions and made the book so big as to fetch it the name of Mahābhārata. The epic which is now current among us contains a lakh of verses and it took perhaps centuries to get this transformation of the book from 'Jaya' to 'Mahābhārata'.

6) Period of publication. The Kāli Varśa starts from 3102 B.C. The great Mahābhārata war was fought at a period when the end of Devapura yuga merged into the dawn of Kali yuga as could be gathered from the following verse from the epic:

Antare caiva samprāpiye
Kaliṇḍvaparayorāhītī /
Samanastapānacake yuddhān
Kurupāpiṇḍa sarvatem //

(Sloka 13, Chapter 2, Ādi Parva.)

So it can be deduced that the great war was fought round about 3102 B.C. Dhṛtarāṣṭra lived for eighteen years after the great battle and the Pāṇḍavas ruled the country for 36 years. (Śrī Parva, M.B.). It was when Śrī Kṛṣṇa died that the Pāṇḍavas ended their rule and commenced the Mahāprāsthāna. So it can be surmised that Śrī Kṛṣṇa lived for 36 years after the war.

(Adi Parva, Chapter 1).
Sri Kṛṣṇa died on the first day of Kali yuga, 3102 B.C. Therefore it is clear the Mahābhārata battle was fought in 3138 B.C. There are indications in other purānas to support this theory. There was that rare phenomenon of a Saptarṣiṇa yoga (Combination in astronomical position of seven planets) while King Parīkṣit, son of Arjuna, was ruling the country. This happened in a month of Magha (January) and a probe into the date of such previous occurrences revealed that a similar one had happened in the month of Magha in the years 3177 and 477 B.C. (Next one is to happen in 2222 A.D.). This phenomenon repeats itself in every hundred years and so it is to be believed that one of the kind happened in 3077 B.C. precisely during the period of Parīkṣit. It is therefore confirmatory to the statement that the great war occurred in 3138 B.C.

The Pāṇḍavas ruled the country for 35 years after the war and Vyāsā wrote this divine epic after the death of the Pāṇḍavas. Vyāsā took three years to complete his work. Therefore it can be well concluded that Vyāsā wrote the epic in 3100 B.C. The Pāṇḍavas commenced their Mahāśāra-dīna after entrusting the administration of the state into the hands of Parīkṣit. This must have happened in 3102 B.C. Parīkṣit ruled the country for 65 years and so his son Janamejaya became King in 3032 B.C. It was after two years of his becomung King that he conducted the Sarpasāra and it was at this Sarpasāra that Vaiśampāyana first expounded 'Jaya' (Mahābhārata) to the sages assembled there.

This fixing of the date of Mahābhārata is based on the conclusions arrived at by the pandits of Bharata, but foreign chronologists differ from us. They argue that it was in the 10th century B.C. that the Mahābhārata battle took place on the strength of the following:

The theme of the Mahābhārata is a fight between Kurus and Pāṇḍavas. After the war the two join and there is a statement in the Yajurveda of a people-formed by the merger of the two. Therefore the great war should have happened in the 10th century B.C. It was a period of hero-worship and songs on the heroic deeds of the Kurus and Pāṇḍavas were sung and handed over from one generation to the other and gradually those songs took shape in the form of the Mahābhārata.

There is another school of thought. In the Mahābhārata, Brahmā is given great prominence. But in Vedic times Brahmā was not counted at all. During the golden period of the Buddha Brahmā had a conspicuous hold on Hinduism. Therefore it should be deduced that the Mahābhārata was written during the 6th century B.C. There were about 8,000 verses in the Mahābhārata.

Towards the second stage of Mahābhārata the epic grew in size bringing into its fold about 24,000 lokas. It was at this stage that the Mahābhārata got a vastrapīṭhe colour and Sri Kṛṣṇa was adored as an incarnation of Viṣṇu. Mahābhārata who visited India in 300 B.C. records that the majority of Hindus were vastrapīṭhe at that period. There are references in certain parts of the Mahābhārata to Greeks and Buddhists. Therefore a set of foreign chronologists conclude that those portions of the Mahābhārata could have been written only after Buddha and after the attack on Bharata by the Greeks i.e. by 300 B.C.

The third stage of the Mahābhārata is its present form and it was at this stage that it included new philosophy in it. The Dharmaśāstraḥ of Manuṣautra became popular in the 5th century A.D. and therefore the third stage of the Mahābhārata must have started before then, in the 3rd century A.D.

BHĀRATA II. (Bhāratavarṣa, India.)

The purānas describe the earth to be constituted of seven continents: Jambudvīpa, Pañca-pāda, Śālimalī-dvīpa, Kuśadvīpa, Kuraṇadvīpa, Śākadvīpa and Pūkāravīpa. Of these India is Jambudvīpa.

The Bhāratavarṣa was constituted of nine islands at that time in the following positions: In the centre was Ikṣvāku and to the east was Bhūdvarṣa. To the south-east was Hrṣīyaka and to the south was Bhārata. To the southwest was Hari and to the west was Kṛṣṇa. To the north-west was Cambhaka and to the north was Kūravarṣa. Beautiful Kāṁipurāna varsa stood to the north-east of Ikṣvāku. There was neither the passage of time nor the fear of ageing or death in any of these continents excepting Bharatavarṣa.

This Bhāratavarṣa itself is a group of nine islands each separated from the other by oceans and thus made not easily accessible between each other. Indradvīpa, Kāśmirā, Tāmraparṇa, Gadhastāmā, Nāgadvīpa, Kuṭāla, Simbāla and Vārana are the eight others and the ninth is this island of Bharatavarṣa. This island is called Kumbhā also. On the eastern boundary of this island live Kṛṣṇas, on the western side, Yavanas, on the southern boundary Andhuras and on the north Turuskas. In the Centre live the Brāhmin, Kauriyas, Vaśiyas and Śūdras.

BHĀRATHI

ing rivers. Siva, Parvati, Nirmindya, Tāpi, Vēṇa, Nāda-dhava, Vattaram, Sundhika, Kumudavati, Tōya, Rēvi, Mahāvānu, Durgāyā and Anuṣṭāvī. Those originating in the base of the Sāyana are the following great rivers:
Godavari, Bhimavati, Kṛṣṇa, Vēṇa, Sundāravati, Vaimanjara, Suprājāyā, Vālīya, Kāveri, Dugdhdha, Nālinī, Vārānṣā, and Kāvachāya. Those arising from Sūktāman are the Jāmpī, Kṛumāla, Tāmāvarinī, Vatūjuk, Upāravati, Sundhika, and Sundhāma. All these rivers are very sacred and are considered to be abodes of sin, mothers of the universe and waves of oceans. There are four rivers besides these.

The Madhyapadeśa comprises the following states:
Māra, Kurāha, Kūnakal, Kākalā, Kōsala, Vrish, Ākāla, Bākāla, Kālatyārada, Aparaṇā, Sāhira, Phalava, Khet-aka, Gāndhāra, Yavana, Sundhik, Sāvitra, Bhadraka, Śatadブラva, Lāhika, Phārāvata, Māraka, Mahāra, Urukaḍihāra, Kekaya, Damuḍa, Kāmboja, Darada, Anga, Lokika, Vēsa, Tāsara, Bālīya, Dārada, Aīrya, Bhārāḍa, Pradāna, Phaladaka, Kamavika, Vakakā, Vaiśavi-ka, Ćābika, Tānagana, Aīsā, Aivāhika, Kṛṣṇa, Tarnā, Harasā, Tarasara, Pragya-yasa, Vaiśākha, Vedita, Maiā, Tāmāvāraka, Magadha, and Ananda. The states lying south of the following are the following: Pancha, Kretu, Gha, Kula, Janaka, Māṇi, Komāla, Mahāvānu, Māhāvānu, Kali, Vādika, Vasā, Aruna, Sabara, Pulinda, Vaiśrāvaya, Vaṇīnī, Damalika, Phāraka, Yānaka, Sākṣi, Aśaka, Bhamadaha, Vaṇīnī, Kāma, Audhra, Udihāra, Uduhī and Nakadake. The western states are Sāpapata, Vaiśāvayā, Durā, Gālīkā, Puliya, Sunūt, Timarpa, Tāpasa, Kūrakā, Bimā, Nāśikā, Sunarar-mana, Dīnakā, Sundhāla, Sāravata, Vaṇīnī, Surāṣṭa, Avantya and Āhit. The following states lie adjacent to Vaiśākha: Kāvachā, Ekalava, Meeta, Dēkā, Utirmanara, Uḍhara, Gopā, Kāvachā, Tovala, Kośala, Trantya, Kūra, Durā, Vaiśākha, Vaiśākha, Nālīka, Anāja, Tundikera, Vaiśākha, and Avasū. There are a few more states which are attached to mountains: Nālīka, Hanumangā, Kupatha, Tanigata, Kāla, Kātha, Prāvanarū, Omā, Aplista, Suhūhika, Sagartia, Kūtia, Tomaṇa, Saśkhi and Adrika. (Chapter 13, Vaiśāna Parāṇ)

BHĀRATASAMHĪTA. Another title of the Mahābhārata.
(See Bhārati 1.)

BHĀRATI. A famous river mentioned in the Purāṇas.
It is stated in Verse 25, Chapter 222 of the Vaiṣṇa Parāṇa that Agni (fire) originated in this river.

BHĀRATI. Daughter of the Agni called Bhārata.
(Gītā, Chapter 219, Vaiśāna Parāṇa, M B.)

BHĀRAVī. A Sanskrit poet who flourished in the 6th century A.D. He is the author of the māhākāya called Kriṣṇamāhārāmahāyāna. Kumārasambhava, Kriṣ-ṇamāhārāmahāyāna, Sutavaśād and Nivasād are the five
1. Yemkōya na veise shāram arthābhāvaśe vēiohi jñānavēma. सा
Mahākāya in Sanskrit with established reputation.
In the Ehohe records of A.D. 634 Bhāravi is held up in praise along with Kālidāsa. The theme of Kriṣṇajunīvalī's Sāiva, in the guise of a hunter, attacking Arjuna immersed in penance. Bhāravi's literary style is simple and sweet. In the use of similes he is second only to Kālidāsa. Among his books only Kriṣṇajunīvalī has been found out yet.

BHAṚGA I. Grandson of Dviveda, a King of the Pāru line.
Dviveda got a son named Pratardana. Bharga and Vatsa were the sons of Pratardana. (Chapter 278, Agni Purāṇa.)

BHAṚGA II. A synonym of Siva.

BHAṚGA (M). A village of ancient India. (Sīkṣa 51, Chapter 9, Bhāsa Parāṇa, M.B.)

BHAṚGA. One who belongs to the Bṛug dynasty.
(See Bhṛgu.)

BHAṚGA (M). A city in ancient India. (Bhūṣa Parāṇa, Chapter 9, Verse 50.)

BHAṚMYĀŚYA. A famous king of Pañcāla Deśa. He had five heroic sons headed by Muṅga. (Navana Skandha, Bhāgavata.)

BHĀRATARI. A famous Sanskrit poet.
1) Birth. He was the son of Vidyāśāgara, a great brahmin scholar, who lived in Pañcāla. There is a legend about the birth of Bhārati in Uttar Bhāratā Vidyāśāgara while young learning the Vedas from his guru. But he was not satisfied with that study and went on to learn more about all the sāstras and so he started on a tour to find out a guru who would teach him all he wanted. On his way he met several great scholars but none came up to his standard of a guru. One day he started on a tour, after a long journey he reached a mountain valley. Washing his hands and feet in a nearby river and quenching his thirst he went and sat down under a banyan tree to rest. The cool breeze sent the tired brahmin to sleep and he slept.

A Brahmarkāśa who was living on the top of the banyan tree when it became midday descended from the tree to perform the sacred rites of the day and found a man lying asleep. By the sacred thread on his body the Brahmarkāśa surmised that the man was a brah-min and woke him up. Waking up Vidyāśāgara found his surprise the bearded Brahmarkāśa standing before him and after mutual enquiries Vidyāśāgara told him of his mission. The Brahmarkāśa told him thus:
"Boy, let your name Vidyāśāgara (ocean of learning) in true life. I am acquainted with many sāstras and I shall teach you everything I know. But there are certain conditions for the same which you have to observe. You must live with me for six months and should fast during that period behaving yourself as one under a vow. I shall, however, teach you a mantra which would help you to remain unaffected by hunger, thirst or sleep. If you are prepared to accept these terms and become my disciple I shall quench your thirst for knowledge. Vidyāśāgara willingly agreed to his terms and became his student.

Both of them then climbed on the banyan tree and the Brahmarkāśa sat in his usual place on a branch on the tree and Vidyāśāgara on a branch just below it. The instructions started and continued for six months.
Vidyāśāgara never felt thirst or hunger during that period. When the teaching was complete the Brahma-rayatikāvya kavīdtāra-Kālidāsa Bhārāvīkāvya. 1)
groom of her husband and that prostitute thought thus: "Of what use is my life when my lover is dead? I will live for ever." So thinking she sent for her lover and giving him the mango explained to him the greatness of the thing. But the horse-groom was well devoted to his wife and desiring that his wife should remain young always gave it to her. The groom's wife was a servant-maid of the palace and it was at the time of her departure from the palace after her day's work that she was given the mango. A little horse-groom and so she carried it home in her hand. Bhartrhari who was returning from somewhere to the palace saw the woman carrying the mango and questioned her and knew how she got it. On coming to the palace he sent for the horse-groom and though at first the horse-groom tried to shield the queen, he was compelled to tell the truth in the end. The truth pained him much. She said: It was this wicked and unfaithful woman whom I was believing to be very chaste and loving. Woman can never be believed. Look, she has fallen in love with an ugly-looking servant of mine and unless she was her lover she would not have given this mango to him. It is better that this matter is pursued any further now. We will decide about the future course of action later." Thinking thus, he sent away the horse-groom and went to his bed-chamber and lay there immersed in thoughts. The horse-groom immediately informed the queen of everything that took place and the queen felt sorry that her secret had come to light. She knew that besides the punishment that her lover would get her name would also be blackened and so decided to kill her husband. Thinking thus, she sent away the horse-groom and went to the bed-room and told her husband thus with much pretended affection: "It will take some time for your lunch to be ready. Let not you lie in an empty stomach. Eat this mango." So saying she placed the bread in the hands of Bhartrhari and left the room. Bhartrhari suspected that this bread was prepared by her with poison to kill me. It is better to give up living with her. There is no doubt about it. Of the four ästras the fourth, Sanuṣās, is the last. It is pleasant and sorrowless. Therefore gradually that Sanuṣās should be accepted." Thinking thus he came out from his room with the bread and placed it in his somewhat empty stomach and ate the bread remarking "Ottappam vivicetum" (The otta will burn the house). Then taking an earthen bowl for begging he left the house unnoticed by anyone. The moment Bhartrhari left the house the house caught fire and everything in it was burnt to ashes. Bhartrhari remonstrating all and changing himself into the robes of a sannyäsī went about begging by begging. After some time he decided that he would never beg but would eat only that which others gave him voluntarily. He had by that time reached a big temple in south India where in one of the entrances to the temple, the east one, was sitting the famous sannyäsī Pāṇāṣānti Pillārī Bhartrhari, therefore, went and sat at the western entrance with his bowl before him. Whatever food fell into the bowl was taken by him. Sometimes for days together he went without food but he was never sick or felt weak.
One day a beggar went to the eastern gate and asked Pañjani Pillayār for alms. Pillayār said, "I am also a beggar like you. I have nothing in my hand to give you, but there is a man sitting in the western gate. He is a rich man and he may give you something". The beggar went to Bhārtrihari and asked for alms. Bhārtrihari also expressed his helplessness in the matter. But then the beggar said, "The man sitting at the opposite entrance told me that you were a rich man, Bhārtrihari smiled. He knew then why Pañjani Pillayār said so. A man who has renounced everything need not keep even a bowl to beg. The bowl was a luxury and a sign of wealth. Bhārtrihari threw away the bowl and remained at the temple entrance till the end of his life. It was while sitting there that he wrote his famous poems.

4) His well-known works are: (1) Tāc Śītī Sātaka (2) The Śrīgāna Sātaka (3) The Vairāgī Sātaka and (4) The Subhāsita.

BHAKTRIŚHĀNA (M). A very holy place in ancient India. It is said that even those who merely visited this place would get the benefit of performing an Ātiveśa yāga. The place got its importance because Lord Subrahmanya lived there. (Sloka 76, Chapter 84, Vana Parva, M.D.)

BHĀRJARI. A daughter of Dakṣa-prajāpati, she prajāpati, at one stage beguished sixty girls of Vairātī and gave them to Kaśyapa, who distributed them among several Devas. Bhāru was the woman so given to the Viśvādevatās. (Harī Vamā, Chapter 3).

BHARUKA. A king of the Solar dynasty. He was the son of Sudena and father of Bhāhu. (Navamā, Skanda, Bhāravāya).

BHIKUKKASSA (M). A village of ancient India. Śrīdass lived there. At that time of the Kajāṣyā of Dharmaputra these Śrīdass brought gifts to the king. (Chapter 51, Subhā Parva).

BHIKUKKAPPAĀDA. A particular kind of bird found in the Kingdom called Cittākā-apuvarga. These birds carry their strong beak carps in their caves and eat them. (Bhābra Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 12).

BHIKYRA. Wife. Bhāsana points out the sanctified importance of Bhāryā (wife) as follows:—
Without her even, the palace will prove itself to be just a forest. She will be a great support (to the husband) in the matter of dharma (duties) artha (wealth) and kāma (enjoyment of material comforts). (These three precede the ultimate state of Mokṣa (salvation) and the wife will be a great support in fulfilling the conditions during the last three stages.) While on tour in foreign places she will remain faithful to him and instil confidence in him. Bhāryā is great wealth to man.
In his forlorn hour on earth the wife is of great help to man. To him, who is suffering from diseases and is otherwise in distress there is no remedy (medicine) like a good wife. There is no relative like a wife. In the matter of practising dharma there is no other support to match the wife. If one has no good wife at present, a lot will be driven to the forest; the home will be like a forest. (Śānta Parva, Chapter 144).

BHĀSA. A very prominent dramaticist in Sanskrit. As Bāna and Kālidāsa have noticed him in their works, it may safely be assumed that Bhāsa lived in an earlier period. Since Prathmā nātaka and Abhiśeka nātaka, which are universally admitted to have been composed by Bhāsa, depend for their themes on the Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, it is clear that Bhāsa lived after Vālmiki. Kālidāsa's period has not yet been fixed beyond doubt. It is almost settled that Bāga lived sometime between the sixth and seventh centuries A.D. Prof. Keith has been of the view that Vālmiki lived before the 4th century B.C. In the light of all such factors it could be presumed that Bhāsa lived in the period between the 4th century B.C. and 6th century A.D.

Though Bhāsa has so many glories to his credit he does not fully match Kālidāsa, and this might have been the reason why Indians did almost forget Bhāsa with the advent of Kālidāsa on the literary arena.

We are not in a position to name with unerring definiteness the works of Bhāsa. The general belief is that he has written nearly twenty three dramas. In 1922, Pandit Gaṇapati Śāstri unearthed from various sources thirteen dramas of Bhāsa. Three of them, viz. Pratibhāya-gandharvāyaṇa, Svapnavāsavadatta and Avimāraṇa owe their themes to the Brhatkāthā, while Pratimā nātaka and Abhiśeka nātaka have Rāmāyaṇa as their basic inspiration. Out of the eight remaining dramas six, viz. Madhyama vyāvāya, Paścātāra, Dātvāya, Dāttagāhorācaka, Karpābhāra and Uruḥbhalga owe their themes to the Mahābhārata, while the last two dramas, Bāhācārita and Cārūdattā are dependent for their themes on anecdotes about Śrī Keśasarṣaṇa and on vāka stories.

Though Dr. Gaṇapati Śāstri has strongly contended that all the above thirteen dramas were written by Bhāsa himself, his view has not yet received universal acceptance. Whatever that be, it is an admitted fact that Svapnavāsavadatta is by far the best among the thirteen dramas. It is a continuation of the story of Pratibhāya-gandharvāyaṇa. The wedding of king Udayāna and Vasavadatta is the subject matter of Svapnavāsavadatta. With his killing of the Rākṣasa 'Avi' the Sauvīra king comes to be known as Avimāraṇa, and Avimāraṇa's falling in love with Kuraṇi, daughter of Kuntībhūja forms the theme of the drama, Avimāraṇa. In Pratimā nātaka it is told the story narrated in Rāmāyaṇa from Ayodhyā-kānda to Paṭākābhāṣa. Abhiśeaka nātaka codifies the stories in the Kiṣkindhā Kānda and Sundara Kānda of the Rāmāyaṇa and describes the coronations of Sugrīva and of Śrī Rāma. Though the characters in Paścātāra are borrowed from Mahābhārata the story is entirely Bhāsa's. Madhyama vyāvāya, Dātvāya, Dāttagāhorācaka, Karpābhāra and Uruḥbhalga are one act plays. These five plays have as their basis some of the anecdotes in the Mahābhārata. In Cārūdattā is treated the love story of Cārūdattā and Vasantisena.

Indispensable evidence is still lacking to credit Bhāsa with the authorship of all the thirteen plays referred to above.

BHĀŚAS. (See Bhāsi).

BHĀŚAKARNA. A military captain of Rāvaṇa. Hanumān killed him in fight. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kānda 46, 47).

BHĀSI. Daughter of Tāmrā, Dakṣa's daughter. Kaśyapa prajāpati married the following daughters of Dakṣa: Aṣṭotri, Diti, Danu, Kušā, Tāmrā, Krodhaavati, Manu and Anāla. Tāmrā had five daughters. Bhāsi, Śvēnu, Bhūţarājī and Śukil. And, the sons of Bhāsi are the Deva sect called the Bhāsas. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kānda, Canto 14).
BHÅSKARA. One of the Dvådaśådityas born of Kaśyapa and Aparajita. [Anuśåstra I, arca, Verse 150].

BHÅSKARA-CARYA. A master astronomer of ancient India. He was the title of the author of the text, who is the narrator of ancient experts, that the earth is round in shape.

BHÅSKARI. An old maharshi of India. He accompanied the Bha∫a who visited Bhasa on his bed of arrows. [Sānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 12].

BHASMA. (Sacred ash). To know a story about the greatness of Bhasa see under the word Durjaya.

BHASMASURA. A demon. There is a mention about this demon in any of the Sanskrit purånas but ‘Sivallåmåra’ in Maråathi contains the following story about him.

Bhasmåsura was born of the Bha∫a dust (ashes) on the body of Siva. Pleased at the great devotion of the demon towards him Siva asked him to name any boon which he wanted. Bhasmåsura said that he wanted the power to burn to ashes anybody on whose head he placed his hand. Bhasmåsura became arrogant with the boon and he became a nightmare to the whole world. Then Mahåbhåvåpu appeared before him in the form of Mahå, an attractive dancer and alluring him by her charm started on a dance called Måukanåtya. During the course of this dance Bhasmåsura was forced to place his hand on his own head and the moment his head touched his hand he was burnt to ashes.

BHÅSVÅRA. One of the two attendants presented by Śrīra to Subrahmaṇya; the other was named Subhå- råja. [Sānti Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 31].

BHÅTÅNÅRÅYAŚA. A sanskrit poet who flourished nearly about A.D. 700. Våcyamåhåra, a drama in six acts is the only performance of him. The poem of Bhasmåsura in this book has not been found out yet. Contesting the dhvanivåda (the rhetorical theory that in poetry suggested or implied meaning is superior to the explicit meaning) of Ånandavardhanaçåryya, he established the rasåvåda (that sentiment is supreme in poetry). Ahbhåjavåpuna also has supported the rasåvåda. Hence it may be inferred that Bha∫jana∫yaka lived in the period after Ånandavardhana and anterior to Ahbhåjavåpuna. Bha∫jana∫yaka’s theory is that Abhidhå, Bha∫javåtavåra and Bha∫jåkaråvåra should be the three excellences of good poetry.

BHÅTÅTI. A sanskrit poet who lived in the 7th century A.D. His most important composition is the Mahå- kåvyå; Råjåmunåmåsi which became very popular and famous by the name Bha∫jika∫yåya. This mahåkåvyå deals with the story of Råmåya∫a in its twentytwo Kågåś (cantos). The kåvyå is believed to have been composed at Valabhi in obedience to the request of King śrīdhårasena.

BHÅUMA I. The fourteen Manu. In the time of this Manu, the person called Suci will be Indra. Under his control there will be five groups of Devas. These groups are called Cåkåså, Përvitras, Kåni∫has, Bhråjkås and Våpåvårdhadhås. The Saptåstis (seven sages) of that Manvantara are Aguhåhu, Śuci, Sukra, Mågådha, Agnidhå, Yukta∫ and Jita. At that time, the sons of Manu who will be protecting the earth will be Ur, ga∫hårabuddhi and other Kings. [Vi∫gu Purå∫a, Chapter 3].

BHÅUMA II. Another name of Naråkåṣu. (See the word Naråkå∫a). Another name of Naråkåṣu. (See the word Naråkå∫a).

BHÅUMA III. A Råkå∫sa born to Si∫måkå by Våpårâcåti. Paruså-Råma killed him. [Brahåmå∫a—3-6-18-22].

BHÅUTYA. See the word Marvåntåra.

BHÅVA I. One of the eleven Rudras. He was the son of Śiva and grandson of Brahma. [Chapter 66, Ådi Parva, M.B.].

BHÅVA II. A sàntåna Våyvådeva. [Chapter 60, Ådi Parva, M.B.].

BHÅVA III. One of the sons born to Ka∫yopa of Sura- bhi.

BHÅVA (M I). A famous forest mentioned in the Purånas. Bhåva was near the Våmåmanda mountain, which was close to Dåvåkåkå. [Såhå Parva, Chapter 38].

BHÅVA. One of the twelve Devas born to Bhrågvåru∫ Rå∫ of his wife Dїvåyå.

BHÅVÅBHÅTI. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 7th century A.D. His important works are the three dramas, Målåmådåha, Målahåvåråcåati and Ðåtåråmåcåati. Bhåvåbhåti was a brahmin of the Ka∫yopa- gosa. He was the son of one Ni∫kåkå and one Jåtmåkarå. He was a great devotee of Śiva and he got his name Bhåvåbhåti later because of this. His original name was Ni∫kåkå. Bhåvåbhåti was born in Padma- pura in the state of Vådåbå. But Bhåvåbhåti spent most of his life in the palace of Yåṣådhåmårå, king of Kanåså.

Bhåvåbhåti’s first drama is believed to be Mahåvår- åcåati. There are seven acts in this. The theme is based on the story of Śrī Råma. But there are some variations from the original Råmåya∫a in this drama. Bhåvåbhåti states that even at the time of the svayamvara of Såtå, Råvåga was a suitor. There is an opinion among certain critics that Bhåvåbhåti did write only up to the 6th act in this drama. The rest was written by another poet named Subrahmanya. Målåmådåha is a drama of ten acts. It is a love-story of Målåti and Mådåha. Målåti was the daughter of the minister of Ujåjåyå and Mådåha was the son of the minister of Vådåbå. It was while Mådåha was having his education in Ujåjåyå that he came to love Målåti. It was Kåmåndåki who was a classmate of both the ministers and who became a sanyåskåtri later who pulls the string of this love story. The king of Ujåjåyå wanted Målåti to marry Nåndåna, a friend of his. But Målåti did not love him. Yet afraid of getting the displeasure of the king, Målåti’s father decided to give her in marriage to Nåndåna. In despair Mådåha was about to commit suicide when from the temple nearby Mådåha heard an agonised weeping. He rushed to the site of the sound and found to his bewilderment the gruesome sight of Målåti being dragged for sacrifice by a sorceress named Kapålåkåndå∫ålå helped by her guru Aghåråga∫ånå. Mådåha killed Aghåråga∫ånå and saved Målåti. Disappointed Kapålåkåndå∫ålå swore that she would seek revenge on Mådåha and disappeared. Målåti went back to her parents. Her elder sister of Nåndåna and Måkåranda, a friend of Mådåha became lovers. Once Mådåyanåkå∫å was attacked by a tiger in a śiva temple and Måkåranda saved her from the wild beast, and they became lovers thereafter. The proposal to give Mālāti in marriage to Nandana was still pending. The day was fixed and a day before that by a clever ruse played by the keen-witted Kāmaṇṭakī Mālāti and Mādhava eloped together. Mākāranda, friend of Mādhava, was disguised and dressed in bridal robes and Nandana little suspecting the trick played on him married the substitute. Before they went to the bridal chamber for the night Nandana’s sister came to see her new sister-in-law and the moment she put her eyes on her she understood who it was and that night they also eloped. Thus poor Nandana was left alone.

Kapālakundalī by her sorcery separated Mālāti from Mādhava but luckily Sudārśana, a disciple of Kāmaṇṭakī saved her from Kapālakundalī. Later Mālāti married Mādhava with the permission of the King. This is the story of Mālāti-Mādhava. Uttarakāmaratna is a play of seven acts. The theme is the story of Rāma after his return to Ayodhya after the exile. It begins with the renunciation of Sītā by Rāma and ends with the vanishing of Sītā. All these three dramas used to be enacted during the festival of Koliṇḍaṇātha at Ujjayini. The predominant emotion in Mahāvīranarasi is Vīra, in Mahādevamādhava, Śṛūgāra and in Uttarakāmaratna Kāruṇaya. In expressing and elaborating the emotion of Kāruṇa Bhavabhūti excels Kālidāsa. The one draw-back which keeps him second to Kālidāsa is his lack of humour and wit. The sanskrit poet Dhanaṭapī in his book ‘Tikakamāda’ speaks about Bhavabhūti thus:

Spāṣṭrām utra mātra
Padamāyasya pravartita
Nājakesa nājastivra
Bhāratī Bhavabhūtinā //

BHAVAYA. A follower of Skandadeva. (Chapter 45, Sālady Parva).

HAVANMĀNYA. A king of Pūruvānē. He had five sons: Bhraṭakṛṣṇa, Nara, Garga, Maṇḍāvīrya and Jaya. (Chapter 19, Anūta 4, Vīru Parāṇa).

BHAVANIKĀ. A companion of princess Mrgaṅkāvatī. (See Śrīdravata).

BHAVATI. The word prescribed by Manus to be used while addressing women. Not all women should be addressed like that. All women are not your relatives and the wives of others should be addressed using any one of the following words: Bhavati, Subhagā or Bhavāni.

arapantu tu ya stri syād asaṃbaddhā ca yonītaḥ
Tam bṛyād bhavānyeyam Subhagā bhavati t. (a).

(Maṇuśrut, Chapter 2).

BHAYAVAYA. A muni, whose glory is sung in the Rygveda. He married Romā, daughter of Bhṛṣṭapun. Once she approached her husband with the request for coalition, and the husband laughed at her. (Rygveda, Maṇḍūkā 19, Anuvākā 19, Śrīkta 127).

BHAVIN. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā. (Sālady Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 11).

BHAVISYA PURĀṆA. This purāṇa contains the instructions given by the god Śrīsya to Manu. There are about fourteen thousand books in this purāṇa and they deal with almost all subjects on earth including such important ones like, Śṛīti (creation), Kālaṇa (time), Garbhaḍāna (conception), Godāna (gift of cows), Ātralamadharmas (duities of a hermit) Līṅga Sāstra (science of sex), Viṣachitā (treatment of poisoning) and Āyurveda (medical science). (Chapter 272, Agni Purāṇa).

BHAYVI YĀRĀMAYA. The part after Uttarārāmāya. Uttarārāmāya states about Bhavivāyāmaya being sung by Kuśa and Lava in the presence of Śrī Rāma.

BHĀVUKA. A king of the solar dynasty. He was the son of Raviya and father of Cakrodhāta. (Bhāgvatav, Navama Skandha).

BHAYA I. A son of Dhrūva. He got his wife Śambhu two sons, Śrīpi and Bhaviy. (Chapter 13, Anūta 1, Vīru Parāṇa).

BHAYA II. A clan of devas in Raivatamanvantara. Parimiti, Priyāntīścaya, Mātu, Māna, Vasticata, Vījaya, Sūjaya and Syoda are some of the prominent devas of the clan. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 2.36, 71-72).

BHAYA III. One of the Saptarṣis (seven sacred sants) of Daksāṣavaṁya Manvantara.

BHAYA. A demoness, sister of Kāla who presides over the lord of death. She was married to his son of Brahmin and brother of Prahlāda, Vidyutāṣa was their son and he married Silakṣaṇā, daughter of Sunḍhya. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

BHAYA (M). Hītra is the wife of Adharma. They got a son named Ānra and a daughter named Nikṛti. From them were born Bhaya, Naraka, Mayā and Vedanā. Of these Mayā produced Mṛtyu, destroyer of matter. Vedanā got her husband Raivava son named Dvākha. From Mṛtyu were born Vyādhi, Jāra, Soka, Trīpaṇ and Krodha. (Chapter 20, Agni Purāṇa). Another version about the birth of Bhaya is found in Slokā 54, Chapter 66 of Ādi Parva, M.B. Adharma married Nikṛti and to them were born Bhaya, Mahābhaya and Mṛtyu, three sons of demoniac disposition. These three sons led a sinful life.

BHAYANKARA I. A prince of the country of Sauvira. He was a dependant of Jayadratha. It was this Bhayankara who followed Jayadratha with his flag when he was trying to kidnap Pāṇḍūrī. Arjuna killed him. (Chapter 253 and 271, Vana Parva, M.B.).

BHAYANKARA II. A saṅkīta Visvadeva. (Chapter 91, Anūṭā Parva, M.B.).

BHAYANKARI. A follower of Subrahmanyā. (Slokā 5, Chapter 46, Sālady Parva, M.B.).

BHEDI. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā. (M.B. Sālady Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 13).

BHELA. A disciple of Puruvavasā Atreyas who was an Āyurveda acarya. He was a contemporary of Agnivesa and has composed a work on Āyurveda, entitled ‘Bhelavali’.

BHERISVATĀ. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā. (M.B. Sālady Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 26).

BHĪMA. Bhūmasena, one of the five Pāṇḍavas. (1) Genealogy. (See genealogy of Arjuna).

2) Birth and childhood. King Vidvratārya of Candra vamsa (lunar dynasty) had two sons called Bhṛṣṭapun and Pañch. The elder brothers (Dury̤dhana etc.) were sons born to Dury̤dhra of his wife Gāndā, and the captives Dharmapatra, Arjuna, Nakula, Sahadeva and Pāñch only...
Pândavas were the sons of Pându and his wives Kunti and Márî. Dharmaputra, Bhima and Arjuna were the sons of Kunti, and Nakula and Sahadeva of Márî.

Kunti directed a mantra gifted to her by Durvûsas towards Vayûbhagavan (the wind-god) and the result was the birth of Bhima. Hence he is called Vayû-putra (son of the wind-god). At the time of his birth a celestial voice announced that the boy would grow up to be the strongest among the strong. (Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 3). On the tenth day after birth the child Bhima fell from his mother’s lap on rock. Bhima was not injured in any manner by that fall, although it crushed the rock into power. (This story is told in the southern texts of the Mahâbhârata in Chapter 132 of Adi Parva).

The naming ceremony of the child was performed by the Maharâjas, who stayed at Satasrajra. Kalyâpa Mahâraja, family priest of Vasudeva performed the ceremonies like wearing of the sacred thread. Bhima learned fighting with the gâda (club or mace) from Suka, the famous Rajâraja.

The Kauravaas and the Pândavas spent their childhood in Hastinapura. Drûnâcarya taught them fighting with weapons. The Kauravaas and the Pándavas often engaged themselves in children’s games. In all such games Bhima used to hurt and defeat the Kauravaas, and to this fact the unending hatred of the Kauravaas towards Bhima owed its origin. Once they administered poison to Bhima who fell down unconscious, and then they threw him into the depths of the Gaûgâ (Ganges). Going deeper and deeper in the waters Bhima, at last, reached the Nâgâlokâ, where the nágas (serpents) bit him which neutralized the effects of the poison in his body. Then he got acquainted with a nágâ called Arya, who introduced him to Vasûki, king of the nágas, and Vasûki presented him with much wealth and other costly gems. But, what use was all this wealth to Bhima? Then Vasûki agreed to give him a divine drink, which would give the user of it the strength and elephantine strength drained at the draught eight potfuls of that divine drink, and thus he became tremendously strong. But, he had to wait in Nâgâlokâ for eight days so that the drink might be thoroughly assimilated, and on the ninth day the nágas saw him off in all pomp and splendour. Bhima returned to his mother and brothers and consoled them, who were terribly anxious at his absence.

When the training of the princes in the use of weapons was over a competition or test was conducted. Durvûdhana and Bhima entered into a ‘club-fight’, and when Kûrça tried to intervene in the fight his nobility was questioned by Bhima. Durvûdhana then insulted Bhima. Arjuna agreed to present King Drupada before Drûnâcarya as gurû-daksîna to him. In the fierce war the Pándavas fought with Drupada, Bhima annihilated the elephant division of the latter’s army. And, afterwards Bhima underwent higher training in club-war at the hands of Balabhadrarûma. (Adi Parva, Chapter 136, Verse 4).

3) The Pándavas left Hastinapura. As enmity between the Kauravaas and the Pándavas began growing stronger and stronger, Durvûdhana, with his father’s permission, removed the Pándavas to Vârañjâvata and settled them there. They were put up there in a palace specially made of lac. The Pándavas divined the secret of it and escaped from the fire, when the palace was set fire to. (Verse 10, Chapter 147 of the Adi Parva states that it was Bhima, who set fire to the palace. Escaping thus through a tunnel the Pándavas travelled a great distance in the forest. Kunti and four of her sons got tired by the exertions of the travel and were forced to sit down for rest on the way. Bhima continued the journey carrying the mother and his four brothers on his shoulders. With their entry into Hiduñâba forest the weakness left them, and they became their former selves.

4) Hiduñâba killed. Kunti-devi and four sons slept under the shade of a tree at dusk, and Bhima kept guard over them. There dwelt in the forest a Rûkṣas called Hiduñâba with his sister, Hiduñâba. Hiduñâba looked around that particular day from the top of a tree, and detecting Bhima mouth watered. He deputed Hiduñâba to bring Bhima over to him. Hiduñâba approached Bhima, whose fine figure kindled feelings of love in her. She desired to have him as husband. Hiduñâba having not returned even after a long time Hiduñâba went over to the spot, and there finding Hiduñâba in love talks with Bhima he got terribly angry. He wanted to kill Hiduñâba. Bhima, who could not suffer the killing of a woman in his presence rushed against Hiduñâba. The noise of the fight awakened the other Pándavas from sleep, and at the instance of the Kauravaas Bhima killed Hiduñâba. Thus rendered helpless and forlorn Hiduñâba again craved Bhima for love. On the suggestion of Kunti, whose heart melted at the sight of Hiduñâba’s helplessness, Bhima took her as his wife. But, one condition was stipulated for their enjoying the honey-moon. The condition was that they might enjoy honey-moon, from dawn to dusk, in the sky and on mountain tops. Hiduñâba, who was endowed with magic powers carrying Bhima with her. And, after dusk Bhima was to be returned to Kunti. Accordingly Bhima and Hiduñâba spent one year, and to them was born a son called Ghaûtakara. Promising that he shall return when wanted, Ghaûtakara went into the forest. The Pándavas also left for the village called Ekakkâra. (Adi Parva, Chapters 147-154).

5) Killing of Baka and the wedding of Pâñcali. While at Ekakkâra Bhima killed the Rûkṣas called Baka and freed the people of the village from their distress. Afterwards the Pándavas attended the Svañâvrama (Tree choice of the husband by woman) of Pâñcali, who became their wife. There Bhima defeated Sâla in fight. And, the Pándavas duly returned to Hastinapura. (For details see Baka, Pâñcali and Arjuna).

6) Again to forest. On their return to Hastinapura the Pándavas took their residence in the palace built by Maya. There Maya presented a magnificent club to Bhima. (Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 18). It was Sri Kûra, lord of Dvárakâ who served as the right hand of the Pándavas. Jàrâsandha, who was then King of Magadhâa fought with Kûra eighteen times and got defeated. Yet he did not yield, and at last Kûra decided to do away with him. Kûra, Arjuna and Bhima, in disguise, set out for Magadhâa. They entered Jàrâsandha’s palace and challenged him to a duel. Bhima and Jàrâsandha clashed, and at the instance of Kûra Bhima rent the latter in two and threw him on the ground. Though Jàrâsandha was alive again, Bhima rent him in two and threw away the two parts to two places. (M. H. Sabha Purva, Southern Text, Chapter 24). The main impediments and threats in their way thus having been removed, Dharmaputra decided to perform Rāja-Yāga. Bhima was deputed to conquer all the kingdoms in the eastern part of India. Bhima achieved the object and returned with great wealth to Indraprastha. Though Bhima got ready to kill Śūpāśāṇa, who alone refused to acknowledge the sovereignty of Yudhishthira, he also yielded to the tactful advice of Bhishma. The Rāja-Yāga Yajña went off quite successfully. It was Bhima, who, after the Yajña was over, took Bhishma and Yudhishthira to Hastinapura. Afterwards, in the contest in the game of dice played between Dharmaputra and Duryodhana, the Pāṇḍavas lost everything. The Kauravas, anxious to Pāṇcilī into the assembly hall and attempted to strip her naked in public. Bhima who got enraged at this shouted that the hands of Yudhishthira who played dice should be burnt in fire. (Adi Purva, Chapter 68, Verse 5). And, Bhima took then and there the terrible pledge that he would, with his hands stained by blood from the chest of Dūsāsana, who tried to rip Pāṇcilī naked, that he would fight ten times as much with the scull. He also swore that he would break the thigh of Duryodhana. In uncontrollable rage Bhima shouted that he would turn into ashes all those who took part in the game of dice. Bhima took also the vow that all the Kauravas would be killed.

According to the terms and conditions laid down with regard to the contest in the game of dice the Pāṇḍavas went into the Kāṃkṣa forest to live there for twelve years and then to live incognito for one year. 7) Life in forest and life incognito. There lived in Kāṃkṣa forest a Rākṣasa called Kīrmīra, brother of Bāla, whom Bhima had killed on an earlier occasion. Kīrmīra, who was awaiting an opportunity to avenge the murder of his brother, now dashed with Bhima in the forest. Bhima was very angry and30 east dropped near Pāṇcilī a Saugandhika flower. And, Bhima set out in the north-east direction to fetch Saugandhika flowers for Pāṇcilī, who felt a special liking for them.

Walking and walking Bhima entered Kāditavana. Hanumān, his skin wrinkled and hair grey due to old age, was living in this forest. He obstructed the path of Bhima. Hanumān awoke from sleep and raised his tail with a terrific sound. Bhima walked up to the place whence the sound was heard. In the clash that ensued between Hanumān and Bhima the former came out victorious. Hanumān, however, congratulated Bhima and directed him on the path to the saugandhika forest.

Bhimasena reached the saugandhika forest, which was being guarded by the Rākṣasas called Krodhavāsas. Bhima overcame them, collected the flowers and returning with them stayed in the Badarikāśrama with his brothers and Pāṇcilī. Here it was that Bhima killed Jātāsura. (For details see Jātāsura II).

Four years were thus spent; yet Arjuna had not returned. The Pāṇḍavas continued their journey northward. On the 17th day of that month, Bhima and the other two Pāṇḍavas crossed the Himālayas. They were duly received by the maharṣis, who directed them in their onward journey. Continuing the journey they reached the Aśrama of Arajīvena whence, after crossing various mountain peaks and still walking they reached Kubera's Alakāpurī when a Yakṣa called Manimāna obstructed their further progress. Bhima killed Manimāna and the other Yakṣas who rushed to his support. Finally Kubera himself saw Bhima and blessed the Pāṇḍavas.

While they were returning from Kubera's palace Bhima was caught by a python. But, it was really Nahusa transformed into a python on account of a curse. Bhima killed it and it assumed its original form as Nahusa. (See Agastya, Para 8). By this time Arjuna had obtained Pārūpatāstra from Śiva and he duly returned to his brothers, and the Pāṇḍavas continued their journey in the forest.

Meantime, knowing that the Pāṇḍavas were put up in Dvaitavana, the Kauravas started for their dwelling place in a procession led by Duryodhana with the army and camped nearly two furlongs away from a pool in Dvaitavana. While thus camping Duryodhana clashed with a Gandharva called Citraesāna, who with a number of his comrades came to the pool for water games, and in the encounter the latter made Duryodhana prisoner. Bhīmāsena who witnessed the scene very much laughed at Duryodhana. But, Arjuna intervened and set free Duryodhana and others.

The Pāṇḍavas again entered the Kāṃkṣa forest, and it was at that time that Jayadratha abducted Pāṇcilī. Bhima killed Kotikāsya who acted on behalf of Jayadratha. (See Kotikāsya). Moreover Bhima captured Jayadratha, got his head shaved clean and declared that he was a slave of Dharmaputra. It was here at Dvaitavana that Dharmadeva tested the Pāṇḍavas, who had gone to a nearby pool to fetch water; all the Pāṇḍavas except Yudhishthira died at the pool, but they were brought back to life again. (See Dharmapura, Para 7).

1. When enraged, Hanumān's tail was as high as the flag of Indra, and produced a thunderous sound. As though the mountain were rumbling through their mouth, the sound produced by the excited elephants the sound reverberated all around the mountains. In the middle of Kadālitavana, on a mighty rock, Bhima saw Hanumān.
twelve years' forest-life of the Pāṇḍavas now came to an end. According to the advice of Dharmādeva the Pāṇḍavas selected the Virāṭa palace for their life incognito, Bhīmasena assuming the name Vallava (Valala). And, here Bhīma killed in a duel Jitumā, the pugilist. (See Jitumā II). It was also here that Bhīma killed Kīcaka and the Upākīcaka. (See Kīcaka). On another occasion, at the instance of Yuddhishtira Bhīma took Sudharmā, King of Daśārtha to Yuddhishtira captive; but he was later set free. Next year the Pāṇḍavas defeated Duryodhana in the fight in connection with the theft of the cows of the Virāṭa King, and then they declared that their forest life and life incognito were over.

8) Bhīma in the great war. Even after the return of the Pāṇḍavas after the forest life and life incognito the Kauravas refused to give them half of the kingdom. So, both the parties began preparations for war. Given hereunder is the main incident relating to Bhīma from this period to the Svaragdārāha (going to Heaven) of the Pāṇḍavas after relinquishing the kingdom in favour of Parīkṣu, including their victory in war and the administration of the country.

(1) Sañjaya described to Dṛḍharaśtra the prowess and achievements of Bhīma. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 50).
(2) Śrī Krṣṇa before leaving for the Kaurava assembly for compromise talks asked for the views of Bhīma about the whole problem, and Bhīma opined that peace was preferable to war. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74).
(3) When Śrī Krṣṇa admonished Bhīma he opted for war and waxed eloquent about his heroism and prowess. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 76).
(4) Bhīma wanted Śikhaṅgu to be appointed chief of the army. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 161).
(5) Bhīma sent back with an insulting reply Ulikka, who was sent by Duryodhana to the Pāṇḍavas with a message. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 163).
(6) Bhīma questioned Dharmaputra who, when the armies had taken position on opposite sides, went on foot to the Kaurava assembly without bow and arrows. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 17).
(7) The world shuddered at the war cry of Bhīma. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 8).

(87) Bhima made Yudhīśṭhīra to retract from his intention to renounce the world and become a Sanyāśīn. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 19).

(88) Yudhīśṭhīra installed Bhima, as crown prince. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 9).

(89) Yudhīśṭhīra settled Bhima down in the palace of Durvodyana killed in war. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 6).

(90) As directed by Vyāsa, Nakula and Sahadeva were put in charge of protecting the Kingdom. (Avadhūda Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 19).

(91) It was Bhima who, along with the brahmins, measured the yājñabhāmbā, in connection with Yudhi-Bhima, son of King Pariksit and brother of Janamejaya. (Âdi Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 1). It was this Bhima who, at the yajña conducted at Kurukṣetra, attacked, without reason, the son of Sarama, a dog of the Devas.

Bhima III. A Deva gandharva delivered by Muni, the wife of Kaśyapa prajāpati. (Âdi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 42). He took part in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Âdi parva, Chapter 122, Verse 53).

Bhima IV. Yet another Bhima, grandson of King Avikrita of the Lunar dynasty and son of Pariksit is mentioned in Chapters 94 and 95 of Âdi Parva. His mother was Sayasā. He married Kumārī, daughter of Keksya Rāja and they had a son called Pratyāravas.

Bhima V. Father of Dīvedaisa, king of Kāśī. (Udyoga-parva, Chapter 117, Verse 1).

Bhima VI. A Śūdra who attained Svarga as on his head fell water with which the feet of a brahmīn was washed. The following story about him occurs on page 619 of the Padmapurāṇa.

In the dvāpara yuga there lived a Śūdra called Bhima, who engaged himself in the profession of Vaiśya. An outcaste from practices pertaining to Śūdras he enjoyed life with a Vaiśya woman. He was a terrible fellow, who had killed many brahmīns, and also enjoyed the wives of many, elderly people including his teachers. He was a robber as well. Once he went to a brahmīn house, and with the object of robbing his wealth spoke to him in a pathetic tone as follows:—"Respected sir, you will please listen to my grievance. You appear to be kind-hearted. Please give me some rice, or else I will die this very moment.

Brahmin: "Oh hungry guest! There is no one here to cook food. I shall give you daily two meas, which you may cook yourself. I have neither father, mother, son, brothers, wife nor any other relatives. All of them are dead and gone. The unfortunate fellow that I am, I am staying here alone. No servants or others here."

Bhima: "Oh revered brahmīn! I too am a lonely person. I shall live here for ever serving you. I am a Śūdra."

These words of Bhima pleased the brahmīn so much that he cooked some food quickly and served the Śūdra with it. He stayed with the brahmīn for that day onwards. His idea was to rob the brahmīn of his wealth at some convenient time and get away. But, since he used to pour on his head everyday the water with which the brahmīn's feet were washed he got redemption from all his sins.

One night a thief got into the brahmīn's room to steal his earnings. Seeing the thief Bhima rushed at him to give him a good thrashing. But, the thief, in the twinkling of an eye, cut off Bhima's head and escaped from the scene. At once there came down the attendants of lord Viṣṇu to lead Bhima to Vaikuntha. A divine chariot drawn by Ṛṣaḥjanasas (swans) also came down. Bhima got into the chariot and reached the abode of Viṣṇu.

Bhima VII. Father of Damayanti. (See Damayantī).

Bhima VIII. One of the hundred sons of Dhitrārāma. He was killed by Bhima, one of the Pandavas. (Âdi parva, Chapter 64, Verse 86).

Bhima IX. Verse 17, Chapter 94 of Âdi Parva. Mentions about one Bhima born to King Ithin of his wife Rathandhāri. This Bhima had four brothers, viz., Duryaṁta, Śūra, Parvāsu and Vasu.
BHIMA X. One of the five attendants given to Subrahmanyam by the Deva called Ananta Purusha, Vaṣa, Dahati and Daḥana were the other four. (Sāya Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 34).

BHIMA XI. A king of ancient time. He sits in yama’s assembly worshipping yama. There are hundred kings in yama’s assembly, having the name Bhima. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 29). It is on account of the presence of the hundred Bhimas that the difficulties of the people are lifted. (Vana Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 11). These one hundred persons were kings in ancient days. Owing to several adversaries they left their kingdoms for the assembly of yama. (Sant Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 49).

BHIMA XII. A yāduva king, the father of Andhaka. This Bhima was a contemporary of Śrī Rama. He conquered Madhavapura founded by Satrughna after killing the Daitya called Madhu. (Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 13).

BHIMA XIII. A friend of Kārvāka, king of Lanka. It was on the top of Bhima’s house that Hanumān rested for the first time after arriving at Lanka. (Vaisākha Parva, Chapter 28, Verse 1).

BHIMABALI. (Bherukalala). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra killed by Bhima. (Sāya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 14).

BHIMABALI. One of the five Viniyakas born from the asura called Pāpaśyaya. These Viniyakas cause difficulties and obstructions to the yoghis of Devata. (Vaisākha Parva, Chapter 221, Verse 12).

BHIMABHATATA. A Yāduva king, father of Bhima. The following story has reference to his past life. On the death of Sutadhara, king of Ekadavayagaram the younger of his two sons, Satyadhara drove out of the kingdom the elder brother, Sīladhara. Thus ousted from his kingdom Sīladhara did penance and got from Siva the boon that Satyadhara be killed while he himself be made a gandharva. Owing to the blessing of Siva Satyadhara died, and he was born again as a gandharva, son of Ugrabhata, king of Kātilakamara, and Sīladhara was born as Bhīmahattata, brother of Samaṛadhana. On the death of Ugrabhata Bhīmahattata, after killing Samaṛadhana avenged the throne. And, on one of these days, he was transformed into a wild elephant as the result of the curse of a yoghi. But, he remembered his previous existence, and, though turned into elephant, could speak like men. Bhīmahattata became a gandharva because he received and treated well once a traveller and related to him his (Bhīmahattata’s) own story. (Katvivāsa-gaṇa Śaṅkunata-bhaka).

BHIM JAMU. A king in ancient India. He remained in the assembly of yama serving the latter. (Sāya Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 21).

BHIMĀKA. A Rākṣas, who used to attack the kings of Kāṣaṇa and Kosalā often. Finally the above kings jointly encountered him. He was killed by King Harīvani. (Brahma Purāṇa).

BHIMARATHA I. A king of the family of Vīṣṇumātra. His father was Kṛṣṇaṇa and Dīvṛda his son. (Bhūgaga, Namārpaṇa).

BHIMARATHA II. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra killed in the war by Bhima. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 36).

BHIMARATHA III. A hero who fought on the Kaurava side. It was this Bhimāratha who stood at the centre of the gāruḍa vyahā (army formation in the form of the bird garuda, Kite) set up by Drona. (Drona Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 12). He killed Śala, the Mleccha king and a supporter of the Pāṇḍavas. (Drona Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 26). When Yuddhikaśi was king at Indraprastha Bhimāratha sat in Pāṇḍava assembly as a comrade of the Pāṇḍavas. (Sabha Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 26).

BHIMARATHI (Bhim). A river in the South exotiled in the purānas. Sons of those who bathe in this river will vanish. On its shore is a sacred place called Pândhara-pura. (Vana Parva, Chapter 98, Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9).

BHIMASARA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 99).

BHIMAVEGA. One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. (Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 99).

BHIRU. A son born to Manikadra and his wife Punnayani. (Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 99).

BHISANA. Son of Baka. From the day his father was killed by Bhima Bhīsana was impatiently waiting for revenge. When the Pāṇḍavas began the Asvamedha yajña he obstructed it at a place near Ekaśekha. Arjuna fought and killed him. (Janmāvan Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 1).

2) Birth and Boyhood. Bhīma’s name in his boyhood was Devavrata. He was the eighth son of Sāntanu, a king of the lunar dynasty and Gaṅgādevi. This boy was the human embodiment of Dyaus, one of the Aṣṭavāaus. Sāntanu’s father was the āthru of another king, Mahābhīṣaka. The story concerning this, as given in the Mañabhārata is as follows:—

King Mahābhīṣaka after his death, attained Viṣṇuloka. Once he went to visit Brahmā at Sāyaṇa. At that time Gaṅgādevī was also present in Brahmā’s assembly. In that pinus atmosphere, a gentle breeze began to blow and Gaṅgādevi’s clothes were slightly deranged. Just at that moment, Mahābhīṣaka took a stealthy glance at her and she also returned that glance. This was noted by Brahmā who turned both of them into human beings by a curse. Gaṅgādevi begged pardon and Brahmā lifted the curse and blessed her that the Aṣṭavāaus would come to the earth to be born as her sons and that afterwards she could come back to Heaven. After that Gaṅgādevi was born as a mortal woman in the world under the name Gaṅgā and she spent her days in the forests near the Gaṅgā river valleys.

In those days the ruler of the Lunar dynasty was a king named Pratīpa. Having no children, he went to the bank of the river Gaṅgā and performed tapas there. Gaṅgādevi who was moving about in the forest near by, saw the king deeply absorbed in his tapas. She approached him and sat on his right thigh. She wanted the King to be her husband. He explained to her that the right thigh is the proper seat of a daughter-in-law. and so she would become his son's wife in due course. In due course of time, Pratipa had a son, Santanu, born to him. When Santanu grew up into a young man, one day he went for a hunt to the Gangā-valley and there he met Gaṅgādevi. He fell in love with her at first sight and courted her. Gaṅgādevi agreed to become his wife on condition that he should not say anything to displease her and if she violated that condition she would leave him. The king accepted the condition and they became man and wife.

At about that time, the wife of Dyō, one of the Āstavats, happened to see the sacrificial cow of the sage Vasītṛa and wished to have it. She expressed her desire to her husband, Dyō, who, with the seven varus went and took away by force, Vasītṛa's cow. Vasītṛa in his anger cursed the Āstavats to be born as mortals. They repented and begged pardon from Vasītṛa. The sage told them that all of them would be born as the sons of Gaṅgādevi and all except Dyō, who actually stole the cow, would return to Heaven at the time of birth itself. As for Dyō, he would continue to live in the world for a long time, as an adventurous hero. Gaṅgādevi became pregnant and gave birth to her first child. She carried the child to the river Gangā and threw it into the river. Santanu who followed her up to the river bank, did not say anything against her, remembering his promise.

Seven children were born to her and she threw all of them into the river in this way. When she gave birth to the eighth child, Santanu insisted that he would not allow her to throw away that child into the river. As he had violated the condition, the angry Gaṅgādevi left the palace with her child. She named it Devavētra and brought him up in the forest. The sage Vasītṛa and Gaṅgādevi taught him all branches of knowledge. Thirty-two years later, the king went to the same forest for hunting. He saw a handsome boy stopping the flow of the river Gangā. Getting interested in the boy, the king approached him. But by that time he had disappeared. The king prayed to Gaṅgādevi to appear and he appeared. The king returned to the palace with the child. He appeared with the child and after handing over the child to him vanished. The king returned to the palace with the child. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 100).

3) The name Bṛhma. Devavētra was anointed, as heir-apparent. One day King Santanu reached the forest near the Gangā river valley, for hunting. As he was hunting, absorbed in the beauty of the forest scenery, he felt the perfume of musk filling the air in the forest. He wondered from where it could come. He went on and on trying to find out the source of this smell until he reached the cottage of a fisherman. The fisherman had a daughter named Satyavati. It was from her that the fragrance of musk spread all around. The king fell in love with her at first sight. He asked the fisherman to give the girl in marriage to him. But the brave fisherman did not yield to the king's demand immediately. He laid down several conditions, one of which was that Satyavati's son should succeed to the throne of Santanu. The king was in a fix. Devavētra was the oldest son and heir-apparent. To deny kingship to his son would be highly improper. Unable to find a solution to this difficult problem, the king returned to the palace, much depressed and gloomy. There he avoided all company and took to his bed, passing his time in sadness and solitude.

When Devavētra knew about his father's condition, he called the Munis and asked them about it. They told him everything in details. At once, without informing even his father, Devavētra went to the fisherman's cottage on the bank of the river Gangā and begged for Satyavati on behalf of his father. The fisherman repeated his former condition, Devavētra agreed that Satyavati's son shall be given the right of kingship. The fisherman pointed out that disputes were likely to arise between Devavētra's sons and Satyavati's children regarding the right of succession to the throne. At once Devavētra stood up and made a solemn pledge that he would remain a bachelor for life. The fisherman gave Satyavati to Devavētra to be taken to the King. Devavētra took her to the palace and presented her to his father. The king, when he came to know of the fact, was played by his son in the matter, rose from his bed and embraced Devavētra with tears of joy and gratitude. The gods showered flowers on the scene. Because he had taken such a solemn oath, it was declared that henceforth he would be known by the name "Bṛhma". The loving father Santanu also gave him a boon that Bṛhma would die only when he wished. (M.B., Ādi Parva, Chapter 100).

4) Affairs of the Kingdom in Crisis. Two sons named Viesitavrīya and Citrāngadā were born to Satyavati by Santanu, who died shortly afterwards. As desired by Satyavati, Bṛhma crowned the boy Citrāngadā as king. Although Citrāngadā's reign was a prosperous one, it could not last long. Once a Gandharva named Citrāngadā attacked him, but Bṛhma protected him. This conflict lasted for three years, the Gandharva Citrāngadā killed the King Citrāngadā. It was Bṛhma who performed the funeral rites of the King Citrāngadā. After that Viesitavrīya was crowned King.

It was at that time that the Śvayamvāra of the three daughters of the King of Kāśi, Ambā, Ambikā and Ambalikā, was held. Bṛhma thought that it would be good if Viesitavrīya married them. So Bṛhma attended that function. The presence of Bṛhma who was an old man, at the Śvayamvāra, frightened the girls. The other kings who were present, stopped him from entering the place, since he had taken an oath to remain a lifelong bachelor. The old Bṛhma stood up and spoke at length about the eight different forms of marriage and after defeating several kings like Śālva, he seized the three daughters of the King of Kāśi and took them with him in his chariot to Hastinapura. Preparations were made for the marriage of Vichitravirya with the three princesses. Then Ambāi approached Bhīṣma and told him that she had already dedicated her heart to the king of Śālva. Bhīṣma generously allowed her to return home. (For the rest of Ambāi's story, see the word "Ambāi"). Vichitravirya married Ambāika and Ambāikā. He ruled over the country for seven years at the end of which he died of consumption. The dynasty faced a crisis, as there was no one to succeed him. Satyavati approached Bhīṣma with a suggestion to beg children by Vichitravirya's wife. But Bhīṣma stood firmly on his solemn oath to continue as a life-long bachelor. (M.B. Adi Parva, Verse 102-104)

5) Bhīṣma's Wine-Pulling After that, Satyavati summoned Vīśa to Hastinapura and sent him to Ambāika, Ambāikā and their maid by him. Ambāika gave birth to Dīrtarāṣṭra, Ambāikā gave birth to Pāṇḍu and the maid gave birth to Vidura. They grew up and Dīrtarāṣṭra married Gandharī and Pāṇḍu married Kunīti and Mādrī. Duryodhana and his brothers were born to Dīrtarāṣṭra, while the Pāṇḍavas were born to Pāṇḍu. Pāṇḍu died at the Satāśrigā vana and Mādrī observed sati by jumping into his funeral pyre and burning herself alive. After that, the Kauravas and Pāṇḍavas who lived in the palace at Hastinapura, split up into two broods. When the palace made of lac was destroyed by fire, the Pāṇḍavas went into the forest and came back to the country after their marriage with Bhīṣma. Bhīṣma asked the sage Pulastya about the importance of pilgrimage. (Vana Parva, 82, Verse 4) bhīṣma advised Duryodhana to be on friendly terms with the Pāṇḍavas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 253, Verse 44, Verse 41).

6) He performed the death anniversary of Pāṇḍu. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 1).

7) He engaged Draupādaya to teach archery to the princes. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 130, Verse 77).

8) He burst into tears and wept bitterly on hearing that the Pāṇḍavas were burnt to death in the palace of lac and was about to offer them Jalaśaśi. Just then, Vidura came to him and secretly informed him that the Pāṇḍavas were not dead. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 149, Dākṣiṇāyana Paṭha).

9) He advised Durumadhana to give half the kingdom to the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 202).

10) He had taken part in Dharmaputra's Rājāśyā Yajña. Dharmaputra had entrusted to Bhīṣma, the arrangements for that yajña. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 6).

11) He advised Yudhishthira to give the highest place of honour in that yajña to Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 28).

12) Bhīṣma ridiculed Śītāpāla (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 33).

13) Śītāpāla insulted Bhīṣma. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 41).

14) Bhīṣma stopped Bhīṣma who rushed out to kill Śītāpāla. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 42, Verse 13).

15) It was Bhīṣma who narrated the life story of Śītāpāla. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 43).

16) In the battle against Śītāpāla, Bhīṣma selected powerful Kings to help Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Sābhā Parva, Chapter 45).

17) One among a group of Prathālī Pratāhā Pratāhā Indraprastha as their capital. In the gambling contest between Dharmaputra and Duryodhana, the Pāṇḍavas lost their kingdom and everything and so they went to the forest again. They lived for twelve years in the forest and spent one year in the palace of the King of Vṛśā. At that time the Pāṇḍavas reappeared in the battle terms with the heat of King Vṛśā. (Verse 1, Chapter 5)
(26) As desired by Duryodhana, Bhīṣma declared the Kshatriyas and Mahārathis who belonged to the Kaurava side. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 163-168).

(27) Bhīṣma described all the Mahārathis of the Pāṇḍava side to Duryodhana. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 169-172).

(28) Bhīṣma told Duryodhana that Śiṅkhāṇḍi and the Pāṇḍavas should not be killed. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 172, Verse 20).

(29) Bhīṣma offered pājā to Parāśurāma. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 123, Verse 27).

(30) Ardhī who was allowed by Bhīṣma to marry her lover, Kīrāṇā, was rejected by him and returned to Bhīṣma again. But he did not accept her. Although Parāśurāma pleaded with him on behalf of Ardhī, Bhīṣma did not marry her. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 178, Verse 32).

(31) In connection with Ambarī' case, a duel was fought on the field of Kurukṣetra between Bhīṣma and Parāśurāma. Bhīṣma started the duel after asking for the permission of Parāśurāma. Pleased with the fight, the Vasus presented to Bhīṣma the Pārvāpāna arrow. But he did not use that arrow against Parāśurāma, since the gods and Nārada prevented him from doing so. After returning the gods' gifts and Gāṇapati, Bhīṣma stopped the fight and prostrated at the feet of Parāśurāma. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 178-185).

(32) Bhīṣma narrated to Duryodhana the story of Ambarī who was re-born as Śiṅkhāṇḍi. (Udyoga Parva, Chapters 188-192).

(33) Bhīṣma himself told Duryodhana that he had the strength to annihilate all the Pāṇḍavas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 198, Verse 14).

(34) Before the beginning of the battle, Yudhīṣṭhira went to Bhīṣma and asked for his permission to start it. Bhīṣma granted him permission and blessed him. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 44).

(1) On the first day of the battle a duel took place between Bhīṣma and Arjuna. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 8).

(48) Gangādevī lamented that Śīkhanda, who was neither man nor woman, killed Bhīṣma. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 21).
(49) Vyāsa and Śrī Kṛṣṇa told Gangādevī that Bhīṣma died by Arjuna’s arrow. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 168, Verse 30).

(50) On a later occasion Vyāsa invoked into the river Gaṅgā, those who died in the battle and among them Bhīṣma was also present. (Aṣṭāvaśīka Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 7).
(51) After his death, Bhīṣma remained in Heaven as Dvārā, one of the Aṣṭāvaśīka. (Vārgāvāgaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 11).

BHOJA V

BHOJA V. A term used for greeting elders. When saluting an elderly person, the term “Bhīṣma” is used as a suffix to his name.

For example:

"Somaikāma nāma abham asmi bhīṣma"
Bhīṣma tāladān kirtayedanci
Svaya nāmābhāvidvidane
Nāmābhāvā bhīṣma bhīva hi
Mlobhīva rādhīla srāṇaḥ Ṛṣi taḥ (Manusmṛti, Chapter 2, Verse 124)

BHOGAVĀN. A mountain—Mahābhārata, Śāhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 12 says that in the course of his triumphal over-running of the eastern lands, Bhīṣma została conquered this mountain also.

BHOGAVATI I. Nāgala or Pātāla. When Sugrīva sent monkeys in all directions in search of Śītā, he gave instructions to them to go and search for her in Bhogapata. Vānuka Rāmaṇya, 41st Sarga, Kṣiṇḍhāknāḍa describes the place as the city infested with serpents (nāgas) and guarded by them. Vānuka, King of serpents, lives there.

BHOGAVATI II. Gaśgai of Pātāla. (M. B. Śāhā Parva, Dakṣinātaya Paṭha, Chapter 38).

BHOGAVATI III. A place of holy bath at Prayāga. It is better known as Vānuka tirtha. Mahābhārata Vana Parva, Chapter 83 says that a bath at this tirtha is as efficacious as an Aṣṭaṃśaḥga yajña.

BHOGAVATI IV. Another name for the river Sarasvati. (M. B. Śāhā Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 20).

BHOGAVATI V. A female attendant of Subrahmanyā. (M. B. Śāhā Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 8).

BHOJA I. A king of the ancient country named Mārtiśāvā. In Mahābhārata Ādī Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 5, we see that this king had attended the Svanayavara of Draupadi. He was slain by Abhimanyu at the battle of Kurukṣetra. (M. B. Drona Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 8).

BHOJA II. A king of Yaduvanā, Mahābhārata, Śāhā Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 79 says, that he died under the stroke of the sword of Mahārāja Uṣṇara. Bhogavanta takes its source from this king.

BHOJA III. A king who became renowned as a Sanskrit scholar. It is believed that he lived from 1018 to 1054 A.D. His capital city was Īhā. Bhogavata is credited with the authorship of two scholarly books entitled, "Sarasvatikālaghāthāraṇa" and "Śrṣikārvākṣāti". Of these, the first is a compendious volume in five chapters, dealing with the merits and defects of poetry, figures of speech, etc. Bhogavata observes that besides the four styles (in poetry) laid down by Rudrakā, there are two more styles, namely, "Avanī" and "Māgadhī".

BHOJA IV. A follower of Sūkṣa. In Rgveda, 3rd Mantra, 58th Avasvāka, 7th Sūkta we find that this Bhogavata had given help to sage Vāsishthī in performing his Aṣṭaṃśaḥga yajña.

BHOJA V. A king of Kānvakṣuṭa. Once this king Bhogavata met a woman with a fantastic shape. Her body was of human shape while her face was that of a female deer. When the king asked her about her strange shape, she related her past history as follows:—“In my previous birth, I was a female deer. On one occasion the whole of my body except my face, was plucked in a river and those parts of the body under the water were transformed into human shape. From that day, I have been changed into this form.”

On hearing her story, the king took her to the holy river and immersed her again in it. She was at once transformed into an actual woman and the king married her.

BHŌJĀ. An exquisitely beautiful virgin of the country, Sauvira, Mahābhārata Droga Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 33 says that Śāyaki abducted her and made her his wife.

BHŌJA (M). (BHŌJĀVAMSĀ). This is a branch of Yaduvamśa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 217, Verse 18).

BHŌJAKAṬA. The capital of Vidarbha. Once Saludeva, one of the Pāṇḍavas conquered this city. It was at this place that Śrī Kṛṣṇa defeated Rukmi, the brother of Rukmini at the time of Rukmini’s Svayamvara. The original name of Bhōjakaṭa was “Kuṇḍapuṭra”. (M.B. Sambhā Parva, Chapter 31 and Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158).

BHŌJIKA. A Bhāṛmanā. (See the word Pāt ālpatā).BHŌJIYA. A Bhōja princess. She was abducted by Jyāmagha of the Yādava family and married to his son, Vidarbha. (See Jyāmagha).

BHŌJĀVAMSĀ. A meaning a comic, stupid or eccentric person. Bhōsas are of eight kinds. Those who feel derided, those who bubble, those who are obstinate, sophists, those who indulge in hollow laughter, those who pretend to be blind, those who pretend to be deaf, and those who try to assert their self-importance—are the eight classes of “Bhōsas”.

BHĪRAMĀRA. A prince of the land of Sauvira. He was a comrade of Jayadratha. M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 268 describes how Bhīrama walked behind the chariot of Jayadratha with banner in his hand, when the latter abducted Pīcā, Bhīrama was killed by Arjuna.

BHĪRAMAṬ. A Rākṣaka who was the follower of Jambhāsura. As directed by Jambhāsura, he took birth in the house of Kaṟjapa to kill Gaṇeṣa. One day she treacherously poisoned sweets to Gaṇeṣa. Gaṇeṣa detected her treachery and fisted her to death. (Gaṇeṣa 2-21).

BHĪRĀSAKARNA. A Rākṣasa. He was the son of Kekamatt, by the Rākṣasa, Sūnaḷi. They had ten sons—Prahaṣa, Akampana, Viṣaka, Kalakāṃku, Dhūmāka, Daṇḍa, Suprakāśa, Saṅhārāṇa, Prākṛtva, and Bhīrāsaṅkarāṇa and four daughters—Vēkā, Puspokatā, Kaṅkasi and Kusumāṭa. (Uttara Ramāyaṇa).

BHĪRUG. 1) General. A sage, the son of Brahmā. He was the founder of Bhīruga vanas. Members of the Bhīruga vanas are called “Bhīrugavas.” Bhīrugavas has been reputed for many of its members who were Ṛṣis of great sanctity and grandeur.

2) Bīrī. A sage. “Utsangūd Nārada jājot Daṅka ‘mṛgūt iḥ svayambhūvaḥ / Prāṇāvāsī ṣaṅkāta Bhīrugavas kārakratrakatu.’”

*Bāṇaka was born from Brahmā’s skin (tvak). But in M.B. Ādi Parva, 5th Chapter, we find another version regarding his birth. In that passage we read that Bhīruga was born from “Vahum” (fire). In the light of these two statements, we may examine Bhīruga’s birth.

Bhīruga had two incarnations. The first time he was born from Brahmā’s skin. In course of time, the sage Bhīruga became famous in the Dakṣayāga, this sage was present as one of the Ṛtviks (officiating priests). On that occasion, Satidevi who was in rage and grief because her husband (Siva) was not invited to the yāga, committed suicide by jumping into the sacrificial fire. Hearing about this, Siva was enraged and the monster spirits who emerged from his matted locks caught hold of the Ṛtviks. Bhāgavata caaturthā skandha says that the Bhūtā named Naḍalīvarā, who emerged from Siva’s locks, caught hold of Bhīruga and killed him.

Therefore the Bhīruga who was born from Brahmā’s skin must be considered as having died at Dakṣayāga. Bhīruga was born again in Vaivasya Manvantara. This second birth was at the famous Brahmaṇyaśa of Varuṇa. He was reborn in Varuṇa’s son. This child who was born from Brahmā’s semen which fell in the sacrificial fire, was brought up by Varuṇa and his wife Carṣapī. Consequently Bhīruga is referred to as “Varuṇaputra” and “Carṣapūtra” in some Purāṇas. Since he was born at Varuṇa’s yāga he is sometimes called “Varuṇī Bhīruga”.

3) Bhīruga Vanaśa. (Bhīruga family). Each birth of Bhīruga gave rise to a separate family. They are given below separately—First birth: Bhīruga and his wife Khyāṭi had a daughter Lāmekī and three sons, Dhātā, Vidhātā and Kavi. Mahāmeru’s daughters, Ayāti and Niyati became the wives of Dhātā and Vidhātā, respectively. Two sons, Prāña and Mṛkṣṇa were born to those two couples. Mārkaṇḍeya was born to Mṛkṣṇa and from Mārkaṇḍeya, was born Vedācīra. Prāṇa had a son, Dyutimān who had a son Rājāvan. From that Rājāvan, Bhīruga Vanasa multiplied. The family tree of this first Bhīruga Vanasa is given below:— (See Viṣṇu purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 10).

Second Birth: The second Bhīruga Vanasa is the family which took its origin from the second birth of Bhīruga as the son of Varuṇa. Varuṇa’s son, Bhīruga married the woman, Pulomī. They had six children who were, Bhītu, Gyavana, Vajraṣṭrī, Suci, Sukra, and Savana. By his first wife Bhūthā, he had his sons, “Ekaḍāsa Rudras” (eleven Rudras) and “Rudra Pārsadās” Bhrigu set out to Devoloka. First he went to Brahma's assembly. There, in the presence of Brahma who was seated in the midst of many Munis, Bhrigu took his seat on a stool. Brahma was provoked by this act of disrespect. Bhrigu left the place without a word and went to Siva's place. Siva rose from his seat and approached him to embrace and welcome him. Bhrigu, shrank back, saying, "Do not touch me?" Siva became angry and was about to hit him with his trident when Pervati stopped him.

Bhrigu then turned his steps to Vaikuntha, the abode of Siva. There he saw Mahavishnu in a deep slumber. Seeing Mahavishnu whose task is the preservation of the world, sleeping like an irresponsible person, Bhrigu gave him a kick on his breast. Vishnu who sprang up suddenly, saw Bhrigu standing before him. He begged pardon of the sage. He declared that he would carry Bhrigu's footprint permanently on his chest as a sign of his repentance for having shown disrespect to the Maharshi. This footprint still remains on Visnu's chest and is known by the name "Srivatsa". In this way, the Munis came to the conclusion that Mahavishnu is the noblest of the Trimurtis (Bhrugava, Daśamah Skandha).

6) The origin of Bhrigu Tirtha. There is a sacred spot called "Bhrigu Tirtha" on the western side of Daśāvathāra medha. It is here that Bhrigu once offered tapas to Siva. Owing to the austerity of his tapas, his hair became matted and discoloured. His body was completely covered with earth heaped up by termites. When Siva was still not propitiated, Pervati interceded with him on behalf of Bhrigu. Siva agreed to bless Bhrigu.

Siva sent his bull to the place where Bhrigu was sitting. The bull in the course of its gambols broke up and destroyed the earthen covering on his body which was made by the termites. Bhrigu became angry and chased the bull. But he was stunned by the sight of the bull rising up to heaven through the air. A divine light spread there. Siva appeared before him and asked him what boon he wanted. Bhrigu prayed that the place where he was doing tapas should become a holy spot. Siva granted his prayer and from that day, the place became famous under the name "Bhrigu Tirtha".

1) Devi Bhāgavata, Saatmika Skandha says that Bhrigu had married two daughters of Daksha. Mahabhirathā Anusāsana Parva Chapter 85, Verse 127 says that Bhrigu had seven sons, namely Ceyava Vajrasana, Suci, Aurva, Sukra, Taranva, and Vaṃsana.
Brahmā and other Devas and the Kinnaras still worship this Bhṛgu Tirtha. All sin is removed by a mere sight of this sacred Tirtha. Those who bathe in the holy water of this place attain Heaven and they will not be born again. Even, by hearing about the greatness and glory of this Bhṛgu Tirtha, one will be cleared of all sins and find an easy way to Śivaloka. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 20).

7. Other details. (1) It was Bhṛgu who gave the boon for having progeny to Sagar, King of the solar dynasty. Sagar, with his two wives, Ketini and Sumati, performed tapas at Bṛgu prasāvana in the Himalayas. After a hundred years, Bhṛgu, who was pleased, blessed the king that he would have numerous children by one wife and one son who would be progenitor of a vamśa, by the other wife. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāhikāṇḍa, 38th Sarga).

(2) Once when some Munis went to Dvārakā, Śamba and other Yādavas mocked them and the Munis cursed them. Bhṛgu was one of those Munis. (See the word Śamba).

(3) Parāśurāma, after exterminating the Kṣatriya kings, went to the Abhimaṇa of Bhṛgu, the founder of the family, and received his blessings. (Brahmacharī Purāṇa, Chapter 62).

(4) Bhṛgu Mahārāṣṭra was a prominent member in Yudhīśṭhira’s assembly. (M.B. Chapter 4, Verse 16).

(5) He was also a member of Indra’s assembly. It was by Bhṛgu’s brilliance that Indra’s glory was heightened. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 29).

(6) Bhṛgu was a member of Brahmacchā’s assembly also. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 19).

(7) Once Bhṛgu blessed his son Rekha and his daughter-in-law Satyavatī that they would have children. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 35).

(8) Śrī Kṛṣṇa who went as the messenger of peace to Hāsināpurā, travelled in Dākinīvarta, along with the sage Bhṛgu. (M.B. Udyeğa Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 27).

(9) Bhṛgu entered the scene of battle between the Kurus and Pāṇḍavas and tried to persuade Dragācārya to withdraw from the fight. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 190, Verse 34).

(10) Once Bhṛgu lectured on the origin of the earth, Philosophy of Life, etc. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 128).

(11) Bhṛgu explained to Bharadvāja how the Pañcābhūṭas except the sky originated (Śanti parva, Chapter 183).

(12) Bhṛgu discussed in a logical manner, the principle of life and the transmigration of the soul. (Śanti parva, Chapter 187).

(13) He made a critical examination of the merits and defects of racial discrimination. (Śanti parva, Chapter 187).

(14) Once Bhṛgu bestowed Brahminhood on a King named Vīṭhavāya. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 57).

(15) He got the name “Bṛgu” because he was born out of fire. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 105).

(16) It was Bhṛgu who gave the necessary advice to Agastya to depose Nāhūta from Indra’s post.

(17) There is a story that Nāhūta kicked Agastya on the head while the latter was carrying Nāhūta’s palanquin and that Bhṛgu, who was hiding on Agastya’s looks of hair, cursed Nāhūta and changed him into a python. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 100).

BHRGUṬRTHA. A place made sacred by the performance of tapas by Bhṛgu. (For more details see the 6th para under Bhṛgu).

BHRGUTUNGA. A peak on which the sage Bhṛgu performed tapas. Rekha had lived there with his wife and children. (Vālmiṇī Kṛṣṇaṇa, Bāhikāṇḍa, 61st Sarga).

BHRNG. A Mahārāṣṭra who was a devotee of Śiva. Once he went to Kāśī and began to go round Śiva to pay homage to him. But since Pārvatī and Śiva were sitting together as one body, he could not go round Śiva separately. He did not have much reverence for Pārvatī. So he took the form of a female tigress (Bṛṅgī) and bored his way through a hole made in the place where the bodies were united. The tigress was not aware that Pārvatī was angry at this slight shown to her and cursed him to become physically weak. His legs became so weak that they were unable to support his body. So he prayed to Śiva again and he blessed him with a third leg. In this way Bṛṅgī became a Mahārāṣṭra with three legs. (Mahārāṣṭra).

BHRUSUNDI. A fisherman. He used to earn his living by theft. Once when the Mahārāṣṭra Mudgala was passing through a forest, Bṛuṇḍi stopped him. But in the presence of the Brahmana’s offspring the Mahārāṣṭra, the fisherman was dazed. Mudgala took pity on Bṛuṇḍi and advised him to worship Lord Ganeśa.

From that time Bṛuṇḍi gave up his evil ways and, accepting the advice of Mudgala, started the worship of Ganeśa with single-minded devotion. As a result of it, an elephant’s trunk began to grow from the middle of his forehead. Bṛuṇḍi who thus acquired a shape closely resembling Ganesa, was visited by Indra, mis-taking him for Ganesa. (Ganeśa : 167).

BHC (H). In the creation of the world, the Lord broke the beginningless “Aṇḍa” (the primal egg or seed) and from it the sound “Om” emerged. The first sound of it was “BHŪH”; the second was “BHUVĀH”; and the third was “SVAH”. So the combination “Bhū Bhuvā Śvabh” was formed. Then came the most admirable and superlative effulgence of the creator (Savitā). That radiance dried up all water. A little of the water became a highly viscous substance. This viscous matter gradually solidified and became the earth. Where the ṅāḍa originally was became the source of that supreme effulgence. As it was the first radiant light, it came to be called Śādīya (adi-first). The great progenitor Brahman seemed to emerge from the centre of the ānḍa. The garbhrī (the water contained in the ānḍa) became the oceans and rivers of the world. (Vāmāna Purāṇa, Chapter 43).

BHÚJAKETU. A king who fought on the side of Dur-yodhāna in the Bāhūra Yudhā.

BHŪJĀNGA. A son of Kaśī of Kāśyapa prajapati.

BHÚJUYU. A Rājaṣī (royal sage), the son of Tugra. King Tugra sent his son with an army across the sea to conquer the enemies in a distant island. When the boat in which they sailed had reached mid-ocean, it was caught in a storm and wrecked. The prince and the nobleman were both drowned. At that time the prince prayed to the Avisnas who saved Bhujyu from drowning and carried him back to the palace in boats and chariots travelling through the air. This story is given in the Kṛṣṇadeva where the adventures of Avisnas are described.

BHŌKAṆA (Landscape). The cause of earth-shake according to ancient belief is given below:—

The earth is being supported and held in its position by an elephant called Virāpākṣa. When he feels the burden too heavy he shakes his head and earth tremors follow.

Vāṁśikī Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakānda, 40th Sarga.)

BHULINGA (N). A bird which lived on the opposite side of the Himalayas. The cry of this bird resembles “MĀ SĀHASA.” But this bird lived by pecking at and eating the flesh between the teeth of a lion. Siṣṭupāli mentioned this bird as an example to illustrate that Bhismas advice was at variance with his practice.

The bird exhorts people not to act in a rash way (MĀ Sāhasa) and at the same time acts rashly.

BHUMANYU I. A king who was the grandson of King Dhupanta and the son of Bharata. From Mahābhārata Aḍi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 19, we see that he was born by the blessing of Bhadravāja. His mother was Sunandā, daughter of Sarvasena, King of Kāśi. When Bhumanyu grew up, his father Bharata entrusted him with the affairs of the Kingdom. Bhumanyu had six sons by his wife Puṣkarini; they were Divyadhata, Subhota, Subhata, Sukavi, Suyauj, and Rcika. In Mahābhārata, Aḍi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 33, we see that he had another son Subhota by a woman Vījaya, a Dākāhā maid.

BHUMANYU II. There is another Bhumanyu, grandson of Kuru, a King of the Lunar dynasty and son of Dhrtarāṣṭra, mentioned in Mahābhārata, Aḍi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 39.

BHUMANYU III. A Deva Gandharva. He participated in the celebrations connected with Arjuna’s birth. (M.B. Aḍi Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 35).

BHŌMI I. The earth.

1) General. The Purāṇas maintain that Bhūmi has a Devī (goddess). The births of Bhūmi and its basic goddess are in two different ways.

In Mahābhārata, (Dākṣikāyā Pātha) says that the goddess Bhūmi was the daughter of Brahmā and that she was married by Mahāviṣṇu. The earth on which we live is the Mitapūrṇa of which the basic deity is this Lādīmedī. Of the many versions given in the Purāṇas regarding the origin of earth, three are given below:

1) Long ago, towards the end of the age of floods, the earth was in a liquid state. At that time, Siva cut open his thigh and let fall a drop of blood in the water. It assumed the form of an ‘aṅḍa’ (egg). Siva took that egg and split it. A man came out of it. From him was made Nature (PraKRIT). For the creation of the Universe.

2) Mahāviṣṇu lay on the surface of water which spread everywhere in the beginning. A lotus sprang up from the navel of Viṣṇu and from its top Brahmā was born. Liquid matter began to flow out of Viṣṇu’s ears on both sides. From it were born two Rākṣasas named Madhu and Kaśītabha. They persecuted Brahmā. Mahāviṣṇu woke up and killed Madhu and Kaśītabha. The thick fat of these Rākṣasas hardened into the earth. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navama Skanda).

3) In the beginning Mahāviṣṇu (Mahāvīrāṯa Purusa) spread everywhere. In every pore of that Mahāviṣṇu, who was lying on the surface of the water, there was a Brahmāeda. In course of time that Viṣṇu obtained mind. That mind stood connected with each of these pores equally. Later from it were formed the “Pāścamahābhūtās”. From their combination was formed the Bhūta called “Mahā Prthvi”. It was cut into many pieces and each of the pieces was deposited in each pore. It was these Prthvi pieces which became “Bhūmīs” at the time of creation. At the time of the floods, these Bhūmis sank again into those pores as before. In each of these Brahmadās, there are the earth, mountains, forests, oceans, the seven islands, Himavān, Meru, Sun, Moon, Stars and other planets. Also, each of them has its own Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Siva and other Devas. Since all the different Bhūmis in all the Brahmadās had been formed artificially, they all perish in the floods. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navama Skanda).

3) Bhūmi Devī (Goddess Earth) is the wife of Mahā Viṣṇu. In Varāha Kalpa (Age of the Pig) the Asura Hiranyakṣa carried the Earth and Submerged it under water. At once Mahā viṣṇu appeared in the form of a Pig and lifted up the Earth on its horns. When the Earth floated on the surface of water like a lotus leaf, Bhūmi Devī who was pleased, stood up in her charming figure. Mahāviṣṇu fell in love with her and with the brilliance of a crore of suns, had sexual union with her for the period of one Devavārṣa. It is from that time that Bhūmi Devī became Mahāviṣṇu’s wife. As a result of their union, a son named Maṇgalā was born to them.

Ghūṣa is the son of Maṇgalā. Maṇgalā has another name, Covva. After the birth of Maṇgalā, at the behest of Lord Viṣṇu, all people began to offer worship to Bhūmidevi. Mahāviṣṇu himself first worshipped her by reciting the mantra “Om Hriḥ-Śrīn-Śrīn-Ṭatāyādhi-Vaḥāyā Devi Śvāh”. After that this mantra became popular for worshipping Bhūmidevi. (Devī Bhāgavata, Navama Skanda).

Narakaśura was Bhūmidevi’s son by Hiranyākṣa, the Asura. When Hiranyākṣa, in the form of a pig, carried Bhūmidevi on his horns to Pātāla, the horns came in contact with Bhūmidevi and she became pregnant. In Bhāgavata, Daśama Skanda we read that Narakaśura was born as the result of this contact. (See the word Śītā).

Śītā was the daughter of Bhūmidevi, born on another occasion. Śītā was married by the Kosala King Śrī Rāma. When she was abandoned by her husband, she was at last accepted by Bhūmidevi within her own self. (See the word Śītā).

4) Bhūmi and Brahāda. Since Bhūmidevi had been the wife of the Asura Hiranyākṣa she has also been called the mother of the Asura clan. Hiranyākṣa’s brother was BHŪMIPATI. A king of ancient India. There is a reference to this king in M.B. Udyaṇa Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 14.

BHŪMISAYA. A king in ancient India. M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 166, verse 75 says that King Amśurayana gave a sword to Bhūmiṣaya who gifted it to Bhūmiṣaya, the son of Duryodhana.

BHUKATI. A vīvadeva. (M.B. Amūdāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 32).

BHŪRI. A king of the Kuru dynasty. Somadatta, king of the Kuru dynasty had three sons, Bhūri, Bhūrīstrava and Sāla. In M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 188, we read that they had attended the Śvayānvara of Draupadī and in Sabha Parva, Chapter 94 it is said that they had taken part in Yudhīśvara’s Rājaśayya. In Drona Parva, Chapter 166, we read that this King Bhūri was slain by Sākyas during the war between Kauravas and Pandavas. After death, Bhūri obtained a place with the Vīvadevas. (M.B. Śvārgarohanā Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 146).

BHUKRI. A son of the sage Svāma. Vāsā’s son, Svāma married Pārvī, the daughter of Vīvadeva. She had four sons by Śvāma, who were named Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprabha, Bhūri and Devarātra. One of them named Kṛṣṇa. (Devī Bhāgavata, Prabhāṣa Skandha).

BHUKRIRA. (Bhūma). One of the hundred sons of Dhitarāṣṭra. Mahābhārata, Salya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 14 says that at the battle of Kuruksetra he was slain by Bhūmasena.

BHUKRĪDUHMUNA I. A king in the assembly of Yama. He attained Īravana (Śvārgaloka) by virtue of his having performed gatiṃ (gilt of cow). (M.B. Śvāma, Chapter 6, Amūdāsana Parva, Chapter 76).

BHUKRĪDUHMUNA II. A Mahārāja. This sage once went to Hastināpura as a messenger of peace. On the way he met with Kṛṣṇa whom he reverently worshipped by doing Prakāṣāmāṃ.

BHUKRĪDUHMUNA III. He was the only son of Virādyūma, a king. Bhūmīdunya was lost somewhere in the forest. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 227, Verse 41).

BHUKRIHAN A Kāśyapa. Bhūri was a king in ancient times. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 277, Verse 51).

BHUKRIKIRTI. A king. He had two daughters, Campikā and Sumati who were married by Lava and Kuśa respectively. (Ānanda Rāmāyaṇa, Vīvāha Kāṇḍa).

BHŪRĪŚRĀVA (BHŪRĪŚRĀVAYAS).

BHŪHIC II. Wife of Drūva. This Bhūmi, devi, the daughter of Śitumā had two sons named Kaipa and Vatsala, by Drūva. (Bhāgavata, Caturdhśa Skandha).

BHŪMI III. Another Bhūmi, who was the wife of a king named Bhūmīpah, is mentioned in M.B. Udyaṇa Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 14.

BHŪMĪNAYA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas. He took his position in the centre of the Garuda Vyūha (name of a phalanx) formed by Droña. (M.B. Droña Parva, Chapter 28, Verse 13).

BHÚMI PARVA. A subdivision of Bhūmaparva in Mahābhārata. Chapters 11 and 12 of Bhūma Parva are included in this.

In Ācestūda, Chapter 276, we see another statement that Satagu, king of the Lunar dynasty, had three sons. Devāpi, Bhālima and Soudaka and of them Bhālima had four sons, Somadatta, Bhūmī, Bhūrīstrava and Sāla.
BHUSHUNDA

All these Mātris assembled together on one occasion to celebrate a festival in the sky. There was a display of many kinds of entertainments at that time. Disputations in spiritual matters, music, dancing, drinking and other forms of hilarious activities were freely indulged in. In another part of the sky, their vehicles were also enjoying themselves with similar celebrations of drinking, dancing, and merry-making. The swans who were the vehicles of Brāhmidevi were dancing in one place, intoxicated by drink. Caṇḍa, the crow, who was Alambuša’s vehicle, also joined their company. Completely absorbed in their delirious raptures, the intoxicated swans indulged so freely in their amorous pleasures with Caṇḍa that they became pregnant. At last when the merry-makings ended and all of them dispersed, the swans became aware of their plight and informed Brāhmī about it. The gracious goddess (Brāhmī) told them that in their present state they were unable to discharge their duties in drawing her chariot and so they were allowed to go and enjoy themselves wherever they liked. After this she entered into a trance. The swans in the fullness of time, gave birth to twenty-four sons. We, the twenty-one brothers, are those children. We, and our mothers went to Brāhmidevi and offered worship to her for a long time. As a result, the Devi woke up from her trance and pleased with us, gave us her blessing. After that, we went to our father (Caṇḍa) and offered our devotion to him and prostrated before him and Alambušadevi. They blessed us. We asked our father to suggest a most suitable place for a secluded life. This Kalpa Vṛkṣa is the secluded place recommended by him. We paid obeisance to our father and Alambušadevi and came to settle down here. Many ages have passed since then. Now your visit and holy presence here, have liberated me from all worldly bonds and ennobled my life. My twenty brothers lived for many Kalpas and yugas at the end of which, convinced of the meaninglessness of worldly life, renounced their bodies and attained Sivaloka.

On hearing this, Vasiṣṭha asked Bhushunḍa to tell him more about his past life. Bhushunḍa resumed his story:—

"Long ago, the whole earth was full of big rocks, without trees, forests or mountains. After a great flood the surface of the earth was covered with ashes. In one caturyuga (a period equal to the length of the four yugas, Kṛta, tretā, dvāpara and Kali) the earth was filled with forest trees and in another Caturyuga, mountain ranges appeared. I have seen an age in which Brāhmaṇas were drunkards, Śūdras were virtuous and women of noble families committed adultery. You have now been born in the eightieth Jana" as the son of Brāhma. You were born once from the sky, at another time from water, then from the mountain and again from fire. I can remember this earth sinking into the ocean five times and Lord Viṣṇu taking the form of a tortoise, lifting it up, above the water. I have seen the ocean of milk being churned twelve times. I know that Hiranyakṣa had taken the earth three times to Pātala (underworld). The Lord has incarnated six times as Bhūrgava Rāma, Incarnation of Buddha has taken place in six Kalyyugas, Tripurādāhana (burning of the Tripurasūras) has taken place thirty times. Daksina yāga was broken up twice. Lord Śiva has slain ten Indrās. He fought seven times with Śri Kṛṣṇa for the sake of Bāṇa. I also remember another epic entitled “Rāmāyana”, containing one lakh of verses and dealing with metaphysical problems. I have seen the customs of Kṛṣṇa being followed in Kaliyuga and the customs of Kaliyuga being followed in Kṛṣṇa.”

Having heard the whole story, Vasiṣṭha gave his blessing to Bhūunda and left the place. (Jñāna Vasiṣṭha, Bhudīdpādāgīra).

BHŪTADRĀMĀ. An Indra. This Indra is different from the actual Indra. There is a reference to this Indra in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 28.

BHŪTAYOTI. A king who was the father of Vasu and son of Sumati.

BHŪTAKĀRMĀ. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas in the battle at Kurukṣetra. He was killed by Satīnaka, the son of Nakula. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 23).

BHŪTALAYA (M). A famous village in the purānas. It was a resort of thieves and robbers. Dead bodies were often thrown into the river which was flowing through this village. Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 129, verse 9 says that it was against Saśtas to bathe in this river.

BHŪTAMATHANA. A warrior of Sūrabhimanyu. (M.B. Salva Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 69).

BHŪTASAṬĀPA. One of the leaders of Hiraṇyaka, (Bhagavata, Saptama Sākunda).

BHŪTASĀRA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas. He had taken his position in the “Garuḍasāvitrā” (name of a phalanx) formed by Droṇachārya. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 6).

BHŪTAS. A set of beings created by Rudra.

1) General. A Mānav class or sect in ancient India. In the Purāṇas, this Mānav sect is classified into four subdivisions.

2) Birth. In the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa there is the following story about the birth and shape of Bhūtās:

Bhūtās are one of the subdivisions of Pulāma’s creations. Long agnīs are given to the Rudra, Nilābhita, to perform the function of creation. Accordingly he begot thousands of Bhūtās in the womb of his wife Satī. All the issues were the exact replica of his own figure. Lean limbs, long ears, thick hanging lips, red eyes, bushy eyebrows, long, pointed and protruding teeth, long nails, matted dirty hair, etc. were the grotesque features of these Bhūtās. These music-haters used serpents as their Yajñopavita (sacred threads). These spirits who loitered in Śiva’s assembly were, as a rule, naked and carried skulls on their heads. But at times they wore fantastic dress with elephant skin. Their chief weapons were, trident, bow, sword, etc.

3) Bhūtā Chaṭṭa. In the Purāṇas, Rudra is acknowledged as the Bhūtā Chaṭṭa. That is why Rudra is known by such names as “Bhūtāniyakas”, “Gaṇaṇaṇa”, “Caṇḍakau-cara”, “Bhavaparājada”, etc. But since the common name Rudra is used for the ruler (king) of all the Bhūtās, Vāmana Purāṇa declares that Rudra is not an individual. Both Vāmanapurāṇa and Matsyapurāṇa represent Virāhadra and Nandikāśvara as two Rudras who are the masters of Bhūtās. (Matsyapurāṇa 181, 2; Vāmanapurāṇa 4, 17).

In Vāmana Purāṇa, the number of Bhūtās is given as 11 crores. Śkanda, Śākhu, Bhairava are the chief among them. Under them are innumerable Bhūtās. Ashes and Khaṭavānga, etc. are their weapon. The emblem on the banner is a cow or a bull. That is how the Gaṇaṇaṇaṇaṇkas have got the titles like “Māyaśrāvaka”, “Māyaśrāvaka”. (Vāman Purāṇa 67, 1-23). 4) War with Asura. In the war between Śiva and Andhakāsura, the Bhūtās fought on the side of Śiva. It was Vināyaka, the master of the Bhūtā hordes who first came into conflict with the Asura. In that battle Andhaka defeated Vināyaka. After that, Nandi, another leader of the Bhūtās, attacked Andhaka jointly with Vināyaka and defeated him. At last, Andhaka approached Śiva himself for protection, and Śiva received him and appointed him as commander of one of his hordes of Bhūtās. It is this Andhakāsura who later became famous under the name of Bhṛtih. In this way, the Bhūtās had fought many battles with the Asuras, joining the party of the Devas. But at the time of Dākṣa’s yajña, they joined the party of the Asuras and opposed the Devas. Although the Bhūtās won all the battles they fought both on the side of the Devas and on the side of the Asuras, in the end they had to leave north India and to come and settle down in south India. By the time of Viśvavata, the Bhūtās had already become South Indians.

BHŪTIVARMA. A Rākṣasa who was the friend of Kāmaḥbhuti. (Kathasatīsagga).

BHUVANA I. A Mahārāṣtri who visited Bihāra when he was lying on the verge of death. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 81).

BHUVANA II. A saṃśātana Viśvadeva. There is a reference to him in M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 35).

BHUVANA III. A saṃśātana Viśvadeva. There is a reference to him in M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 35).

BHUVANA. Bhṛtihpāti’s sister. She was married to Prabhās, one of the Aṛavas. A son named Viśvakarmā was born to them. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, 3-3-21).

BHUVANESĀ. See the word Bhadrasrārvas.

BIBHATSU. One of the ten names of Arjuna. He got this name because he resorted from doing loathful acts. “I will never resort to loathful deeds in war. Therefore the devas and men call me Bībhatsu”. (Mahābhārata, Viśvā Parva, Chapter 44, Stanza 18).

BHUMI. A. A minister of Rudra. Bhūmikāvāna. (Bhuvanapatībhānava).

BHŪPA. See the word Bhīṣma.

BHIDUJAS. A son born to Ādiiti by the blessings of Viṣṇu. (Pudhā Purāṇa, Bhūmikāvāna, Chapter 3).

BLILA. (VIĻVA). A devotee of Viṣṇu. There is a story in Skanda Purāṇa about Blīva who lived as a Yājñapātī first and then was converted to a Śaivaite. In the beginning Brahmā created many things among which Viṣṇu (stāpa) (Crusade religion) also was created. Under that tree an anonymous man began to live. Brahmā gave him the name Viṣṇu. Being pleased at the behaviour and devotion of Blīva, Indra asked him to turn the wheel of administration of the earth. Accepting the offer Blīva requested Indra to give him the Vajra (diamond) for the smooth running of the administration of the earth. And Indra handed over the vajrayudha (diamond-weapon) to be at his disposal, when he thought about it, if the occasion required it. Once Kapilla a Śaivaite reached the palace of Blīva. After a long conversation both became fast friends. One day there was a debate between Bilvaka and Kapila as to whether penance or action (doing one's duty) was appreciable. In this discussion Bilvaka lost the equilibrium of his mind and thinking of the diamond-weapon of Indra cast off the head of Kapila. In Kapila there was the power of penance as well as the power of Siva. So through Siva Kapila got immortality. In the meanwhile Bilvaka went to Yagya and got a boon that every living thing in the earth should fear him. But the boon was futile. This was a turning point for Bilvaka. The mind of Bilvaka changed to devotion for Siva. He concentrated his attention on the worship of Sivalinga at the forest of Mahâkâla. One day Kapila came by that way and was greeted by Bilvaka with honour and regard, and they again became fast friends.

BILVAKA. A famous serpent born to Kaśyapa pra-jâpati of his wife Kadru. (Mahâbhârata, Aiti Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 12).

BILVAKA'TRITIYA. A holy place in Haradvâra. It is mentioned in Mahâbhârata, Anuâsâna Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 13 that those who bathe in this holy Bath will attain heaven.

BILVAKA'DUJA. A serpent. The father of this serpent was Kaśyapa and mother, Kadru. (M.B. Âdî Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 12).

BILVAPÂTRA. A serpent born in the family of Kaśyapa pra-jâpati. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 14).

BILVATEJÀ. A serpent born in the family of Takṣaka. This serpent was burnt to death by falling in the sacrificial fire of Jauamajâya. (M.B. Aiti Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 9).

BINDUGĀ. A Brâhmaṇa who lived in the village of Bâskalâ. Being a frequenter of the houses of harlots and of various other mean habits, he had led his wife Çâcalâ also to lead an immoral life. Once Binduga called his wife and told her thus: “You may continue the life of a harlot; but all the money acquired must be handed over to me.” Thus they continued their lives and after their death both were reborn as devils in the mountain of Vindhyâ. In the midst of their life as devils, once it chance for Çâcalâ to hear the Siva Purâna recited and she got her shape of devil changed. She requested Pârvatî to change the shape of her husband also. Pârvatî sent her attendant Tumburu to Binduga to tell him the story of Siva and thus he also got his form changed. (Siva Purâna Mahâbhâma).

BINDU 4ATĪ. The queen of the great King Mándhâta. Bûmattû was the daughter of the King Sâlabindu. Pu ukatsa and Mucukunda were the two sons born to her from Mándhâta. (Devil Bhagavata, Sûrdha 7).

BINUSÂRAS. A holy place famous in the Purânas.

The following information is obtained from the Purânas about this holy place.

(1) Bindusara lies on the north of the Mount Kailâsa. (Mahâbhârata Sâbhâ Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 2).

(2) It was at Bindusara that Bhágiratha did penance to bring down Gañghî to the earth. (Sâbhâ Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 10).

(3) Devendra performed hundred sacrifices at this place. (M.B. Bhûra, Sâbhâ Parva, Chapter 3).

(4) Once Siva performed a sacrifice at Bindusaras. (Sâbhâ Parva, Chapter 3).

(5) Śrî Kṛṣṇa did penance here for several years to get righteous. (Sâbhâ Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 11).
was pleased at the virtuous character of the son of the Vaiśya. So taking him, as if he was God, placed him on his chariot and took to the city. The people gathered round him and anointed him as their King. The son of the Vaiśya became King. He never even thought of women who are generally fickle and wicked. The wicked wife of the Vaiśya's son took the harmless man on her shoulder and wandered about saying, "The enemies of my husband have put him in this plight. Because of my conjugal fidelity I carry him thus and earn our daily bread. Please give us food!" In this manner she spent her days in begging. Thus wandering from place to place she reached the city where the Vaiśya's son was the King. The people, seeing her loyalty to her husband, honored her and spoke highly of her. Hearing that a very loyal wife had reached his city the King sent for her. The King recognized her instantly. But she did not know him. He learned of her deeds of the past one by one, and began to weep and scold her. Finally when she understood that the King was her husband she was dumb-founded. The amazed ministers looked at each other. The King revealed everything to them. The ministers disfigured her and drove her away.

BODHYA, a famous teacher-priest. Once there was a discussion between Nātha and Bodhya on Philosophy. The summary of what Bodhya said is as follows:—

Before I advise others, I do it myself first. I am the teacher of none. I take the world as my teacher. I learned the lessons of harmlessness from snakes, disappointment from Pāṅgala the hermit, self-sacrifice from animals, concentration from the archer, and loneliness from a maid who is a spinster. (M.B., Śanti Parva, 171, 56, 61.)

This hermit came to the King Yavāti and taught him philosophy and ethics. The whole of the Chapter 171 of Mahābhārata, Śanti Parva, comprises the exhortations of this hermit, which are known by the famous name Bodhya-Gītā (Song of Bodhya).

BRAHMĀ: A king. Agastya once approached this King and requested him for some wealth. (See the word Agastya).

BRAHMĀ:

One of the trimūrtis of the Hindu Pantheon. The trimūrtis are Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Siva.

1) General information. God who is the creator of the Universe. It is mentioned in the Purāṇas that Brahmā creates, Viṣṇu preserves and Pāramāṣiva destroys the universe.

2) The birth of Brahmā. The birth of Brahmā is from the navel of Viṣṇu. It is mentioned in Devi Purāṇa, Skandha 1, about the birth of Brahmā as follows:—

In the beginning Mahāviṣṇu lay on a banana leaf in the shape of a baby and began to think, "Who am I? Who created me? Who sustains me? Who is going to work?" and so on. At that time an etheral voice said:—

"Śarvaṁ khalidvāmanor nāyaśaṁ saṁsthānam..." Mahāviṣṇu was amazed at this etheral voice. He did not know whose oracle it was. Still He lay meditating upon the words. Then Mahādevi, with four hands and weapons such as Śanikha (sconch); Candra (moon), Gada (club), Padma (lotus) and maidens who are propitiators and having worn glorious clothes and ornaments, and accompanied by Śaktis (powers) named Rati, Bhūti, Buddhi, Mati, Kṛiti, Dhṛti, Smriti, Saḍbhā, Mohā, Saḍbhā, Śvāhā, Kāmo, Nītā, Dāya, Gati, Tviṣ, Kāpa, Sāvyati, Śaptakā and Tandā, appeared before Mahāviṣṇu, who was struck with wonder. Mahādevi said, "Oh, Viṣṇu, what is there to wonder at? Every time the universe is subjected to creation, preservation and destruction, you are born thus due to the great power of the supreme spirit. It seems that you have forgotten those matters. Know that the supreme power is beyond qualities. We are all with qualities, Your main quality is Śattva. From your navel Brahmā will be born. His attribute is Rajoguna (activity, passion or motion). From the middle of the eyebrows of Brahmā, will be born Rudra, whose attribute will be Tāmasaṅgata (darkness). Brahmā, with the power of penance, will acquire the ability of creation and by his attribute of Rajoguna will create the world in the ocean of Bhūtā and śakti, who is the preserver of that world. The same world will be destroyed by Rudra at the end of the Kalpa (world age)".

Accordingly from the navel of Viṣṇu a lotus grew up and in that lotus flower Brahmā took his form. The same Brahmadeva did penance before Mahāviṣṇu and Jagaññā, who were pleased at his penance and gave him all the boons he wanted. After that Brahmā began the work of creation. He created with his mind the Saptarśi, (seven sages) and then the Prajapāti (the lords of emanation). From them all the movable and the immovable in the universe came into existence. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

In manusmrti, Chapter 1, the following stanza about the creation of Brahmā occurs:

"Tadādjayamabhavat baimam Sahavaimītramprahambhah /
Tasmā jāne śvayam Brahmā
Sarvalokakāyabahbhah" //

That egg was as radiant as the Sun, with the colour of gold. Brahmā the great grandfather of everything in the world took birth by himself in it. From the supreme power, an egg fell on the water which was the first creation. That egg became a germ of golden colour. Creating a life, which had done penance in its former births in such a way as to enable it to become Brahmā, in the golden germ of the egg, the supreme power entered the life that is to become Brahmā as its inner guide. That Brahmā is known as the Piṭāmaha (Grandfather of the manes) or Pātimahāgrandfather of all the worlds.

Vāmanapurāṇa Chapter 43 states as follows about the creation of Brahmā:—

Ages before the beginning, when all the worlds with everything they contained were submerged in the single ocean of the great flood, the germ of living things formed itself into a king of birth. Who had been inside the egg went to a long sleep. The sleep continued for a thousand yugas (ages) when Brahmā woke up; as Śattva guṇa (purity) was the foremost attribute of him, he saw that the world was void. When the thought of creation occurred in his mind Rajoguna (activity or passion) became his foremost attribute. Kajas is the attribute that creates and without that we cannot preserve. At the time of destruction Tamoguna (darkness) becomes the foremost attribute. That Bhagavān (supreme Spirit) the Purusa (the Male creative Energy) pervades over everything, in all the living worlds. That Eternal Being is Brahman, Visnu, Siva.

Knowing that the world was lying in pure water, the Bhagavân (Supreme Being) cut the egg open. From it the Otkâra (the sacred syllable ‘Om’) emanated. The first sound of it was “Bhūḥ,” the second sound, “Bhūvāḥ” and the third sound “Svabh.” So they came to be known as “Mahábhūvāḥ Svabhāḥ” even when the glorious radiance of the sun was born from it and Brahman the grandfather of the worlds originated in the centre of the egg.

3) Instigation to compose Rámayâna. It was Brahmâ who instigated Valmiki to compose the Rámayâna.

A fowler of the forest tribe shot down one of a couple of storks which were carrying on love-making, on the banks of the River Tamâś. Seeing this Valmiki cursed the fowler. The curse came out of the mouth of Valmiki in the form of a verse: “mā niśāga pratīdhikam tvaram-gamaṁ śatviṁ samāḥ, yath kramāmuttiṁ sinkiṁ, avadhiḥ kānamadhiṁ,,” which according to hearsay, is the first piece of poetry in the world. Brahman who was attracted by the poetry came to the hermitage of Valmiki and instigated him to compose the story of Râma. In verse form, it is stated in Vâlmiki’s Râmayâna: Bala-kânda, Sarga 2, that the Rámayâna was composed thus.

4) Râvaṇa is given a boon. It was Brahmâ who made Râvaṇa an ever-powerful hero. Penance was done by Râvaṇa in the vicinity of the Himâyâna and Brahmâ appeared before him and granted him the boon that no arrow that he shot would harm him. (Vâlmiki Râmayâna, Bula Kânda, Sarga 16).

5) The loss of a head. Long ago Siva plucked off a head of Brahmâ. This story occurs in various purâṇas with slight changes. Two of them are given below:—

(1) In olden days, in the period of Satyayugya, Mahâviśnu did penance in Svetâdvipa (the island Sveta) to obtain the Râma lila. Being deeply engaged in the study of Brahmacidya, Brahmâ decided to go to another place and began to do penance for the suppression of passions. Both were doing severe penance. So they began to walk in order to take res from the penance. On the way they met each other. One asked “who are you?” The other also asked the same question. The talk ended in a contest as to who was the greater of the two. Each claimed himself to be the supreme power of the world. Neither of them was prepared to recognize the claims of the other. In the midst of this contest, a phalus, ex-ordinarily bulky and fair appeared before them and a sibilant voice said from the sky: “You need not quarrel as to who is superior. He who reaches the extremity of this phalus is the superior person. So both of you proceed, one upwards and the other downwards and find out the end.” Hearing this Vishnu went downwards to find out the bottom and Brahmâ, upwards to the top. Vishnu travelled for a long time and finding no end thought the attempt futile and returned to the starting point with disappointment and sat down. Brahmâ travelled upwards for a long time and found no end. On the way he saw the petals of a paradisiac flower, coming down from the sky. Brahmâ took it and joyfully returned and said haughtily to Vishnu: “See, I have taken this flower from the head of the Phalus. I have brought this to convince you. You have been defeated. So can you not admit that I am the superior?” Mahâviśnu did not believe the words of Brahmâ. So he called the Pândânas flower to him and questioned it. The Pândânas flower took false oath and witnessed in favour of Brahmâ, who had asked, the flower beforehand to be on his side. Mahâviśnu did not believe this either and said, “Let Siva be witness to this flower”. Siva at these words appeared before them and revealed the deceit played by Brahmâ and the flower and then cursed the Pândânas flower that he should not have a place among the flowers of Oblation to Siva. Then Siva got angry and plucked off a head of Brahmâ. That is the skull Siva uses for receiving alms. (Devî Bhâgavata, Skanda 5.)

(2) In days of old all the worlds with everything in them were under water in a single ocean. The Sun, the Moon, the Stars, air, fire, everything was destroyed. A day of utter darkness appeared. Grass, bush all were destroyed. Nothing could be seen and recognized. All existents and non-existents were destroyed. Bhagavân, (Supreme Being) was sleeping continuously for so many thousands of nights. At the end of the night Bhagavân awoke and attributed the attributes of the night. He stood ready for the work of creation. He, the knower of all Vedas and Vedângas appeared in the shape of a wonderful being with five faces. Another being with three eyes, matted hair, a trident in one hand, and a garland of beads in the other, and with darkness as its attribute took shape. That being was called Purusa (the male creative energy). Then the Mahâtmâ (the Supreme Being) of ancient times (Egotism). It affected Brahmâ and Siva. Overcome by egoism, Siva said to Brahmâ:—“Who are you? Who created you?” Swelled with egoism Brahmâ asked in reply:—“Who are you? Who are your parents? Let me hear it.” This talk ended in a quarrel. The origin of Bhagavân (the Lord) was from this quarrel. Immediately after his birth the Lord took an arsarlephate but did not have any identity. Siva being defeated by Brahmâ, bowed his head and coloured. While Para-mâyâ was standing angrily thus, the fifth face told him, “You, who are having three eyes and whose attribute is darkness! look here! I will tell you all. You, who wear air garments, and ride on an ox, are the destroyer of the world.” Hearing these words Siva grew more and more angry, opened his third eye you down and Brahmâ to burn him. Seeing the faces shining like the Sun Brahmâ said, “When you heat on water, bubbles will appear. But do they have any prowess? Hearing this, Siva plucked off the head of Brahmâ with the tip of his finger nails. (Vâmanâ Purâṇa, Chapter 2.)

5) Changing Vijayalaksmi to Lâlakālaksmi, by curses. Vijayalaksâmi, one of the eight Laksâni, was the treasury-keeper of Brahmâ. Once she became careless in discharging her duties. Brahmâ got angry and cursed her.

“You go to Râvaṇa and keep his tower”. She humbly requested for absolution from the curse. Brahmâ said, “At the time of the incarnation of Sî Râma, a monkey-hero named Hanumâṇ will reach Lâlakâ in search of Sî Râma’s wife, whom Râvaṇa had kidnapped. You will obstruct him, and he will strike you dead. On that day you will be absolved from the curse and you will return here instantly.” Accordingly Vijayalaksmi was born in Lañū under the name Lañūlañūmi. When Hanumān jumped to Lañū she prevented him, and he struck her down to the ground. (Ṛāmpi Rāmāyana, Sundara Rāmāyana).

6) Brahmā curing the daughters of Himavān. Three daughters named Kutilā, Rāginī and Pārvati and a son named Sunātha were born to Himavān by his wife Menā. The three daughters went to the Himalayas for penance, to get Śiva as husband. They were not even six years old then. The devas saw them. The Ādiyīs and the Vāsugūs took Kutilā who was doing penance, to the world of the gods. All the gods gathered together and asked Brahmā. “Oh Lord, be pleased to tell us if this girl will be able to bear a son who could kill Mahiṣāsurā.” Brahmā replied. “This poor girl will not be capable of bearing the radiance of Śiva. So let her go away.” Kutilā got angry at Brahmā and said “Lord, I will try to become fit to bear the unbearable radiance of Śiva. Hence, I will do penance properly and please Viṣṇu and make Śiva bow his head. I take a vow to that effect.” Brahmā became angry and told Kutilā, “You, wicked Kutilā, you did not succumb to my words. So by my curse you will be turned to water.”

Kutilā having been cursed by Brahmā became water and joined to the world of Brahmā. Seeing the flood of water, Brahmā made cause-ways on four sides with the Vedas of Kg, Yajus, Sāṃśa and Atharva. Thus being tied up she stays in the world of Brahmā. The Devas took Rāginī also before Brahmā and put the same question. The reply of Brahmā was the same as before. She also got angry and said to Brahmā, “I will do great penance so as to enable to give birth to one in my family to be the killer of Mahiṣāsurā.” Brahmā cursed her also. “You are deliberately disobeying my words which even devas won’t gamsay. So you will become the colours of the twilight.” Thus she became the last colours of the twilight, and her body was divided among the Pleiades. (Vāmanī Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

7) Going a boon to a tiger and golden colour to Pārvati. The first name of Pārvati, the daughter of Himavān was Kāli. She was given this name (Kāli) because of her dark complexion. After the marriage Śiva and Pārvati led a household life in the golden house built by Viśvakāma. Once Śiva called Devī humorously, by the name Kāli. Pārvati got angry and said to her husband, “A wound by an arrow will be cured. If you cut down a tree by an axe it will sprout again. A wound inflicted by hard words will never be cured. The arrows of words shoot out of the mouth. Those who are hit by them suffer pain day and night. Wise people should not shoot them at others. You have violated that principle. So my lord, I am going to do intensive penance. I will endeavour to create such a condition, that you may not call me by the name Kāli again.” Saying thus, Pārvati bowed before Paramēvara and bidding good-bye, she went up into the air and reached the peak of Himalayās and thought of Jayā, Vījaya, Jayantī and Aparajitā. Instantly they arrived to see Kāli. They got permission and stayed with Pārvati to attend on her.

While Pārvati was engaged in doing penance, a tiger, with his weapons of tusks and claws came there from the jungles of the Himalayas. Umā (Pārvati) was standing on one leg. The tiger began to think, “I shall do it when it is needed”. Thinking thus, it gazed at the face of Devī with staring eyes and consequently it lost its balance. Pronouncing the word Brahmā Devi did penance for a hundred years. After that Brahmā, the Lord of the three worlds appeared before her and said to her “I am much pleased. Your penance was flawless. Ask your boon.” Kāli replied, “Oh, Lotus-born! First give this tiger a boon. It will please me.” Then Brahmā gave the wonderful tiger leadership of the Ganas, devotion to Śiva, invincibility and righteousness. After giving the tiger this boon Brahmā told Pārvati, “Now, Ambikā, ask your boon. Don’t hesitate, I will grant the boon.” Then Pārvati asked the boon. “Brahmā, give me golden colour.” Brahmā said “Let it be so”, and disappeared. The dark complexion of Pārvati disappeared. She got the colour of the lamenent of the lotus flower. From the disc of Viśnu and Śiva she became gold. Pārvati went to Indra and asked for a gift. Indra requested Pārvati on behalf of heaven. “Let me have her. Let this Kausikī be my sister. Because she was born from you, Kośa (outer skin) she is Kausikī. I am also Kausikī,” Devi gave the beautiful Kausikī to Indra, Sahāraṇā (Indra who has thousand eyes) took her to the Vindhya mountains; when they reached there Indra told her. “You stay on this mount, honoured and revered by gods. You will be known as Vindhyaśakti (who stays on the Vindhya). He consecrated the goddess there. She was given a lion as her carrier (Vāhana) “You destroy the asuras” saying to Indra returned to Heaven. (Vāmanī Purāṇa, Chapter 54).

8) Brahmā became river. Long ago in the period of Cātuṣa matavantara (the age of a Manu), Brahmā decided to perform a sacrifice on the Sākyas mountain and preparations were made for it. Brahmā came with Viṣṇu and Śiva. Bhṛgu and the other hermits took their seats. Mahāviṃśu called Svarādev, the wife of Brahmā. But she was very slow in coming. The hermit Bhṛgu said to Viṣṇu: “You yourself have gone to call Devī. But she is very slow. The auspicious moment is coming to an end. So how are we to commence the rites?”

“If Svara does not appear before the end of the stipulated time we shall set Gāyatri in her place,” said Viṣṇu. Śiva also agreed to it. So Bhṛgu seated Gāyatri on the right side of Brahmā and the rituals were performed. By then Svara reached the sacrificial hall. When she saw that Gāyatri was placed in her place and the rituals were performed she became angry, because of her quarrel with her co-wife. She called out: “Where the person to whom respect is due, is not given respect and where the person who ought not to be respected is given undue respect, there, scarcity, death and fear will be rampant. She dared to sit on the right in my place. So she will grow lean and be younger as her will. Then Iott appeared and asked for a gift. All of you will become rivers because you have placed a person lower than me in my position.” Hearing the curse of Svara, Gāyatri rose up trembling, and cursed Svara also to become a river. Before Svara was changed to a river, Brahmā and the other gods rose up and requested for absolution from the curse. Svara said, “O gods, it is because you placed Gāyapati in the beginning of the sacrifice, that this break, due to my anger, has been caused. My curse cannot be futile. So each of you change to a river by your portions and we, your wives, will also become rivers by our portions, and flow to the west.”
Thus Brahma, Vignu and Maheshvara became rivers with their portions. Brahma became the fast-flowing Kukudmati, Mahaviṣṇu changed to river Kṛṣṇa and Śiva, the river Vesi. The devas also changed their portions to rivers and flowed from the Śaha mountain to the east and their wives changed to rivers by their portions and flowed to the west. Śveta and Gūdai fell as two rivers to the west and then joined together as one river called Sāvitrī Vignu and Śiva who were consecrated at the sacrifice by Brahma came to be called Baḷa and Atibala (Powerful and more powerful). This is the origin of the rivers in Kerala. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 113).

9) Brahma is not worshipped. Long ago Brahma and Vignu went to see Śiva near Himavān. They saw a shining phallos there in front of them. It was of immense size. One of them went downwards and the other upwards to find out the end of it. Both returned without reaching the top or the bottom and by penance they pleased Śiva who appeared before them and asked them what boon they desired. Brahma asked Śiva to take birth as his son. Śiva did not look upon this and said that nobody would worship Brahma because of his extraordinary desire (namely, to have Śiva as his son). Vignu requested that he should be made a servant at Śiva's feet. So Vignu incarnated as Śiva's Sakti (power). That Sakti is Parvati. So Vignu and Parvati are one and the same in sense. (Kathāprākārama, Kāthāprākāramabakam, Taṇṭaṅga).

10) The abode of Brahma. It is said in Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 8, that the abode of Brahma is on the top of Mount Mahāmeru. There are nine towns there. Mano-vatī which is in the centre, is the town of Brahma. The east of Mano-vatī stands Amaravātī, the town of Indra. On the south-east corner there is Rajovatī which is owned by Agni (fire-god). Dvāravatī is on the south of Brahmamārī there is the town of Sanyamani which is the town of Yama (God of death). On the south west corner there is the town of Nīlī. It is named Kṛṣṇapānam. On the west there is the town called Śraddhavatī. It is the abode of God Varuṇa. On the north-west corner there is the town called Gandhavatī which is the abode of Bhagavān Vāyu (Wind-God). Dvāravatī north to Brahmamārī stands the town of Kuṭera (God of wealth). It is known by the name Mahodaya. On the north east corner there is the city of Śiva. It is known as Vasovatī.

11) The sons of Brahma. Brahma is the creator of all the living things in the world. Still mention is made in the Pṛāgīs about countless divine persons who were born from the mind and body of Brahma, directly and indirectly. They are given below in groups.

(1) Mārici, Aṅgiras, Ati, Pulasta, Pulaha, and Kuṭru.
(2) It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 10, that these six grand hermits were born from the mind of Brahmā.
(3) Dhīnā and Vidyātā. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 51 that these two were good sons born to Brahmā.
(4) Rudra. Mention is made in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 26, that Brahma had a roaring son who was named Rudra.
(5) Svaṇambahava Manu. It occurs in Bhāgavata Skandha 11, that Manu Svaṇambahava was the son of Brahma.
(6) Kandarpa (Kanadēva - Cupid). In Kāthāśārita-śagara, Lāvāṇakalabhaka, Taṇṭaṅga, it is mentioned that Cupid was born from the egoism of Brahmā.

6) Madhuka and Goliṣṭha. In Utara Rāmāyaṇa, mention is made that from the playful habit of Brahmā, a giant named Madhuka and a giantess named Goliṣṭha were born.

7) Bīgura. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 9, that the hermit Bīgura was the son of Brahmā.

8) Jāṭāvān. It is seen in Kātipa Rāmāyaṇa that Jāṭāvān was born from the sweat of Brahmā.

9) The Sanakas. In Bhāgavata mention is made that the Sanakas (Sanaka, Sanandana, Sanātanu and Sanat-kumāra) were sons of Brahmā.

10) In Mahābhārata, Amūsāna Parva there is a passage given as the words of Vasiṣṭha spoken to Bīgura, about the birth of many of the sons of Brahmā. "May I tell you a story I have heard long ago about the revelation of Brahmā of himself?"

Lord Rudra took the form of Varuṇa and performed a sacrifice. Many hermits, all the devas, Agni and others, Vasiṣṭha (Exclamation in sacrifice) which took body, and all yajñāṅgas came to the sacrificial hall. All the expedients, all the glories which are thousands in number took shape and came to the sacrifice. Rgveda arrayed in garments of hermitism came there. All the omens, all the voices, all the emotions, all the etymologies of pronouncing Veda Sūktas, all the marahadvikas, Oṃkāra (the syllable Oṃ) the eye of all the Vedic metres and their theories, all restrictions and donations, all Vedas, Upaniṣads, accomplishments, Śavītī, the past, the near future and distant future, all came there. The Lord Śiva held everyone of them. He offered his spirit by his spirit. The sacrifice took many forms and shed radiances. Paramāśiva is heaven, the sky, the earth, the ether and the husband of the Earth, is the lord of all accomplishments, is noble and the lord of radiance. This Lord is lauded by the names Brahmā, Śiva, Rudra, Varuṇa, Agni, and Prabhlavātī. Śiva is the King of all the worlds. Penances, sacrifices, vows embalmed by fast, all the directions and gods of directions, Indras, celestial maidens, mothers of the worlds, all these assumed forms and came to the sacrifice in multitudes. Everybody who witnessed the sacrifice of Parāvencevarā, who was in the form of Varuṇa, was greatly pleased. Seeing the pleased celestial maidens standing in rows passion arose in Brahmā. He had seminal discharge. Āditya (the Sun) took the earth on which the semen fell and threw it into the sacrificial fire, which blazed furiously. Brahmā who became the offerer of oblation had discharge again. He got it in the sacrificial ladle and with recitation of spells offered it in the sacrificial fire as if it was ghee. The powerful semen contained the three attributes of Sattva, Rajas and Tamas. From the attribute of Rajas arose the living world which had activity as its purpose. Radiance is the quality of Sattva which entered the living and non-living world. It gives light to everything. It also gives the power of discrimination. From the semen offered in the fire, three sons with body and the attributes of demi-gods came out. The male who had originated from the flame called 'Bharjana' became Aṅgiras. The male who originated from the burning coals became Kavi. Over and above these three radiances, other radiances also originated from the sacrificial fire. From the Marlic (rays) of the fire. Marici the father of Kasaya was born. From the Kusa-grass spread on the floor of the hall of sacrifice, the Bala-khyas were born. Attu also was born from the Kusa-grass. The noble hermits called Vaikhanasas, who have grown powerful by penance and became the seat of all good qualities, were born from the sacrificial ashes. From the stream of fire which are the eyes of the sacrificial fire, the hardworn Adins were born. The rest of the Prajapati were born from the ears of the fire. From the pores of the skin of fire were born the hermits, from the sweat the 'chandas' (metre of Vedas) and from might, the mind. For this reason the Vedic scholars and knowers of the Sruti and those who see the superiority of Vedas, say that fire is a combination of all the gods. The trees that feed the fire are called Masis (months), the sap of the tree is called Paksha (half of the month i.e. full moon to new moon and new moon to full moon), the path of the tree is called night and day and the flames are called Mahaksas (auspicious moments). Rudras were born from the blood of fire and the golden coloured gods, the Mitras, also were born from the blood of fire. From the smoke of the fire, the Vayus, from the flames of the fire the Attus, and the Adityas of the extreme radiance were born. The planets and stars which stand in their places in the sky are the charcoal of the fire. Brahma declared that fire was Brahman, the supreme spirit, eternal and the giver of all wishes. The sinless Malada, who was in the form of Varuna said, "This sacrificial fire is mine, and I am the sacrificer." Soma, the sons born at the first fruits of the sacrifice are mine. So Bhrgu, Aigra and Kavi are my sons, no doubt. Let everybody who moves along the sky know that these three are my sons, the fruit of my sacrifice." Agni said, "These are born from my organs. They had been depending on me for their sustenance. So they are my sons." Brahma the teacher of all the worlds and the grandfather of all living beings, said, "They are my sons. I offered my sperm to the fire, and these sons were born therefrom. How can they be claimed by anybody else? Here, I am the utterer of the spell and the offerer of the sperm, I am the owner of the sperm. Am I not the owner of the fruit? There is no contest on the point that the birth of Bhrgu and others is from the emanation of my sperm." The Gods who heard these arguments bowed their heads before Brahma and greeted him, said, "Lord Brahma, It is not only us that are born from you, but the entire world of living and non-living is born from you. So let Agni and Deva in the shape of Varuna have their wishes." 12) Brahman and the giantess Karkata. In days of old, a ferocious giantess named Karkata lived on the northern side of the Himalayas. Because of the hugeness of her body and the scarcity of food she became famished. She began to do penance for the alleviation of her hunger and thirst. She stood on one leg in the Himalaya Mountain, fixing her eyes on the sun in the day and on the Moon in the night, and the severe penance continued for a thousand years. Then Brahma appeared before her and told her that she could ask for any boon. She said, "I wish to become a Suci (Needle) as hard as iron, having the form of disease. This is the boon I pray for, Brahma." Brahma blessed her and said, "Let it be so, my daughter, you shall be a sauci (needle) with the prefix 'V' that is Visvaki (Sapindic cholera). You can eat those who eat stale food, those who are wicked, those who sit in places where they ought not to sit and those who are hard-hearted. Enter into their bodies and affect their hearts, spleens and life-breaths. Thus carry out the work of destruction? You can affect both the good and the bad. But good people should not be killed. So to save them from death, you can use this mantra (spell).

Saying these words Brahma disappeared. Karkata made her body smaller and finally assumed the shape of a needle. After that she began her work by entering the body of those who had lost their energy because of illness, in the form of a needle of gout and caused cholera, and the body of those who were lean and worn and weary, in the form of internal cholera. Thus assuming two bodies and killing countless people she travelled for a long time in the earth and the sky, until she herself felt aversion to her work. When she remembered her original form she loathed the needle-form. Karkata again went to the vicinity of the Himalayas and began to do penance, which lasted for another thousand years. Thus she became pure and by the power of thinking, she acquired spiritual knowledge. Then she wanted to be saved from the mire of birth and death, to attain which, she did penance for yet another thousand years at the end of which, the highly pleased Brahma appeared before her and said, "Daughter Karkata, all the darkness is erased from your heart and you have attained deliverance from delusion. Now I will bless you according to your wish. Receive your original body and walk about in the world, eating the ignorant, bad beginners, the impudent, those whom you hate in bad places and dwell in bad places."

She became a giantess again, but as she had attained purity of soul, she engaged herself in deep meditation which was free from doubt. The meditation lasted for a long time. Finally her mind waned. Then she remembered about worldly things and felt hunger. She remembered, "Brahma has ordained the wicked as my food. So shall I seek them." Thinking thus she went to a jungle in the vicinity of the Himalayas. That was the dwelling place of foresters. In that dark night the King and the minister of the foresters approached the place where Karkata sat. Karkata seeing them thought, "Let me know first if they are good or bad." So she decided to ask them some questions.

She asked them in a voice like thunder, "Who are you? Are you enlightened sages or ignorant fools? say quickly." The King of the foresters hearing this replied in a cynical way. "You insignificant ghost? What is your form? Where do you sit? Let us see your powerless body. Who is there to fear at your sound which is like the humming of a she-beetle?"

Hearing this reply Karkata showed her tusk and laughed loud, to spread light and to verify them. They heard that loud roaring sound of her laugh and saw her huge form in the light. But those mighty heroes were not at all shaken by the sound they heard or the sight they witnessed. The Minister looked at her and said, "Hei, giantess? These delusions of yours will have no effect on us. Even if a number of mosquitoes like you come before us, they will be only dry leaves before wind. You are acting like this merely for food. So what is your need? Tell us, we will satisfy you”. Hearing the words of the minister Karkta knew that her might was useless before such valiant men. She thought them to be sages. So she said “Hey mighty heroes. Who are you? Tell me the truth”. The minister said: “This is the King of forest and I am his minister. We came to this walk to find out and punish wicked people like you”.

The giantess appreciated them and said: “I am about to put some questions to you. If you give me suitable answers you will be saved.” The King agreed. The questions put by her are given below in the order they were asked-

1) Inside what atom which is unit and multiple at the same time, do the lokhas of universes originate and vanish as bubbles in a sea?
2) What does shine as ether and non-ether?
3) What is that which is something and nothing?
4) What is that which is going and not going at the same time?
5) What is that which has taken form from voidness?
6) What is that which is moving and at the same time stationary as a rock?
7) Who draws pictures in clear sky?
8) In what seed do the worlds exist as a big tree in its seed?
9) From what substance can the living and non-living things in the worlds, not be separated as the foam and waves can be separated from the sea?
10) What substance is dualism not separate from (others) as fluidity from water?

The reply given by the minister to each question is given below in the order of the questions.

1) Hey, Giantess: All the questions you have put before us ceased in figurative words discernable only to the Vedda sages, are concerned with the supreme Being. The atom is the supreme spirit which is beyond all knowledge of the mind and the senses. As it is without organs of action it is an unmanifested as the sky.

2) The imperial supreme Being, having no substance, pervade everything. This supreme Being, Brahman, is pura knowledge (Jñānavarṇita). It is the sky and the non-sky.

3) As it is indescribable the imperial supreme spirit is nothing, but as it is a reality it is something.

4) As it pervades everything accessible, the imperial supreme spirit has the quality of motion. But as it has no emotions and as there exists no space beyond, it is motionless.

5) As it is inaccessible to others the supreme spirit is having no existence, but as it is the essence of everything that is good, it has existence.

6) The supreme spirit is the radiance of motion or activity and as there is nothing else to be found out, that is, as it doesn’t know anything else it is as rigid as a rock.

7) In the clear sky the supreme spirit draws the pictures of the universe.

8) Exists in the supreme atom.

9) As the entire visible world cannot be separated from the supreme spirit nothing is other than the impersonal supreme spirit.

10) The differentiations of the various worlds are mere appearances of the supreme spirit and so dualism is of the same figure.

The king drew Karkta nearer to the imperial supreme spirit. He advised her not to commit slaughter. She accepted the advice. The king asked her to come to his palace assuming the form of a beautiful woman. She asked, what could be a giantess as food. The king said: “You good woman, we shall find out a way for that. You change yourself to a beautiful woman wearing golden ornaments and stay in my palace for a while. I shall arrange to gather sinners, robbers and all other wicked people who are to be given capital punishment, in thousands from various places, and shall give them to you. You can take your original form and take them all to the peaks of the Himalaya and feed on them.

Gluttonous people like to eat in solitude. After having eaten sumptuously, take some sleep, and a little rest in meditation. When you wake up you come again and tie away people desired to be killed. The work done for the sake of righteousness is not a sin. It is said to be equal to mercy. When your desire for meditation is over you must come to me. If an attachment of love is formed even with bad persons it is difficult to break the love.”

Karkta obeyed the king. They all reached the palace. After six days thousand wicked persons were sentenced to death, were brought before the king, from his own country and the various dependent countries, and were given to Karkta. In the night she took her original form, gathered all the wicked people, who deserved killing and bidding goodbye to the king, went to the Peaks of the Himalayas (Jñānavaisāṭha).

Brahman and Hanuman: At the end of the day of Brahman there was the treat to the gods and to the demons. The king Brahmā went to sleep. He woke up next morning and after the usual morning ablutions, prepared for creation. He looked around at the sky, and saw some heavens still engaged in usual activities. He was amazed at this unusual occurrence. Ten Brahmās and the countless devas (gods) under them were doing their routine work. Brahmā stared at the worlds for a long time thinking “How is it”. Then he by his divine power caused one of the suns, working in a heaven, to come to him, and asked him. “Who are you, shining one? How have these worlds come into existence?”

The sun said with humility. “Your sons Marici and others erected a beautiful city called Suvarntaṇjam, in a corner of Jambudvipa in the valley below Kailāsa. A Brahmā named Indu arose from that hall. The Brahmā who was a Vedic scholar, righteous and peaceful, led the life of a house-holder with his wife for a long time. But they were childless. So they went to Kailāsa and did penance to get children. They entered a natural arbour which was quite silent and began severe penance. Śiva appeared and said that they would get children.

In course of time, ten sons were born to them. After a long time, when the sons had reached manhood the old parents died. The sons felt very sorry. They regarded life as short and full of woe and misery. So they went for penance, as they had no relatives left to care for them. They abstained from all the pleasures of the world and reached Kaśyapa. They began to meditate upon the shortness of life. “What is there which is noble in this world? Is there anything except woe and misery? How simple is the desire of man for greatness? One thinks himself prosperous if he becomes a house-holder. The head of the village is more prosperous than a house-holder. The King of a dependent state is more powerful than the head of a village. An independent King is far more prosperous than a dependent King. When we think of the state of an emperor how simple is an independent king! When compared with Indra, the Lord of the three worlds what is an emperor after all? But there is nothing glorious in the state of Indra also as it ends in a Brahmānudṛṣṭa (a period in the life of Brahmā). So what is there substantial and eternal? “Brahmā alone is eternal and indestructible,” said the eldest brother. “Concentrate your mind and say to yourself, ‘I am the supreme Being Brahmā seated on a lotus’, and meditate upon it and pray for it and knowledge of Brahmā will be conferred upon you.” They understood this and thus the ten brothers became Brahmās. There are ten heads of Brahmās. Brahmā is the sky of mind. I am the sun who creates day and night in one of them,” saying thus the Sun went away. Brahmā commenced his activity. (Jñānavāśītha).

14) The age of Brahmā. Forty-three crores twenty lacs of human years is one four-yuga period called “Devacaturyuga” (a period of four yugas of the devas or gods). One thousand four hundred yugas will make one Mahāyuga (great yuga). A Mahāyuga is a day time of Brahmā. During the period of one Mahāyuga, that is, during one day of Brahmā, fourteen Manus, one after another, help Brahmā in doing the work of creation. This is the time of the seventh Manus in the present day time (Kalpa) of the present Brahmā. The period of six Manus are over in the present day time of the present Brahmā. Vaivasvat is the present Manus. Brahmā wakes up in the morning—the beginning of a Kalpa. Those which underwent destruction in the night, are created again in the morning. As Brahmā wakes up daily in the morning, what are the things created before, which do not undergo destruction? At that time there will remain, without destruction, six or twenty-four tattvas (principles) which are natural creations. These twenty-four principles are not the creation of Brahmā. He who is beyond names, He who created Brahmā in the lotus flower, created them. Brahmā who was originated in the lotus which grew from the navel of Nārāyaṇa performs the work of creation guided by these twenty-four principles. The work of creation performed by Brahmā is called Pratīṣṭhāra (substitute creation). Everything Brahmā created in the day time will be destroyed in the evening. After a day time is over there is the night time and sleep for Brahmā. The life of Brahmā is hundred years, that is thirty-six thousand Brahmā days and one Brahmā nights. At the expiry of this period the life of Brahmā will come to an end, and will dissolve in Nārāyaṇa. Thus crores and crores of Brahmās have appeared and passed away and in future also crores will appear and pass away. (Bhāgavata).

15) The creations and substitute creations of Brahmā. The creations performed by Brahmā are of two kinds. The first is Sarga or creation and the second is Pratīṣṭhāra or substitute creation. In the first Kalpa when a Brahmā is born from the lotus, certain creations are made and the things thus originated do not undergo destruction in the evening or at the end of the Kalpa. They are the sarga or creation. On that day and every day of the life of Brahmā they help Brahmā in the work of creation. In a sense they could be called Pratīṣṭadhvam (the lords of emanation). But as most of them have not left sons, and for other reasons also, they are not well known by that name. Only the persons mentioned here have as long a life as that of Brahmā. The Sānakhas, Kardamana, Marici, Atri, Angiras, Pulasta, Pulaha, Kratu, Bhrigu, Vasistha, Dakṣa, Narada, Dharma, Adharma, Niṛti, Sarasvatī, Kāma, Atharva, the Manas, Agni, Sīhāṇu, and Śvāyambhūva: these do not end at the end of a Brahmā’s day (or Kalpa) and will be dissolved only when Brahmā is dissolved. A Brahmā creates in his first morning not only persons from Sānaka to Śvāyambhūva, but also creations which have a history only up to the end of that day, such as the lokas (worlds) of Bhūloka, Bhuvarloka and Svararloka, and minerals, plants, animals, humanity etc. Sarga or creation is called Purkṣa Śrāj (natural creation). Pratīṣṭhāna or substitute creation is called Aprkṣa Śrāj or unnatural creation. At the end of the Kalpa, Samantarākṣitī (Fire which destroys the universe) and Samvantaka varṣa (Rain which destroys the universe) will occur and all the unnatural creations will be destroyed. In all the morning, following the first morning of a Brahmā substitute creation takes place, and they are destroyed at the end of each Kalpa by Samantarākṣitī and Samvantakāra (Bhāgavata).

16) Other information.

(1) Brahmā was once born under the name Candra from the womb of Anāśya the wife of hermit Atri. (See Anāśya).

(2) From the passion of lust of Brahmā, a daughter named Sarasvatī was born and Brahmā married her. (See Sarasvatī).

(3) It is seen in Bhāgavata, Skandha 11, that the caste system came out from the mouth of Brahmā.

(4) It was Brahmā who gave the name Indrajīt (he who overcame Indra) to Mughlanda the son of Rāvaṇa because he had defeated Indra. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

(5) When the life time of Śri Rāma was about to come to an end, Brahmā sent Kāla (time—the God of death) in disguise to the presence of Śri Rāma. (See Rāma).

(6) In the burning of Tripruṇa, Brahmā was the charioteer of Śiva. (See Tripruṇa).

(7) Once Brahmā performed sacrifice on the head of Gayāśura (a giant). (See Gayāśīthra).

(8) Once Brahmā went to the hermitage of Vyāsa, and advised him to compose Bhārata and to propagate it in the world. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 55).

(9) It was Brahmā who gave the name poetry to the work of Vyāsa and employed Ganaśāni as the scribe of Vyāsa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 61).

(10) At the sacrifice of Varuṇa, Brahmā begot Bhrigu the hermit from the sacrificial fire. (M.B. Chapter 5, Stanza 8).

(11) Dakṣa was born from the right thumb of Brahmā and from his left thumb was born the wife of Dakṣa. (M.B. Ādi parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 10).
(12) Dharmadeva incarnated from the right breast of Brahmā. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 3).

(52) In almost all the Purāṇas Brahmā is called 'Catur-mukha' (having four faces) and to substantiate this the following story is given in the Matsya Purāṇa. Brahmā created Satārīpū with half the portion of his body, and accepted that bright and beautiful woman as his wife. He could not bear his beautiful wife to be away from his sight even for a moment. So much had he become attached to her.
One day Satārīpū was walking round Brahmā. The daughters born from his mind also were seated close by. So he could not turn round and round and look at his wife as she was moving. To solve this problem, in place of one face, there arose four faces.
Once Satārīpū was walking in the air. To see her at that time there arose a fifth head on the top of his matted hair. It is this face that was plucked off by Siva.
(53) Various stories occur in the purāṇas regarding how Siva plucked off the fifth head of Brahmā. They are given below.
(1) Once Brahmā praised Śiva and pleased him and asked him to become his son. Śiva did not like it. He got angry and cursed. "I shall become your son. But I will pluck off your fifth head."

(2) In the beginning Brahmā created the incarnation of Śiva, called Nîlalohita also, along with the creation of worlds and everything in it. In later creations Brahmā did not think of Nîlalohita. Seeing Brahmā carrying on the work of creation forgetting him, Nîlalohita got angry and cursed Brahmā, "Your fifth head will shortly be destroyed."

(3) After Brahmā became five-faced the brightness of the devas began to decrease day by day. Seeing this the conceited Brahmā said to Śiva: "I am the first who got existence in this world. So by all means I am the eldest." Hearing this Śiva got angry and plucked off the fifth head of Brahmā and threw it away. (Mâyapuruṣa, 183, 84-86).

When the fifth head was gone, the rest of the heads were benumbed. The sweat which flowed from them was thrown into the earth by Brahmā. Out of it came a terrible monster, which began to chase Śiva, who could not hold of it and gave it to Viṣṇu. (Skanda, 3, 13, 4).

(4) In the Śiva-Rudra collections a story occurs about the quarrel between Śiva and Brahmā. Once Brahmā fell in love with Sati the wife of Śiva; coming to know of this Śiva tried to kill Brahmā. Mahâ-viṣṇu tried to pacify Śiva, but it was of no avail. Śiva took away the fifth head of Brahmā and made him ugly, and consequently Brahmā became invisible in the world.

(5) Once Śiva showed his daughter Sândhīyâ to Brahmā who grew lustful instantly; Śiva invited Brahmā by showing this ill-owned passion of his to his sons (Brahmā’s sons). As a revenge Brahmā created Sati and invited Śiva through Dakṣa. (Skanda, 2, 2, 26).

(7) Various names of Brahmâ and their meanings: In Amârakosa, the following names are given to Brahmâ.

Brahmâ—he who increases.

BRAHMĀ. See Parabrahmâ.
BRAHMĀ. A kind of marriage. The bride is adorned with all kinds of ornaments and is taken to bridegroom; and given to him as wife. This is called Brahmā marriage. Mahâbhârata, Adi Parva, Chapter 73, Stanza 8 states that this mode of marriage was allowed to all the four castes of ancient Bhârata.
BRAHMĀBHIL. An individual of a dynasty of teachers.
(See Gûraparâmpara)
BRAHMÂCARI I. See Brahmacarya.
BRAHMÂCARI II. A devagandharva (a class of Gods) born at Kâtyâpaprajâpati of his wife Pûthâ. He took part in the Birth festival of Arjuna. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapters 65 and 122).
BRAHMÂCARYA. In ancient India an ideal life was considered to pass through four stages, and Brahmâcarya is one of the stages of life. The four stages are Brahmâcarya (Vedic student vowed to chastity), Gârhasthya (married householder), Vânaprastha (forest hermit) and Sannyâsa (an ascetic who has renounced the world). Brahmâcarya, the first stage of the four is considered as the period of education. The rules and conduct of a Brahmâcâri are given in Manusmriti, Chapter 2.

The Brahmâcâri who lives with the teacher has to obey certain rules and principles. He should bathe in the river at sun-rise and offer oblations to gods and manes. A Brahmâcâri has to abstain from using honey, meet, fragrance, flowers, flower of chrysanthemum (I. d.) women, cured, milk, ghee, churned-curd, slaughter, bathing oil, anointing the body with curritium, sandal, umbrella, lust, anger, covetousness, dance, music, gambling, slander, ridicule, falsehood, and causing injury to others. A Brahmâcâri should go to bed alone. Semon should not be made to discharge through lust. If seminal discharge occurs in dream he should take bath early in the morning and worship the Sun, pronouncing the mantra or spell 'Pûnâ' thrice. The Brahmâcâri should live on alms. It is the duty of the brahmâcâri to bring water, flower for oblation, cowdung, soil and durbhā (grass) for the teacher. He should receive alms only from the houses of those who believe in the Vedas and sacrifices. He should not go to the house of his teacher or his heirs and their families for alms. Provided there are no other houses he may receive alms from the houses of his teacher’s relatives and in the absence of such houses he may approach the houses of his teacher and in the absence of such houses he may receive alms from the house of the teacher. He should fetch ‘Camata’ (fuel chiefly from buxus ferox) from a place of purity in the forest, as instructed in rules and dry it in the sun; in the absence of which it may be got dried in a sheltered place. This thread should be put in the sacrificial fire in the mornings, at noon, and in the evenings. If a healthy Brahmacāri fails in doing his duties consecutively for seven days it will be considered that his vow of Brahmacarya is broken and then he will have to take the vow of Avakṣyagam again. Without waiting for the order of the teacher, the Brahmacāri (student) should engage himself in devotion and meditation and in the service of the teacher daily. When the student is before the teacher he should stand with folded hands controlling his body, speech, brain, sensitive organs, and mind. Only when he is asked to sit, should he do so before the teacher, lowering the portions of his body which are to be covered, with clothes. He should rise up in the morning before his teacher wakes up, and go to bed only after the teacher has retired for sleep. When his teacher calls him, he should not give reply lying, sitting, walking, eating or looking in the opposite direction. He should not gainsay the teacher. The student should attend to the orders of the teacher and comply with them sitting if the teacher is sitting, standing if the teacher is standing, standing close by when he is facing the opposite direction, folding his hands when the teacher is lying or sitting near. The student should have his seat and bed one step lower than that of his teacher. The student should not sit in a careless manner in places where the teacher’s eyes could reach. He should not utter the name of his teacher. If anybody speaks ill of his teacher he should close his ears and run away from the spot. If a Brahmacāri scoffs at his teacher, he will be born as a donkey and as a dog if he scorches him, and as a worm if he steals the wealth of his teacher and as a beetle if he becomes jealous at the greatness of his teacher. When the teacher is angry the Brahmacāri should not go near him. The Brahmacāri should not speak unasked. A Brahmacāri could sit with his teacher only when they are in a vehicle, or on a camel or in a tower or on the steps or on rocks or in a boat. He should consider the teacher of his teacher as his teacher. He should not address his parents who visit the house of the teacher, without the permission of his teacher. He should respect learned men, holy men, sons of the teacher and those who are born of his family, as a teacher. If the wife of the teacher is of the caste of the teacher, the brahmācāri should consider her as his teacher. If the wife is not of the same caste the brahmācāri needs only to stand up and make obeisance to her. A brahmācāri should not apply oil to the body of his teacher’s wife, wash her, massage her body, and comb her hair. A brahmācāri may even shave his head or grow matted hair. He should never sit at sunrise or sunset for learning Vedas etc. the student should not give the teacher cow’s ears, clothes etc. as free gifts beforehand. On completion of education, when the student asks the teacher for permission to get married, he should give the teacher what he demands. A brahmācāri who has fulfilled his vows can get married. If he dies before his vows are fulfilled, he will attain heaven after his death.

BRAHMADATTA I. A famous king of Kānpīlaya pura. 1) Birth. Brahmacatta was born in the family of Bhālakṣatra who was a viceroy of the Solar dynasty.

2) Pūjāvān birth and kunjyu. In Padmapurana, Chapter 10, there is a story stating how the seven sons of Kauśika, a hermit, became fishermen by a curse and how they got salvation and attainment of heaven by offering oblations to the manes. The story is given below. Brahmacatta was the birth of Pittavartti, one of those seven sons. In days of old there was a hermit named Kauśika in Kuruksetra. His seven sons, Śarīra, Krodhana, Himuna, Paśu, Kavi, Vāgdūstha and Pittavartti were studying under Garga, a teacher. Their deeds were as bad as their names indicated. Their father died. The sons were in want. There was no rain anywhere in the world. These brothers had taken the milking cow of their teacher Garga to the forest for grazing. They decided to kill the cow of their teacher. The youngest of them said, “If we kill the cow we can use it as offerings to the manes, and the sin will not be visited on us.” The elder brothers agreed to it. Accordingly Pittavartti killed the cow and began sacrifice to the manes. Two of the elder brothers were detailed to give oblations to the devas, and three of them to offer oblations to the manes. One was detailed to be the guest and himself as the sacrifice. Thus remembering the manes the sacrifice was completed with the necessary rituals. In short, those seven hermits got divine power and became daring wicked men and ate the cow of their teacher. They told the teacher that the cow was eaten by a tigress and gave him the calf. In course of time they all died and were born again as wild men in Daṇapura. But because of their offerings to the manes they had retained memory of their previous births. So they fasted in holy baths and discarded their lives before the people. They were born again as deer in the mount of Kāhalajā. Because of the power of knowledge and the penance and fast they discarded the body of deer in Prapatana and got rebirth as Čakraśīva (rudy goose) in the lake called Manasāsāras. In this birth their names were Sumanas, Kusuma, Vasu, Girardarshi, Sudarshi, Jñāta and Jñānapāraga, names suitable to their character. Those seven loving brothers were saints by virtue of their harmony with the Supreme spirit. But owing to mental disturbance three of them lost their attainment. Seeing the pleasures that King Anuha of Pañdāla was enjoying by his wealth, vehicles, big army and beautiful women one of the Čakraśīvas, Pittavartti, the devoted Brahma, who being loyal to his father had performed sacrifice and given offerings to the manes, desired to become a king. The other two brothers seeing the wealth, glory and power of the two ministers, wished to become ministers. Thus Pittavartti was born as the son of Anuha with the name Brahmacatta and the other two were born as Pundarika and Subalāka, sons of the two ministers. Brahmacatta was anointed as King of Pāñcāla in the great city of Kāmpīya. The King loved his father. He was mighty and powerful. He was regular in performing sacrifices and giving offerings to the mans. He had the attainment of harmony with the supreme spirit. He understood the thought and speech of birds and animals. He married Sannati, the daughter of Sudeva (Devada); she was in her former birth the cow of Garga.

One day the King was walking in the garden with his wife. He saw two ants. The minute creatures, who were husband and wife were engaged in a petty quarrel. The male one, with loving words, pacified the female one, who instantly came close to her husband and they became happy. The King felt anxious at this conversation of the ants, and he laughed. Because of the attainments of his previous lives, he had the power to understand the language of animals. Seeing the King laughing without any reason, the queen Sannati asked him why he laughed. She said that there was no reason whatsoever for the king to laugh just then. The King replied, "Oh, beautiful one! Just now there was a quarrel between a female and a male ant. I heard it. That is why I laughed. There is no other reason; the queen did not believe the King.

She thought that the King had been seeding her. She asked him how he came to understand the language of such creatures. The King could not answer her question. He fasted for seven days. On the seventh day Brahmā appeared before him and told him, "The King will know everything from the words of a Brahmin, whom the King would meet when he goes to walk in the streets."

Brahmadatta returned to the palace and spent the night there. Next morning he started with his wife and ministers, for a walk. When they left the palace they saw an old Brahmin coming towards them. Seeing the king the Brahmin recited a verse:

"Brahmanasa kārūnīkṛta
Vṛddhāṇaḥ putraḥ kṣīnatvā
Vṛddhāṇaḥ putraḥ kṣīnatvā dwajānāḥ ruddhi āceśānānām.

Then, are we, now living here?"

When the King heard this verse the memory of his former births revived and he fell down in a swoon.

This is a reason why the old Brahmin recited the verse. The Ruddy geese mentioned before took their next birth as sons of a poor Brahmin in the same way. They had the memory of their previous births. They were called Dhruvavati, Sarvadadhi, Vidyācandana and Tapodhika, names suitable to their character. The Brahmin boys decided to go for penance to attain supreme bliss. Then the poor father asked them, "My dear sons, what is this? You are going away leaving your poor and aged father. Is that dutiful?" The sons replied, "We will tell you a way to earn wealth. You recite to the King, to-morrow morning this verse, which we will teach you now. You will get plenty of wealth." The boys taught their father this verse and then they went to the forest. Their father, the old Brahmin, came to the gate of the palace at Kāmpīya. The King was Brahmadatta.

There is another story how Brahmadatta became the King of this place. Long ago Aruba, the King of Pāñcāla did penance before Brahmā, who appeared before the King and asked him what he desired. The King made his request that he might have a son who should be a mighty hero, a learned man, a great hermit and who could understand the language of all living creatures. Brahmā granted him both and thus Brahmadatta was born at Aruba. It was before this Brahmadatta that the Brahma recited his verse and it was that King who swooned and fell down.

The two ministers were Subhala the son of Bhābhroya who was the author of the Kāmāśāstra and Pundarika the son of Pāñcāla who propagated the science of medicine. They also remembered about their former births and also fell down unconscious. When they recovered the King Brahmadatta and the minister Subhala and Pundarika bemoaned the loss of powers they had attained before by devotion, meditation, penance and sacrifice. They cried, "Fate has made us desirous of the objects of our senses and we have lost our harmony with the Supreme Spirit." They repeated the cry again and again and they spoke about the blessings obtained by offering oblation to their mans. Brahmadatta gave the old Brahma plenty of wealth and several villages and sent him fully satisfied. Then he anointed his capable and fully qualified son Visvakarma as King and with his retinue returned to Mānasā-saras for penance.

1) A bird as his wife when he was King. When Brahmadatta was the King of Kāmpīya a bird named Tapatiya became his friend. Her head was purple coloured and body black. By and by this bird became the king's wife. A daughter named Sarvasena was born to Brahmadatta by his bird-wife. The King had sons by other wives. Tapatiya would wash her child and place her in the cradle early in the morning and then go to the forest and fly about in the air. She would return in the evening and tell the King news all over the world. It went on like this for a long time. Once, when there was nobody in the room a prince took Sarvasena from the cage and choked her to death. Tapatiya returned and seeing the dead body of her daughter waited for a long time. Finally she pecked out the eye of the prince and flew away into the air. (Harivalisana, Chapter 29).

BRAHMADATTA II. Another King who ruled over Kāmpīya. This King was the son of the hermit Gātī and his wife Somada, a Gandharva woman whose father was Urmilā. When he was ruling Kāmpīya, Kāmarūṭha was the King of Kānāiskoṭi. One hundred beautiful daughters were born to the King Kuṭamā. One day while they were playing in the jungle Vāturīyagā (wind god) saw them and grew lustful. But they did not yield to his request. So he got angry and cursed them and they became lumpy-backed. The King was very sorry. He presented his hundred lumpy-backed daughters to King Brahmadatta, who, by his divine power straightened their backs. When they regained their former form they became the wives of Brahmadatta. This story occurs in Vālmiki Kāmāya, Balākāyana, Sargas 32 & 33.

BRAHMADATTA III. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Bhāvishya Parva, Chapter 194, about another Brahmadatta. He was the King of Siva. Though he had two wives he had no children. Finally by the grace of Siva two children were born to them. They were called Hemā and Dībhaka. (For further information see Dībhaka).
BRAHMADATTA IV. A king who ruled over the country of Káti. One night he saw two swans flying in the air. They were of golden colour. There were a number of swans around them. They seemed like two lightnings in the midst of white clouds. Brahmadatta wished to see them again. His desire increased to such an extent that he had desire for nothing else. He consulted his ministers and made a lake. Every creature which seemed beautiful to him was brought to that place. Hearing these two swans also came there. By and by they tamed them and asked them how they got the golden colour. The swans said thus: "Oh King! you might have heard of the famous mountain Mandara, which is the field of games of the Devas (gods). At the time of the churning of the milk sea when this mountain was used as churn-drill, Amritá (celestial nectar of immortality) touched this mountain. So the flowers, fruits and roots in the vicinity of this mountain got the power of removing death, wrinkles etc. Candráčáda also will come to this mountain occasionally to play on the top of it and so it became more glorious than the mount Kaúśaka. One day while Mahádeva was playing in those gardens, he had to leave on an urgent matter concerning God. So he left Párvati there and went away. Devi began to walk about in those gardens with pangs of separation. Spring season came. The Gápas (servants of Siva) and the maids of Párvati attended on her. One day Mañjúśripevara, a Gápa, bankers after Candrálekhá, daughter of Jayá. She had been engaged in fanning Párvati and Amritá (celestial nectar). Candrálekhá reciprocated his love. Understanding this Pingelvara and Guhévala, two gápas looked at each other and smiled. Seeing this Devi looked round with anger to see what caused them to smile. They squinted their eyes and showed Mañjúśripévara and Candrálekhá to Devi. Because of separation she had been much worried, weary and sad. So all these affairs came to her mind. She said: "It is good that you behave like this when I am in this plight! The two are making love. Seeing that, you are laughing. May these two dots of fire be born on the earth and become husband and wife there. Let you two who laughed before me without humility also be born on the earth, first as poor Brahmánas, and then as Bráhmarájas (demon friends), outcastas, robbers, dogs with tails cut off and finally as various kind of birds." Thus she cursed the four of gápas. Then a gápa named Dhúrjáta said to Párvati: "Devi, this is a fortunate time. They have not committed any severe crime." Devi got angry at him and cursed him too: "May you also be born on the earth as a human being." After this Jaya the loved maid of Párvati requested her for absolution from curse, for all. The Devi said that all of them would get absolution at the place of penance of Bhráma and other gods and would return here. Of these, Candrálekhá and her husband and Dhúrjáta would be happy on the earth. The two others would lead a miserable life on the earth." (Káthádvanúpaniṣad, Padhávatilambha, Táranátha 1).

BRAHMADÈVA. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pândavas against the Kauravas. He was one of the ten Bhráma and the Supreme Being which is the root of the origin of the universe. At a time long ago, which is beyond reckoning, there was nothing but an egg. This egg was split into two and from it a male BRAHMADUMBARA. A holy place in Krunuksetra. In Mahábhárata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 71, it is said that this place is auspicious to Bhráma.

BRAHMÁNYA. Killing a Bráhmana is called Bhráma-náya. In ancient India killing a Bhráma was considered to be a great sin. He, who committed this sin had to build a hut in the forest and live there for a period of twelve years, or make an alma-pot called 'Kámavádivaśa' and wander about begging alms, to purify his soul, or else to attempt to jump into a blazing fire thrice with bowed head, or perform one of the three sacrifices Atrimedha, Svargit or Gosava. If none of these was possible, he had to give all the wealth he had to Bhráminas well-versed in Vedas, as gift. It is mentioned in Agni Purāna, Chapter 169, that if any of the vows mentioned above was performed he would be absolved from the sin of Bhráma-náya.

BRAHMÁJIT. A son of Kálanemi. (Bhrámaṇa Puráṇa 35:38).

BRAHMAMŚIDHYÁ. A river, famous in the Puráñas. Mention is made about this river in Mahábhárata Bhráma-parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 32.

BRAHMAMÚHOTÁ. The period of forty-eight minutes before the sun sets is called Brahmamúhota. The deity of this period is Bhráma. In Agni Purána, Chapter 155, it is instructed that one should wake up at this period and engage in prayer and meditation.

BRAHMÁNA. (BHRÁMAṆ). (1) Origin. Bráhmanas, Káatriyas, Vaiśyas, and Súdras are the catvarásyas or the four castes. The Puráñas say that the four castes originated from different parts of the body of Bhráma. See Kánuśánta, Chapter 1, Stanza 67.

"Sárvásyaśya tu sargasya
Guptyartham sa mahádyuth
Mukhabhútratpajánām Páhyaktamáphalpayāt.

(With a view to sustain the world, Brahms ordered activities, for the four castes (Bhrámaṇa Káatriya, Vaiśya, and Súdra) who were born from his face, arms, thighs and feet). From this statement it is seen that the Bhrámaṇas were born from the face, Káatriyas from the arms, Vaiśyas from the thighs and Súdras from the feet of Bhráma.

2) The activities of a Bhrámaṇa. The duties of a Bhrámaṇa are, performing sacriifice, learning Vedas and teaching Vedas, giving gifts and getting remuneration. A Bhrámaṇa has two births in one life. Till the time of investiture with the sacred string is one birth and from that period onwards is the second birth. So a Bhrámaṇa is called 'dvija' or twice-born.

The Bhrámaṇas were allowed to do the works of agriculture, keeping cows, trade and commerce and Kudála (money-lending). Living on the interest of money giving out as loan is Kusódha. But they should not trade on products from cow, jaggery, salt, lac and flesh. The suffix 'Sámaṇ' should be added to the name of Bhrámaṇa. A Bhrámaṇa can have four wives.

BRAHMÁNA(M). See Veda.

BRAHMÁṆA. The word BrahmáṆa means the apada of Bhráma (and-e.gg), the Supreme Being which is the root of the origin of the universe. At a time long ago, which is beyond reckoning, there was nothing but an egg. This egg was split into two and from it a male child with the radiance of innumerable suns came out. This wonderful child was helpless. After his birth he cried for a while, because of hunger and thirst. He got no help. There was nobody to feed it. So this wonderful child looked up and lay there. This helpless child was called 'Vīrāprūpa' (the next emanation from Brahmā) by those versed in the Purāṇas. The boy was so called because he was the most material of materiality. But he was an atom of atoms and the first figuration of God. From each pore of the skin of the great vīrā, who was the base of all the worlds, a universe came into being. Thus all the countless universes were born. Each universe has its own trinity of Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva and devas (the bright ones), the protectors of the eight zones. One universe comprises fourteen worlds or rājas, from Pāhāla to the Brahmāloka (from the nether world to the upper world or the realm of Brahmā). Countless such universes exist. Over and above all these universes there is Vaiśravatā, and above Vaiśravata there is another world with an area of fifty crore yojanas (league), called Goloka (the world of cow). The two worlds Vaiśvata and the Goloka are eternal. Bhūluka (the earth) consists of seven islands and sixty-four peninsulas. There are seven lower worlds and seven worlds below. The seven upper worlds are Bhūluka, Bhuvanalo, Svarga-loka, Janaloka, Tapoloka, Satyaloka and Brahmalo. Thus a universe consists of fourteen worlds. This is the idea given by the Purāṇas about Brahmāṇḍa. (Devī Brāhmaṇa-vata, Skandaḥ 9).

Mention is made, in the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amā 2, Chapter 7, about the construction of Brahmāṇḍa.

This Brahmāṇḍa, like the seed of the Kapuṭha tree (Vītara—'the wood-apple'), is covered under, above and all around by aparākṣa (eggshell). The aparā (egg) is covered by water ten times the egg in volume. This water-shell is covered by a shell of fire. Around the shell of fire there is the shell of air and the air-shell is covered with ether. Around the shell of ether there is the shell of water. The shell of earth is the shell of glory and the shell of glory is covered by Prakṛti, the Divine Nature. It is immeasurable. Prakṛti contains numberless Brahmāṇḍas. As oil exists in sesame, God pervades the whole universe. This is the connection between Prakṛti and Purāṇa. (The Nature and the Supreme Spirit).

BRAHMĀNḍA-PURĀṆA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. This purāṇa contains a talk by Brahmā about the glory of Brahmāṇḍa. There are twelve thousand verses in this purāṇa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 272).

BRAHMĀNḍAPĀṬIṬṬU. (Pāṭu—'song'). A performance connected with the temples of Kerala.

BRAHMĀṆJALI. When a disciple stands before his teacher he should have both his arms folded. Folding both arms in this way is called Brahmatilāli. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 2).

BRAHMĀṆṆALAYA. See Manvantara.

BRAHMĀṆṆAPUṆAṆA, (BRAHMĀṆṆAPUṆAṆA). This is a great book of twenty-five thousand verses taught to the great hermitage of Kārttikeya by Brahmā. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 271, that if a copy of this book is taken and offered to a Brahmīn on the full moon day of the month of VaśĪkha with cow and water, the giver will attain heaven.

BRAHMĀṆṆAPUṆAṆA. The abode of Brahmā. Brahmāpurāṇa is on the summit of Mahāmār, with an area of fourteen thousand yojanas (league). Around it is a city, at the four sides, (East etc.) and at the four corners (South-East etc.) there are eight towns, very big and beautiful, kept by eight protectors such as Indra and others. The river Cakṣus which springs from the feet of Mahāviṣṇu wets the whole of Gondarāṇḍala (Lunar region), falls down on the Brahmāpurāṇa and dividing itself into four rivers called Śita, Alakanāṇḍa, Cakṣus and Bhadrā flows in four directions. The river Śita flows through the top of the mountains and passes through the mountain in the east called Bhadrārī, falls in the Eastern Ocean. The river Alakanāṇḍa flows to the south and reaches Bhārata. Then it divides into seven rivers which unite in the ocean. The river Cakṣus passes through the mountains in the west and enters the country called Ketumālavarṣa and then flows into the ocean. The river Bhadrā passes through all the mountains in the north and flows through the north country of the Kūrīṇa and falls in the North Ocean. The mountain of Mahāyān in the west and the mountain of Gondaramadana in the east are as long as the mountain of Nilagiri in the north and the mountain of Mahāyān in the south. Mount Meru shaped like an earing stands in the middle of these four mountains. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amā 2, Chapter 21).

BRAHMĀṆṆALĀ. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 23, that the moment one visits this holy Bath in the river Ganges, one would attain heaven.

BRAHMĀṆṆALĀS. A holy place in Drāmarāyā. If a man fasts in this holy place for one night, he would reach the world of Brahmā. In this holy place there is a peg driven down by Brahmā himself. One who walks round this peg will attain the fruits of performing a Vājapeya yajña (a drinking sacrifice). There is another holy bath of the name Brahmatrās in Gayā. (M.B. Amāśāna parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 92).

BRAHMĀṆṆAVANTI. Tenth Manu. (See Manvantara).

BRAHMĀṆṆAS. See Brahmatrās.

BRAHMĀṆṆASTHANA. A holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 103, that a person who visits this holy place will get the fruits of performing Aṅvanāyā yajña. (Horse sacrifice).

BRAHMĀṆĀstra. This is known by another name Brahmatirāstra also. This weapon was given to Agastya by Śiva. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 9, that Agastya gave this weapon to Agrāvā, who gave it to Drūga and Drūga gave it to Arjuna and instructed him about the use of it as follows:

"You should never shoot this arrow at man. If it is used against a mean people the three worlds would be destroyed. It is said that this weapon has no parallel in the world. Keep this pure, and give ear to what I say. If an enemy, other than human being attacks you, this weapon may be used to kill him in battle."

BRAHMĀṆŪTTHA. A holy place in Kurunāṭhara. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 113, that a non-brāhmaṇa who bathes in this holy place will attain Brahmāṇāvata, (the state of being a brahmaṇa).
BRAHMATUNGA. A mountain. Arjuna dreamed that Śrī Kraṇa and himself went to the presence of Śiva. Brahmätunga was a mountain that Arjuna saw on the way in his dream-travel. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 51).

BRAHMAVAIVARTAPURĀNA. One of the eighteen Purāṇas. Śāvārini Maṇu taught this Purāṇa to Nārada. The theme of the Purāṇa is the story of Rādhandhara. This Purāṇa contains eighteen thousand verses. It is stated in Āgni Purāṇa, Chapter 272, that this Purāṇa is good to be given as a gift on the full moonday of the month of Māgha.

BRAHMĀVARTITA. A holy place situated in Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 53, that he who takes a bath in this holy place will go to the world of Brahmā. Maṇuprithivi, Chapter 2, Stanza 17, refers to this Brahmatvarta.

Maṇu says as follows:

"Sarasvativedayatayodesvanjavitad安东尼 / Taddevanimitāni deśām Brahmatvartvam prakāśita. //

"The place between the two rivers Sarasvatī and Drāvadvat is called Brahmāvarta, which was made by the devas."

BRAHMAVEDHYA. A river, famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made about this river in Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 30.

BRAHMAYAJNA. A special sacrifice to be performed by a Brāhmin only. The rules and rituals of the sacrifice are given below:

The Brāhmin should rinse his mouth three times. Then he should wipe his mouth twice and face once. Then he should take water in his hand and sprinkle it on his hands and legs, and then sprinkle it on his head, eyes, nose, ears, chest and forehead. After that uttering the name of the place, date, time, star etc. he should say to himself, "I am beginning to perform Brahmayajna." For this he should have to place two darbhas (grass—Poa cynocephala) in his right hand, three in his left hand, one on the seat, one each on his Brahmastring (sacred string worn by brāhmins), hair and legs, and then think of the time, place, etc. and say to himself, "I am about to perform Brahmayajna to please the gods known in the Sūktās (hymns in the Vedas for the absolution of all my sins)." Then recite Gāyatrī (sanskrit) thrice. Then recite the following Vedic mantras or spells, in the order given: Mantras beginning with; "Āgnihotre", "Yadāgāna", "Āgnirvai", "Mahāśāma", "Pāṁdhāna", "Satōmārapāṇamānava", "Mahāvāraṇya", "Ug tvorje", "Agānāyāhi" and samsādevī. Then in conformity with the number of brāhman used, he should recite the grammatic Śutra known as Vṛddhirādāc. (Devī Bhāgavata, Skanda 11).

BRAHMAYONI. A holy place in Kurukṣetra. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 143 that one who bathes in this holy bath will attain the world of Brahmā.

BRAHMĀHUTAM. A sacrifice. There are five kinds of sacrifice, known as: Abhuta, Huta, Prahuta, Brahmatuta and Prāchita. Abhuta is sacrifice to Brahmā, Huta is sacrifice to devas or Gods, Prahuta is sacrifice to Ghosts, Brahmatuta is sacrifice to man and Prāchita is the sacrifice to the manes. (Manusmṛti, Chapter 3).

BṚBU TAKSA. A king of the period of the Vedas. He was liberal and interested in architecture and all kinds of construction work. In the Rg Veda and Sāmkhyāya Sūtras Śrīta Sūtra mention is made that this king offered plenty of presents to the hermit BharadvaJa.

BṚDHĀSA. A king. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 96, that Agniya once went to this king and begged him for wealth.

BṚHADANTA I. A king of the country known as Udkita. Once in a battle, Arjuna defeated this king. Thenceforward he was friendly with the Pāṇḍavas. Bhṛhadanta offered Arjuna a good deal of costly presents. In the battle of Bhṛharata, this king fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas and was killed in the battle. (M.B. Saṁhitā Parva, Chapter 27, Ādi Parva, Chapter 185, Udiyogī Parva, Chapter 4, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23 and Kṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 9).

BṚHADANTA II. Brother of the king Kṛṣṇadhūrti. He fought against the Kauravas and was killed in the battle. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 25; Kṛṣṇa Parva Chapter 5).

BṚHADĀŠYA I. An ancient hermit. He had much respect for Dharma pura. It is stated in the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 52, that Bhṛhadāṣya went to the forest Kāmyaka with 30,000 people and narrated the story ‘Nalopākhyāna’ to Dharmaputra in order to divert his mind from the thought of the loss of his kingdom. When he had finished the story he taught Dharma pura, the two important spells, Akṣaraśaya and Aḍāśiśaya.

BṚHADĀŚYA II. A king of the Ikṣuūk dynasty. His father was Śravasta. The King Kuvalayāvasa was the son of Bhṛhadyasva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 7).

BṚHADĂTMA. A king of the Aṅga dynasty. (Āgni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

BṚHADBALA I. A king in ancient India. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 237).

BṚHADBALA II. Son of Suba, a King of Gāndhāra. He was present at the Pāñcatī Śayāmvara (marriage of Pāñcatī) with his brothers Śakuni and Vṛṣa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 183, Stanza 5).

BṚHADBALA III. A king of the country known as Kosala. During his conquest of the East, Bhūmaśena defeated this King. This powerful King of Kosala had given fourteen thousand horses, for the Ṛṣi śastra (imperial inauguration) of Yuddhishṭhira. He fought with Abhimanyu and Ghatotkaca in the battle of Bhṛharata. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Droṇa Parva, Chapter 40, Stanza 29, that Abhimanyu killed this Bhṛhadbaḷa in the battle.

BṚHADBALIKĀ. An attendant of Subrahamanyas. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 4).

BṚHADHĀNU. A fire. A hermit who had acquired great knowledge in Vedas and Vedāṅgas (scriptures) also has this name. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 291, Stanza 8).

BṚHADHĀSA. See Bhṛhadkirti.

BṚHADHĀŚA. A daughter of the Sun. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 221, Stanza 9, that Bhṛhadhāśa was the wife of the Agni (fire) called Bhānu.

BṚHADHĀRA. See Bhṛhadkirti.
BRIHADDAHALA I  A great King of Kosala. He gave fourteen thousand best horses for the Rājasīya (imperial inauguration) sacrifice performed by Yudhishtira as present. In the battle of Mahābhārata, Bṛhadhala sided with the Kauravas and fought against the Pāṇḍavas and was killed in the battle by Abhimanyu. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, 46; 24; Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

BRIHADDAHALA II. The son of Subala, the king of Gandhāra—Bṛhadhala attended the Pañcārīva Svayamvāra (marriage of Pāñcālī), with his brother Śākuni and Vṛṣaṅka.

BRIHADDAHALA III. A king of the Yādavas. He was the son of Devabhāga, the brother of Vaśudeva. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

BRIHADDAHALADHAVAYA. A hermit who was a leper. It is stated in Bhāma Parva of Bhāvaya Purāṇa that this hermit recovered from leprosy by Sun-worship.

BRIHADDAHALADHAVAYA. A Rākṣasa (giant). This giant wandered about stealing the wealth and women of others. One day Bṛhadhādha happened to meet with Keśiṇi, the beautiful wife of king Bhimakesa. The lustful giant was about to take her away, when she told him thus:—‘I hate my husband very much. So I am ready to come with you, of my own accord.’ Taking her in his chariot the giant went to Gaṅgāsāgara amāgama. When she learned that this place was under the rule of her husband, she died of fear. Being unable to bear separation from Keśiṇi, the giant also died. As these two had died at the holy place of Gaṅgāsāgara amāgama, both attained the world of Viṣṇu. (Skanda, Kṛṣṇāpara). Bṛhadhavayana.

A river in India. This river is famous in the Purāṇas. Mention is made about this river in Mahābhārata, Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 32.

BRHAHDARBAHA. Son of emperor Śili. (For further information about him see Aṣṭaka).

BRHDGIRI. A person named Yati. He was one of those who were against sacrifice. (For further information see Giri).

BRHDGGURU. A king in ancient India. Mention is made about this king in Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 233.

BRHDGKUŚU. A king of the family of Bhārata, (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

BRHDGISHA. A king of the Puru dynasty. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 279).

BRHDHATII. A king. He went to the forest to lead a life of retirement after having installed his eldest son on the throne. He began to do penance in the forest for the attainment of heaven. One day the hermit Śākayan in appeared before him and told him that he might ask any boon. Accordingly the king said, ‘Tell me, what eternal Truth is and give me Spiritual knowledge.’ The hermit complied with his request. (Maitri Upanisad).

BRHDHATORA II. A king of the Ārīga family. It is stated in Aṇgipuruṣa, chapter 277 that he was the son of Jayadratha and that Viśvāmitra was the son of Bhṛdratha. The Lāmuras, a forest tribe of the mountain of Gṛīḍhakī, were saved by the King from the attempt of extermination of the Kastriyas by Parāśurāma. (Mahābhārata, Santi Parva, Chapter 49; Droṇa Parva, Chapters 57 and 62).

BRHDHATORA III. A king of the Puru dynasty. This Bhṛdratha was one of the seven sons of Gīrīkā, Kula, Yado, Pratyaṅga, Bala, Matsyākha and Vṛṣa were the brothers of Bhṛdratha. A son named Kaūṣṭra was born to Bhṛdratha. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 275).

BRHDHATORA IV. Son of Upārīca, the king of Cedi, Upārīcā made his son Bhṛdratha, King of Magadha. In course of time he became a powerful emperor. This Bhṛdratha was a mighty warrior-king with an army of three aśāvahāna (an aśāvahana is a complete army consisting of 21,970 horse- and 102,550 infantry). Though he had married two daughters, the King of Kaśā he was childless. The sorrowful king went with his wives to a hermit named Cāndakādhūka and pleased them by giving them precious stones. The King told the hermit about his sorrow due to lack of children. The hermit gave them a mango fruit and said that the King should enthroned the son who would be born by eating the mango, and return to the forest for penance. The hermit gave eight bourns for the son who was to be born.

The King and his wives returned to the palace and divided the mango fruit into two and both of his wives ate the fruit and became pregnant. Each of them gave birth to a child. The lifeless forms of these half children were thrown out. A giantess called Janma joined them together and instantly the pieces joined together and became a living child. The giantess took that child and made a present of it to the King. That child grew up and was known by the famous name Jārāsandha. From that time onwards Giantess-worship began in Magadha. When Jārāsandha came of age the King appointed him to the hermitage of Cāndakādhūka with his wife and began to do penance. After coming to the forest Bhṛdratha killed a giant named Rṣabhā and with his bête made three Big drums and placed them in the city. The sound of one beat on the drum will last for a month. When Bhīma, Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to Magadha to kill Jārāsandha they broke these drums. (M.B. Ādi Parva, 53; Sābhā Parva, Chapters 17, 19 and 41). Bṛhadhatarav. A king who lived in a portion of an asura named Śūkṣma. This king was present at Pañcāl svayambara (marriage of Pañcālī). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 105).

BRHDHATORA VI. An Agni (fire). As this Agni is the son of Varuṇa he has got the name Vasuśīva also. A son named Pracūra was born to this Agni. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 220).

BRHDVATI. A river in India, pūrṇically famous. Mention is made about this river in Mahābhārata, Bhīma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 30.

BRHDVISA. A king of the family of Bhārata. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

BRHDKUŚ. He was the son of the hermit named Pāñcajanya. He was transformed to a god, who is remembered at the beginning of the sacrifice known as agnihotra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Stanza 13).

BRHDHYUMNA. See Arvāvasu.

BHJAYOTI. The son born to Arvāvasa of his wife Subhā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 218, Stanza 2).

BHAKA. A deva Gandharva. (A class of God). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 57 that this Gandharva was present at the Birthday celebration of Arjuna.

BRHNANMAI. See Bhātikirti.
BRHANMANAS II

BRHANMANAS II. A hermit. This hermit was one of the seven sons born to Aṅgiras of his wife Sumā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 206).

BRHANMANTRA. See Bhārati.</BRHANMEDAS. A king of the Yudāvas. He was the son of Vapuśmān and father of Śrīdeva. (Śrīmṛta Purāṇa, 1.24:1-6).

BRHIANNA. The name adopted by Arjuna during the concealment of the Pāṇḍavas in the Kingdom of the Vṛṣṇis (for further information see Arjuna).

BRHANTA I. A king, Yudhikāra performed a horse sacrifice. Arjuna was taking the sacrificial horse round, for the conquest of the North when King Brhanta opposed him. Arjuna defeated him and brought him under subjugation. He presented Arjuna with a large quantity of precious stones. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 177).

In the battle of Mahābhārata Brhanta fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas, and was killed by Dūśasāna. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 4).

BRHANTA II. A warrior on the side of the Kauravas. He was the brother of Kṛṣṇadhvaja. Brhanta was killed in a fight with Śāyāki. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 4).

BRHANTA. One of the seven mothers of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 118, Stanza 10).

BRHASPATI. The teacher of the devas (Gods).

1) Birth. The father of Brhaspati was Aṅgiras, the son of Brahmā. Brahmā grew anxious, at the sight of some celestial maidens who were present at a sacrifice performed by Rudra; and he had seminal flow. Vitūrīa, the siren, sends in fire. From that time the devas such as Marici, Bhṛgu, Aṅgiras and others were born. The name Aṅgiras was given because he was born out of aṅgāra (live-coal). Eight sons were born to Aṅgiras by his wife Vamūda. They were Ustāthya, Brhaspati, Vavyāsa, Sānti, Ghora, Vīrūpa, Sāvamarta and Sudhānvā. All of them were sages who had attained oneness with the supreme spirit by knowledge, and who had been free from worldly pain. Of them Brhaspati, Ustāthya and Sāvamarta became famous through all the worlds. In some purāṇas Vamūda, the mother of Brhaspati, is given the name Śraddhā also.

It is stated that Brhaspati had a sister named Aṅgirā. She was a follower of the Brahman cult. She became the wife of Prabhāsa the last one of the eight Vivas. Vīvā—armā was her son. (Bhāgavata Skandha 4, Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 6).

2) Is Brhaspati the son of Agni? In some purāṇas Brhaspati is described as the son of Agni. Its authority is given below. Aṅgiras, the father of Brhaspati was once doing penance in his hermitage. When the fire of penance increased the brightness of the real fire, Agni (fire) stood before Aṅgiras and said "O Lord! If your brightness surpasses mine. From this day onwards you are the real fire. So you shall be the first fire and I will be the fire of Prajāpati which is the second fire."

Because of this boon of Agni, the devas (gods), recognized Aṅgiras also as a fire-god. So in some Purāṇas Brhaspati is mentioned as the son of Agni (fire-god). (Bhāgavata, Skandha 4).

It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 229, that the mother of Brhaspati had another name, Subhā, and that Brhaspati had six more brothers, born later, named Brāhākṛiti, Bhaṭṭiyu, Bhṛdahṛṣṇa, Bhṛdakaṁṣa, Bhṛdāntrapita and Bhṛdābhāka and that Aṅgiras had the name Bhānumātha also.

9) Teacher of the Devas. The story of how Brhaspati became the teacher of the devas, is given in the Bhāṣṭābhārata, Chapter 76 as shown below:

"The Suras and the asuras (the gods and the demons) became enemies from time immemorial, regarding the possession of wealth and prosperity in the three worlds. To secure victory in the battles the gods made Brhaspati their teacher and likewise the asuras made Sukra their teacher."

The devas and asuras began to fight for prosperity and wealth. At that time the devas selected Brhaspati and the asuras selected Sukra, as their teacher.

4) The conjugality of Brhaspati. Tārā was the wife of Brhaspati. She was very beautiful. Seeing Candrā's handsome figure she doted on him. There arose several quibbles over this affair. Finally the devas intervened and Tārā was given back to Brhaspati. Budha was born to Candrā by Tārā. The individual called Tārā in the family of the monkeys, was a son of Brhaspati. It is mentioned in Vālmikī Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Sarga 17, Stanza 10 as follows, which proves this fact.

"Brhaspati begot the mighty monkey Tārā." In the Rāmāyaṇa, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 19, Sūkta 28, it is mentioned that Brhospati had a daughter. Her name was Romśā. When her husband teased her Romśā said to her husband: "You please come and feel your hand on my body. Don't think that my organs are small. Though I am hairy like the goats of Gandhāra, I have got all the organs fully grown." This is the statement in the Rāmāyaṇa. In the Utrāna Rāmāyaṇa, it is stated that Brhospati had a Brāhmana son named Kuśadhvaja, and that a daughter named Devavati was born to Kuśadhvaja. Devavati was born from his mouth while Kuśadhvaja was engaged on devotional recitation of the Vedas. Sitā was the rebirth of this Devavati. It is stated in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 69, that Drona, the son of Bharadvaja, was born from a portion of Brhospati. Kacca was another son of Brhospati. For full particulars of the story how Devavati (daughter of Sukra) hankered after Kaśa, see 'Kaca': Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 219, Stanza 1, that Brhospati had a wife called Gāndhāramatī and that the gave birth to six Agnis. In Kāmpa Rāmāyaṇa, Yudhakāṇḍa mention is made that Brhospati had a daughter named Sulekhā. Six sons and a daughter were born to Gāndhāramatī. The six sons were six Agnis (fire) : In sacrifices the burnt offerings and the ghee were the portions meant for the great and mighty fire Śāmyu, the son of Brhospati. It is to satisfy this great fire which blazes with numberless pointed tongues, that in sacrifices such as Cāturmāya, Aivameṣa etc. animals are slaughtered. The daughter of Dharmas was the wife of Śāmyu. The name of the wonderful being (Sāmyu's wife) is Sāiyā. A son named Dipi and three daughters were born to Śāmyu. The son of Dipi is Bharadvaja who is the recipient of first portion of Ghee oblated in sacrifice. On all full-moon days offerings of sacrifices are meant for Bharadvaja. Bharadvaja had a son named Bhārāva and a daughter named Bhārāti. Bharadvaja the Agni is said to be the son of the Agni who is Prajā—Bṛhaspati. Thus Bṛhaspati got the famous name ‘the great’. Bṛhaspati married Vīrā and a son was born to them called Vīra. This Vīra like Soma is the recipient of sacrificial ghee, according to the belief of the Bṛhadmaṇḍas. As this Vīra is the recipient of the second ghee offered in sacrifice, as Soma, he is known by names such as Rathaprabhu, Raṭhadvāna and Kumbharetas. Vīra married Nāgāva and became the father of Śiddhi—Śiddhī the Agnidvarsī—who is remembered in all fires and ten of the ten of Brahma’s fires. The last fire in which has no action on present fame and vigour has the name Nīcīyavāna. Nīcīyavāna praises the earth. Satya is the son of Nīcīyavāna. Satya which blazes by flame determines time. Satya is known by another name Nīśkṛtī. The Agni Svāna spreads diseases. The Agnis called Vipulaśubha, Yatutumā and Brahmaśri are invoked in simple domestic sacrifices by Brahmans. The awful fire Bāḍavāna is supported by life. The sixth son of Bṛhaspati and Tārā is called Śvetākyā. The oblation offered to this Agni is known as Udādvara. Svāhā was the daughter of Candraśvetā. Svāhā had three sons. They are three Agnis called Kāmāgni, Aṃogha, and Uṣṭhira. (Bṛhāvata, Sandhā 4).

Bṛhaspati thought of making the best use of this period. He presented himself as Śukrācārya and went to the Aśuras, who thinking that their teacher had returned after a long penance gave him a loving and sincere welcome. Bṛhaspati sat on the seat of Śukrācārya and began to exhort the asuras in such a manner that within the period of ten years he was able to remove factionalism and hatred from them.

At the expiry of ten years’ invisible life Śukra returned having sent Jayantī away. The asuras saw two Śukras together and were amazed. They declared that the real Śukra was he who had been teaching them for the last ten years. Being dismayed at the ingratitude of the asuras he cursed them that they would shortly be destroyed and then left the place. At this juncture Bṛhaspati also assumed his rea form and returned to heaven. Thus the asuras became a people without a leader like sheep without a shepherd. At last they approached their teacher Śukra who became their teacher again, when they begged for his pardon. But he said that his curse could not be recalled. But he gave them absolution by saying that they would regain their lost power during the time of the Manu Sāvāni. (Devi Bṛhāvata, Sandhā 4).

7) Cursing Rāvaṇa. Once Rāvaṇa was returning haughtily and proud after having defeated the devas and conquered heaven, when Sulekha the daughter of Bṛhaspati got terrified and ran away to hide herself from him. Rāvaṇa chased her and when she was caught he ordered to ravish her. Bṛhaspati got angry and cursed Rāvaṇa. “You, who have grown rich by the darts of Cupid, will meet with death by the darts of Rāma”. (Kampa Rāmaśaya, Yuddha Kanda).

8) Bṛhaspati and Hanumān. Aśānā the mother of Hanumān was a servant of Bṛhaspati in her previous birth. Her name then was Puṣṭikākṣa. She once went to fetch water. At that time many Vidyādhars young people, both male and female, came there and engaged in amorous acts. Puṣṭikākṣa witnessed these love-scenes for a long time and then returned home. It is mentioned in Kampa Rāmaśaya that Bṛhaspati cursed her to be born in the next birth as a female monkey. Aśānā gave birth to Hanumān. When he grew up Hanumān desired to learn Vedas and Sanskrit (scriptures). Hanumān approached Bṛhaspati to learn from him. But Bṛhaspati was not prepared to teach a monkey who jumped about everywhere. The disappointed Hanumān went to the Sun, who asked him how it could be done by him as he was engaged in travelling without stop. Hanumān said that he would move in front of the sun always. Thus Hanumān who had been rejected by Bṛhaspati became the disciple of the Sun. (Uttara Rāmaśaya).

9) Other information.

(1) It is mentioned in Devi Bṛhāvata, Sandhā 1, that Bṛhaspati was the teacher of the hermit Suka.

(2) In Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51, it is instructed that Bṛhaspati should be consecrated in temples as wearing a necklace of beads (Elaeo carpus seeds) and a water pot.

(3) Mention is made in the Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 169, Stanza 21 that Bṛhaspati gave Bhrādvāja Agnayāstra (the arrow of fire).

(4) During the period of emperor Prithu, when the Earth-goddess was changed into a cow the gods employed Bṛhaspati to milk the cow to obtain the things they needed. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 69).

(5) Once Bṛhaspati gave Subrahmaṇya a stick as a present. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 46).
(6) Once Bhraspati advised Indra to use sweet words. (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 86).
(7) Once Bhraspati got angry with Mahâvîsiu at the sacrificial hall of Uparícarasúva. (M.B. Sânti Parva, Chapter 336, Stanza 14).
(8) Bhraspati cursed the Jaladevátás (goddesses of water). (M.B. Sânti Parva, Chapter 242, Stanza 27).
(9) Bhraspati and Candra are said to be Brâhma’s Kings. (M.B. Avamadâ Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 8).
(10) Candra: Bhraspati was a deep thinker and one who had firm convictions in many matters. He was a man of vast knowledge. Every movement of the gods had its origin in the brains of Bhraspati. There is no philosophy which does not contain the exhortations made by Bhraspati at various times to the devas (gods) or kings or hermits.

BRÂHÂTKARMA  A king of the family of Ainga. (Agni Purâna).

BRÂHÂTKÂTHA  See Guṇâdhya.

BRÂHÂTKAYA  A king of the family of Bharata. (Brâhâvata, Skandha 8).

BRÂHÂTKITI  A king in ancient India. His name is made about this king in the Mahâbhârata, Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 237.

BRÂHÂTKIRTI  A son of Aşigars. Mention is made in Mahâbhârata, Vana Parva, Chapter 218, that seven sons, named Brâhâkirdti, Brâhâjyoti, Brâhâdhronâna, Brâhâdmanâ, Brâhadmantra, Brâhadbhrâsa and Brâhspatî and a daughter named Brâhrudâmûti were born to Aşigars and his wife Subhû.

BRÂHÂTKRÂJÀ  A king. Scion of the family of Bhagiratha. In the Mahâbhârata, Adi Parva, Chapter 158, Stanza 21, it is mentioned that this king attended Pârdâl Svayamvûra (Marriage of Pârdâl).

BRÂHÂTKRÂJÀ  II. A king of the country called Kekaya. On the first day of the battle of Bhârata at Kuruksetra, this king fought with Krpa, the teacher. Later he was killed Krimchadhârî in the battle. In Mahâbhârata, Drona Parva, Chapter 125, mention is made that he fought with Drona, the teacher and was killed.

BRÂHÂTKRÂJÀ  III. A king of the country known as Nishadh. In the battle of Bhârata, he fought on the side of the Kauravas and was killed in the battle, by Dhrishtijivanâ (Drona Parva, Chapter 337, Stanza 65).

Bhârata: Bhraspati was king of the Purâ dynasty. King Suhotra was his father. King Brâhspatî had three sons, Ajandîtha, Dvîmîtha and Purumîtha. (Agni Purâna, Chapter 278).

Bhârâtâsama  A teacher born in the family of Aṣigars. The Ksatriyas of his time had troubled and harassed him a great deal. Mention is made in Atharva Veda that the Ksatriyas met with destruction as a consequence.

Bhârâtsma  (M.). The name of a hymn. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvâka 10, Sakta 52).

Bhârâtsena  A king born of the family of Bharata. (Brâhâvata Skandha 9).

Bhârâtsena II  An asura (opponent of gods) born from a portion of Krodhavâsa, a daitya (asura). Laksmâna, the daughter of Bhârâtsena was one of the wives of Sri Kûpa. In the battle of Mahâbhârata, Bhârâtsena was on the side of the Kauravas.

Bhârâtsena III  A teacher. It is mentioned in Gauraḍa Purâna that Nârâda had taught Bhraspati, Brâhma-vidyâ (theosophy).

Bhârâtsena  A female attendant of Damayantî. Mention is made in Mahâbhârata, Vana Parva, Chapter 60, that when Nala was defeated in the game of dice, Damayantî sent Bhârâtsena to inform the ministers about the defeat of the King.

Bhârâtâ  Another name of the Sun. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 42).

Bhârâtâ II  A king born to Kâleya, an asura. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 59).

Bhârâtâ  (M). A song of Sâma (composition—one of the four expedients) originated from the head of hermit Pûrâñjanya. From the face of this hermit another song of Sâma called Kauhantara also originated. These two songs of Sâma are very effective expedients. So they are called Tarâsrîras (quick effective). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 229, Stanza 7).

Bhârâti  Mother of Cûkumarsu, Two sons, Sîghi, and Bhavya were born to Dhruva by his wife Sambhû. Surchâya, the wife of Sîghi gave birth to five sons, Ripu, Rûpanjâya, Vipra, Vrkal and Vrkaçâjas. These sons were sîsîîs. Bhati was the wife of Ripu. Cûkumarsu was born to Ripu and Bhati. (Vîşnu Purâna, Amâsa 1, Chapter 13).

Bhârâti II  One of the seven horses of the Sun. The seven horses of Sun are, Gâyatris, Bhati, Ushîk, Jagati, Trijî, Anuvîp and Paikiti. (Vîşnu Purâna, Amâsa 2, Chapter 8).

Bhârâtva  A devgañchârava (a class of gods). In the Mahâbhârata, Adi Parva, Chapter 125, mention is made that this king born had participated in the birth celebration of Arjuna.

Bhârâna (Bilhana)  A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 11th century A.D. Bhrâna is the author of Vikramâdâvavani, Caurapâcâsikâ, Karpausandhari and such other works. Of these Karpausandhari is a four-act play. The theme of the play is Kâmedeva the king of the Cûkayas marrying Karpausandhari, a vidyaâdharî woman. The King at first sees her in a dream and falls in love with her. She then appears before him in the guise of a boy. But the intelligent minister recognizes her by her fragrance and introduces her to the King and the King marries her. Bhrâna had written his drama on the model of Mâlavikângunîttra, Rûmîvall and such other dramas.

Buddha  A celestial maidservant. She was the hand-maid of Vargga a celestial beauty. (For further information see Vargga).

Buddha I  Son of Candra.
1) Birth. Bhraspati the teacher-priest of the devas had a very beautiful wife named Târâ. One day seeing the handsome figure of Candra, Târâ became amorous. Candra was the Disciple of Bhraspati. It was not right on the part of the wife of the teacher to feel amorous towards a disciple. Bhraspati came to know of the affair and sending for Candra asked him to return his wife. Both Candra and Târâ did not pay any heed to Bhraspati. Both sides were about to engage in a battle. The devas arrayed themselves on both sides. Seeing that this was not an honourable thing some devas tried for a compromise. Finally Candra returned Târâ to Bhraspati. At this time Târâ was pregnant. Both Candra and Bhraspati claimed the paternity of the child in the womb of Târâ, who witnessed that Candra was the father of the child. All accepted the words of Tašk. Budha was the child Tašk gave birth to.

2) Marriage and birth of a child. Budha grew up to be a youth. During the period the King Sudumna one day entered Kumāravatana (a forest) and was changed to a woman. When the King became a woman the name adopted was Ila, who grew amorous of Budha. The famous King Purīravasa was the son born to them. (For more information see Ila, Candra and Purīravasa)

3) Other information

(1) Budha wears a necklace of Rudrāka beads (Elaco Carpus Seeds) and has a bow. (Agui Parāya, Chapter 51).
(2) Candra performed the anointing ceremony of Budha. (Bhāgavata Skanda 9).
(3) Budha is a luminous member of the assembly of Brahmā. (M.B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 29).

UDHA II. A hermit. Once he spoke about the impotence of Vānaprastha (retirement in the forest). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Sānti Parva, Chapter 244, Stanza 17, that this hermit spent the whole of his life in Vānaprastha (retirement in the forest) and at the age of seventy he died.

BUDHA III. A scientist on ethics. He has written a book called Dharmakāraka on the different kinds of rites of consecration, initiation etc. from formation in the womb till Upanayana (investiture with the Brahman string), different kinds of marriages, Pahcāmahāyānas (the five essential sacrifices) Śraddha (offering to the manes), Pākavya (simple domestic sacrifices), Somavāga (drinking the moon-plant juice at the soma sacrifice) and such other matters of ethics.

BUDHA IV. A Brahmāna who lived in Gauda. Budha who was the incarnation of all vices drank too much and spent a whole night lying unconscious on the veranda of the house of a harlot. His father became anxious about him as he had not returned though the night was already advanced much. He searched everywhere and finally came to the place where he was lying unconscious. He reviled the son, who getting angry killed his father then and there.

After that he returned home. His mother advised him to leave off his vices. His wife shed tears before him. Seeing that his mother and wife wereΠ in an end to their lives, he put an end to their lives. Once this Brahmāna carried away Sulabha the beautiful wife of hermit Kalādhāti and ravished her. Sulabha cursed him and made him a leper.

Budha wandered about and reached the city of King Śrāsarana. On that day the King was about to go to Heaven with the entire city by airplane. However, hard the pilots might try the plane would not move an inch. Then the devas told the King: "Drive away the leper there. The vices of that sinful murderer have made the plane stationary."

Śrāsarana who was kind and righteous, neared the leper and cured him with caturākṣantarana (a spell of four letters) and got ready to take him also to heaven. (Ganeśa Parāna 1: 76).

BUDDHA. The founder of Buddhism. Some consider him to be an incarnation of Viṣṇu. In days of old in a battle the devas were defeated by the asuras and the gods approached Viṣṇu with their grievance. Mahāviṣṇu incarnated as the son of Siddhodana with the name Gautamabhuddha (Siddhārtha). Then he went to the asuras and made them reject the Vedas and the laws thereof. All the Daityas (Asuras) became Buddhists. There is a story in Agnipurāna, Chapter 16, that thus it was the purpose of Buddha to convert every asura to Buddhism and send him to hell. The story given above is in accordance with the Purānas. The following are the facts gained by historic investigation.

Gautama Buddha was born in B.C. 569, in Kapilavastu near the Himalayas. His father was Siddhodana. He was born in the family of the Śakys. The word Śakya is another form of the word Kauriya. The real name of Buddha was Siddhārtha. Siddhodana brought up his son in such a way that he should not be subjected to any sort of mental pain or worry. So he kept Buddha aloof from the outer world. Thus he spent his childhood in comfort and pleasure. Once by chance he happened to see a sick man, an old man and a dead body. The sight made him thoughtful. He began to think about the removal of sorrow and pain from the world and bringing about peace and comfort.

The change that appeared in the son worried the father. So, at the age of sixteen, he made Siddhārtha marry Yasodharā. A son was born to them. But the mind of Siddhārtha was restless, distressed and agitated. One day Siddhārtha discarded everything and went out of the palace alone.

Siddhārtha wandered from place to place learning from various teachers. But he did not find peace. Once on a full-moon day while he was sitting in meditation under a banyan tree he got 'Bodhi' (insight or conviction). From that day onwards he began to be known by the name 'Buddha'. After that he came to Kāśi, and told his disciples how he got Bodhi or conviction. The number of his followers increased day by day. Thus Buddhism came into being. Buddha said that the reason for pain and sorrow in the world was desire and that sorrow could be eradicated only by controlling and overcoming all desire. To attain Eternal Bliss one should be true and righteous in thought, deed and word and that 'Not Killing' was the foundation of righteousness. Buddhism spread everywhere in Bhārata.

Gautama Buddha died at the age of eighty.

BUDDHAGHOSHA. An ancient Sanskrit poet. It is believed that he lived in the 4th century A.D. The most important work of this poet who was a Buddhist, is 'Padyacādāmanī'. The life of Buddha is described in this book in ten Kāvyas (poems or sections). A similarity to the poems of Kalidasa and Aśvaghosa is seen in this poem. Buddhaghosa is said to have reached Ceylon in 357 A.D. and translated some Buddhist literature.

BUDDHIL. A wife of Dharmadeva. In Viṣṇu Purāna Anuśa 1, Chapter 7, it is mentioned that Dharmadeva had married thirteen daughters of Dakṣa. They are Śraddha, Lakṣānti, Dharī, Tuṣā, Medhā, Puṣṭi, Kriyā, Buddhī, Lajjā, Vapha, Sānti, Siddhi and Kirtī.

BUDDHAKAMĀ. An attendant of Sudrahmānaya. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 40, Stanzas 12).

BUDDHISM (Buddha-MATA). The origin of Buddhism was in the sixth century B.C. This new religion was shaped out of Hinduism that prevailed at that time. Buddhism which had its origin in North India, prevailed everywhere in India up to the eleventh century A.D. During that period there was an overflow of this religion to the other parts of Asia. Now this religion has its sway over the people of Burma. 90% of the population there, are adherents of Buddhism. 80% of the people of Thailand, 60% of the people in Ceylon and Japan and 17% in China are new Buddhists in India, Pakistan and the Philippines the Buddhists are only a minority. Even though Indonesia is a Muslim country there is a small class of Buddhists there. Cambodia, Laos and Tibet are also to be considered as Buddhist countries. In Nepal there are only two religions, Hinduism and Buddhism. In countries outside Asia there are followers of Buddhism. Statistics reveal that there are one hundred and sixty-five thousand Buddhists in North America, one hundred and thirty-five thousand in South America, and ten thousand in Europe. The number of Buddhists in the world today is 130,311 croses.

C

The letter C has two meanings, viz., evil people and pure man.

CAĐIYA. Śūtupāla, king of Cedi. Dhrṣṭaketu, King of Cedi, is also known by this name. It was this Caidiya who was supposed to have been created by Dhrṣṭayumna in the great battle. (Kāraṇcāvyā: A battle array in the shape of a stork). (Sloka 47, Chapter 56, Bhiṣma Parva).

CAGTRARĀTHA. A prince born to King Kuru of his queen Vādhini (Sloka 50, Chapter 94, Adi Parva).

CAGTRARĀTHA(M). A forest of purūjīc fame. Once King Yaśastī enjoyed socia! acts with the apses Vāścī in this forest. (Sloka 38, Chapter 13, Adi Parva). It was here in this forest that Pāṇḍu spent some days once with his wives Mātri and Kuntī. (Sloka 46, Chapter 118, Adi Parva).

CAGTRARĀTHA Parva. A sub-division of Adi Parva. (See under Mahābhārata).

CAGTYA. A mountain. This mountain is situated near Giriñjā, the capital city of Magadha. This mountain was very dear to the people of Magadha. The followers of Bhadradasa deemed it as the Holy Mountain and worshipped it. (Chapter 21, Sañbha Parva).

GAKTA. (See Brahmādatta II).

GAKRAI. A son of Vāsuki, the Nāga king. He died at the serpent yajña (Sarpa Satra) of Janamejaya by falling into the fire. (Adi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 6).

GAKRAI. II. One of the three attendants given to Subrahmanya by Vīṣṇu, the other two being Sañkrama and Atikrama. (Sālīya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 40).

GAKRAI. III. One of the two attendants presented to Sañkhaveśa by Vṛṣṇi, the other one being Anucakra. (Sālīya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 40).

GAKRAI(M). I. Sudārśana Cakra (disc) of Mahāviṣṇu. The Vāyu Purāṇa contains the following story about the origin of the Cakra. Sūryadeva (the Sun God) married Sañjî, daughter of Visvākarmā. But, due to the insatiable heat of her husband the marital life of Sañjî became miserable, and so she requested her father to lessen the heat of Sūrya. And, accordingly Viśvākarmā ground Sūrya on a grinding machine and thus diminished his effulgence. But, the grinding could diminish only 1/8 of that effulgence, which glowing red-hot dropped on the earth, and with that Viśvākarmā made the Sudārśana Cakra, the Tristūla, the Puspakāvanā and the weapon called Sakti. Out of these four things the Tristūla came to be possessed by Śiva, the Puspakāvaṇā by Kubera and Sakti by Brahmā. The Sudārśana Cakra which was glowing like anything was deposited in the sea. (Visṇu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 2).

There is a story in the Mahābhārata as to how the Cakra thrown into the sea came into the possession of Mahāviṣṇu. While Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna were picnicking on the shores of the Yamunā Agni-deva went to them and requested them to give Kāhādeva forest to hiru for food. As Taksaka, friend of Indra, was living in the forest the latter was causing heavy rains to fall there. Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna realized the fact that Agni would be able to consume the forest only after subjugating Indra. But, how to manage it? Then Agni said that he would supply the weapon to fight Indra with, and accordingly the weapon was consecrated to him (Agni) a chariot and flag with monkey as symbol, a quiver which would never become empty of arrows, a bow called Gāndiva and the Sudārśana Cakra. Agni-deva gave the Cakra to Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the other things to Arjuna. (M.B. Adi Parва, Chapter 297).

GAKRA(M) II. A city in ancient India. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 43).

GAKRADEVA. A warrior born in Vṛṣṇi varṇa. (Vṛṣṇi dynasty). (Sābha Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 57).

GAKRADHANUS. A synonym of Kapila maharṣi. (See Kapila).

GAKRADHARA. A very intelligent brahmin. One-eyed and bent down in body he is a character in Vatārāyaṇa. (See Vāruṇeśa).

GAKRADHMĀ. Chief of the Vidyādhāras. He, with his younger brother is engaged in singing the praise of Kubera. (Sābha Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 27).

GAKRADVARA(M). A great mountain. Indra performed a yajña on this mountain. (Śanī Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 183).

GAKRARA. The son of Brahmavādin, of Viśvāmītra. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 64).

GAKRAMANDA. A nāga (a serpent). It was this nāga which was desired by Ananta (nāga king) to lead the soul of Balarāma on his death to Pātala. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

GAKRANEMI. A woman attendant of Skandadeva. (Sālīya Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 5).

GAKRATI. A town in ancient India. (Bhiṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 43).

GAKRAVĀN. A mountain very much extolled in the Purāṇas. When deputing monkeys in quest of Śītā, Sugriva instructed them to make a special search in the mountain. It was on this mountain that Viśvākarmā made the Sudārśana Cakra. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kishkindhā Kāśika, Chapter 42, Verse 16).

GAKRAVYĀHA. A Phalanx. A particular pattern of army formation on ground. In the Kaurava-Pāṇḍava war Dronā-Śāya formed a Cakravyāha wherein Abhimanyu, son of Arjuna got himself trapped and killed. (Abhimanyu, who forced himself inside the Vyāha, did not know the method of getting out of it which Arjuna alone knew), Cakravyāha is made in the form and shape of Cart-wheels. Vyāsa has described the Cakravyāha made by Drona as follows:—
The great preceptor made the Cakravyāha and posted it in to maximum capacity kingly, who were equal to Indra. In every opening of the vyāha were posted princes equal in prowess to the Sun. All the princes were organised compactly. And, all of their uniforms and were adorned with other things also red in colour and held red flags. They also were golden ornaments and garlands scented with Sandal paste. Ten thousand strong they rushed forward to fight with Abhimanyu. Duryodhana’s son, Lakṣmanu, led the onrush. In the centre (of the Cakravyāha) stood Duryodhana in the company of heroes like Karna, Duṣāsana and Kṛṣṇa. And, at the head of the army stood Dropan, the captain of the army, who looked like the rising sun. Then there was the King of Sinhdu, and near him stood Asvatthāmā, and there stood in front of them thirty Kaṛavas, all of them equal to Devas. On the flanks were great heroes like Bāhyā, Bhūtrāravas in, and then did the battle rage. (Drona Parva, Chapter 34).

CAKRIKA. A forest hunter. The following story is told about him in Chapter 16, Kriyāyoga of the Padma Purāṇa.

Devoted much to his parents, Cakrika was a great devotee of Vīṣṇu. He used to worship Vīṣṇu daily with fruits, (edible) roots etc. But, he did so only when he felt the need. One day while his was eating fruit, somehow or other it got itself lodged in his throat, and all his attempts to dislodge it failed. The fruit had to be, at any rate, offered to Vīṣṇu and therefore Cakrika drew his sword and cut his throat with it.

Lord Vīṣṇu who was so pleased at such great devotion of the man appeared on the scene and brought him back to life. Sometimes afterwards Cakrika visited at the Dwārakā temple, and thus attained salvation.

CAKRODHATHA. A king in the dynasty of Yāyāi. (Bhāgavata, Navam Sketchha).

CAKUSI I. A synonym of the Sun. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 42).

CAKUSI II. A tributary of river Gaṅgā. Starting from Vīśnupāda (Svarga) the Gaṅgā falls into Devayāna and thence into the moon and after feeding the whole area it divides itself into four tributaries, viz., Sītā, Cakṣus, Alakānāndā, and Bhadrā and falls into Brahma-loka and flows in four directions. Of the four tributaries the river called Cakṣus falls on the peak of Mount Māyāvān and then flows through Ketumāla and falls into the western sea. The Gaṅgā which flows through India is a branch of the above-mentioned tributary, Alakānāndā. (Devī Bhāgavata, Astama Skandha).

CAKUSI III. A king born in the lunar dynasty. He was the son of King Anuṛḍhūru. (Bhāgavata, Navam Sketchha).

CASKURVARDHANIKĀ. A river which flows through Śāka śiva. (Śāka island). (Bhīṣa Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 35).

CĀKUSAMANU. 1) General. The sixth of the Fourteen Manus. (See Manvantara).

2) Genealogy. Urtānapāda and Priyavrata were the sons of Śvāyambhuva Manu, and Dhruva was Urtānapāda’s son. Dhruva had two sons, by his wife Śambhi. Suchāyā, wife of Sīthi, had five sons, viz., Rūpi, Rūpāṅiāya, Vīpā, Vrākha and Vrākta-jas. From Bhoṭi, wife of Rūpi, was born Cākṣusā, the mighty and Cākṣusā begot a son named Manu by Pukaraṇi, daughter of Vānrapājapati and one of the offsprings of Varuṇa. This Manu was called Cākṣusā Manu, and Cākṣusā Manu was also when this period his wife Nāvyākā, daughter of Vānrapājapati, called Bhoṭi, Pukarāṇi, Tāṣa, Pukarāṇi, Sujanā, Agna, Suanas, Kuhāyā, Kṛatu, Atigirās and Śibi. Agna married Sominī, and Vena was their son. The famous emperor, Puthu was Vena’s son.

3) Birth. The story is told in the Mārkandeya Purāṇa about the former life of Cākṣusā before he was born as Cākṣusā. In that former life he was Ananda, son of Anāanta. Once a cat carried Ananda away and laid him on the bed of the child of King Vikramāta, and the same cat deposited the king’s child somewhere else. And, Ananda grew up as the real son of the King. But, one day he told the King the truth about him and left for the forest for tapas. Brahma appeared before him and blessed him that he would, in the next birth, be born as the sixth Manu and thus Cākṣusā become the sixth Manu.

4) Cakṣusā Manvantara were born the famous Nara and Nāgaṇa as the sons of Dhruva. It was also during this period his wife Nāvyākā, daughter of Vānrapājapati, called Bhoṭi, Pukarāṇi, Tāṣa, Pukarāṇi, Sujanā, Agna, Suanas, Kuhāyā, Kṛatu, Atigirās and Śibi. Agna married Sominī, and Vena was their son. The famous emperor, Puthu was Vena’s son.

CĀKUSI. An art, the study of which will enable one to see anything in the three worlds. Cākṣusī was taught by Manu to Soma, by him to Viśvāsya, by him to Cītraratha, the Gandharva and by him to Arjuna, son of Pāḍu. (Ādi Parva).

CĀKYARAKTU. A very important art practiced in temples mainly in Kerala. It is called so because it is exhibited by Cākyār (a sect attached to temples). In important temples a place called Kuttambalā is set apart for displaying the Cākṣusā. The prevalent it Kerala temples is not exactly of its old form, Keśkharivarmā perumāl (elected ruler of old Kerala) effected some changes in the old art form, and Bhāskara-ravivarma perumāl and Tolkāvī made further reforms in it. The art of Kuttu was evolved with the object of relating purānic stories in such a manner as will help devotional feelings grow in a man.

The main aim of the story is to narrate purānic stories in such a way as to instil Bhakti in the hearers and to create an interest in them in the Purānas. The Cākṣusā (the man who gives the discourse who usually belongs to the Brahmin sect called Cākṣusā) tells the story in a very interesting way, reciting appropriate passages from the Purānas and illustrating them with apt examples and similes. The narration is from the beginning till end humorous. The Cākṣusā who gives the discourse is usually a man with a good sense of humour and a sense of what is odd, strange or eccentric in nature and human character. There are three varieties of Kātū; Prabhanda Kātū, Nādharā Kātū and Kāṭāmaṇ. Of these the first is narrative (Ākhyānāsūrya) while in the second and third type, the element of acting is more important (Abhinayāsūrya).

CALĀ. Lakṣmīdevī. The following story is told in the Devi-bhāgavata as to how this name came to be applied to the devi. Once Revanta the very handsome son of Śurūdeva came to Vaiśākha riding Uccaihāra, India’s horse. Devi, who was at that time with Vīṣṇu gazed for a few minutes in wonder at the horse. She did not, therefore, attend to Vīṣṇu’s talk. Angered at this Vīṣṇu told the devi: "Since your eyes enjoy observation on unnecessary things and move about among such objects, you shall be called from today onwards Ramā and Cātā. Also you will be born as a mare on earth. Accordingly Mahālakṣmi was born as a mare on the banks of river Sarasvati, and regained her old form only after delivering a son by Vīṣṇu. That son was Ekaṣira, founder of the Hehayā dynasty. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 6).

CAMARĀ. (CAMA). An animal whose tail is its most important and valued organ. In the course of its movements in the forest if the tail gets entangled anywhere it is left behind; and if its tail is thus torn by itself. About the origin of Cāmara, the following story is told in the Vālmiki Rāmāyana. Krodhavāsī’s daughter of Dakṣa-prajapati and wife of Kaśyapa had ten daughters, viz. Mrīṅgī, Mrgamadbī, Hari, Bhadrāmadā, Maśāgī, Śañdīṇī, Śṛellas, Surāṣī, Surabhi and Kāḍrī. To Mrgamadbī’s Srusadas and Camaras owe their origin. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Aranya Kanda, Canto 14).

CAMARA (M). A skin that covers the body, including hair, fibre or feathers at the end. A symbol used by kings and brahmins. Cama of the king should have a golden handle, and it should be made of the wings of the swan, the peacock, the Bālākā bird etc. But, the wings of different birds shall not be intermixed. Circular in shape, the Cama should have on its handle 5, 7, 6 or 8 sandals (joints, knots). (Agni, Purāṇa, Chapter 24).

CAMASA. A yogi, the younger brother of Bharata, a king born in the dynasty of Priyavratā, son of Manu. This country got its name Bharatā from king Bharata (country named by Bharata). Bharata had nine brothers called Kśavarta, Ilavarta, Bhrāmavarta, Aśvāvara, Malaya, Bhadraketa, Sena, Indrapak and Kīkāra. Bharata had also nine other brothers renowned as navayogī, born of another mother. Camasa was one of them, the other being Kavi, Hari, Ambarīsā, Prabuddhā, Pippalāyina, Avirhatta, Dhyamita and Kṛcharbhījana. (Bhāgavata Purāṇa, Skanda 3).

CA'TASODDHIDA. A holy place in Saurāstra which forms part of the very reputed sacred place called Vināśana. It is said that it was here that the river Sarasvati which once became invisible, was detected. A bath here is as efficacious as performing the Jyotistoma yajña. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 112).

CAMAKĀRA. (See PATTU).

CAMOHARA. A āvādveda. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 191, Verse 32).

CAMP (KAMPA). Kampa born in the Āṅgika dynasty. (See CANDRAVAMSA).

CAMPĀ. (CAMPAPUR). A city on the banks of river Ganges. Campa is often referred to in the Purāṇas. It was here that Lomapāda lived in tretāyuga. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 15). In Dvāparayuga the city was ruled by a Sūta called Atrārha, who got Karna, while he and his wife were brooding over their lack of a child. In after years Karna also ruled the city. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 7).

CAMPĀKA. A vidyādharā. Once he visited the banks of river Yamunā with his wife Madalāsā when they got from the forest nearby a child. The child in later years became famous as Ekavira, founder of the Hehayā dynasty. (See EKA VIRA).

CAMPĀKARANYA. (CAMPĀKARA). A holy place in Northern India. One day’s halt at the place and a bath there is considered to be as good as giving away one thousand cows as gift. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84).

CAMPAKA. Son of Viśvámitra who was a brahma-buddhi. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58).

CAMPĀ. A literary form of presenting a story in a mixture of prose and verse, and abounding in beautiful descriptions: “Gadyapadyamayam Kāavyam Campūryatibhidhīyate”. Over and above prose and verse the CAMPĀs use dandakas (very long, involved and poetical prose). This literary form had its origin in Sanskrit and other Indian languages adopted it with some variations. For instance, though prose in Sanskrit CAMPĀs is really prose, that in Malayalam is something akin to metrical prose. There are more than two hundred CAMPĀs in Malayalam. The most famous of the Campū writers in Malayalam are Panam Namboothiri, Mahādeva Namboothiri and Nilakaṇṭha.

CAMO. A division of an army. (See Aksاحini).

CAMPUSDA. (See PAvati).

CANGAYA. The auspiciousness of Caṇaka (cow dung) is due to Laksmi. (See Laksmi, Paras 1 and 6).

CANGAYA (KAUTILYA). The famous author of “Arthasastra” a treatise on political economy.

Eastern and western scholars have made exhaustive researches on this intellectual giant of ancient India, Ćaṅkāya. But, nothing definite has yet been established about his time or life. Indians have accepted as a fact the traditional legend that he was a minister of Candragupta, the founder of the Maurya dynasty. It is also firmly believed that it was this mighty intellect of a Brahmin who made Chandragupta a powerful emperor and steered the ship of his state. The phrase “Caṅkāya’s kujplanit” (“crooked tactics”) has become proverbial. Some scholars hold the opinion that he came to be called “Kautilya” because of his Kuṭila (“crooked”) tactics; but evidence to establish this view-point is yet to be adduced. It is his famous Arthasastra, which has made Ćaṅkāya’s name a world famous one. The great German thinker Jolly has described the Arthasastra as a unique composition in the Sanskrit language. And, Johann Meyer, the great western scholar has the following to say about the book:—

“Kautilya’s Arthasastra is not one single text, it is a collection and collateration of all books in ancient India. To study the greatness of its theories and principles contained in it today requires continuous and constant study at least for twenty years and the unceasing efforts of a scholar with unabounded knowledge are required.”
Even his name has not yet been confirmed beyond doubt. Kauțiya is also called Vṛṣṇagupta, Čāṇkya, Dvāra, and Ārya. Poet researchers place the date of the Arthaśāstra at near about B.C. 400. In Viśhikadatta’s Maduraśakasa (drama; the name Kauțiya is used). The authors of Nītisāstra maintain that the name of the author of Arthaśāstra was Viśnugupta. It may be gathered from the Maduraśakasa that he became famous as Čāṇkya as he was the son of Canaka, and that he composed the treatise in Nītisāstra, Ārya, Āṃśikā, and Āṣṭāṅgā. Yet there is another legend to the effect that this brahmin (Čāṇkya) belonged to Kaśāṇīpura, and that he migrated to Pātāliputra, the seat of learning and scholarship. As Kāṃsakara, who lived in the fourth century B.C. has eulogised Čāṇkya in his Nītisāstra it may be supposed that Čāṇkya lived some time near about that. Candrasegara and Ĉāṇkya are referred to in the Viṣṇu and the Viṣṇara Purāṇa. Kauțiya was keen-eyed and scholar par excellence. “Arthaśāstra” is a great book written by him after thoroughly examining the viewpoints of previous scholars, and then establishing his own views and theories. From the Datukumārakacarita of Dandī (A.D. 700) it is known that there were 6000 verses in the Anuṣṭup metre (eight letters in one line) in the Arthaśāstra composed by Viśnugupta for the use of Candrasegara. The Arthaśāstra has been held in praise by Bāṇabhaṭṭa, who lived in the 7th century, Somadeva, who lived in the 10th century, and also by Hemacandra, the author of Kavyanātaka, who lived in the 12th century. The book is a discourse on the problems connected with the duties of the wise man in the ideal empire, Čāṇkya has mentioned in his book with respect the old scholars like Maṇu, Sūkra, Bhaṭapati, Nārāyaṇa, Kaṭāvyāṇa and Gvinda dīkṣita. (For the parodic story about Čāṇkya see Varāṇaga, Para 6).

CAŅCAĻAŚI. A mounted harlot, who lived in Āśora. On an afternoon of a day at midnight she came to the appointed place to meet a paramour the latter had not arrived. While waiting impatiently there she was attacked and killed by a leopard. Emissaries of Viṣṇu as also of Yama arrived to carry away the soul of Caṇcalāśi. Yama’s men argued that she had sinned throughout her life, and therefore claimed the harlot’s soul. But the emissaries of Viṣṇu countered the argument thus: “Once on her way to conduct her trade Caṇcalāśi got into a temple and menched tumbāla in the course of which she rubbed some time on the walls of the temple. Taking into consideration this fact of her having spent sometime thus to clean the temple wall her soul deserves to be led to Viṣṇuloka”.

In the argument the emissaries of Yama were defeated and the soul of Caṇcalāśi was taken to Vaṅgkupa by the emissaries of Viṣṇu. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

CAŅCAĻAŚI II. A vidyādha girl. Once while she was concentrating her mind in prayer over Mahālabhi, Rāvana, King of the Rūkapāsas, committed rape on her, and she cursed him that he should die on account of Mahālabhi, herself and accordingly at last he was killed. Rāvanama offered the body of Mahālabhi, the incarnation of Mahālabhi. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa).

CAŅDA. (See Ĉāndamānḍiśa).

CAŅḌAŅALA. A prominent monkey. In the Rāma-

Rāvaṇa war this monkey caused much trouble to Kumbhakarna. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 287, Verse 5).

CAṢḍAḌHAṬĪGADI. A mahārāṣṭra born in the dynasty of Bāṇa. A very erudite scholar and deeply versed in the Vedas, he was this mahārāṣṭra who performed Janamejaya’s famous Sarpa śattra. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 4).

CAŅḌAKA. A forest hunter who attained salvation by the worship of Śivalinga. (Phallus of Śiva).

While once hunting in the woods Cândaka saw a Śiva temple and was taken with the Śivalinga. He put the Śivalinga on the ground and then worshipped it daily. The worshiper wearing ashes from the burning ghat on his body. Accordingly Cândaka installed the Śivalinga on a rock and began worshipping it daily along with his wife, Puṇḍitī. But after sometime there was left no ashes in the burning ghat and Cândaka and Puṇḍitī discussed between them the means to get ashes for the next day. Then Puṇḍitī suggested that she should keep two to three ashtrays and that Cândaka should continue worshipping the Śivalinga wearing on his body the ashes. Very unwillingly Cândaka agreed with the sad proposal of his wife, and the next day he worshipped the Śivalinga wearing on his body the ashes of Puṇḍitī. And, at the close of the day when he called aloud for Puṇḍitī, and he wonder where she stood there before him more healthy than formerly. Moreover a vimana descended from the skies and conducted both Cândaka and Puṇḍitī to Śivaloka. (Śiva Purāṇa, Sambhārāmātya).

CAṢḍAḌKAŅṬIKA. A muni, son of Kaṭā́va, the son of Gauṭama, Brhadārtha, King of Magadh, was having no wives when one day, Caṇḍakasātkī went to the palace and blessed the King with marriage. Kaṭā́va’s daughter Jārnārāṇa was born to him. Caṇḍakasātkī continued to live at Magadh for long as the preceptor of the kings of that land. (See Jārnārāṇa).

CAŅḌALA. (See Cāṭhvaṃvasya).

CAṢḍAḌMAṆḌENA. 1) General. A very prominent and reputed king of Ĉīvya. Vaiśvakarṇa, wife of Udayana was his daughter.

2) The name CaṇḍamāṆḍena. His real name was Mahāśaṇa. After ascending the throne he began doing tapas to get a noble wife and a good sword. When he cut his own flesh and made an offering of the same to the sacred fire after a long period of tapas the Devi became pleased, and offered him a sword of exceptional excellence and said that as long as he had that sword with him no enemy would defeat him. The Devi also assured him that he would become the greatest amongst the gods and the greatest of the rajas. After this the sword was given to the Devis and the elephant was given to Ĉīvya. After this the sword was given to the Devi and the elephant was given to Ĉīvya and her elephant Airīvata to Indra.
CANDAMUNDA

3) Marriage. One day, during a hunting expedition a boar escaped unhurt by the king’s arrows and after hurting his chariot it went into a cave. The king in great anger followed the pig into the cave, and going forward some distance he saw a beautiful animal whereon he seated himself on the side of a tank. There he saw a number of women an exceptionally beautiful woman moving about. Casting her charming eyes glistening with love she approached the king and began their conversation, when the king realized she was crying. To the query as to the reason for her crying he answered as follows:—

"The boar you see is my father, Angarakasura. His body is harder than even diamond, and none can inflict any injury on it. The women you see are princesses captured by my father from various palaces for his beds, and my name is Angaravati. My father became a Rākṣasa as the result of a curse; he is now asleep in the assumed form of a boar. On awakening he is sure to eat you for food, and it was that thought which brought tears to my eyes." To these words of Angaravati, the king replied as follows:—"If you have any love for me you would go to your father and begin killing the boar, wake him up, and to his query as to why you are crying you should reply that thoughts about your future in the event of your father’s death brought tears in your eyes."

Angaravati agreed to the above proposal of the King. She led the King in a safe place and went and stood by the side of her father. Everything happened as was anticipated and Angaravati and the King approached his father by saying: ‘Your son would be able to kill him whose body was as hard and strong as diamond, there being only one opening through which he might be struck on the left wrist which might be concealed by the bow. Candamahasena who heard the above talk came out of his hiding place and challenged the asura to war. He raised his left hand to show the sign, ‘just coming, please wait,’ and the King then shot his arrow through the opening on his left wrist. The asura fell dead.

4) Birth of Parvati: And, now Candamahasena married Angaravati and returned to his kingdom with his wife. Two sons, Gopālaka and Pālaka were born to the royal couple, and the King celebrated an Indrotsava for the welfare and prosperity of the children. Pleased at the auspicious Indra appeared to the King in soccer and blessed him saying that a daughter would be born to him and that her son would be crowned emperor of the Viśyādhara. Accordingly a daughter was born to the King, and she was called Vasavadattā, given by Vāsava, i.e. Indra. Udayana married Vāsavadattā. (See Udayana.)

CANDAMUNDAS. Two brothers born in the Asura dynasty, the elder brother’s name being Candā and the younger Candā. These brothers collected, like the other auras, leaders Dhūm_opacity, Raktabija, thousands of soldiers and lived in all pomp and glory. During the period two auras, brothers Candha and Nisumbha had returned from the Himālayas after seeing Brahman a boy that they would meet with their death only at the hands of a woman. Candha and Munda became their friends and attendants. Candha and Nisumbha set out on a triumphal tour and conquered heaven, earth and pātāla. The Devas took refuge in a forest. After wandering in the forest for a long time, at the instance of Brahma they sought asylum with Parvati. Parvati stood for sometime in deep concentration, and there emerged from her divine body Ekaśikī or Kāli. Parvati assured the Devas that she would kill Candha and Nisumbha. And, then Kāli sat alone on a rock in the thick forest. Candha and Munda, who happened to pass that way were attracted by the great beauty of Parvati and imparted the news to Candha and Nisumbha who departed for Rājkūtra and 50,000 soldiers to bring Parvati over to them; but by one hundred (herd) she reduced them to ashes. Ultimately she killed Candha and Nisumbha also. (Devī Bhāgavata, Pañcama Skandha.)

CANDAMUNDAS (S). A son of Gandhāra. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter III, Verse 9.)

CANDAKORGA. A gandharva. (See Purāṇas.)

CANDIKĀ. A terrific form of Parvati, who is worshiped in temples under the name Candikidevi. The Devī’s idol has twenty hands. In the hands on the right side are held Śīla (three-proged weapons) sword, Vela (rod), Cakra, pāśa (rope), parigha (shield), apatch, adhyāya, damaru and Sakti, while the hands on the left side hold a net, pāśa, parigha, Ankūra (a long-handled rod), pāśa, mar, flag, godī, mirror and an iron cylindrical rod. There are also idols of Candikā with ten hands. At the feet of the Devī lies Mahiśāsura with his head severed from body. There will also be standing near the idol a пуранa (man) born from the neck of the Mahiśāsura brandishing his weapon, and with the Śīla in his hand in all stages waving blossoms. This puṇa is bound from his neck with rope. The vehicle of the Devī is a Lion. The Devī is mounted on the lion with her left leg on the asura lying below. This Candikidevi thus stands with weapons in the hand, as annihilator of enemies and with three eyes, and she should be worshipped in pūjāmāndala with nine padamas (tantric divisions) along with her idol. Lastly the Devī should be worshipped in the central padma and Indra and others in the other padmas.

There is also another Candikidevi (Durgā) with eighteen hands. She holds in her right hand a skull, shield, mirror, broom, bow, flag, damaru and pāśa (cord) and in her left hand rod, iron pounder, Sāla, Vāra, sword. Ankūra (a stick-like weapon with one end bent to hold on to things) Śāra (arrow) Cakra and Sakti. There are nine other Durgās having the same weapons as the above except the Damaru and the broom. But, they have only sixteen hands each. These nine Durgās are called Rudracandra, Pṛacandra, Ugracandra, Candā, Sānikā, Aticandikā, and Candograg. The Durgās standing at the centre will have the colour of garo in red (sandal paste) and the others will have the following colours: aravarnasa (red) Kṛma varsha (black), nīla varsha (white), dhīrā varsha (brown), pīta varsha (yellow) and śvaeva varsha (white). The nava Durgās (nine Durgās) are installed for the prosperity of children etc. And all these are different forms of Parvati.

Also, in various aspects of puṇa, Parvati is called by other names. She is called Siddhā when installed in Raiha (rain) wearing aksamālī (garland of beads), kirti (crown) and agni. The same Siddhā without the fire is called Laliṭa. Gauridevi with one of the hands on the left side placed on the shoulder and the head, and holding the mirror in the other hand, and holding in one of the hands on the right side the mirror (and the other hand held up is called Sañgha-gaūri. (For further details see Pārvitā). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 50).
CANDRA I. A prominent asura, also called Candramarvan. It was this asura, as beautiful as Candram (the moon) who was born as the king of Kambujas under the name Candramarvan (M.B. Atri Purāṇa, Chapter 67, Verse 31).
CANDRA II. A king born in the Solar dynasty and the son of Vaiśvanāthi and father of Vaiśvakāma. See Vaiśvakāma.
CANDRA III. The Purāṇas declare that Candram was one of the realizable things; got at the charming of Kṣīrāgghī (ocean of milk) Candram, Mahākāma, Sūrya, Ucchārāma, Kṛṣṇa and Dāru, Pārśu, Kam, Dhanvantari, Amrta and Kākāka were the things thus got from the Ocean of Milk. (M.B. Atri Purāṇa, Chapter 18 and Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 9). Also, the evil devata called Yestāja, Airavata, the goddess Cintāmanī and fair damsel like Tārā and Mūndī were got from the Kṣīrāgghī, (Kamapramyā, Yudhamanas). For general information about Candram, see Graha's.
CANDRA IV. (CANDRA DEVA).
1) Birth. The child born to Atri by Anāsayā. (See Purāṇas). In Skandha 4 of the Deviśagavata it is stated that it was Brahmā who was born as Candram. (See Atri).
2) Candram had married life with the wife of his guru, Tārā, the very beautiful wife of Bhṛṣpati, preceptor of the Devas happened to reach Candram's home during her perambulation one day. Candram and Tārā fell in love with each other at first sight and lived in conjugal happiness. And thus days passed by. Bhṛṣpati, being informed of the fact on inquiry, deposed his capes to bring Tārā back, but to no purpose. Bhṛṣpati went his discourse again and again to Tārā, but all in vain. Then Bhṛṣpati himself went to the house of Candram and invited Tārā, this tune also to no purpose. Enraged at this the Deva guru spoke to Candram as follows: "The brahmin-killer, gold-chief, drunkard, he who marries another's wife and he who associates himself with the above three types are responsible for the most terrible five sins, and you, therefore, are not fit enough to reside in Devaloka. Unless you return my wife to me I will curse you." None of the threats of Bhṛṣpati could shake Candram. He told the Devaguru that Tārā who had gone to his house on her own accord would also leave him when she was satiated with him. These words of Candram made Bhṛṣpati all the more angry. He returned home and waited sometimes for Tārā's return. But, he got disappointed, and getting impatient he started again for Candram's house. But, this time the gatekeepers did not let him in. Terribly angry at the cruel rebuff Bhṛṣpati sought help of Indrā. Indrā sent word to Candram asking him to send Tārā back home or be prepared for war. Even then Candram refused to yield, and Indrā started for war against Candram. But, there was somehow some difference among the devas about all this, and the news reached the asuras. At once Śukra, preceptor of the asuras and an old enemy of Bhṛṣpati met Candram and assured him all support in case war broke out between Indrā and Candram. He also strongly advised Candram not to return Tārā to Bhṛṣpati and ultimately a fierce war began between Indrā and Candram. All activities in the world were thrown into confusion and chaos. At this Brahmā on his bamsa (swan) came to the scene and admonished Candram and Sukra. They could not but obey Brahmā and so were forced to stop fighting. Moreover, Candram returned Tārā to Bhṛṣpati.
3) Wives of Candram. Candram took twenty-seven daughters of Dakṣa as his wives. (Devī Bhāgavata, Saṁjña Skandha). These twenty-seven wives are the twenty-seven stars. Candram circumambulates Mahāmeru along with these, his twenty-seven wives (Stars). (M.B. Vaiśvānār, Chapter 165, Verse 25). The names of the twenty-seven wives are given hereunder: Asvini, Bhrānti, Kruti, Rohi, Mṛgavārini, Ardrā, Puruvārini, Pusya, Aslesa, Janaka, Phalguni, Puruphala, Ājita, Griti, Śvātā, Viśākha, Anuradha, Āyudhā, Yebhā, Mūlā, Puruvśātā, Urtarāśadha, Śrīnī, Śrīvaṣṭha, Brahmā, Faṅgopatādi, Uttarapratādi, Kṛṣṇa, Puraśa, Kṣīrāgghī, Viśvāsā, Atri, Vaiśvakāma, Yudhamanas. See Amrītakumbha (pot of nectar). (See Atri).
But an asura māyāvi (magician) called Sañghikaya abounded to Pātāla with the Amrītakumbha which nobody noticed as everybody was busy with dividing other divine objects. Only after the māyāvi's disappearance was it noticed that the Amṛta Kumbha was missing. At once Mahāvīra assumed the figure of a beautiful woman, got back the Kumbha and gave it to the devas. The devas began drinking the ambra when, at the instance of some other devas, Sañghikaya, the māyāvi assuming the form of an old brahmin reached Tārā, got a share of the ambra. Bhṛṣpati et al. were surprised at the deed of Tārā. Śukra and Candrā (Sun and Moon) who were on guard at the gates divined the secret of the ‘old brahmin’ and informed Mahāvīra about it. He cut the throat of the pseudo-brahmin with his Sudarṣana Cakra. But half of the nectar he had drunk stayed above the throat and the other half below it. Therefore, though the head and the trunk were severed they remained alive. These two parts, in course of time, evolved as Rāhu and Ketu.
When the throat was cut some blood as well as some amṛta dropped on two places on the ground, and they became the red onion and the white onion respectively. Some vaishis, brahmans used to consider the red onion objectionable for consumption as it was evolved from blood, while the white onion was considered usable as it was evolved from austum.

Kabu and Ketu still maintain their hatred for Sairy and Candra, who had beheaded the asura, who, disguised as brahman tried to drink the asura. Eclipse is the phenomenon of Kabu and Ketu swallowing Sairy and Candra as and when opportunity presents itself for it. But, since the throat is severed from the body, Sairy and Candra that swallowed got out through the throat. That is the reason why Sairy and Candra become visible after the eclipse is over. (Kampa Ramayana, Yuddha Kâhyâ and Bhagavata Asâna Skandha).

5) Candra: becomes calf. Once emperor Prithu transformed Bhimadevi into a cow and milked her from all her things and provisions. On that occasion it was Brahma, who acted as Calf. And, following Prithu when the Râs milked the cow Candra served as Calf. (For details see Bhishma.)

5) Waxing and waning of Candra, the puranic story regarding it: Of the twenty-seven daughters of Daksâ whom Candra had married he loved Rohini much more than the other twenty-six wives, and so kept her always with him. This annoyed the twenty-six wives, who complained about it to Daksâ. Daksâ’s advice to Candra to treat all the wives on an equal footing had no effect on him. So, the twenty-six neglected wives again complained to Daksâ as follows: “We shall stay in the ârâma and serve the cows (Candra). We are not associate with us, he will not accept your advice.”

Though Daksâ warned Candra a second time, that too had no effect on him. So the twenty-six wives, for the third time, complained to Daksâ. Daksâ got angry at this and cursed that Candra should suffer from tuberculosis. Thus Candra was afflicted by consumption. Though Candra performed many a va prima to get cured of the ill disease, they did not produce the desired effect. Candra remaining a tubercular patient, the growth of medicinal plants stopped with the result that all living things contracted consumption. When people began becoming thinner, the devas asked Candra for an explanation, and he told them all the details. They then sought the help of Daksâ, who gave Candra remedies from the curse by ordaining that if he died in the Sarasvati ârâma in the western sea he would be free from consumption for half of every month. Thereupon Candra made it a practice to dive in the Sarasvati ârâma and that is the reason why Candra is exempted from Kavyamandana for fifteen days. (M.B. Sâray Parva, Chapter 33).

6) Candra—King of stars and of medicine. During the reign of emperor Prithu, he changed Bhimadevi into a cow. Later the Râs also changed Bhimadevi into a cow and milked her. It was Candra who served as calf then. Pleased at this Brahman crowned Candra as king of the stars and medicines. (Harivamsa, Chapter 4, Verse 2)

7) Other information about Candra

(1) Candra is 11,000 yojanas in extent, 23,000 yojanas in circumference and a volume of 5,960 cubic yojanas. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 12).

(2) Candra presented two attendants called Mani and Sunati to Subrahmanya (Sâlaya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 32).

(3) Candra once made a discourse on the superior qualities of brahmans to Sambrâmasura. (Anusasana Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 13, Southern Text).

(4) All wealth and prosperity accrue to him, who on full-moon day at moon-rise tenders offerings to Candra of bread in copper vessels with honey poured into it. (Anusasana Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 13, Southern Text).

(5) Candra is one of the aśvâvastris. Candra had four sons, Varcas, Śîcira, Prâna and Ramaṇa by his wife named Manihoârâ. (Adi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 18).

(6) Abhimaṇya was Candra’s son, Varcas, born as the son of Arjuna. (See Abhimaṇya).

CANDRA. An important river in ancient India. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 29).

CANDRAGUPTA I. Second son of Râvana. Once when Śri Râma was king, Candragupta abducted the daughter of Sugriva and the daughter-in-law of Vibhishana. Hanumān released them both as ordered by Śri Râma. (Kampa Ramayana, Uttara Kâhyâ, also see Sahastrâyana Ramakrishna Râva, Chapter 31).

CANDRAGUPTA II. A minister of Kârttikeyarjuna. Kârttikeyarjuna was once fed sumptuously by Jamadagni at his ârâma with the help of Śuîila, the devasurabhi (divine cow). Candragupta, at the instance of Kârttikeyarjuna tried to capture Śuîila by force, which disappeared immediately in the sky. Kârttikeyarjuna’s servants then forcibly took away an calf. Candragupta was threatened to death Jamadagni, who tried to obstruct their action. (See Kârttikeya, Para 9).

CANDRAHANTA. An asura, who was reborn as King Sunaka. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 177, Verse 37).

CANDRAHANTA A son born to Katyâapa prajñâpati of Siûhipa, daughter of Daksâ. (M.B., Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 31).

CANDRAHÄSA Son of King Sudharmika of Kerala. The following story about him is told in Jaïmini Avâmedha Parva.

Candrahâsa, born under the star Mûla had a sixth finger on the left foot indicative of poverty and of all other evils. And, therefore, on his birth enemies killed Sudhârmika and his wife followed him soon to the other world. The child thus left an orphan was taken to Kâmpalakapatrâ by a femâ in the courtyard of the palace. But unfortunately the woman died within three years of the above incident. The child, just for very existence, took to begging. After sometime some women jointly took up charge of the boy. Once he went to the house of Dhrâtabuddhi, minister of Kaundinya where a feast was in progress. The munis present there were impressed by Candrahâsa and prophesied that he would become a King. To Dhrâtabuddhi, the munis said that the child would guard his wealth, angry and suspicious at the prophecies of the munis Dhrâtabuddhi asked his men to kill the boy. They led him to the forest. On the way Candrahâsa got a Šâligrâmaa (a small sacred stone which represented some upâdyâvâta) which he applied very devotionally to his face. They did not in fact kill the boy, but cut off his sixth finger on the left foot and showed it to their master. Thus left alive in the forest by the murderers the boy was roaming about when the King of Kaundyna on a hunting expedition saw the destitute boy, and taking pity on him took him back with him to the palace. The boy was put under the care of Medhāvati, the King’s concubine. The king named him Candrāhāsa. Since the King took a special interest in the education of the child he became adept in all arts and sciences. At the age of twelve Candrāhāsa, with the permission of the king, set out on a triumphal tour, and the king welcomed Candrāhāsa on his return after his glorious victory.

At the instance of the Kalinda king, Candrāhāsa, sent by his messengers to the Kaundala king, who, understanding from them that so much wealth had been brought to the Kalinda king by Candrāhāsa started at once for the Kalinda palace. On being told the whole story about Candrāhāsa, Dhrṣṭabuddhi, the minister of the King of Kaundala made up his mind to do away with him somehow or other for which he despatched a letter to his son, Madana, through Candrāhāsa.

Candrāhāsa on his way to Kaundala slept on the banks of a river. Campakamālinī, the daughter of the King of Kaundala and Visyā, daughter of Dhrṣṭabuddhi happened to go to the river bank where Candrāhāsa was sleeping. Campakamālinī, who became subject to grief after her husband removed the anklets from her feet and approached him slowly, and when she took up and read a letter she found lying beside him, she felt awe and sorrow to find therein a suggestion to poison him to death. Without wasting much time in thought she changed the word ‘visāyamāla’ (give him poison) to ‘Visāyamāla’ (give him Visāya) and put it in its former position. When Candrāhāsa awoke from sleep and reached Kaundala city and delivered the letter to Madana its content pleased him very much. For Visāya, she was spending her days in constant prayer that Candrāhāsa should marry her. In the circumstances the marriage of Candrāhāsa and Visāya was solemnised on the earliest auspicious day.

In due course Dhrṣṭabuddhi returned to Kaundala, with all the divinities of heaven, and married the lady capturing Kalinda. He settled with grief and rage at the news that Visāya had been married to Candrāhāsa. All the explanations offered by Madana did not satisfy him. He persisted in his determination to kill Candrāhāsa. The evil-natured Dhrṣṭabuddhi one day asked Candrāhāsa to go and worship at the Devi temple after having made arrangements for his murder there. But, as fate would have it, it was Madana who, instead of Candrāhāsa, was killed. Even before the above incident had happened the Kaundala King had married his daughter Candramālinī to Candrāhāsa, and after relinquishing the kingdom also in his favour the King took to the forest to lead a hermit’s life.

The above developments added fuel to the fire of anger in reply of Dhrṣṭabuddhi, and when he saw in the temple precincts, his son’s corpse he became well-nigh mad. Crying out that all this was the result of his having troubled the Vaishnav Candrāhāsa he dashed his head against the pillars of the temple and died. Candrāhāsa was grieved over the death of Dhrṣṭabuddhi. He worshipped Devi offering his flesh in the sacrificial fire. Devi appeared and granted him the boon which helped him to bring Dhrṣṭabuddhi and Madana back to life. And, when the Kalinda king and his wife, fearing the wicked Dhrṣṭabuddhi were about to end their lives in flaming fire, Dhrṣṭabuddhi went to them and imparted to them the secrets about the life of Candrāhāsa. The Kalinda king and his wife divined the future by the former’s decision to end their life, and Candrāhāsa took up the reins of government at the behest of the King. Candrāhāsa, who won repute as a very powerful and effective ruler, during the Avamedha sacrifice of Yudhishtira captured the sacrificial horse, and Arjuna, at the instance of Krishna had to enter into a pact with Candrāhāsa, who promised him help for the sacrifice. Candrāhāsa had a son called Makarikāya by Visāya and another son, Padmākara by Campakamālinī.

CANDRĀHĀSA (M). Rāvana’s sword. Rāvana, in the course of his triumphal tour after receiving the boons from Bhrāmaṇa, subjugated kings, and marching northward reached the valleys of Mount Kailāsa. But, Nandikesvara stopped him there, and Rāvana, threatening to destroy everything away Siva, came to Kailāsa, put his twenty hands under it to pull it out, and the great mountain shook violently. Purvott got frightened and running up to Siva embraced him. Siva, who divined the reason for all these with his eye of supreme knowledge grounded the mountain firmly on earth, crushing Rāvana’s hands under it. Unable to bear away the mountain a little, the mountain remained there for about thousand years singing the praises of the Lord. At last Siva appeared to Rāvana and presented him with a sword called Candrāhāsa. It was this sword which won victories for Rāvana in future wars. (Uttara Rāmāyanam).

CANDRĀGHETU I. A son of Satrughna, brother of Śrī Rāma. Satrughna had two sons. One of the sacrifice. Candrāghetu had a son called Makarakāya by Visāya and another son, Padmākara by Campakamālinī.

CANDRĀGHETU II. A vidyādhaara King. See Muktāsakalam.

CANDRAMAS. A rśi who imparted spiritual knowledge to Sūmyā and advised Jāджyū to give directions about the way to the monkeys in their search for Siñḍevi. (Viśnukīmārka).

CANDRAMASI. Tārā, the wife of Bṛhaṇapati. She fell in love with Candrāha and lived with him for sometime, and came to be called Gūndramasi. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 219; see also Tārā).

CANDRAMATI I. Wife of king Harīcandra reputed for his unique honesty and integrity. (See Harīcandra).

CANDRAMATI II. A city. Two sons, Taksaka and Čiraketa were born to Laksmī daughter of Taksaka. Rāvana was crowned King of Agāti, a city built on the eastern coast of the sea after annihilating the hunter tribe there, and Čiraketa was crowned king of Candramati, a city built on the western coast of the sea after killing all the Meechas there. (Uttara Rāmāyanam).

CANDRĀGHEDA. Grandson of Nala. He married Simantini, daughter of king of Arīvāṭera. Simantini, bearing about Candrāgheda fell in love with him, and it was with the help of Maitreyi, wife of Yājñavalkya, that she was wedded to him. While once Candrāgheda was enjoying a boat-race in Kalindi (river) with his friends a storm upset the boat and most of them were drowned to death. The servants of Taksaka saw Candrāgheda sinking to the bottom of the river and carried him to Pāṇḍula and he stayed there for sometime in the midst of amorous nāgā damsels. Candrāgheda’s people, under the impression that he had died, performed his funeral rites, and Simantini took to widow's life. Enemies captured his kingdom and imprisoned his father, Indrasena. When once the naga king asked Candraganda to marry naga girls and settle down in Padala he told the King that he was already married and that his wife Simantini was breeding over him, and he had, therefore, to return to her. Accordingly the naga king sent him back with presents of a white horse, a Rakusa and an infant serpent.

Candraganda, with his presents, came up in Kalinna where Simantini, gladly expecting her days in penance, and they recognized each other. Informed about the return of Candraganda the enemy kings released his father from captivity and apologised to him. And he pardoned them.

Candraganda and Simantini took great interest in observing somavaranavata (fasting etc on Mondays) and pleased at the sight of the latter Sri Parvati blessed her. Two brahmins called Devamitra and Sarvasara were living there at the time. Three sons called Sumedha, Sarvasara and Samavan were born to Devamitra. The sons also turned out to be great scholars but they were poor. They could not get brides as they were poor. In the hope that they would get some money if they approached Candraganda and Simantini and the brahmins went to them. After hearing their story the king and his queen conducted them in procession in the precincts of the palace. Sumedha dressed as husband and Samavan as his wife. But, lo! when the procession was over Samavan could not be divorced of his womanhood, and Simantini married her Samavan. Being told that his son had turned woman Sarvasara sought the advice of some of the sages and tried to make the attempt of the means to change the woman to man failed, and they opined that only Parvati, who had been pleased by the somavaranavata, would be able to find a solution to the problem. From that day onwards the brahmin youth lived as husband and wife. (Svā Purāṇa, Somavaranavata).

CANDRA KARATA. A son of Janamejaya, Pariksit was the son of Dharma (Jayasena's son). Janamejaya was Pariksit's son. Janamejaya married princess Vapiṣṭhā of Kāśī. Two sons called Candraganda and Sarvapatha were born to the couple. Candraganda had hundreds sons, who distinguished themselves as great heroes in archery. Satyakarna was the eldest among the sons. Svetakarna, son of Satyakarna, married Yuvati, the daughter of Sādhu (Bhadra Purāṇa).

CANDRA PRABHĀ. (See Sūryaprabha).

CANDRA PRABHMĀ. Mother of the wonderful girl, Son prabhā. (See Somaprabhā).

CANDRAŚARMA I. A great singer, who killed his princess The Padma Purāṇa relates the story of four notable female Vaiśakha, Candrasarma, Vedasarma and Vaiśalī who shed their sin by bathing in the Ganges. The chief of the four were respectively Brahmatātā (killing of Brahman), Gurothātā (killing of a protector), Agnyāyātama (having sexual contact with women like the wife of guru which is debarred) and Gourītātā (killing of cow), respectively. The leader of the above four women was one Vaiśaka of the Pāñcabāla clan. He was hereditary in the clan without the cut of hair, the sacred thread and tiaga (mark of vandal paste etc on the forehead). He went from house to house begging for alms crying thus: “Here is some meat (himself) who committed Brahmatātā. Please give aims to the brahmin-killer who is a drunkard also.” During his begging tour he visited all the temples also, yet Brahmatātā stuck on him.

While this singer Vidura, his heart rent with sorrow and remorse, was sitting under a tree, a Māgadha brahmin called Candrasarma happened to come there. This brahman had committed the sin of Gurothātā (killing the protector). He told Vidura:—“While residing with the guru, blighted by desire, I killed the guru, and am now burning myself in the fire of repenance.”

While they were engaged thus in conversation a third person, called Vedasarma also came there in an absolutely tired condition. He told Vidura and Candrasarma that his relatives and others had cast him out as he once did the sin of agnyāyātama, and by the time he had finished telling his story a Vaiśāya called Vaiśalī came there. Besides drinking liquor he had committed gourītātā (killing of cow) also. Though these four sinners assembled at the same place, they only talked, but did not touch one another, take food together, rest on the same seat or lie on the same bedsheet.

According to the advice of a Sūrya (an evolved soul) the four sinners dived in the holy waters of Ganges and came out redeemed of their sins. (Padma Purāṇa, Chāndak 3).
with her father. This story told by Mahāśīva was to show that women possess only very little discretion occurs in the Pañcama Skandha of Devībhāgavata.

CANDRASENA II. A king of Ujjayani and a great devotee of Śiva. As he performed great sacrifices and gave away money and materials in gift to those who prayed for them, an attendant of Śiva called Mañjibhadra once gave him a gem, which possessed supernatural powers. Attracted by the lustre and glare of the gem many kings wanted to purchase it, but Candraseṇa refused to sell it. Much incensed at the refusal, the enemy kings set out to fight Candraseṇa, who then took refuge in the Mahākāla temple in Ujjayani the idol installed in which was Śivalīga. Lord Śiva then appeared to him and granted him salvation. (Śiva Purāṇa, Satipradānamahāyaṃ).

CANDRASENA III. The Mañjibhadra refers to another Candraseṇa, son of Śaṅkumātra, King of Bengal. He was present at the swayamvara of Pāñcālī. (M.B. Adb Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 11). Bhīmaśarma once dedicated Candraseṇa and his father in fight. (Sahāya Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 24). After that Candraseṇa became a supporter of the Pāndavas. It is stated in Dhepa Parva that in the great war Candraseṇa fought from a chariot drawn by horses as white as Candā (moon) and got killed by Abhacchāna.

CANDRASENA IV. Another Candraseṇa, a partisan of the Kauravas, is referred to in the Bhārata as having fought against the Pāndavas. His duty was to guard the chariot wheels of Saḷva; he was killed by Yudhiṣṭhīra (Śa última Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 52).

CANDRASITĀ. A female attendant of Śaṅkumātra. (M.B. Śa última Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 11).

CANDRASRI. A woman, who, though actually in love with her husband enjoyed life with her paramour. Candrasri is the heroine of a story narrated in the Kathāśāstra to prove that the interest married women take in clandestine relationship is only due to fleeting temptations. Candrasri was the wife of a vaiṣya called Bala-varman, who lived in the city of Pratiśāna. One day, looking through the windows in her house she saw the very handsome vaiṣya youth called Śalāhīra and felt great desire for him. She brought him secretly to the house of her paramour and satisfied her desire. When their meeting became a routine affair her relations and servants knew about it. And, her husband alone was unaware of it. Once he became ill with severe fever. Even while he was in his death-bed Candrasri continued her affair with the paramour. When one day she was with her paramour thus, she was told that her husband was no more. At once she took leave of him, returned home and committed suicide by jumping into the funeral pyre of the husband. (Kathāśāstra, Śaṅkya-olamahaka, Tāranga 2).

CANDRASVA (M). Son of King Kuvālayāva of the Ikyāku dynasty. He had two brothers called Deśīkāva and Kapalīkāva. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 24).

CANDRASVĀMĪ. A brahmin, who got back his life by worshipping Śīva. He stayed with his wife, Devaramī in Kānapalāra ruled by King Kanakavanam. A son called Mahāpāla was born to him, and at the time of the birth of the child a celestial voice declared that Mahāpāla would become King. A few years later a daughter called Candramati also was born to Candrasvāmī. During this period, rains having failed, very severe famine stalked Kānapalāra. Even the king unmindful of justice and righteousness began extracting from the people whatever they possessed. Finding the situation deteriorated so much Candrasvāmī set out for his father-in-law's house with Mahāpāla and Candramati, and on the way they had to cross what was once a wild forest, but which had by then been demoted of green trees or other foliage due to the failure of the rains. The children were severely afflicted by thirst, and to the father, after leaving them at the foot of a tree went in search of water when he was caught by the people of the forest king and taken before him. When he knew that he was about to be given in sacrifice to Devi the brahmin folded his hands and prayed to Śūryadeva, who appeared before him and assured him that not only would death not visit him, but also he would be united with his wife and children. The children left under the tree began crying, their father having not returned to them, and a Vaiṣya called Śaṅkhadāra who came that way felt pity for the crying children and took them to his house. One day Anantavāmī, a brahmin and a minister of King Anagāna of Kānapalāra happened to visit the Śaṅkhadāra. Anantavāmī, who had no children of his own took away with him the children from Śaṅkhadāra. One day Śūryadeva appeared to the forest king in his sleep and asked him not to kill the brahmin (Candrasvāmī) held captive by him. The very next morning Candrasvāmī was released from captivity. Roaming about in quest of his children, Candrasvāmī reached the very place where the children were living with his wife and other family members. One day the host told Candrasvāmī that a vaiṣya called Kānapavanam had, a few days back, told him that he (Kanakavanam) had got two children, one male and the other female from the forest, and taken them to the Nālaka island. The very next day Candrasvāmī, along with a vaiṣya called Vanačārman arrived at the Nālaka island, and on inquiry they were told that Kanakavanam, with the children had left for Kāṣṇa island. They then went to Kāṣṇa island only to be told that Kanakavanam had gone to Karpūra island. With another Vaiṣya Candrasvāmī landed on the Karpūra island and no purpose. After thus going to the Kuvāra and Śiṅhala islands too Candrasvāmī met Kanakavanam at Karpūra. Candrasvāmī showed the children to Candrasvāmī, but they were not his. He burst into tears, and returned from Śrīkātāpura. He passed on his way back many a temple and city and at dusk reached a big forest. He satisfied his hunger, by eating some roots and fruits, and got upon a tree and sat on the top of it. It was mid-night, yet sleep did not oblige him. Then he saw a mātrāśānī (a group of women) consisting of Nārāyanī and others come and dance at the foot of the tree. Nārāyanī saw Candrasvāmī and after the dance was over and their companions had left the place Nārāyanī called him down from the tree and gave him a flower. And, according to the advice of Nārāyanī the next day morning Candrasvāmī went to Tārāpura where, accidentally he got into the house of Anantavāmī, minister of the kingdom, and, for food, repeated veda hymns. The minister invited him for meals, and there he saw Mahāpāla and Candramati. He placed the flower presented by Nārāyanī on Mahāpāla's nose whereupon the children recognised him, their father. The people celebrated it as a happy day. King Tārāvarman gave his daughter, Vavumā, in marriage to Mahānā, along with half his kingdom. They went to Kānalapura and returned with their mother. All of them spent their days very happily at Tārāpara. (Kathānritāgāra, Alankāravatī Lāmbakā, Tārānga 6).

CANDRĀVALOKA. A King of Ciraśūpurāna. When once the King in the course of a hunting expedition came to the tank of a river, tired and done up, he saw there the very beautiful lady, Indivaraprabhā, daughter of Mahāru Kavaṇa by Menakā. Having fallen in love with each other they went to the Aśrama of the mahārājas where, at his instance, Candrāvalokā took the pledge not to kill animals in future, and Kavaṇa married his daughter to the King. On their way back to the palace the couple went to sleep on the banks of a pool which belonged to a Brāhmaṇa, who caught hold of them, but released them on condition that they gave him in their stead a brahmin boy aged seven. Thus they returned to Ciraśū and told about the incident to minister Sumati. As advised by Sumati an idol in gold equal in size to a brahmin boy aged seven was made and a proclamation was issued that the golden idol would be given to him who, in return, gives a brahmin boy seven years old. A brahmin boy was got, and he was given to the Brāhmaṇa. (Kathānritāgāra Saṣākāravatī Lāmbakā, Tārānga 27).

CANDRĀVAMSA. A royal dynasty of kings which ruled Indra for a long time. Since the founding father of the dynasty was Candar the kings in the dynasty are called Candrāvamśa. (For Candar’s birth see Purāvavas). A chronological list of the kings of this dynasty is given infra.

Descended from Candar thus, Buda—Puruvavas—Ayu—Nahusa. Nahusa had two sons, Ayu and Yavita. Yavita had three sons: Druhyu, Anurvedyuyu and Puru by his wife Sarmisthā, and two sons, Yadu and Tortum by his wife Dayantyā. The genealogy of each of these is given below:

2) Anuredyuyu — Three sons, Sabhānara, Cakṣu and Parika were born to Anuredyuyu. Sabhānara begot Kālanara, and he Srijaya. Srijaya had four sons: a) Sanjnejaya, b) Mahānana, c) Uśirana and d) Tīruka. Uśirana and Tīruka proved to be family progenitors. Their genealogy is given below:
   a) Uśirana. Uśirana had five sons: Si, Ven, Kṛni, Kṛn and Darpā of whom Sī had five sons: Bhadrav Smrīk—Keṣava—Vrāṣrada and Kapotarama, and from Keṣava was born the Kīrakas.
   b) Tīruka. Descended from Tīruka were: Kṛṣadra—Homa—Sudāpas and Bāla, and Bāla had seven sons: Anāgahālā—Kukkura—Suvrīka—Updrāva—Vaṣa and Ṭātra. Of the seven sons of Āgarāna turned out to be the family progenitors, and therefore the Arāga royal dynasty starts its course. To Āgarā were born the following sons: Dadohavāna—Rudrapāna—Dharmāna—Gadāna—Satyārana—Lomapāla—Cau-rātiga—Pṛthu—Campa—Hrāyasa and Bhadrārtha, and to Bhadrārtha were born three sons viz. Bhadrārtha, Brahmukrmā and Bhadrārtha. And Bhadrāratha had the following sons: Bṛhmanas, Jayadratha—Vijaya—Dhrtavattra—Satyārman and Atrabhāttra. Karī was Atrabhāttra’s foster son and father of Vṛṣamā.

a) Pratīratha. From Pratīratha was born Karaṇa and from his Medicine.

b) Sundhrāruta. He had three sons, Dusyanta—Pra-vīra and Śāmanda, and Bharata (Vitahā) was born to Dusyanta of Sakulantā. From Bharata were descended the following—: Suhrota—Sundhā—Garu—Suket and Brāhatīktra, who had four sons: Nara—Mahāvīra—Garga and Hasti. And, Nara begot Sar-teri and he begot Ramāva and Kurū. A son called Pāhākṣaya was born to Mahāvīra. Garga begot Šani. And it was Hasti who founded Harāvināppura. He became the family progenitor. Hasti had three sons, Purumā —Ajamūdha and Devīmūdha. The Kings called Viṣṇu was the son of Purumūdha.

Ajamūdha, the second son of Hasti had three sons, (a) Ṛksa (b) Brhadhira and (c) Nila. Their descendants are mentioned below:

(i) Ṛksa. Ṛksa begot Sarīvarana and from Sarīvarana was born Kurū. From Kurū originated the Kurū dynasty. Kurū had four sons: (A) Patiki, (B) Sudhanu, (A) Jáhu and (A) Nisāda. Out of the four Sudhanu and Jáhu became family progenitors.

(A) Sudhanu. The following were descended from him in order:—Suhrota—Śvārāna—Kṛṣṭi—Upari-caravas—Brhadhrātha and Jāradhātha. Jāradhātha had four sons: Soma—Vedāvarta—Tūra and Sūtrāvata. (A) Jáhu. From Jáhu were descended:—Sarathra—Śvārāna—Śvārāna—Yajatesh—Ravvaya—Bhāvuka—Cakrodhata—Devalīthi—Ṛksa—Bhīma and Pratīc. Pratīc had three sons: Devalī, Santana and Bhūkta. Santana was also called Mahābhikṣak. And, he had two wives, Gaṅga and Satyavat. From Gaṅga was born Bhāma; of Satyavat, before her marriage, was born Vāsya by Parśārā. Satyavat had two sons: Citrāgata and Vicitrivratya by Santana. From Vāsya were born Dhrtrārtha, Pāṇḍu and Vidura, and from Dhrtrārtha the Kauravas. Kunī and Mādrī, wives of Pāṇḍu, together got from the devas five sons, viz. Dhar-maputra, Bhīma, Arjuna, Nakula and Sahdeva. Dhar-maputra had two sons, Devaka and Pratīvindhya. To Bhīma was born of Hidumā Hātorkara. Satānaka was born of Renukamuk to Nakula. Arjuna’s descendants were: Aḥima—Parīkat—Citrāgata—Śvārāna—Svaṭukarma—Ajarārtha—Jāneṣya—Satānaka—Sahasrānaka—Aṣvamedha—Ašvinkṛṣya—Gupta—Citrārtha—Śucitra—Dhrtmāna—Suseṭṭa—Sūnta—Swapkasi—Nāla—Upaṭālava—Mṛtyujaya—Dūṣya—Nīr—Bhadrārtha—Śatānaka—Durnāma—Bhandavara—Duggadāpi—Krempa.

B) Bhadrārtha. Descended from Bhadrārtha were: Brhadhrātha—Bhāskāya—Jayadratha—Vikṣa—Senacita—Rucirāvā. Rucirāvā had three sons: Devahara—Kṣaya and Vaiṣṇava.
CANDRAYAMSA

4) Yada. The Yadu dynasty owes its origin to Yadu who had four sons: Sahasrajit, Kroun, Nala and Ripu. Sahasrajit, the son of Sahasrajat begot three sons: Mahahuya, Venuhuya and Hehuya (likavira). Dharma was Hehuya's son, and Kany was the son of Dharma. Kany had four sons: Sadajit, Mahasen, Bhradrasa and Durdama. Bhuradrasa begot Bhana and he and Krityra, Krukenn, Kruvraman and Kruvagama. Kruvaraman's son, and Kruvagama's son, and Kruvaraman's daughter had hundreds sons, Jayadhava, Sarsana, Vrasaba, Madhu, Mārgājita and others. Vṛṣṇi with whom the Vṛṣṇ dynasty begins was Madhu's son. From Jayadhava the eldest son of Kruvaraman was descended in order: Talajishtha—Vindura—Yudhishtha—Vasu and Svarbhuma. Sinu and Ninna were the sons of Vṛṣṇi. From Sinu came in order: Satyaka—Satyakā (Yuyutha)—Java—Kan—Amrita—Prithu. Prithu had two sons, (1) Citraratha and (2) Swaphikha. (1) Citraratha had two sons (1A) Vṛṣṇi and (1B) Kukura were born to Citraratha.

14) Vṛṣṇi. From Vṛṣṇi, who was born Sūra, and from Sūra was born Sini, Bhoga was Sini's son and from Bhoga, Hirikā was born. Hirikā had four sons: Devavāna, Gadiṅgahani, Kṛtapavan and Sūra and one daughter Prithu (Kanula). And ten sons were born to Sūra: Devavāna, Devakā, Devavāna, Devavāna, Devavāna, Devavāna, Devavāna, Devavāna, Devavāna, Devavāna. Vṛṣṇi's daughter married Devakā. Sṛṣa was Krishna's brother. From Kṛtapavan was born the son of Vasudeva and Devakā, and Pradyumna was Sṛṣa's son. Anuruddha was the son of Pradyumna, and Vajra of Anuruddha.

18) Kukura. The descendants of Kukura were: Vrahni—Vlōn—Kapalarama—Tumburundubhi—Darā—Vasu—Nālīka—Āhuaka. Āhuaka had two sons: Ugrasena and Devaka. Karna was Ugrasena's son and Devaka's daughter. Devaka had three sons: Devāpa, Upadeva and Sudeva. Devāpa had seven daughters, Sṛṇadeva, Sṛṇideva, Upadeva, Srideva, Devakā, Sāhadeva and Pratibhā. Of them Akura had two sons: Devāpa and Upadeva.

2) Swaphikha. Son of Prithu and brother of Citraratha. Swaphikha, had twelve sons called Akura, Aṣuga, Sārmane, Nālīka, Āhuaka, Āhuaka had two sons: Ugrasena and Devaka. Karna was Ugrasena's son and Devaka's daughter. Devaka had three sons: Devāpa, Upadeva and Sudeva. Devāpa had seven daughters, Sṛṇadeva, Sṛṇideva, Upadeva, Srideva, Devakā, Sāhadeva and Pratibhā. Of them Akura had two sons: Devāpa and Upadeva.

All the above royal dynasties belong to Candranāvari. (Agni Purāṇa, Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Bhagavata and Brahma Purāṇa.)

CANDRAYAMSA. A king of Kambojia. As handsome as Candranāvari, he was born in the dynasty of the asura called Candranāvari (M.B. Api Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 31). Druhyumna killed him in the great war. (M.B. Deva Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 62).

CANDRAYAVATI. Daughter of Sunābha, the asura. Pradyumna, born to Śrī Krishna of Rukminī, married Prabhāvatī, daughter of the asura called Vajracātika. Sunābha was the younger brother and Vajracātika. Sunābha had two daughters called Candrayavatī and Śrī Gomati. These girls once saw Pradyumna and Prabhāvatī engaged in love-talk and they were attracted by Pradyumna. They requested Prabhāvatī to select husbands for them also from among the Yadavas. Prabhāvatī, in her childhood had learnt from Durvasa a mantra, the repetition of which by a woman thinking in mind of any male would help to secure that male as the husband for her. Prabhāvatī taught that mantra to Candrayavatī and Gomati. They thought respectfully of Gada and Sunābha and repeated the mantra with the result that Gada married Candrayavatī and Sunābha married Gomati.

CANDRAYAVATI. A wife of Harihadrandra in his former life. (See Harihadrandra.)

CANDRAYAVATSA. A Kṣatriya dynasty which originated from king Candrayavata (M.B. Udvyoga Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 16).

CANDRAYAVINASANA. An asura who ascended to earth as a reputed king under the name Jānaki. (Api Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 37).

CANDRAYAVATA. A brave and just, and performed the ascetism of beauty, happiness and popularity among the people. It is practised during the full-moon day in Dhanu (December-January). (M.B. Anaucea Parva, Chapter 110).

CANDRAYANA. A penance. (See Vrata).

CANDRODAYA. A brother of the Vrsēya king. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 42).

CANCRA I. A Kṣatriya king, who served Dharmaputra at the council hall built by Maya. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 26).

CANCRA II. An asura, one of the attendants of Karnā. Karnā had employed as his bodyguards many pugilists—Pradhikha, Cāntuva, Trivāruva, Mūṣṭika, Arishta, Kesha, Dhenuka, and Vrīvīda and these pugilists were sent with Pītaka to Gokula to kill the king Khruvam. On the death of Pītaka they returned to Mathura. When Khruvam invited Kṛṣna to Mathura, Cāntuva and Mūṣṭika were the chief pugilists entrusted with the duty of killing Kṛṣna. Kṛṣna fought with Cāntuva and Bahuhārā and Mūṣṭika. Both Cāntuva and Mūṣṭika were killed. (Bhagavata Devaranebhadhara).

CANCRA III. A king of ancient India. (M.B. Api Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 238).

CAPAYAYA. A programme of worshipping the bow. Kanva did this yajña for fourteen days, and Kṛṣṇa was invited to witness it. And Kṛṣṇa killed Kamsa, Bhāgavata Daśamana Skandaḥ).

CARAKA. Author of Carakasaṁhitā.

CARMAMANDALĀ. A village in ancient India. (M.B. Bhūjana Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 47).

CARMĀVĀN. Son of King Subala. He was the brother of Sakuni. Dravida, son of Arjuna killed him in the great war. (M.B. Bhūjana Parva, Chapter 90).

CARMĀVATI. A river in north India, now known as the Tārtar. (1) General. King Saśabindu, who ruled northern India in olden days once performed a yajña. The skins of animals killed in the yajña lay there in a heap like a hill. When rain fell there flowed from the 'skimhill' a river and it was called Carmanvatī. (Devībhāgavata, Prathama Skandaḥ).

(2) River Carmanvatī serves Varuṇa in his assembly. (M.B. Sa śābha Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 21).

(3) Once on the bank of this river Sala'deva defeated the son of Jambhaka in fight. (M.B. Śa śābha Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 7).

(4) He who bathes in this river will get the same result as from the Agrātikarṇa yajña. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Verse 54).

(5) Carmanatī is one of the rivers responsible for the origin of Agni. (M.B. Sa śābha Parva, Chapter 222, Verse 23).

CURO (CARIGUTRA). A son of Dhūrāṣṭra, killed in war by Bhīma. (M.B. Droha Parva, Chapter 136).

CUBHADRA. (See Carigutta).

CUBUDRA. (See Carigutta).

CUBUDHRA. (See Carigutta).

CUBUDHASA. I. A son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Rukmini. (See Carigutta). He was present at the wedding of Draupadi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 185). The chief incident in his life was his killing Vīvidhanyā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 26).

CUBUDHASA II. (See Carandrasa).

CUBUDHI. A mountain near the Mahāmeru. There are twenty mountains around the Meru, viz., Kāṅga, Kuranga, Kuśumbha, Viśakha, Trikṣujā, Śiva, Paravka, Rucika, Nila, Nisudha, Sitivāsa, Kubāla, Sāla, Vaiñāyana, Carudhi, Hanuṣa, Rāshibha, Nāga, Kālājā and Nārada. (Devībhāgavata, Aṣṭamā Skandaḥ).

CUBUGUTRA. Son of Śrī Kṛṣṇa by Rukmini. Praduyama, Carudesa, Sudesa, Carudheda, Sūgaru, Caru-gupte, Bhadrācaru, Ācāradasa, and Ācāru were the ten sons of Rukmini. She had also a daughter called Cūraundh. Bṛhadāvatā Maṛ̤aman Skandaḥ). As the net from the Bṛhadāvatā the Mahābhārata speaks of their more sons to Rukmini, viz., Caruvās, Caruvās and Caruvās, (Amūṣāsa Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 53).

CURAMATI. (See Carigutta).

CUMAMATSA. A brahmavādī son of Vīvāmarta. (M.B. Amūṣāsa Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 59).

CUNNETRA. A celestial woman, who spent her time on Kauhāra's assembly. (M.B. Śāśābha Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 102).

CURASIRSA. A mahārāja, who belonged to Alabhamgurā. A friend of Indra, the mahārāja once spoke to Dharmaputra about the greatness of Śiva. (M.B. Amūṣāsa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 5).

CURUSRAVAS. (See Carigutta).

CŪRVĀKTRA. An attendant of Subrahmanya. He was much devoted to brahmans. (M.B. Śāśābha Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 71).

CŪRVĒṢA. (See Carigutta).

CŪRUYASAS. (See Carigutta).

CŪRVAKA I. A Rākṣasa, who was a close friend of Duryodhana. The following story is told about how he happened to become Duryodhana's friend. In the Kṛṣṇa this Rākṣasa did tapas to please Brahmā at Bālāsāraṇam, and Brahmā gave him the boon that he would be safe from all beings. Then he went round the world troubling brahmans, who, at last sought refuge in Brahmā, and he pacified them with the assurance that Cūrva would become a friend of Duryodhana when he would insult Brahmans and be reduced to ashes in the fire of their anger. Accordingly Cūrva became a friend of Duryodhana. When, after the great war, Dharmaputra entered Hastinapura with his followers thousands of brahmans gathered around and blessed him. Cūrva also disguised as a brahmin came there and condemning Dharmaputra as an enemy of his own people cursed him. The brahmans recognised him and cursed him to ashes. (M.B. Śāśābha Parva, Chapters 38, 52).

CŪRVĀKTRA II. Certain texts refer to another Cūrva, a philosopher in ancient India. He was an atheist. He contrived to perform a powerful manner the belief in the existence of heaven and hell after death.

CŪRVAKGĪ. Wife of King Bhudra-reṇyā and daughter of Kūṭamba. (Bṛhadāvatā Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

CŪRVĀKTRA. An attendant of Subrahmanya. He had deep love for brahmans. (M.B. Śāśābha Parva, Chapter 45).

CŪRĀKṛG. A king of the Aṅga dynasty. He was the son of Hemapāda and father of Prthūlakṣa. (Āgni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

CŪRĀŚĀ. A Rajārṣi. He was a prominent member in Yama's assembly. (Śāśābha Parva, Chapter 11).

CŪRĀŚĀ. A heroic asura. Once he fell in love with Rāmabhā, and on his request Svayambhābhi, Rāmabhā's attendant, won over her mistress to the asura. The asura, Rāmabhā and Svayambhābhi then shifted their residence to a beautiful palace built in south India by Maya for Cūrāśā. But, Indra who felt Rāmabhā's absence badly came down to earth, killed Cūrāśā and took Rāmabhā with him back. Indra cursed Svayambhābhi to remain on earth. And, he told her that she should welcome and treat well the monkeys who would be arriving there in their quest of Sītā, and then she would get redemption from the curse. The above facts were revealed by Svayambhābhi herself while welcoming the monkeys. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa).

CUTRUDHMAṬHYA. The purānas declare that worshipping Śiva on Caturdāśi day will satisfy all desires. There is a story in one of the purānas supporting this claim. (See Kumudvati).

CUTURDAMSTRĀ. An attendant of Subrahmanya. He always showed great devotion towards Brahmā. (M.B. Śāśābha Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 62).

CUTRIRIK. A harlot about whom the following story is told in Kathāśārīṣagāra.

Once a poor Brahmā got a piece of gold as Pratigraha (see or daksina for performing a religious rite). While he was perplexed not knowing what to do with the gold, a Vīṣṇu advised him to go on tour with the money by} selling the gold. The poor Brahmin did not even know how to go on tour. Then the Vīja advised him to visit a harlot called Caturikā, who lived close by and who, the Vīja said, could teach him how to go on tour.

Brahmin:—What shall I do first after going to the harlot’s house?

Vīja:—Caturikā will become friendly if you would give her the gold. Then you should use sweet and charming words, and that is all.

The Brahmin went immediately to Caturikā’s house and he was received honourably by her. Then giving the gold to her he requested her to instruct him about going on tour. This request of his evoked laughter from people around him. Then the Brahmin who was versed in the Sūtras began reciting the Sāman with his palm formed in the shape of the ears of the cow. All those who were present there wildly laughed at him, and somehow or other he escaped from the non too pleasant scene, and repeated his experiments at the harlot’s to the Vīja. He very easily understood that the reason for the Brahmin being ridiculed was that misreading his advice to use ‘sāma’ (sweet words), the Brahmin recited the sāma-veda. He took the brahmin back to Caturikā and asked her to return the ‘grass’ (gold given her by the brahmin) to the cow; the cow, who was as simple as the cow. Laughtingly Caturikā returned the gold to him. (Kāthāvanīgāra, Kāthāpitha Lābhahām, Taṇḍaga 6).

Caturmāsya. A penance (Vrata) which continues for four months. During this period, the Vradas are to be studied with pure heart. The Pāyāvatas did this penance at Gayā. (M.B. Vana Purāṇa, Chapter 95).

Caturāṅgakahālinga. A Brahmana linga installed on the northern bank of Sarasvati by Brahman, to start with, created animate and inanimate objects, and was thinking about further creation when a beautiful girl, born of herself appeared before him. Brahmā became enamoured of that girl and showed an incoming passion. As a punishment for this sin one of his heads broke. The broken-headed Brahmā went to the Sthanatīrtha, which washes off all sins, on the northern bank of Sarasvati and installed his own linga, known as the Caturāṅgakahālinga. This installation of linga redeemed him from sins. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 49).

Caturthrīvṛata. A fast undertaken so that one may be happy for one year, may achieve all desires and attain Svālakṣa. While observing this fast one should worship Gaṇapati on the fourth day after New Moon (Caturthrī) in the month of Makara (February-March).

Next day the fast should be broken by eating cooked rice and oil seeds. The Mulamantra of Gaṇapati is ‘gam svitā’; hṛdayāsāvitaḥ begins with ‘gam’.

‘Agasāchitikāya’ is the śāilakāya mantra and ‘Gacchāchitikāya’ is the vasarjana mantra. Gaṇapati should be worshipped with ‘tukikāya’ and beginning with ‘gacchā’ as also with offering of sandal paste, rice balls etc. “Om: Mahotākāśya vidmaha vākrasandāyuyā dhimahi tamam dantā pracoṣadāyati” is the Gaṇapati gāyatri mantra. He or she who performs the Caturthrī vrata will attain Śālakā. If Gaṇapati is worshipped on a Tuesday which is also Caturthrī the devotee will get all his desires satisfied. Caturthrī occurring in Māsa (March-April) is called Avighnacāiturthi, and that day fasting should be in the night. On Caturthrī in April-May Gaṇapati should be worshipped with damanaka flowers, and then the worshipper will become very happy. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 179). Also see Viṇāyaka Caturthrī.

Caturupāyam. The four means used by Kings in olden times to achieve their objects are called Caturupāyam. Sāma, dāna, bheda and danda are the Caturupāyas (four tactics). There are three other upāyas also, almost equally important as the first four, and the seven upāyas are collectively called Saṃstipāyas. There are also yet other upāyas, but they are not important enough to merit special comment.

1) Sāma. It is the best means to attract and convert others to one’s side. It consists in winning people with sweet words and looks. People who are friendly by temperament and straightforward may be brought round by sāma. Sāma is employed in dealing with sons, brothers and other relatives.

2) Dāna. There are five kinds or varieties of dāna (gift) viz. priḍitāna, dravyādāna, svayamgrāpa, deya and pratimokṣa. If a person gets help from another and acknowledges help by reward that reward is called priḍitāna. The giver and the poor should be brought round by priḍitāna. Military captains, heroes and citizens should be won over by this dāna. Those who fall at feet should be honoured by dāna.

3) Bheda. Bhedotpāya is of three kinds: to destroy or end the friendship subsisting between people, to create dissension and to make the parties quarrel with each other. He who is falsely praised, he who does not desire wealth or welfare, he who has been invited to come and then insulted, traitor to king, he who has been exorbitantly taxed, the angry one, the honourable one, the wretched, the unreasonably forsaken one, he who harbours hatred in his mind, the pacified one, one whose wealth and wife have been taken away or stolen, he who has not been respected though deserving of respect—if such people are in one’s opposite camp, suspicion should be raked up among them and thus division created in their ranks. If subordinate chieftains, and forest wilithout commit other crimes, are brought round by the use of sāma and bheda upāyas.

4) Danda. Dandotpāya is of three kinds, viz. killing, despoiling of wealth, and inflicting pain on the body or torture. Danda has two other forms, prakāśa (open) and aprakāśa (secret). Those who have become objects of hatred to all people should be subjected to prakāśa-danda. People, whose killing the world will detect should not be killed openly, but only secretly. Enemies should be killed with weapons etc. Brahmīna should not be killed. Friends and allies should not be subjected to danda; friends, who are made objects of danda will wither away like worm-eaten trees. The King, who possesses the three powers (of wealth, army and people’s support) and is fully conscious of the time and environmental factors should annihilate enemies by the instrument of danda. Evl people should be defeated by danda itself.

The upāya māyā consists in practising deception by magic or other yogic powers. The powers can be acquired by the worship of the idols of certain Devas. People who employ go about at night in various disguises. They disguise themselves as beautiful women even as animals. They also deceive people by creating illusions of clouds, fire or lightning. For instance, Bīṣama killed Khakaka by going to him in the guise of a woman.
CATURVARNYAM. (The four Castes, Classes.)
1) General. The puranas tell that Brahmā created the four castes, namely Brahmins, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas and Śūdras and assigned them to duties and rules of procedure.
2) Origin. Brahmā got ready for the work of Creation, concentrating his mind on the universal soul, the embodiment of Truth. And, the first to be born from his face were people with sublime qualities, and then he called Brahmans. Then emerged from his chest people in whom the heroic or militant qualities preponderated. (Rāja). Then the Creator named Kṣatriyas. Then from his thighs were born people in whom rajas and tanas preponderated, and they were called Vaiśyas. And, lastly Brahmā brought forth from his feet another race of people, in whom kāyas and tāmas (darkness, cultural lackness) preponderated in them they were named Śūdras. The system of four castes is called Caturvarṇam. (Vimś Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 6).
3) Code of conduct. Ahiṁsā (non-violence), Satyāvāda (speaking truth), Bhūtātāma (love for all living beings), Tarunābha (towards holy places), Dāna (gifts), Brahmācarīya (self-control), Vairāčārīya (absence of malice). Service of Devas, Brahmins and Gurus (elders), to attend to all dharmas (duties), Pitrupājya (worship of elders) eternal loyalty to King, to accomplish objects in conformity with the injunction of the Śāstras, not to commit cruel deeds, Tīrthā (pilgrimage), to put up with equanimity the pair of opposites such as pleasure and pain, heat and cold), belief in Gē—that these codes of conduct are common to all Castes and in all the four stations in life. Now, the special codes for each of the four castes.
1) Brahmins. To perform and get performed Yajñas, to study and to teach Vedas, to give gifts and to receive gifts—these form the duties of the Brahmins. Brahmins take their second birth (dvija) on the upanayana (wearing of the sacred thread). The caste of the mother is the caste of the child. But children born to Brahmans of their non Brahman wives are not Brahmins. Children born of a Brahmin woman and a Śūdra are called Candālas. Sons born of Brahmin women to Kṣatriyas are called Sūtas, and sons born of a Brahmin woman to a Vaiśya are called Vaidēchikas. The Brahman shall not adopt the profession of the other castes. The twice-born are, however, allowed in certain circumstances, to profess agriculture, protection of cows, commerce and kusadas (to lend money on interest). But, he shall not trade in gorasa (milk and other cow products) lavanya (salt) and food. If he be an agriculturist, the Brahmin may till the earth, cut medicinal plants and destroy pests. But, he must purify the soul by performing yajñas and worshipping Devas. The soil should be ploughed with eight oxen, neither the plough nor the yoke should be left to rest. He may sustain himself either with rice (food got by begging) or Arima (food got not by begging). The suffix "Sāmā" should be added to the names of Brahmin children. Upanayana (wearing of the sacred thread) should be done when the child is eight years old. The maṇḍuḥ (girdle around the waist) should to be worn after upanayana should be made either of munga grass or of the bark of trees. Brahmin brahmacārins should wear hide, and when they beg for alms the sentence should commence with the word 'Bhavati', e.g. "Bhavati, bhikṣukā dhāra!". The Brahmin can marry in all the castes, but he shall perform ritual only along with the wife of his own caste.
   a) Kṣatriyas. To give gifts according to rules, study Vedas and perform yajñas form the duty of the Kṣatriya. To look after and take care of good people and to punish evil-doers are his especial duties. Names of Kṣatriya children should take the suffix "Varmā". After upanayana the child should wear tiger skin. He should carry a danda (rod) of the Arayāl (peepal) tree. When the Kṣatriya brahmacārin begs for alms the word 'bhavati' should be used in the middle of the sentence, e.g. "Bhikṣukā bhavati dhāra!". The Kṣatriya can marry in the other castes, except the Brahmin. At the time of wedding the Kṣatriya woman should hold an arrow in her hand.
   b) Vaiśyas. Agriculture, protection of cows and trade are the special duties of the Vaiśya. Children born of Brahmin women to Vaiśyas are called Vaidēchikas. Names of Vaiśya children should have the suffix 'gupta' after them. After upanayana the Vaiśya brahmacārin should wear sheep's skin. He should carry a danda made of a branch of the Kūvala tree. The Vaiśya may have a wife of his own caste and of one of the Śūdra caste. At the time of wedding the Vaiśya woman should hold a cane in her hand.
   c) Śūdras. Service to the Brahmin and architecture form the duties of the Śūdra. Children born to Kṣatriya women by Śūdras are called Pulkaṣas. Children born to Brahmin women by Śūdras are called Candālas, and sons born to Śūdras by Vaiśya women are called Ayogavas. The Candāla's profession is to hang criminals sentenced to death, and to live by women. The Pulkaṣa must live by hunting. Ayogava is to act on the stage and live by architecture. The Candāla should live outside the village. The Candāla has a right to take the clothes on corpses. He shall not have any physical contacts with the others. He will attain salvation if he died in the course of protecting others. The suffix 'dāśa' should be added to his name. He shall marry only from his own caste. (Agni Purāṇa, 6 Chapters from 151).
CATURVEDA. One of the Śaptaśatras (seven manes). Vairājas, agnivātās, gārhapsayas, somāpas, ēkaśrīgas, Caturvedas and Kalas are the seven manes. (M. B. Sakyā Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 47).
CATURYUGA. (See Manvantara).
CATUSKARMI. One of the female attendants of Skanda-deva. (M. B. Sālyā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 25).
CATUSPATHARATĀ. A female attendant of Skanda. (M. B. Sālyā Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 27).
CATVARAVĀŚIN. A woman attendant of Skanda. (M. B. Sālyā Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 12).
CĀVETTUṆATA. (CĀVĒṆU). (Pata = army).
A particular division of the army which in olden days used to come forward to lay down their lives in the service of the country. When defeat in war was almost certain for their king an army division under royal leadership was formed of heroes, who took their last leave of their homes and people. The soldiers left their homes with their heads and eyebrows shaved, and people gave them a hearty send-off. Either victory or death in battlefield was their slogan. This system originated in Kerala. Imitating Kerala, Turkey and Egypt formed their own division of Cavedutputa in the 15th century. The Cavedutputa of Turkey called the Janissary was formed out of poor Christians captured in war, and that of Egypt called Mamaluk was formed out of slaves. But, the Cavedutputa of ancient Kerala was self-organised out of burning love for their king and country. The families of those warriors of the pata who died in fight were allotted royal favours. Even before, in the 14th century A.D. there existed in Kerala this system of Cavedutputa. From A.D. 1090 to 1111 A.D. many fierce wars were fought between Kerala and the Cola country, and it was perhaps during this period that this system of fighting came into vogue. Certain inscriptions of the period go to prove that Râmainarâmaekhara Cakravrata, who ruled Kerala during the above period drove out the Colas from Quilon and captured places up to Konâ. Foreign writers have also referred to the Cavedutputa, "Amoores" and "Amochi" used in the "Rae of Portuguese power in India" indicate the Cavedutputa. "In the war between Cochin and Calicut in 1504 three princes of Cochin were killed, one of them being the nephew of the ruling monarch. On his death 210 Cavedutu warriors who formed the body-guard of the nephew rushed to the field after shaving their heads and eyebrows and killed all the enemies they saw."

CEDI, A king of the Yaduvâra, 1) Genealogy: Descending in order from Visans - Brâhma - Atri - Candrâ - Buhla - Purâruvas - Ayus - Nalusa - Yaviyâ - Yadu - Krâshâ - Vâjañanâ - Śvâhî - Rukka - Girantarâ - Sâsabandhura - Prithvarâv - Dharmâ - Rucala - Yamagha - Vîdarbha - Ruanjâ - Bharu - Kâta - Uskâ - Cedi. The Cedi dynasty began from Cedi and the land ruled over by Cedi came to be known as Ceredyâ. 2) Other details regarding King Cedi. 1) Once Upâîrakruvan conquered his land. (Šloka 2, Chapter 15, Adi Parva). 2) Karupusati wife of Nakula, was a princess of Cedi rajya. (Šloka 79, Chapter 95, Adi Parva). 3) Once Šurâpâl reigned over this country. After his death his son Dhrâstaketa was crowned king. (Šloka 36, Chapter 45, Sabhâ Parva). 4) During the period of Nala, Ceredrijâ was ruled by king Subahu. Dhrakyanati lived in his palace very comfortably. (Šloka 44, Chapter 65, Vana Parva). 5) Dhrâstaketa, a king of Cedi, came to the help of the Pândavas with an asauhâli (an army of 21080 chariots, equal number of elephants, 65610 horses and 10930 infantry men.). (Šloka 7, Chapter 19, Udyoga Parva). 6) The Kârtâva warriors of this state helped Śri Kṛṣṇa in many ways. (Šloka 8, Chapter 119, Bhishma Parva). 7) Cekatâna fought with Anuvindâ in the Kuruksendra battle. (Šloka 48, Chapter 14, Drona Parva). 8) Dronârya defeated Cekatâna in the great battle. (Šloka 60, Chapter 13, Drona Parva). 9) Duryodhana killed Cekatâna in the great battle. (Šloka 31, Chapter 12, Sûtâ Parva). 10) When Vyûsa by his yoge powers invited the spirits of all the dead warriors on the banks of the Gândhâ the spirit of Cekatâna was also there. (Šloka 12, Chapter 32, Âsramavatsa Parva). 11) CEMI (U) (COPPER). The spears of Lord Siva which were dropped into the river Gândhâ developed into iron and gave birth to Subrahmanyâ. Along with Subrahmanyâ came out from Gândhâ gold and silver and from its heat steel and copper. From the dirt came out tin. (Sarga 37, Vâsanâ Kûdyâna). 12) CENKANNSUARA. See Jambhukvesvara. 13) CENNASU NAMBUJÁRI. Cemiss. Nîrâyana Namubjiripâd was born and bred up in Kerala. He was born in Vammis in Ponnadu Taluk in the year 1420 A.D. His father was Râja Namubjiripâd of Bhûgara gostra. Besides his book 'taniyamamucarâ' he has written a book 'Manavavatsalakéna'. This book is called 'Manuvâlayandandrikâ' also. 14) CÎRA. (A king of serpents). See under Ruru.}

CERIPPU, (FOOTWEAR). There is a story in Mahâbhûrata of how Cerippu and Kuta (boot and umbrella) were born. Once the heat of the Sun became unbearable to Jamadagni and enraged at this the sage started sending arrows against the Sun. His wife Renukâ was supplying him with arrows. When a set of arrows was finished Renukâ brought another set. This continued without break and the Sun began to feel the attack. Unable to do anything against the rage the Sun heated the head and foot of Renukâ on her way to supply the arrows so fiercely that Renukâ fell down under a banyan tree exhausted. When she became well enough to walk she took the arrows to her husband who was very angry for her being late. She then explained to him how because of the extreme heat of the sun she fell down on the way. Jamadagni then worried with increased fury his shower of arrows and the Sun in the disguise of a Brahmin approached and advised him that it was not possible to strike down the Sun because he was a swift-mover in the sky and so it was better to withdraw from that attempt. But Jamadagni said the Sun would be stationary for some time at midday and then he would let the sun down. When the sun found that Jamadagi would never drop his attempt he accepted defeat and presented Jamadagi with a pair of sandals and an umbrella to protect against the heat from below and above. From that day onwards footwear and umbrella came into vogue.

The practice of presenting sandals and umbrella is being carried down from generation to generation and even today it is being followed; these two are given as gifts on the 'Śrīdha' day. (Chapter 95 and 96, Anurādana Parva, M.B.)

CH This letter means a cut, amputation severance. (Chapter 348, Agni Purāṇa.)

CHĀGAMUKHA. Subrahmanya. He is here idolised as one leaving a face like that of a ghost. (Ślokā 3, Chapter 228, Vata Parva.)

CHANDODEVA. Sage Mataṅga was known in his previous birth by this name. (See Mataṅga.)

CHATRAKETU. The second son born to Lokanātha of his wife Urmiśa. The eldest son was Takṣaka. Śrī Rāma after his return from the exile established a Kingdom called Agart on the eastern sea shore and crossed over the seas to become the King of that place. In the western side after subjugating the telegōs (low-caste non-Hindu tribes) Śrī Rāma established another kingdom called Gaudramaṇi and installed Chatraketu as the King of that country. (Uttara Rāmāyanā.)

CHATRAVATI. 'There was in ancient Bharata a country called Ahaṭhātra. Chatravatī was the capital of that state. The country itself is also known as Chatravatī. (Chapter 165, Ādi Parva.)

CHĀYĀ. A substitute of Śanjhā, daughter of Viśvakarmā. Śanjhā got from Śrīrāma three children, Manu, Yama and Yami. The heat of Śrīrāma, her husband, became unbearable to her and so she created a substitute in her exact form and leaving her to look after Śrīrāma, her husband, she left the place and went to her father. Śrīrāma did not know of this replacement and taking her to the Samyā he produced three children by her, Śrīn, Śāvaranāmaṇi and Tatpath. Chāyā loved her sons more and this made Yama angry and he raised his legs to strike her when Chāyā cursed that Yama’s legs would fall off from his body Yama complained to his father and he amended the curse and said that only some flesh from his limbs would fall to the ground and that flesh would serve as food to the gānis in the earth. Yama would escape from further injury. After consoling his son he turned towards Chāyā. The anger of Śrīrāma frightened her and the told him everything. Śrīrāma then divorced her and brought back Śanjhā. For details see Śanjhā. (Chapter 9 of Harivāna; Chapter 2, Amsa 3, Viṣṇupurāṇa.)

CHAYASUṬA. Sam. (Saturn)

CHAṬRAKA. A low-caste born of Nandini, the cow, during her flight with Viṣṇu. (Ślokā 36, Chapter 174, Ādi Parva.)

CIDAMBARA (ŚITAMBARA). A Sanskrit poet of 16th century A.D. He was a poet in the court of emperor Veṅkaṭa who ruled over Vijayanagara during the period 1566 A.D. to 1614 A.D. His one great work is Rāghava-yādavaṇḍavagīvya. There are three Kāṇḍas in it and one Kāṇḍa each is devoted to the story of Śrī Rāma, Śrī Kṛṣṇa and the Pañḍavas. (Ślokā 3, Chapter 3, 36, Ādi Parva.)

CĪRAKĀ. War minister of Mahāsīrā. Tāma was his finance minister, Aśrama prime minister, Bīdāla foreign minister, Utrihaka Commander-in-chief, Utrihaka, minister for education and Utrihaka, Trīnātra and Kāla-landhaṇa consulting ministers. (Devī Bhāgavata, Pañccām Kānḍha.)

CĪKURA. Son of Aśraya, the serpent king. Cīkura had a son called Sumukha. Once Garuda ate Cīkura for food. (M.B. Udvoga Parva, Chapter 120, Verse 23.)

CĪNAH. People of China. It is believed that the Cīnas were born from the body of Naundiri, the cow, during her flight with Viṣṇu. (Ślokā 38, Chapter 174, Ādi Parva.) These low-caste people paid homage to Yudhisthira and gave him many presents. (Ślokā 31, Chapter 51, Sabāya Parva.)

CINTĀMANI. A diamond. This was salvaged from the ocean of milk along with other precious items like Anurāda, Uccalasvams, Kālpaśṛava, Kaustubha, Ćapātra, Mahālaṁkārā and Rumat. (Yuddha Kānda, Kamba Rāmāyaṇa.)

CIRÅTĀ. There was a king called Čirātā in the country called Čirapura. Though himself a good man he was surrounded by bad advisers. Once a foreigner, Prawaṅga, came along with two friends to the palace to see the King. But due to the bad advice of his courtiers the King did not give us a better treatment when they were old and became King. We were living there on that hope and now that hope also has been shattered and so we are leaving the place this instant." The King was surprised to hear that they were prepared even to wait for his son to become the King and gave them very many presents. (Tarāntā 5, Ajañkāravaṭi Latihāka, Kāthārakīṣākara.)

CIRÅKA. A place of habitation in ancient India. Once Karna conquered this land and from then onwards they started paying tribute to Duryodhana. (Ślokā 19, Chapter 8, Karna Parva.)

CIRÅKĀ. A son of Gaṅgāma Mahāraja. He used to think deeply before doing any deed and so he earned the name Čirakā. Once the sage Gaṅgāma found out against the chastity of his own wife and enraged at this commanded his son Čirakā to chop off the head of the latter’s mother. Giving this command Gauṁati went into the forest and Čirakā in obedience to his father’s order came before his mother, weapon in hand. He did not kill her immediately but pondered over the consequences of the deed. Matricide is a great sin, he mused. Then again who would be there to look after father if mother died. Perhaps his father, when he cools down, might regret his command and come back repentant. Thus he was sitting undecided when Gauṁati returned full of remorse for his hasty order. On seeing his wife alive he was greatly relieved and immensely happy and he blessed Ciranjivi. (Chapter 286, Santi Parva.)

CIRANJIVI. The name of a crow; a character in the 'Panchatantra'. (See under Mrgaivarna.)

CIRANTAKA. A son of Garuda. (Stoka 1, Chapter 101, Udga Parva.)

CIRAVASAS I. A Katriya King born as a rebirth of an asura Krodhanava. (Stoka 61, Chapter 67, Atri Parva.)

CIRAVASAS II. A yaksa. He stayed in the court of Kubera worshipping him. (Stoka 10, Chapter 10, Sambha Parva.)

CIRAYUS. An ancient King of the country Girayu. Nāgarjuna was a minister of this King. Nāgarjuna knew the secret of 'Rasayana Sidhi'. Once Nāgarjuna prepared a medicine for himself and the King which if taken would keep him eternally young. They took medicine accordingly.

After some days a child of the minister died. Grief-stricken Nāgarjuna decided to prepare Amrita which would eradicate death from this world. He had prepared it but there remained one more medicine to be added to it. The auspicious moment to add the same was to come only after five days and Nāgarjuna wanted. The devas were frightened. If Amrita was made available on earth men would become Devas. Devas could not bear this and so they sent the Aswini Kumāras to the earth to persuade Nāgarjuna to desist from his work of preparing Amrita. Further they informed him that his dead child was living happily in heaven. He agreed to stop his work.

After some time Cirayus crowned his son Jivalara as the heir-apparent. Overjoyed Jivalara ran to his mother Dharaparā to give her the glad tidings. Dharaparā told her son thus: "My child, why should you be so happy to think that you have become the heir-apparent. Several sons of your father had already become yuvakas and died before becoming King. Your father has taken medicine from Nāgarjuna and that will keep him eternally young. None of his sons can aspire to be the King. Your father is now eight hundred years old and will live long. Many of you will become yuvakas but not the King. I will therefore suggest a way to tide over this difficulty. Everyday in the afternoon Nāgarjuna would come outside the palace and enquire whether anybody is in need of anything. At that time he would give whatever was asked for. It is an opportunity when you can ask for his head. When Nāgarjuna is dead your father would either die of grief or go to the forests. Then you can become the King." Jivalara was pleased to hear this suggestion and he went that afternoon to the palace of Nāgarjuna and when Nāgarjuna asked him what he wanted he asked for his head. Most willingly Nāgarjuna offered his head to be chopped off. But the effect of the medicine made even the strongest cut by the sword ineffectual. Jivalara lost many swords without Nāgarjuna getting even a small scratch on his neck. The habitub brought the King to the scene and he immediately asked Nāgarjuna whether his son Jivalara's head was cut off. Nāgarjuna refused saying, "Oh, King, in my ninety-nine previous births I have offered my head like this and please do not ask me to desist from making this offer for the hundredth time".

So saying he embraced the King and taking a powder from his body smeared it on the sword and asked Jivalara to strike again. This time easily Jivalara severed the head from the body of Nāgarjuna. The King was greatly aggrieved and he renounced all and went to the forest and led a pious life. Girayu's son Jivalara became King. But Nāgarjuna's sons killed him and his mother died of grief. (Taranasa. Ramayana. Lankabha. Kathasaritsagara.)

CIRAYU. A river. It was on the banks of this river that Vairavata Manu clad in bark-skin and with knotted hair did penance. (Stoka 6, Chapter 167, Vana Parva.)

CITIL. (Termite). Citil has its own place in the puranas. Devi Bhagavati has the following story about the origin of it. Mahatma once looking at the face of Lakshmi laughed without any apparent reason. Lakshmi, thinking that Vishnu was laughing at her and that he had an eye on some other woman more beautiful than her lost her temper and cursed Vishnu that his head would be severed from his body.

Narmada was the name pronounced than the asuras came in batches fully armed and challenged Vishnu to war single-handed. The asuras were not able to defeat Vishnu easily. The fight did not end though it continued for thousands of years. Vishnu felt tired and decided to rest awhile. He planted one end of the uncut bow on the ground, rested his chin on the other and sat in Padmasana. Being very tired the Lord remained asleep for a long time in this posture.

About this time the devas made preparations to perform a yajña. All the devas except Mahāvāma attended that yajña. Since he was the master of yajñas performed for the purposes of the devas they could not begin it in his absence. So, Brahmā and others went in search of Vishnu to Vālmīkī. But he was not to be found there. Then Brahmā and others found out with their eyes of knowledge where Vishnu was and they went to the place where he was sleeping. They waited there for a long time, yet Vishnu did not awake from sleep. Then Brahmā hit as a plan to awaken Vishnu. It was to create citils (termite) to eat the end of the bow. When they had eaten away the end of the bow planted on the ground the wind binding the two ends of the bow would break, the bow would straighten up and the speedy movement of it would awaken Vishnu.

According to this plan Brahmā created citils, but his other plans were not acceptable to the citils. They argued that the advantage of awakening the Lord from sleep would go only to the devas, while its sin would fall upon them.

They argued.

Nārada: kathābheda
Dampatyaś prītibhedana /
Śravaṇītvideśa
Brahmāhāyānaṃ mṛtyum jñā /(*)

Brahmā conceded the justness of this argument and agreed that, in future, a part of the result of yajñas shall go to citils. It was after this that having a critical offering which, in the course of being submitted to the fire falls on the sides of the pit of fire become the share of citils (termite). This promise of Brahmā pleased the citils, and they did as was hidden by Brahmā and the bow of Visnu straightened up with a terrific sound. The arrows, previously struck, the whole universe shook, the earth experienced a convulsion and the oceans too were shaken. Moreover, the head of Visnu was severed from the body, was high up in the sky and fell into the sea. Brahman, Siva and others opened their eyes only to find the body of Visnu lying thus without the head.

The loss of Visnu’s head proved to be useful in another way. Now, Hayagriva, after securing the boon from Brahma that he would be killed only by one with horse’s head, was running rough-shod over the whole earth. The devas cut off the head of a horse and attached it to the trunk of Visnu. Thus Visnu returned to life again, and according to his orders the tails gnawed away the end of Hayagriva’s head. As a result of which he was killed.

(The end of Sita’s story, Prathima Sgata). CITAYU: A king of the Pura dynasty. He was the son of lhadātva, who had ten sons called Ikṣaya, Kṛṣaya, Sanatāya, Ghrītayu, Chhandikṣaya, Dharmayu, Sanvatayu, Kriyayu and Mātirna. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

CITRA. A son of Dhrirástra killed in war. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 136, Verse 20).

CITRA II. A gajāy (king elephant) with whom Subrahmanya, as a child, used to play. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 225, Verse 23).

CITRA III. A hero who fought on the Kaurava side against the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by Prativirāda. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 32).

CITRA IV. A hero from the Cedi Kingdom who fought on the Pāṇḍava side against the Kauravas. Karna killed him. (M.B. Karṇa Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 46).

CITRA. A celestial maiden. When once Arjuna went to the court of Kula, he inquired about Arjuna, a devotee in whose stead the maiden gave a dance in honour of his visit. (Slokā 43, Chapter 14, Amāsana Parva).

CITRĀSBUH (CITRĀYUDHA). Son of Dhrirástra. He was killed in war by Bhima. (M.B. Drauparva, Chapter 136, Verse 20).

CITRĀPKA. A son of Dhrirástra Bhima killed him in war. (M.B. Drauparva, Chapter 137, Verse 27).

CITRĀBARHA. A son of Garuda. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 131, Verse 12).

CITRĀŚAIPA (CITRA-SAŚANA, SARASANA). Or, one of the hundred sons of Dhrirástra. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67).

CITRADEVA. An attendant of Subrahmanya. He loved brahmins deeply. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 71).

CITRĀDHARMA. A king in ancient India. The asura called Kardana was born again as Citrādharmar. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67).

CITRAGUPTA. A master of Jātaka. (God of death). His duty is to examine, after the death of men, a list of the good and evil actions they had done while living. (M.B. Anuśasan Parva, Chapter 130).

CITRAKETU. An emperor, who remained childless for a long time. At last a son was born to him owing to the blessings of Sage Aūgiras. But, ere long the child was dead and gone, and its parents, immersed in sorrow, took the dead child to Aniruddha. Nārada also happened to be there on the occasion. Aniruddha restored the dead child to life and asked him to live with the parents. The boy immediately stood up and told Aniruddha that he had many parents in his many previous lives, and requested to be enlightened as to which of those parents he was to live with. Ikṣvāku and Nārada felt confused. In the end they disappeared after imparting spiritual wisdom to Citraketu. And, Citraketu, who, for eight days immersed himself in concentrating the mind on God, was turned into a Gandharva; his wife too turned Gandharva.

And, both of them rose up in the sky and flying over Mount Kailasa looked down to the mountain. There they saw Pārvatī being seated on the thighs of Śiva at which sight Citraketu laughed. Enraged by the laughter Pārvatī cursed him to be born as an asura, and he was born as such. Vṛitrāsura was Citraketu born as asura. (Bhāgavata, Saṣṭha Skanda).

CITRAKETU II. A son of Garuda. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 12).

CITRAKETU III. A Pāṇḍava prince who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Bīṣma Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 41).

CITRAKETU IV. A son of Śiva. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skanda).

CITRAKESA. An Aparājita woman. King Vatsa begat sons like Vīra of her. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skanda).

CITRAKESA. One of the hundred sons of Dhrirástra. Bhima was also killed by him in the great battle. (Drona Parva, Chapter 136).

CITRAKUNDAKA. (DRYGHALOCANA). One of the Kauravas killed by Bhima. (M.B. Bīṣma Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 27).

CITRAKṢA. A mountain.

Renowned in the purāṇas, this mountain is on the banks of the river, Mandakini. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85). It was here, at Cīrakuṭa that Śrī Rāma, Sītā and others lived for a period of time. It is said that Rājakalakūśi (royal wealth and welfare) will embrace those who fast on the Cīrakuṭa after a bath in the Mandakini. (M.B. Anuśasan Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 29). This mountain is in Bāndā Zilla of the U.P. in modern India.

Cīrakuṭa is described in Cauṭa 56 and 94 of Vālmiki Rāmāyanā.

CITRAKETU. I. A celestial maiden. This maiden came and danced in the assembly of the Pāṇḍavas once. (Slokā 34, Chapter 9, Vana Parva, M.B.).

CITRAKETU II. A companion of Usā, daughter of the demon, Bāna. She was a beautiful portrait painter. Usā once dreamt of Aniruddha, grandson of Kṛṣṇa. Even before knowing the identity of the idol of her dream Usā fell in love with him. Next day morning Citraketu gathered from the gloomy Usā details of her dream and Citraketu started making portraits of many known charming princes but Usā was not satisfied. She then drew in her imagination a figure which was exactly like that of Aniruddha, the man of her dream. Usā was satisfied and it was through the cleverness of Citraketu that Aniruddha was brought to Usā’s room and Usā was able to marry Aniruddha. (See under ‘Aniruddha’).
CITRAMUKHA. A sage. Though he was born a Vaiśya, he became a brahmin and from there gradually rose to the status of a brahmāri. (Chapter 55, Amūsāna Parva, M.B.)

CITRĀNGA I. (CITRĀNGA, SRUTĀNTAKA). One of the hundred sons of Dhritarāṣṭra. In the great battle Bhīma killed him. (Slokā 28, Satya Parva)

CITRĀNGA II. A warrior. In the Avamdehiyajāna, performed by Sṛṅgārāma Sṛṣṭabhuja, the sacrificial horse and Citrāngā blocked them on their way. Sarṇgha killed him (Chapter 27, Paśuśila Kunda, Paśuśila Paśupata).

CITRĀNGA I (CITRĀNGA). See under Citrāngā I.

CITRĀNGA II. A son of the Mahārāja Satavat. King Satavat of the Candra dynasty had two wives, Gārgi and Satavatī. Bhitāsa is the son born of Gārgi, of Satavatī were born two sons, Citrāngadā and Vītarajya. They were very brave and learned. After ruling his kingdom for a long period, living with Satavatī and the three children Satavat was passed away. Satavatī was determined to a life of unbroken chastity and Citrāngadā was crowned King. Once when he went to the forest for hunting he met with a Gandharva of the same name. Both did not like the other to keep the same name and so a fight ensued. It was fought in Kumbheshṭa and lasted for three years. In the end Citrāngadā was killed, Bhitāsa felt very sorry and after asking Vītarajya to perform the funeral rites crowned him as King. (Devi Bhagavata, Prathama Sandhāla)

CITRĀNGA III. A Gandharva. See under Citrāngadī II.

CITRĀNGA IV. One of the Kings who attended the swayamvara of Draupadī. He might have been the King of either Kalinga or Devāna because both these states were then ruled by a Citrāngadā. (Slokā 22, Chapter 185, Ādi Parva).

CITRĀNGA V. A king of Kalinga. Almost all the kings of Dhṛtarāṣṭra attended the swayamvara once held at the palace of this King. (Slokā 2, Chapter 4, Satya Parva).

CITRĀNGA VI. A king of Daśārṣṭra. He blocked the sacrificial horse sent out by Dhramaputra during the Avamdehiyajāna and Arjuna killed him. (Avamdehi Parva, Chapter 83, Sloka 7).

CITRĀNGA VII. A deer. A character in stories in the book 'Paśintastra Stories' (See B-2 in Paśintastra).

CITRĀNGADĀ I. A celestial maiden. Once this girl gave a dance in the court of Kubera in honour of Śagāvaka. (Slokā 44, Chapter 19, Anuśāna Parva).

CITRĀNGADĀ II. A wife of Arjuna. General Information. When once Dharmaputra was consulted with Paśčīm in amorous talks Arjuna by mistake entered the room and was thus compelled as per a previous mutual agreement to go on a pilgrimage for a year. During this exile he married the serpent girl Ulīpi. After that he proceeded again on his pilgrimage and reached a state called Manālar. Manālar was then reigned by a King called Citrāngadā. Citrāngadā was the daughter of Citrāngadā. An ancestor of Citrāngadā greatly grieved by the lack of a son, did great penance to propitiate Śiva and Śiva blessed him and said that in future he and his successors would get a son to keep their line unbroken. Accordingly all the forefathers of Citrāngadā got a son each but when it came to the turn of the latter he got a girl instead. Arjuna accidentally saw Citrāngadā and fell in love with her, and knowing that, the King received Arjuna in his palace and requested Arjuna to marry his daughter. Arjuna married her and the couple got a son named Bhrāvahana. Promising them that he would come back and take them to Hastinapura Arjuna continued his pilgrimage. (Chapters 219, 220, and 221, Ādi Parva).

2) How Citrāngadā came to Hastinapura. When after the great epic battle Dharmaputra conducted an Avamdehiyajana it was Arjuna who led the sacrificial horse to the south. When Arjuna came to Manālar he came against Bhrāvahana who challenged him for a fight. In the great battle that ensued Arjuna fell dead by the pouring arrows of Bhrāvahana, his own son. At that time Ulīpi and Citrāngadā came to the scene and seeing Arjuna lying dead, Ulīpi brought the diamond, Miraśhā, and placing it on Arjuna's heart brought him back to life. (See Bhrāvahana for details). At this moment all of them, Arjuna, Citrāngadā, Ulīpi and Bhrāvahana went to Hastinapura along with Arjuna. (Chapters 79 to 81, Āśvamedha Parva).

3) Other details

(1) Citrāngadā on reaching Hastinapura bowed down before Kunj and Paščīmā and greeted them with a blend of sentiments and harmony with others like Subhadra. (Slokā 2, Chapter 89, Āśvamedha Parva).

(2) Kunj, Subhadra and Paščīmā gave Citrāngadā many diaries as present (Slokā 8, Chapter 88, Āśvamedha Parva).

(3) Citrāngadā looked to the comforts of Śaṅkīrī as a servant-maid. (Slokā 23, Chapter 1, Aśvamedha Parva).

(4) Citrāngadā was not among the women who went when the aged end of their life Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhāri and Kunj started for Vama in the forest. (Slokā 10, Chapter 15, Aśvamedha Parva).

(5) Citrāngadā was a beautiful women having an enchanting figure as that of a Madhūkā flower (Slokā 11, Chapter 23, Aśvamedha Parva).

(6) After the Mahāprapta-asman of Pāndavas Citrāngadā left for Manipura. (Slokā 16, Chapter 1, Mahāprapta-asman Parva).

CITRĀNGADĀ III. Daughter of Viśvakarmā. Once while she was bathing in a pond along with her companions in the forest of Kamika Pratī Pratīthā, son of Sudeva, came that way. Seeing him Citrāngadā told her companions 'This beautiful young man is in love. I must give myself to him'. Though her companions objected to her doing this, waving aside the objections Citrāngadā approached Pratīthā. When Viśvakarmā knew about this he was extremely angry and cursed her saying that she would never have a marriage. Citrāngadā failed when she heard the curse and her companions tried their best to wake her up but failed. They then took her to be dead and left the place in search of firewood and other things to conduct a funeral. When Citrāngadā woke up she looked around for her companions and finding none including her lover, the prince, she ran and threw herself into the river, Sarvatvā...
That river pushed her down to the river Gomati and that river in turn washed her ashore a huge forest. There she was met by the sage Râdhamâja. Knowing her sad fate the sage felt compassion for her and cursed Vyâkárma to be born as a monkey. Then he let her marry her lover and blessed them. (Chapters 63 and 64, Vâmanâ Puruṣâ)

CITRÂNGI

Daughter of Bhadrâṇya, a king of Hâhyâ Sûra was the wife of Durmâda. (See under Durmâda).

CITRAPUSPAM

A garden where peculiar kinds of flowers grow. This garden is on the higher planes of Mount Sakâka to the west of Dwârakâ. (M.B. Sahâba Parva, Chapter 30).

1) Birth. Citrâratha was the Gandharva son of Kasyapârjapati of his wife Mum. (Sloka 43, Chapter 65, Ahî Parva).

2) Citrâratha and Arjuna. The greatest event in the life of Citrâratha was his marriage with Mum. As a result of her beauty he was accepted at the hands of Arjuna. The Pandavas after their escape from the lab palace (Yâksagîrha) through a tunnel arrived in a forest and there they killed the demon Hâbhika and Baka. One night they were walking along the shores of the river Gangâ when they heard a sound of something boiling in the river. Arjuna who was walking ahead wading a country torch went to see who was boiling at that time of the night. Arjuna then saw Citrâratha enjoying a bath with his wife Kumbhinasi. That period of the night was allotted to the Gandharvas, and human beings were not expected to be out walking at that time. Citrâratha felt it impertinent that Arjuna a human being should be out walking at night and peep into the privacy of the Gandharvas. The Gandharva and Arjuna so entered into a combat Citrâratha who was a great fighter was after a gun battle, subdued, bound hand and foot, and brought before his brothers by Arjuna. Kumbhinasi followed her exhausted, powerless and spiritless husband and pleaded to Dharmaputra to release him, Dharmaputra advised Arjuna to do so and on getting his release he taught Arjuna the famous Gita, the magic art of seeing by one’s own eyes anything and everything in the three worlds: Heaven, Earth and the netherworld. Mum was the author of this magic art and from him Soma learnt it and from Soma Vîvásu, from Vîvásu, Citrâratha and from Citrâratha, Arjuna. Besides this Citrâratha gave Arjuna many chariots and horses.

In return Arjuna taught him the secret of the missile Agnimitra. Exchanging faith and affection thus Citrâratha and the Pandavas became friends. He then narrated to the Pandavas many interesting stories, of which the following are a few. The story of the feud between Vasu-tha and Vivasu, story of Tapasindvarâna and tales about the sage Parâsva, Kälåśapada, Ardhanari, Bhâgavata, Krâta and Aruva. Citrâratha advised the Pandavas to have a priest for the sacrificial rites and it was thus that they engaged Bhûmarâ as their family priest.

Since Arjuna had destroyed all the chieftains belonging to Citrâratha, the latter got a name ‘Bhagamaratha’ (devote of Charana). Citrâratha admitted that Arjuna could conquer him because of his vow of celibacy. (Chapters 165 to 183, Ahî Parva, M.B.).

3) Other details.

1) Citrâratha attended one of the birthday festivals of Arjuna. (Sloka 52, Chapter 122, Ahî Parva, M.B.).

2) Citrâratha worshipped Kubera sitting in the latter’s council. (Sahâba Parva, Chapter 10, Sloka 26).

3) He offered as a gift to Dharmaputra four hundred excellent horses which could fly like wind. (Chapter 52, Sloka 23, Vana Parva).

4) When the gandharvas milked the earth during the time the emperor, Prithu, Citrâratha acted as the calf. (Sloka 39, Chapter 6, Hariyânsa).

5) Siva once sent Citrâratha as a messenger to Asura Samkharaṇa, a message that Samkharaṇa should abandon his satanic activities. (Devī Bhâgavata, Navarāna Skandha).

CITRÂRATHA II. One of the ministers of Daśaratha. He belonged to the Sûta dynasty. (Sloka 17, Ayodhya Kâûḍa, Vaiśamsh Kâûḍa).

CITRÂRATHA III. A king of Sâla. Once Renukâ, wife of Jamadagni, after her bath in the river stayed ashore washing this king and his queen in the river with erotic plays. Râma thus reached the Arvâna a bit late and Jamadagni enraged at this commanded his son Parasurâma to chop the head of his own mother. (Drâmaśâmâ Purâna, Chapter 59).

CITRÂRATHA IV. A king of the dynasty of Bharata. He was the son of King Gaya. Cîtrâratha had a sister named Sugati and a brother Avarodhana. (Pañcârama Purâna, Bhâgavata).

CITRÂRATHA V. A prince of Pârâsâ, he was killed in the battle of Mahâbhârata by Dronâcarya. (Sloka 43, Chapter 122, Drona Parva).

CITRÂRATHA VI. A king of the Aṅgâ country. He married Prabhâvati, sister of Ruci, wife of Devâcarna. (Sloka 6, Chapter 42, Anûsâma Purâna, M.B.).

CITRÂRATHA VII. A king of the Yadava dynasty. He was the son of Ujañâku and father of Sûra. (Sloka 28, Chapter 147, Anûsâma Parva).

CITRÂRATHA VIII. Son of Virâbhum and a friend of Śrî Râma. In the Kâjya Kâûḍa of Añanda Râmâyana there is the following story about him. Citrârathavâs was also one among those assembled for the swayantâvara of Hemâ, daughter of Kuśa. He sent an anæsthetic missile to the assembly and made them all fall down senseless. He then took Hemâ out from the marriage hall, but on reaching outside he felt he had done a very unjust thing and so withdrew the missile and stood outside ready to fight. A fight ensued in which Citrâratha defeated all. But Lava alone continued to fight with him. Virâbhum, father of Citrâratha, who was closely watching the fight came to the help of Citrâratha and engaging Lava in a fight struck him down. Kuśa seeing this attacked Virâbhum and bound him hand and foot. At that time Śrî Râma came to the scene and told Kuśa that Virâbhum was a friend of his and set Virâbhum free. Hemâ was then married to Citrâratha and Virâbhum was sent away with due respect.

CITRÂRATHA. An Indian river of puranic fame. (Chapter 9, Bhûma Parva, M.B.).

CITRÂRIPA. An attendant of Śiva. When by a curse of Mahâviṣṇu Mahâlaksâni was changed into a mare, it was through this attendant that Śiva sent a message to Vînu. (Devī Bhâgavata, Skandha 6).
CITRASARĀSANA (ŚARĀSANA, CITRACĀPA). One of the sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra. In the great battle he was killed by Bhīma. (Śloka 20, Chapter 136, Drona Parva).

CITRASENA 1. A gandharva. There is reference to this gandharva in many places in the purāṇas. He had two wives Śandhyāvalī and Ratnāvalī.

1) How Arjuna saved him. Once when Citrasena with his wives was travelling in the aerial car the splittings of Citrasena fell upon the sage Galavā who was doing his sandhyā rite. The sage complained about the incident to Śrī Kṛṣṇa who promised to bring him to the head of Citrasena before sun-set. Sage Nārada informed Citrasena of this vow of Kṛṣṇa. The gandharva was taken aback and did not know what to do. But Śandhyāvalī and Ratnāvalī went and sought the help of Subhadrā. They made a fire pit in front of her house and decided to end their lives along with Citrasena by jumping into the fire. While Citrasena was circling the fire-pit before jumping into it his wives wept loudly and hearing the noise Subhadrā came out and saw what was happening. They took them from Subhadrā a boon to the effect that they should be allowed to live with their husband. It was only after granting them the boon that Subhadrā went. With the help of this boon Subhadrā was in a fix but Arjuna assured her that Citrasena would be protected at any cost. Arjuna very cleverly shielded all the arrows sent against the gandharva by Kṛṣṇa and gradually the fight came to be one between Arjuna and Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Subhadrā came between them and it was found difficult to continue the fight. Śrī Kṛṣṇa advised Citrasena to bow down and touch the feet of Galavā. Citrasena released the issue settled without harm to both the parties.

2) Arjuna defeats Citrasena. While the Pāṇḍavas were in exile, Duryodhana knew through a spy that they were camping in the Dvaitavana forest. Prompted by Karna Duryodhana programmed to go to Dvaitavana with his retinue to enjoy the sight of the suffering Pāṇḍavas. On the way battle-geek, (Chapter 22, Karna Parva, M.B.).

CITRASENA 2. (UGRASENA). One of the hundred sons of Dhṛtarāṣṭra.

CITRASENA XII. A king of the dynasty of Vaivaśvatamana. (Navamśa Śāntaka, Bhāgavata).

CITRASENA XIII. A Mahārāja who obtained salvation by observing the Astamihini Vrata. This king was a great shoer having committed such sins as Agnirūpaśana. (Arsha). Brahmapārśurāma (stealing things belonging to Brahman), Sunāpama (drinking) and Prāṇipāma (causing injury to living beings). One day while hunting he followed a tiger and at dusk exhausted with thirst and hunger he reached the banks of... of the river Yamuna. It was the day of Asamadidi and many maidens were observing the Asamadidi Vrata there. Before them was a heap of rice and other rambles which was given as an offering to Krsna and seeing the lot the King begged for something to eat and drink. The maidens replied that it was a sin to take food on that day of Vrata and there came a change in the mood of the King and he readily agreed to observe the Asamadidi vrata and did so. Because of this when the king died, though a great sinner he was, he was taken to heaven by the servants of Vishnu. This story was told by Vasistha to Dilip to impress upon him the greatness of observing the Asamadidi Vrata (Chapter 13, Padma Purana).

CITRASENA I. An Apsara. This celestial maiden was a dancer in the court of Kubera. (Sloka 10, Chapter 10, Sahiba Parva). When Arjuna went to the land of Indra this maiden gave a dance in honour of Arjuna. (Sloka 30, Chapter 43, Vana Parva).

CITRASENA II. A prominent river. The people of ancient Bharata used to drink the water of this river. (Sloka 17, Chapter 9, Bhima Parva).

CITRAVASTHA. States of the mind. (See under Parva).

CITYAL. A holy place in South India. (See under Agastya).

COLA. A very righteous emperor of Kalinga. Because of the virtuous rule of this emperor his country got the name Cola. There is an interesting story in Padma Purana of how the emperor attacked Vaikundaloka (The abode of Mahavimsa). Once Cola went to Vaikuntala to worship Mahavimsa. As he was worshipping him with pearls and flowers of gold a brahmin subject of his name came there to worship him with water and Tulasi leaves. The simple offering of Tulasi leaves and flowers by this brahmin, Visnudasa, elevated the expensive one by the King and the latter was greatly offended and he taunted the brahmin saying that he was a poor man who did not know what devotion to Vishnu was. But Visnudasa did not take the taunt unchallenged. He asked the king to wait and see who would emerge with the glowing entity of the Lord earlier.

The King on returning to his palace started a Vaisnavasattra. (An abhoma dedicated to Mahavimsa). The abhoma was as comfortable and luxurious as the one once started by Brahma in the temple of Gaya. Visnudasa on the other hand spent his life in a Vaisnava temple leading a celibate life and observing rites pleasing to Vishnu. One day after finishing his daily mantras rites Visnudasa cooked his food as usual and kept it in its place to be taken later. But on returning to it after some time he found his food eaten by someone else. He went without food that day and it happened the next day also. It continued to happen thus for a week and all these days Visnudasa was fasting. Visnudasa then decided to wait for one month. On keeping a vigil he found a Candala (a herjan of the lowest Caste) timidly coming and grabbing at the food with gluttonous greed to appease his hunger. Seeing the famished skeleton body of the thief Visnudasa felt compassion rather than resentment and calling him back to take the food went after him crying "Hi, come here and take this plate also with you. That food has no fat in it." But the Candala frightened at the sight of the owner of the food ran away as fast as his legs could carry him. Visnudasa following him. But soon the Candala fell fainting on the road exhausted and tired. Visnudasa reaching his side started feeding him with his cloth. Very soon the Candala changed himself into Mahavimsa advored with Sarvadha, Cakravat and Gadar and Visnu embracing his devotee took him to Vaikuntla.

Bhating this Cola called Madhava the priest of the Vaisnavasattra, to his side and lamented "I started this sattrā to spit Visnudasa and now he has gone to COLA (M). The three celebrated kingdoms of South-India of old were Cola, Pandya and Cera. References to these will be found in many places in the Purânas and a few are given below:—
1) Among those present for the swayamvara of Rohini were the Kings of Cola, Pandya and Kerala.
2) Descending in order from Durvasa were Varga-Gobhiññu — Trisūli — Karunadhama — Maruta — Dusyantha — Varadha — Gândira. From Gândira were born the people of Kerala, Pandya and Cola. (Chapter 277, Agni Purâna).
3) Arjuna conquered the army of the King of Cola. (Slokâ 21, Chapter 27, Sabhâ Parva).
4) Recording in Cola were Dharma Purâna, (Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 32, Slokâ 35).
5) When divorcing the great battle Dhrishtadyumna formed the Kauravâvyûha the soldiers from Cola guarded the southern wing. (Slokâ 60, Chapter 9, Bhishma Parva).
6) Sri Kriṣṇa once conquered the land of Cola. (Slokâ 17, Chapter 11, Drupâ Parva).

ULLAS. The land of Kusâryas who became Śrādas by a curse of the brahmâins. Pandyas, Kandyas, Sirîkhyas, Lâtas, Drîvâdas, Keralas, Cunâs, Durvasas, Daradhas, Saundos, Sâhâras, Arbaras, Kriñàs and Yavanas were all Kusâryas but were turned into Śrâdas by a curse of the brahmâins.

CUKUKA. A low-caste tribe of south India. They were absorbed older than the Mahâbhârata in origin. (Slokâ 42, Chapter 207, Sûru Parva).

CUKUKA (M). A place in ancient south India. (Slokâ 25, Chapter 110, Udûgâ Parva).

CODAKARSA. The character of a Sannyâsi in a tale in Pañcatantra.

CUDALA. The saintly wife of King Sikkhodvaja. When once Sikkhodvaja rose up from his kingdom and went to the forest, his wife gave him instruction in Ârmâjâna and brought him back to his country. (Chapter 77, Yogavâsîñtha).

CODÂMA. See under Sîthu.

CULI. A sage. Once Somâdâ, daughter of a gandharva woman Urmi, looked after this sage and well pleased with his service he asked her what she wanted and Somâdâ said 'With your grace I give you a special son of his and she boy was named Brahmadatta. This Brahmadatta married the hundred hunch-backed daughters of Kusâñâbha. (Bâla Kânda, Valmiki Râmâyana).

CUKLÂ. A river. People of ancient Bhiruâ used to drink the water of this river. (Slokâ 20, Chapter 10, Bhishma Parva).

CUKÇU. A King of the Hâyâya line of kings. He was the grandson of Rohitâvâ and son of Hârîta. King Vijaya is the son of Cukçu. (Brahmânda Purâna, Chapter 16).

CURAYKÂ. While emperor Prithu was ruling the earth it was once transformed into a fox and milked. Each got a different subsistence and what the Nûgas got was poison. They milked the poison into a pot-like Curyâkâ.

ČUTU. (Dace). It is an imaginative paurânic assumption that there is a seismic focus latent in dance, hunting, wine and women. There is a story to support the presence of this evil power within the above four. Indra once turned the Čaînas into foxes and gave them as outcasts and banned wine to them. Descended at this the Āvînâdevas approached Čyavana and the latter performing a yâga invited the Āvînâdevas and gave them the yâga wine, Soma. Inflamed at this Indra raised his celebrated Vajrâyudha (Weapon of thunder) to kill Čyavana. But the sage by his yogi powers paralysed the horse of Indra. Pulomâ was put on the sacrificial fire there arose Madra a genie to kill Indra. Frightened by this sight Indra fell at the feet of Čyavana and craved for pardon. The sage then tore the genie into four pieces and threw each pieces into bowl, hunting, wine and women. That is why all the four are as alluring as destructive. (Saptamsa Skandha, Devi Bhagavata).

ČYAVANA. A celebrated sage of the Bhiravana dynasty.

1) Genealogy. Descending in order from Bhiru—Čyavana.
2) Birth. Bhiru is the son of Brähmana born of Agni at the Brahmâyâjya conducted by Varuna. The beautiful and virtuous lady Pulomâ was the wife of Bhiru. Even before Bhiru married her she was being loved by the demon Pulomâ and her marriage with Bhiru confounded him and he waited for an opportunity to kill Bhiru. One day when Bhiru went to the river for his bath Pulomâ entered the Āravana and there she found his love Pulomâ being watched over by Agni. Pulomâ compelled Agni to tell him the truth whether Bhiru had married Pulomâ according to the rites enjoined by the scriptures. Agni confessed that it was not so and then Pulomâ taking the shape of a brahmâins Pulomâ then, was then in a stage of advanced pregnancy. On the way the wife of the sage delivered and the babe dropped to the ground. Because the babe was born with a fall (Čyavana) from the womb the boy was named Čyavana. The radiance of the boy burnt the demon into ashes. Pulomâ weeping profusely with tears rolling down her cheeks returned to the Āravana. Pulomâ was so moved with grief that she took the river got the name Vadhîsāra Čyavana on knowing how all happened cursed Agni saving that Aghi would thereafter an all-round eater, (eating anything and everything). (Chapters 5 and 6, Ādi Parva).

3) Penance and marriage. Even when he was very young Čyavana commenced practising austerities. He went to the forests and sat in meditation without food or sleep, oblivious to what happened outside. Years went by and Čyavana did not stir from his place. Gradually earth began to cover him and soon he was completely enveloped by earth. Creepers grew on it and birds made nests; Čyavana did not know anything about it.
One day Śarayū with his wives and children came to that forest for a picnic. Sukanyā, daughter of King Śarayū, along with her companions separated from the King and roamed about in the forest making merry. They soon came to the place where Cyavana sat doing penance. There was an unusual radiance around the heap of earth they saw there and Sukanyā out of curiosity started striking down the earth. Then from inside came Cyavana’s voice advising her not to crumble down the earth as she was doing. Sukanyā ignored the advice and searched for the source of the voice. She then saw two points of glow and taking a thorn gave two pricks at those points and left the place with her companions. These glow-points were the eyes of Cyavana and Cyavana fell insensible pain when his eyes were thus pierced through. But he neither became angry nor cursed the girl who did this thing. Cyavana went on with his penance. But soon the country of Śarayū began to experience the bad effects of this evil-deed. People one by one in the beginning and then the whole lot were disabled from passing either urine or feces. From men and women the disease spread to the animals also. The country was in a chaos and the subjects flocked to the palace to complain to the King. Śarayū believed that somebody must have in a some way tormented Cyavana and excoriated each and everyone of his subjects. Whether anybody had knowingly or unknowingly given pain to Cyavana. Nobody had done so and the King was worried. Then Sukanyā ran to her father and confessed what she had done. The King ran immediately to the place where Cyavana was doing penance and striking down the earth prostrated before the sage who was looking there. And then he told his daughter to go and fetch Cyavana and request him to pardon his daughter. Cyavana then told the King that it was enough if she gave his daughter in marriage to him in expiation of the harm done. The King was shocked to hear this for Cyavana was not only ugly but now blind also. The King ran immediately to the palace and got his daughter there and there she was gloom over the whole palace. But Sukanyā appeared and gave the King a word of advice and agreed to be the wife of Cyavana. The problem was solved and the King with great reluctance took his daughter to the forests and gave her in marriage to Cyavana.

1) Cyavana attains eternal youth. It was the time when Indra had brought Somapana (drinking of the yaja wine) to the Āśvindevas. Discontented at this they roamed about in the forests and soon came to the neighbourhood of the Āśrama of Cyavana. Sukanyā after becoming the wife of Cyavana did all she could to make her husband comfortable and happy. She would collect very sweet and tasty fruit from the forest and would bathe him in hot water. After arranging all the materials needed for the morning rites like yava, sesamum, darbha and water, she would take her husband to the place of the pūjā leading him by hand. When the morning pūjā was over she would seat him in a suitable place and give him rice and fruits. After the meals she would give him pen to chew. Only after doing all these she would go to do her daily rites and that too only after obtaining her husband’s permission. She would finish her routine in no time to come back to her husband to see whether he was in need of anything. Then she would make arrangements for the evening pūjā and after the pūjā was over she would give him his dinner. She would eat only what was left by her husband. At night she would spread a soft bed and lull him to sleep. Then she would take a nap lying at the foot of her husband. During summer she would fan him and during winter she would make fire to give him heat. Early morning she would take him to a distant place for his excretion and after washing him she would seat him in a suitable place for cleaning his teeth and face. Then the routine would start with great devotion again.

One day Sukanyā was returning from the river after her bath and on the way she came across the Āśvindevas. They were astonished to see such a beautiful damsels in the forest and they accosted her and requested her to select one of them as her husband. Knowing her identity they adviced her to forsake her old and blind husband and come and live with one of them. She flew into a fury when she heard her husband spoken of so slightly and by logical argument convinced them the error of their request. Then they told her thus: “You are aware we are the physicians of the devas. We can give back eyesight to your husband and make him as beautiful as one of us. We will then appear before you as three lovely young men identical in appearance and then you must select one among the three as your husband.”

Sukanyā was immensely pleased as well as surprised to hear the offer and was eager to see her husband young and beautiful. But the last condition frightened her. Anyhow she promised to give a reply after consulting her husband and ran to the Āśrama to tell her husband the news. Cyavana advised her to accept the offer of the Āśvindevas and Sukanyā ran back to the Āśvindevas and brought them to her husband accepting their terms. The Āśvindevas took the aged and blind Cyavana along with them to the river nearby and the three plunged into the river. When they rose up after a dip the three emerged as young, lovely and charming triplets difficult to be distinguished from one another. When Sukanyā stood before the three to select her real husband she prayed to her goddess and the Devi gave her the power to identify Cyavana and so she correctly chose him from the three.

(Saptama Sandhā, Devī Bhāgavatā).

5) Cyavana defeated Indra. Immensely pleased at regaining his eyesight and youth Cyavana asked the Āśvindevas what they wanted. The Āśvindevas replied that Indra had banned wine to them and they would like to have the ban lifted. Cyavana Mahārāj immediately commenced a Somayāga to which were invited all the devas and the Āśvindevas also. When Indra saw the Āśvindevas standing to partake of the Somā wine he was furious and objected to the wine being given to them. Cyavana disented and a fight ensued between Indra and Cyavana. Indra raised his weapon Vajrāyuddha to strike at Cyavana and then Cyavana made all his limbs go stiff. He then raised from the sacrificial fire a fiendish demon called Mada to kill the devas. All those present were frightened by this demon and they ran away. But Indra could not run for his limbs were stiff. Standing there he prayed to his preceptor Bhīṣmatī for help and Bhīṣmatī advised Indra to surrender to Cyavana. Indra bowed his head before Cyavana and prayed to be excused. Cyavana was pleased and withdrawing the demon tore him into four pieces and threw one each into Dice, Hunting, Wine and Women. The devas and Āśvindevas then went back to heaven. (Saptama Sandhā, Devī
That he was made of the essences of the world, with a huge body.

5. The birth of the hermit Sārasvatī. Dādhiṃcē erected his hermitage on the bank of the river Sarasvatī and began to do penance. The power of penance increased daily. Seeing this Indra was troubled. So he sent the celestial maid Ālambusā to break the penance of Dādhiṃcē somehow. Ālambusā came to the hermitage of Dādhiṃcē and began to dance and sing. When the hermit saw her he grew lustful and sexual discharge occurred to him. The semen fell in the river Sarasvatī, who became pregnant and in due course gave birth to a child. She took the child to the hermit Dādhiṃcē and told him the story of the child. The hermit was much pleased. He took the child and embraced it and blessed the river Sarasvatī thus:

"Brahma, the gods and the celestial maids will be pleased if your water is offered as oblation."

Dādhiṃcē then said that the child should be named Sarasvatī. He also added that when there was a drought continuously for twelve years, Sarasvatī would have the power to bring rain. Then Sarasvatī took the child to her abode and brought it up.

6. Year by year Indra again went to wash with the head of a horse. Once Dādhiṃcē went to the world of the devas (gods). From there he looked down and saw the earth filled with the asuras. Indra went to destroy them. But he could not. So he made a search for anything left behind by Dādhiṃcē. He understood that Dādhiṃcē had with him the head of a horse. It was found in a lake in the country of Varṣana. With the bones taken from that head Indra and Dādhiṃcē destroyed the asuras. (Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 13, Sūkta 84).

4. The weapon (Vajra) of Indra was made from a bone. A story occurs in the Mahābhārata, which says that the diamond-weapon of Indra was made of a bone of Dādhiṃcē. The asuras went to fight with Indra under the leadership of Vṛtraśura. Indra tried his utmost to kill Vṛtraśura, but he could not. At last Indra approached Brahmā, who told Indra that if a bone of the hermit, called Dādhiṃcē was obtained it could effectively be used against Vṛtra. Accordingly Indra went with Nara and Nārāyana to the banks of the river Sarasvatī and entered the hermitage and bowed before the shining hermit Dādhiṃcē and informed him of their errand. The hermit replied that he had no objection in giving his bone to save the gods. Saying thus the hermit discarded his life. Indra took the bone of Dādhiṃcē and made his weapon of diamond (Vajra) with which he killed Vṛtra and his followers. (Mahābhārata, Chapter 100).

5. Other information

1. At the sacrifice of Dakṣa, Dādhiṃcē got angry because Śiva was not given his dues of the sacrifice. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 284).

2. Once Dādhiṃcē talked to a Brāhmin called Kuruṇa about the importance of the ashes dedicated to Śiva. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 101).

3. See Dhanañjaya V to know how this hermit gave absolution from curse to a fly.

Dādhiṃcē (M). A holy place in Kuruksetra. Āgiras the son of Sarasvatī was born in this place. From that day onwards this place became a holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 186 that he who bathes in this holy place will... obtain the fruits of performing the sacrifice Aśvamedha, and enter the world of Sarasvati.

DADHIMAŚḍODAKA. An ocean. This ocean is near the ocean Gṛhodā samudra (Mahābhārata, Bhishma Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 2).

DADHIMUKHA I. A famous serpent, born to Kṣatrapa prajāpati by his wife Kudrā (Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 6).

DADHIMUKHA II. A famous monkey. This old monkey was the general of a huge monkey-army. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 203, Stanza 7 that this general approached Śrī Rāma once, with his army.

DADHIYAVANA. An ancient king of Bhārata. The hermit Gautama saved the son of this King from the attack of Parasurāma (Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 8).

DADHIYAVIKIRA. A monkey who helped Śrī Rāma. It is seen in Adhyatma Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kānda, Sarga 5, as follows:—

"Dadhiyavikara Kṛuddhasūgriyāsa mātūrā." From this it is understood that Dadhiyavikara or Dadhiyavikara was the uncle of Sugriva. (I am further information on the name Dadhiyavikara.

DADHYAVAR. A hermit. Once Indra taught this hermit Madhukūla (the art of mead) Indra told the hermit that he would be cut off if he taught anybody the art. The Asvindevas approached Dadhyavara to learn the art. Fearing Indra the hermit refused to teach them the art. Asvindevas cut off his head and bound it as a gift. Then they cut off the head of a horse and fixed it on the neck of Dadhyavara. Having the head of the horse he taught the art to the Asvindevas. When Dadhyavara had finished teaching, they took away the head of the horse and fixed his own head in place. (Rgveda, Atri, 17, Sūktā 166).

DAHA I. One of the eleven Rudras. He was the grandson of Brahmā and the son of Śāhāta. (Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 2).

DAHA II. An attendant given to Subrahmanyas by Amsa, a god. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 34).

DAHADAHĀ. An attendant of Subrahmanyas. (Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 20).

DAHA III. A warrior given to Subrahmanyas by god Amsa. Mention is made about this warrior in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 34.

DAIVA I. A mighty god. (See Iśvara).

DAIVA II. A kind of marriage. The form of marriage by which one gives his daughter to a priest. (See Vivāha).

DADHIKA. A country. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śāthi Parva, Chapter 52, Stanza 18, that the king and the people of Dadhiika were present on the occasion of the sacrifice of Rājasūya (imperial consecration) of Yudhishthira.

DAIVASAMPATI. The virtues of those who are born of a noble family.

DADHIKĀ. Security, knowledge of tattvas the desire. (The son of Bhṛgu the two being Dadhikā and Dadhipā in the Purāṇas are not very clear. In Mahābhārata Dadhiika is mentioned as the son of Bhṛgu, and in Rgveda it occurs that Dadhiika was the son of Ātri and the son of Vasiṣṭha. Moreover the story of Dadhyavara teaching the Asvindevas the 'Madhukūla' is connected with Dadhiika in some other purāṇas. Some scholars in the Rgveda make it difficult to assume that both Dadhiika and Dadhipā are one and the same person. So relying on the majority of statements in the various purāṇas this book has accepted the fact that these hermits are separate persons and that Dadhiika was the son of Bhṛgu whereas the hermit who taught Madhukūla to the Asvindevas was Dadhipā.

grew up and the whole of the earth was changed into a big forest. The sky was covered with tree tops. It was difficult even for the wind to pass through them and thus the forest thrived for ten thousand years. The Prajñapatis got out of the sea after penance and entered the shore. When they saw the big forest they got angry and the ten of them discharged fire and wind from their faces. The wind up-rooted the trees and the fire dried them. Thus almost the whole of the trees were consumed. The Gandharvas, the King of the merry-herbs came there and told the Prajñapatis "Oh, Kings, hold your anger. I will make the trees conclude a treaty with you. The beautiful Māriṇa who was born to the trees is my sister-daughter. I give her to you as your wife. From half the portion of your minds and half the portion of my mind the great and wise Prajñapati Dakṣa is going to take birth in her womb." The Prajñapatis controlled their anger and accepted Māriṇa as their wife, as the words of Sīvadeva (Ganḍarva) and as the son of the ten praṇāpatis Dakṣa was born. With this the second stage of the life of Dakṣa begins. The important occurrences in the two stages of the life of Dakṣa are given below in their order.

2) Dakṣa's creation of the praṇāpati subjects. Once Brahmā called Dakṣa and ordered him to create praṇāpati subjects. Accordingly Dakṣa created the gods, the bhras, the Gandharvas (Demi-gods), the Asuras, the serpents etc. Seeing that the subjects he created were not proliferating as required he thought of creating subjects by union of male and female; and he begot by his wife Asimī five thousand sons, and they were called Hasikās. When then the Hasikās were about to create subjects when Nārada appeared before them and said: "Oh, Haryāvavas, you are mere children and ignorant of the secrets of this world. How do you intend to create subjects? You fools, since you have the power to go up and down and lengthwise and breadthwise, why don't you try to find out the extremities of the earth? Hearing the words of Nārada, they all ran in different directions and have not returned since. Thus Dakṣa lost the Haryāvavas. Dakṣa again begot thousand sons by Asimī and they were called Śahalīvavas. Seeing that they also were about to create subjects Nārada scattered them also, by some tricks. The Śahalīvavas who had gone to see the end of the earth have not yet returned.

Dakṣa got angry with Nārada and cursed him thus:

"You also, like my children shall wander from place to place all over the earth!" From that dry onwards Nārada became a wanderer, without a fixed dwelling place. The wise praṇāpati Dakṣa again begot sixty damsel by Asimī. Ten of the girls were given to Dharmane, thirteen of them to Kaṭayapa, twenty-seven of them to Soma, and four of them to Arisţēnē. Of the rest two were given to Bāhuṛupa, two to Aṅgiras and two to the wise Krśāvā. The names of the wives of each are given below:

2) Dharmane: Arundhati, Vasu, Yami, Lanița, Bāhuṛu, Maruṛu, Sankaḷa, Munirē, Śādyā, Viśvā.
3) Soma: Āsīvayuk, Bharaṇī, Kṛṅkita, Rohini, Mrgaśīrṣa, Tārkam (Andrē), Punarvasu, Puṣyām, Aśīvayuk, Bharaṇī, Kṛṅkita, Rohini, Mrgaśīrṣa, Tārkam (Andrē), Punarvasu, Puṣyām, Aśīvayuk, Bharaṇī, Kṛṅkita, Rohini, Mrgaśīrṣa, Tārkam (Andrē), Punarvasu, Puṣyām, Aśīvayuk, Bharaṇī, Kṛṅkita, Rohini, Mrgaśīrṣa, Tārkam (Andrē), Punarvasu, Puṣyām, his wife Sati also was considered as polluted by Dakṣa.
(Vāmanī Purāṇa, Chapter 2).
(3) Once the prajayātā performed a sacrifice. Brahmā, Vigvā and Śiva were present there. Dakṣa, who had been invited by the prajayātā also was present. When Dakṣa entered the hall his son-in-law Śiva did not rise up.
This arrogance of Śiva made Dakṣa angry. Dakṣa made up his mind to take vengeance on Śiva, and performed a sacrifice known as Brhaṅgatavāmana. To that sacrifice he did not invite Śiva or Sati.

Hearing that her father was conducting a sacrifice Sati came uninvited. But Dakṣa did not even look at her.
Sati-devi whose heart was broken at this treatment made a fire and jumped into it and died. Śiva became furious when he came to know of this. Being overwhelmed with sorrow and anger he beat his breasts on the ground, from which two monsters, Vibhārdhra and Bhradrakali, came out. They ran to Dakṣa’s sacrificial hall and destroyed everything they saw, killed everybody, caught hold of Dakṣa and cut off his head. Then the beginning and sages began to take to flight. Men and animals shivered.
Thus the three worlds began to tremble with fear. The gods approached Śiva with supplication to curb his anger. The gracious Śaṅkara was pleased to recall the monsters. After that everybody requested him to bring Śiva back to life. But the search made for the head of Dakṣa was futile. At last Brahmā took the head of a goat and joined it to the headless trunk of Dakṣa. Thus he was brought to life again.1 (Devī Bhāgavata, Skandha 7).

4) Cursing Candra. Candra had married twenty-seven dughters of Dakṣa. But he showed particular attachment to Robhini. The other twenty-six wives could not bear this. They made a complaint to their father Dakṣa.
Dakṣa called Candra and advised him to show equal attachment to all his wives and not to show any partiality to anyone. Candra did not gain anything by his father-in-law, but he did not make any change in his disposition.

AFTER A FEW DAYS ALL THE DAUGHTERS EXCEPT ROBHINI WENT TO THE PALACE OF DAKSHA AND TOLD HIM THAT THEY WERE GOING TO STAY WITH HIM. THIS TIME DAKSHA GOT ANGRY AND CALLED CANDRA AND CURSED HIM TO BECOME A SICK MAN (CONSUMPTION).

5) Other information.
(1) Dakṣa has another name ‘Kan’.
Dakṣa the Prajayātā is a son of ten fathers. He has two names. They are Dakṣa and Kan.” (M.B. Śaṅti Parva, Chapter 20, Stanza 7).
(2) When the emperor Pṛthu milked the earth, Dakṣa was crowned as the King of the subjects. (See under Pṛthu).
(3) It occurs in Mahābhārata, Sahā Parva, Chapter
II, Stanza 18, that Dakṣa was a member of the assembly of Brahmā.
(4) Dakṣa was one of those who visited Bhūṣma in his bed of arrows. (M.B. Śaṅti Parva, Chapter 47).
(5) Mention is made in Mahābhāratā, Śaṅti Parva, Chapter 165 that the deivas, the manes, the gandharvas, the celestial maidens, the Rākṣasas, animals and birds, fishes and all living creatures were born from the daughters of Dakṣa.

DAKŚAŚĀVARNI. The name of the ninth Manu. During the regime of this Manu, there will be three classes of devas (gods) called the Parnas, the Maricigarbhas and the Sudhārmanas. Each of these gātas or classes will consist of twelve deivas or gods. Indra, their King will be known as Adbibhāta. He will be mighty and powerful. In that Manvantara (age of the Manu) Savāna, Dvīptamā, Bhavyā, Vasu, Medhāti, Jyotisya and Sāyā will be the Saptārīsis (the seven hermits; and Śṛṅkatu, Vipa, Pāñcāhasta, Niramaya, Pṛthu-śava and others will be the sons of Manu, Prabhāvarta). (Vipu, Purāṇa, Anuśāsana, Chapter 2).

DAKŚĀYĀN. Daughter of Dakṣa. This name is generally used for all the daughters of Dakṣa. Occasionally this name is used for the grand daughters of Dakṣa also.

DAKŚINĀ. A daughter, born to Prajayātā Ruci by his wife Ṛkiti. The first Manu was Śvayambhūva, the son of Brahmā. He accepted Śatrūrpi, his sister who became sintlesa as his wife. Śatrūrpi gave birth to two sons Priyavasata and Utanāpada, and two dughters, Prasūti and Akūti. Of these two daughters, Prasūti was given to Prajayātā Dakṣa and Akūti to Prajayātā Ruci. Akūti gave birth to twins, a son named Yajña and a daughter named Dakṣa. To Yajña twelve sons were born by Dakṣa. They were a class devas (gods) called the Yānas in the regime of Manu, Śvayambhūva, Dakṣa. Dakṣa. (M.B. Śaṅti Parva, Anuśāsana, Chapter 7). Now Dakṣa is worshipped as a goddess. The same
Dakṣa was reborn in the Goloka under the name Susīla. At that time she was a cowherd woman and friend of Rādhā. She liked to talk with Śrī Kṛṣṇa. One day Rādhā saw her sitting in the lap of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, engaged in sexual sports, in a secluded place. When Susīla saw that Rādhā had found them out, she came drenched with shame, and sat with bowed head. Śrī Kṛṣṇa slowly placed Susīla devi down and instantly vanished. The angry Rādhā cursed Susīla to become ashes at once. She entered the Goloka again.
Then Rādhā ran about everywhere in search of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, but he could not be found.

Immediately after the curse, Susīla got down from the Goloka and began to worship Mahālakṣāmi with devotion and meditation and very severe fast and vow. After a long time Mahālakṣāmi appeared to her and blessed her, and Susīla became absorbed in Mahālakṣāmi.
Since the absorption of Susīla devi, who was the rebirth of Dakṣinādevi, in Mahālakṣāmi, the sacrifice of the devas (gods) became fruitless. They were much grieved.
They all went to Brahmā to find a solution. As the matter was serious Brahmā meditated upon Viṣṇu, who

1. Though Dakṣa was brought to life again with the head of a goat there is no mention of him again in the Purāṇas. We hear of Dakṣa again as the son of Maithā.
became pleased with Brahmā and to save the devas, he attracted Daksinādevī from the body of Mahākāli and cast her upon the body of Brahmā, that devī (goddess) to Vaiṣṇavaśrūpa (the god of sacrifice) so that the sacrifices of gods might become fruitful. When Vaiṣṇavaśrūpa saw that supernatural beauty he was overpowered by lust and swooned. The couple spent a hundred divine years in seclusion enjoying the company of each other, as a result of which devī became pregnant. The pregnancy matured in twelve divine years and the gave birth to a child which was named Phalada. It is this same Phalada, the son of Vaiṣṇavaśrūpa and Daksinā who awards fruits to all actions. The learned men say that Vaiṣṇavaśrūpa, Daksinādevī and Phalada divide the fruits of actions among the deces (Devi Bhagavata, Skanda 9).

DAKSINĀ. A strong wind born from the fire Pāncajanya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 229, Stanza 6).

DAKSINAKALIŚA. Kālahasti, Trìśivapariser and Trīōṃamaalī are known by the name Daksinakalīśa.

DAK.-1. AMALĀ. A country in ancient India. This country is called Mallarājya. Its capital was Kūsinagara or Kūsinara. In Mahābhārata, mention is made that Indra sent his使者 to convince this country under control. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 30).

DAKSIPAṆČALA. A place famous in the Purāṇas. This place lies to the south of the Ganges up to the river Cambat. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata Sābhā Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 27, that the King of this country fled to the south fearing Jarassandha. Pāočala lies to the north of the Ganges. But the country was divided into two when Droṣa defeated Droṣa the King of Pāočala, and took away from him the part of the country north of the Ganges. After that, the part taken by Droṣa was called Utarapāočala and the part south of the Ganges was called DaksipaṆčala. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 137).

DAKSIPAṆČI. A holy place. This place is on the shore of southern sea. If one visits this place and takes bath there he will get the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Agnipūjōma, and the opportunity of travelling by the aeroplane of the gods. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 53).

DAKSIPAṆČIṬAS. The people of South India. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 135, Stanza 2, that at the time of composing Mahābhārata, the leader of the DaksipaṆčīṭas was the emperor Bhīṣmaka.

DALA. The son of King Parīkṣit of the dynasty of Ikṣvākū. The mother of Dala was Sūkṣmabha, the daughter of the King of Māndūka. Dala had an elder brother named Sala. Dala became king when Sala was killed. Hermit Vāmadēva was the priest of this King. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 152). See Parīkṣit II.

DALĪHIYA (BhAKADALĪHIYA). A Maharṣi of NaimiṆśaranya. In Vāmā Parāṇa, there is a story of how this sage once performed a homa and burnt Dīrtarāśtra’s kingdom in the sacrificial fire. Long ago some of the sages of NaimiṆśaranya approached Dīrtarāśtra with a request for some money. Their leader was the sage Dālīhiya (Baka). It was he who begged Dīrtarāśtra for money. The king not only refused to give money, but also insulted the sage. Provoked at this, Dālīhiya began performing a homa in which Dīrtarāśtra’s kingdom was the havī in the form of sliced meat. This homa was performed in Avākiraṇa, and Pittira at Pragāṇa. As a result of it the kingdom began to decline. The King was alarmed and consulted great scholars and astrologers about the cause of the country’s decline. They told him that the cause of the disaster was Dālīhiya’s homa. Dīrtarāśtra at once proceeded with rich presents to propitiate Dālīhiya at Avākiraṇa. Dālīhiya was pleased and as desired by the King, performed homa with milk and honey and revived all those who had died. (Vāmā Parāṇa, Chapter 39).

DAKSIPAṆČALA. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 11 says that this Maharṣi flourished in Yudhīśvara’s assembly. On another occasion, he is referred to, as coming to Dūmāṇena, the father of Sāvayeṇ. At that time, he conferred Dūmāṇena by saying that Sāvayeṇ would be blessed with longevity. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 298, Verse 17).

DĀLBHYAM. A holy place in North India. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 12).

DĀLBHYAGHOSA. Another name for the holy Āśrama, Dālbhyam.

DAMA-I. The brother of Damayanti. No other information about Dama is available in the Purāṇas.

DAMA-II. A hermit. He was one of the hermits who came to visit Bhīṣma when he was lying on the bed of arrows. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 4).

DAMA. See Sāhābara.

DAMA. A female attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Saiva Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 3).

DAMACANDRA. A King. He was a mighty hero and a friend of Diharmaṇa. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 158, Verse 40).

DAMĀGHOSA. The father of Śūtāpalī, the King of Cedi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 98).

DAMANA-I. A brother of Damayantī. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 6 is mentioned that King Bhīṣma had a daughter named Damana, and three sons named Dama, Dānta and Damana.

DAMA II. A hermit. Bhīṣma the King of Vudarbhā pleased this hermit, who blessed the King and said that he would get children. Accordingly the king got Damayantī as his daughter and Dānta and Damana as his sons. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 53).

DAMANA-III. The son of the King Parīkṣit. Dīrtarāśtra’s daughter killed Damana in the battle of Bharata. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 20).

DAMANA-IV. A son of Bhāradvāja. After the investiture with the Brahma string (upanayana) Damana started on a travel. On the way near Amarakanyakā he met with the hermit Garga who talked to him about the glory of Kaṭi. Damana who was a seeker of spiritual knowledge, stopped his travel and sat down to do penance and thus leaving his body he attained heaven. (Skanda Purāṇa, Chapter 2, 4, 74).

DAMANAKA-I. One of the characters in a story, of Parīcetuṭra. (See Mitraḥedam).

DAMANAKA-II. A dasīya (aṣūra) Mahāvīraṇu in his incarnation as Matya (Mātṛyāṇi), killed this aṣūra who was a dweller in the region named Damana of the aṣūra into the earth. By the touch of the Lord the body became fragrant and it was changed to a plant which is known as (Kozhunnu or Kozhuntu) Damanakam. (Skanda Purāṇa).
DAMANAKAM. The Tātīri tree (Grisia Tomentosa). The ceremony of worshipping this tree is called Damanakārohanaṣvadi. The Griselia tree is supposed to be Bhairava, who had been changed to a tree by the curse of Śiva. A story to this effect occurs in the Purāṇas. Bhairava was formed from the anger of Śiva. Bhairava, against the will of Śiva, destroyed the devas, and so Śiva cursed him and turned him to a Tātīri tree. It is called Damanaka because Bhairava tried to do ‘damana’ (restraint or punishment) to the gods. Bhairava felt sorry at the curse of Śiva. He requested Śiva to withdraw the curse. At last Śiva had pity on him and said that all would worship Damanaka tree. The method of that worship is called Damanakārohanaṣvadi. It is given below.

This tree should be worshipped on the seventh or thirteenth lunar day. The worshipper should go to the tree where the root recite mantras and spell. After the worship is over the worshipper should say, “O, Tree, which has originated by the power of Harī, you come to my presence. On behalf of Śiva and by his order, I have to take you home.” Saying thus the tree should be taken home and consecrated in the evening in accordance with the rituals. In the house, the Sun, Śiva and Agni should be invoked and worshipped, and then the root of the tree should be planted in the Kūrma (N.E. or point) corner of the house and when it is planted, the spell or incantation of Vāmadeva Mantra or Śrūṇamatra should be recited. In the same way the trunk with branches of the tree is planted on the Northern part. The fallen leaves and flowers should be placed on the eastern side. When the root is planted the following prayer should be uttered:

Āmānatraya deva
pātāḥ kāle mayā praṃbho
Kartavyastapam labhaḥ
Pūrṇam sarvam tāvādyaḥ.

After that at dawn he should take bath and with oblations of sweet-smelling flowers etc. should worship Śiva. This is Damanakārohanaṣvadi. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 80)

DAMAYANTI Daughter of Bhima the King of Vīdarbha. The most noble of all the Indian heroines, Dāmanika had a place in the literatures of almost all the languages in the world. The famous hero Nala is her husband.

1) The background of the story of Nala. During the time of the forest fire of the Pāṇḍavas, Arjuna had gone to Kaśī to do penance before Śiva for getting divine weapons. The rest of the Pāṇḍavas spent the time till the arrival of Arjuna, in sorrow and sadness. They spent miserable days one by one. At that time the hermit Vāmadeva visited them. They welcomed the hermit. In the midst of their conversation Dharma-putra told the hermit with tears that he was the most unhappy man in the world. Hearing this the hermit told them the story of Nala, to console the Pāṇḍavas.

2) The birth of Damayanti. The King Bhima of Vīdarbha was childless for a long time. While the King was spending sorrowful days, as he had no children, a hermit named Dama reached his palace. The King welcomed the hermit. Seeing the sorrow of the King the hermit blessed the King and the queen, and as a result a daughter named Damayanti and as her brothers three sons Dama, Dānta and Damana were born to them.

3) The Svyayama (marriage) of Damayanti. During this period a son named Nala was born to Vīrasena the King of Nīṣadha. The child was an expert in the game of dice and he would speak only truth. He grew up and became a youth. Once the svaśa which came to the palace of Damayanti from Nārada, had gone Kundinapuri, to take part in the marriage. On the way they met Nala. They were aware of the fact that Damayanti was in love with Nala. So they called Nala and sent him to Damayanti with a message that Damayanti should accept one of the four gods as her husband. By the boon of invisibility, given by the Gods, Nala entered the room of Damayanti unseen by others and gave the message to Damayanti. But Damayanti did not accept any of the gods. The Gods also entered the nuptial hall and took their seats in the shape of four Nālas. Damayanti entered the hall with the nuptial garland in her hands. She saw five Nālas including the real Nala, and prayed to the gods to show her the real Nala her lover. So the devas assumed their real forms and Damayanti put the garland on the real Nala and accepted him as her husband. Being much pleased with the behaviour and character of both, Nala and Damayanti, the four gods blessed them. Agni promised to be near Nala whenever he thought of him. Yama said that Nala would always be righteous. Varuna said that Nala would obtain water at the thought of it. Indra blessed him saying that he would give mokṣa immediately after the completion of a Yāga. The gods remained till the end of the marriage ceremony and then they departed. Nala and Damayanti lived in Kundinapuri.

4) The hatred between Kali and Dwāpara. Hearing about the Svayaṣavara of Damayanti Kali and Dwāpara started for Kundinapuri. On the way they met Indra and the other gods, who were returning from the marriage of Damayanti. They told Kali and Dwāpara that Damayanti had accepted Nala as her husband. Kali and Dwāpara got angry at this and returned saying that they would destroy the kingdom of Nala. After that Kali waited for a chance to enter the body of Nala. After twelve years, once Nala, after passing urine, without washing his legs performed his evening worship. At that moment Kali entered the body of Nala. With that Nala became bereft of all senses of righteousness and duty, and challenged his younger brother Pūṣkara to a game of dice. Pūṣkara engaged Nala in the game of dice. Kali stood in the shape of an ox as helper of Nala. Nala lost his kingdom in the game. Seeing that her husband was being defeated continuously, Damayanti sent for the charioter Vāreya and sent her son Indraṭena and daughter Indraṭena to Kundinapuri. After leaving the children at Kundinapuri Vāreya engaged himself in a travel. After visiting several countries he reached Ayodhya and became the charioteer of King Rûtparna.

5) Nala and Damayantî in the forest. Puskara got the kingdom, wealth and everything that his elder brother, Nala, had possessed. The miserable Nala left everything he had and clad in only one cloth got out of the palace. His wife Damayantî followed him. They stayed outside the city for three days. Puskara made a proclamation that if anybody rendered any help to Nala he would be given a hundred and forty-four cups of honey. After that Nala stayed there for three more days, with only water for food and drink. Then he went to the forest. His wife followed him. They were hungry. Nala saw some golden birds Nala wanted to catch them for food. So he took his only cloth and spread it on the ground. The birds took that cloth and flew away. Those birds were the ones used in the game. They were influenced by Kali. The miserable and hungry Nala asked his wife Damayantî to go with the caravan traders who were going to Avantî and save herself. But she did not consent to go away from him. They spent that night in an inn. They both fell asleep because of weakness. After a time Nala woke up. He thought that his wife would somehow or other get Damayantî out of that inn and save her. But she left her there. So he decided to take half of her cloth. How to do it without her knowledge? Thinking so he walked round the inn. He saw a good sword. He took the sword, and cut half of the cloth of Damayantî and leaving her in the inn he went away.

In a short while she woke up and missing her husband she would weep. On seeing her husband put away her clothes she asked him to go with her. Then she went into the forest crying. A big snake caught hold of her and began to swallow her. She cried out Hearing the cry, a forester came there. He cut the snake open and saved Damayantî. But when he saw her he became overpowerered by libido and tried to make her his wife. She got angry and raised her hand and instantly fell down dead. After this she began to wander in the forest aimlessly, seeing wild animals and fearing them. At last she got on a rock and sat there and began to weep thinking of Nala.

6) Damayantî in the kingdom of Cedi. While she was sitting on the rock weeping, a caravan of traders came by that way. They had been attacked by a herd of elephants and were running away from them. They saw Damayantî. She told them her story. They brought her to the kingdom of Cedi. She wandered through the country for a while and finally reached the palace of the King Subâhû. Thinking her to be a maid woman the street boys followed her. The queen saw the woman surrounded by street boys and felt pity for her. She sent her maid and brought her to the palace. Without revealing that she was the queen of King Nala, she told everything else to the queen. The queen consoled her and said that she would get her husband back. She invited Damayantî to stay in the palace till she got her husband back. Damayantî replied as follows: “Mother, I shall stay here. But there are certain conditions, I won’t eat remains and offals of victuals, I won’t make others to wash my legs, I won’t talk with men who are not related to me, If anybody banners after me you must order him to be killed. Brahmanas may come and see me only in connection with the search for my husband. This is my vow.” The queen agreed to her conditions and made her the attendant of her daughter Sunandâ.

7) Nala in Ayodhyâ. Nala filled with sorrow was walking along the forest when he saw a wild fire. From the midst of the fire somebody was calling Nala by name and crying. When Nala approached the fire, he saw the great and famous serpent Karkotaka lying entered in the flames. Karkotaka the King of the Nagas had once coveted Nârada, who then cursed him that he would die before his face by a fire. That very thing till Nala came and rescued him. From that day onwards, Karkotaka was remaining in that forest without moving. Then the forest caught fire. Karkotaka being unable to move had to remain in the fire. Nala immediately saved Karkotaka from the fire and with that he was absolved from the curse of Nârada. Karkotaka asked Nala to walk forward, counting the steps. When Nala counted ten, Karkotaka hit on the leg of Nala and he became ugly. Then the serpent said to the tormented Nala, “Don’t fear. I have made you ugly so that others may not recognize you. Now you are ugly because of my poison. But my poison has affected Kali who is in your body. Because he had harmed you who are blameless, he has got this poison. So long as this poison is in you, nobody will harm you. You must go to Rûtparna the King of Ayodhyâ and tell him that you are Bhûkaka a charioteer. You must give to the serpent the spell ‘Avasârdaya mantra’ and get from him the spell ‘Aakalâdaya mantra’. After that you will have communion with your wife and children. There are two cloths for you. Whenever you want to wear your original form, you have to wear one of these.” Saying these words Karkotaka gave Nala two divine garments and then disappeared.

Nala started for Ayodhyâ He reached the palace on the tenth day. There he was employed as the horse keeper of Rûtparna on a pay of hundred pieces of gold. Thus he stayed there under the name Bühûka. Vâraîâya and Jivâla who were the horsekeepers of Rûtparna up to that time, were placed under Bühûka.

Bühûka used to recite a poem every evening when he returned from his work.

Weary and worn of hunger and thirst,
That poor woman, where might she be?
Serving whom will she be now.

Thinking of the unlucky Sukî,
Hearing this song of lamentation everyday, once his assistant Jivâla asked Bühûka, whom he was reciting the poem about. Bühûka replied: “Once there was a man who was fool. He got a good wife. For some reason they were separated. The fool is still wandering about weary and sad in search of his wife.”

8) Damayantî in Avantî. At this time Damayantî was living in the palace of the King of Cedi, as the maid of princess Sunandâ. King Bühûka became very sorry not knowing where Nala and Damayantî had gone. He sent men in all directions to search for them. The King proclaimed that those who found them would be awarded thousand cows, lands assigned to Brahmans, and villages. He proclaimed that so many cows would be given even to me who could give any information about them. Hearing this Brahmans went in all directions and Sudeva, one of them, reached the Kingdom of Cedi. He recognized Damayantî who was like fire inside the cover of smoke. When Damayantî was alone Sudeva approached her and said that he had come from Vidarbhā and that he was a friend of Damayanti’s brother. Damayanti recognised him as the friend of Nala. Sunandā, who witnessed this scene, told her mother about it. The queen sent for Sudeva and asked him what the matter was. He revealed everything about Damayanti to the queen. When they heard the story all the women in the harem cried. Then with tears the queen said, “Hear this, Damayanti, your mother and myself are the two daughters of Śūrpaṇhā; the King of Ayodhya. Your father gave your mother to Bhima the King of Vidarbhā and me to Virabhadra the King of Cedi. I have seen you when you were an infant.”

When the King of Cedi knew everything he sent Damayanti in a palanquin to Vidarbhā.

9) The search for Nala. Damayanti told her father that she didn’t want to live any longer unless Nala was brought to her. Bhima had been trying hard to find out Nala. One day Parvati one of the numerous Brahmins who were engaged in the search for Nala, came to Bhima and said, “While I was walking from place to place, I happened to reach the palace of Rūpaparna the King of Ayodhya. There I made enquiries about Nala the husband of Damayanti, in the presence of the Rūpaparna. But nobody gave me any answer. When I returned Bāhuka the charioteer of Rūpaparna followed me. An ugly man with short hands, an expert in driving horses, and an excellent cook, he asked me several questions about Damayanti.”

When Damayanti heard this she had hallucinations. She secretly went to her mother and complained to her that the charioteer of Rūpaparna had found her. Her mother consented. She called Sudeva, in the presence of her mother and told him to go to Ayodhya and tell Rūpaparna that the second svayamvara (marriage) of Damayanti would take place before sunrise next day and that she should come earlier. Sudeva instantly went to Ayodhya.

Rūpaparna, hearing the words of Sudeva, wanted Bāhuka to take him in the chariot to Vidarbhā within the period of a day time for the second svayamvara of Damayanti. Nala consented with a broken heart. Immediately they started. Vārṇeṣu also got into the chariot. The chariot flew through the sky with tremendous speed to Vidarbhā. On the way the upper garage of the King fell on the ground. He ordered the chariot to be stopped for taking his upper garment. Nala said that within that winking time the chariot had travelled a yojana (league) and gloried in his power of driving horses. Then they saw in the forest a Tānṭi tree (Terminalia bellirica) with fruits. Seeing the Tānṭi tree the King said, “O Bāhuka, if you are an expert in horse-driving I am an expert in reckoning. I will tell you how many leaves and nuts there are in that Tānṭi Tree. There are five crores of leaves in both the branches together and two thousand and ninety-five nuts. They stopped the chariot and checked the tree and found the reckoning of the King correct. The King had the knowledge of the art called ‘Aksahrdaya’. It was with this art that the King calculated the number of leaves in the tree, at one look. Bāhuka drove the chariot with the speed of the leaves because he had known the art called ‘Aṣahrdaya’. Then and there, Bāhuka taught the King the art of ‘Āvahrdaya’ and the King taught Bāhuka the art of ‘Aksahrdaya’. The moment Nala learned Aṣahrdaya Kali omitted the poison of Kārkūpaka and got out of the body of Nala. Long ago, the mother of Indrasena, a god, had cursed Kali and drove her out. Since then Kali had been living in the body of Nala. As soon as he came out Kali begged Nala for pardon. Nala cursed his anger. But Kali was afraid of Nala. So he made the Tānṭi tree his abode. Because of that Tānṭi became detectable. Rūpaparna, Vārṇeṣu and Bāhuka reached Kundinapura in the evening. When the sound of the chariot of Nala reached the ears of Damayanti her heart bumped with joy. The chariot was stopped and Rūpaparna entered the palace. The King Bhima welcomed Rūpaparna heartily. As there was no sign of any preparation for the svayamvara (marriage) Rūpaparna understood that some sort of trick had been played on him.

10) Test of Nala. Damayanti sent her maid Keśinī to Bāhuka to watch him. Keśinī had a secret talk with Bāhuka. Though Nala did not reveal himself, he cried when she talked about Damayanti. Keśinī returned to Damayanti and told her what she had heard and seen. Damayanti became more and more convinced that Bāhuka was Nala himself. So she sent Keśinī again to Bāhuka and discovered the following facts about Bāhuka, after a keen observation, and made a report of them.

1. Bāhuka does not stop to pass through even a small door. The upper sill lifts by itself for him to pass through.
2. He gets enough room for him to pass through even in a crowded place.
3. Empty pots are filled with water at a look from him.
4. When he stretches out a grass to the sun, it catches fire.
5. Fire does not burn him even if he touches it.
6. When he crushes a flower, it blooms more beautiful and fragrant than before.

When Keśinī said all these facts to Damayanti, she became fully convinced that Bāhuka was none other than Nala herself. Damayanti sent Keśinī again to Bāhuka to get some meat cooked by him. Damayanti tested the taste of the meat brought by Keśinī and she knew that the food was cooked by Nala. She sent Keśinī again to Bāhuka with her children. Seeing Indrasena and Indrasena coming to him, Bāhuka ran to them, gathered them and embraced them and cried aloud. Then he told Keśinī that he had done so because the children were just like his two children.

11) Reunited. After having tested Bāhuka so far Damayanti sent Keśinī to her mother to tell her everything, and to say that she was convinced of the fact that Bāhuka was none other than Nala and that the difference was only in shape and to request that she may be permitted to see Bāhuka in person. The queen informed the King of all these facts. With the permission of her parents Bāhuka was brought to the room of Damayanti. The moment Bāhuka saw Damayanti he began to shed tears. Damayanti also was filled with emotion. But she told him that "Bāhuka, have you seen a man who had left his sleeping wife in the forest? Who else, but Nala the famous and the righteous would discard his blameless and loving wife who had been sleeping, with fatigue and hunger in a lonely place? Have I done anything wrong to him in my younger days so that he should leave me in the forest when I was sleeping? Leaving aside real gods I married him. I worshipped, him. I had children from his blood and now he has abandoned me. In the presence of Gods and fire as witness, holding my hands he had taken a vow that he would support and protect me. Where has that vow gone?" At these words Pâbhusa shuddered in fear for a long time. Then he told her all that had happened to him since their separation. Damayantî requested Nala, not to have any misconception regarding the idea of a second svayamvara; she said to him that she committed no wrong and that her fidelity and loyalty had undergone no change. At that time Vâyu (the wind-god) in an ethereal voice said "Damayantî has committed no sin". Immediately Nala put on the divine clothes given by Karkotaka and regained his original form. Damayantî embraced Nala and cried aloud. The king her father, mother and the people of the city all ran to them.

Next day Rûpamantî returned. After a few days Nala collected an army consisting of fifty thousand soldiers, sixteen elephants, fifty horses and a white chariot only. From Vâdarishha and went to the kingdom of Nisadhâ. Reaching there Nala challenged Puskara for a game of dice. Puskara refused the challenge. Nala took his sword to cut Puskara into two. Finally Puskara agreed to play. At the first cast of the dice the life and the Kingdom of Puskara fell into the hands of Nala. But Nisadhâ people were not satisfied. Nala became King. Damayantî and the children reached Nisadhâ. Nala ruled the country with more happiness and prosperity than before. (Mahâbhârata, Vana Parva, Chapters 52 to 79).

DAMAYANTÎ II. The daughter of Pramloca. See Viûvakarma, 2nd para.

DAMBHÎ. One of the two attendants given by Brahmâ to Subrahmanya. The other attendant's name is Adarshbara. (M.B. Sâlya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 39).

DAMBHÎHA. A dânava or asura. Danbhâ was the son of Vipracitî an asura born to Kaçyapa by his wife Danu. This Danbhâ is the father of Saûkhuçî, an asura. Danbhâ received from their teacher Saùkru, the spell known as the famous Vinhumatra and went to Puskâra-dêva and did not return for one year of years. It was due to this penance that the son Saûkhuçî was born to him. (Devi Bhâgavata, Skandha 9).

DAMBHODHÔBHAVâ. See Paraârûma, Para-10, subsection 2.

DAMBHODHÔBHAVâ. An ancient emperor. He was a mighty warrior prince. He brought the whole country under control. At last there was nobody left to fight with. So he walked about challenging everybody he met with. But none dared to fight with him. Then Brahmâ advised him to challenge Nara Nâryânas who were doing penance on the northern-most point of the earth. So the emperor went with his mighty army to Gandhâmâdana and informed Nara and Nâryâna of his desire to fight. They said that they were mere hermits and that they had no power to fight. But Dambhoodhôbhava was not satisfied. Finally Nara and Nâryâna took some iksa grass and began to fight the emperor with it. Though the army of the emperor was mighty and vast it could not stand against the grass in the hands of the hermits. Finally the emperor admitted failure and bowed before the hermits. They advised him not to be arrogant in future and to lead a pure life. Hearing the exhortations of the hermits the emperor became a devoted man. He returned to his palace and led a life of righteousness. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 96).

DAMA. A famous holy place. Brahmâ usually sits in this place and worships Mahâsvara. In Mahâbhârata, Vana Parva, Chapter 88, Stanza 2, it is mentioned that all the sins of those who bathe in this place will be washed away.

DAMSA. The giant who took birth as the worm 'Alâikam'. This giant came in the shape of a beetle and pierced the leg of Karâ, the disciple of Parâshûrâma. Damu once kidnapped the wife of Bûrugru, and the hermit cursed the giant and turned him to a beetle. He also said that Paramesvara would absolve him from the curse. (See Karâ, Para 4).

DAMODARA. Sri Kṛṣṇa. When Sri Kṛṣṇa was a small boy, Yasodâ tied him to a mortar-stone. The boy ran about, dragging the heavy stone with him and the rope snapped. Part of the rope still remained round his Abhimanus. From that he got the name Damodara. 'Dama' means rope and 'Udana' means abdeman. (See Kṛṣṇa).

DAMO. I. A sage in the assembly of Yudhishtîra. Once he met Sri Kṛṣṇa who was on his way to Hastinapura. (M.B. Saûla Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 13).

DANDAŘI. A town in ancient Indra. (M.B. Bûrama Parva, Chapter 90, Verse 52).

DANDA. Gift. In ancient India a spiritual significance was attached to dana. (offering of a tree gift). One who gave water was said to achieve contentment; one who gave food, eternal happiness; one who gave land, government of the country; one who gave gold would attain longevity; one who gave a house would get domestic felicity; one who gave silver would get physical beauty; one who gave clothes would reach candrâloka; one who gave a horse would attain the world of the Avânâdevas; one who gave bulls would get prosperity; one who gave cows would reach sûryâloka; according to Manusmrti.

According to Manu, the Ñârya, the rewards obtained by offering the following articles as "Dânam" are as follows.

Articles offered as Dânam reward obtained by dâta (giver).

Vehicle—bed Virtuous wife.
Relûge (shelter) Prosperity.
Corn Eternal happiness.
Brahmâjâna Brahmâsûryya.
(See also Nakṣatrasraya and Merudâna).

Dânam.
DANAVA. Danava are the sons born to Kaśyapa Prajāpati by his wife Danu and their descendants. (See under Danu).

DANAVY. A daughter of Dakṣaprajāpati. Kaśyapaprājapati married Danavya. Four sons Vikasa, Bala, Vira and Vrata were born to her. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 65).

DANASA I. A king who was the son of Ikṣvāku. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 45, that the king was the rebirth of Krodhabandha, an asura.

1) Bala. Ikṣvāku had one hundred sons. Of them Viksa, Nimi and Danu were famous. Danu became a famous archer when he grew up. In the Bhrammanda Purāṇa mention is made that this king Danu took part in the Devaputra battle (Battle between the gods and the demons) and killed several thousand aarāṇas (monks).

2) Administrations. The king Ikṣvāku gave his son Danu the country between the mountains Himālaya and Vindhyā and appointed him the King of that country. Danu built a capital city known as Madhūmanasa and began to rule the country. He had an army of Catarranga (four parts, elephant, chariot, horse and mule). The hermit Śānuśu was the priest of King Danu. (Uttararāmāyana).

3) The origin of Dandakārya (the forest of Dandaka). Danu once raped Arā, the daughter of hermit Suktā, who had been doing penance in a forest in the middle of the country of Danu. Suktā the hermit got angry and destroyed the country of Danu by a shower of fire. From that day onwards that country was known as Dandakārya. (For further information see under Aras).

DANASA II.

1) General information. Another Kṣatriya King of ancient India. He was the son of the King Vidyadha. In Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 183, it is mentioned that Vidyadha and Danu had attended Draupadī (victory of Draupadī).

2) Other information. (1) Bhimasena defeated the King Danu. (M.B. Sāhā Parva, Chapter 307, Stanza 177).

(2) The King Danu was the brother of Dandaśāra, the king of Magadhā. Danadāra and Danu were killed by Arjuna in battle. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 16).

DANDA III. An attendant of the Sun. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 68).

DANDA IV. A warrior of the kingdom of Cedi. He fought on the side of the Pândavas against the Kauravas and was killed by Karna. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 56, Stanza 48).

DANDA V. A synonym of Mahāvisva. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 149, Stanza 105).

DANDA VI (DANDAKA). A thief who had made the world tremble in the Devapura yuga. This wicked Dandaka used to steal the wealth of the Brahmans, kill those who resisted him, speak lies, rape women of others, drink liquor, eat the flesh of cows, mingle with wicked people and commit all sorts of evil deeds daily. Now Dandaka went to a Vaisnavite temple to commit robbery. When he reached the steps of the temple he wiped his legs which were wet, on the ground and a small depression that was there, was levelled by the drawing of his legs. He broke the lock with an iron rod and entered the temple. Inside the temple he saw Kṛṣṇa clad in yellow robes holding a beautiful cow with his spouse Rādā. The thief instantly bowed before the spouse of Rādā. By this act his sins were washed away. Still impelled by his evil nature, he took the silk garment of Kṛṣṇa, spread it on the ground, collected as many things as he could take, placed them in the garment and making them into a bundle, got out of the temple with shaggy feet. The cowherd in front of the cow, Śānī, heard a loud noise. Hearing the noise the neighbours woke up and looked out. The thief began to run and was bitten by a poisonous snake and fell down dead. The men of Yama (God of death) tied the spirit of the thief with a rope and took him before Yama. Citrāgupta looked into his accounts and informed Yama that he had committed all the sins. Yama asked if there was any good deed to his account. Then Citrāgupta said “When this great sinner was going to commit theft in a Vaisnavite temple, at the steps of the temple, he levelled a pit by the mud on his leg, and that single good deed on his part has wiped out all his sins.” Hearing this Yama gave him a golden seat and showed hospitality and then bowed before him and said “By the woe of your legs you have purified my abode today. I am grateful to you. Now you may go to the blissful world of Viṣṇu where there are no deaths or births or sorrow”. Hearing this Danu entered Vaiśakūthā. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 1).

DANASA VII. A giant (Rākṣasa). This giant Danu was born to the giant Sāmāḥ, by his wife Ketumati. The nine ministers of Rāvana, namely Prahastha, Akampana, Vīkṣata, Kālakārthika, Sunārava, Satīhṛṣita, Pṛākṣa and Bāhūkaraṇa were brothers of this Danu. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

DANDAM I. A divine weapon of Kāla (Yama). It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 41, Stanza 26 that King Yama had presented this weapon to Arjuna.

DANDAM II. A holy place on the bank of river Pampā. Those who bathe in this holy place will get the fruits of giving a thousand cows as gift. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 15).

DANDAM III. One of the four expeditions. The four expeditions are Śāma, Dānā, Bheṣa and Danu. A king should subdue an enemy by resorting to these four expeditions. Of the four expeditions, śāma and dānā are considered to be the best.

Śāmaṁśamapāyānāti
Caturdhānapaṇḍiṭāḥ
Śāmadānaprasāmanāti
Nityaṁ rāstraḥbhīvadhayaḥ. //

(Manusmṛti, Stanza 109).

Wise people say that, of the four expedients śama and dānā are the most effective for the prosperity of the country.

DANDABHU. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Sāyā Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 73).

DANDAHARA I. A Kṣatriya King of Magadhā. The following information about this king is available from the Mahābhārata.

1) Danadāra was born as the rebirth of a giant known as Krodhavardhana. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 46).

2) Bhimasena, during his conquest of the countries, overcame King Danadāra and his brother Danu.
DANDADHARA II

(M.B. Saha’s Parva, Chapter 30, Stanza 17).

3. In the battle between the Pândavas and the Kauravas, Dandadhara fought from the back of an elephant against the Pândavas. When Dandadhara began to exterminate the army of the Pândavas, Sri Kr̥ṣṇa persuaded Arjuna to fight against Dandadhara, who was killed in the fight. (M.B. Kṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 1 to 13).

DANDAPĀNĪ II

One of the hundred sons of Bhṛgava. Bhimasena killed this Dandadhara in the battle of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Kṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 5).

DANDADHARA III

A king who helped the Pândavas. Very often the name Mauniyám also occurs along with the name of Dandadhara. They might have been brothers or sons of the same father by separate mothers. In the Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 7, mention is made that these two had been present at the marriage of Draupadī. Draupadī was killed both of them in the battle of Bhārata. (M.B. Kṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 13).

DANDADHARA IV

A warrior born and bred in the country of Pāṭālā. He kept the rear of the army of Yudhishṭhira in the battle of Bhārata against the Kauravas. He died by an arrow of Karna. (M.B. Kṛṣṇa Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 27).

DANDAGAURI

A celestial maid. When Arjuna visited devaloka, there was a dance of this woman in honour of him. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 29).

DANDA

See Dandā VI.

DANDAKARA

A Śūdra who had saved himself from going to hell by taking the vow called Viṣṇupātaka. This Śūdra who lived in the tretāyuga had done a good deal of wicked deeds. Finally he accepted the advice of Brāhmaṇas and performed the vow of Viṣṇupātaka and because of the vow he attained heaven. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 23).

DANDAKARANYA

A forest in the Indo-Gangetic Valley. For the story of how this place became a great forest see under Arāḍa.

Other information. (1) This is a holy place. He who takes bath in this place would get the fruits of giving a thousand cow-skins as gift. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 41).

(2) During the time of the forest life of Śri Rāma he made his cottage in this forest and stayed there for a while. It was in this forest that a part of the body of Śūparākṣa was cut off and the infantry of fourteen thousand giants who came under the leadership of Khara, Dāsāpatra and Trisūra was completely destroyed. Sitā was stolen, Mārica was killed by Śri Rāma, and Jācyu was died by the arrow of Rāvaṇa in this forest of Dandakaranya. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 277 to 279).

DANDAKETU

A warrior who fought on the side of the Pândavas. Dandaketu fought on the back of an attractive horse. (M.B. Droṇa Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 68).

DANDANĪTI

(The laws of chastisement). Dandani is the law of punishment given to the subject by Kings of ancient India. According to the criminal laws, if a man gave two hundred and fifty paṇas (a coin) was called Prathama Sāhāsa danda (first degree of punishment) and fining up to one hundred paṇas was called Madhyama Sāhāsa danda (medium punishment) and fining up to thousand paṇas was called Utama Sāhāsa danda (highest degree of punishment). If a man complains to the King that his property is stolen, when actually it is not stolen, the man will be fined the amount that is said to have been stolen. There was another law, that the owner of the stolen property and the thief would have to pay double the amount they admit, if the amount shown in the complaint differed from the actual amount stolen. For appearing as false witness, the three classes of non-Brahmins were punished with fine and if he was a Brahmā he would have to be cast out of the society. The King ordered that if one spent the property entrusted with him for keeping, the owner of the property would have to be paid double the amount. If one says that he has given the property for keeping when actually it is not, the person will have to be punished as if he were a thief. If a man spends an amount without knowing that it was the property of others, the man will have to be acquitted of the charge.

If an artisan has received money in advance for a particular product and fails to give the thing at the stipulated time the King will fine him with the fine.

If a man received money in advance on a promise to do a particular work and if he fails to do the work: he will be fined one Kṛṣṇa of gold. (One Kṛṣṇa weighs three yavagrāms). If a man conceals his diseases and marries a diseased, she will be considered as a spinner and the man will be fined two hundred paṇas.

If a cowherd agrees to look after the cow of another receiving pay and food and refuses to return the cow to the owner the King will fine him hundred paṇas. If a Kṣatriya scolds a Brahmana the fine imposed would be hundred paṇas. If it is a Vaiśya the fine will be two hundred paṇas. If it is a Śūdra he will be put to death. If a Brahmā scolds a Kṣatriya the fine is fifty paṇas. If a Śūdra scolds a Vaiśya the fine is twenty-five paṇas. If a Brahmana scolds a Śūdra the fine is only twelve paṇas. If a Śūdra scolds a Kṣatriya his tongue should be cut off. If a Śūdra advices a Brahmā, he may inflict any punishment on the Śūdra.

If a Śūdra wronged a Brahmana, the Śūdra might be punished by cutting off the organ which was employed in the crime. If one spoke at a Brahmana, the two lips of the culprit might be cut off. If a Śūdra spoke to a Brahmā the culprit would have his penis cut off. If a Śūdra sits on the seats of the upper classes his buttock will have to be cut off. If one slays cow, elephant, camel or horse half of his limbs will have to be cut off. Cutting across a road, changing of boundaries, making the water of pools and ponds impure etc. will have to be punished with a fine of two savaṇas. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 227).

DANDAPĀNĪ I

A king of the family of Yavātī. This King was the son of Vihānīr and the father of Nimi. (Bhāgavatā, Sandhā 10).

DANDAPĀNĪ II

The son of Paundraka, the King of Kāśi, Śrī Kr̥ṣṇa killed Paundraka. As his son Dandapānī was not powerful enough to kill Śrī Kr̥ṣṇa, he performed the sacrifice of Mātarīvara for being pleased at the sacrifice Siva created Khṛṣṇa in the sacrificial fire and sent her to Dvārakā to destroy Śrī Kr̥ṣṇa, who aimed his Sudarśana caktra (wheel-weapon) at her. She ran to Vārāṇasi, where the wheel turned Kriyā and everybody with her to ashes. (Padma-Purāṇa, Uttara Kānda, Chapter 278).

DANDAŚŌKA. A hell. See the para Naraka under Kāla.

DANDI I. A son of Dhrūvāśyra. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Aḍī Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 103.

DANDI II. An asura of Alakāpurī. Once she danced in honour of the sage Aṣṭāvakra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 45).

DANDHIṆAVĀJĀ. The son of Maṇu Tāmanā. Once DandhiṆavājā gave as oblation his flesh and blood in fire, to get children. But it was of no use. So he put his hair of the body, of the head, Lis śnēvas, the marrow of the bones, and liver and sperm in the fire. When the sperm was put in the fire there was a voice 'Don’t' and with that the king fell dead. And instantly seven luminous children came out from the fire. They began to cry aloud. Hearing their cry Brahāma came there and anointed them as the Māruts (wind gods). They were the maruts of Tamasamantaras. (Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 72).

DANTAVAṆṬHIRĀ. A Kaśtriya king of Kaśrāsa. He was the rebirth of the daitya (asura) Krodhavanā. (M.B. Aḍī Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 62).

DANTAVAṆṬHĀ. He was the rebirth of Viṣṇu, one of the two door-keepers of Mahāvīṣṇu, Jaya and Viṣṇu. (For full particulars see under Jaya).

Dantavakra was a contemporary king of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Dantavaktra died in a battle with Śrī Kṛṣṇa and returned to Vaikuntha (the abode of Viṣṇu). DANTIMUKHA. An asura (demon). This asura was killed in a fight with Subrahmanya. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kāṇḍa).

DANU I. 1) General information. Danu, the daughter of Dakṣa was married to Kā dysa Prajahpi. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata that the Dānavas (demon) were born from Danu.

2) Sept. One hundred sons were born to Danu. The following are the important among them.

   1. Vipraciti
   2. Śīvara
   3. Namuci
   4. Pulomā
   5. Asilomā
   6. Kesā
   7. Durjaya
   8. Ayāśī ras
   9. Avasai ras
   10. Astvaśākhu
   11. Garga
   12. Amūrdhā
   13. Vēgavān
   14. Kṛtumān
   15. Svabhānū
   16. Āśva
   17. Āsavaṇaṭ
   18. Viṣṇupavan
   19. Ajuka

This sun and the moon (Śrīva and Candra) are not the planets.

From the sons named above ten families of Dānavas (asuras) arose. The founders of the families are mentioned below:

1. Ekaṣa
2. Aṇuṣṭapa
3. Pralamba
4. Naraka
5. Vatsa
6. Tapaṇa
7. Saṇa
8. Mahāthama
9. Garvindha
10. Dirghajīva

All the dānavas or Asuras belong to one of these ten families. (M.B. Aḍī Parva, Chapter 65).

DANU II. A King. Two sons Rambha and Karamba were born to this king. (See Karambhā). DANDAŚŪRA. A mountain. The deity of this mountain is said to be sitting in the council hall of Kubera (the god of wealth) and worshipping him, according to Mahā-DĀSA. A term used as a suffix to the name of a Śūdra. In ancient India the rule was that the proper suffix for a Brāhmaṇ's name should be 'Sarmā', for a Kṣatriya's name, 'Varnā', for a Vaśiya's name, 'Gupta' and for a Śūdra's name, 'Dāsa'. (See under Čāturvārya).

DĀSADRUV. A hermit. It is mentioned in Rgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvāka 7, Sūkta 33 that Daśadrudru was a valiant hermit.

DĀSAGRĪVA. Rāvaṇa. (See under Rāvaṇa).

DĀSAYOTI. A son of the King Subhṛat. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 44.

DĀSAMĀLĪKA. A country in Bāhārā. (M.B. Bhūṣaṇa Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 66).

DĀSAMUKHĀ RĀVANA. Rāvaṇa, the enemy of Śrī Rāma. (See under Rāvaṇa).

DĀSANA. See under Rāvaṇa.

DĀSARĀJĀ. Foster-father of Sañcānu's wife, Sañvatvāt. His actual name was Uccaihśravas. For detailed story see under Sañvatvāt.

DĀSARĀJṆA. A great war which took place in India in ancient times. It was a terrible clash between the Aryan who lived in Pañcānada and the primitive inhabitants of India, before the Rgveda period. Sudās, the king was the adversary of the Aryan. Among the relatives of Sudās were Aryan and non-Aryan. It was the people under Sudās who got victory in this war. Anyway, with this war, (Dāsarājṇa), a new mixed race of people came into being in North India, which was composed of the Aryans and the primitive inhabitants of the country. The Hindus are the descendants of this mixed race. (Rgveda).

DĀSARATHA. (Nemi). A famous king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was the father of Śrī Rāma.

2) Birth. Daśaratha was the son of Aja, of the family of Ikṣvāku, born of his wife Indumati.

3) Daśaratha's hunt. Once during the early part of his life Daśaratha was walking through a forest engaged in hunting. He reached the bank of the river Sarayū. It was evening and the forest was thick. He walked in search of wild animals. The night was advancing and darkness getting thick. Then he heard a sound from the river as if an elephant was drinking water. Thinking it to be an elephant Daśaratha sent an arrow in the direction from which the sound came. Instantly he heard a man crying with pain. The king was disappointed. He ran to the spot and saw a hermit boy lying in a pool of blood beating his limbs on the ground and crying. The waterpot he had been dipping in the water lay close by. In answer to the questions of the king, the DĀSA. A country in Ancient India. (M.B. Bhūṣaṇa Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 6 that 'Umbil is the name of the mother of Dāsaratha.

hermit boy whose name was Śrāvana, said, "Oh King! What wrong have I done? My parents are sitting thirsty and blind with age, in the hermitage closely. I, their only son, was doping the pot to take water to them, when you sent the arrow at me. So, please take some water to them in this pot and console them."

Hearing this, with tears the King drew out the fatal arrow from the body of the boy and with that the boy Śrāvana, his footsteps and called him eagerly. The King, with tearful eyes told them what had happened. There was loud wailing and crying in the hermitage. According to the wish of the King they took them to where their son lay. Then the King made a fire and placed the dead body of the boy in it. The aged and blind parents cursed Dāsāratha, "You will also die of loss of children." Then they also entered the fire and were burnt along with their son's dead body. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kānda, Sarga 63).

4) Dāsāratha had three wives, named Kālīkāya, Kaikēyī and Sūrītā.

5) Kaikēyī gave a boon. There was a great battle in the world of the gods between the asuras and the gods. According to the request of the devas, Dāsāratha went to the world of the devas to help them. Kaikēyī also went with Dāsāratha. In a severe fight with Sambhara, an asura, Dāsāratha fell down unconscious. Kaikēyī took him away from the battlefield. When she recovered, she found the King got into the chariot and fought more fiercely than before. The time wheel-bolt of one of the wheels of the chariot of Dāsāratha slipped away. Without informing her husband of this danger, Kaikēyī inserted her finger into the hole and prevented the wheel from sliding away. The King won the battle. After the battle, when the King came to know of the services rendered by Kaikēyī, he promised her two boons. Kaikēyī told the King that she would ask for them later, when she needed them. Then they returned to Ayodhyā. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Sarga 9, Kaṇḍa Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kānda).

6) Administration of Dāsāratha. The capital of Dāsāratha’s kingdom of Kosala, was Ayodhyā. This city was situated on the bank of river Saţyav. Dāsāratha was as famous in Ayodhyā as Indra was in the realm of the gods. There were palaces in Ayodhyā for the kings who brought tribute to stay. In short, as mentioned in Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kānda, Sarga 5, Ayodhyā was the heaven on earth.

7) Ministers. Dāsāratha had eight ministers, Sṛṣṭi, Saṁjana, Viśva, Siddhāṁtaka, Rāṣṭravardhana, Aloka, Dharmasāla, and Sauniṭra. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 6).

8) The name Dāsāratha. The real name of Dāsāratha was Nemi. Once the unattackable and invincible asura Sambhara conquered the throne of Indra. At the request of Brahmā and the gods, this King reached heaven and destroyed the armies of the asuras very easily. Sambhara got angry, assumed ten shapes and attacked the King from ten points at the same time. The King confronted the ten Sambharas at ten points, at the same time and killed all of them at the same moment. Because he faced his chariot to ten points at the same time and fought with enemies on those ten points Brahmā appreciated his valiant fighting and charioteering and gave him the name Dāsāratha (one who is capable of driving the chariot to ten points at the same time). Thus his original name was forgotten and he came to be known only by the name given him later. (Kaṇḍa Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kānda).

9) Birth of Sons. Kausalīyā was the first wife of Dāsāratha. She was the daughter of the King of Uttara Kosala. A daughter named Sāntā was born to Dāsāratha by Kausalīyā. After this, no sons or daughters were born to Dāsāratha for a long time.

At this juncture Lomāpāḍa, the king of Aṅga who was the class-mate and a great friend of Dāsāratha, came to Ayodhyā on a friendly visit. He also had no children. So he entreated Dāsāratha to give Sāntā to him as a foster-daughter. Thus he took away Sāntā to Aṅga. Lomāpāḍa gave Sāntā in marriage to Rṣyaśrīra, a hermit. (See under Rṣyaśrīra).

As Kausalīyā was childless Dāsāratha brought as his wife Kaikēyī the daughter of the King of Keśav and sister of Yuddhātirī. Still no children were born to them. He was much disappointed. At last he married again and brought Sūrītā the princess of Kāti. Of these three, Rṣyaśrīra was the childless. Though he had three wives, Dāsāratha still remained childless. The King and his queen spent their days in sorrow for a long time. The King remembered the curse he had incurred when he was young. The curse was that as they had died with sorrow at the death of their son Śrāvana, the same thing would happen to me. So he believed that some would be born to him. He performed several devotional acts to get children. Finally he gave up all kingly pleasures and began to lead an ascetic life. He built a temple for his own use and consecrated the idol of Mahāvīra in it. Then entrusting the administration of the Kingdom to his ministers he and his wives engaged themselves in daily devotions and meditation in the temple. Then the King decided to perform the sacrifice of Pāraskāmesī (sacrifice for getting children) by the hermit Rṣyaśrīra under the guidance of Vasiṣṭha. The King informed Rṣyaśrīra of his decision. Rṣyaśrīra could not refuse the King’s request as the King was his father-in-law. Moreover Lomāpāḍa and Sāntā also requested the hermit to comply with the desire of Dāsāratha. So Rṣyaśrīra came to Ayodhyā and the ritual of Pāraskāmesī was begun.

The air vibrated with the recitation of mantras (spells and incantations) and the Veda Śaktas. The hermit uttered the divine spell of Pāraskāmesī and offered oblations in the sacrificial fire. Then a wonderful and luminous figure came out of the fire with a pot containing a pudding of ambrosia, and placed the pot before Rṣyaśrīra and then disappeared in the sacrificial fire. When the wonderful figure disappeared, Rṣyaśrīra took the pot of pudding and gave it to Dāsāratha with prayer and incantations. Dāsāratha received the golden pot and in accordance with the instruction of the hermit, divided the pudding between his first wife Kausalīyā and second wife Kaikēyī, both of whom gave half of their share to Sūrītā. Thus the three wives ate the divine pudding and by and by all of them became pregnant. Kausalīyā and Kaikēyī gave birth to a son each and Sūrītā gave birth to two sons. The son of Kausalīyā was called Rāma, the son of Kaikēyī was named Bhārata and the son of Sumitra were called Lakshmana and Satrukhina.

10) The four sons of Sun (Saturn). Astronomers are of opinion that famine will occur in the world for the period of twelve years, when the planet Sani (Saturn) comes into the orbit of Rohini (a star). But now the planet Saturn does not come into the orbit of the star Rohini. There is a story in the Padma Purana, which states that this happened so because a boon Sani had given to Daśaratha.

During the regime of Daśaratha the planet Sani approached the orbit of Rohini. Experts in astrology said that the earth would be ruined by famine etc. if Sani cleft the star Rohini. Hearing this Daśaratha took his bow and arrows, got into his chariot, and started for the forest. He travelled for one lac and a quarter of the yojanas (league) and reached the bind part of Rohini, which is beyond the sun. Adorned with golden garments and a golden crown studded with jewels, seated on a golden chariot decorated with precious stones, and a lofty flagstaff and yoked with horses of the colour of the swan, the king shone in the sky as a second sun. He drew the bow-string right up to his ear and placed it in the arrowbag. When he was thus bending, Daśaratha saw the arrow of destruction they began to tremble with fear. Sani came to Daśaratha and fell before him and said that he would grant any boon to the King, and requested him to recall the arrow of destruction. Daśaratha told Sani that he only wanted Sani not to come to the orbit of Rohini. Sani agreed. From that day onwards Sani has never entered the orbit of Rohini. (Padma Purana, Uttara Kanda, Chapter 23).

11) Death. Rama and Lakshmana with Sita went to live in the forest, Sumatra, who accompanied them up to the river Ganges, returned to the palace. By then Daśaratha had fallen down filled with grief. He had never recovered from that state of unconsciousness. At the time of his death Bharata and Satrukhina had been away from Kuruksetra. Daśaratha died from Lakshmana and Rama, and Lakshmana in the forest. Thus the curse he incurred in his younger days from the aged hermit, the father of Srawana, was fully realized.

12) Daśaratha appears again. Rāvana was killed in the battle. Sita was tested in fire and found sinless. Rama accepted her, seeing that her conjugal fidelity was not marred. Daśaratha, who appeared before Rama in a divine aeroplane, Daśaratha was seated in that plane clad in pure garments. He took Rama and Lakshmana into his lap and embraced them. He blessed them and Sita who was standing with folded hands. Then Daśaratha disappeared. (Vāmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kanda, Sarga 12).

Dasāratha. A king of the Yadu family. He was so famous that his descendants were called the Daśarhas. As Śrī Kṛṣṇa was born as a descendant in the line of Daśarha, Śrī Kṛṣṇa is sometimes called Daśārha, in certain places. For genealogy see under Yadava dynasty.

Dasārhi I. A woman belonging to Daśārha's family. Vijaya, the wife of Drumānu, Sudēva, the wife of Vikāntā, Subhāṅgī, the wife of Kuru, Kuni, the wife of Kuru, all these Yadava women are entitled to the name Dāśārhi. (M.B. Subhā Parva, Chapter 38).

Dasārhi II. In Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Dākṣiṇātyapātha, Chapter 38 we find that the assembly of the Yadava leaders was known by the name of Daśārha.

Daśārha. An inhabitant of the Daśārha country. This name is also used for addressing King Daśarha. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 47).

Daśārha (M). An ancient country, famous in the Purānas.

1) General information. This country had been divided into two, Eastern Daśārha and Western Daśārha. The modern Pana and the surrounding places comprised Eastern Daśārha and the places of Malva, the Western Daśārha. Some are of opinion that Daśārha comprises the South-East part of the Vindhyā mountain. It is mentioned in śrī Rāmakṛṣṇa that Vindśā was the capital of Daśārha. The modern name of Vindśā is Bhilāi.

2) Other information regarding Daśārha

(1) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Śabha Parva, Chapter 112, Stanza 25, that once Pāṇḍu brought the country of Vindśā under subjugation.

(2) At another time Bhīmaesana conquered the country of Daśārha. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 29, Stanza 3).

(3) Nakula once conquered this country. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 7).

(4) King Sudarśana ruled over the country of Daśārha. He had two daughters. Bhima, the king of Vindśā married the first one and Visravaku the king of Cedi married the second daughter. Damayanti was the daughter of Bhima. A daughter named Śunandana was born to Visravaku. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 69).

(5) Before the battle of Bharata, Hiranyavarnā was the King of Daśārha. Śukandini the daughter of Drupada went in the guise of a male and married the daughter of Hiranyavarnā. The king of Daśārha who had been deceived thus, attacked Drupada but the problem was solved because Śikandini actually became a male. (See the word Ambī). (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 41).

(6) The king of Daśārha took the side of the Kauravas in the battle of Bharata. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 12).

(7) Cīrāngada was the king of Daśārha at the time of the Śrīvadāmedha sacrifice of Yudhishtira. In Mahābhārata, Śrīvadāmedha Parva, Chapter 83, it is stated that Arjuna defeated Cīrāngada.

Daśāśva. Tenth son of Ksāvya. He ruled over the city of Mahābhārata. It is mentioned before the mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 2, Stanza 6, that Daśāśva had a son named Madhivanā.

Daśāśvamedha. A holy place situated in Kuruksetra. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 64, that those who bathe in this holy place will obtain the fruits of giving a gift of thousand cows.

Daśāśvamedhika (M). A holy place in Kuruksetra. Those who bathe here will attain Supreme Bliss. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 64).

Daśāśvara. An asura. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 14 that this asura (demon) serves Varuṇa and stays in his palace.

Daśāraka (S). Members of a Kṣatriya tribe. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 47).

Daśāraka (M). A place-name. It is by observing śrīvānsa Dvādāsi at a spot to the west of this place that a Vaisya attained mokṣa (salvation). (See under śrīvānadvāda).
DASURA. A sage. For further details see under Sarasomā.

DASĪ. An important river in India. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 31).

DASRA. The first of the gods called the Āsvindevas.

The two gods Dastra and Nāsyā are known by the collective name Āsvindevas. (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 208, Stanza 17).

DASYU. The ancient dwellers of North India. What we see in Írveda is mostly a history of the Āryans from the period of their exodus from the plateau Kumbha till they reached the banks of the Yamuna. The plateau of Kumbha is Kabul. The Dasyu were the first people the Āryans had to confront with after passing the Indus. Írveda bears testimony to the fact that the civilization of the Dasyus was far advanced than that of the Āryans. Śaṅkara, King of the Dasyus, was the ruler of hundred cities. All the cities were fortified with strong walls and fortresses, which are described as ‘āsavamayī, ‘āyālī, ‘atāholī, atāhī, ‘atāholī etc. The greatest enemies of the Āryans were the ‘Pāris’ of these cities. They were a particular class of people of these cities. In the ‘Nīrakra of Yāka’ it is mentioned that pāris were traders. Names of many of the Kings of the Dasyus occur in Írveda. Dhunī, Ĝumūrū, Pippa, Varsas, Śaṅkara and such others are the most valiant and mighty among them. The most important of the several tribes of the Dasyus were the Śūnyas, the Kikātas, Sigras and the Yakus. They are mentioned as the Āryans in the Rgveda. Dhunī, Ĝumūrū, Pippa, Varsas, Śaṅkara and such others are the most valiant and mighty among them. They possibly worshipped the Phallus, Śiva, Devi and the like.

DĖYAKACCHA. An ancient country on the bank of the river, Narmadā. (Kāthāśatrīgīrā)."}

Datta (Datta). See under Dattātreya.

Dattamitra. This is another name of Samitra the King of Samitra. Arjuna, during his conquest of the countries, defeated this King. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 188, Stanza 20).

Dātātman. A Vīvadeva. (A class of gods concerned with sacrifice to the manes). (M.B. Ānāśa Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 34).

Dattātreya. (Datta). A hermit famous in the purāṇas.

1) Birth. Anāśaya, the wife of hermit Atri gave birth to Dattātreya. But Dattātreya was the incarnation of Mahāvīra.

There is a story in Brahmānda Purāṇa how Mahāvīra came to incarnate as Dattātreya. Once there was a hermit called Anāśayadvaya (Māndavya). While the hermit was engaged in silent meditation, some robbers passed by that way. The King’s men who were chasing the robbers, came to the hermit and asked him about the robbers. The hermit did not break the silence. The King’s men, thinking the hermit to be the thief, bound his hands and legs and took him to the palace. The King ordered Māndavya to be killed by piercing his body with a trident. Accordingly a trident was posted on a hill far away and Māndavya was seated on the tip of it. Māndavya lay there in agony.

It was at this time that Śilavatī, famous for her conjugal fidelity, went to the house of a harlot, carrying her husband Ugrastravas on her shoulders. When they passed by that way Ugrastravas scolded Anāśayadvaya for getting angry at this Anāśayadvaya cursed Ugrastravas that he would get his head broken and die before the sun-rise. Śilavatī became very sorry when she heard the curse and she also cursed, “Let the sun not rise tomorrow”.

The sun did not rise next day. Everything in the world was in chaos. The devas were furious. They went to Brahmā. Brahmā took them to Śiva. They could not find a solution. So all of them approached Mahāvīra. The Trimurtis (three gods) told the devas that the problem would be solved, and the devas returned. Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Maheśvara went to Śilavatī. Before seeing Śilavatī, they went to Anāśaya, the wife of Atri and sought her help to persuade Śilavatī to recall her curse. Thus Anāśaya and the Trimurtis approached Śilavatī and spoke compassionate and consolatory words. At last Śilavatī recalled the curse. The Trimurtis convinced Śilavatī, that Ugrastravas would not die. The pleased Trimurtis asked Anāśaya to ask for any boon. She replied that she did not want any boon except that the Trimurtis should take birth as her sons. Accordingly Maheśvara took birth as Dattātreya, Śiva as Duryodhana and Brahmā as Ganda, in the womb of Anāśaya. This is how Dattātreya was born. Dattātreya did penance from his childhood and became a hermit. (Brahmānda Purāṇa, Chapters 39 to 44).

2) Kārtavyārjuna and Dattātreya. When Kārtavyārjuna became King Dattātreya had become very famous. Kārtavyārjuna wanted to obtain supernatural powers. So he called the hermit Garga and asked for his advice. Garga advised him that Dattātreya was the incarnation of Viṣṇu and that he would grant his wishes. So Kārtavyārjuna and his wife came to the river Narmadā, and taking bath in the river, began to worship Dattātreya, who was doing penance closely. Dattātreya was pleased and went to Kārtavyārjuna and asked him what his desire was. He requested for thousand hands and to be a youth for ever, and such other things. Dattātreya granted his wishes. After that Kārtavyārjuna would very often go to the hermit Dattātreya for his advice. (Brahma Purāṇa, Chapter 44).

3) Cursing Rāvana. Once Rāvana went to the hermitage of Dattātreya. The hermit had placed a watepool purified by reciting spells and incantations. Rāvana stole that watepool. When the hermit knew this, he cursed Rāvana saying, “Since the water, which was evoked by spells and incantations, has fallen on your head, Monkeys will pollute your head by treading on it.” (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa).

4) Exhortation to the Śādhyas. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 36, Stanza 4, that the hermit Dattātreya gave exhortations to the Śādhyas (the sons of Dharmadeva by his wife Śādhyā). A boon for the birth of Naḥuṣa. See Naḥuṣa.

Dattoli. A son born to hermit Pulastya by his wife Priti. This Dattoli was in his previous birth, Agastya of the Tārāvatvāma manvantara. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anuṣa 1, Chapter 10).

Dāyakrama. (Inheritance). Dāyakrama is the system by which the wealth of parents is received by their heirs. The system of inheritance as described by Manu is as follows:

1) After the death of the parents, all the children should divide their wealth among themselves. When either the father or the mother is alive, the sons should not take their wealth.

2) If the wealth is not divided, the eldest brother should keep the whole of it in his custody and maintain his brothers and sisters like a father.

3) Of the entire wealth, the eldest brother may take one-twentieth part, the second brother, one-fortieth part and the third brother, one-eightieth part and the balance is to be divided equally among all of them.

4) If there are more than three sons, the eldest and the youngest may take one-twentieth and one-eighth of the entire wealth respectively, and each of the other brothers may take one-fortieth. The rest of the property must be divided equally among all of them.

5) After dividing thus, if there are unmarried sisters, each of the brothers should give one-fourth of his share for their marriage.

6) The ornaments which the mother had received by way of her dowry etc. may be taken after her death by her unmarried daughters.

7) If, after his marriage, one of the brothers dies, the brother who keeps his movable and immovable properties must beget children by the brother’s wife and hand over the above properties to her issue. (See under Manusmriti).

DAYANĀKSETRA. A famous temple of Goddess Diana in Ephesus. In Greek mythology Diana (Dayānā) is the goddess of hunting. She is also identified with the Moon Goddess. Being a virgin goddess, she came to be worshipped by virgins who regarded her as their patron. Dayānā (Diana) is one of the beautiful daughters of the supreme God, Zeus. Her idol was worshipped in many places in Greece. There was a famous temple of this goddess in the town of Ephesus. This temple was destroyed in the 3rd Century B.C. by enemies.

DEVA (8). Gods or deities.

1) General information. From time immemorial belief in Devas has existed in every country and all religions have lauded their superior nature and power. It was the Hindu and the Buddhists who first applied the term Deva to certain very subtle beings recognised in all religions. The Parsi religion (Zarathustra) has spoken of seven Devarājans and their attendants. ‘Ameu pentas’ is the actual term used for the Devarājaj. The Christian religion refers to nine sects of Devas like Śrīfast, Kāriyāti, Dominion, Angel etc. Islam refers to four chief Devas viz. Gabriel, the presiding Deva over revelations, Michael of protection, Asriel of death and Israaf of resurrection. An important section of the Revenda is Siktaa about Deva’s like Indra, Mitra, Varuna, Agni etc. In Yajñas etc. Devas occupy a very important place. The Kenopanishad states that the conceived and haughty Devas were taught a lesson by God. The subject matter of the Kathopanishad is the advice given by Yama to Nacchita. The Murjāmantra states that the Devas, man and birds originated from God. There are references about Deva worship in the Smritis. The Purāṇas and Upaniśads contain scientific discussions, about the origin, work or functions, classes etc. of Devas. The Mantrāṣṭra and Tāntrikāṣṭra deal also about the various sects and class of Devas, their nature, and the worship to be offered to them etc.

2) Christian Devas. Satan and devils. Christian religious books commonly use the term Mâlikās for Devas. Greek mythology contains a story about the Mâlikās, who did not obey the orders of Jehovah and how He cursed them, turned them into devils and flung them into hell. And, in hell they organised a revolutionary party to fight Jehovah. Many leaders talked on the subject of how to take vengeance on Jehovah. It was near about this period that Jehovah created with the dust on earth Adam as his beloved son and settled him in the garden of Eden. God created from the ribs of Adam the woman called Eve, and they lived in Eden quite happily. Satan and other leaders in hell decided that the greatest revenge that could be taken upon Jehovah was to create troubles for his dear son, Adam, in Eden. Accordingly Satan went to Eden and made Adam and Eve eat the forbidden fruit with the result that Jehovah cursed and turned them into human beings and turned them out of Eden. Milton in his famous poem Paradise Lost has told the above story in inimitable language.

3) Indian Devas. Most of the Indian Devas are the sons of Kālyapa Prajāpati by Aditi, daughter of Daśa Prajāpati. The total number of Devas is 33 cretes. The Devas are divided into many classes or sections like Ādityas, Viśve-devatās, Vivas, Tiṣṭas, Ākāśātmanas, Aśīnas, Māhātmas, Śādhyās, Rudras, Viśvādharas, Yajñadevatas, etc. There are further divisions like Apsaras, Viśvāpsaras, Bhadras, Gandharvas, Kumbhabhedās, Rākṣasas, Nagas, Adivins, Kinnaras, Kīrtipurasas, Kīkāsas, Guhyakas, Sūbhās, Cārans, Mātras, Kīkāṇḍas, Bhūmas, Vīcīlas, etc. Yet another division is into Lokapālas, Liśikas etc. The Devas are classified with special reference to interactions like Prithvi etc. and are, therefore, referred to as Śūbdevatās, Agniśevatās, Viśvādevatās, etc. The presiding spirit of Śūbdevatā is Kubera, that of the Jañadevatas Varuna, that of the Agniśevatās, Śaivaśevatās etc. and that of the Akāśadevatas, Āgniśevatās. And, under them there are various sects of Devas in charge of different departments. Śivadas, Vivas, Ādityas, Apsaras etc. are Akāśadevatas, Manuṣyas and are referred to as Viśvādevatas, Yajñadevatas and Vīcīlas etc. are servants of Kubera. Viśvāpsaras, Bhadras etc. are Śūbdevas. Viśvāpsaras supports the earth according to the Vālmiki Purāṇa. Those who protect nidhis (treasures) may also be considered Śūbimādevas.

There are 33 bosses or presiding spirits for the 33 cretes of Devas. Daśa Ādityas (12) Āstānaśradras (11) Āstānavasus (8) and Āstānavindevas (2) are the 33 chief of Devas. Indra is the chief of all of them.

4) The term Deva. The word Deva means light and also play. Devas shine forth, they are also light. Thus the name is quite apt for them. (See Āgniśevatā).

DEVAHĀGA. A king of the Yāsū dynasty. (Bhāgavata Navama Skanda).

DEVAHAGARAKAṬASA. A rāj, the son of Śrutā and learned in yajñas. He had accurate knowledge as to which parts of the yajña-cow should be distributed to whom, and till death he did not impart this knowledge to anyone. But, sometime afterwards a non-human individual taught the subject to Girija, son of Bahuru. (Atareya Brahmaṇa).

At the time when the Śṛṇjāyas and the Kurus kings were living in amity consequent upon the daksāyaṇa yajña it was this Devabhāga who acted as the priest of both the parties. His theories on Svātrāṅgī are quoted in Tattirīya Brahmaṇa.

DEVĀVHIṬĀ: An effulgent Devatā who was the son of Rāvaṇa and father of Subhṛṣṭi. (Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 42).

DEVADĀSA: An śārya in the line of Vyasā's disciples. He was the disciple of Kabbandha, and he had many disciples. Medhā, Brahmabali, Saunāyana and Pippāda were chief among those disciples. (See genealogy of Gurus).

DEVĀDURUVANA: A holy centre. A dip in the gṛhthā here is productive of very good results. (M B. Anukāsa Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 27).

DEVĀDĀSA: A rich Vaiśya exulted muni in the Kathāsūtra. He lived in Pātañjali and had married the daughter of a very rich Vaiśya of Pupprāvardhana. After his father's death Devādāsa lost all his wealth in gambling, and his wife forsook him insensate husband and returned home.

After roaming about for some time the helpless Devādāsa decided to go to his wife's house, and one night he went there. While hiding himself there in the darkness he heard his wife telling her paramour the following:

“In the four corners of Devādāsa's house are hidden four treasures. But he does not know about the treasures hidden thus by one of his fore-fathers. I get the information from his mother. You should purchase the property for a small price.”

No sooner did Devādāsa hear the above than he hurried back to his house and dug up the treasure, and thus became wealthy again. The paramour of his wife went to him a few days later and purchased the property at a heavy price. But, when he dug up the place no treasure was found. Then he wanted to sell back the property to Devādāsa himself, but he refused to purchase it. The case was taken before the King when Devādāsa detailed the whole story. And, as ordered by the King, Devādāsa diggered his wife and wedded another wife. (Kathāśārīgara, Lāvāpakalambakam, Tarānga 5).

DEVADATTA I. A famous brahmin boy whose story is described in the Kathāśārīgara.

Devadatta was the son of the Brahmin, Haridatta of Kambakapura. Though a very young boy Devadatta learnt all the arts and sciences when he grew up to be a youth he became a very wayward fellow. Diré-play became his main job. One day in a game of dice he lost even his clothes, and being afraid of his father, he left the place without returning home.

Devadatta roamed about, and during one such trip he saw a dancing temple, and a muni called Jālapāda engaged in reciting mantras. Devadatta prostrated before the muni and told him all the details about himself. The muni accepted Devadatta as his sārya and promised to secure viṣṇyadarshānābhāsī for him. Next night Jālapāda led Devadatta to a burning ghat, nearby the temple. After conducting Pūjā in the shade of a fig tree with offerings of Pāyana and Vaiṣṇa-devabali the muni told Devadatta thus: “You should come here daily and perform pūjā like this, and pray at the close of it. ‘Oh! Viṣṇu-prabhā! I please accept my pūjā.’”

Devadatta acted according to the above advice of the muni, and one day, at the close of his pūjā the tree broke open into two and a beautiful female who appeared from it took him with her saying that her mistress wanted him. He was thus taken to a house studded with gems wherein he saw a noble lady seated on a cot. She caught Devadatta by his hands and after seating him alongside said to him: “I am Viṣṇu-prabhā, daughter of the Yaka king Ratnavarṣa. I am a virgin girl. Muni Jālapāda has worshipped me so much that I have decided to fulfill his desire. I am in love with you and you will please wed me.”

Accordingly Devadatta married Viṣṇu-prabhā and lived there with her. In due course she conceived, and Devadatta met Jālapāda and told him about the whole affair, and the muni, to achieve his personal object asked Devadatta to cut open the abdomen of Viṣṇu-prabhā and take to him the child found therein. Devadatta did not at all relish the idea. Yet reluctant to disobey his preceptor he returned to his wife. She permitted him to carry out the directions of the muni, yet his mind did not approve of the action. Then Viṣṇu-prabhā herself cut open her abdomen, took the child out of it and placing it before her husband told him thus:—“He who eats the child will become a Viṣṇyadhara. Take it. I was a Viṣṇyadhara born into a Yaksi by a curse, and to cut open my abdomen and take out the child like this was the redemption promised me from the curse, and now I go to the Viṣṇyadhara world; we shall meet there.” And she disappeared.

In great sorrow Devadatta brought the child to Jālapāda who, after sending him out on the pretext of his (Jālapāda’s) performing Bhaivrāmpā, ate up the child. Devadatta returned and when he knew of the action of his preceptor he was overcome with rage. But the latter rose up to the skies assuming the form of a Viṣṇyadhara. Devadatta made up his mind to avenge himself upon Jālapāda, and he also went to Viṣṇyadhara-loka with the help of a Vētāḷa whom he befriended by offering human flesh. And, there he saw Jālapāda drunk with pride at his Viṣṇyadharahood sitting on a throne of gems in a mansion. Meanwhile Viṣṇu-prabhā who was now once more a Viṣṇyadhara had turned down the advances made by the erstwhile Jālapāda for her love. But, at the sight of Devadatta her face flushed with love for him while, in fear, the sword fell down from the hands of Jālapāda who now fainted. Devadatta prevented the Vētāḷa from killing Jālapāda and he (Vētāḷa) at the instance of Devadatta took Jālapāda to the burning ghat and cremated him there.

Kāṭyāyanidevi at this time appeared before Devadatta and pleased with his courage appointed him as chief of the Viṣṇyadhara. He wedded Viṣṇu-prabhā and lived happily. (Kathāśārīgara, Caturdārikālamālah, Tarānga 3).

DEVADATTA II. A king of ancient India, son of King Jayadatta. Jayadatta wanted to marry his son Devadatta to the daughter of a Vaiśya in Pāṭaliputra. Though it was a far cry from Pandarpura to Jayadatta's court the Vaiṣyā married his daughter to the prince as he attached much importance to such an alliance with the King.
From the dowry given by the Vaiṣyā to his daughter the resources of her father appeared to be very meagre to Devadatta.

After some time Devadatta's wife returned to her house with the permission of her husband. During her absence Jayadatta expired, enemies attacked his kingdom and Devadatta with his kingdom went away from his kingdom.
Sometime after that he started for his wife's house. But, feeling that it would not be proper for him to personally tell his father-in-law about what had happened to him he waited outside an inn near his wife's house, and he had not waited there for long when he saw a woman descendingy a cord from the other door of the house. The felt; deeply mortified to detect that it was his wife who was thus descending. And, when she, not recognising Devadatta in his dirty clothes, asked him who he was, he answered a 'traveller'! Taking no notice of this 'traveller' she got into the inn, and Devadatta followed her. Inside the inn she was met by a man who beat her for being late to go to him; but, in spite of the beating she told how her husband had left her. Devadatta broke her in his mind, but remained there observing their love-making. In the course of their love-play an ear-ring studded with costly gems rolled down the floor from her ears, but she did not notice it. She parted from her paramour before dawn. Devadatta went to Vṛṣaparvan with the ear-ring, and there he pledged it for one lakh sovereigns with which money he collected an army and conquered back his kingdom.Тhen he redeemed the pledge and sent the ear-ring to his father-in-law. The whole incident became public.
When she realised the fact that the stranger whom she had met at the inn was her own husband, Devadatta's wife felt so deeply hurt and humiliated that her heart was broken and she died. (Karṇāṭakārā, Naravāhīdāna, Chapter 35 to 38).

DEVADATTĀ III. Father of the reputed muni Uśāthāya.
(Satyatapasya). (See Satyaratapasya.)

DEVADATTĀ (M). The divine conch of Arjuna. Maya got this conch from Varuna and he kept it in the sabhā of Vṛṣaparvan, which was in Bindusaras on Mount Mānaka to the south of Mount Kailasa. When Maya built the palace at Indraprastha for the Pāṇḍavas he took the Bindusaras and brought for Arjuna that conch called Devadattā, and a club for Bhimāsena. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 3).

In the battle of Kurukṣetra Arjuna mounted a white horse and blew his conch Devadattā. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 14).

DEVADATTĀ. Father of a king who in his previous life was an asura. (Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 25).

DEVADŪTĀ. A messenger of the Devas. When Dharmaputra refused to live in heaven without his brothers like Karna it was this Devadūta with whom Indra sent Dharmaputra to Karna and others. (M.B. Svargarohaṇa Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 14). This Devadūta is to be meditated upon at dawn and before sun-set together with Bhūtaśāna Parva, Chapter 165, Verse 14).

DEVADYUMNA. A king of the dynasty of Bharata.
From Bharata, son of Rāhuša, was born Sumati, from Sumati Devajī and from him Devadyumna was born.
Devadyumna was the grand-father of King Pratīpa and father of King Prameṣṭhi. (Bhāgavata Pañcama Skanda).

DEVADYUTI. A Rsi who dwelt in his ārama on the banks of river Sarasvati. Owing to the blessing of Visnu a son called Sumitra was born to him. As a result of his dong rigorous tapas for 1000 years he shone with a rare effulgence. Though Visnu appeared to him one day in the month of Vasālha and asked him to choose any boon he wanted, he, who was so much detached in life prayed only for devotion to God. (Padma Purāṇa, Umaṭa Khaṇḍa, Chapter 212).

DEVAGAMA. See Manvantara.
DEVAGARĪ. A Rsi. He too was present as one of the hoṭras (Priests) at the yajña conducted by Brahmā at the Pūksara temple. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi Khaṇḍa, Chapter 34).

DEVAGRAHA. An evil planet. Devagraga draśthāna (seeing this planet) will lead to insanity. (Vana Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 47).

DEVAVAHA. A sage, a member of Indra's assembly.
(Sabhā Parva, Chapter 7).

DEVAVHOTA. A maharṣi, who was an honoured member at the yajña performed by Puraṇarāśvāru.
(Sabhā Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 39).

DEVHAVRADA (M). A gītha centre on the heights of Mount Kālaśāra. A dip in its holy waters will bring the same result as the dāna (gift) of a thousand cows.
(Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 56).

DEVAVHŪTÍ. A daughter of Śvāyambhuva Manu, the son of Brahmā. The Manu had two sons called Praja-vara and Īśwāparsa and three daughters named Ākṣi, Devahūti and Pra%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%%}

DEVAVHOTI. A daughter of Śvāyambhuva Manu, the son of Brahmā. The Manu had two sons called Praya-varī and Ulāṃspā and three daughters named Ākṣi, Devahūti and Prasūti. Ākṣi was married by Rudrāprajāpati and Devahūti by Kārdama-prajāpati and Praśūti by Daksāyin-prajāpati. Kapila, the mighty exponent of the Śākhya system of philosophy and great ascetic was the son born to Kārdama by Devahūti.
Kapila taught his mother the wonderful Kapila Śāstra, (Devābhāgavata, Ārṇamkhaṇḍa) and when the teaching was over he bade farewell to her and took to forest life. And, his mother performed a yajña on the lines advised by her son, on the banks of river Sarasvati.
Because she took three baths daily her hairs became a mixture of black and blue in colour and she got enraged due to fasting. She wore the bark of trees. Devahūti, who realised all the principles and the truth became blind to all external objects like gardens, maidens manifests etc. Thus immersed in meditation she in course of time attained siddhi (realisation). The particular spot on the banks of Sarasvati where she attained Siddhi is called Siddhapada.

DEVĀHVAYA. A king in ancient India. (Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 235).

DEVAKAI. A king in ancient India. Born in the Yavātī dynasty he shone like Indra (Adi Parva, Chapter 67).
He was the brother of Ugrasena, father of Karna, and the father of Devaki, the mother of Krishna. (Sabhā Parva, Southern Text, Chapter 22).

DEVAKAI II. A king in ancient India. (Adi Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 12).

DEVAKAI III. A king, a contemporary of the Pāṇḍavas.
(Udyoga Parva, Chapter 41, Verse 17).

DEVAKI. Mother of Śri Kṛṣṇa.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Visnu thus:— Brahmā
DEVARÚTA II. A holy place. A dip in the sacred waters at this place is equal in its effects to that of an Aśvamedha yajña. Moreover the family of such persons also will prosper. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 14).

DEVALA I. A famous muni, the son of Pratyāga, one of the aśvākas. (Adi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 26). Devala muni is a character in the well-known story of Gajendramokha. (For details see Indradyumna).

DEVALA II. A muni, a very erudite scholar in the Vedas. He was the elder brother of Daśamūrya mahārāja, and was present at the sarpa-satras (serpent yajñas) of King Janaśējaya. Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa on his way from Devalā to Hāsinipura met Devala. After the great war was over he visited Yudhīśṭhira.

Devala had a daughter called Sauvācāl. In the svayānārca ceremony he held for his daughter to which sons of muni were invited she chose Śvetaketu as her husband. (Śānti Parva, Southern Text, Chapter 22).

Devala had two very intelligent and forebearing sons. (Viśu Purāṇa, Part 1, Chapter 15).

DEVALA III. A disciple of Vyāsā. Aśīta, Devala, Vaiśāmpayana, Sumanu, and Jaimini were some of the disciples of Vyāsa. (M.B. Pratāpa Skanda). Brahmayuvāтра Purāṇa contains the following story about Devala. Devala was the son born to Aśīta-muni as the result of a boon granted by Śiva. Rādhā, the heavenly dancer fell in love with him. But, Devala did not reciprocate her love. So, she cursed him to become crooked in body. When he became crooked thus he came to be called Aśīvakara. For six thousand years he did penance after which Kṛṣṇa and Rādhā appeared to him. Rādhā laughed at the uncouth form of Aśīvakara. But, Kṛṣṇa admonished her and embraced him. At once his bodily crookedness disappeared and he became very handsome. A vīra then descended from heaven, and Rādhā, Kṛṣṇa and muni together disappeared in it.

Ekaparnā, daughter of Himavān was this Devala’s wife. (Harivināta, Chapter 18).

DEVAMATA. An ancient rśi in India. Once he had a talk with Nārada about the Ātman (soul). (Adi Parva, Chapter 22).

DEVAMITRA. A reputed Yadava born in the family of Yadu, son of Vyāsā. He was the grandfather of Vasudeva and father of King Śīrśasena. (Drona Parva, Chapter 144, Verse 6).

DEVAMITRĀŚĀKALYA. Son of Māndukeya muni. A great Vedic scholar, he taught the five Sarhthiśas to his five disciples, Madgala, Gokala, Matsya, Kählīya and Sākīśraya. (See Yaṭjavālakya).

DEVANADI. A river described as existing in the assembly of Varuṇa. (Saḥbhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 19).

DEVANIKĀ. A king born in Śrī Rāma’s dynasty. (Solar). Kutsa was Śrī Rāma’s son, Aditi the son of Kusa, Nādīha the son of Aditi, Nābhas Nādīha’s son, Nyandika the son of Nabhās, Kṛṣṇadana the son —Atri—Candra — Budha — Puruśara — Ayu—Nabu — Yādā — Yadu — Sahasraśat — Saśā —Hṛīva — Dharmam — Kuši — Bhadrasena — Dhanak —Krītvaya — Kastivājan — Madhu — Vṛṣṇī—Yudhīś — Sīvya — Sāyak — Yuvadvīna—Jaya — Kuśi — Anantak — Prīni — Citrasat—Kukura — Vāhinī — Vilomā — Kapetornā — Tumburu — Dandali — Daśā — Vasu — Nāhuka—Amaka — Devaka — Devakī. Devakī had seven daughters, viz. Śrutadeva, Śantideva, Upadeva, Śrīdeva, Devakāstara, Sahadeva, and Devaki. Devaki was married to Vasudeva. The statement that Devaki and Kanva were sister and brother is not fully correct. Kanva was the son of Ugrasena, the brother of Devaka. Devaki was the grand-daughter of Devaka. Both the Purāṇa refer to Devaki as the daughter of Devaka. According to them Kanva and Devaki were children of the elder and the younger brothers respectively. According to the Agni Purāṇa Devaka was the niece of Kanva. Thus it is equally correct to say that between Kanva and Devaki there was a brother-sister relationship as also uncle-niece relationship.

2) Devaki in previous birth. Devaki in her previous birth was Aditi, the daughter of Dakṣa and wife of Kaśyapa-prajāpati. (See Aditi, Parva 3).

3) Marriage and children. Vasudeva, the Yādava married Devaki. Śrī Kṛṣṇa was their eighth child. Six sons of theirs born elder to Kṛṣṇa were killed by Kanva. (See Kanva, Parva 2). The seventh child, from the very womb itself of Devaki was passed on to the womb of Rohini, who was another wife of Vasudeva. Balabhadra was the child thus born to Rohini. The eighth child was Kṛṣṇa. (For details see Kṛṣṇa, Parva 3–8).

4) Other information relating to Devaki. (1) Many Kṣatriya kings attended the svayānārca of Devaki. (Drona Parva, Chapter 144, Verse 9).

(2) Following Kṛṣṇa’s giving up of his body and the destruction, due to mutual fights, of the Yadvas, Vasudeva, Rohini and Devaki also gave up their lives. (Bhāgavata, Ekaśīdo Skanda, Chapter 31, Verses 18, 19).

DEVAKASTRA. A king of the Yādī dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Navana Skanda).

DEVAKULĀ. Grand-daughter of Maśīra mahārāja, who lived in the Śāyāmapura Manvantara. As she washed in her previous life the holy feet of Mahāviśnu, in the next birth she was born as river Gaṅgā. (Bhāgavata, Caturtha Skanda).

DEVAKUNDAM I. (DEVARDHADAM). A sacred place. A dip in the holy waters there is productive of results equal to that of an Aśvamedha yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 20).

DEVAKUNDAM II. A particular part of Kṛṣṇāñāra river. It is known as Lītumaranī hradam also. A bath in the holy waters here will evoke memories of previous life. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 37).

DEVAKUTA I. A mountain 18,000 miles in extent and 2000 miles in height. Devakuta is on the eastern side of Mahāmeru. There is another mountain called Jathara near this mountain. (Devī Bhāgavata, Aṣṭama Skanda).

1. Devaki’s father was Vasudeva-vātransa (nāga) / Kesānām vaisvānartiḥ sūkṣma viṣṇaḥ yah / śrutāma / Prīniḥ / Devakī-vasudevānāṃ viṣṇavānāṃ sūkṣmatā yah // of Puṣṇa and Devaṇīka the son of Kṛṣṇadhanva. In the navana kāndha of Bhāgavata it is said that Devāṇīka was the grandfather of Pārīḍā and father of Rksa.

DEVAṬAKA. A Rākṣasa, the son of Rudraikutu. When the people of the three worlds could no longer stand his dead progeny Gaṇapati incutent in Kaśyapa’s house and killed Devāṇīka. (Padma Purāṇa, Sṛṣṭi Khandha).

DEVĀPA. A king born in the Yāyāti dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Navama Khandha).

DEVAṬAPA (M). A holy centre. To stay there bathing in the holy waters is as productive of results as conducting a Devasattra (Yajña). (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 45).

DEVĀPI I. A king born in the lunar dynasty.

Pratīpa had three sons named Devāpi, Santanu and Bāhlika. Santanu succeeded Pratīpa as king as his elder brother had taken to sannyāsa as a boy. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 61).

2) Devāpi reported to the forest. Devāpi was the best loved by his father and was the apple of the eyes of his subjects. But he was suffering from skin disease. So, when Pratīpa wanted to crown him king the people objected. Their argument was that God would not be pleased if a man with skin disease become king. The king yielded to their wishes and crowned Santanu as his successor. The youngest brother Bāhlika went and stayed in his mother’s house. Devāpi who was disappointed that he was denied the crown, left for the forest and spent the rest of his life in penance. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 149).

His end. Devāpi did tapas at the Prabhadaka tirtha in the interior of Kurukṣetra and ultimately attained salvation. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 37).

DEVĀPI II. A warrior who fought on the Pandava side in the great war. He hailed from Celi. Kaṇa killed him. (Karna Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 48).

DEVAPRASTHA. A city in the northern borders of ancient India. King Śeṇābindu had his capital there.
(Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Verse 13).

DEVAPRAṬA. A king of the Yāyāti dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Navama Khandha).

DEVAPRAṬIṢṬHA. The sacred rite of installation of Devas (idols). In temples for which definite rules have been laid down according to the rules Vāsudevamūrti is to be installed in the centre of the patīḍayatana. (The sṛṅkāla—the sanctum sanctuirum and the four paths used for the procession of the deity, around it). The mūcīra Vāmana, Narasimha, Hayagriva and Varāha are to be installed in the

If he dreams good dreams everything is quite right; if bad dreams are dreamt, the next morning narasimha-homa should be performed, the stone given offerings with chanting of astra mantra. The edge of the instruments used for sculpturing the idol should be first smeared with ghee, honey etc. The architect should be one who has gained mastery over the senses. He should first cut the stone into a square, and then it should be placed on a chand, covered with cloth and taken to his house. Then after performing a puja the work on the idol should be started. (Agni Purâna, Chapter 43).

DEVAŞUŚKARINI. A very ancient tirtha in India a dip in which is as efficacious as performing an Avamadha yajña. (Yana Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 45).

DEVARĀJA I. A king in ancient India who spent his days in the assembly of Yama worshipping him. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 1).

DEVARĀJA II. An immortal brahmin who had been a trader in Kairānagara. Once he met a whale at the bathing pool and got tied irretrievably tied up with her that he killed his parents and wife for her sake. Then one day he had to go to Pratighānāgaran on business where he heard sacred stories being read. He had also glanced at the drums. A month passed that he died. Though an evil fellow, because of his having worshipped Śiva for a month he had the good fortune to go to Mount Kailāsa after his death. (Śiva Purāṇa Māhātmyam).

DEVARAKITĀ. Sister of Devaki, mother of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (See Devaki).

DEVARANĪY (M). A holy centre. It was here where Ambā, daughter of the Kāl king died tapas. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 136, Verse 27).

DEVARĀTĀ I. A king who flourished in Dharma-pūtra’s assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 26).

DEVARĀTĀ II. (Śūnāśeṣha). General. A king of Mithilā. The kings of Mithilā were commonly called Janaka. Devarātā was called Devarātā Janaka. (See Janaka).

DEVARĀTĀ III. A house-holder whose daughter Kālā was married by Śrīna. Kālā was killed by Maṇḍya. Devarātā and Śrīna along with Viśvāmitra went to Śrīvali in search of Kālā. As Kālā had, at the time of her death, mentioned the word Lāra (Śrīva) she had to go to Mount Kailāsa and was spending her days in the service of Pārvati who, after making Kālā and Śrīna participate in Somavāravatara sent them back to earth. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khāṇḍa, Chapter 112).

DEVAŚAMĀM. A mountain. Here lived Agastya in his āstrama for some time. (M.B. Chapter 88, Verse 17).

DEVAŚARMA I. A very reputed monk. He had a wife called Ruci and a disciple called Vipula. (See Vipula III).

DEVAŚARMA II. A brahmin, an erudite scholar in the Vedas. His story was once told to Pārvati by Śrīva as follows: Devaśarma, the very erudite brahmin scholar in the Vedas came to be much respected by the people of the four varṇas (castes) because of his constant and unfailing performance of the various religious duties and rites like the Agnikoṭra etc. He had sons, relations and cows in abundance. But, he did not observe the śukla-panchami in Pṛṣṭhapada (Bhadrapada) which is one of the dvādāśacāndramāsā (the 12 solar months). That day was his father’s death anniversary (Śraddha day) for which he would invite brahmans on the previous evening. And, in the morning he would get cooked rice by his wife in 18 different ways for the gratification of the departed soul. Then will he feed the brahmans. On one such day he duly treated a brahmin versed in the Vedas. In the evening when he was washing his feet with water brought by his wife he heard the following conversation between a dog and an ox.

Dog: —Please attend to my words about what my daughter-in-law did. One day, as fate would have it, I went to my son’s house, where a snake was drinking milk, and I drank the whole of the milk which was left over by it. My daughter-in-law saw me drinking it and I was absolutely crest-fallen. I don’t feel any yearning even for food.

Ox: —Now dog, please attend to my sorrow and grieve. Today my son feasted the brahmans, but he did not even think of me. Nobody gave me even a blade of grass or a drop of water. I have not tasted anything today. Moreover I am a captive also. All this must be the result of some sin committed by me in my past life; no doubt about it.”

The very learned and intelligent brahmin inferred from the above talk that the dog and ox were his mother and his father respectively. He thought to himself, they have been born as animals in my house. What remedy shall I find out therefor?

On account of such painful thoughts the brahmin could not sleep in the night. Early in the morning he went to sage Vasiṣṭha and unburdened his heart to him and requested him to find a solution to the low and mean birth which had become his parents’ fate. After meditating for some time the sage told the brahmin as follows: —

“Look here, the ox was, in its previous birth, a great brahmin in Kairānagara. He did not observe the śukla-panchami on the first day of the month of Pṛṣṭhapada, the day being the death anniversary of his father. His wife had menstruation on the same day, but she herself feasted the brahmans. A woman is impure during the four days of menstruation. Because of having feasted the brahmans on the first day of her monthly period the brahmin’s wife was born as a dog. As for the husband, he was born an ox as he not only did not observe the śukla-panchami day, but also shared the sin of his wife. Further questioned by the brahmin as to what he should do for the salvation of his parents, Vasiṣṭha advised him to observe the Rāja-pancami in the month of Pṛṣṭhapada (Bhadrapada). He did so and his parents blessed him and attained salvation. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 79).

DEVAŚARMA III. (See Mitrabheda).

DEVAŚARMA IV. The hero of a story told by Viṣṇu-ārman. Viṣṇu-ārman, the intelligent preceptor, told five stories based on five tactics to educate the five dull sons of emperor Sudārśana. The fifth tactic is called asaṃprakṣyakārtvā. He told two important stories to illustrate the dangers, which would happen to those who act in haste and in anger, without patiently attempting to find out the truth. Devaśarman is the hero of one of the stories.

Story one. Once upon a time there lived in Gauḍa-a brahmin called Devasarman with his wife Yajnasena. When his wife got pregnant, Devasarman told her that a good and lucky son would be born to them to which she replied as follows:—"On no account build castles in the air and brood over things. I shall tell you a story about a danger which happened to one who built castles in the air. A brahman was carrying home in a pot on his head some rice flour. On the way he thought thus: "I will purchase a she-goat with the money I get out of the sale of this rice powder, and it will deliver two kids every year. I will sell all the kids and with the sale proceeds purchase a cow and when it multiplies I will have the wherewithal for cultivation and then I will do cultivation in a good field and produce much paddy. And when I have thus money in hand I will renovate my house and marry. We will then have a good son whom I will name Somaasaran, and if my wife, without caring for the boy, goes to milk the cow I will go to the cow shed and give her a good beating. "When his imagination reached this point the pot on his head received, without his knowing, a blow with the stick in his hand and it fell down on the ground and was broken to pieces."

Five or six days after telling the above story to her husband Yajnasena gave birth to a child. One day she went to the river to take her bath leaving the child to the care of her husband. Soon after a messenger came from the palace to invite Devasarman for food, the day being Amavasai when Brahmins were fed well and also given daksina (a gift of money). He could not wait till his wife arrived; the child became a problem to him. The brahmin had a beloved Mongoose. After entrusting the child to the care of it the brahmin went to the palace. Within a short time a serpent was seen crawling towards the child and the Mongoose attacked it and bit it into pieces. Naturally the Mongoose got itself unscared all over with the blood of the serpent, and the brahmin returning home finding the Mongoose bloody in blood thought it might have eaten the child and in a rage he killed the poor Mongoose. But, when he entered the room and found pieces of the killed serpent scattered all over there truth and light dawned on him. Yajnasena, who had returned after bath by now also found fault with him. The next time there was a brahmin in very indigent circumstances. He was an orphan from his very childhood. One day while he was asleep quite weary and tired as he had not food that day some one appeared and told him in a dream that three sannyasins would come to his house that night and if he came to death they would turn into three pot-fulls of treasure with which he could live comfortably well. His dream came true, and he hacked up the treasure in his room after sending away a barber who had witnessed the incident with a piece of gold. The barber returned home cherishing in his mind the false belief that sannyasins beaten to death would turn into pot-fulls of treasure. And, one day some sannyasins came to his house and he began beating them and they ran out crying aloud. Their cries attracted the attention of the servants of the King. The barber’s limbs were cut off and he was killed on Sula (a three-pronged weapon).

DEVASARMA V. A brahmin, who used to perform rites for the dead at the confluence of the sea every fortnight. On every such occasion souls of the departed used to appear and bless him. Once Devasarman went to Pratika with his pupils, and he got restless and sorry to finding other pupils living there in greater comfort than the pupils of his parents. When he was told that the better fate of the other pupils was due to their sons performing Sraddhas at Mahasagaragiri, he returned to earth and with the help of other people did Sraddhas at the sangamam and thus raised the condition of his pupils. (Skanda Purana. Skandadasa 1, 2, and 9).

DEVASARMA VI. A brahmin, who lived on the northern side of river Kaveri. The following story about him is told in chapters 2, 4 and 12 of the Skanda Purana.

One day in the month of Kartika he asked his son to bathe. The son refused to obey his father, who got angry at the disobedience of the son and cursed him to be turned into a rat. But, when the son begged his pardon he said that the boy would resume his old form when he heard about the greatness of Kartika. While the brahmin thus turned into rat, was roaming about in the forest it saw Viashimitra maharshi seated under a tree with his disciples. The maharshi was telling them principles about the greatness of Kartika. The brahmin boy—turned cat—heard the story and reverted to its old form as the brahmin boy.

DEVASARMA VII. See Mithya Siva.

DEVA SATTARA (M). A yajna. (See Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 68).

DEVASENA I. A very intelligent king who ruled his country with Srasasti as his capital. (See Udmadini).

DEVASENA II. Husband of Kirtinadh, (See Kirtinadh).

DEVASENA. Daksara daughter and wife of Subrahmanyaya and a woman of rare beauty and purity. Daityasena and Devase, daughters of Daksara, used to enjoy themselves at Avasa saras. One day Kesi, the asura saw them and coveted for their love. Daityasena agreed to become his wife, but Devase refused, and she prayed that the asura should be turned into a certain animal at a certain place. The asura was转变 the Subrahmanyaya into a horse at a certain place. Indra and Kesi fought with each other. Kesi used the club against Indra, who broke it into two with his vajrayudha. Then Kesi hurled a mountain at Indra, who cut it also. Frightened to death Kesi then ran away with Daityasena to safety and Devase expressed her desire to Indra to have one who could defeat the Devas. Dhanava and Yaksas as her husband. But, Indra could not find such a one in the whole universe. Indra told Brahman about it. The Devas put their heads together and brought forth Subrahmanyaya from Siva to be her husband. In the war between the Devas and the asuras Devase helped Subrahmanyaya and the asuras were completely destroyed. (Vana Parva, Chapters 223, 224).

DEVASILAM. See Gayathri.

DEVASMITA. A gem of a woman who was much devoted to her husband. The story of Devasmita has been so often quoted in ancient Indian literature. She was the daughter of a Vaishya called Dharmagupta and was married to Guhasena, son of a Vaishya called Dhanadatta, who belonged to Trilokanatha.

After the death of his father Guhasena decided to go to Kaushadhipya for trade, and Devasmita, a very suspicious wife, objected to it. When his other relations began pressing him to go to the dvipa for trade and his wife not to go, Guhasena could not take a decision on the matter. He began a penance so that God might take the decision in the matter. Devasmitā also followed him. Then God appeared to them in their dreams and gave them a red lotus flower saying, “both of you keep one flower each with you, and while both of you are away from each other if either of you go astray the lotus flower in the hands of the other person will fade.” And, on awaking both of them had a flower in their hands. Guhasena with his flower in his hands started for Kāśikādvipa, and Devasmitā stayed at home with her eyes fixed on her lotus flower. Guhasena reached the dvipa and traded in gems. Everybody was surprised to find in his hands a lotus flower which never faded. Four Vaiśya youths wanted to understand the secret of it and one day they invited Guhasena to their house and treated him to liquor very liberally. When he got absolutely drunk they questioned him about the secret of the lotus flower, and he, though in indistinct words, explained it to them. When the secret was thus out all the four youths decided to seduce his wife. They extracted from him the information that he was not returning in the near future, and they then came to Tāmralipti.

At that time there lived in Tāmralipti a bogus Sannyāsī (a female ascetic) called Yogacakrādikī. The four youths from Kāśikādvipa visited her, and she undertook to fulfill their desire. She asked them to halt at her house and then went to Devasmitā with some refreshments.

Devasmita’s bitch barked very violently at the bogus ascetic when she told the former thus: “Child, don’t you see the bitch barking at my very sight. The bitch is crying thinking of her previous birth at my sight. Herself the bitch and her three [male] offspring are all the sons of a Brahmin. Since one husband was a courtier at the palace often he was away from home and in his absence I used to satisfy the cravings of sex by associating freely with other males. I had even at that time realized the truth that there was no duty higher than satisfying the senses, and so I am now reborn with memories of the past life as his bitch in her past life as co-wife with me of the Brahmin. I mourned against her sense-organs by upholding, in ignorance, her chastity, as a punishment for which she was born as dog in this life. Yet, she remembers her past.

Though Devasmita saw through the false and treacherous heart of the bogus ascetic, without expressing it she talked in all respect with her. Believing that she had succeeded in her mission she told Devasmita about the four youths who had come from Kāśikādvipa, and Devasmitā welcomed the idea very gladly. Devasmitā got some liquor and mixed poison in it. When it was night one of the Vaiśya youths came, and after rendering him unconscious by administering the poisoned liquor to him Devasmitā stripped him of all his clothes and ornaments, got him scratched on the brows by the bitch and threw him into a cow dung heap. Before it was dawn next day he returned to the ascetic’s house, took a bath and dressed himself up in decent clothing. His other three companions also visited Devasmita one after the other in the next three days, and they too underwent the same experience as the first. After this God sent a dream: she was to go down and Devasmita cut her limbs and ten: her away. And, after this Devasmitā put on the garb of a merchant and went to Kāśikādvipa and identified her husband from among a thousand merchants. Guhasena too felt his own doubts about her identity. But, without revealing her identity she saw the king and told him that she had certain matters to submit before the prajāpati (popular assembly). The King accordingly convened a session of the assembly and Devasmitā identified the four youths who had tried to seduce her and submitted all details regarding the episode. The King then gave her a lot of money, appointed the four youths as her servants and sent her back home with Guhasena. (Kāshāyana, Kāshyapa, Bhūrī, and Devasrūta, and one daughter, Kirtī. (Devibhaṅgavata, Prathama Skandha).)

DEVASVARAŚI. A king of the Yavāti dynasty. (Bhūgavata, Navama Skandha).

DEVASVARAS II. A king born in Vaiśvāmitra’s family. He was a māntri of the Kūṣta gotra (Sānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 5).

DEVASRUTA. A son of Sukra. Sukra, the son of Vṛśva married Pīrati, the daughter of the Pītā, and to them were born four sons, Kṛṣṇa, Gauraprabhā, Bhūrī and Devasrūta, and one daughter, Kirtī. (Devibhāgavat, Pratham Skandha).

DEVASTHĀNA. General. A maharśi, who was a friend of the Pāṇḍavas. Other information. (1) After the great war was over this muni visited Dharmapura and induced him to perform yajna. (2) Along with some other munis he gave spiritual advice to Dharmaputra and comforted him. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 27).

(3) He was one of the munis, who visited Bhiṣma on his bed of arrows. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 5).

DEVASAURUYDDHA. Wars between the gods and asuras. Altogether twelve wars were fought between the Devas and the Asuras. Vāsishtha and Bhiṣma were killed by Narasimha. Vāsishtha took Mahabati captive after measuring the three worlds in one stride. Hiranyāka was killed in fighting in the sea by Vāsishtha with its tusks. Pārshuwasu and the Tārakāyana war also killed his son Virocana who had planned to kill him (Indra). As the Devas could not kill the dānavas of Tripura, Tribocana killed them. Vytra who was aided by the dānavas was killed by Indra with the help of Vaiśu. Indra himself killed Vipracitti and his followers who became invisible by māyā after the felling of the dhvaja (flag staff), and in the course of celebrating their victory the Devas defeat the Saṅgāmavārikas at the yājñāvāhārīna (Bathing at the close of the yājñā). Thus were waged twelve wars between the Devas and the Asuras. (Padma Purāṇa, Part 4, Chapter 13).

DEVASVĀMI. A Brahmin. (See Vararuci).

DEVATITHI. A king born in the Pūru dynasty. Akrodha was his father and Karambhā, daughter of the king of Kalinga, his mother. (Adi Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 22). Devatithi had wedded Maryāda, daughter of the King of Videha. (Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 23).

DEVAVĀHA. A king of the Yavāti dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).

DEVAVANAM. A sacred place. The rivers Bāhuḍa and Nandā flow along this place. (Vana Parva, Chapter 87, Verse 29).

DEVAVARNINI. Daughter of Bharadvāja maharśī. Muni Viśravas married her and to them were born a son called Kubera. (See Kubera).

DEVAVATI I. Daughter of the Gandharva called Manimayaa. Suketa, the Rakṣasa married Devavati, and three sons Mālavā, Sūmāli and Māli were born to them who lived as dependants of Rāvaṇa. (Uttara Ramāyana).

DEVAVATI II. Sītā, wife of Rāma was Devavati in her previous birth. (See Sītā for information for Devavati's environment).

DEVAVATI III. Daughter of the dāitya called Mandrārāmāli. (See Viśvakarman, Para 2).

DEVAVATI. Daughter-in-law of king Agnīdhra. Purvavāci, the apsarā woman was the king's wife and they had nine sons called Nābhi, Kṣīrprāra, Harī, Ilāvṛta, Ramuka, Hirājāra, Kuru, Bhradāsava and Kucumāla. and these sons married the following daughters of Merv, viz. Menēvati, Pratirūpa, Ugradvadā, Lāmā, Ramā, Sīyā, Nāri, Bhradē and Devavati. Thus Devavati became the wife of Kucumāla. (Bhagavata, Pañcama Skandha).

DEVAVATI A. Bhāma (See Bhāma for details).

DEVAVATI B. A brahmin who believed in yajñas. He once came to devavati without due regard and with indifference to the time and water given to him by a devayer of Kṛṣṇa after worship of the Lord, as a result of which, in the next birth, he was born as a bamboo stem. And, as he did, consciously or otherwise some good deeds Śrī Kṛṣṇa made a flute out of that bamboo stem, and Devavata thus attained redemption. (Padma Purāṇa, Pāṇḍa Khandha, Chapter 78).

DEVAVATI A. Woman who fought against the Pāṇḍavas in the Kuruksetra war (Karna Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 3).

DEVĀVRDHAA I. A king who, along with his subjects attained heaven as he had made a gift of a golden umbrella. (Satā Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 21).

DEVAYAṆA. The place called Prayāga which is considered to be the nāḍī nāḍī centre of the Devas. Abhā, daughter of the King of Kālī did rigorous tapas here. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 186, Verse 27).

DEVAYAKI. A warrior of Subrahmanyas. (Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 7).

DEVAYANI. Sukrācārya's daughter.

1) Birth. Śvayambhumana, son of Brahmad had two sons: Prīyavatara and Utānāpsā. Prīyavatara wedded Suripā and Barhismat, two very beautiful daughters of Viśvākarmaprajapati, and he had by Suripā ten sons called Agnīdhra, Idhamajāva, Yajūsha, Mahāvīra, Rukmaṣṭha, Guḍrasthi, Kāsvana, Medhāti, Vithotra and Kavi as also a daughter called Īrjavati who was the youngest of the whole lot. Of the above ten sons Kavi, Kavana and Mahāvīra were spiritual giants and great sages. Utama, Tāpasa and Kālīvata, the three sons of Prīyavatara by his second wife Barhismat turned out to be manvantaraḥhipatis. Īrjavatī, the only daughter of Prīyavatara was married to Sukrācārya, preceptor of the asuras. Devayāni was Sukrācārya's daughter by Īrjavatī. (Deviḥgavata, Astama Skandha).

2) Court of Kaka. Kaka, son of Bhṛṣatpati became Sukrācārya's disciple to learn Mrtaśatvāni vidyā (the science to ward off death for ever). Devayāni fell madly in love with Kaka. But, after his studies under his father were over Kaka returned to devakota without marrying Devayāni, who cursed that Kaka's learning should prove useless. And, Kaka cursed her in return that nobody from devakota should marry her. (For details see Kaka).

3) Devayāni in a neglected well. Once Viṣṇupavarn was the king of the asuras, and Sukrācārya lived in his palace. Sarmāsthā, the daughter of the king and Devayāni, the daughter of Sukrācārya became thick friends. While one day these two friends with their companions were engaged in water sports Indra assumed the form of an air and blew off the dresses of the damsels from the shore while they were playing in the river. The damsels hurriedly got out of water, ran after the flying garments and put on whatever came to their hands. In the confusion what Sarmāsthā got and wore was Devayāni's clothes. Devayāni ran after Sarmāsthā and caught hold of the clothes, but the latter did not yield them to her. Both of them indulged in hot words against each other, Sarmāsthā calling Sukrācārya a beggar living in her father's palace for his food. Not only that, she pushed Devayāni into a neglected well and went away.

At that time prince Yāyati, son of Nāla, was hunting in that forest. Feeling thirsty he came to the well for a drink and thereon saw Devayāni in tears. He brought her out from the well and leaving her there went on his way.

Sukrācārya and his wife actually got anxious and upset that their daughter had not returned even after the lapse of so much time and deputed their servant Guraaka to seek for Devayāni. (Krishna Parva, Chapter 2).

At that time, Devayāni refused to return home as she did not want to continue as the daughter of one who lived on the charity of Sarmāsthā and her father. Gurakā carried back this news to Sukrācārya, who then went himself to the forest and met his daughter. He felt deeply wounded to hear about the insults heaped on his daughter by Sarmāsthā, and sent word to Viṣṇupavarn that they were going to retire from the palace. Viṣṇupavarn realised that if Sukrācārya quarrelled with him the whole asura world would also become divided. He, therefore, tried his best to pacify the ācārya and his daughter. At last Devayāni agreed to return to the palace in case Sarmāsthā went to her with one thousand of her maids to serve as her (Devayāni's) maids. Viṣṇupavarn acted accordingly and Devayāni was satisfied and returned to the palace with her father. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 78 onwards).

4) Wedding of Devayāni. Some time afterwards when Devayāni was on a visit in the forest with Sarmāsthā and others, King Yāyati happened to pass that way. They recognised each other and Devayāni requested Yāyati to marry her as she had mentally chosen him as her husband on the very same day on which he had saved her from the well.

Yāyati realised only too well that it was really dangerous to marry the daughter of Sukrācārya in the forest secretly and he, therefore, rejected Devayāni's request. But, she got down her father there and with his permission Yāyati married her. He also got much wealth by way of dowry. Sarmāsthā and her maids accompanied Devayāni, but Sukrācārya warned Yāyati that on no account should he touch Sarmāsthā. With his wife and her attendants Yāyati returned to his palace; but he put Sarmāsthā and her maids in a place newly built for the purpose. Devayâni delivered a child in due course and it was named Yadu. Sarasvâti one day met Yadu in the forest and requested for a child by him. Though at first he was reluctant to oblige remembering only too well the injunction of Sukrâcarya, he at last succumbed to the eloquence of Sarasvâti. She got pregnant by him and the child she delivered was called Devayâni.

Devayâni was alarmed at the birth of a child to Sarasvâti, who was unmarried, and questioned her about it. Sarasvâti’s answer that a brahman stranger, who came that way, was the father of her child satisfied Devayâni.

Ever long another son, Turvasu, was born to Devayâni, and Sarasvâti too delivered two children called Anudhyanu and Pûru. Thus the mistress (Devayâni) had two sons and her servant, Sarasvâti three sons.

While Yadu and Devayâni were one day strolling in the garden the sons of Sarasvâti came there. She noticed the close resemblance of those boys to her husband (Yadu) and it kindled her wrath. Though Yadu did not, because of the presence of Devayâni, notice the sons of Sarasvâti when she asked them who their father was, they answered “Yadu,” whereasupon in great rage she ran up to her father. Yadu too followed her. Devayâni told her father about the infidelity of Yadu and he (Sukra) cursed that Yadu be afflicted with old age. When Yadu asked for remission from the curse Sukrâcarya told him that he could exchange his old age for the youth of somebody else. Yadu then called together all his five sons and asked them whether anyone of them was prepared to exchange his (son’s) youth for his (Yadu’s) old age for one thousand years. The three elder sons refused to agree to the proposal, but the fourth son Pûru gladly exchanged his youth with his father’s old age. After spending his life in youthful enjoyment for one thousand years, Yadu retired his youth to Pûru, and Pûru assumed Kingship of the country. (Ædi Purva, Chapters 81–83).

5) Synonym for Devayâni. Aunâsini, Sukratâmanâya and Bhâgavi.

DEVI. (Mahââvâyā). Though Devi is without a beginning it is told how she became first visible to living beings.

1) Beginning: While Mahââvâyâ was resting on a fig leaf in the assumed form of a child he began thinking as to who he was, who created him and how he should act. And then a celestial voice announced as follows:

Sarvam khalvidesevaham
Nânyaâastasi sâtanamah.

(All that is, I am. There is nothing eternal but me.).

This declaration astonished Visnu, but he could not understand who made it. While he was meditating upon it, Devi appeared to him in the following manner. Devi held in her four sacred hands weapons like the cowl, the disc, the club and the lotus flower and was clad in divine clothes and wore divine ornaments and was attended upon by powers like Râti (the erotic), Bhûti (riches and prosperity), Buddha (intelligence), Mati (intellect), Kirti (reputation), Dhrti (understanding etc) and Smrî (ability to remember); Srâddhâ (attention, concentration); Medhâ (intellect); Svadha, Svahâ, Kshudhâ (thirst); Nidrâ (sleep); Dayâ (compassion); Gati, (momentum); Tuṣî (pleasure, happiness) Puṣî (growth, progress), Ksânâ (patience, forbearance), Lâjâ (sense of shame), Jhumbhâ and Tandrâ (laziness).

And, the Devi spoke to Mahââvâyâ as follows:—After all, what is there to be wondered at. Whenever the world faced the phenomenon of Śrîmatbhilaya (creation, existence and absorption into the primordial force) you too have come up due to the power of Mahââvâyâ. As for Parâkâti (the ultimate, universal force) it is above and beyond all attributes. We, all of us, possess attributes. From the nātuhi (navel) of yourself in whom jagat (gentle attributes) predominates will be born Brahman in whom jagat (active attributes) will predominate, and from the centre of his brows will be born Rudra with tamgâ (black, destructive attributes). Brahman, by the force of his tapas will earn powers of creation and will with his jagat create the world blood-red in colour, and you will be the sustainer and guardian of that world. This very same world will be annihilated by Rudra at the end of the Kalpa era. You please do know that I am the sãtvit force which depend on you for the purpose of creation. All creations of worlds have been made according to the suggestions of Devi.

2) Origin of Devi. Once King Janamejaya questioned Visnu about the birth of Devi to which he replied as follows:

Even Brahmâvâyuvaheavâras (Brahman, Visnu and Siva—the Hindu trinity) are not capable of thinking about the origin of Devi. Then, what about me? Yet let me make an attempt. All the forces—everything which appear in various natures and forms are in fact Devi herself, her different manifestations. Just as a master actor appears on the stage in different roles for the delectation of the audience the formless Devi, on behalf of the Devas, assumes many forms and imposes upon herself attributes though in fact she is without any attribute whatsoever. Thus, depending on her various forms, actions etc. she is addressed by different names.

(Devi Bhâgavata, Pradhama Skanda).

3) Five forms of Devi. We distinguish nature (Mala-paktri) incarnated or manifested in the form of Visnu the desire for creation raised its head in him. And, at once the Devi—female—aspects in Visnu manifested in five forms like Durgâ, Lakṣâmi, Sarasvâti, Sâvitrî and Kûdâ. These five forms are designated as the Pañcadevis. Brief notes on the five Devi’s are given below.

(1) Durgâdevi. Mother of Gâpera bhagavân. (God with the elephant’s head). She is the consort of Siva. Nââryâni, the Viśnumâya, is none else than Durgâ. She is also pure Brahma, the one and the only one with no second to it. She is worshipped by Devas like Brahma and by sages and mabharas. She is the basis, the root and root cause of everything. She is eternal, upholder of dharma, the creator of all and the giver and promoter of happiness, reputation, welfare, salvation etc. as also of sorrow, grief, pain etc. She takes great pleasure in removing the worries and sorrows of devotees who seek refuge in her. She is all-power, achievements and assets personified. All imaginable permutations and combinations of every attribute comprise in her and she it is who activates the universal soul.

2) Lakṣmi. This Devi is the most sublime form of the universal soul, nay, the universal soul itself. She is all wealth and riches personified, and she is the very seat of beauty, compassion, welfare, peace, all goodness etc. Evil traits like anger, avarice, haughtiness etc. are miles away from her. She is all sympathy and kindness towards her devotees. In Vaikuṇṭha, as Mahākāśi she is ever engaged in the service of her husband, Viṣṇu. In heaven she is the very glory of it. In houses she appears as the welfare and prosperity of the inmates. She is in fact beauty itself and is the essence of beauty everywhere. She is all-merciful, and worshipped by all.

3) Sarasvatī. She is very nice and four-footed head of and the presiding deity of the word, intellect, knowledge, the arts etc. She also is of the form of the universal soul and liberally grants intellect, poetical skill, reason and logic, understanding capacity etc. to her devotees. The finest music with all its beauties originates from her. Yes, she is the goddess of all learning, fine arts and every branch of knowledge. Like the ice-piece, the jasmine flower etc. she is beautiful in her white lover. She recited the holy names of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. She is of the form of tapas and blessed those who perform it. In fact, she it is who grants all gifts and powers of understanding. She is the goddess of language and learning (Vaiṣṇavī) and without her human beings would lose their capacity to speak.

4) Sākārāntā. She is mother of the four varṇas (castes, classes) Vedānta, the tantric science etc. She is of the form of Japa (chanting of holy names and mantras), tapas, the effulgence of Brahma, the very essence of truth and existence and supreme bliss. She is eternal and grants salvation. She forms the very basis and pith and core of the glowing presence of the universal soul. This world is pure, and has been purified by the touch of the sacred feet of this Devi.

5) Kāḥākārti. Kāḥākārti is fifth of the pañca prakṛtis is the presiding deity over the five prāṇas and she is of the form of those prāṇas. She is exceptionally beautiful endowed with all fortunes and happiness, sublime and serious, and the consort of Śrī Kṛṣṇa and as eternal and equally endowed with divine attributes as the lord. She is formless also, above and beyond attributes, unattached and detached, and not visible even to the great Devas and munis by the naked eye. Her clothes even Agni would not burn. She was born, in Vārāhā Kālpa as the daughter of Viṣṇu-bhānu, and because her sacred feet trod over this land, Bhārata (India) became holy. Once Brahmā did tapas for 60,000 years to have a glimpse of the Devi's lotus feet, but could not. People were able to see her only after she, in unbounded compassion for the world, incarnated herself in Vṛndāvana (See Prakṛti).

6) Aṣṭaṇgaḥ. —Partial manifestations of Devi. The above discussion was concerned with the five forms of the Devi in her full and complete forms. Now, there are six other Devi, who are partial manifestations or born from certain parts of the Devi.

1) Gaṅgādevī. This Devi who flows in the form of water and washes off men's sins takes her origin from the body of Mahāvīru. (There is another story which traces Gaṅga's origin to the Ādā (egg or seed) of Brahmā). (See Gaṅga)

2) Tulārā. She is the lover and also the servant at the feet of Viṣṇu. She also washes off men's sins and promotes their welfare. (See Tulārā)

3) Manāsadevi. Manāsadevi, who was born as a daughter of Kusumā is another partial incarnation of Mahāmāyā. She is a great tapasvīni, a favourite disciple of Śaṅkara, unique in learning and erudition, sister of Ananta (the king of Serpents), the presiding deity of Mantras, wife of Jārākṣaṇa muni and mother of Āśṭika muni. (See Manāsadevi).

4) Devasevaṇā. Since this Devi has been born out of a sixth part of Mahāmāyā she is called Saṅkṣetadevi also. It is this Devi, who gives children to living beings and also protects them. For one year from the birth of a child this Devi should be worshipped. Those who cannot afford it should worship Devi on the 6th or 21st day after a child is born. (See Devasevaṇā)

5) Mahāgalacakṣamā. She is born from the face of Maṇiprakāśa. Anybody who propitiates and pleases her will be the recipient of all good things like sons and grandsons, wealth, reputation, welfare etc. (See Mahāgalacakṣamā)

6) Bhūmidevi. She is the basis for all things, soil for the origin of the vegetable kingdom, the treasure house of all gems and the very incarnation of compassion and sympathy. (See Bhūmidevi)

7) Aṣṭavāṃśikā. Another class of devīs who are also partial manifestations of the Supreme Devi. They are born out of the parts of Mahādevī. The following are the Aṣṭavāṃśikās.

1) Saṅkṣetadevi. Consort of Agni Bhagavān (Fire God). Śvāhā is worshipped in all the worlds. If havis (oblation) is offered without repeating her name the Deva will not accept it.

2) Daksinādevī. Wife of Viṣṇu, this Devi is worshipped by all. Without this Devi all Karman (actions) in the world will become futile.

3) Dīkṣitadevi. Wife of Yājñadeva, this Devi is worshipped by all.

Dīkṣitadevi, a virtual jñānam.
Kriyāte karṇavāsān / Tena dīkṣetī sa proktā.
The Devi grants pure knowledge.

4) Svāhādevī. Wife of the Pitṛs, worshipped by manes and men. Offerings made to the Pitṛs without honouring this Devi will prove to be futile.

5) Svāhādevi. Consort of the Vāyu. When offering Daksinā and making dīyā-dāna (divine gifts) if 'Svāhā' (may good happen) is not uttered the gifts will be of no use.

6) Purvakāśa. Wife of Gaṇapati. If this Devi ceased to exist men and women would become infertile, because she is the source of all strength.

7) Tūṣṭadevi. Consort of Ananta worshipped by everybody. If the Devi ceased to exist there would be no happiness in the world.

8) Sampatikā devī. Wife of Śiva. Worshipped by Devas and men. If the Devi ceased to exist the whole world would become poor and indigent.

9) Dīṣṭi. Consort of Kapiladevi Everybody worships her all the time. If the Devi ceased to exist the whole world would become timid and cowardly.

(10) Satidévi. Wife of Satya. Well-wisher of all, this Devi is worshipped by muktas. (people released from worldly attachments). If the Devi ceased to exist there would be no friendship and unity among people.

(11) Dajjádevi. Wife of Mahá. If the Devi ceased to exist the world would become hellish and a fierce battle field.

(12) Pritýádevi. Wife of Pritýa. In the absence of this Devi, who grants good and happy results to people's actions the whole world would become as though it were dead.

(13) Sundhádevi.

(14) Bhujádevi. Both the Devis, Siddhá and Kírti are wives of Súkarmá. If they ceased to exist the whole world would be bereft of reputation and become lifeless like a dead body.

(15) Kripádevi. Wife of Udyogá. If she ceased to exist the whole world would become inactive and cease to function.

(16) Miládevi. Wife of Adharma. Wayward and characterless people worship this Devi. If the Devi ceased to exist the whole world as evolved by Brahmá would cease to exist. This Devi was not seen anywhere in the world during Kriáya. She began to appear in a subtle form here and there during Tretáyuga. In dvaráparáyuga she attained more growth and then her limbs and organs became doubly strong. In Kaliyuga she developed to her full stature and growth and goes about everywhere with her brother, Cheet (Kapáta).

(17) Sántudévi. (see below).

(18) Lajádevi. Both the Devis, Sánti and Lajá are good-natured wives. If they ceased to exist the world would become dull and sleepless.

(19-20-21) Buddhádevi, Medhádevi and Bhúta-devi. These three Devis are wives of Jhána. If they ceased to exist the world would become steeped in ignorance and foolishness.

(22) Márta. Wife of Dharma. She is very beautiful and effulgent. In her absence the universal soul would become devoid of vitality, helpless and meaningless.

(23) Sáridévi. Wife of Mál. Her absence will make the world lifeless.

(24) Nidrátévi. Wife of Kálágni. The Devi, a sage who has attained realization, affects everybody in the world during night and makes them lose consciousness and plunges them in sleep. In the absence of this Devi the world will become a lunatic asylum.

(25-26-27) Rákó, Sáchir and Dígrad. These three are the wives of Time (Kála). In their absence nobody would have any sense of time and none would be able to calculate and fix time.

(28-29) Viáppu and Dáham. Viáppu = hunger, Dáham = thirst. These two Devis are the wives of greed (Lobha). They go about the world affecting people and thus making them worried and miserable.

(30-31) Prabhádevi and Dóhákádevi are the wives of Tejas (Vitality). Without them, Ifára will find it impossible to continue the function of creation.

(32-33) Móra and Ján are the consorts of Prakrétajyára and daughters of Kála. And, if they cease to exist, Brahmá's creation would also cease. (For Brahmá's creation individual souls with the will for action are necessary. He cannot create a soul of his own. So death is a pre-condition of creation, birth. If there is no death there is no birth also. There is a school of thought which maintains that if there is no death but only birth there will not be space on earth for the living, and therefore birth will stop if there is no death.).

(34-35) Támbá and Práti are the daughters of Nídrá and consorts of Suká (pleasure, happiness). These Devis go around the world on the shoulders of Brahmá.

(36-37) Sáchirá and Bhadá are the consorts of Vairágya (aversion to worldly comforts, renunciation) and they give salvation to the souls of the people in the world.

Adithi, mother of the Devás, Diti, mother of the Asuras, Surabhi, mother of cows, Kádrá, mother of serpents and Vanáti, mother of Garuda are also involved in the process of creation, and they are born out of parts of Devi.

6) Idol of Devi. There are special injunctions for making idols of the Devi for installation in temples. Cañdikádevi should have twenty hands. The hands on the right side should hold Súla, sword, disc, cord, damaru, sáti and the hands on the left side should hold nágapá, flag, club, mirror etc. (There are also idols with slight differences from the above). Laksmi-devi would hold in her right hand the lotus flower and a Kávaka fruit in the left. Sarasvatí-devi will have in her hands books, áksamalá and vinyá. Gañádevi rides on a makaramatysa (fish) holding in her hands a pot and lotus flowers. Yamuka-devi rides the turtle with a pot in hand and she is blue in colour.

Now, about the saptakáli, the Devi Brahmá in colour, and mounted on an ox rests on a súla with vinyá in hand before the Mátra. Among the Mátras Brahmá has four faces, wears the áksamalá and holds the akháptastra in her left hand. She is seated on a swan. Sánkari (Máhevyári) is white in colour. She has in her right hand bow and arrows, and the disc and bow in her left hand. The ox is her vehicle. Kaumári is seated on the peacock. She has two hands in one of which is held Sakti (Vela). Laksmi has in her right hand the conch and disc, and the club and the lotus flower in her left hand. Váráhi rides the buffalo with staff, sword, club and conch in her hands. Indra is seated on the club, holding diamond in her hands. She has a thousand eyes. Cánmunda has three eyes and is without feet in the body. Her hair are raised above. She holds in her left hand elephant's skin and súla in the right hand. At times she is seated on a corpse also.

Now, about the idols of the eight. Ímáni, Rudra Cárca holds a skull, Súla and cord in her hands. She wears elephant's skin, her legs slightly held up. She becomes Ruderácumáyá when she assumes eight hands, and holds the skull and the damaru. And in dancing pose she is called Náte-vará, and with four faces Mahá-akami. She is called Siddhácumáyá when she assumes the form with ten hands and three eyes, and when she eats men, horses and buffaloes. In this form she holds in her right hand the sword, damaru etc. and in her left hand the Tríála, bell etc. Since the Devi is sarva-siddhipradsítká (giver of all divine attainments or assets) she is Siddháyogetvari also. There is also another Devi in this very form who holds the pála and Anikú in her hand and who is slightly red in colour. She is called Bhairávi. When Bhairávi assumes the form with twelve hands she is called Rúpavídayá. All the above eight Devis were born in burial grounds and are Raudrānātris. They are known as the Aṣṭamās.

DEVĪBHĀGAVATA. The Śaivas venerate this book as one of the eighteen Purāṇas. But according to the Vaiśnavaśīkās, this is an authoritative book of a lofter level than the eighteen Purāṇas. (See under Purāṇa).

DEVĪ KĀ. (VEDĪKA). Daughter of Govinda, the Saibya Kisy. She was wedded by Yudhiṣṭhira in Swayan-varta, and to them were born a son called Yaudheyas.
(Adi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 76).

DEVĪPIṬHA. The dead body of Satīdevi crumbled into small pieces and fell in different places in Bharata. Each place where a piece of the dead body fell, is known by the name Devīpiṭha. There is a reason why the dead body crumbled into pieces.

Dakṣa performed a sacrifice to which Śiva was not invited and Šatidevi came to the sacrifice, and committed suicide by jumping into the fire. Šiva who became furious at Dakṣa and carrying the dead body of his wife on his shoulder, walked the length and breadth of Bharata like a mad man. It seemed that he was not going to recover from this mania, and the devas (gods) were worried at this. To rescue Śiva from this mental disposition, Mahāviswa, unseen by others, followed Śiva with a bow and arrow. Whenever it was convenient, killed Dakṣa and carrying the dead body of his wife on his shoulder, walked the length and breadth of Bharata like a mad man. Thus, within a few days the body of Satīdevi came to an end and Śiva walked to Kailās. The pieces of the dead body fell in 108 places, and thus 108 Devīpiṭhas came into existence. The names of the places and the names by which the Devi is known in such places are given below.

The son then anxiously enquired what he should do to absolve his father of his sins and save him from hell. Vaśiṣṭha then told him to observe the vrata, Vaśiṣṭhapūrṇimā. He did that and all the spirits went to heaven. (Chapter 94, Padma Purāṇa).

DHANAVARDHANA. A virtuous Vaśyā who lived in the island of the Saṅkara in the Kṛtya yuga. Once Dhanavardhana after having performed Vaśiṣṭha yajna sat for his food. At that time he heard a cry from outside "Annair dhri (give me food)". Dhanavardhana immediately came out to see who the visitor was but seeing none went in and started taking his food. Because he ate his food once left aside, his body was torn to hundred pieces. (Bhavīṣya, Brahma Kāṇḍa).

DHANAVATI. See Sūryaprabhā.

DHANAṽAYA I. A famous serpent. This serpent was born to Kaśyapaprajapati of his wife Kadrā. (Śloka 5, Chapter 35, Adi Purāṇa). This serpent served as a rope to bind the hooves to the chariot of Śiva during the time of burning to death the Tripūras. (Śloka 29, Chapter 34, Karṇa Purāṇa). This serpent sits in the court of Varuna and worships him. (Śloka 9, Chapter 9, Sabha Purāṇa).

DHANAṽAYA II. Another name for Arjuna. (See under Arjuna).

DHANAṽAYA III. The army given to Subrahmanyas by Śiva. (Śloka 17, Chapter 46, Śaiva Purāṇa).

DHANAṽAYA IV. A Sanskrit critic who lived during the period between 11th and 12th century A.D. He was a member of the court of King Muṭja. His important work is Daṇḍarāpaka. This work contains three hundred ślokas divided into four separate divisions. After the death of Muṭja, Dhaniṭa, brother of DHANAṽAYA, wrote a commentary on this work. The treatise is named Daṇḍarāpaka. There are several quotations in this from the Sanskrit dramaturgical works of Muṭja and Ramāvī. He has in this work discussed Drama and Poetry in general giving prominence to the emotional side of it. The critical work, Daṇḍarāpaka, contains quotations from a book Kavyaninīya by Dhaniṭa himself. But the work Kavyaninīya has not yet been made available. Even in composing poetry DHANAṽAYA was well versed. He is the author of the well-known epic Rāghava-pāḍavya. It is known as Dviṇaṭhāṇa. Kaṭva also. This is based on the lives of Pāṇḍuvara and DHANAṽAYA bears the name of Śrtrākṣita also. It is stated during the period 1123 to 1140 A.D. (History of classical Sanskrit Literature).

DHANAṽAYA V. There was once a brahmin ascetic called DHANAṽAYA in the grota of Vaśiṣṭha. This hermit had hundred wives and got hundred sons, one of each of his wives. The son born of his wife Śrtrākṣa (Śrtrākṣa) was named Karuṇa. The father divided his assets equally among his sons and yet they quarrelled with each other. Once Karuṇanuṣṭi went to the shores of Bhavaiśūnī along with a few other munis to worship Narasimha. There a brahmin had brought a lovely lime as an offering to the deity. Karuṇa took the lime from him and smelt it. At this the brahmin got angry and cursed him. "Sinner, may you live as a fly for a hundred years. Then Mahāṁrta Dādaśī will give you back your original form." Karuṇa instantly became a fly and he pleaded to his wife thus "Beloved, I have become a fly. Please do protect me." Karuna started flying. The fly was cooked. Its body became oil and the fly fell in oil and killed it. Sucimita, with Karuna, started weeping laying the dead fly in her lap. Arundhatidevi passing that way saw her and consoled her thus: `Sucimita, stop lamenting. I shall bring it to life this instant by sacred ashes.' So saying the Devil took some ashes from the fire-pit and reciting the powerful mantras of his wife sprinkled it on the dead body of the fly. Sucimita fanned the fly. The potency of the ashes brought the fly back to life.

After a hundred years one of his relatives killed it again. Sucimita griefer-stricken, took the dead fly to the Maharsi, Dadhica. The sage told her thus: "It was bhasma (sacred ashes) that gave life three times to Jamadagni, Kar&ya, the devas and myself. I will, therefore, give life to thy husband by bhasma itself." Dadhica took some ashes and meditating on Mahesvara recited a mantra and sprinkled it on the dead fly and brought it back to life. By the touch of Dadhica, the fly, husband of Sucimita, became Karuna again and both of them went back to their hermitage. (Chapter 113, Padma Purana.)

DHANAJAYA VI. A brahmin devotee of Mahavishnu who lived in the Tretayuga. Once, in winter, when for want of proper clothing he could bear the biting cold no longer, he broke some twigs of the Ashvatha tree (poplar leaved fig tree) and made fire to warm him. When Dhanajaya broke the twigs it gave reflexive pain on the body of Mahavishnu. But Mahavishnu, when asked the reason of Dhanaajaya's affliction of himself was not displeased but appeared before Dhanajaya with wounds all over the body. The Brahmin enquired how Visvnu got the wounds and on knowing that it was the consequence of his breaking the twigs of Ashvatha Dhanajaya in utter grief started to cut his own head off. Greatly pleased Visvnu stopped him from his attempt and asked him to name a boon. Very modestly he replied that he would be satisfied if he was given the strength to continue as a devotee of Visvnu. (Padma Purana, Kriya Kanda.)

DHANESVARA. A Brahmin born in the city of Avanti. Abandoning the duties enjoined by scriptures to a Brahmin he strayed away from the Brahmin fold doing all sorts of sins. He became a store-house of sins. He was engaged in commerce and once while travelling he reached the city of Mahismati. There he met many people from several adjoining villages who had come there to observe the Krittika Vrata. Later Dhanesvara was bitten by a cobra there and fall down fainting. Very soon he died. When he died the messengers of Yama came and took him bound to Kâlapuri. There, Citragupta read out to Yama all the sins Dhanesvara had committed from boyhood till his death. Citragupta added "Even from boyhood there is no record of any good deed done by him. On the other hand the sins he has committed could not be told in a year. He is an incarnation of evil. He must be roasted in hell till the end of the world." On hearing this the body of Yama blazed like flame with anger and calling aside an attendant he ordered, "Hi, Citragupta, take this sinner away, beat him with spiked clubs and throw him into Kumbihipâka." Pratapalaka instantly took him away and breaking his head with a thorn-spiked club threw him into a copper vessel containing burning oil. But to his great astonishment the burning oil became cold as soon as the body of Dhanesvara came into contact with it just as it happened once before in the case of Prahlâda. The perplexed attendant ran to Yama and told him of this strange incident. Yama was also surprised at this novelty in hell and called back Dhanesvara and started inquiring about his life once again. Narada came there at that time. Both of them then talked about Dhanesvara. Narada told Yama how the unanticipated thing so happened because Dhanesvara on the eve of his death spent some time with people who were observing the Krittika Vrata washing away thus all the sins accumulated so far in his life. Hearing that Yama took Dhanesvara round hell and giving Dhanesvara, the position of a Yaksi sent him to Kuberapuri. (Chapter 115, Padma Purana.)

DHAN. A messenger of the aruras called Kapas. The Kapas once sent Dhan to preach moral code among the Brahmins. (Chapter 157, Anusasana Parva, M.B.)

DHANA. A Sanakrit poet. (See Dhanajaiva IV.)

DHANUGRAHA, DHANURDHRARA. One of the hundred sons of Dhruvaratha. He was killed in the great battle by Bhimaesta. (Sloka 62, Chapter 34, Karna Parva, M.B.)

DHANUVAKTRA. A soldier of Subrahmanyya. (Sloka 62, Chapter 45, Salya Parva, M.B.)

DHANURVEDA. General information. A scientific treatise on the art of warfare in ancient Brahma. Because of the undue importance of the science the treatise is deemed and respected as a Veda. There have been innumerable books on the subject to teach Dhanurveda to the Kâartiyas youths. In the book 'Prasthânavedha' by Madhusudana Sarasvati he states that Dhanurveda is a branch of Yajurveda. A Sanakrit book called Dhanurvedasastra is now available. Some scholars are of opinion that not much antiquity can be attributed to this work. Many books relating to Dhanurveda have been lost to us. What details are there in Agni Purana are given below:

1) Divisions of Dhanurveda. This is known as Caturpâda (four-footed) also because of the fact that the four main constituents of an array are the chariots, elephants, horses and men. Dhanurveda has been divided into five parts (1) Yantramuuk, (2) Pânamuk, (3) Muktasandhârâtra, (4) Amukta and (5) Bâhyuddha. There is another division according to Astra and Sastra. There is yet another division of the science into two by some scholars from a different viewpoint calling them Mâyâ and Rija.

Yantramuuk (Yantra = machine). This means a warfare where machines are used. Keppaja (sling) bow and arrow and other such machines are included in this.

Pânamuk. (Pâni = hand). This is where the hand is used mainly. Stone, mace etc. are used in this.

Muktasandhârâtra. This includes the use of weapons like a spear, Amukta. The use of a weapon like a sword which never leaves your hand.

Bâhyuddha. (Bâhu = head). The fight with only bare hands without the use of a weapon. One who wishes to fight should make ready his own weapons. He should be one who will never get tired even after exertion. A war with bows and arrows is considered the best and most manly, that with a spear ranks next, a fight with a sword is bad and a fight with hands, the most mean.
3) The Teeta. Only a bramina is entitled to be a preceptor in Dhanurveda. The Kṣatriya and Vaiśya should learn from him. The Śūdra can fight of his own in danger. He is not allowed to learn military science from a preceptor. Those mixed-born are to help the king during a war.
4) Vari: postures. There are nine different ways of standing when you give a fight, classified according to the different positions of one’s foot, heel and knee.

Saṃpadā. When you stand with your Angsāṣṭa, Nariyāti (Gulpha), Pāṇi and Pāda closely joined together, it is termed Saṃpadā.

Vaidhā. Keep your legs twenty-seven inches apart and without bending your knees stand erect throwing your weight on the fingers of the foot. This stand is called Vairākhā.

Maṇḍala. Keep your knees thirty-six inches apart and stand in the shape of a hamsapāṭkā and’ 2’ position is called Maṇḍala.

Ālīka. Bend your right knee and thigh in the shape of a plunged and without any movement so that posture does not yet bring your leg forty-five inches apart. This stand is called Ālīka.

Pratyālīka. If you bend your left knee and thigh and stand like above it is called Pratyālīka.

Jāta. Place your right foot straight and place the left one perpendicular to the right one with the heels and the ankles of the feet five fingers apart. The whole length of the posture should not exceed twelve fingers. This stand is called Jāta.

Dāṃgāṣṭa. Keep the right knee bent and the left leg straight or vice versa. This posture is called Dāṃgāṣṭa.

Vikāla. If for the above posture the distance between the two legs is two palm-length it is Vikāla.

Saṁhā. Keep the knees vigūnas and the feet Uttaṇayanā for the posture of Ṣvapujā.

Saṣṭika. Keep your legs sixteen fingers apart and raise your feet a little keeping the level of both the feet equal. This is Saṣṭika.

5) Use of arrows. Before a man is to make use of a bow and arrow he should first take the posture of Saṣṭika or bow down. He should take the bow by the left hand, pick up the arrow by the right hand. Then he should adopt a posture. Then Vaiśākha or Jāta and taking the bow should sink into the earth, one end of the bow and draw the bow-string up to the other end and see whether there is sufficient length for the string. He should take an arrow from his sheath and thrust the arrow-head into the ground near the bow. He should place his elbow on the top of the arrow with his forearm bent and fist clenched. If the clenched fist touches the top of the bow that bow and arrow is superior to any other. He should tie the bow-string in a way that the distance between the tied bow-string and the bow is twelve fingers. He should place the bow in front of his navel and the arrow in a quiver on his hip. Taking an arrow he should raise the bow and fix the arrow at a point on the bow-string between his eye and ear. He should take the arrow by his left fist and fix it so that the fist touches the left nipple. The bow should not change position horizontally vertically, laterally, face downwards or upwards. Then taking an arrow from the sheath by the thumb and forefinger fix it on the bow-string and stretch it well before sending the shot. The clue to correct aim is this. Anything that one can see with one\'s eyes but can be covered by his fist is within the arrow-shot. When one arrow is sent another should be taken immediately from the sheath and sent in quick succession. This is called Upaccheda.

7) Operations with rope. There are eleven different ways of tying a rope in a war. Pārvātya, Aparāvyā, Ārha, Laghūgriha, Urdhvākṣipta, Adbhākṣipta, Sandhārīta, Śreneśṭa, Gajāpīta and Vīghrāvā. Adept in this art have stated that there are five acts in the rope-operation. They are: Rju, Ayāta, Viśāla, Tiṣyak and Bhīmāṭita.

8) Mode of using the weapons. (1) Deeds with a wheel are: Āccheda, Bṛhadā, Pārava, Bhāṣama, Sayana and Vaiśāṃuka.

(2) Śīla (spear). Deeds with this are: Aśphotaṇa, Ksola, Bhedana, Trāsana, Andolana and Aṅghāta.

(3) Tomara (iron club). Deeds with this are: Drṣṭighāta Pārvāsghāta, Ṛjupakṣa and Isṭapāpta.

(4) Gada (Mace). Deeds with this are: Gomūtra, Āhata, Prabhūta, Kamālāsana, Yata, Urdhvagātrā, Vamanavatā, Dhikṣasāna, Aṣṭika, Pāva, Pāvāvartta, Pāvādāna, and Avapūtta Hamsanandā.

(5) Parāla (axe). Deeds with this are: Karala, Anagha, Darśana, Upapūtta, Kāpabhāsikā, Śiṅgā and Śunya.

(6) Mudgara (hammer). Deeds with this are: Tādana, Cēpaṇa, Pāvāna and Ghatana.

(7) Bhūdhīla. Deeds with this are: Sanśrīrāta, Vīrānā, Goviṣaṇa and Sudurdhāra. Deeds with the Lagūda are the same as these.

(8) Vāra. Deeds with this are: Aṁya, Madhyāṇa, Pārāvṛttta, and Nīderāṇa. The deeds with the Pāṭīṣa are the same as there.

(9) Vīhāra (Churīka—small dagger). Deeds with these are: Haruṇa, Bhedana, Ghatana, Bhedana, Yṃkṣaṇa, Pātaṇa and Śpocana.

(10) Vipāja (Kauja—Sling). Deeds are Trāsana, Raṣṭa, Ghatana, Balodhāraṇa and Ayāta. The feats of one who fights a budgeron or cudgeler are the following:

9) Dhanurveda in Mahābhārata. Some references to Dhanurveda in Mahābhārata are given below:

(1) A sage named Śraddhan was a noted preceptor in Dhanurveda. Kṛṣṇāya learnt Dhanurveda from him and taught many others of his disciples. (Chapam 123, Aḍī Parva, M.B.).

(2) Dronācārya learnt Dhanurveda from Paraśurāma. and imparted it to many other disciples of his including the Kauravas and Pândavas. (Chapter 129, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

(3) Agneśva, a sage, learnt Dhanurveda from sage Agastya. (Sloka 9, Chapter 133, Ādi Parva, M.B.)

(4) Dhanurveda has got ten aśugas and four curasanas. (Chapters 6 and 41, Salya Parva, M.B.)

(5) Four-footed Dhanurveda worshipped Subrahmanya. (Sloka 29, Chapter 64, Salya Parva, M.B.)

DhANUSĀ. An ancient sage. He was a priest in the yuga of Utparicaravana. (Sloka 7, Chapter 536, Sānta Parva.)

DhANUSĀKṢA. An ancient sage. He killed Medhāvi, son of the sage Balaśrī, accusing Medhāvi of having mocked other sages (Sloka 50, Chapter 135, Vana Parva, M.B.)

DhANVA. One of the Kings of Kāśi. Dhanvantari was born as his son. (For details see under Dhanvantari.)

Dhanvantari I. A deva who was a preceptor in Ayurveda.

1) Orṅga. The devas and asuras together churned the milky ocean, Kṣīrāḍhēti, to salvage Amṛta (Nectar) from it. After thousands years there arose from the ocean a deva with a Kāmamudā (water-pot of aseetics) in one hand and a damru in the other. That deva was Dhanvantari. (Sloka 31, Sarga 45, Bīla Kānda, Vālmiki Rāmāyana.)

The birth of Dhanvantari from the ocean of Milk is described in Chapter 29 of Harivaṃśa thus: Prosperous-looking Dhanvantari rising above the water-level of Kṣīrāḍhēti stood worshipping Mahāvīnu. Viṣṇu gave the name to him. Afterwards, the name was thus known by the name of Abja also. Dhanvantari bowing to Viṣṇu said "Prabho, I am your son. Allot to me yājñabhāgā." Viṣṇu replied thus: "Portions of yājñā have already been allotted. Because you were born after the devas you cannot be considered as one among them. You will be born again in the world for a second time and then you will be allotted a portion like the devas in the womb you will have knowledge of Apimā and Kurimā. Therefore you will be born as a deva incarnate. You will write in eight divisions a book on Ayurveda; your second life will be in Devāparā yuga." After having said so much Viṣṇu disappeared.

2) Veṣaṅga of Dhanvantari. In his second life Dhanvantari had two sons, Śāla and Gṛiṇamāda. Śunaśa was the son of Gṛiṇamāda. Śala got a son, Artaśeṣa. Āśa was born to śunaśa. To Āśa was born Dirghatapasa (Dhanvā). For a long time Dhanvā did not have any children and so he went and did penance to propitiate Abjadeva. Abjadeva (Dhanvantari) was pleased and was born as a son to Dhanvā. Dhanvā named the boy as Dhanvantari and taught him all the sūtras of Ayurveda, by parts, eight in number. From Dhanvantari in order were born Ketumān—Bhimaratha—Divdīvāsa. (Chapter 29, Harivaṃśa.)

3) Dhanvantari and Parīkṣit. There is a story in the purāṇas that when Taksaka went and bit Parīkṣit to kill him, a Viṣṇāhāri (one who cures those infected with snake venom) rushed to save the king but was bribed and sent back by Taksaka. The Viṣṇāhāri indications to the Purāṇas to show that the Viṣṇāhāri under reference was Dhanvantari though it is stated that Kasyapa was the person involved. (See under Taksaka.)

4) Dhanvantari and Maṇṇādevī. In the Kṛṣṇa-purāṇa Kṛṣṇa of Brahmavārīṣa Purāṇa there is a story connecting Dhanvantari with Maṇṇādevī, a serpent-goddess. Once Dhanvantari with his disciples was going to Kaivala. On the way Taksaka made a venom-spitting hiss. At once one of the disciples of Dhanvantari boldly went and plucked the diamond on the head of Taksaka and threw it to the ground. Hearing this Viṣṇu, King of serpent, sent to Dhanvantari thousands of serpents under the leadership of Drona, Puṇḍarīka and Dhanañjaya. The poisonous breath of all these serpents together made the disciples of Dhanvantari swoon. Immediately Dhanvantari by a medicine made from vānaspati made all his disciples recover and then sent all the serpents to a swoon. When Viṣṇu heard this he sent the serpent-maid, Maṇṇādevī, a disciple of Śiva, to face Dhanvantari. Maṇṇādevī and Gañḍā were both disciples of Śiva. But Dhanvantari was a follower of Gañḍā. Maṇṇādevī made all the disciples of Dhanvantari swoon but the latter because of his great proficiency is Viṣṇavīya soon brought back their disciples to normal. When Maṇṇādevī found that it was impossible to defeat Dhanvantari or his disciples by using poison Maṇṇādevi took the trident given to her by Śiva and aimed it at Dhanvantari. Seeing this Śiva and Brahmā appeared before them and pacifying them sent them all their way.

Dhanvantari II. (Amṛtāśaya). An eminent medical scientist born in the ambaśṭha caste. There is no reference anywhere in the Purāṇas regarding any relationship between the two Dhanvantaris. There is the following story about Amṛtāśaya in Ambaśṭha-candrikā.

Once Gañḍa Mahārāṣṭra went to the forest to collect darbha and firewood. He walked for long and felt thirsty and hungry. Then he saw a girl coming that way with water and Gañḍa quenched his thirst taking water from her. Pleased with her the Mahārāṣṭra blessed her saying "May you get good life! May you not be afraid of it nor be eaten in the womb you will have knowledge of Apīma and Kurimā. Therefore you will be born as a deva incarnate. You will write in eight divisions a book on Ayurveda; your second life will be in Devāparā yuga." After having said so much Viṣṇu disappeared.

2) Vṛshadrāma. A king who was a friend of Ṛṣisthira. (Śloka 29, Chapter 136, Drona Parva, M.B.)

DhA Ra. I. He is the first Vaisu born to Dharmas of his wife Dhūṃrī. (Sloka 19, Chapter 66, Ādi Parva.)

DhA Ra. II. A king who was a friend of Ṛṣisthira. (Śloka 29, Chapter 136, Drona Parva, M.B.)

DhāRa. A holy place. If one battles in this holy place (Bāth) his sorrows will be at an end. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 25.)

DhāRa. One of the eight means of Rājyoga (One of the ways of union with the supreme Spirit). Yama, Niyama, Aṣāna, Pratṣāyaṃa, Pratyāhāra, Dhāraṇa and Samādhi are the eight means (See under Rājyoga.)

DhāRa. A king born in the family of Candravana. (M.B. Udga Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 16.)

DhāRa. II. A nāga (serpent) of the family of Dharma. A deva who is the abode of all luxuries in life.

1) Birth. This deva bore the right nipple of Brahmā and came out in the form of a human being. Three sons were born to him: Sama, Kāma and Harṣa. Kāma married Rāi, Sama, Pṛapṭi and Harṣa, Nandā.

2) Marriage and family life. The Bhāgavata states that Dharma married the thirteen daughters of Daksānapāpa named Śraddhā, Maitri, Dasya, Śanitī, Puṣṭi, Śrī, Kriyā, Unnati, Buddhā, Medhā, Titikṣa, Śrī and Maitri. Besides them he married ten other girls named Bhānu, Lambā, Kukubha, Jāmi, Viśvā, Śaḍbhya, Murutvā, Vasu, Mūrtrā and Sakhāla and also a woman named Śunyā. According to Mahābhārata Dharma married the following daughters of Daksā: Kriṣṇa, Lalukṣa, Dhirī, Medhā, Puṣṭi, Śraddhā, Kriyā, Buddhā and Lajjā. From each of his wives there originated a family. The son born to each is given below: Śraddhā—Śubhā; Maitri—Prasāda; Dasya—Abhaya; Śanitī—Śukha; Puṣṭi—Moda; Unnati—Dāpita; Buddhā—Artha; Medhā—Sukṛti; Titikṣa—Śama; Śrī—Pravāya. Mārdi gave birth to the virtuous Narāṇārayanas. Śunyā became the mother of the devas, Satyayatana and Satyasena. Satyasena became famous by slaying many cruel and evil-natured Yakṣas, demons and spirits. Lambā gave birth to Śrībhā and Viduyotana. Śrībhā got a son, Indraśeṣa. Viduyotana became the father of śunyā. Kukubha delivered Skha and Sāka and became the father of Śrīka and Duryodana. Śrīka got a son Śrīva and of him was born Nandī. Viśvā gave birth to Viśvā.

3) Prominent sons. Four sons of Dharma, Hari, Kṛṣṇa, Nara and Nārāyaṇa became prominent. Hari and Kṛṣṇa were great yogis while Nara and Nārāyaṇa were great ascetics. (See under Nārāyanasiṇa.)

4) The daughter named Dharmavatī. Dharma-deva got a daughter named Dharmavatī of his wife Dharmavatī. Dharmavatī was an ascetic and she was married to Marici, son of Brahmā. One day Marici came back from the forest after getting darbha and flowers extremely tired and so after food lay down to rest. His wife sitting by his side massaged his legs. The sage fell asleep. Then Brahmā came there and Dharmavatī attended on him and worshipped him. Marici, when he woke up, finding Dharmavatī attending on another man cursed her and made her into stone. Dharmavatī pleaded not guilty and standing inside a fire-pit did penance for ten thousand years. Brahmā and other devas appeared before her and consorted her by assuring that though she would be a stone devas would take their abode in it and that she would be worshipped by all. From that day onwards that stone was known as Devaśilā and even now it is believed that Brahmā and other devas live therein. (Chapter 114, Agni Purāṇa.)

5) Dharma was cursed and made Visudra by Asvinakṣatra. (See Aniruddhāsav.)

Other details. (1) A portion of Dharma took life as Yuddhiṣṭhira in Kunti. (See Dhammapatra.)

(2) Dharma did penance in Dharmaśirha for a very long time. (Śloka 1, Chapter 84, Vana Purāṇa.)

(3) The abode of Dharma was Dharmaprasthāna. (Śloka 1, Chapter 94, Vana Purāṇa.)

(4) Dharma did penance on the banks of the river Vaiṣṇavī for a long time. (Śloka 4, Chapter 114, Vana Purāṇa.)

(5) While the Pāṇḍavas were in exile in the forest Dharma in the form of a deer came to the hut of a Brahmin and carried away by its horns the Arani stick which the Brahmin owned for making fire by attrition. (Chapter 311, Vana Purāṇa.)

(6) Dharma appeared in the form of a Yakṣa and made all the Pāṇḍavas swoon except Yuddhiṣṭhira, on the shores of a pond in the forest and later got them back to normal. (See under Dhammaputra.)

(7) Dharma-deva went to Vaiśvamedra in the guise of Vasiṣṭha to test him. (See para 3 of Gālava.)

(8) Following a directive from Brahmā, Dharma-deva once brought before Varuṇa all the dātāyānāvus bound by ropes. (Chapter 128, Udyoga Purāṇa.)

(9) Mahāviṣṇu was born as a son of Dharmadeva. (See under Nārāyanasiṇa.)
DHARMAHṚT II

(10) Dharma worshipped a brahmin named Satya taking the form of a deer. (Sloka 17, Chapter 272, Sānti Parva.)

(11) Dharma tested Sūdrāśāna taking the form of a brahmin. (Sloka 79, Chapter 2, Anuśāsan Parva.)

(12) Dharma saved a sage named Vatsanābha from a great downpour taking the shape of a buffalo. (Chapter 12, Anuśāsan Parva.)

(13) Dharma disguised as a brahmin, went and imparted advice to Jānakā, father of Sītā. (Chapter 32, Aṭvamedha Parva.)

(14) To test Jāmadagni, Dharma went to his āśrama taking the form of Anger, Jāmadagni had just milked Kāmadhenu and kept the milk in a pot. Dharma as Anger crept into the milk. Jāmadagni drank it and yet remained calm. Seeing this, Dharma appeared before him in the form of a brahmin and blessed him assuring Jāmadagni that in future he would be obedient to Dharma (Chapter 91, Aṭvamedha Parva.)

(15) When at the end of their life the Pāṇḍavas started on their Māhāprāśāna, Dharma as a dog accompanied them up to the gates of heaven. (Sloka 22, Chapter 5, Svargāroha Parva.)

7) Dharma and Kāla. There is a misunderstanding found even in some Purāṇas as Kāla, the chief of Kālāpari, and Dharma are one and the same person. But if the stories around each are examined it is easy to deduce that they are two different devas. The father and mother of Dharmaeva is Brahman. The father of Kāla is Śūrya and mother Sachi, daughter of Vīśvakarman. This itself is a sufficient evidence to show that the two are different persons. Further, Kāla or Yama is the sixth descendant of Vīśva.

But scholars are misled to think that the two are identical. There is a reason for it.

Dharmarājan Pitrpati
Śamavartti Paterari
Kṛiṅsto Yumunābhārati
Samana Yumunār Yarvah
Kubera Yumunār Dvah
Devo Vaivasvatonari (Amarā).

The above are the synonyms of Kāla. Ṛṣaṇa has used as synonyms for Dharmaeva in the Māhāprāśāna the words Dharmarāja, Ṛṣaṇa and Yama. Now among the synonyms for the two there are two words in common—Dharmarāja and Yama. This has led to this misunderstanding. Because Kāla weighs the evil and good in man he got the name Dharmarāja. Dharmaeva got that name because he is the incarnation of Dharma. The real name of Kāla is Yama. Dharmaeva got the name Yama because he possesses 'Yama' (control of the tell for moral conduct). Kāla has no sons; Vidura and Yudhishthira are the sons of Dharmarāja.

DHARMAHṚT. A mahārāja who was an inhabitant of Dandakānanda. This sage narrated to Śrī Rāma the story of the pond 'Pañcaśāstra' and the gāṇadhārā that rises from it. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā, Sarga 11.)

DHARMABUDDHI. See under Mitabheda.

DHARMA. A follower of Subrahmanya. (Sloka 72, Chapter 45, Sāya Parva.)

DHARMATTHA. A king of Kosala. He had a wife named Nāgari. By her chastity she became a celebrity and got the name of Arundhati of the earth. They got a daughter named Tārāādātā. Once when Dharmattha and Nāgari were engaged in conversation both remembered their lives in their previous births. It was not allowed to speak about previous births in open and if anybody did so death was the penalty. But Nāgari could not control herself and prepared to accept the worst. Nāgari told her husband thus: "I am just reminded of my life in my previous birth. I will tell you my story. I was the servant maid of a brahmin named Mādhava in this same place. I had a husband named Devāsa. My husband and I lived happily together. In a small house of our own and lived there peacefully. Each of us would bring food from where we worked and everyday we used to set apart a portion of what we got for guests and the pūtra. We were satisfied with what was left after that. If we got more than one set of clothes we would give it to the poor. Then there came a famine in the country. Our earning also was reduced daily. We lived in hunger. One day a hungry and tired sannyāsī came to our place and we gave him the whole of our food. My husband died that day and I gave away my life jumping into the funeral pyre of my husband. Then I was born in the family of a King and became your wife." Dharmattha also got back the memory of his previous birth. He said he was the Devāsa of Nāgari's previous life. The moment they finished talking about their previous births both fell down dead. Orphaned Tārāādātā then lived under the care of her mother's younger sister. After some time a Mahāraja came to their house and by his blessing Tārāādātā got a husband named Kālīgaida. Kālīgaida was a brave and powerful. Very soon they got a daughter and she was named Kālīgaida. (Kālaśirasāgara, Matudāmatjaṅkī laṁbaka, Tarangā 2.)

DHARMADATTATT II. A brahmin who lived in the city of Karvata. One day while Dhammatatta was going to the temple with material for pūjā he came across a demoness named Kalāha on the way. The brahmin threw the pūjā materials in his hand on to the face of the demoness. When a tulasi leaf touched the demoness she got back the memory of her previous birth. Kalāha then abandoned her cruel nature and begged Dharmattha to advise her as to how she should get a release from her demonic life. Taking pity on her Dharmattha gave her all the 'pūnya' he had obtained by observing Kārttikāvraṭa. (Chapters 106, 107, Utarā Khaṇḍa, Padma Purāṇa and Chapters 2, 4, 24, 25 Śaṅkha Purāṇa.)

Dhammatatta and Kalāha were born as Daśaratha and Kaikeyi in their next births as a result of the accumulated pūnya obtained by observing Kārttikāvraṭa. (Śaṅka khaṇḍa, Ananda Rāmāyaṇa.)

DHARMADHIYAJA. See under Tulasi.

DHARMAUGPA I. A prince who obtained blessings from Śiva by observing the Pradosa-vrata. (For detailed story see Amśuamati.)

DHARMAUGPA II. A Nandāraśākumāra belonging to the Lunar dynasty. Chapters 1, 2 and 13 of Śaṅkha Purāṇa gives the following story about him.

Once Dharmapūra went to the forests hunting. Deeply interested in the game he never knew when it became dusk. It was late to go back to the palace and so deciding to stay in the forest for the night he climbed upon a tree and made a nest there to rest. After some time a bear... followed by a lion came running and took refuge on the top of the same tree. The lion stood growling below. Seeing a man on the same tree the bear said "Oh, Prince, we are both in the same sad plight now. Believe me as a friend. We can spend the night on this tree safe. Therefore, go to sleep till midnight and I will keep watch over. After that I will go to sleep and you keep watch." Glancing at the proposal the prince went to sleep and the bear kept vigil. Then the lion suggested to the bear to push down the prince. The bear replied that he would never cheat a friend and that it was a great sin also to do so. After midnight the bear slept and the prince kept watch over. The lion then suggested to the prince to push down the bear. Thinking that he would be saved if the bear is given to the lion the unthinking prince pushed the bear down. But the bear escaped catching hold of the branches lower down. Embittered at this the bear cursed Dharmanaputra and made him mad.

Then addressing Dharmanaputra first and the lion next the bear said thus: "I am Dhyānākara a sage of the Bhrigu family. I can take any form I like. I cured you, Dharmanaputra, because you cheated a friend. This lion is Bhada, one of the ministers of Kubera. Once he entered into sexual act with a bear in front of the jātaka of Gautama at midday and the sage cursed him and made him into a lion. The sage as a relief from the curse had further declared that he would get his original form when he entered into a conversation with me." When Dhyānākara finished speaking the lion changed itself into the form of Bhada.

Dharmanaputra remained mad and his father, the King, approached Jaimini for help. The sage said that the prince would be cured of his madness if he bathed in the Puskarnī tīthī. The king did as was suggested and Dharmanaputra was cured.

DHARMĀKARA. A righteous house-holder. Once a prince entrusted his beautiful wife with Dharmākara and went away. Though the lived with him for six months he did not have any kind of contact with her. The prince returned. Wicked people tried to arouse doubts about the chastity of his wife and the householder. But it was futile. Still bearing calumny Dharmākara entered fire. In that test by fire he came out victorious. Not only did his body remain unscorched, but also that the faces of the wicked people who blamed him were filled with leprosy and became ugly. (Padma Purāṇa, Sraṇī khaṇḍa, Chapter 50).

DHARMĀKETU. A king of Bhārāgava gotra. He was the son of Sulectu and father of Suyāketu. (Navama Sandha, Bhāgavata).

DHARMANANDANA. A king of the family of Bhārāgava. (Navama Sandha, Bhāgavata).

DHARMĀNGADA. A Brahmin who became a deep meditator on Vīśṇu, because of his habits in his previous life. Dharmāngada was the son of Rukmāngada by his wife Sandhiyavāli. Rukmāngada was the son of Kudakā, who lived in the city of Vīśā. He was a man of good personality, who lived with his father and being a generous man he did not hesitate to give his head to Mohini for the pleasure of his father. God Vīśṇu was pleased with him because of his love of his father and of his loyalty to Vairāvīteve deity and took him bodily to heaven (Vaiśākha). Dharmāngada lived there for many thousands of years enjoying heavenly pleasures. Then he went astray from divine life and had to take life again as Suvarṇa the son of a Brahmin named Somaśārma. The wise Suvarṇa discarded the passions of Kāma (desire), Krodha (anger) etc. and controlled his senses and engaged himself in penance in Vaśīkurumahādri. For hundred years he sat in meditation and Mahāvīra was pleased with him and took him and his father to Vaiśākha. At the instruction of Mahāvīra, Suvarṇa took life again in the house of Kaśyapa. When he died he went to Vaiśākha. In every successive birth he had the remembrance of his previous birth. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 21).

DHARMANETRA I. A king of the Hēhaya family. He was the son of Hēhaya and father of Kṛṣṇa. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

DHARMANETRA II. A son of Dharanetrā. (Śloka 60, Chapter 94, Ādi Parva).

DHARMAPĀLĀ. A minister of Daśarath. There were eight ministers for Daśaratha: Śrī, Jayanta, Vijaya, Siddhartha, Rāstravarāhana, Aśoka, Dharmapāla and Sumantra. (Chapter 6, Agni Purāṇa).

DHARMAPRĀSTHA. A sacred place. It is believed to be the abode of Dharmanāra. There is a general assumption that anybody who touches the water in a well there will be absolved of all sins. (Śloka 59, Chapter 94, Vana Parva).

DHARMAPUTRA. The eldest of the Pāṇḍavas, the others being Bhīma, Arjuna, Nakula and Sahadeva.

1) Genealogy. See under Arjuna.

2) Birth. Pāṇḍu, brother of Dharanetrā, had two wives, Kunti and Mādri. There was a curse for Pāṇḍu that he would die the moment he touched his wife. (See under Pāṇḍu). Kunti, the first wife of Pāṇḍu, had obtained from Durvīśā five mantras. The mantras were very potent. If she called upon any god reciting the mantra that God would manifest himself to her and bless her with a son. When Kunti found that Gāndhārī was pregnant and was about to deliver she became anxious and meditating on Dharmadeva recited one of the mantras given by Durvīśā and got a child from him. The boy was born at midday on the eighth Jyeṣṭha day of the year on Pālīcami and at the suspicious hour, Abhijit. At the time of his birth there was a celestial voice which said "This boy will become a very righteous and bold King, best among the virtuous. He will be known as Yudhīśthira". Obeying the dictate of the mysterious voice he was named Yudhīśthira. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 123).

3) Boyhood. When he had five sons Pāṇḍu went to the forest of Sārīgṛha together with his family to spend the spring time there. The sages residing in that forest conducted the christening ceremony of Dharmaputra. Kaśyapa, priest of Vānudeva, performed the Upanayana ceremony (thread-wearing) of Dharmaputra (Chapter 123, Dākṣīṇāpyāṭha; Ādi Parva, M.B.). Rājarṣi Śukta imparted instructions to Dharmaputra on spear-warfare. Pāṇḍu died during their stay there, Mādri abandoned her life by jumping into her husband’s funeral pyre. Before doing so she called Dharmaputra to her side and joining her hands together said "Son, you are now the father to your brothers." When Pāṇḍu and Mādri were dead the sages of the forest took Kunti and the children to Hastināpura and entrusted them to the care of Bhīma.
detailing to him all that had happened in the forest. (Chapter 125, Adi Parva, M.B.)

4) Kaumārī (youth). Dharmaputra and his brothers spent their boyhood in Hastinapura along with Duryodhana and his brothers. Bhimasena became a great foe of Duryodhana and his brothers and Duryodhana always nursed a desire to kill Bhimasena. Once Duryodhana invited Dharmaputra and his brothers to have aquatic games in the Ganga. Accepting the invitation, Dharmaputra participated in the games along with his brothers. One night Duryodhana caught hold of Bhima alone and tied him with ropes and threw him into the river. When in the morning Dharmaputra found his brother missing he ran to his mother to inform her of the loss. Kunfil asked him to start a search and while he was on it Bhimasena appeared before him and told him how he was thrown into the river by Duryodhana and how he went to Nalagana and was brought to earth with great acquisitions from there. Dharmaputra advised them not to make the incident public. They received training in warfare in Hastinapura under Drogaśēkha. Dharmaputra got great proficiency in chariot-fighting. As Gurudakṣaṇi (as the preceptor) Dharmaputra agreed to bring Bhimasena to him as the preceptor. But Arjuna stopped him and himself undertook the task. (Chapters 127 to 136, Adi Parva, M.B.)

5) Becomes heir-apparent and goes to the forest. Duryaśāstra, crowned Dharmaputra as the heir-apparent when the latter had successfully completed his course of study in warfare. By his good conduct, righteousness and administrative efficiency Dharmaputra excelled his father and became very popular among his subjects. Jealous of this Duryodhana decided to destroy the Pāṇḍavas somehow. With the permission of his father, Duryodhana constructed a palace at Vrāṇavātara for the Pāṇḍavas to reside there. That palace was built of Lākṣa (See under Arakkillam). The entire population resented this act of Duryodhana and rebelled against him. They tried to follow him to Vṛṣṇaśraya and stay there. But by tactful words he made them abandon that idea. Still many brahmans followed Dharmaputra. After some days Duryodhana set fire to the palace. But the Pāṇḍavas escaped through a tunnel from the house which had been constructed without the knowledge of Duryodhana just at the time of construction of the building. Escaping from there the Pāṇḍavas reached the forests and travelling further came to the shore of the Ganga. (Stोk 2 to 146, Adi Parva, M.B.)

6) Story up to the life ignominio.

(1) When the palace was burnt by ashes it was presumed that they were dead and by the instructions of Dṛṣṭārīṇa the funeral rites of the Pāṇḍavas were conducted at Hastinapura. But Vidura informed Bhima that the Pāṇḍavas were alive. (Chapter 149, Dākṣiṇayāpāṭha, Adi Parva, M.B.)

(2) Dharmaputra gave permission to Bhima to marry Hidimba while they were in the forest. (Chapter 154, Dākṣiṇayāpāṭha, Adi Parva).

(3) Dharmaputra counselled Arjuna to release Citrārtha Yakṣa who was defeated by Arjuna in a battle. (Stōk 2 to 159, Adi Parva)

(4) After the svayamvara of Pāṇḍāśī, Dharmaputra narrated to Drupada the story of their escape from the palace. (Chapter 194, Adi Parva).

(5) After svayamvara of Pāṇḍāśī the Pāṇḍavas returned to their country and Dharmaputra was crowned king of half of the country. He started his rule at Kāḍāvatrapaṭha, his capital. (Chapter 206, Adi Parva).

(6) Nārada went to Kāḍāvatrapaṭha and advised them, how to avoid unpleasantness accruing from their having one wife in common. His advice was that Pāṇḍāśī should spend one year with each of the five in turn. (Chapter 207, Adi Parva).

(7) When Aśvāmanīya went to Arjunā, Dharmaputra gave ten thousand cows to brahmans as gifts. (Stōk 69, Chapter 22, Adi Parva).

(8) Yudhyāśīrāṇa got a son Pratiśvāndha of Pāṇḍāśī. (Stōk 79, Chapter 220, Adi Parva).

(9) Yudhyāśīrāṇa got a son Yuvātyāṇa of Devīkā, daughter of King Śūski. (Stōk 76, Chapter 95, Adi Parva).

(10) When Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to Dvārakā from Indraprastha Dharmaputra drove the chariot in the place of Dvārakā, charioteer of Kṛṣṇa. (Stōk 16, Chapter 2, Sahā Parva).

(11) Māyāsūra constructed a beautiful palace in Indraprasthā and gave it to Dharmaputra. (Stōk 37, Chapter 3, Sahā Parva).

(12) Yudhyāśīrāṇa decided to perform a Rājaśīrya at Indraprastha. Even before, Rājaśīrya Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna and Bhīmasena together killed Jārasāntuka. After that Yudhyāśīrāṇa sent Arjuna to the northern side and the other brothers to the southern side for Dvīvajyaya (conquest of countries). When he established his autocracy he performed the Rājaśīrya. (Chapter 43, Sahā Parva).

(13) Yudhyāśīrāṇa used to give free sumptuous food to thousands of brahmans in golden pots daily. (Chapter 49, Sahā Parva).

(14) Envious Duryodhana sent Vidura to bring Dharmaputra to Hastinapura and defeated him fouly in a game of dice. Though Dharmaputra lost everything Dṛṣṭārīṇa gave him back everything. (Chapter 72, Sahā Parva, M.B.)

(15) Before Dharmaputra went back to his place, with the permission of Dṛṣṭārīṇa, Duryodhana called him back again for another game of dice. Despite protests from all sides Dharmaputra went again for a game of dice with Duryodhana. and lost again all he possessed. Then he left the country with his brothers and wife to spend twelve years in exile in the forests and another year ignominio. (Chapter 79, Sahā Parva).

(16) Śrīya gave the Aksayapāṭha (a pot which is never emptied) to the Pāṇḍavas. (Stōk 72, Chapter 3, Vana Parva).

(17) At first the Pāṇḍavas stayed in Dvīvaitava and later on the advice of Vyāsa they went to Kāmīkavāna. (Stōk 41, Chapter 36, Vana Parva).

(18) He advised Bhīmasena to remain quiet for thirteen years. (Chapter 52, Vana Parva).

(19) Bhūdaśāva, the sage, narrated the story of Nala to Dharmaputra while they were in the forest. (Chapter 43, Vana Parva).

(20) The sage Lomaśa imparted instructions on philosophy to Dharmaputra while they were in the forest. (Chapter 94, Vana Parva).

(21) Yudhyāśīrāṇa met and conversed with Paraśurāma at the mountain Mahendrā. (Chapter 117, Vana Parva).

(22) The Pāṇḍavas then travelled in north India. On their way to the mountain of Gāndhārāvāna Pāṇḍāśī fainted and Yudhishthira wept bitterly. (Chapter 145, Vana Parva).

(28) From Gandhariyadana Dharmaputra with his wife and brothers reached Badarikasrama and from there they returned to Dvaitavana.

(29) When they went to Kamyaka vana Sr Krsna visited Dharmaputra there. (Chapter 153, Vana Parva).

(30) Durudhana and his followers made a grand march to Kamyaka vana to see the Pandavas in sad plight and then the Gandharva Cirasena bound them all by ropes. Arjuna on the orders of Dharmaputra got them all released. (Chapter 246, Vana Parva).

(31) While the Pandavas were in exile in the forest Daksasana went and invited Yudhishthira to attend a Vaisravana sacrifice conducted by Durudhana. But Dharmaputra sent him away saying that it was not proper to come to the country before the expiry of the period of exile. (Chapter 256, Vana Parva).

(32) Yudhishthira received the sage Durvasas with respect and after offering homage sent him away contented. (Chapter 262, Vana Parva).

(33) Jayadratha kidnapped Pabhali and in the battle that ensued Durudhana slew the King of Tripura but left alive Jayadratha. (Chapter 272, Vana Parva).

(34) At a time when Yudhishthira was plunged in sorrow the sage Mankhandya narrated the story of Sri Rama to console him. (Chapter 273 to 291, Vana Parva).

7. How Dharmapura tested Yudhishthira. The Pandavas travelling through the forest reached Dvaitavana. A brahmin among their group was making fire by the ariki sticks when a deer rushed at him and took the ariki sticks away, carrying them on its horns. The Pandavas ran after the deer and they travelled far away from their place, still not getting scent of it. They were all tired and thirsty. Yudhishthira directed Nakula to climb on the top of a tree and investigate whether there was any water anywhere nearby. Nakula did so and reported that he could see a pond not far from the place where they were sitting. Yudhishthira asked Nakula to go and fetch water. Nakula did not return for a long time and Sahadeva was asked to go and enquire. Sahadeva also did not return and Arjuna was sent in search of them. When Arjuna did not return Bhima went to enquire. Bhima also did not return and Yudhishthira himself set out in search of them. On reaching the pond Yudhishthira was dumbfounded to see his brothers lying dead on the banks of the pond. Weeping bitterly Yudhishthira entered the pond and to his surprise he heard a voice from the air addressed to him thus: 'Ho, Yudhishthira, I am a sprite living on the small fishes of this pond. This pond is my hereditary property. It was I who killed your brothers. I will ask you certain questions. If you answer them correctly you can drink from this pond. If not, you will also die.'

Dharmaputra:- 'I do not believe that you are simply a bird. My brothers are renowned for their valour and have defeated not only the devas, danavas, gandharvas and others but also the four huge mountains like Himalaya Pariyatra, Vindhyya and Malayya. I am eager to know your true self who have slain such brave brothers of mine.'

Yaksa:- 'I am a Yaksha and not merely a bird. I objected to your brothers' taking water from the pond. But waving aside my objections they started taking water from the pond and then I slew them. Now, hear my questions: Who carries the Sun? Who are his followers? Who makes the sun set? On whom does the sun exist?'

Dharmaputra:- It is Brahman who carries the Sun. Devas are his followers. Dharsma makes him set. He exists on Satya.

Yaksa:- 'How does Mahadev come to be Srotiyas? (those who study the Vedas.)

Yudhishthira:- It happens by deep penance.

Yaksa:- 'What is the reason for a brahmin getting divinity? What deed is equal to good conduct? What makes a brahmin mortal and what makes him evil?

Yudhishthira:- The Brahmin gets divinity by meditation. Austerity is equal to good conduct. Death makes a brahmin mortal and abusive words make him evil.

Yaksa:- 'What is the divinity of Ksatriya? What is equal to good nature? What makes them mortal and what makes them evil?

Dharmaputra:- The divinity of a Ksatriya is weapon. Sacrifice is equal to good conduct. Fear makes him mortal and non-sacrifice makes him evil.

Yaksa:- 'What is the best thing for agriculture? What is the most important thing for agriculture? What are the installations of the atmosphere and child-birth?

Dharmaputra:- The best thing for agriculture is rain. The important thing for agriculture is seed. The installation of atmosphere is rays and that of child-birth is child.

Yaksa:- 'Who is lifeless even though he breathes?

Dharmaputra:- He who never offers oblations to a deva, a guest or a servant is like the dead even though he breathes.

Yaksa:- 'What is bigger than the earth? What is higher than the sky? What is swifter than the wind? What are greater in number than grass?

Dharmaputra:- Mother is bigger than the earth. Father is taller than the sky. Mind is swifter than the wind. Thoughts are greater in number than grass.

Yaksa:- 'What is it that does not shut its eyes when asleep? What is it that does not grow after birth? What is heartless? What grows very quickly?

Dharmaputra:- A fish does not shut its eyes when asleep. An egg does not grow after its birth. A stone is heartless. A river grows very quickly.

Yaksa:- 'Who is a friend to one who lives outside his country? Who is a friend to a householder, to a patient and to one dead?

Dharmaputra:- For one who leaves his country the friend he gets on his way is the best friend. To a householder his wife is his friend, to a patient his doctor and to one dead, charity.

Yaksa:- 'Who is a guest of all? What is Nectar? What is spread throughout the world?

Dharmaputra:- Agni (fire) is the guest of all. Moon (Candra) is the nectar. Air is that which is spread throughout the world.

Yaksa:- 'Who circles around solo? Who is born again? What is the remedy for cold? What gives the maximum yield?

Dharmaputra:- The Sun circles solo. Candra is born again. Fire is the remedy for cold. Earth gives the maximum yield.
Yakṣa:—What is the soul of Man? Who is the companion given by God? What is Upājīvama?

Dharmaputra:—The soul of Man is his son. The companion given by God is wife. Cloud is Upājīvama.

Yakṣa:—How do you become rich? How do you become happy?

Dharmaputra:—If you abandon lust you will be rich. If you abandon desire you will be happy.

Yakṣa:—Then lust is the worst covered? By what does one lose his friend? What is the obstacle for an entry into heaven?

Dharmaputra:—Dullness covers the world. World becomes clear by intelligence. A friend is lost by desire. Domestic ties stand in the way of getting into heaven.

Yakṣa:—Who are those equal to the dead? Which country is dead?

Dharmaputra:—A poor penniless man is equal to the dead. The country where there is mob-rape is dead.

Yakṣa: —Who is a pandit? Who is an atheist? Who is wicked? What are lust and jealousy?

Dharmaputra:—A righteous man is a pandit. An atheist is wicked. Lust is the cause of worldly life. Jealousy is the cause of worry.

Yakṣa:—Though charity, wealth and lust are incompatible with each other when do they unite together?

Dharmaputra:—When charity and wife compromise the above three blend together harmoniously.

The Yakṣa was highly pleased with the replies given by Dharmaputra. He then offered to revive one of his brothers and asked Dharmaputra to name whom he should do so. Then Yudhishṭhira named Nakula. Yakṣa then enquired why he had named Nakula leaving aside Arjuna and Bhima. Dharmaputra replied that though Kuntī and Mādrī were two wives of Pāṇḍu they were both mothers to them and so he wanted to see one of the sons of Mādrī alive. He therefore pressed the name of Nakula again. The Yakṣa who was none other than Dharmaputra was immensely happy to hear that reply and gave life to all his brothers. He confessed to Yudhishṭhira that it was he who in the form of a deer came and ran away with the arani sticks. He returned the arani sticks also Dharmadeva then advised them to go and spend their life incognito at the court of King Virāja blessing them with the assurance that they would never be found out during their life in disguise. Dharmadeva disappeared after this and the Pāṇḍavas returned to their ārama. (Chapters 312 and 313 of Vana Parva, M.B.).

8) Aūkānanda (Life incognito). See under Arjuna.

9) Dharmaputra and the great battle. Events relating to or involving Dharmaputra from the end of his life in disguise up to the end of the Mahābhārata battle are given below:

1) Yudhishṭhira tried utmost to avoid war but when it was made clear that the Pāṇḍavas would not be given even an inch of land, he decided to fight. So Yudhiṣṭhira prepared for a war and camped on one side of the Kuruśtrī with his army. (Chapter 193, Udyoga Parva)

2) Dharmaputra gave instructions to Arjuna to keep his army in vṛūhas. (Sloka 6, Chapter 19, Bhīṣma Parva)

3) Dharmaputra was sorry when he looked at the Kaurava army. (Sloka 3, Chapter 21, Bhīṣma Parva)

4) Yudhishṭhira blew his conch Anuśāvatāra to announce the war. (Sloka 16, Chapter 25, Bhīṣma Parva)

5) Yudhishṭhira sought permission from Bhīṣma to fight against Kauravas. (Sloka 35, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva)

6) Yudhishṭhira bowed before Dronācārya and sought permission to conduct the war. (Sloka 52, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva)

7) He sought permission from Kṛṣṇa to fight the war. (Sloka 53, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva)

8) Yudhishṭhira went to Śalya and obtained his permission to conduct the war. (Sloka 78, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva)

9) Yudhishṭhira appealed to the warriors on the Kaurava side to join his army. Only Yuyutsu, responded to that beckoning and joined the Pāṇḍava side. (Sloka 94, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva)

10) On the first day of the battle Dharmaputra fought a duel with Śalya. (Sloka 28, Chapter 43, Bhīṣma Parva)

11) Yudhishṭhira constructed a Vajra Vyūha (an array in the shape of a diamond) with his army. (Sloka 22, Chapter 51, Bhīṣma Parva)

12) Yudhishṭhira fought with fury and defeated Śrūṣyus. (Sloka 8, Chapter 84, Bhīṣma Parva)

13) Yudhishṭhira got defeated by Bhīṣma. (Sloka 2, Chapter 86, Bhīṣma Parva)

14) Bhagadatta attacked Yudhishṭhira. (Sloka 84, Chapter 96, Bhīṣma Parva)

15) He fought against Sakuni. (Sloka 11, Chapter 103, Bhīṣma Parva)

16) Yudhishṭhira sought permission from Śri Kṛṣṇa to kill Bhīṣma and he went straight to Bhīṣma himself and asked him how he should be killed. Yudhishṭhira attacked Bhīṣma as per the latter’s instructions. (Chapter 197 to 115, Bhīṣma Parva)

17) In the meantime Dronācārya made a vow that he would capture Yudhishṭhira. So Yudhishṭhira thereupon, always kept Arjuna near at hand. (Sloka 5, Chapter 13, Drona Parva)

18) Yudhishṭhira consoloed his own army when Abhimanyu was slain. (Sloka 35, Chapter 49, Droṇa Parva)

19) Yudhishṭhira attacked Śalya and Krtavarma. (Chapters 93 and 97, Bhīṣma Parva)

20) Yudhishṭhira was defeated in a fight with Droṇa. (Sloka 18, Chapter 106, Droṇa Parva)

21) He fought against Durvudham. (Sloka 15, Chapter 124, Droṇa Parva)

22) He defeated Dronācārya in another battle. (Sloka 27, Chapter 157, Droṇa Parva)

23) He became moody when Ghatotkacan was killed. (Sloka 27, Chapter 103, Droṇa Parva)

24) He made Karna swoon in a fight. (Sloka 21, Chapter 49, Karna Parva)

25) He withdrew from the battlefield after having been defeated by Ativattāmā. (Sloka 38, Chapter 35, Karna Parva)

26) Karna wounded Yudhishṭhira. (Sloka 33, Chapter 63, Karna Parva)

27) Once Yudhishṭhira scolded Arjuna and the latter greatly offended started to go to the forest and then Yudhishṭhira himself appeased him. (Chapters 63, 70 and 71, Karna Parva)

28) Yudhishṭhira slew Candrasena and Drumarśena who were the guardians of Śalya’s Cakravyūha. (Sloka 52, Chapter 12, Śalya Parva)
230

DHARMAPUTRA

(29) He slew Śalya (Śloka 51, Chapter, 17, Śalya Parva).
(30) He killed the younger brother of Śalya. (Śloka 64, Chapter 17, Śalya Parva).
(31) Durūdhandra at this time went to a lake in Dvarapāya and lay there immersed under water. Yuddhiṣṭhira went there with an army and challenged him for a fight. (Śloka 10, Chapter 61, Śalya Parva).
(32) When Yuddhīṣṭhira won the war he sent Śri Kṛṣṇa to Hastinapura to console Gāndhārī. (Śloka 40, Chapter 62, Śalya Parva).

10) Yuddhīṣṭhira is crowned King. When Yuddhīṣṭhira won the war he sent Nakula to bring Pāṇḍu. He went round the Kurvaṇa battle ground and saw his own kith and kin lying dead and the sight made him faint. After that he went to Dvarāṣṭrā. Gāndhārī cursed him for killing her sons. Gāndhārī gave a piercing look at the nails on the foot of Dwarapāya when he stood before Gāndhārī bowing down. Instantly the nails turned black. Yuddhīṣṭhira gave Īr̥tarāṣṭra the names of all the prominent persons who were killed in the war. Dvarāṣṭrā ordered Yuddhīṣṭhira to perform the obsequies of the dead. It was at this stage that Yuddhīṣṭhira came to know from Kunti that Kṛṣṇa was his brother. Yuddhīṣṭhira wept bitterly when he knew the secret from his mother and cursed womankind as a whole, stating that woman would thereafter be incapable of keeping a secret for herself. The news of the death of Kṛṣṇa gave Yuddhīṣṭhira a sudden mental turn-back to Yuddhīṣṭhira and he decided to renounce all and go to the forest. He called aside his followers and announced his decision to them. At that time Vyāsa came there and preached to him about the predestined nature of life. Yuddhīṣṭhira then asked him what he should do for the atonement of the sins committed. Though he strongly desired to go to the forest Vyāsa and Śri Kṛṣṇa did not allow him to do so and sent him all to Hastinapura. When the Pāṇḍavas entered the city the people gave them a rousing reception and Yuddhīṣṭhira was crowned King. (Chapters 10 to 17 of Saṅkīpta Parva, Chapters 12 to 27 Śrī Parva, Chapters 1 to 40 Śrīnāru Parva).

11) Administration. When Yuddhīṣṭhira became King, with the permission of Dvarāṣṭrā, he distributed the various administrative responsibilities among his brothers. He took for himself the task of taking care of their kith and kin and friends. He gave many gifts to the brahmans and other dependants. He once went to Śrī Kṛṣṇa to express his gratitude for him. He visited Bhīma lying on his bed of arrows accompanied by Śrī Kṛṣṇa and his brothers. Bhīma revealed to him the inner import of Rajadharma, Apaḍadhama and Mokṣadhama. Receiving the blessings of Bhīma Yuddhīṣṭhira and his brothers returned to Hastinapura. Yuddhīṣṭhira went to the Himalayas to get riches from Marutta before performing an Aṃavadya Sacrifice. While on his way to the Himalayas he fasted for a night and worshipped Śiva. People like Vyāsa and Śrī Kṛṣṇa partook in the sacrifice. After the sacrifice was over Dvarāṣṭrā wanted to go to forest and sought the approval of Yuddhīṣṭhira to do so. On hearing that Yuddhīṣṭhira wept. But on the advice of Vyāsa he gave his approval for Dvarāṣṭrā to go to forest. Dvarāṣṭrā appealed to him through Vyāsa for funds to perform the obsequies of the dead. Bhīma objected to this but Yuddhīṣṭhira reprimanded him and silenced him and gave Dvarāṣṭrā enough funds for his purposes. Kunti and Gāndhārī accompanied Dvarāṣṭrā to the forest. Yuddhīṣṭhira accompanied by Pāṇḍu and Sahadeva went and saw them in the forests after a few days. (Chapters 41 to 55, Śrīnāru Parva, Chapters 92 from Amūṣīṣa Parva and Aṃvaveda Parva and Chapter 26 from Aṃvaveda Parva).

21) Vīra menge tete ṛṣi kṣetrau. When Dvarāṣṭrā, Gāndhārī and Kunti went to forest Vīdura also accepted manyāsa and left for the forest. There sitting under a tree he started doing penance. After a few days Yuddhīṣṭhira came to the forest to see his mother and others. After spending some time with Dvarāṣṭrā, Gāndhārī and Kunti he went to the place where Vīdura was doing penance. Vīdura started running the moment he set eyes on Yuddhīṣṭhira and the latter ran after him. After some time Vīdura turned back and stood staring at Yuddhīṣṭhira. At that time the soul of Vīdura escaping from his body merged with that of Yuddhīṣṭhira. The body of Vīdura stood stiff and leaned against a tree. Taking him to be dead Yuddhīṣṭhira started to do the funeral rites and then there resounded a voice from heaven saying that Vīdura was not dead. The voice said that Yuddhīṣṭhira was dead. (Chapters 26, Aṃvaveda Parva).

13) The end of Dharmaṇīra. Soon after his return from the forest Nārada came to Hastinapura and told him of the death of Dvarāṣṭrā, Kunti and Gāndhārī in a fire in the forest. Yuddhīṣṭhira performed the obsequies at Hastinapura. It was at this time that the Yadava dynasty perished and Dwārakā was sunk into the ocean. The Pāṇḍavas then crowned Parīkṣit as their successor and entrusted Yuyutsu with the administration of the State till Parīkṣit came of age. Vajra was appointed as chief of Indraprastha. The obsequies of Vāsudeva, Bhārāma and Kṛṣṇa were performed at Hastinapura. Kṛṣṇa’s body was invested as a preceptor to Parīkṣit. After having made all such arrangements the Pāṇḍavas commenced their Mahāprasātha. The five Pāṇḍavas and Pāṇḍūli started from Hastinapura. A dog also followed them. Yuddhīṣṭhira walked ahead. On the way, one by one, Pāṇḍu, Sahadeva, Nakula, Arjuna and Bhīma fell dead. Alone with a dog to keep company Yuddhīṣṭhira reached a plateau on the top of the Himalayas and there Indra was waiting for him with a chāriot. But Yuddhīṣṭhira said that he would not come to heaven without his wife and brothers. He was then informed that they had already reached heaven. Yuddhīṣṭhira insisted that the dog also should be taken to heaven which Indra bluntly refused. But Yuddhīṣṭhira refused to ascend the chariot without the dog which, he said, had given him company from the start to the finish. The dog then changed itself into Dharmaniva and he complimented him on his sense of justice. When Yuddhīṣṭhira entered heaven he saw Durvūdhana sitting in all luxury and glory. Yuddhīṣṭhira did not like it but Nārada pacified him. Yuddhīṣṭhira saw all his relatives sitting there. A devadātī took him round hell also. When he heard the pitiable groans from there Yuddhīṣṭhira thought his right place was with them. But Indra and Dharmaniva again consoled him. He was given a bath in Aṅkāgarā. He then lost his mortal form and his soul entered Divyaśikṣa.

DHARMAVATI. A wife of Dharmadeva. He got of Dharmavati a daughter Dharmarat. Dharmarat was married to Marci, son of Brahma. (See under Gayatriha.)

DHARMVARTA. A daughter of Dharmavat. (See under Gayatriha.)

DHARMAVYADHA. Though he was born in the caste of foresters he became a sanyasi by following the path of duty and righteousness. In his previous birth he was a Brahmin. He was a friend of a king who was an adept in archery. Once both went on hunting expedition to the forest. The Brahmin sent an arrow as a wild animal but the arrow went and struck a sage who was doing penance under a tree. When the sage was rolling on the arrow he said: "Oh, evil-natured Brahmana, may you be born as a hunter selling flesh in your next life." The Brahmin went and apologized to the sage and craved for pardon. Taking pity on him the sage consoles him by saying that though he would be born as such, he would be a great scholar and attain moksha by doing his duty without ever wavering from it.

The Brahmin was born a hunter in the country of Mithila. He took to looking after his parents as a vow and soon became a top-ranking righteous man. He did his duty to which he was born. He sold meat and earned a living. He never killed or butchered an animal. One day a Brahmin named Kauthaka was doing penance sitting under a tree when a crane perched on the top of its branches defecated the Brahmin's head with its droppings. The Brahmin in rage looked up and his powerful stare burnt the crane and it fell down dead. Leaving that place some time later he went to a house to beg. The lady of the house took note of him; that he would be given alms only after attending to her husband. The Brahmin was not pleased with her reply. Seeing that she added "Please do not look at me like that. I am no crane. To me my husband is supreme." The Brahmin was taken aback when he heard the lady mention the incident of the crane. The lady explained to him that all her powers were due to her devotion to her husband and advised the Brahmin to go and meet Dharmavirdha of Mithila to remove the egoism in him. Obeying her instructions Kauthaka went and accepted Dharmavirdha as his guru. The learned hunter then spoke to Kauthaka about Varadharma, Srigadasa, Rishis and Abhisnu, Mimamsa relating to drama and karma, the importance and glory of Brahmavidyà, the significance of the control of the senses, Triguna, Pranavayu, service to father and mother and many such other things. The egoism of Kauthaka was removed and he returned home. Devoted to his parents he attained heaven. (Chapters 27 to 33, Vana Parva.)

DHARMAYU. A king of the Prû family. His father was Raudráva, the son of Pûru and his mother was a celestial woman Mûraketi. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 11.)

DHÄRSTAVAMSA. A particular family of kings of the Ikśvaku Dynasty. This family originated from Dhṛṣṭa, the brother of Ikšvaku. So this family is called Dhârṣṭavamsa (Devi Bhagavata, Skanda 7).

DHÂTI. I.

1) General information. One of the twelve Adityas. (See Divâdhádityas and Aditya).
2) Other details: (1) At the burning of Khândava forest among the gods who came against Sri Râma and Arjuna, there was Dhâti also. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 266, Stanza 34).
(2) Dhâti gave Subrahmanya five followers named Kunda, Kusuma, Kumuda, Daśibara and Adambbara as gift. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45 Stanza 39).

DHÂTI. II. It is seen in Viñu Purâna, Amrata, Chapter 10, that two sons named Dhâti and Vîdhâta and a daughter Lakshmi were born to Bhagru, the son of Brahma, by his wife Khyâti. Of them Dhâti and Vîdhâta married Yayâti and Niyaâti, the daughters of Mru. Laksmi became the wife of Mahâvîna.

DHÂTREYIKÂ. A maid of Pâñcâlî during the time of the forest life of the Pândavas. It was this maid who informed the Pândavas that Jayadratha had kidnapped Pâñcâlî. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 269, Stanza 16).

DHÂTU (S). (Minerals). To understand the Purânic stories regarding the origin of iron, copper, tin etc. see under Druma (iron).

DHÂUMRAKA. An ancient hermit. He was one of the hermits who visited Bhishma in his bed of arrows. (M.B. Sûnti Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 11).

DHÂUMYA I. A hermit.
1) General information. This hermit was the younger brother of Devâla, a hermit. The Pândavas, who escaped from burning in the Lanka house, reached the banks of the Ganges when this hermit was performing penance in the holy tirtha of Ukoâ. Arjuna defeated Citraratha, a Gandharva. After that Citraratha and Arjuna became friends. The Gandharva advised him that a priest was unavoidable and that the Pândavas should accept the hermit Dhâumya who was doing penance in the Ukoâasara as their priest. Accordingly the Pândavas accepted Dhâumya as their priest. From that day onwards in everything the Pândavas did, Dhâumya was their priest. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 192).
2) Other details. (1) After the Svayamvara of Pâñcâlî, Dhâumya performed the marriage ceremony for each of the Pândavas from Drumarûtra to Sâhadeva separately with Pâñcâlî. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 197).
(2) When sons were born to the Pândavas, Dhâumya performed the rites of investiture etc. with the Bhrumca string etc. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 220, Stanza 87).
(3) Dhâumya was the chief priest who performed the rites of sacrifice at the Râjâśûga of Yudhishthira. He anointed Yudhishthira as King. (M.B. Subha Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 10).
(4) When the Pândavas started for forest life, Dhâumya walked in front of them with Krishna in his hands, singing Yamasâma and Rudrasma songs. (M.B. Subha Parva, Chapter 80, Stanza 8).
(5) Once Dhâumya talked about the attributes of the Sun and advised Drumarûtra to worship the Sun. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 3).
(6) In the forest Dhâumya rendered powerful the illusive and magical arts of Kîrmira, an asura (demon). (Mahâbhârata, Vana parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 29).
(7) Dhâumya described to Drumarûtra the importance of several holy tirthas or Baths. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 87 to 90).
(8) On another occasion Dhâumya described to Drumarûtra the motions of the Sun and the Moon. and the positions of Viṣṇu and Brahmā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 162).
(9) When Jayadratha had stolen Pāñcālī, Dhaumya blamed him and tried to recover Pāñcālī. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 230, Stanza 26).
(10) Dhaumya advised the Pândavas how to preserve pseudonymity in the capital of Viṣṇu. (M.B. Viṣṇu Parva, Chapter 4).
(11) When the Pândavas started their life incognito, Dhaumya performed the rite of Agnistoma and uttered the Veda mantras for their prosperity, recovery of kingdom and victory in the world etc. When they started Dhaumya took the fire with obligations and went to the country of Pāñcāla. (M.B. Viṣṇu Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 54).
(12) After the bhārata battle, Dhaumya performed the funeral ceremonies, offerings etc. of the relatives of the Pândavas. (M.B. Śrī Parva, Chapter 24).
(13) After Dharmaputra was anointed King, Dhaumya disclosed to him the secrets of righteousness. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 15).

DHAUMYA II. In the Purāṇas we see another hermit with the name Dhaumya. In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 112, it is mentioned that this hermit was the brother and teacher of hermit Upamanyu. He had been keeping contact with Dyumatsena, the father of Satyavān. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 298, Stanza 19). Other names such as Ayodhya Dhaumya, Ayodhya Dhaumya, Ayodha Dhaumya, Ayodha Dhaumya etc. are used for this Dhaumya. (For those see under Ayodhya Dhaumya).

DHAUTAMULAKA. A king born of a dynasty of China. (Mahābhārata, Dvīpaga Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 14).

DHAVALAGIRI. (Śrīva Parvata). A mountain. Arjuna once encamped in this mountain. (Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, Chapter 27, Stanza 29).

DHENU. See under Surabhi.

DHENUKA.

1) General information. A fierce Rākuṇa (giant) with the figure of a donkey. He lived in the forest of Kāli (Tal). People did not dare to pass by that way fearing this giant. Hearing about him, Śri Kṛṣṇa and his elder brother Balabhadra Rāma went to the forest. There were several palm trees in the forest, the fruits of which they shook with force. Hearing the noise Dhenuka ran to them. Balabhadra and Śri Kṛṣṇa beat the giant to death.

2) Other details. (1) In Bhāgavata, Sandha 10, it is stated that Pralambaka, Cāritha, Trāṇārata, Ćusṭika, Ārīṣṭaka, Keśi, Dhenuka and others were the followers of Kaṇsas.

(2) In Bhāgavata, Sandha 10, there is another story that while Balabhadra Rāma, Śri Kṛṣṇa and the other cowherds were looking after the cows an asura entered into the midst of the flock, in the shape of a cow (Dhenu). Rāma and Kṛṣṇa saw him, struck him against a tree and killed him.

DHENUKAM. An ancient country in Bhārata. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 50, Stanza 51).

DHENUKAŚRAMA. A holy place. Once the god of Death Yama took the shape of a man and did penance in this place. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 54, Stanza 8).

DHENUTIRTHA. A holy place. If gingelly (tila) is offered as gift in this holy place, one would get redemption from all sins. (Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 87).

DEHMĀN. Second son of Purūravas. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 76, Stanza 24).

DIHRAUGH. A brahmin devotee of Śiva. He lived in Kāśi. Because he meditated on Śiva alone, Śiva was pleased with him and helped him in various ways. The āghas of Śiva were amazed at Śiva’s partiality for Dihridagh. Paramānanda told them the story of the former birth of Dihridagh. “This Brahmin was a swan in his former life. Once he was flying over a lake when he became tired and fell down. His colour became black. Then Kamalini, another swan who dwelt in the same lake told him to recite the tenth Chapter of Gītā, and to meditate on Śiva. Because the swan did that holy act, he was born a Brahmin in his next birth. Though he was a Brahmin in his previous birth, he kicked his teacher and for that fault he had to take birth as a swan. Later, because of the love of Śiva, Dihridagh attained heaven.” (Padma Purāṇa, Uttar Khaṇḍa, Chapter 184).

DIRGOSI. A god concerned with Śrīdīha (offering to the males). (Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 32).

DHISAÑA. The wife of Haviḍhāna born in the dynasty of the emperor Pr∂hū. Dhiṣṭuṣī was born from fire. (Six sons, Prachānabharus, Śūkra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vrata and Ajina, were born to Haviḍhāna by his wife Dhiṣṭuṣī born of fire. (Agni Parāṇa Chapter 18).

DHRESHACA. A son of Vaśīvadvat Manu. Ikavā, Nabhāga, Dhṛṣṭa, Saryāni, Nārisyanta, Prāśaka. Nṛga, Dīnha, Kaviṣa and Pradha were the sons of Vaśīvadvat Manu. (Bhāgavata, Sandha 8).

DHRSTABUDDHI. A Vaśīya who attained heaven by performing the fast of Vaśākha Vrata. He lived in the country of Bhadravatī, on the bank of the River Sarasvatī. The name of the king of the country was Dhrstabuddhi. Dhanapāla, a Vaśīya of that country had five sons: Sūmanas, Dvīpānā, Medhīvat, Śūkra and Dhrstabuddhi. The last of them turned out to be a wicked man. Going after many women, keeping company with wicked people, gambling, wandering about in search of harlots, not venerating Gods, Men of or Brahmanas, wasting the money of his father, eating untouchable food, drinking liquor and such other acts, he indulged in. Once he was seen walking in the street with his hand on the shoulder of a harlot. So his father turned him out of the house. He was discarded by his relatives too. He sold the ornaments he had on his body. When that was finished the harlots also evaded him. He became a destitute having no money or clothes. When he became tired with hunger and thirst he began stealing in that city. The King’s men caught him. They chained him and scourged him. Finally, he went to the forest and with a bow and arrows he lived by hunting. Dhrstabuddhi happened to reach the hermitage of Kaundinya. It was the last month of Vaśākha. While Kaundinya was coming from the Ganges, having taken bath, a drop of water fell on Dhrstabuddhi from the wet cloth of the hermit, and consequently his sins were washed off. He fell before the hermit and requested him to instruct him in the way of attaining heaven.
The hermit advised him to observe the fast of Vaiśākhā subhākāsāi known as Mohini. Accordingly he observed the fast and became airless. Invested with a divine form he entered the realm of Viṣṇu. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttara Khandā, Chapter 51).

DHṛṣṭadyumna

The son of King Drupada. He was brother of Pāncali.
1) Both Drupada and Drona were fellow students. After finishing his education Drupada became king. When Drona came to his palace Drupada did not honour him. Drona got angry, went to Hastinapur and began to teach the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas princes in archery and other weapons. When the weapon-training was over, Arjuna, at the instruction of Drona, defeated and captured Drupada. Drona seized half of his king-don from him.

As Drupada was not powerful to wreak vengeance on Drona, he performed a sacrifice to obtain a son who could take revenge on Drona and regain his lost prestige. A son and a daughter were born from the sacrificial fire. The son was named Dhṛṣṭadyumna.
The daughter grew up and became the famous Pāncali.
The Pāṇḍavas married her.

At the time of birth, Dhṛṣṭadyumna had a crown on his head, and armour on his body, bow, arrows and sword in his hands. He ran out of the fire into a charnel and sat in it as if he were about to begin a travel of conquest. Seeing this the Pāṇḍavas were filled with joy. There was a celestial voice: “This boy will destroy the fear of the Pāṇḍavas. He is born to slay Drona.” At this time the queen approached the sacrificing priest with a request that the children born of the sacrificial fire should consider her as their mother.
Accordingly the children accepted the wife of Drupada as their mother Brāhmaṇas named the boy Dhṛṣṭa-dyumna and the girl Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 186). (For more particulars see under ‘Pāncali’ Para 2).

2) Tūlī the battle of Bhārata. The history of Dhṛṣṭa-dyumna till the battle between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas, is given below.

The news that Dhṛṣṭadyumna was born to kill Drona grew everywhere. The Broad-minded Drona did not seem to mind this news. Drona took Dhṛṣṭadyumna to his house, with the permission of Drupada and gave him training in the wielding of weapons. He believed that God’s will could not be thwarted. After he had learned archery Dhṛṣṭadyumna returned to his kingdom.

Next, we see Dhṛṣṭadyumna at the svayamvara (marriage) of Pāncali. Several kings arrived from various countries on that occasion. When the suspicious moment came, Dhṛṣṭadyumna brought Pāncali to the nuptial dais. He proclaimed the rules and conditions that the competitors of Svayamvara had to observe. After that he conversed with each king who was present. In the Svayamvara Pāncali accepted Arjuna. The Pāṇḍavas and Pāṇḍali were given the Kumbhakāra mandira (the Palace of Kumbhakāra) which stood in the city of Drupada, to stay for that night.

Though the Pāṇḍavas were in the guise of Brāhmaṇas, Dhṛṣṭadyumna had his own doubts about their identity.

So he hid himself somewhere in the Palace and kept an eye on them. This shows his peculiar trait of observation. After this he returned to his Palace and pacified his father who had been much worried about his daughter’s selection.

Next, we see Dhṛṣṭadyumna, during the time of the forest life of the Pāṇḍavas. He consoled Pāncali, who was miserable. After that he took the sons of Pāncali, to his house. While the Pāṇḍavas were living in the forest ‘Kumayaka’, Dhṛṣṭadyumna visited them. The forest life of the Pāṇḍavas came to an end. A battle between the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas became inevitable. Then the Pāṇḍavas selected Dhṛṣṭadyumna, as the commander-in-general of their army. He ordered for a general parade of the army and gave them instructions. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 166 to 195;
the whole of Sabhā Parva; Vana Parva, Chapters, 12, 22 and 51; Virāṇa Parva, Chapter 72; Udyoga Parva, Chapters 50, 157, 163 and 164).

3) Dhṛṣṭadyumna in the Bhārata battle. The play shared by Dhṛṣṭadyumna in the battle is given below:
(1) In the first day’s battle Dhṛṣṭadyumna confronted Drona. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 31).
(2) Fought with Bhīma. (M.B. Bhīma Parva,
Chapter 47, Stanza 31).
(3) On the second day of the battle he fought the disposition of the army called the ‘Krautcarupsayūka’ (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 49, Stanza 42).
(4) A terrible fight ensued between Drona and Dhṛṣṭadyumna (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 53).
(5) He fought with Asvatthāmā. (M.B. Bhīma Parva,
Chapter 46, Stanza 19).
(6) He killed Damana the son of Paurava. (M.B.
Bhīma Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 20).
(7) He killed the son of Saśya. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 29).
(8) He fought with Śalya and was wounded. (M.B.
Bhīma Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 8).
(9) He formed the disposition called the ‘Makara Vyuha’. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 4).
(10) He shot the missile called Prano-hana (the arrow of jainting) and the Kauravas swooned. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 47, Stanza 45).
(11) He was defeated by Drona. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 77, Stanza 69).
(12) He defeated Durudrodhana. (M.B. Bhīma Parva,
Chapter 46, Stanza 53).
(13) He fought with Vinda and Aravinda. (M.B.
Bhīma Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 61).
(14) He fought with Kṛtvāvāra. (M.B. Bhīma
Parva, Chapter 100, Stanza 9).
(15) He again fought with Bhīma. (M.B. Bhīma Parva, Chapter 114, Stanza 39).
(16) There was a combat with Drona again. (M.B.
Drona Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 48).
(17) He fought with Susarma. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 37).
(18) He fought with Durmukha. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 4).
(19) He killed Candravarma and Bhṛhat kastra, King of Nisadha. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 35, Stanza 61).
(20) He made Drona swoon by shooting arrows at him and got into his chariot and sat there. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 56).
(21) In the fight which continued Drona defeated Dhīrāyudhunā. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 71).
(22) In the fight with Aśvatthāma, Dhīrāyudhunā was defeated. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 160, Stanza 41).
(23) He killed Druṣmasena. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 22).
(24) He was defeated by Karna. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 173, Stanza 7).
(25) He vowed that he would kill Drona. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 46).
(26) In the fight that followed he cut off the head of Drona. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 192, Stanza 62).
(27) Following this, he annihilated the elephants of the Kauravas under the command of Kṛṣṇāvarman swoon. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 22).
(28) He fought with Karna. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 59, Stanza 7).
(29) In the battle with Aśvatthāma, the Kauravas caught Dhīrāyudhunā alive. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 59, Stanza 39).
(30) He happened to enter the camp of Duṣśasana but escaped. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 61, Stanza 33).
(31) In the night, while Dhīrāyudhunā was sleeping Aśvatthāma kicked him to death. (M.B. Sauptika Parva, Stanza 26).
(32) The funeral of Dhīrāyudhunā was conducted according to rites. (M.B. Śīrśa Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 36).
(33) The Pāṇḍavas conducted mourning and offering to the deified ancestors for Dhīrāyudhunā. (M.B. Śīrśa Parva, Chapter 42, Stanza 4).
(34) After death the spirit of Dhīrāyudhunā was absorbed in the Fire-God. (M.B. Svaragārōhana Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 21).

DHĪRĀYUDHUNĀ. A king of the Yāṣṭi family, (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

DHĪRĀYUKETU I. A prince who was the son of Dhīrāyudhunā and the grandson of King Droupāda. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278).

DHĪRĀYUKETU II. A king of the family of Yāṣṭi. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

DHĪRĀYUKETU III. The son of Śiśupāla, the King of Cedi. The deed of notification from Mahābhārata about this King are given below.
(1) Dhīrāyuketu was the birthright of Anuñāda, the son of Hiraṇyakaśipu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 7).
(2) Dhīrāyuketu was anointed as King after the death of Śiśupāla. (M.B. Sahāsā Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 56).
(3) After the death of his father, Dhīrāyuketu became a tributary King of the Pāṇḍavas (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 2).
(4) Dhīrāyuketu had a sister named Kārṇapūrṇa. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Stanza 40).
(5) During the Bhāratāyuvās, Dhrīṣṭaketa supplied the Pāṇḍavas with an aśvānāuta (21,870 elephants, 21,870 chariots, 65,610 horses and 109,530 infantry) (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Stanza 7).
(6) Dhrīṣṭaketa was appointed as one of the seven commanders-in-chief of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 157, Stanza 11).
(7) On the first day of the battle of Bhāratā, Dhrīṣṭaketa, confronted Bālikā. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45).
(8) He fought with Bhūrītāvas. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 84).
(9) Dhrīṣṭaketa fought with Paurava. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 116, Stanza 13).
(10) Dhrīṣṭaketa fought with the teacher Kṛṣṇa. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 33).
(11) He fought with Anuñād. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 25).
(12) He killed Vṛidhāsura. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 107, Stanza 17).
(13) He fought with the teacher Drona and was killed in the fight. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 125, Stanza 25).
(14) Among the spirits of those relatives of the Kauravas, who died in the Bhāratā-yuvās, which were evoked to the surface of the Ganges, by Vāsā, the spirit of Dhrīṣṭaketa also appeared. (M.B. Āṣāmavāsikā Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 11).
(15) After his death Dhrīṣṭaketa became a Viśvadeva in heaven. (M.B. Svaragārōhana Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 33).
(16) Vāśā has used the following names in his Bhāratā for Dhrīṣṭaketa: Cālidya, Cēḍi, Cēḍipati, Cēḍipūrva, Cēḍirā, Sañjīpūri, Siṣṇupālīnajaya.

DHĪṢṬI. The second son of Vaśvatavā Manu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 15).

DHĪṢṬI. II. A Pāṇi-pati who was the son of Kavi. He was learned in Vedas. (M.B. Atiṣāsana Parva, Chapter 85, Stanza 133).

DHĪṬI. One of the eight ministers of Daśaratha. Jayanta, Dāruji, Vījaya, Anudūrtha, Arthasaṭaka, Aśoka, Mantrapāla and Sumantra were the eight ministers of Daśaratha. (Vālmīki Rāmāyana, Sarga 7).

DHĪṬADEVA. Daughter of King Devaka. Vasudeva married this princess. Vījyāja was the son born to the couple. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

DHĪṬAIKETU. A king of the Bhīrgu family. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 9).

DHĪṬĀRAŚṬI. I. Father of the Kauravas.
1) Genealogy. (See the genealogy of Arjuna).
2) Birth. Santānu, a king of the Lunar dynasty, had two wives Gaṅgā and Satyavati. Gaṅgā gave birth to eight sons. But seven of them were thrown into the river Gaṅgā. Giving the eighth son Bhīṣma to Santānu Gaṅgā disappeared. Santānu then married Satyavati, a fisher-woman. Satyavati gave birth to two sons, Citrāṅgada and Vicīraśtvra. When Santānu grew old, Citrāṅgada was anointed as King, as Bhīṣma had taken Brahmavātī (vow of celibacy). Once when Citrāṅgada went to the forest for hunting, a Gana of the name Citrāṅgada killed him. So Vicīraśtvra became the King of Hastinapura. Bhīṣma took the three daughters of the King of Kṣi, Ambā, Ambikā and Ambalikā by force into his chariot and brought the last two, to Hastinapura to be given as wives to Vicitravirya. On the way he sent Ambika back. Vicitravirya married Ambika and Ambikā. But shortly after that he also died, before any children were born to him. Fearing that the Lankas might come to an end, Sâyavati brought her son Vedavayā, who was born to her from her first husband Parīkṣa, before her marriage, to Hastinapura. In the night Sâyavati sent Ambikā adorned with ornaments and costly garments, to the bedroom of Vyāsa. But she could not bear to lie with Vyāsa who was clad in barks of the tree and wearing matted hair. Still thinking that it was not right on her part to stand against the wish of her mother, she approached Vyāsa and lay with him with closed eyes. Ambikā became pregnant. The child she gave birth to, was blind. That child was Dhrēśṭhāra. Not long after, Ambikā approached Vyāsa. When she saw Vyāsa she turned pale at his unseemly figure and her face became bloodless. So the child born to her was pale and was called Pāṇḍu. Next night the maid of the queen approached Vyāsa with a joyful heart and so she got Vyāsa as son, who was extremely wise and intelligent. Thus Dhrēśṭhāra, Pāṇḍu and Vicitravirya became sons of the same father. (M.B. A. Parva, Chapters 63 and 106)

3) Up to marriage. After the birth of Dhrēśṭhāra Vyāsa returned to forest and since then Bhīṣma stood in place of father to the children. Bhīṣma performed Upanayana (initiation with Brahma-streng) and other rites of the children. Dhrēśṭhāra, Pāṇḍu and Vicitravirya had their education in Hastinapura. (M.B. A. Parva, Chapter 108)

"Dhrēśṭhāra, Pāṇḍu and the wise Vidura. The three were brought up as sons by Bhīṣma. They became well educated, cultured and devotional; Respectful towards vassals and friends, and of good physique, earnest in work. And they became valiant youths. Learned in Vedas and Vedas of archery, Chādīnī, shield and swords play. Elephant-keeping, laws of chaukst, Veda-sāstra, allied works and epic and Purāṇas. Pāṇḍu came out expert archer. Dhrēśṭhāra the strongest of all. None in the three worlds was equal to Vidura. In wisdom and knowledge and righteousness." (M.B. A. Parva, Chapter 108).

Because of his blindness Dhrēśṭhāra was not anointed as king. It is stated in M.B. A. Parva, Chapter 108 stanza 25, that in the place of Dhrēśṭhāra, Pāṇḍu was anointed the king.

4) Marriage and birth of children. Dhrēśṭhāra came of marriage-age. Bhīṣma had heard about Gandhārī, daughter of Subala, the King of Gandhāra, as a beautiful and good woman. Moreover she had acquired a boon from Siva that hundred sons would be born to her. Bhīṣma sent a messenger to Subala with a request to give Gandhārī as wife to Dhrēśṭhāra. Subala was not much pleased at the aspect of getting a blind man as son-in-law. Still by thought of his prestige his family would get the Vedas and Vedas of archery along with the kings of the Paurṇa dynasty, and finally agreed. Gandhārī submitted to the will of her father, and went to live with a husband who was blind. She tied her eyes with a cloth. Sakuni the son of Subala brought Gandhārī to Hastinapura, and gave her to Dhrēśṭhāra. With the sanction of Bhīṣma their marriage took place.

Once Gandhārī fancied Vyāsa who came tired with hunger and thirst. The hermit was pleased with her and blessed her to have hundred sons. Gandhārī became pregnant. But even after two years no delivery took place. She crushed her womb by force and a lump of flesh came out. At that time Vyāsa came there. He cut the lump into hundred pieces and kept them in ghee-pots. Gandhārī had a desire to get a daughter also. Vyāsa who had known it had cut the lump in such a way that there was a small piece in excess. The pots broke by themselves in due course and hundred sons and a daughter were born. The daughter was named Dūśālā. A son named Yuvāstra also was born to Dhrēśṭhāra of a Vaiśya woman. Duryodhana was the eldest of the hundred sons. The children grew up. Dūśālā was given in marriage to Jayadratha, the King of Sinthu.

5) Tīl Bhīṣma-battle. At this juncture Pāṇḍu incurred a curse from a hermit that he would die if his wife touched him. With that Pāṇḍu retired to forest with his wife. Dhrēśṭhāra was granted the separation of his brother. Pāṇḍu died in the forest and Maṛūj jumped into fire and died with her husband. Dhrēśṭhāra asked Vidura to perform their cremation rites. After that Yudhishṭhira became king. The Pāṇḍavas became more and more prosperous. This made the heart of Dhrēśṭhāra cloudy. He gave sanction to Duryodhana to transfer the Pāṇḍavas to the lac house in Vaibhīṣṭha. The Pāṇḍavas caught fire and it was rumoured that the Pāṇḍavas died in the lac house fire, and Dhrēśṭhāra shed crocodile tears, and ordered for the mourning and oblation to be performed. After the marriage of Pāṇḍavas, it came to be known that the Pāṇḍavas were alive and that they were living with Drupāda. Duryodhana recalled them and gave them half of the country. The Pāṇḍavas made Indraprastha their capital and began to rule the kingdom. Yudhishṭhira performed the sacrifice of Rājaśāva (royal consecration). Dhrēśṭhāra also took part in the sacrifice.

Duryodhana wanted to challenge Yudhishṭhira to a game of dice. Dhrēśṭhāra agreed but advised Duryodhana not to live in enmity with the Pāṇḍavas. The game of dice was played, and Yudhishṭhira lost everything the Pāṇḍavas had. Dhrēśṭhāra called Pāṇḍavas and told her that she might ask any boon. She requested that her husband Bharmaputtara might be exempted from servitude and the Pāṇḍavas made free. Dhrēśṭhāra compelled her to ask for more boons. She replied that according to law Vaiśyas were eligible for one boon, Kṣatriya women two boons, Kings three boons and Brāhmaṇas hundred boons, and since she had already taken two boons, she wanted no more. Dhrēśṭhāra who was pleased at this reply gave the Pāṇḍavas freedom and returned all their lost wealth.

Duryodhana wanted to challenge the Pāṇḍavas for a game of dice again. Dhrēśṭhāra agreed. This time also Yudhishṭhira lost the game. The Pāṇḍavas who had lost everything, were ordered to go to forest for twelve years and to live incognito for one year. The Pāṇḍavas went to the forest with Pāricāli. Dhrdrāstṛa was grieved. After thirteen years the Pāṇḍavas returned. Duryodhana said that Dhrdrāstṛa and his Vīvarūpa (cosmic form) to see which, Kṛṣṇa gave him sight for the time being for which Dhrdrāstṛa was very much. The Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas came to Kurukṣetra for the Bharata-battle. Dhrdrāstṛa called Sañjaya to him and asked him about the preparations the parties had made for war. Sañjaya gave a true description of the battle arrays of both parties. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Sañjaya Parva, Vana Parva, and Udyoga Parva).

(6) Dhrdrāstṛa and the battle of Bhrāṣṭra. The terrible battle began. The heart of Dhrdrāstṛa was grieved with sorrow. When Arjuna vowed that he would kill Jaya-dratha, Dhrdrāstṛa cried aloud. When he knew that Śaṭyaki had destroyed the army of the Kauravas he became dumb with grief. He praised Bhūma’s valour and blamed his sons. When Sañjaya told him about the fall of Karna, Dhrdrāstṛa fell down unconscious and rose up again as he heard noises from the battlefield. He fell down again when he knew that Śaṭyaki and Duryodhana were killed. He rose again and cried for a long time. He gathered the women-folk, his people and went to the battlefield. He broke the metal statue of Bhūna and embraced the Pāṇḍavas. He asked Yudhishthira to do the mourning and offerings for the dead. It was done accordingly.

The Pāṇḍavas were scattered. But Dhrdrāstṛa scolded them. Dhrdrāstṛa and Gāndhārī were greatly depressed and asked Yudhishthira to permit them to live in forest. Yudhishthira tried to prevent it. He kissed on the head of Yudhishthira. Seeing that they did not eat food he asked them to eat. Yudhishthira saw that they would eat only if he permitted them to live in forest. At last Yudhishthira agreed. Dhrdrāstṛa accepted money from Dharmarāja and performed mourning and offerings for the dead on a large scale. (M.B. Drona Parva, Karṇa Parva, Sṛi Parva, Sānti Parva and Ārama-vāsikā Parva).

(7) Journey to forest and death. Afterwards Dhrdrāstṛa and Gāndhārī went to forest. Kunti followed them. All the subjects followed them a long way. Crying, Dhrdrāstṛa sent them back and entrusted the teacher Kṛpa and Yuyutu with the Pāṇḍavas. Dhrdrāstṛa, Gāndhārī and Kunti lived on the Ganges. From there they came to Kurukṣetra and lived in the hermitage of Śatya-pura for a time. During that period Nārada visited them. The Pāṇḍavas and the subjects visited them again. Yāsā also came there. He took Dhrdrāstṛa and the rest of them to the river Ganges and evoked the spirits of those who died in the battle. Yāsā gave Dhrdrāstṛa divine eye to see the departed spirits. After this, at the request of Yāsā they all returned. Dhrdrāstṛa, Gāndhārī and Kunti went to Guṇga-dvāra and performed severe penance and were burnt to death in a wild fire. The relatives put their remains in the Ganges. The spirits of the three Dhrdrāstṛa, Gāndhārī and Kunti entered the realm of Kubera. (M.B. Ārama-vāsikā Parva, Svagrāhāṇa Parva).

8) The names of Dhrdrāstṛa. Ājāmudā, Ambikāsūta, Ambikayā, Bhārata, Bhara-ćārdūla, Bharata-srēṣṭha, Bharatamahā, Bharatāś-grey, Kaurava, Kauravāś-grey, Kāraucūda, Kauravā, Kauravā, Kurusśādūla, Kurusūstra, Kurudvāna, Kurunandana, Kururaja, Kuruvati-svadhanā, Kuruvyudha, Vaicitravīrṣa, Prajñākāsusa etc. have been used as synonyms of Dhrdrāstṛa.

DHRDRASTRA II. A serpent born to Kācyapa Prājapati by his wife Kudrū. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Sañjaya Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 9, that this serpent was in the Durbar of Varuna and worshiped him. During the time of emperor Pithu, devas (gods), asuras (demons) and Nāgas (serpents) milked the earth, and the person who milked for the Nāgas was the serpent Dhrdrāstṛa. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 69).

It is stated in Mahābhārata, Karna Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 28, that once this Nāga was admitted into the chariot of Siwa. When Banādhra Rāma, discarding his body and went to Pātañjali gether world, several serpents came to greet him. Dhrdrāstṛa was one of them. (M.B. Mañcālī Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 15).

DHRDRASTRA III. A deva gandharva, (Same-god).
Some information. (1) This deva gandharva was the son of the hermit Kācyapa by his wife Muni. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Stanza 15).
(2) He took part in the birth-celebration of Arjuna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 55).
(3) He went to the presence of King Marutta as a messenger of Indra. (M.B. Āvavasī Parva, Chapter 107, Stanza 2).
(4) It was this Gandharva who had taken birth as Dhrdrāstṛa, the father of Duryodhana. (M.B. Svagāra-ṭapa Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 13).

DHRDRASTRA IV. A king who was the son of Jana-māyā and the grandson of Kuru, a king of the Lunar dynasty. He had eleven sons: Kuntīkṣa and others. (M.B. Chapter 94, Stanza 56.)

DHRDRASTRA V. One of the famous sons of Vāsuki. There is a story about this nāga (serpent) in Jaimini, Āvavasī Parva, Chapter 39.

After the Bhārata-battle, Yudhishthira performed horse sacrifice. Arjuna led the sacrificial horse. He traveled far and wide and reached Manuṣi. At the instruction of Ulpī, Bābhuruvāna confronted his father. A terrible fight ensued and Bābhuruvāna cut off the head of Arjuna. Cīrāṅgādā went to Bhābhuruvāna to the ‘Nāgākola’ (the world of serpent) to bring the jewel ‘Mṛtaṇjīvaṇi’ to restore her husband to life. The keeper of this jewel, which was under the custody of the serpent Śena was Dhrdrāstṛa, the son of Vāsuki.

Knowing that it was not easy to get the jewel, Bābhuruvāna fought with Dhrdrāstṛa. After a terrible fight he got the jewel. But Dhrdrāstṛa, who did not want Arjuna to come to life again, stole the head of Arjuna, by the help of his sons and threw it into the hermitage of Dālbhya.

DHRDRASTRAṬI. A daughter born to Tāmrā the wife of Kācyapa Prājapati. Tāmrā had five daughters: Kruññā, Śūṣi, Śrūṣi, Dhrdrāstṛa and Sūk. Of these, from Kruññā, the eagle and vulture from Śrūṣi, the swan and the ruddy goose from Dhrdrāstṛa were born in the world. (This occurs in Vālmīkī Rāma-yaṇya, Aranyaka Ḍanda, Sarga 14).

DHR&TASENA. A king who took the side of the Kauravas. (M.B. Sālīya Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 3).

DHRTAVARMA The brother of Suvarṇā, the king of Trigarta, and Ketuvarṇā. Arjuna led the sacrificial horse of Advamedha performed by Yudhiṣṭhira after the Bharata war. Sūryavarṇa, the king of Trigarta, condicted Arjuna and was defeated. Ketuvarṇā who came next was also killed. Dhrtarāṣṭra came next. He showered arrows on Arjuna and inflicted wounds on his hand, and the famous bow, Gandiva fell from his hand. Arjuna grew angry and fought so fiercely that eighteen famous and mighty Trigarta warriors fell. At last Dhrtarāṣṭra fell at the feet of Arjuna and begged for pardon and accepted the supremacy of Yudhiṣṭhira. (M.B. Advamedha Parva, Chapter 74).

DHRTAVRATA. A king of the family of Yayāti. (Bhā gavata, Sankhāra 9).

DHRTI I A daughter of Prajāpati Daksha. She was one of the wives of Dharmarāja. Mādhri the mother of Nakula and Sahadeva, was the rebůl of Dhrti. (M.B.
Adi Parva, Chapter 67). Dhrti had given birth to Nakulama when she was the wife of Dharmarāja, who had married Sādānī, Lakṣmī, Dhrīṣṭi, Tusi, Medhā, Puṣṭi, Kṛṣṇa, Budhī, Lajjā, Vapu, Sānti, Sādānī and Kṛṣṇa, three of the daughters of Dakṣa. Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anna 1, Chapter 7)

DHRTI II. A Vīśvānu god. (M.B. Annāsāna Parva, Chapter 91).

DHRTI III. The son of Vīśvānu, the king of Videha. He was a contemporary of Vyāsa and Vicitravirya the king of the Kurus. Bāḥulasvatva was the son of this Dhrti. (M.B. Ādi Parva).

DHRTIMĀN I. A king of the family of Yayāti. (Bhā gavata, Sankhāra 9).

DHRTIMĀN II. An ancient country in Kuśādvipa
(the island of Kuśa). (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 13).

DHRTIMĀN III. See under Bhūṣabuddhi

DHURVA I. 1) Birth and childhood. Manu Svāyambhūva the son of Brahma, had two sons named Pravrata and Utanāpā da. They were mighty heroes and of righteous character. Utanāpāda had two wives, Surucsi and Suntit. Surucsi gave birth to Utamata and Suntit to Dhūrva. Utanāpāda showed more favour towards Utamata and Surucsi. But he looked upon Dhūrva and his mother with disfavour.

Once Utamata sat on the lap of her father when the latter was sitting on the throne. Seeing this, Dhūrva wanted to sit along with his brother. But fearing the displeasure of Surucsi, who was also there, the King did not take Dhūrva on to his lap. Seeing the disfavour of Dhūrva, Surucsi said to him, "Child, if you wish to sit on the lap of your father, you ought to have been born in my womb. You cherish high ambition which you do not deserve." These words of Surucsi were not palatable to Dhūrva who ran to his mother and sat on her lap.
When Suntit knew what had happened he shed tears.
After a few moments Dhūrva stood up and made a vow. "I will get a position unattainable even for my father, by my own endeavour." He then started for the forest. He attained self-renunciation even in childhood becoming a disciple of hermits and performing severe penance.

Dhūrva began penance in the forest of Madhuvana on the river Jamunā. Suntit came and tried to take him to the palace. But he did not return. He intensified his pena ce more and more. At last Mahāviṣṇu appeared before him. Dhūrva requested for a lofty, and eternal place whi would become a prop of the world. As a boon, Viṣṇu pointed out to Dhūrva, a noble place, higher than the planets, stars Saptarṣi (Ursa Major) and the devas who travelled in aeroplanes. Mahāviṣṇu said that Dhūrva would live in a lofty place as a star till the end of the Kalya and his mother Suntit would also remain as a star near Siva as long as Dhūrva lived (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anna 1, Chapters 11 and 12).

2) The previous birth of Dhūrva. Mahāviṣṇu appeared before Dhūrva and revealed his previous birth. Dhūrva was a Brahmin in his previous birth. He used to meditate on Viṣṇu with concentration of mind. In course of time he befriended a prince who was a youth, of beautiful and bright complexion, enjoying all the pleasures of the world. Attracted by the position and looks of the prince, he used to mount on the prince. Mahāviṣṇu granted his wish. Accordingly Dhūrva took his next birth as the son of Utanāpāda.
(Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Anna 1, Chapter 12).

3) The reign and end of Dhūrva. After receiving the boon from Mahāviṣṇu, Dhūrva returned. All who were embraced Dhūrva. Years passed by. Utanāpāda left his kingdom to Dhūrva and became a brother-in-law. Dhūrva became King. The King Dhūrva married Brāhma, the daughter of Sittumāra a Prajāpati. The queen gave birth to two sons Kalpa and Vatsara. Dhūrva married Ila the daughter of Vāyu (wind). She gave birth to a son named Utakala. Utamata remained unmarried.
While he was hunting in the forest a Yaṣṭa (a demi-god) killed him. Surucsi was caught in a fierce fire and died. Hearing about the death of Utamata, Dhūrva took his weapons and reached the realm of the Yaṣastas. He stood in their gate and challenged them for battle. One lac and thirty Yaṣṭas warriors fought with Dhūrva. Dhūrva destroyed the entire army. The Yaṣṭas became illusory and magical arts. Dhūrva overcame that also. At last Kubera himself appeared before Dhūrva and beseeched him. They got him into a plane and placed him in a plane higher than all the planets. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Bhāgavata).

4) The descendants of Dhūrva. Two sons named
Śrī and Dhūrva were born to Dhūrva by his wife Śambhu. Sūcahāya the wife of Śrī gave birth to five sinless sons named Kipu, Kipuṣaṇa, Vipra, Vikula and Vīrakṣa. Rhaṣṭi the wife of Kipu gave birth to Čakṣṣu of extreme height. Manu was born to Čakṣṣu by his wife Paškari the daughter of Vīrakṣapa and included in the children of Varuṇa. Ten sons were born to the bright Manu by his wife Madvala, daughter of Prajāpati Vairāja. These ten bright sons were Kipu, Pūra, Satyadhumā Tapasi, Satyāvan, Śrī, Agrasvata, Aśiṣ, Hitāśa, Hitāśa, and Abhīmaya. Agrasvata, the wife of Kipu gave birth to six children. They were Aśa, Sumanas, Khyāti, Kārtu, Aśgiras and Śiśi. A son named Vena was born to Aśa.
by his wife Sunūtā. Hermita churned the right hand of Vena to obtain children. As a result of churning Vaiṣṇeṣa was born from the right hand of Vena. This king was the famous Prithu. This Prithu milked the earth for the prosperity of his subjects. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Amśa 1, Chapter 13).

5) The place of Dhrūva. The origin of the river Gaṅgā was through the hole at the top of the shell of the mundane egg. It flowed down and fell on the highest part of heaven. That place is called Viṣṇupāda. Sitting in this Viṣṇupāda, Dhrūva does penance to Viṣṇu. This place got the name Dhrūvamāṇḍala. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 8).

DHRUVI. II. He was the son of Nāhusa and the brother of Yayaṭi. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75, Stanza 30).

DHRUVI. III. A king. He sin in the council of Yama and serves him. (M.B. Sāhiṭ Parva, Chapter 8, Stanza 10).

DHRUVI. IV. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pāṇḍavas. He was killed by Bhīma asena. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 155, Stanza 27).

DHRUVI. V. A king who supported Yudhisthira. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 198, Verse 39).

DHRUVI. VI. A son born to Dharmađeva by his wife Dharmā. He was one of the eighty Vaivas (eight Vaivas). (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 19).

DHRUVAKA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Sāliya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 73).

DHRUVARATNA. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Sāliya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 4).

DHRUVASANDHIII. A king of Kosala. During the reign of this king there was prosperity in Ayodhya, and the people were virtuous. This king had two wives: Manorā and Liṅgavati. A son named Sudarśana was born to Manorā. After a month the second wife also gave birth to a son named Śatrughit. The king was much pleased and both sons were brought up alike. As Śatrughit was cleverer than Sudarśana people loved Śatrughit more.

Once Dhrūvasandha went to the forest for hunting and was killed by a lion in the forest. According to the custom Sudarśana became king. Liṅgavati, the mother of Śatrughit was the daughter of the King of Ujjayinī. Her desire was to make Śatrughit the king. Manorā, the mother of Sudarśana was the daughter of the King of Kaṅgā. Hearing about the death of Dhrūvasandha, the kings of Ujjayinī and Kaṅgā arrived at Ayodhya. The king of Ujjayinī got angry because Sudarśana was made king and began war. The king of Kaṅgā took the side of Sudarśana. A terrible battle was fought in Ayodhya as to who should be the heir to the throne. In the battle Yudhajīti, the King of Ujjayinī, killed Virasena, the king of Kaṅgā. Sudarśana and his mother Manorā were in a sorry plight. According to the advice of minister Vidulha, Manorā and Sudarśana fled from the capital. Vidulha and the maid of Manorā accompanied them. In two days they reached Gaṅgāraja. They were caught by fishermen-thieves and they lost everything they had. At last with the help of a boat they crossed the Ganges and reached Trikūṭa. They went to the hermitage of Bhadravāja who was doing penance there. He gave them protection.

After making Śatrughit king, Yudhajīti began to search for Manorā and Sudarśana. He got news that they lived in Citrakūṭa. Yudhajīti went there with an army. But he could not get them out of the hermitage of Bhadravāja. Manorā and Sudarśana lived safely in the hermitage.

Once Vidulha came to the hermitage of Bhadravāja to ensure about Manorā. Seeing the old man the hermit boys called out "Klići Klići!" Prince Sudarśana heard only "Klići". The syllable "Klići" is the spell called 'Kārārāja bijaṁantra'. Without knowing its meaning Sudarśana called out "Klići" several times. With that the prince got a special power.

Six more years passed. The prince became eleven years. By this time Bhadravāja had taught the prince Vedas, Śāstras, etc. The prince was a devotee of Devi. Devi appeared before him and gave him a bowl and a quiver which would never become empty, and an imperishable armament. Sudarśana married Śrī-kāla, the daughter of the king of Kāsā. Kāsā, the king of Śrīgerāpurā, was a friend of Dhrūvasandha. He gave Sudarśana a chariot which Sudarśana rode through the forest. With the help of the king of Kāsā and others Sudarśana recaptured Ayodhya. He made Vidulha his minister and ruled over the country for a long time. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skanda 3).

DHŪMAPA. A set of desired names (pūnas) who form a gana (Siva's hosts of devotees). This Gana is seen to have attended the sacrifice of Dakṣa. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 214, Stanza 9).

DHŪMAPĀDA. A river. (M.B. Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 18).

DHŪMAVAṬṬI. A holy place. The wishers of those who take three days' fast in this holy place are realized. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 22).

DHŪMINI. The wife of King Ajañittha of Pura dynasty. By this wife, a son named Kṣaṇa was born to Ajañittha. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 32).

DHŪMORNA. A king of Yama. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 117, Stanza 9).

DHŪMORNA. II. The wife of hermit Markandeya. (M.B. Aṣṭāsana Parva, Chapter 146, Stanza 4).

DHŪMA. I. Hermit. This hermit was a summary in the Durbar of India. (M.B. Sāliya Parva, Chapter 7).

DHŪMA. II. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Sāliya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 64).

DHŪMA. A king of Prajñatā Dakṣa. She became the wife of Dharmadeva. Two sons, Dhrūva and Dhara, were born to the couple. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 19).

DHŪMARĀKEṢA. I. A Pracetas. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 4).

DHŪMARĀKEṢA. II. The third son of Pṛithu, the son of Vena. Five sons were born to Pṛithu by his wife Arīki. On the death of Pṛithu, his elder brother's son Viśiṣṭa appointed Dhūmarākeṣa as the governor of southern countries. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 4).

DHŪMARĀKETU. A son of Bharata. Five sons named Sunatī, Kṣaprabhṛt, Sudarśana, Varaṇa and Dhūmarāketu were born to Bharata by his wife Patañjali. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 5).

DHŪMARĀKṢA. I. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. (Bhāgavata, Skanda 3).

DHŪMARĀKṢA. II. A minister of Kaṅgā.
Genealogy: Brahmade created the Rāksasa (giant) Heti. The son Viduyutkeśa was born to him of his wife Bhayā. Sukēśa was born to Viduyutkeśa by his wife Sākājānukā. Sukēśa married Devavatī. Three sons, Mālayāvana, Sumāli and Māli were born to the couple. To Sumāli, by his wife Kenuṃa, fourteen children were born: Prahasata, Akampāna, Vikāsa, Kālakāmukha, Dhūmārka, Dā👏, Suptārva, Sādhārā, Pākāvā, Bhāsakarma, Veksa, Puspathaka, Kaikasi, and Kumbhumin. Most of them were ministers of Rāväṇa. (Uttara Ramayana).

DHŪMRAŚVA. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. He was the son of Sūcandra and the father of Saśāyā. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kājñā, Sarga 77).

DHUNDHURA I. A notorious Asura. He was the son of the Madhu Kaṭārhabhas. Brahmade was born in the lotus from the yavī of Viṣṇu, which was lying in meditation on the surface of water. From the ear-wax of Viṣṇu two asuras—Madhu and Kaṭārhabhas sprang up. They terrified Brahmade by shaking the stalk of the lotus. Brahmade became terribly afraid of the asuras and ran about on the surface of water. Hearing the cry of Brahmade, Viṣṇu awoke, but he could not defeat the asuras. Viṣṇu decided to employ Śāma (conciliation) the first expedient. The asuras ordered Viṣṇu to ask of them any boon. Viṣṇu replied, "If it is so, you must be killed by me." They could not but give the boon. They agreed to the request of Viṣṇu and said: "But we must be killed in an atmosphere, which is not cloudy." Viṣṇu killed them when the atmosphere was clear.

A son named Dhundhu had been born to Madhu and Kaṭārhabhas. Because Viṣṇu had killed his fathers Dhumdu decided to take revenge on Viṣṇu and the Gods. With this idea in view Dhundhu began to do penance in the sandy desert of Ujjālaka in Marudhavana. Standing on one leg he did penance for thousands of years. Then Brahmade appeared before him and gave the boon that he would not be killed by Devas, Dānavas (asuras), Ganhāryas (Demi-gods), Rāṣṭrās (demons), Yakkhas (paragods) and Uragas (serpents). Having got this boon, he lived under sand in the desert of Ujjālaka. His idea was to destroy the Gods.

A hermit named Uṭṭakā had erected his hermitage in another part of Marudhavana and began penance. By his penance he made Viṣṇu appear before him and then made a request that Dhundhu’s activities be put a stop to. Viṣṇu replied "Uṭṭakā, Dhundhu has become a curse to the three worlds. There is a king named Kuvalaśva, born of the dynasty of Ikṣvāku. He will kill Dhundhu." Saying these words, Viṣṇu disappeared.

Uṭṭakā went to the palace of Kuvalaśva and told him what Viṣṇu had said. Kuvalaśva and his sons went to the forest and killed Dhundhu in a fight. From that day Kuvalaśva came to be known by the name Dhundhumāra, which meant the killer of Dhundhu. (M.B. Vana Parva, 4 Chapters from 201).

DHUNDHU II. An ancient King who lived on vegetable food only. (M.B. Anuśasana Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 66).

DHUNDHUKA. See under Gokarna.

DHUNDHULI. See under Gokarna.

DHUNDHUMA. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. (See under Kuvalaśva). He was also called Kuvalāyāva.

DHUNDHUMA. A wicked King. Vatālā was his wife. Even on the marriage of his son this wicked King remained indifferent. He indulged in sexual activities with a Śūdra woman. Not much later he killed her. As soon as her brother knew about this he ran to the palace and killed the King Dhundhumaka along with his wife. Because he was killed by a Śūdra, the family of the King faced destruction. His son was also wicked like his father. But on the advice of a sage he began o utter (the five-syllabled and six-syllabled mantras of Siva) in consequence of which, his parents were redeemed. (Lingga Purāṇa).

DHUNDHURA. An Asura. It is stated in Ganeśa Purāṇa that this asura went to the house of Kaṭārva in the shape of a parrot and tried to kill Ganeśa who had incarnated in the house of Kaṭārva, but was killed by him.

DHURANIDHARA. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhima Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 18).

DHURKA. A king of ancient India. (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 238).

DHUTAKA. A serpent born in the family of Kaurava. He fell in the sacrificial fire of King Janamejaya and was burnt to death. (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapter 57, Stanza 13).

DHVAJAVATI. The daughter of the hermit Harimechha, who lived in the sky, according to the order of the Sun. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 13).

DHVAJINI. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bhima Parva, Chapter 83).

DHVANI. The son of Ápa who is one of the eight Vanus. Ápa had four sons called Vālaṇḍa, Śrama, Śantu and Dhvani. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa, Áma 1, Chapter 13).

DHVANYA. A king. He was the son of Lakṣmaṇa. (See Rgveda Index).

DHVASANTI. A hermit of the period of the Rgveda. Ásvinikērav rescued the hermits Turviti, Dahtbī, Dhvansanti and Purusantti from danger. Rgveda, Manuḍa 1, Anuvaṇa 16, Sūkta 112).

DHÝYANA. (Meditation). Even from ancient times the people of Bhrata believed that heaven could be attained by meditation. There are scientific methods of meditating upon God. They are described below:

The root "diyai", means "to think". Dhýyana (meditation) means thinking of God with concentration. God is invisible and featureless. We can meditate only on some material that contains the attributes of God. So dhýyana (meditation) is to fix the mind on the object of meditation, and to imagine that particular object in a particular place and to concentrate the mind upon it. One who custs off his body, while engaged in meditation attains Sāvyutja (oneness with God).
He who can meditate upon God, with concentration of mind even for a moment or two, can attain heaven. The fruits he attains are far greater than the fruits attained by performing great sacrifices and offerings. For meditation, there are four factors: Dhyāna (the act of meditation), Dhyāyas (the object meditated upon) and Dhyānapravijaya (the attainment by meditation). He who indulges in meditation is the meditator. The act done by him is meditation, which is meditated upon the object of meditation. What the meditator obtains as a result of his meditation is the attainment. A meditator should be wise and virtuous, should have attention and patience, devoted to Visnu and always energetic.

We can meditate upon God, walking, standing, sleeping and awake. God should be consecrated in the centre of the lotus chair of the heart and be worshipped with devotional meditation. It is to give practice in fixing the mind firmly on a particular object, that the sages say that some visible material object should be given to meditate upon, in the early stage of meditation. When concentration of mind is obtained by meditating upon a visible object, it will be possible for us to meditate upon an object which is not amenable to our senses. When engaged in meditation we should be thinking "Ahamb Brahma-jyotirman, vande devam vimukta Om" (I am Brahma, the light, the Spirit, Vaisdeva, and Vimukta (having no connection with anything)), OM. (Agni Purana, Chapter 374).

DIBHAKA. A prince who, puffed up by the power of boons and blessings from the gods, tried to harm sage Durvasas. Balabhadra, the son of Durvasas killed him. The following account occurs in the Bhavishya Purana.

Brahmadatta, King of Sālva, had two wives. No children were born to them for several years. Brahmadatta, his minister, Mirasaha, also had no children. Mirasaha was a brahmin and a scholar. On his advice, Brahmadatta, with his wives, went to Kailasa and performed tapas to please Śiva to get children. As a result of ten years' rigorous tapas Śiva was pleased and blessed him that two sons would be born to him. Later his wife gave birth to two sons. The son of the eldest queen was named Hamsa and that of the second queen was named Dibhaka. At this time a son was also born to Mirasaha, the minister by the blessing of Śiva. That child was named Janardana.

Hamsa and Dibhaka were spoiled, but Janardana was a bhakta of Śiva. Hamsa and Dibhaka performed tapas in their childhood to please Śiva and got invincible power and arrows. After that they became lokakṣajakas (tormenters) and went round the world. Once they went to Kailasa's hermitage and destroyed the place of worship. After that they went to the Kailasa of Durvasas. There they tortured the sages and made the sages naked who were wearing only loin cloth. Then they returned.

Enraged by these, sage Durvasas went to Dwāraka taking the destroyed loin-cloth and other articles. Śri Kṛṣṇa and his courtiers stood up and saluted him when they saw Durvasas coming like a mahārāja. Hearing the news, Śri Kṛṣṇa assured him that he would kill Hamsa and Dibhaka and sent him back pacified. Hamsa and Dibhaka began a rājasāya. They sent Janardana to Śri Kṛṣṇa with the message that he should either fight with them or give them tribute (in the form of money). Janardana went to Dwāraka, just as Akhrā, a devotee of Śiva, went to Ambāi with the message of Kamsa. Immediately Kṛṣṇa and Balabhadra with the chief Ministers like Śāyakāi went to Śālva. In the war that followed Śri Kṛṣṇa killed Hamsa and Balabhadra. Bhadrārama killed Dibhaka. (M.B. Bhavishya Parva, Chapter 105-129).

DĪVĪJAYAPARVA, A sub-division of the Sambava Parva of Mahabharata. It comprises of Chapters 25 to 32 of Sambava Parva.

DĪKṢĀ. Dīkṣā is the vratas that expel sin and increase virtue (i.e., wisdom). Those who are to be blessed fall into three categories. The person who belongs to the first category is called Vaijñānakala; the second is Pralayakala; and the third is Sakala. Vaijñānakala is free from sin alone. Pralayakala is free from sins and Karmas. Sakala has everything from Kala to the earth. The Dīkṣās to be practised by the three classes of persons are of different kinds. Dīkṣā is classified into two: (1) Nirādhāra and Shubhāra. Nirādhāra Dīkṣā is performed for the sake of Vaijñānakala and Pralayakala. Sudhāra Dīkṣā is prescribed for the third class of people, the Sakalas.

DILIPA 1. (Kṣatāśa). A mighty king of the Ikṣvaku dynasty.

(1) Genealogy. See Dasaratha's Genealogy.

(2) Reign and Birth of Son. Dilipa is counted as one of the noblest kings. His reign was extremely popular. But even after a long period of married life, he had no issue. His queen was Sudākṣiṇa, the princess of Magadh. In order to get Vasuṣṭi's advice, Dilipa and Sudākṣiṇa went to the sage's hermitage. After hearing about their grievance, Vasuṣṭi mediated for a little while and described why the royal couple were not blessed with children:—"Long ago, Dilipa had paid a visit to Indra. While returning after the visit, he passed by Kāmadhenu who was lying under the shade of Kalpavṛkṣa. He paid no heed to her, as he did not see her. The divine cow (Kāmadhenu) took this as a personal slight to her and cursed the King that he would not have children until he served and propitiated her daughter, Nandini. Neither the King nor his charioteer was aware of the curse. Kāmadhenu has now gone to Pātala (underworld) to attend a sacrifice of Varuṇa. Therefore Dilipa and his queen should attend on and propitiate her daughter, Nandini."

From the next morning the King and queen began to offer their services to Nandini. The King followed her as her shadow. After twentyone days, one morning Nandini went to graze in a dense forest. As usual, the King also followed her. As they reached the middle of the woods, the King was enchanted for a moment by the charm of the Sylvania scenery. Just then, on turning round he saw a lion springing towards Nandini to prey upon her. Suddenly he took up his bow and aimed an arrow at the lion, but to his great amazement, his hands were paralysed. The lion spoke to him as follows:—"O King, you need not exert yourself in vain. I am the servant of Lord Śiva. This holy decodar tree which you see in front of us, was planted and tended by Parvati. My task is to protect this tree. Parvati and lord Siva have authorized me to kill and eat the animals which come this way. Therefore this cow is my food.”

The king was in a fix. He begged the lion to spare Nandini and to eat his (king’s) body instead. The lion agreed. The king put down his arms and stood bowing down in front of the lion. Hearing the words, “I love child, arise” he looked up, and the lion had vanished. Just then Nandini told him that it was she herself who had done this to test him. The king and Nandini then returned to the Ayavana. As a result of Nandini’s blessing, the king’s wife bore a son who later became the celebrated emperor Raghu. (Padma Purana, Uttar Khaṇḍa, Chapter 198).

(3) Killing of the Avara, Virasena. Once a powerful Asura named Virasena attacked Ayavana. When lord Siva came to know of it he tried to defeat Virasena but failed. At Siva’s request, Mahavīra entered the scene. He was also unable to subdue the Avara. Vīsṇu advised Vaiṣṇava to seek the help of Dīlīpa. Dīlīpa went to Makārī and encountered Vīrāsena. Under the shower of arrows from Dīlīpa, blood began to flow from the body of Vīrāsena. But each drop of his blood came to life as new Vīrāsena and all those Vīrāsenas continued a ceaseless battle with Dīlīpa. At last Dīlīpa prayed to Rākṣesvarī who suddenly appeared and drank all the blood. In this way the king managed to kill Vīrāsena. (Kampa Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kanda).

(4) Dīlīpa and the Holy Waters. Once king Dīlīpa led a scanty hit on the bank of Gṛīḍa, the sacred place worshipped by Devas, Rās and Gandharvas. With religious practices and offering puja to Devas, Rās and Pītra, he spent time in prayer and meditation. One day he happened to meet Vasiṣṭha, and paid homage to him. The sage Vasiṣṭha described to him all the places of sacred waters and explained the greatness of each. (See under Khaṭvāṅga). (Padma Purana, Chapter 1).

Dīlīpa II. A serpent born in Kṣīyapa family. There is a reference to this serpent in Mahābhārata, Udyoga-Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 13.

Dīlāparāma. A sacred place. It was at this place that Amābi, the daughter of the King of Kāśi performed austere tapas (penances). (See under Amābi).

Dīmḍikā. A rat who played a part in Bīḍālākāpyāṇa. The story runs as follows: Once a cat performed tapas, holding his hands up, on the banks of the Ganges, when the sun was about to set. The cat called all rats and told them: “One cannot do penance by ritual and physical deeds at the same time. So I will look after your spiritual affairs. You should attend to my physical needs. That is, bring me food, bathe me in the Ganges, all these are your duties.” The rats agreed to do so. They took him to the Ganges, bathed him and gave him food. But the cat, whenever he got a chance, caught a rat and ate it up. The cat’s health improved day-by-day and the number of rats began to decrease. Among them, there was a clever rat named Dīmḍikā. He called all the other rats and organized a secret conference. The subject of discussion was the cruel deeds done by the cat to the rats.

The next day Dīmḍikā went secretly to examine the ways of living of the cat. The cat ate Dīmḍikā. After 40 days the rats came to know that Dīmḍikā was missing. They assembled secretly. They elected a rat named Kośala as their leader. Under his leadership the rats declared independence and left the place. The cat also went his own way losing no means to get food. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 160).

Dīnāgā. A Sanskrit dramatist who lived between the second and fifth centuries A.D. “Dīnāgā” was his other name. The Sanskrit drama “Kundamalā” which is based on Uṣṇa Ramayana and has six acts, was composed by Dīnāgā. Dīnāgā, the Buddhist preacher and the Dīnāgā are two different persons. Vinayaka and Siva are praised in the introduction stanza of Kundamalā (A. K. B. K. Critical Sanskrit literature).

Dīnānātha. A King who lived in Dvāpara Age. He was a mighty and famous Vaiṣṇava. But his childless wife distressed him very much. Once he consulted Gālava about his plight. Gālava assured him that if he performed a human sacrifice, he would be born to him. A handsome, scholarly and highly-born man was to be sacrificed into the fire. A cripple, a dark-skinned man or a crude fellow was unsuitable for the purpose.

The King’s servants scour the villages and towns looking for such a perfect man, but in vain. At last they reached a country called Daśapura, inhabited by noble Bhrāmāns. The place was reputed for their charming eyes. No man could resist their fascination. In that lovely city there lived a Bhrāmāna named Kṛṣṇadeva with his virtuous wife and three sons. The King’s servants requested Kṛṣṇadeva to give one of his sons to be sacrificed. They offered four lakhs of gold coins as price. The Bhrāmāna and his wife cried bitterly and Kṛṣṇadeva offered himself instead of his sons. The royal servants chose one of his sons after throwing gold coins in the house and prepared to take him away. At that stage the second son of Kṛṣṇadeva came forward and volunteered himself. They agreed and he accompanied them to the palace. On their way they met the sage Vivamitra. He asked them to release the boy but they refused to set him free. The sage followed them to the palace and undertook to perform a sacrifice which would bless the King with progeny without a human sacrifice. The King accepted the offer and thus the boy was saved. (Padma Purana, Chapter 12). and the lion walked away slowly to a nearby stream to drink water. At once Dipakarni shot an arrow at the lion. Suddenly the lion gave up its animal shape and transformed itself into a man and spoke to the King as follows:

I am a Yaksa named Sat and a friend of Vaikravana. Once when I went to bathe in the river Gaṅga, I happened to see a Raśi virgin and I fell in love with her. I married her according to the Gaṇḍharva rules. The Raśi who came to know of it turned us into a lion couple by their curse. When we fell at their feet and begged pardon, they gave her a blessing that a son would be born to her and that I would fall under your arrow. After that we were wandering about as a lion couple and in due course she became pregnant. In the fullness of time she gave birth to this boy and then was liberated from the curse. I have been bringing him up by giving the milk of lonesses. Now, by being hit by your arrow, I am also released from the curse. From this time kindly receive this mighty youth as your own."

After saying this, the Yakṣa vanished. Dipakarni returned to the palace, taking the boy with him. Since he saw the baby he was called 'Sitaśāhana'. When he grew up into a youth, Dipakarni handed over the rule of the kingdom to him and entered into Vānaprastha. In course of time Sātavāhana became an emperor. (Kathāśaritāgaccha, Kāthāpiṭakhā lambaka, 6th Tāraṅga.)

DIPTA Son of Manu. Uttama. Uttama was the third Manu. He had three sons—Ajas, Parāśu and Dipa. (Vimnu Purāṇa, Part 3, Chapter 1).

DIPTAKETU. A King of olden times. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 4, verse 237).

DIPTAKṣA. A Kṣatriya tribe. Purūravas, the renowned King was born in this family. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 74).

DIPTAROMĀ. A Vīvadeva. (M.B. Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 91, verse 31).

DIPTI. A Vīvadeva. (M.B. Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 34).

DIṅGA. A king of Magadhā. He was killed by Pāṇḍu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 112, Verse 27).

DIṅGHĀ. One of the hundred sons of Dīrgharasmā. He was killed in Bhārata War. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 26).

DIṅGHĀHANU II. A pious King. There are conflicting versions about him in the Purāṇas.

DIṅGHĀJAMGHA. A Yakṣa who was the elder brother of the Yakṣa Puspaddatta. (Kathāśaritāgaccha, Kathāpiṭakhā lambaka, 2nd Tāraṅga).

DIṅGHĀJHIVALI. A Yakṣa (or aśura) born to Kaṭyaṣa by his wife Duna. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 30).

DIṅGHĀKĀRNA. A rabbit. A character in one of the stories of the Pačcaratāra illustrating the dangers of trusting mean or wicked people. (See under Pačcaratāra).

DIṅGHĀLACANA. One of the hundred sons of Dīrgharasmā.

DIṅGHĀPRAJNA. A Kṣatriya King. He traces his ancestry from a part of the Anura. Veṣṭa Parva. Mahābhārata (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 12) states that the Pāṇḍavas had sent an invitation to him at the time of the Kurukṣetra battle.

DīṅGHAHARAMĀ. (DīṅGHALACANA). One of the hundred sons of Dīrgharasmā. He was killed by Bhima in the Bhārata War. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 127).

DīṅGHAṢAṬTAR. A holy place. He who visits this holy place will derive the blessings of having performed the Aṣvamedha and Raṣṭāṣya sacrifices. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82).

DīṅGHAṢĀTRAVAS. A son of Dīṅghasātra. (Ṛgveda, Mandala 1, Anuvikśa 112, Śakta 117).

DīṅGHAṬAMAS. A great Muni.

1. Birth. Aūṛiga, the son of Brahmā, had two sons, Uatuṇa and Bhṛṣapati. One day when Uatuṇa was away from home, Bhṛṣapati approached his elder brother’s wife, Māmāti, who was pregnant at the time, and tried to have sexual union with her. But she tried to dissuade him and said—‘The child in my womb, born from Uatuṇa’s semen has already mastered Vedas and Vedāṅgas. Your semen is also equally powerful. How can you overturn the common law of the two semen? So please refrain from this attempt of yours.’ But even after hearing these words of his sister-in-law, Bhṛṣapati was not able to control his passions. At the time of the intercourse, when the semen of Bhṛṣapati entered the womb, the child within it cried out—‘Father! this passion is improper. Two persons have no place here. So withdraw your semen.’ Bhṛṣapati did not listen to the request. The child in the womb repelled the semen that entered the womb with his foot and it dropped on the floor. Bhṛṣapati who became angry, cursed the child. As a result, the boy was born blind. He got the name ‘Dīṅghasātra’ because he was born blind. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 104).

2. Family Life. In brilliance of parts, Dīṅghasātra’s equalled Bhṛṣapati. Dīṅghasātra, who was born blind, married Pradveti, a Brāhmaṇī. The couple had many children, chief of whom was Gauḍa. But after the birth of the children, Dīṅghasātra fell into evil ways and became an object of hatred and contempt. The inmates of Āśrama dubbed him a stotu. His wife was disgusted with him. One day, the enraged Dīṅghasātras, in his fury cursed women as a whole and Pradveti could not control her anger. She, with the help of Gauḍa and other sons made a raft and placing Dīṅghasātra on it, floated it down the river Gaṅga. The King Bāli happened to see the raft floating down the river. He sent men to bring the boat to the bank. The King recognized Dīṅghasātra and asked the Muni to beget brilliant and intelligent children by his queen. Dīṅghasātra agreed and the King sent the queen Sudēmā to him. The queen who did not find pleasure in the company of the blind and decrepit Muni sent a nurse to him. The nurse bore to him Kāśṭikā and ten other sons all of whom became great scholars. After some years the King came to know that the mother of those boys was the nurse. Then he sent Sudēmā again to the Muni. Dīṅghasātra, after touching her body blessed her and five sons, Aṅga, Bhaṣadvaṇa The Mahābhārata states that the child born to Māmāti was Dīṅghasātra.
Vāṅga, Kaliṅga, Pundra and Śuṅga were born to her. They founded five Kingdoms which were known by their names respectively. They are known by their modern names: Bhāgalpur, Bengāl, Andhra, Rāja-sāhī and Tāmarvika.

3) Other details. (1) Dirghatamass had another wife named U-tik. (Rgveda, 1st Mandala, 16th Anuvāka, 112th Śākā.)

(2) Dirghatamas continues to be in the assembly of Indra offering worship to him (Indra). (M.B. Śulbi Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 11.)

DIRGHATAPAS I. Father of Dhruvantari. (See under Dhruvantari.)

DIRGHATAPAS II. See under Pūnya.

DIRGHAYAJNA. A King of Ayodhyā. Bhumīsena had once won him over to his side by persuasive speech. (M.B. Śulbi Parva, Chapter 30, verse 2.)

DIRGHAYUS. Brother of Srutāyu, the King of Kaliṅga. Arjuna killed him in the war. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 29.)

DIRGHIKĀ A daughter of Vīvaka-chara. She was abnormally tall, and since there was the Sāstri injunction that he who married such women would die within six months none came forward to wed her. Dirghiki began a penance for a good husband. As it continued for years together symptoms of old age began to appear in her. At this juncture an old and ailing householder came there. On certain conditions he married Dirghiki. After sometime, in obedience to the husband’s wish Dirghiki set out on a tour carrying him on her shoulders. Though Mucalayya cursed her husband on their way, due to the chastity of Dirghiki the curse proved to be ineffective. The similarity in the stories of Sāndilī and this Dirghiki leads us to think that they might have been one and the same person.

DIŚACAKŚU. One of the prominent off-springs of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 10.)

Diśi

1) General. A daughter of Daśa Prāja-pāti. She was married to Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahmā and son of Markī. She had many sisters, chief among whom were Aditi, Kālī, Daṇḍayāna, Daṇā, Śīrṣikā, Kredā, Pṛthā, Vīvā, Viniśatī, Kapiśā, Muni and Kadā. Kaśyapa’s sons by Aditi became Devas (Adityas) and his sons by Śiśa became Asuras (Dīsayas). (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 65.)

2) Indra cut Diśi’s embryo to pieces. Devas and Asuras agreed to churn the ocean of milk as a joint endeavour. But when Amṛta rose up to the surface, they began to quarrel over it. In the battle between Devas and Asuras for the possession of Amṛta, Diśi’s sons were killed.

In her insomnialé grief at the death of her sons, Diśi prayed to her husband Kaśyapa that she should be blessed with a brave and heroic son who would be capable of killing Indra. The sage granted her the boon and told her that by worshipping the lord with a pure mind and body for a hundred years, she would bear a son who would be mighty enough to kill Indra. In due course Diśi became pregnant and following her husband’s advice, she fervently worshipped the Lord, and remained pure in mind and body. When Indra came to know that the child in Diśi’s womb was to be his slayer, he approached her under the disguise of an attendant, offering to serve her. He waited for an opportunity to get access to her and before the expiry of a hundred years he got a chance. One day, Diśi went to bed without washing her feet; and fell asleep. Indra took his Vajra and gaining access to her womb cut the embryo within it into seven pieces. The child in the womb began to cry loudly. Indra asked it “Mā Rudā?” (Do not cry). Then he proceeded to cut each of the seven pieces again into seven and finally there were forty-nine pieces in all. They subsequently became DeVas known as “Maruts.” They got the name Maruts because Indra told them “Mā Rudā.” All the forty-nine Maruts later on became the helpers of Indra. (Visnu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 21.)

3) Diśi’s sons. Asuras were Diśi’s sons. Chief among them were Hiranyakāśipu and Hiranyakāyākṣa. They had a sister named Śīrṣikā. Hiranyakāśipu had four sons—Anuśāhī, Hīlā, Prabhāśā and Samhālī who were famous for their glory and might. Sūrapadma, Simhavaktra, Tārakāśura, Gomukha and Ajāmukha were also Diśi’s sons. Of them, Sūrapadma had four sons by his wife Mayasuta, who were Bhūmikopa, Agniukopa, Vajrabahu and Hiranyak. An asura named Mahāśāma was born to Simhavaktra by his wife, Vīvā. The Asuras, Simhavaktra, Sakuni, Daṇḍayāna, Satrīk, Asvā, were the sons of Hiranyakāśa. Śīrṣikā married Viprācitti; Rāhu and Ketu were born to them. Saṁbhāra, the son of Hiranyakāśipu had three sons, Ayaśmāna, Śibi and Bāṣkala. Virocana was the son of Prabhāśa; Mahābali was the son of Virocana; Daṇa was born to Mahābali and to Daṇa were born four children—Nīvātakavaca. All these were the children of Diśi. Besides them, Diśi had crores of other Asuras born to her. (Visnu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 3; Harivamśa, Chapter 3.)

4) Birth of Hiranyakāśipu and Hiranyakāyāka. Hiranyakāśipu and Hiranyakāyāka were the rebirth of Jaya and Vijaya, the two gate-keepers of Mahāśāma. (See under Jaya.) There is a story as to how they were born as the sons of Diśi. Diśi was one of the wives of Kaśyapa. She had no children while the other wives of Kaśyapa had children. Jealousy and grief rankled in her mind. One day she approached Kaśyapa and pressed him to beget a son for her. It was the time of dusk when Kaśyapa was deeply absorbed in his day’s devotional worship. She disturbed his “Dhyāna” (devotional concentration) by her importunity, but he was reluctant to yield to her wishes at such an inauspicious time. It is at dusk that Siva goes about with his attendant hordes of spirits, wearing the crown of his matted hair covered with the dust carried by the whirlwinds from cremation grounds and keeping his three eyes wide open. Kaśyapa asked Diśi to wait for a few minutes, until that terrible time was over, but she did not heed his advice. In the fury of her passion she sprang towards him and stripped him of his clothes and in the end Kaśyapa yielded to her carnal desires. But after the act he in a repentant mood told her that she had defiled her mind by having sexual union in that unholy hour and by doing so had sinned against the gods. As a result, twin sons will be born in her womb. They will persecute and torture the three worlds. Mahāśāma would incarnate to destroy them. But since she also felt a little regret in her act, a grandson of her (Prabhāśa) will become a devotee of Viṣṇu.
Twin sons, Hiranyakashipu and Hiranyakasika, were born to Diti. For the rest of the story, see under Hiranyakashipu and Hiranyakasika. (Bhagavata, Prathama Sandha).

5) Diti flourishes in the assembly of Brahmarshis. (M.B. Sabhà Parva, Chapter 11, verse 39).

DIVAHPUTRA. One of the twelve sàryas who were born in the form of the Sun. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 42).

DIVAKARA I. A synonym of Surya. (Sūrya).

DIVAKARA II. A son of Garuḍa. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 1).

DIVAKARA III. See under Nākākara II.

DIVAKARA IV. A king. During the reign of this king the Matsya Purāṇa was composed.

DIVIRATHA I. A king born in Bharata’s dynasty. He was the grandson of Bharata and the son of Bhūmanya. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 24).

DIVIRATHA II. A king. He was the son of Dādhiśivāna. In the course of Paraśurāma’s extermination of Kṣatriyas, the sage Gaujama rescued a son of Diviratha and gave shelter to him. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 8).

DIVODĀSA. (Ajitighya). A king of Kāśi.

Divodāsa’s great grandfather’s father, Kāśa had many sons. They were called the Kāśas. It was from Kāśa’s reign that Vārānasī came to be called Kāśi. (Hari Vamśa, Chapter 29).

2) Divodāsa’s reign. When Divodāsa began his rule in Vārānasī, there was a Vārānasī named Kaśāka. Divodāsa killed him and extended his kingdom. At that stage, Bhadrāśena, King of Hephaṣtava, invaded Vārānasī. Divodāsa killed the hundred sons of Bhadrāśena. At that time the sage Kumbhaka (Nikumbha) came to Kāśi. His practice was to live for a thousand years at any place where he reached at the time of dusk. Since he had reached Vārānasī at dusk, he set up an āśrama and lived there for a thousand years. At that time there was a famine in Vārānasī. The whole land was in the grip of a severe drought. Kumbhaka’s āśrama and its surroundings alone remained green and cool. Herduiena used to take cattle to graze in the neighbourhood of the āśrama. Once when they returned in the evening, they took with their cows, the sacrificial cow of Kumbhaka. It was dark and the sage searched for the cow everywhere, but could not trace its whereabouts. At last he came to know by intuition that his cow was taken away by the herduiena. In his rage he cursed that Vārānasī should be ruined and left the place with his disciples. (See under Kumbhaka).

The story of the ruin of Vārānasī in Harivaṃsa is different. It was the time when Śiva had married Pārvatī, the daughter of Himavāni. After marriage Śiva shifted his residence to his wife’s house. Śiva whose task was to look after the affairs of the world, was never available for the purpose at Kailās, his own seat. The gods were in a helpless condition. They approached Pārvatī’s mother, Menā and requested her to persuade Śiva to return to his own place by any means. Menā called her daughter and ridiculed her husband as a vagabond who had no place to lay his head on. Pārvatī could not bear this insult. Her mother’s stinging remarks got circulation in Devaloka. So she urged Śiva to settle down somewhere on earth with her. Śiva agreed and promised to take up residence at Kāśi.

The ruler of Kāśi in those days was Divodāsa. It was a prosperous period in the country. As a rule, man turns to God only when faced with misfortunes. So Śiva decided to bring about a famine among the people of the country by ruining it. For that he sent sage Kumbhaka to Vārānasī. Kumbhaka arrived in Kāśi and appeared to the barber Karpakṣa to whom he communicated Śiva’s intentions. The barber cheerfully fell in with the proposal and built a temple on the next day for the residence of Kumbhaka. Living in the temple, Kumbhaka began to participate in the spiritual matters of the people. His blessings were much sought after and people came to have deep faith in him.

Kumbhaka had no children. He had made many pious offerings to gods and performed many holy rites for removing his wife’s sterility, but it was all in vain. At last, at the King’s suggestion, he began to offer pūja to Kumbhaka praying for issue. But even after a long period of devoted worship, she received no blessing or boon from the sage. Moved by the pathetic condition of his queen, Suyāvas, Divodāsa reproached Kumbhaka very severely. He reproached him for denying his blessings to the queen while he was showering them all on and sundry in the country. Provoked at the King’s rebuke, Kumbhaka pronounced a curse that the country should be ruined. As a result of it the country began to decline. (Harivaṃsa, Chapter 29).

Śiva and Pārvatī came and settled down in Vārānasī. After some years, Pārvatī began to press her husband to leave the place and to go somewhere else. Śiva was not inclined to do so. He said the place was “Avinukta” and therefore insisted that he would not leave it. From that time the place came to be called “Avinukta.”

3) Other details.

1) Towards the end of his life Divodāsa became a Rājaṛṣi (Royal Sage). There are numerous references to this Rājaṛṣi in the Rgveda. Since Divodāsa was of a very hospitable nature he was known by another name, “Ajitighya.” In Rgveda, 1st Mandala, 16th Anuvāka, 127th Sūkta, we read that once he hid himself under water to escape from an Ausa called Sanibara.

2) Divodāsa had a son named “Paruccheha”, who was a Ātri. Rgveda 1st Mandala 19th Anuvāka, 127th Sūkta relates to Paruccheha.

3) Bhimaratha, the father of Divodāsa, had two other names, Bhimasena, and Sudeva. Divodāsa purchased Mādhavī, the daughter of Yayāti after paying two hundred Śyāmākārgāḷivas (beautiful horses with dark-coloured ears) to Gīlava, so that he might have children. After the birth of his children, he returned Mādhavī to her father. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117).

4) He sits in Yama’s assembly and offers Pūjā to Yama. (M.B. Sābhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 12).
DIVYADEVI

(5) Divodása once plundered the necessaries of his enemies. Agniñhata vanished after it. (M.B. Sánti Parva, Chapter 18, Verse 21).
(6) It was at the behest of Indra that Divodása built the city of Varanasi. (M.B. Anúśásana Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 16).
(7) Once Divodása fought with the King of Helaya for one thousand days. After having lost his army he went to the sage Bharadvaja and performed Parakramasinghe sacrifice. As a result of it a son, Parantardana, was born to him. (M.B. Anúśásana Parva, Chapter 30).
(8) Other names for Divodása used in the Mahábhárata are—Bhajamasa, Kàtiñá, Saudeva, Sudevatana etc.

DIVYADEVI. Daughter of Divodása, King of Prakándvipa. There is a story about this princess in Padma Puráña, Bhitakhila, Chapters 85, 86.

Divodása decided to give his daughter Divyá in marriage to Citrasena, King of Rápadene. But just before the day fixed for the marriage Citrasena died prematurely. So, as advised by the Bráhmana who had come to see her who was married to Rápadene. He also died soon after. She was subsequently married to 21 persons in turn, and all of them died before her. Everyone took pity on her for her ill-fate. At last, at the suggestion of the ministers, preparations were made for her svayamvara. Here also ill-luck pursued her. All the princes who arrived to take part in the svayamvara killed each other in mutual fight. Depressed and embittered by all this, Divyá decided to renounce all worldly pleasures and proceed to the forest.

Once Súkha, named Ujíyala, came to Prakándvipa. Moved to pity at the grief-stricken Divyá he taught her "Aññayayana" vrata. When she practised this vrata with devotion for about four years, Mahávijñá appeared before her and took her with him to Vainujóka.

DIVYAKATAM. A city situated in Western India in ancient times. According to Mahábhárata this city was conquered by Nakula—Saddí Parva, Chapter 92.

DIVYAKARMAK'TAR. A Vishvadeva. (M.B. Anúśásana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 33).

DIVYASÁNÚ. A Vishvadeva. (M.B. Anúśásana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 30).

DIVYAVARSÁ (M). 365 days make one year for human beings. One year for human beings is one day for the gods. This means that 365 years for human beings are equal to one year for the gods. The year for the gods is known as "Divyavára" or "Divyavástrásara". Krítyuga is made up of 4,800 Divyavástrásara. Tretáyuga has 3,600 Divyavástrásara. 2,400 Divyavástrásara make up one Dváparayuga. Kaliyuga has 1,200 Divyavástrásara. 12,000 Divyavástrásara of this kind make up one "sátara-Dváparayuga". 71 Caturyugas are the period of one Manu. After the end of the period of one Manu, the gods complete their term of existence. The total period of 14 Manus is called a Kalpa. At the end of every Kalpa there is a deluge. One Kalpa is one day time for Bráhman. After the deluge, until the time of one Kalpa, it is Bráhman's night. There is no universe at that time. At the end of that time, the next Kalpa begins and Bráhman starts his work of creation. In this way when 350 days and nights of Bráhman are completed, it is one Bráhman Vára. One Bráhman life-span is 120 such years. After that there is nothing for a Bráhman's life-span. Then Bráhman is re-born and resumes creation. (Bhágavata, Divána Skandha).

DRAUPADI. Páñcáli, the wife of the Pándavas. (See note on Páñcáli).

DRAUPADHARANA PARVA. A sub section of Vana Parva in the Mahábhárata. This covers Chapters 262 to 271 of Vana Parva.

DRAUPADHARYAAMASAMVADA PARVA. A sub section of Vana Parva, in the Mahábhárata. This comprises Chapters 232 to 235 of Vana Parva.

DRAVIDA I. A King of the family of Priyavrata who was the son of Manu. (Bhágavata, Skandha 5).

DRAVIDA II. A gandharva who was the father of Kámañá. (See under Kámañá) Anúśásami was the daughte of this gandharva. (See under Anúśasañá).

DRAVIDA(M). DRAVIDA. In ancient days the whole of South India was known by the name Tamiñáka, as Tamil was the language used throughout South India. Strictly speaking, all the languages used in South India were given the name Tamil. The word 'Tamil' undergone changes in the language of North India and took the form 'Drávida'. Etymologists are of opinion that the changes that took place in the word Tamil were are follows:— Tamil — Damil — Damid — Drid — Dravid — Dravid. Reference to the Dravid country occurs in most of the Puráñas. Mahábhárata states that Sahadeva, one of the Pándavas, sent a note for collecting taxes from the people of Drávida. Sábhí Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 71.

"There are other countries also in the southern Bharata such as Drávida, Kerañá, Príyáva, Múõsíka, Vanáváika, Kürñáija, Maháïsaka, Víkalpa and Mútsûka." This statement (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9) throws light on the various countries which existed in South India at the time of Mahábhárata. In Bhágavata, Skandha 10, it is mentioned that Kámañá, the uncle of Sri Kríšña, was the son of Drámná, a gandharva. (See under Kámañá).

DRAVIDAS. It is stated in Mahábhárata (Anúśásana Parva, Chapter 33, Stanza 22) that the drávidás were originally Ksatriyas and that they became Śudras by the curse of Bráhmanas.

DRAVIDA BHÁŚA. (Dravidian Language). Linguists have classified the languages of the world under certain groups. Important among them are the Indo-European group, the semitic group, the Hattian group, the Uralic group, the East Asian group, the Dravidian group, the Austro group, the Bantu group and the Chinese group.

Almost all the languages in South India belong to the Dravidian group. The languages of this group are Tamil, Telugu, Kannada, Malayalam, Tulu, Khatku, Toda, Kotta, Badaka, Kuruk and Bráhmi. Of these Bráhmi alone it used in the mountain regions of Râjanáthan. Linguists like Śmíndud and others have stated that there is a close relation between the Australian and Dravidian languages. The Áryan language has influenced the Dravidian languages to a great extent. But Tamil has never been so much influenced as Telugu, Kannadá and Malayalam. It is because Tamil had a great wealth of literature of its own from ancient times. The Dravidian group is again divided into four sections: Eastern, Western, Northern and Southern. Bráhmi is the only language in the Northern section. Its Etymology, grammar etc. are like that of the Dravidian group. But it had been influenced to a large extent by the Iranian language. Still it keeps its Dravidian character.

Telegu, Gunti, Kuruk, Kolami, Maitha etc. come under the Eastern group. Of these only Telegu has grown as a literary language. Telegu is in use from Madras to Mahendragiri. But it has various sub-divisions and local differences. The Telegu used in the Districts of Kona and Godavari is considered to be the purest form. Gujrati, Satwari, Kamari, Varasi, Dasari etc. are its local sub-divisions. Over modern Telegu, Sanskrit has its own sway.

Kannada, Kutaku, Tota, Koda, etc. come under the western group. Kannada is used in Mysore and the vicinity of the Districts of Coimbatore, Salem, Bellary, Anantapoor etc. Nagaaka used in the Nilgiris, Kurumpa, used in the vicinity etc. Nilgiris, Kutaku used in Coimbatore are the sub-divisions of Kannada. In edicts from the 9th century Kannada could be seen in its ancient form. The modern Kannada has been used from 16th century onwards. Tulu is in use in places between the rivers Chandragiri in the south of Southern Canara and Kalyanapuri. Only a few ancient songs could be included in Tulu literature. The Malayalam script is used to write Tulu. But now certain books in Tulu have been published using Kannada script.

Tamil and Malayalam are the languages of the Southern section. The oldest literature in the Dravidian group is in Tamil. The most ancient form of Tamil is seen in the edicts and stone tables of the 3rd century B.C. The most important among them are the Sangam works. The grammatical works Tolkappiyam is the literary grammar of Sangam. Malayalam became an independent language only by the 8th century A.D. The close relation that exists between Tamil and Malayalam is not visible in any other language of the Dravidian group. By examining the inter-relations of the various languages in the Dravidian group, and noting how close or distant the relation is, we can ascertain which languages separated themselves first from the original Dravid language.

DRAVANASA. A Pracitas. (One of the 10 sons of the Prâchâna Barhi). (Bhâgavata, Skanda 4).

DRAVARATHA. A King of the family of Ariga. He was the son of Dadvihâvânâ and the father of Dharmaratha (Agni Purâna, Chapter 277).

DRAYASUDDHII. Purifying impure things. The mode of purification of impure things, in ancient India, was known as drayasuddhi. The procedure of purification was as follows:

If earthen-wares became impure by coming into contact with unclean objects, they should be burnt in fire. Golden or copper vessels may be remoulded or filled with or dipped in tamarind water. Things made of iron or bronze may be washed in ash-water. Things made of glass or pearl need only be washed in pure water. Things born in water such as lotus etc. could be purified by dipping them in water. If cloth is made impure rub it with soil and dip it in water. If it is a large quantity of soil and water may be sprinkled on it. Wooden things will become pure by planing. Cot, chair, fan, cart etc. need only be washed. Pots used for cooking meat may be touched with cow’s milk. Things made of ivory may be washed in mustard-water. Jaggery, salt etc. need only be dried. (Agni Purâna, Chapter 156).

DRAVADA I. (DRIHAYAVANA). One of the hundred sons of Dhentarâsra. Bhimasena killed him in the great war. (Droña Parva, Chapter 137).

DRAVADA II. (DRIHAYASKRA). One of the hundred sons of Dhentarâsra. Bhimasena killed him. (Droña Parva, Chapter 157).

DRAVADHANVâ. A King of the Pùrû dynasty. He was present on the occasion of Pûradhâs swayamvara. (Âdi Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 15).

DRAVADHASTA. One of the hundred sons of Dhentarâsra. (Âdi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 102).

DRAVADHASTRA. See Dhrîhâda II.

DRAVADHANM. A King of the Pûrû dynasty. He was the son of Sâtyalârdh and father of Sûphâva. (Bhâgavata, Dâsakma Skanda). DRAVADHARATHA I. (Dhrisârakhâra). One of the 100 sons of Dhentarâsra killed in the great war by Bhima. (Droña Parva, Chapter 157).

DRAVADHARATHA II. One of the kings, who should be remembered both at dawn and before sun-set. (Anûsâsana Parva, Chapter 163, Verse 32).

DRAVADHARATHASRA. One of the sons of Dhentarâsra. (Droña Parva, Chapter 137).

DRAVASANDHâ. (Sâtrujâya). One of the 100 sons of Dhentarâsra. He was killed in the great war by Bhima. (Droña Parva Chapter 137, Verse 20).

DRAVADHASENA. A King of the Yayû dynasty. He fought in the great war on the side of the Pâundavas and was killed by Droña. (Droña Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 52).

DRAVADHYA. A famous king of the Iksvaku dynasty. He was the son of Kusavatîva who had 21,009 sons. All those sons but three were killed in the night with an asura called Dhûndhû. The three sons who survived the killing were Dríshâva, Kapilâva and Candráva. (Yana Parva, Chapter 204).

DRAVADHYA. A son born to Agastya maharâj by Lopa-nûdra. He was born only after removing in the mother’s womb for seven years. He was a very great scholar and tapasvi. He began studying the Vedas from the very time of his birth. He is called Iksuvâda also. (See Iksuvâda).

DRAVADHAVRMA. I. See Dhrîhâda I.

DRAVADHAVRMA. II. A King. Kadâlitañâ was the name of his wife. (See under Kadâlitañâ).

DRAVADHYA. A maharâj. He was one of the seven Râvikas of Dharmanâ. Unmuca, Pramucu, Atrya, Dhrîshâva, Udhanâva, Tirasoma and Aûgrâs were the seven Râvikas. (Anûsâsana Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 34).

DRAVADHVATA. A brahmârshi who lived in South India. (Sánti Parva, Chapter 206, Verse 28).

DRAVADHYA. I. Son born to King Purûvas by Urvâsi. (Âdi Parva, Chapter 75, Verse 25).

DRAVADHYA. II. A King who lived in North India during the time of the great war. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 25).

DRAVADHYA. III. A brahmârshi of South India. He is known as Dhrisârakhâ and Dhrisârakhâ also (Anûsâsana Parva, Chapter 55, Verse 40).

DRAVADHYUDHA. (CITRAVUDHA). One of the 100 sons of Dhentarâsra killed in the great war. (Droña Parva, Chapter 136, Verse 20).
DRDHEYU. A maharaj who lived in the western part of India. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 36).

DRONASTADHI. A king in ancient India. (Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 283).

1. TRISH. Drona was the son of Bharadvaja who had his hermitage erected on the bank of the Ganges. Once Bharadvaja went to bathe in the river. When he got in, he chased a bird of the species of Obrāṭī. The celestial maid ran away as soon as she saw the hermit. But her cloth was caught in grass and slipped off her body. When the hermit saw the complete form of her body which was bright and beautiful, he had seminal discharge. The discharged semen was kept in a Droṇa (bough). A child was born from that and he was named Droṇa, who was brought up in the hermitage. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 13).

2. Education and Marriage. Drona learned the art of using weapons from his father and the hermit Agnivesa. Dragpada the prince of Pāṇḍava was the Illow student of Droṇa. They became great friends. On completion of education Dragpada returned to Pāṇḍava. Drona married the daughter of Dragpada. Drona also married another daughter of Droṇa. Drona had many children. Drona's desire was to get Dhanurveda (the art of archery). Drona with his disciples went to Mahendra-grīn and saw Parasurama, who was about to enter forest giving away the wealth of Pāṇḍava. The Parasurama said, "I have given away the wealth of the Brahmans and anything I have. The land I have conquered is given to Kṣīrya. Now there remains only my body and some weapons. You can have me of them."

3. He became the teacher of the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas. After receiving Dhanurveda from Parasurama, Droṇa went to Pāṇḍava. Dragpada who had been a fellow student of Droṇa was the King of Utara-pāṇḍava. Then, though Droṇa had become proficient in archery, he was very poor. He had no money even to buy milk for his child. Once the playmates of Aṣṭavāhāmā made him drink a mixture of water and flour saying that it was milk. So Droṇa approached Dragpada for financial help. But Dragpada shunned his fellow student, scolded him and sent him away without giving any help. Drona vowed that he would, somehow or other, take revenge upon Dragpada. He departed from Pāṇḍava.

The aim of Droṇa was to get some capable disciples. He reached Hastināpura and stayed in disguise with Gautama for a while. Once the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas who were boys were engaged in the game of Kāra (a kind of cricket play) outside the palace premises. The ball fell in a well by chance. The princes stood round the well and began to ponder how to get the ball out of the well. They tried all means of retrieval, short and aged, came by that way. It was Droṇa. The boys gathered round the old man. Droṇa threw his ring also into the well and said: "Your kingly qualities are very poor. Your education in using weapons is not complete. If you give me a meal I will get both the ring and the ball together." The boys agreed to the conditions. Droṇa took a grass and evoked arrow into it by mantra (spell) and shot it at the Kāra. The next grass was shot at the first grass. It struck the first grass. Thus he shot grasses one after another till the grass reached the brink of the well and by pulling the grass he took the ball out. In the same way he took the ring also out of the well. When they got the Kāra the boys stood round Droṇa and asked him what he would like as the reward for his deed. Drona said that they need only tell Bhishma how a short man of dark complexion took the ball out of the well. Accordingly the boys went to Bhishma and told him everything. Immediately Bhishma understood that it was Droṇa. Bhishma thought that Droṇa was the best person to teach the prince. So Droṇa was brought to the palace and was engaged as the teacher in archery. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapters 130 and 131).

4. Education in Archery of the Kauravas and reward.

(a) First year. Drona asked the Pāṇḍavas and the Kauravas to sit together and then told them, "There is one task that you should do for me when your education is over". Hearing this they all kept silent. But Arjuna came forward and took the vow that he would achieve that task according to the wish of the teacher.

(b) The disciple who is second to none. The training in weapons commenced. Hearing of the fame of Droṇa, disciples came from places far and near. Arjuna was the first of all the students. Sending all the students to fetch water Droṇa taught his son Aṣṭavāhāmā certain special lessons. Arjuna secretly knew this. So he brought water as quickly as possible before the others. As Droṇa loved his brilliant student Arjuna, he taught both his son and Arjuna alike the secrets. Seeing the brilliance of Arjuna Droṇa ordered the cook not to seat Arjuna in a dark place for meals. Yet it happened once that the light was extinguished by wind while the prince were having their meals. All sat still without eating, while Arjuna alone ate his food. From this Arjuna discovered that without seeing the object one could hit the target by constant practice. Droṇa was greatly pleased at this and embracing him promised to try to make him such an expert that there would be none equal to him in archery.

(c) Ekālaya. Once Arjuna and the other disciples went to the forest for a hunt and there they met Ekālaya who was superior to Arjuna in archery. This Ekālaya had once approached Droṇa to learn archery from him. But it was against the rule for a Brahmin to teach a forestier the art of fighting. So Ekālaya returned to the forest and making an earthen image of Droṇa worshipped it and began self-learning in archery. Now he had become superior to Arjuna in archery. The teacher had said that none would be equal to Arjuna in archery. Arjuna told Droṇa about Ekālaya. The teacher went to the forest and got the thumb of Ekālaya as the reward due to the teacher. Since then Ekālaya became a great archer though only of a lower level than Arjuna (See under Ekālaya).

(d) Expert disciple. The education in archery and the use of weapons was nearing completion. In archery Arjuna was second to none. Duryodhana and Bhīma uppermost in the mind of Droṇa.
became expert archers. Aśvatthāma was the first in the secrets of archery. Nakula and Sahadeva became expert swordsman. Arjuna was expert in all branches of weapon-training. Bhima had bodily strength and Arjuna had the strength of learning. Yudhishthira was the foremost in chariot-fighting.

e) Artifical bird. Once Drona placed an artificial bird on the branch of a tree, without the knowledge of the princes, to test their courage. Arjuna and the other princes tested one by one. All gave the same reply, that Dharmaputra gave. At last he asked Arjuna. Arjuna stood for a while, taking aim and said that he saw a bird only. The teacher commanded to shoot and Arjuna sent an arrow. At first shot the bird fell down headless. With this test Drona understood that Arjuna could defeat Drupada and embraced his disciple.

f) Drona caught by a crocodile. Once Drona and his disciples went to bathe in the Ganges. While they were dipping and splashing in the water a crocodile caught Drona by the leg. Drona was unable to extricate himself from the grip of the crocodile. So he asked his disciples to shoot the crocodile and kill it. All stood agape. Arjuna at once took bow and arrows and sent five arrows one after another at the crocodile, which gave way and swam away. Then he invited Brahmans to bless his pupil. After that the pupils gave the teacher, gold, precious stones, clothes, and other costly things. The princes paid homage to their teacher. The teacher gave his blessings to them. With this the demonstration commenced.

g) Demonstration by the pupils. When the training of the princes terminated, Dhrutarashtra ascended a stage to hold a demonstration of weapon-play, by the princes. An arena was got ready. Drona entered the arena. As a preliminary rite Drona worshipped the gods. Then he invited Brahmans to bless his pupil. After that the pupils gave the teacher, gold, precious stones, clothes, and other costly things. The princes paid homage to their teacher. The teacher gave his blessings to them. With this the demonstration commenced. Clubbing between Duryodhana and Bhima was a terrible one. But the mock fighting changed to a serious fight. Drona sent Aśvatthāma who separated them. The audience applauded their performance. The performance of Arjuna was of the most superior type and the audience and the teacher were struck with wonder at his extraordinary capability. Karna also showed his performance. (For details see under Arjuna, Para 1 and Karna, Para 4). (M.B. Aḍī Parva, Chapters 133 and 134).

5) Renge upon Drupada. When demonstration came to an end it was the time for giving the teacher the gift due to him. The teacher had, at the beginning, told his pupils that on completion of the training they should give him a gift. Accordingly he demanded that Drupada, the King of Pāñcāla, should be brought before him with his hands tied. As soon as Duryodhana and Karna heard this they rapidly marched to Pāñcāla and engaged Drupada in a fight but were defeated by Drupada. After that Arjuna entered the battle-field, defeated and tied Drupada and brought him before Drona who was kind enough not to kill Drupada. The Kingdom of Pāñcāla was divided into two Drupada was given, Utara-Pāñcāla and Drona took Dakshina-Pāñcāla. Then Drupada was released. (M.B. Aḍī Parva, Chapter 137).

6) Arjuna is accorded sanction to fight with his teacher. One year after the event on Drupada Yudhishthira was appointed as heir-apparent, by Dhrutarashtra. Once, in the council of the king, Drona called Arjuna to him and said: 'Oh, Arjuna! you must take an oath to do a particular thing in the presence of your relatives. It happens that I oppose you in battle you should fight against me without thinking that I am your teacher. This oath is your gift to your teacher.' Arjuna agreed and took the oath in the presence of the people. Because there was such an oath Arjuna's conscience did not prick him when he had to fight against his teacher Drona in the battle of Bhurītras between the Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas. (M.B. Aḍī Parva, Chapter 139).

7) Pari played by Drona up to the battle of Bhurītras. (1) Duryodhana and his party came to know only at the time of the svayāvatara (marriage) of Pāñcāla that the Pāṇḍavas were not killed in the fire house burning. When Arjuna won the test and got Pāñcāla, the Kauravas became furious and began to plot against the Pāṇḍavas. At that time Drona came to the council hall of the Kauravas and said that the Kauravas should go to Pāñcāla and greet the Pāṇḍavas, bring them back and give them half of the kingdom. (M.B. Aḍī Parva, Chapter 203).

(2) Drona was present at the sacrifice of Rājasya (imperial consecration) performed by Yudhishthira. (M.B. Aḍī Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 8).

(3) When the game of dice was going on between Sakuni and Yudhishthira Drona came with Dhrutarashtra to the place to witness the game. (M.B. Aḍī Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 2).

(4) Drona declared that the game of dice between Sakuni and Yudhishthira was not fair (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 9).

(5) Drona was well-versed in archery. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 37, Stanza 4).

(6) While the Pāṇḍavas were living in the country of Virāṭa, Arjuna in the guise of Brhannala, fought with the Kauravas. Drona was the first to recognize Brhannala as Arjuna at the sound of his conch. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 24).

(7) In that fight Drona fought with Arjuna whose arrows wounded Drona and he ran away from the battlefield. (M.B. Virāṭa Parva, Chapter 58).

(8) When Śrī Yama came to the council-hall of the Kauravas to plead for a treaty on behalf of the Pāṇḍavas who had returned after forest life and pynonymity, Drona took the side of the Pāṇḍavas and argued with Duryodhana. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 126).

(9) Drona advised Dhrutarashtra to see that a battle between the Kauravas and the Pāṇḍavas was avoided (M.B. Udyoga Parva, two Chapters from 138).

(10) When it was almost decided that the battle was inevitable Drona boasted to Duryodhana that he would annihilate the army of the Pándavas within a month. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 193, Stanza 18.)

8) Why Drona, whose leaning was towards the Pándavas, took the side of the Kauravas in the battle of Bhärata. At heart, Drona was on the side of the Pándavas. But he fought against them, taking the side of the Kauravas. Even at that time he ardently wished the Pándavas to win the battle. What is the reason for it? An answer to this question is found in Mahábharata, Bhíma Parva, Chapter 43.

The battle was about to begin. Dhránaputtra went to Drona and bowed before him and requested to bless him so that he might win the battle against the Kauravas. Drona said, “It is good on your part to have come and seen me before the battle is begun. If you had not come I would have cursed you to lose the battle. But today I am honoured since you have come. You fight the battle. Victory is yours. But I have to stand with the Kauravas, and there is a reason for it. Man is a slave of money and money is not the slave of Man. The Kauravas have tied me with money. Sri Krsna will be on the side of the righteous. Where Sri Krsna is, there will be victory. But so long as I fight it is difficult for you to win. So try to kill me at the beginning of the battle. You need not feel sorry for killing your teacher. Because when I shower arrows and fire whenever I want, I cannot see which enemy has struck me down. Enemies could kill me only when I am lying in darbha grass leaving fighting in disappointment. I will put down my weapons in battle only when I hear words which I dislike to hear.”

After having revealed these secrets of his own he sent Yudhishthira back. (M.B. Bhíma Parva, Chapter 43.

9) Drona in the battle of Bhärata. (1) On the first day of the battle Drona fought in a combat with Dhṛṣṭadyumna, who was defeated. (M.B. Bhíma Parva, Chapter 77, Stanza 69.)

(2) Drona killed Sāti śrila the son of King Virāṭa. (M.B. Bhíma Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 23.)

(3) Drona became unconscious by the clubbing of Bhíma. (M.B. Bhíma Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 19.)

(4) Drona fought with Arjuna. (M.B. Bhíma Parva, Chapter 102, Stanza 6.)

(5) Drona defeated Drupada. (M.B. Bhíma Parva, Chapter 104, Stanza 24.)

(6) There was a fight between Drona and Yudhishthira. (M.B. Bhíma Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 17.)

(7) Drona committed with Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (M.B. Bhíma Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 43.)

(8) He became the commander-in-chief after the fall of Bhíma. (M.B. Bhíma Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 5.)

(9) He gave Duryodhana a boon to catch Yudhishthira alive. (M.B. Bhíma Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 20.)

(10) He killed Yudhishthira. (M.B. Bhíma Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 31.)

(11) Váyaghraśattra and Siśuśaśana were killed by Drona. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 37.)

(12) In the fight which followed Arjuna and his army were driven back by Drona. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 16, Stanza 50.)

(13) Drona advised Duryodhana to try to get Arjuna away from the battlefield. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 17, Stanza 3.)

(14) He killed Baka. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 16.)

(15) He killed Sāti śrila. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 21.)

(16) He killed Satānika. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 28.)

(17) Dṛṣṭadyumna was killed by Drona. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 32.)

(18) Drona killed Kṛma. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 33.)

(19) He killed Vasudānā and Ksatrideva. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 21, Stanza 55, 56.)

(20) He fought again with Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 31, Stanza 8.)

(21) He annihilated the army of the Pándavas. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 42.)

(22) He made a Cakravyūha. (Strategical formation of the army in the shape of a wheel.) (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 13.)

(23) He broke the sword of Abhimanyu. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 38, Stanza 37.)

(24) By forming cakraśakājavyūha he saved Jayadratha. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 87, Stanza 22.)

(25) He fought with Arjuna again. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 91, Stanza 11.)

(26) He put the divine armour on Duryodhana. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 39.)

(27) A fierce fight ensued between Drona and Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapters 95 to 97.)

(28) He wounded Sāti śrila. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 11.)

(29) Sāti śrila defeated Drona. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 117, Stanza 30.)

(30) Drona scolded Dṛṣṭaśana who ran away defeated by Sāti śrila. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 122.)

(31) He killed Virākṣa. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 41.)

(32) He killed Citraketu, Sudhanvā, Citravarmā and Citravāra. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 122, stanza 43.)

(33) He fell unconscious, hit by Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 56.)

(34) He defeated Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 122, Stanza 71.)

(35) He killed Bhīmāśattra. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 125, Stanza 22.)

(36) He killed Dṛṣṭaśekha for his son. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 125, Stanza 39.)

(37) Sahadeva, the son of Jayadratha, was killed by Drona. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 125, Stanza 45.)

(38) He killed Kṣatrideva the son of Dhṛṣṭadyumna. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 125, Stanza 56.)

(39) Bhīma defeated Drona. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 127, Stanza 53.)

(40) Bhīma threw away the chariot with Drona in it eight times. (M.B. Dróna Parva, Chapter 128, Stanza 13.)

"A slave to wealth, wealth is slave to none. This is true oh King. The Kauravas have bound me with wealth. I am telling you this without shame. You only require battle. I will fight for the Kauravas and wish for your victory," (41) Drona killed the King of Hāhaya, all the sons of Dhṛṣṭadyumna, and the King Śrīsī. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 159, Stanza 14).

(42) He became unconscious in the fight with Yudhishthira. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 162, Stanza 49).

(43) He killed Drupada and Virāṭa, the grandsons of Drupada. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 33).

(44) Hearing that Asvatthāma had been killed, he was filled with grief. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 190, Stanza 57).

(45) After that throwing away the weapons, he immersed in a deep meditation and attained harmony with the Supreme Being and his spirit entered the realm of Brahmā. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 192, Stanza 43).

10 Other details. (1) Vyāsa evoked the spirit of those who died in the battle of Bhārata to the surface of the Ganges. The spirit of Drona was one of them. (M.B. Āchārjyaśāstra Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 4).

(2) Offerings were given to the manes for Drona. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 296, Stanza 13).

(3) Drona attained heaven after his death, and was absorbed in Bhūpadī. (M.B. Svaragārha Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 21).

(4) He was the man who took birth through Bhāradvāja from a portion of Bhūpadī. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 69).

(5) Āciṣṭha (teacher), Ācīṣṭha-mukhya (chief teacher) Bhāradvāja, Bhāradvājina, Bhāradvājāmaja, Bhāradvāja, Sañcīva, Sañcīvavāhī, Sañcīvaya, Guru and Rukmatūrī are used as synonyms of Drona by Vyāsa in Mahābhārata.

DRONA II. A bird. A sun born to theberti Mandapa of Jātī, a bird. (See under Khāndavadīha, Parā 8).

DRONAM. A medicinal herb. (See under Marattvikatūla).

DRONĀHIHEKAPARVA. An identification of Drona Parva: Chapters 1 to 16.

DRONĀ PARVA. An important Parva (section) in the Mahābhārata.

DRONAVĀDHA PARVA. A sub section of Drona Parva: Chapters 154 to 192.

DRONĀSARMAPADA. A holy bath (tirtha). (M.B. Āmanīṇasa Parva, Chapter 25, Stanza 28).

DRŚADVĀN. Father-in-law of King Sañjāyi of Püru dynasty. Varāhī was the name of Sañjāyi’s wife. (See Sañjāyi).

DRŚADVATI. A river to the south of Kurukṣetra. During their exile in the forest the Pāṇḍavas drank water from it. (Vana Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 2). It was on the delta of the river that Śiva imparted advice to Yudhishthira. (Śabā Parva, Chapter 78, Verse 15). The king of the northern bank of this river is equal to living in Svarūpa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 88). To perform bali and other rites for the souls of the dead after bathing in the river is as efficacious at performing the Agnistoma Yaṣṭā. (Vana Parva, Chapter 88).

2) Educators and kingship. Yajñāstāna went to the kingdom of Bharadvaja for education. Drona, who became a great teacher in archery later, was also a student and disciple of Bharadvaja at that time. Thus during the time of education both Drupada and Drona became fast friends. After receiving education Drupada returned to his country. At that time Pāñcālī was ruled by Pṛṣṭasta. When Yajñāstana returned on completion of his education, Pṛṣṭasta died and Yajñāstana was anointed as King of Uttarapāñcālā. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 129).

3) Yajñāstāna reproaches Drona. It has already been said that during the period of education Drona and Yajñāstana were fast friends. Once Drupada said to Drona: “My dear friend. My father has told me that I would be made the King of Uttarapāñcālā on completing my education. Thus if I become a King, the treasury of the King will be at your disposal.”

After the education both returned to their places. Not much later Drupada got married. A son born to him was named Asvatthāma. Drona was so poor that he could not even buy milk for his child. Once the friends of Asvatthāma mixed flour in water and made him drink it saying that it was milk. Asvatthāma drank it without knowing that it was not milk. Thinking that he had become energetic by drinking milk he began to run with the other boys. At last they told him the truth and teased him. With his wife and child Drupada went to Drupada who did not care to recognize him as a friend. Drona tried to remind him of their former friendship. But Drupada shunned him and said, “If I had friendship with you, it was to achieve certain ends. There is no friendship between the rich and the poor, the learned and the illiterate, the brave and the coward. So if there was any friendship at all it was not real. You, who are slow of mind Kings of high status cannot have friendship with such people especially the poor. A Brahmin learned in Vedas won't befriend a Brahmin who is not learned in Vedas, a man seated in a chariot cannot befriend a man who is not seated in a chariot and a King cannot befriend one who is not a King. So a friendship of bygone days is no friendship at all.” Drupada’s reproach aroused a storm of anger in Drona. He vowed that he would avenge the insult. With his wife and child he got out of the palace. He wandered about in search of disciples who were capable of confronting with Drupada. At last he came to Hastinapura and became the teacher of the Pandavas and the Kauravas. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 130).

4) The revenge of Droga. Droga told Bhima about his dealings with Drupada. Bhima conspired Drona. Before the commencement of the training in archery, Drona told his disciples: "When your training in archery is completed, you will have to do a favour to your teacher". All stood agape. But Arjuna came forward and said: "I will do". Droga embraced Arjuna. The training commenced. The Audhakas, Virupas and others joined his school of archery.

The training in archery came to an end. Drona called his disciples and told them that Drupada should be tied with a rope and placed before him. When they heard the words of the teacher, Durvishthama, Karña, Yuyutsu, Duśśasana, Vikarma, Jarasandha and Sulocana led the Kauravas to Pāñcāla. Arjuna knew that the Kauravas would not be able to defeat Drupada. He told the teacher that when the Kauras returned without achieving the task, he himself would go and bring back the Kauras. After the territones were defeated by the Pāñcālās. After that Arjuna confronted Drupada. Nakula and Sahadeva stood as guards of the wheels. Bhimacon with his club stood in front of the army. Arjuna drove the chariot right in the midst of the Pāñcāla army. Bhima took his club and a terrible battle ensued. Arjuna shattered the Pāñcāla army, but Droga took him to Drupada. The Kauras put up a struggle to drive Drupada from Drupada's land and approached him with ominous words: "You have destroyed your country. Now you are at our mercy. Is not your friendship a friendship?" Drupada requested that they should be friends in future. Accordingly Drupada was set free. The country of Pāñcāla was divided into two, and giving Uttar Pāñcāla to Drupada, Droga took Dakṣagāra Pāñcāla. Thus because of the revenge of Drona, Drupada lost half of his kingdom. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 137).

5) Birth of Children. Though Bhima and Drupada were on friendly terms Drupada did not forget the defeat he had incurred at the hands of Droga. So, Drupada desired to have a son who would become powerful enough to take revenge on Drona. He began to think of ways and means. He consulted several learned Brahmins. At that time two hermit brothers Yāja and Upayāja lived on the bank of the Ganges. The King approached them and requested their help to obtain a son, who would kill Droga, and promised to give them cows and other precious things in return. At first they refused to help him. The King served Upayāja for a year, and pleased him. He sent the King to the hermitage of Yāja. They accepted the request of the King. Both the hermits performed a sacrifice for Drupada. A boy and a girl arose from the sacrificial fire. The boy was named Dīrghatānaya and the girl was named Krṣṇa (Pāñcāḷī). There was a celestial voice that the boy would kill Droga when he grew up. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 138).

6) The marriage of Pāñcāḷī. Pāñcāḷī grew up. Drupada desired to give her in marriage to Arjuna. But at that time the brahmane caught fire and the Pāñcāḷas disappeared. Drupada set certain tests in the Svayamvara of Pāñcāḷī with a view to ascertain if Arjuna was alive. The Pāñcāḷas came to the Svayamvara and Drupada found out Arjuna. But Drupada did not like the idea of his daughter becoming the wife of more than one husband. Then Vyāsā appeared there and informed Drupada of the previous births of the Pāñcāḷas and Pāñcāḷī. Drupada was much pleased and he gave the Pāñcāḷas a good deal of wealth and sent Pāñcāḷī with them. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 196).

7) Other details. (1) Drupada was present at the marriage of Abhimanyu, celebrated at the city of Upapālaya. (M.B. Virāt Parva, Chapter 72, Stanza 17).

(2) Drupada gave the Pāñcāḷas an aṣṭakṣari, (division 21870 elephants, 21870 chariots, 65510 horses, 109550 footmen) of army for the battle of Bharatā. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 57).

(3) At the battle of Bhārata, Drupada was anointed as one of the seven commanders on the side of the Pāñcāḷas. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 157, Stanza 11).

(4) Drupada fought with Jayadratha on the first day of the battle of Kurukṣetra. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 58).

(5) Droga was killed in a combat with Droga the teacher. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 48).

(6) Drupada fought with Asvatthāma. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 110, Stanza 16).

(7) He fought with Bhagadatta. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 14, Stanza 49).

(8) He fought with Bāhlika. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 24).

(9) He was defeated by Pṛṣṭha. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 138, Stanza 24).

(10) Drona the teacher killed Drupada. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 186, Stanza 43).

(11) The Pāñcāḷas gave offerings to the manes for Drupada. (M.B. Śánti Parva, Chapter 42, Stanza 5).

(12) Vyāsā evoked the spirits of the dead to the surface of the Ganges, after the battle of Bhārata came to an end. Drupada also was there among the spirits which appeared on the Ganges. (M.B. Āramavāsikā Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 8).

(13) After death Drupada entered heaven and was absorbed in Viśvedeva. (M.B. Svārgarōhṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 15).

(14) He is stated in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Stanza 68, that Drupada was born from a portion of the Marudganas.

8) Synonyms of Drupada. Pāñcāḷā, Pāñcāḷīya, Pāñcāḷājī, Pāñcāḷājī, Pāñcāḷa, Pāñcāḷa, Pāñcāḷa, Arjuna, Virāła, Yajñasena, Drupada are his synonyms.

DRUMA I. A King in ancient Bhārata. Mention is made about him in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 1, Stanza 233.

DRUMA II. In Mahābhārata, Chapter 67, Stanza 8, King Druma, who was the rebirth of the asura Śibi, is mentioned.

DRUMA III. The leader of the Kinnaras (heavenly musicians). M.B. Sahā Parva, Chapter 10, Stanza 29.

He sits in the Durbar of Kuber (God of wealth) and sings. He was the teacher of Rukmini, the son of Bhūmaka and he gave a bow to his pupil Rukmini. (Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 158).

DRUMASENA I. A Kṣatriya King. He was born from a portion of the Asura called Garviṣṭha. (M.B. Śādi Parva, Chapter 66, Stanza 55). He stood as guard of the wheel of Šalya and was killed by Yudhishṭhira in the battle of Bharatā. (M.B.Salya Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 53.)

DRUMASENA II. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pândavas. He was killed by Dhṛṣṭadvīrana the son of Drupada. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 170, Stanza 22.)

DRUHYU I. A son of King Yayāti. Two sons, Yadu and Tvauryu, were born to him by his wife Devyānī; and three sons, Drupyu, Amudruhyu and Pûru by his wife Sarmiśhā. Druhu was cursed by his father because he did not comply with the request of his father to exchange his old age with the youth of his son. The curse was that his desires would not be realized, that he would stay in places where he would not like to stay that his kingdom would be lost and that he would be called Bhōja. (See under Yayāti.)

DRUHYU II. A son of Matināra, a King of the Pūru dynasty. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 14.)

DUGHKA [M]. Agni Purâṇa tells the following about the origin of Duḥkhaṁ. Hisaṁ violence, in the wife of Ādharma (unrighteousness). To the couple were born two daughters called Anīta (falsehood) and Nīkṣa (fraud) and from them were born the daughters Bhāyā (fear) Naraka (hell) Māyā (illusion) and Vedanā (pain). Māyā brought forth Mṛtyu (death), the annihilator of all living objects, and Vedanā, from Kaurava (a particular heir) brought forth Duḥkha (sorrow, grief). From Mṛtyu were born Yājñika (wrinkles), Sūka (sorrows), Trṣaṇa (cruelness) and Krodha (anger). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19.)

DULIDUHA. A King in ancient India. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 233.)

DUMUBHA. A snake. Sage Sahasrapāda became the snake as a result of a curse. For details see under Sahasrapāda.

DÚNDUBHĪ I. A terrible asura, son of Maya and brother of Māyāvī. 1) Birth. Dānavas were the offsprings of Kālyāpa, grandson of Brahmā and son of Marici by his wife Danu, daughter of Daksaprajapati. Maya, chief among the Dānavas earned great reputation as a unique architect. Once Maya attended a dance programme in devakala where he fell in love with Hemā dancing with the deva-women. When the dance was over Maya told Hemā about his love for her. Hemā too had fallen in love with Maya. And they left the place in secret and reached the southern slope of the Himalayas where they built a beautiful city called Henapura and they lived there. Even long they had two sons, Dundubhī and Māyāvī, both of them equally distinguished in prowess. (Uttararāmāyana.)

2) Dundubhī's relatā naśī with Rāgaṇa. Maya did tapas for a daughter in the western plains of Mount Kailās. One of those days Pārvatī went out of Kailās to feed brahmins in celebration of the birthday of Subrahmaṇya. In the absence of Pārvatī a deva woman called Madhurā who had observed the Suvacanavastra came to Kailās to salute Mahādeva (Śiva), who enjoyed her for some time. On her return to Śiva Pārvatī noticed ashes worn by him transferred to the breasts of Madhurā. Drawing the natural inference from this Pārvatī got angry and cursed Madhurā to be transformed into a frog. Then Śiva blessed her that she would regain her former self after twelve years and have a heroic husband. Madhurā who was thus turned into a frog fell into a well close to where Maya was engaged in tapas. And, after twelve years, the frog regained its former form and became Madhurā again. Maya, who saw her adopted her as daughter and brought her up at such calling her Mardandāri. Mardandāri became Kāvanga king and thus Dundubhī became the brother-in-law of Rāvāna.

3) Dundubhī grew up. The following is told about Dundubhī in Canto 11, Kīśkindhā Kāṇḍa of Valmiki Rāmāya-

As beautiful and majestic as the peak of Mount Kailās, the heroic Dundubhī possessed the form of the buffalo. And, he had the strength of a thousand elephants. Proud and haughty over his own power, but lusty and bold, he leaped his head over the boon he had received from Śiva. Dundubhī went to fight with the ocean, the lord of rivers. (It was Śiva who gave him boons. See M.B. Anuśāsaṇa Parva, Chapter 11.)

4) Fight with Bāli and death. Haughty almost to madness over the unrivalled strength and prowess he got as the result of the boon, Dundubhī went about challenging whomever he met for a fight. But none dared to accept the challenge. Then he went to the sea-shore and challenged Varuṇa, who, appearing on the crest of the waves said: "I am not strong and powerful enough to fight with you. Only Himāvān can do that, so, please go north."

Accordingly Dundubhī went north to Himāvān and challenged him in great rage. Himāvān clad in his neat and white apparel appeared and spoke in humble tones: "Oh mighty Dānava: I am not accustomed to fighting war. My job is only to arrange necessary convenience to saints and sages. But, there is in southern India a very powerful monkey called Bāli, who is the King of Kīśkindhā, and Bāli alone can combat with you. And, Dundubhī accordingly went southward to Kīśkindhā and challenged Bāli. Terrible as the dark clouds in the sky the dānava who possessed the body and horns of the buffalo—began roaring like hell at the tower gates of Kīśkindhā, uprooting trees with his horn and tearing the earth with his hooves. Disturbed by the noise Bāli along with his wife Tārā came out of the palace, and said to Dundubhī: "Look here, please. I am only a King of the monkeys. Why should you, who are so very strong smash my tower?" But, these soft words of Bāli only kindled Dundubhī's anger all the more and his challenges became the fiercer. Then did Bāli, wearing the golden chain given by Indra, rush forth to engage Dundubhī in mortal duel in which the former began gaining more and more strength while the latter grew weaker and weaker. Dundubhī took to flight in the skies to save his life. But, the moon dawned then and in the moonlight Bāli and his brother Sugrīva followed Dundubhī, who entered a terrible cave covered by something like a forest of grass. After stationing Sugrīva at the opening of the cave Bāli followed Dundubhī into the cave. Sugrīva waited there one year for the return of Bāli from the cave when one day he witnessed foaming blood flow out of the mouth of the cave, and mistakenly believing that Bāli was dead he closed the mouth of the cave with a huge stone and returned home. But, Bāli, who had by then killed Dundubhī kicked off the stone and came out of the cave and followed Sugriva in a rage. From that day onwards Sugriva lived at the Raya-ma\ka mountain where Bāli had an abode. (Vālmīki Ramāya\na, Keka\dhā Kā\ndū, Chapter 9, 11, 46)
3) Cau\c{c} in Bāli due to the blood of Dundhula. During Bāli’s duel with Dundhula blood from the body of the latter spurted out to the skies, and it also fell in the herbivores of a stag\na where the sage Malās\ga was performing tapas. Anger at this the stag caused him whatever he might be, who was responsible for the death of his brother, with death by his head getting broken if he mounted Raya\ma\ka. Sugriva took shelter there because of this curse on Bāli. (Vālmīka Ramāya\na, Keka\dhā Kā\ndū, Canto 11)
DUNDUBHI I. See under Mandhāra.
DUNDUBHIHNRĀDA. A powerful Rākṣasa, who was the son of Dāś and the uncle of Prabhākara. When, in the fierce fight between the devas and the asuras the latter got absolutely defeated this Rākṣasa ascribed the blame of the failure of his devas to the brahmins and began killing them. He captured the Kā\s{t}i and many other temples like it. In the circumstances Sīva gave refuge to the brahmins of Kā\s{t} and the Rākṣasa was destroyed by Sīvakā\mbā. (Sīvadrasastakam, Urdhva Kā\ndū, Canto 1)
DUNDUBHISVANA(M). A particular Place in Kusa\na island (M.B. Bhίma Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 13).
DURĀDHI (DURĀDHIKĀ, DURĀDХA). One of the hundreds of Dhrītarāṣ\ya. He was killed by Bhίma (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 36).
DURĀDHIKH. See under Dundubhi.
DURĀSA. A son of Bhāmasvāmi. He learned Pā\c{n}i\c{k}ara\v{s}i\v{s} from Vasi\śya and repeated it. Pleased at this Sīva gave him all the boons he wanted with the result that he lost his head and began troubling everybody. When thus unrest and injustices increased in the world Dhru\v{n}ghī, the son of Sakti, killed him. (Ganesa Purāna, Chapter 38, 42).
DURĀSAMA. Son of a Gandhārī called Vīśvavā\nu. The latter was the one that had told his son to be in the Sandaka Purāna, Chapters 1, 3 and 4).
DURĀHARASA. One of the hundreds of Dhrītarāṣ\ya. He was killed by Bhίma. (Drona Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 40).
DURGĀ I. The goddess of the universe, Durgā possesses different forms and aspects. Pā\c{n}ati, spouse of Sīva is a form of Durgā. According to the prayer of devotees this Devī assumes diverse forms. She is worshipped in 64 forms as Ayādurgā, Vedānta Durugnā, Ambikā, Bangladeshī, Bhadrā, Kṣa\nā\c{c}ī, Nīkā\hu, Devī etc. In south India she is worshipped more in her fierce and terrible forms. Devī in her gentle aspects and moods assumes the forms of Kanya, Kumārī and Mākābhūta. In Kṛṣṇa the Devī is called Kṛṣṇayā on in Andhra, Jokulambikā and in Tamil- nadu Kā\ndu. Worship of the Devī is supposed to be more than 4000 years old in India. In religious literature from Vedic times up to date Devī occupies an important place. In modern India Śrī Kā\nā\c{c}ī Paramahamsa, guru of Śvāmī Vivekananda, was a great devotee of Durgā.
In the Mahābhārata there are various references to the Devī. When the Pāṇḍavas entered the capital of Vi\r{a}\r{a} for their life incognito they worshiped Durgā, who appeared to them and granted them certain boons. (Vīra\r{a} Parva, Chapter 6). At the commencement of the great war Arjuna, at the instance of Kṛṣṇa prayed to Durgā, who appeared in the sky and granted him boons, for victory in War. (Bhίma Parva, Chapter 25). See Pā\c{n}i\c{k}e\v{c}chari and Prakū\n{t}i).
DURGĀ II. A river famous in ancient India. The Pāṇḍavas drank water from this river. (Bhίma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 39).
DURGĀ (M). Fort. There are six kinds of forts, viz. Marudurgam, Jaladurgam, Prithividurgam Vanadurgam, Parvātadurgam, and Manūsanī durgam. Among these the six Manusāna durgam is the most important (M.B. Śānti Parva, Chapter 56, 35).
DURGĀJAM. A city in ancient India. (Bhίma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 52).
DURGAMA. An asura chief born in the dynasty of Hūrāṇā\ka and son of Yaur, Durgama was an enemy of the Devas from his very birth. He argued to himself thus: “The very strength and power of the Devas depend on the Vedas; if there is no Vedas there is no yaj\na, if there is no yaj\na the Devas do not get their share of the havis, if they do not get the havis they will lose all their strength and prowess, and, therefore, the best means to teach the Devas a lesson is to destroy the Vedas.” Durgama decided that the surest means to achieve that was to perform penance. Accordingly he went to take penances and began doing penance abstaining from food and drink. After a thousand years Brāhma\ma appeared to him and asked him what boon he wanted. Durgama said “I must get the Vedas; I should get all the mantras known to brahmins and Devas in the three worlds, and all the preceding deities of those mantras should come and stand before me and be subject to my control; I must also get the strength to defeat all the Devas.” Brāhma\ma granted Durgama all the boons. And, thenceforth the brahmins could not recollect the Vedas or the mantras. No bathing, no homas, no daily rites, no rites for the dead, no yaj\nas, no japa (repeating divine names) and no tapas. Symptoms of old age caught the Devas in its grip. Durgama drove them out of Devaloka and they hid in mountain caves. Within a hundred years the world reached the rock bottom of destruction. Water disappeared from the world. Alarmed beyond measure at these developments the brahmins went to the Himalayas and prayed to Jagra\c{c}ambikā (mother of the univer-

Also
because she shed tears from her eyes, thenceforth she came to be addressed as Sākthi also.

Being told about the above developments Durgama, with his army attacked Devi. The fight became fierce and furious. From Devi’s body emerged numerous Saktis fully armed. Dhārini, Bālī, Tripūra, Bhairavi and Kālī with 10,000 hands were some of the prominent and powerful Saktis which thus emerged. The army of Durgama was annihilated. Then the fight commenced directly between Devi and Durgama. Fifteen arrows of Devi hit the asura at the very same time and he was killed. (Devi Bhāgavata, Saptami Skandha).

DURGĀPCĀJA. See under Nāvarātri.

DURGAŚĀILĀ. A mountain in Śākṣa island. (M.B. Bhūma Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 20).

DURITAKSAWA. A son of King Mahāviyā. Duritaksaya had three sons, Traiyāyuri, Kavi and Puskarāyuri. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 9, Verse 19 and 21).

DURJAYA I. An absolutely cruel King. Owing to the number of adharmas (evil actions he had committed) Kāla ordained him to be born and reborn twenty times as various animals and as a Brahmārākṣa he roamed. One of those days he was caught by a Sīvayogi called Mahādeva whose body was smeared with Vibhūti (the sacred ash), but as soon as the Vibhūti from the body of the Sīvayogi got smeared on his body also, Durjaya got back his former form and he was lifted up to Svaṅga. (Śiva Purāṇa, Bhave Mahāvidya).

DURJAYA II. A dānava born to Kaśyapa prajāpati by Durjaya’s wife. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 28).

DURJAYA III. (Dusparajāya). One of the hundred sons of Dīnāṭastra. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 116, Verse 9).

DURJAYA IV. A King. Durpada advised the Pāṇḍavas to invite this King to the great war. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 18).

DURJAYA V. Son of King Suvira of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 11).

DURJAYA VI. A synonym of Mahāviyā. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 144, Verse 86).

DURJAYA VII. A powerful son of Supratiṣṭha. While he was living as the lord over the country, having conquered the various Kingdoms he was told that Gaurumukha Muni had in his possession the famous gem called Cintāmāni. He fought to gain that gem and died. The place where he met with death came to be known as Naimīkāranya in after years. (Varāha Purāṇa, Chapter 17).

DURJAYA. Short form of Durjayamānīnagara referred to in laudatory terms in the Mahābhārata. Some scholars hold that Durjaya is the Ellora caves of modern India, seven miles off Daulatabad. (Vana Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 1).

DURMADA I. See Durdharṣaṇa.

DURMADA II. A son of Hariti, the Gandharva King. Himself and Umā, the apsāra woman impersonated themselves and cheated Pururavas and Urvāśi. (See Umāśī). Enraged at the deception they urged that Durmada be born as a Rākṣasa and Umāmad a princess. Also, Umāmad as princess would have to marry not the person she really loved but some one else. Both Durmada and Umāmad then begged Urvāśi for redemption from the curse and the latter said thus: “This Durmada will be born as son of Urmada, and on seeing her son and husband die, she will end her life by burning herself, and her soul will attain Svarga”. As a result of the above curse Urmada was born as the daughter of the King of Videha and Durmada as the son of the Rākṣasa called Dirghajāmugha. As Rākṣasa, Durmada was called Puṭiṇālakṣa. The King of Videha named Urmada as Hariti. Virāt Hariti was once walking in the garden with his companion Puṭiṇālakṣa abducted her and flew off in the sky, and put her in a great forest. A prince called Vasunāra, who happened to come that way on his fast-riding horse came to hear the lamentations of Hariti, and after killing Puṭiṇālakṣa he took her with him to his palace. The King of Videha and his subjects, who were in great anxiety and distress at the disappearance of Hariti felt really happy to have her back. And, all of them opined that Hariti should be married to Vasunāra. Accordingly the date for her Svayamvara was announced. But, on the day of the Svayamvara Bhadrakṛṣṇa, King of Hēkaya who, along with other Kings was also present on the occasion, forcibly took Hariti and took her to the Vṛṣṇi palace where Bhadrakṛṣṇa was killed. Hariti courted death by fire, regained her former life and under the name Umāmad returned to the world of the Apsaras.

DURMADA III. Son of Asura Maya. Conceited and haughty over his strength Durmada once challenged Bālī to fight, and defeated by Bālī he ran away from battlefield and hid in a cave. (Anasāta Kāṃśyagāna).

DURMAṢĀ. An asura, he clashed with the Devas at the churning of the sea of milk. (Bhāgavata dasamaṇikandha).

DURMAṢĀNA I. One of the 100 sons of Dīnāṭastra. In the great war Arjuna destroyed his Gajasena and Sītāyaki wounded him. Finally he was killed by Bīhūna. After the war was over Nakula occupied his palace. (M.B. Bhīmā Parva, Chapter 113, Drona Parva, 66, 89, 116 and 133).

DURMAṢĀNA II. A son born to Śṛījaya by Raṭṛapāli. He was a relation of Vasudeva. (Bhāgavata navamaṇikandha).

DURMUKHA I. A minister of Mahābhūṣaṇa. Once he was sent to Bhadrakāli with a message by his master. (Devi Bhāgavata, Paṇcamā Skandha).

DURMUKHA II. One of the hundred sons of Dīnāṭastra. The following information about him is gathered from the Mahābhārata.

1. He was present at the Svayamvara of Draupadi. (Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 15).
2. During the great war he was sent to Bhadravarna, Gandharvas took him captive. (Vana Parva, Chapter 241, Verse 12).
3. In the great war he fought with Saṅjaya. (Bhīmā Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 25).
(4) He killed Arjuna’s charioteer. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 47, Verse 12).
(5) He defeated Shrutikarmman. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 79, Verse 35).
(6) He was defeated by Ahumanyu. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 42).
(7) A duel was fought between Durmukha and Ghatotkaca. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 13).
(8) Duel fought between Durmukha and Dhruvayuddha. (Drona Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 26).
(9) He fought with Purujit. (Drona Parva, Chapter 105, Verse 13).
(10) He was defeated in fight with Sabadeva. (Drona Parva, Chapter 107, Verse 25).
(11) Bhima killed him in war. (Drona Parva, Chapter 134, Verse 20).
(12) After the end of the Mahabharata, his beautiful palace was occupied by Sabadeva. (Santi Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 12).

DURMUKHA III. A King who flourished in the assembly of Yudhishthira. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 21).

DURMUKHA IV. A Raksasa, who was a member in Ravana’s assembly. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 13).

DURMUKHA V. A serpent. It was also present among the serpents, which had come to Prabhakar to receive Bahumani who, after death, went to Patalaloka. (Manasa Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

DURMUKHA VI. An asura on the side of Mahishasura. Tair, finance minister of Mahishasura sent Durmukha with Bajaka to fight against Devi, who killed him. (Devbhagavata, Skandas 3, 13). In his previous life he was one of the Paurasiyas. (Adi Parva, Chapter 61).

DURMUKHI. A companion of the Raksasa woman called Ajanukika. (Sri Ajanukika).

DURVARA. Son of King Suratha of Kundalanganara. When Suratha captured the yajñaguru (sacrificial horse) of Sri Rama, Sastriya, he was killed by Durvaraka, who presented the occasion. (Padma Purana, Vrta Rama, Chapter 49).

DURVARANA. An army chief of the King of Kamboja. He was killed in the great war by Saitaki. (M B Drona Parva, Chapter 112, Verse 42).

DURVARAN. A messenger of the very powerful Jalandhara. When the Devas and the Asuras churned the Kalavati (sea of milk), many excellent things emerged out of it. When those things were divided among them, all the Asuras were angry, and Durvarana, demanding Devendra to return the goddess, not only did he not return them but he also declared war against Jalandhara. When war broke out, Jalandhara besought as to whether he should fight with Viruma or with Siva. Durvarana advised him first to fight with Siva. (Padma Purana, Uttarakshana, Chapter 161).

DURVASAS

1) Ganasanya A sage, who used to lose his temper very easily. He is believed to have been born from an anusa (part, aspect) of Siva.

2) Birth. Three different stories are told in the Puranas relating to his birth.
(1) Once a quarrel arose between Brahmâ and Siva which developed into fighting. At the sight of Siva seething with rage the Devas ran off frightened, and Pârvati also got frightened. She told him ‘Durvâasam bhavatme’. (It has become impossible for me to live happily with you). Realising that it was his momentary anger which made life miserable for Pârvati Siva decided to transfer that trait of his character to someone else.

The incident took place during the life period of Silavati, who was very much reputed for her chastity. While Silavati was carrying her husband Ugraśravas (who though a leper yet desired to visit brothels) to the house of a prostitute the muni Asmâbâdhyâvyaya turned Ugraśravas to die before sunrise the next day with his head broken. (See under Asmâbâdhyâvyaya). Silavati made the counter curse, let not the sun rise the next day, to the muni’s curse. Accordingly the sun did not rise the next day, and confusion prevailed everywhere, whereupon the Trimûrti and the Devas, through Anasuya, the wife of Atrimahâs, got the curse of Shiva withdrawn. Pleased at this the Trimûrti asked Anasuya to choose any boon she desired, and she prayed that Brahmâ, Vishnu and Mahâesa take their partial incarnations through her. Accordingly Brahmâ as Candra and Mahâvasu as Dattatreya were born as sons of Anasuya. And, Siva departed his anger, which had caused unhappiness to Pârvati, in Anasuya. The child born out of that Siva to Anasuya was Durvâasas. The name Durvâasas was very apt as the child was born out of the anger of Siva which had made life miserable (durvâsa) for Pârvati. (Brahmânanda Purâna, Chapter 44).
(2) Once defeated in his fight with Brahmâ Siva took refuge with the Nâmarânyâyas who were doing penance in the plains of the Himâlaya. Siva told sage Nâma that if Siva ever got in his plight and he asked the former to pierce his left hand with the Sâla. Siva did so and three streams of blood flowed out of the wound made on the hand of the Rsi, one stream towards the sphere of the stars, another into the skull in Siva’s hand and from the third stream Durvâsas was born. Brahmâ, who witnessed this miracle withdrew from Siva and returned to his abode. (Vâman Purâna, Chapter 2).
(3) In the fierce fight with the Tripuras Siva, in great rage, ultimately shot an arrow against them, and that arrow, after killing the Tripuras, assumed the form of a child and returned to the lap of Siva, and the child was named Durvâsas. (M.B. Anušâsana Parva, Chapter 160, Verses 14, 15).

3) Kunti granted boon. Once while Kunti was living in the palace of Kuntihôja Durvâsas came there, and pleased with Kunti, he granted her five mantras. It was with the aid of those mantras that Kunti became mother of Karnâ and others. (For details see under Kunti Para 2).

4) Sri Kropa bought in pâyâsa (pudding). Once Durvâsas came to Dwârakâ where Kropa and Rukmini looked after him to his heart’s content. Though, at times he took only meagre food, at other times he destroyed everything he saw and created trouble. Kropa and Rukmini served him according to schedule. One day the sage asked Kṛṣṇa to cook some pudding and it was ready. Then the sage asked Kṛṣṇa to smear his (Kṛṣṇa) body with pudding. Kṛṣṇa did so, except for his feet. After that Durvāsas got down the chariot and making Kṛṣṇa and Rukmini serve as horses himself got into it and drove away in great speed into the forest. On the way he thrashed the ‘horses’ one after the other. Neither Kṛṣṇa nor Rukmini felt sorry about this action of the sage. On reaching the forest he halted the chariot and ligited a fire which was an arrow. With this arrow he hit the parts of Kṛṣṇa’s body which were smeared with the pāyasa. The spot at which the sage blessed Kṛṣṇa became famous as Vardārātīthra in after years. It may be noted that Kṛṣṇa died by an arrow hitting his foot which was not smeared with the pāyasa. (M.B. Amāsakāna Parva, Chapter 160).

5. Conduct of yajña for Śvetākti. There once was a King called Śvetākti equal to Indra. He conducted a yajña of a hundred years’ duration. Innumerable brahmins were engaged in the successful conduct of the yajña. Some years after the yajña began the brahmins went their way leaving it unfinished as the clouds of house all the twenty-four hours in the yajñadālī irked and affected their eyes. When Śvetākti requested them to further cooperate to complete the yajña they insulting asked him to invite Śoddas for it. Then the King went to the Himālayas and did tapas for Siva, who at last deputed Durvāsas to complete the yajña, and under the mahārasi’s aegis it was completed within twelve years. On account of the constant offerings of havis in Agni (fire) during the period Agni fell down, Rānak and Durvāsas left the ātrāma after eating a part of the food and smearing his body with the rest of it. This process was repeated by Durvāsas for six days, but Mulgala never felt or showed any offence. Greatly pleased at the firm righteousness of the King, Durvāsas blessed him to bodily ascend to heaven. Immediately a vimāna (airplane) descended from Vā璠oka and carried Mulgala in it to heaven. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 260).

6. Mulgala granted salvation. Once Durvāsas went to see Mulgala who was doing tapas in Kurukṣetra taking food only rarely and demanded some food with the object of testing his dharma-vrata (righteousness). The sage gave Durvāsas all the food he had with him, khaśa (beans), and Durvāsas left the ātrāma after eating a part of the food and smearing his body with the rest of it. This process was repeated by Durvāsas for six days, but Mulgala never felt or showed any offence. Greatly pleased at the firm righteousness of the King, Durvāsas blessed him to bodily ascend to heaven. Immediately a vimāna (airplane) descended from Vā璠oka and carried Mulgala in it to heaven. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 260).

7. Other information. (1) Durvāsas ran away in fear of the Pāṇḍavas. (See under Duryodhana, Para 12). (2) He suffered at the hands of Harina and Dikbaka. (See under Dikbaka). (3) He advised Śavapataśākara to the woman called Kalavati. (See under Kalavati). (4) Durvāsas and Kaśibhadha-mahānām. (See under Arjuna). (5) Durvāsas and Daksayajña. (See under Daksayajña). (6) Terrified Durvāsas ran helter-skelter in the three worlds. (See under Arjuna, Para 3). (7) He was responsible for the death of Lakṣmana. (See under Lakṣmana). (8) He cured Sakuntala. (See under Sakuntala). (9) He spent his time in Indra’s assembly. (M.B. Śabha Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 23: For another story see under Pitṛdrīha).

Durvibhāga. A particular area in ancient India. The Kaśtriya kings of the area presented a lot of money and food to the Yajurvéda-aśvathāra of Kāśyapa yajña. (Sāhita Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 11).

Durviṣaḥ (Durviṣaḥa). One of the hundred sons of Dīhṭārāstra. He was killed in the great war by Bhismsena. (M.B. Sālīya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 20).

Durviṣogacana. One of the hundred sons of Dīhṭārāstra killed by Bhismsena. (Drona Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 62).

Durviroga. One of the hundred sons of Dīhṭārāstra killed by Bhismsena. (Drona Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 62).

Durviṣaḥa (Durviṣaḥa). One of the hundred sons of Dīhṭārāstra. He submitted the swayamvara of Pāścākula. On the occasion of the procession of Duryodhana and others, Durviṣaḥa was put in prison. (Vana Parva, Chapter 242, Verse 12). He was killed by Bhismsena in the great war. (Sālīya Parva, Chapter 26, Verse 20).

Duryodhana I. Villain in the Mahabharata story: the eldest and greatest of the Kauravas.
(1) Genealogy. See under Kauravas.
(2) Birth. Dīhṭārāstra born blind and married Gāndhāri. Hungry and thirty, Vyaśā once came to Dīhṭārāstra’s palace where Gāndhāri treated him sumptuously, and he blessed her to have hundred sons by her husband in life long. Gāndhāri conceived, but even after two years she did not deliver. Grief-stricken at this she got herself aborted in secret as the result of which she ‘delivered’ a mass of flesh, and hearing about it Vyaśa visited her. As instructed by him hundred pots were filled with ghee, and the mass of flesh was sprained with cold water as a result of which it got divided into hundred pieces, each the size of a thumb. Also a smaller piece of flesh remained. Those pieces of flesh were deposited in the pots filled with ghee and the pots kept in a secret place. Vyaśa deprived of the Himavān’s boon. In course of time the pots burst open one by one and from each pot emerged a boy. From the 101st pot a girl was born. Eldest among the boys was named Duryodhana, and the girl called Duskalā. (For other names see under Kauravas).

Duryodhana, at the time of his birth cried in the voice of an ass on hearing which the asa kept in the shed also cried. Also, such evil omens as the jackal howling, birds like crows, vultures etc, crying and storms breaking out were witnessed on the occasion. Alarmed by such evil omens Dīhṭārāstra sent the brahmins and his other friends and well-wishers like Bhismsena and Vidyura and enquired of them whether, after the death of Dharmanputra, Duryodhana would be able to become King. As soon as Dīhṭārāstra had asked the question, evil omens like the world becoming dim, jackals bowling etc, were witnessed again. Scholars like Vidyura did their best to divine what the future of Duryodhana would be, and after mature consideration Vidyura and the brahnin panditis opined that because of Duryodhana’s birth the country and people would be ruined, and they, therefore, advised that he should be put away and killed. But, paternal affection did not permit Dīhṭārāstra to accept the advice.

During this period Gāndhāri was laid up for a few days with stomach trouble, and a vaisyā woman was engaged would impart the strength of 10,000 elephants. And then at the instance of Vasuki, Bhima took his bath in holy waters and wore new clothes and fragrant garland. He ate the pudding offered by Vasuki, and taking leave of him and followed by nagas he came up from the water to the bank of the Gaṅga. Bhima gave a detailed description to his mother and brothers of all that had happened to him. Drarmapatra advised him to keep the secret. After the incident, once again was Kālikāta poison mixed in the food of Bhima. But, Yuyutsu born of the vaśyā woman to Duryodhana gave the Pāndavas confidential report about it. Because of the powerful effect of nāga rasa, the Kālikāta consumed by Bhima did no harm to him but it only got assimilated in his body. On another occasion Duryodhana killed the charioteer of Bhima. (Bhārata Bhārata, Chapter 127 and 129).

3) Karna crowned king of Anga. The Kauravas and the Pāndavas learnt the use of weapons of war at the feet of Dronācārya, and when the studies were over arrangements were made for a rehearsal, and at the rehearsal Bhima and Duryodhana were the first to clash with each other. When the encounter reached its climax both of them pointed the club at each other. But, Avas̄ṭhāmat treated them and pacified them. Next, Karna entered the stage for a trial of strength with Arjuna, and at once arose from the Pāndavas side questions about Karna’s nobility and aristocracy of birth etc. Karna stood there stunned, not knowing what to say or how to repel the attack. Then it was Duryodhana who rose up to announce that he was, that very moment, crowning Karna King of Anga. This ended the scene. (Bhārata (Malayālam), Adī Parva, Chapters 134, 135 and 136).

4) Pāndavas trapped in palace built of lac. The above incident confirmed and completed the cleavage of the Pāndavas and the Kauravas into two hostile camps. Meantime another event happened. Dronācārya demanded his pupils to bring before him King Drupada by way of gurudakṣaṇā (tuition fee), for the ācārya had to wreak vengeance upon Drupada (See under Drona). Though Duryodhana tried his best he could not capture Drupada. Not only that, Drupada defeated him also in a fight. At this juncture it was Arjuna who presented Drupada as captive to Drona by way of gurudakṣaṇā. The incident proved to be another provocation for Duryodhana to hate the Pāndavas. Now, Duryodhana made up his mind to destroy the Pāndavas somehow or other. With this end in view he went to his father, posing himself to be a great well-wisher of the Pāndavas, and obtained his permission to transfer their (Pāndavas’) residence to another palace. Accordingly Duryodhana deputed his minister Purocana to get built at Vārāṇavāta a palace of lac. Vidura came to know of the intended mischief and gave advance notice of it to the Pāndavas through a messenger Kanaka. The architect built the ‘lac palace’ but built a tunnel also attached to it. A year after the Pāndavas shifted the residence to the new ‘palace’ Duryodhana set fire to it, and the Pāndavas escaped unscathed through this tunnel. (Bhārata (Malayālam) Adī Parva, Chapters 141-151).
5) Duryodhana invited the Pândavas back to Hastinápurá. Duryodhana and his brothers were living very happily under the impression that the Pândavas had been burnt to ashes along with the ‘lax Palace’. Then it was that the Pândavas, disguised as brahmans and in the presence of all the kings, went to Páñcali, the daughter of King Deupada in swayamvar, for their wife. After the marriage the Pândavas stayed in Deupada’s palace and the Kauravas returned to Hastinápurá. Duryodhana and others felt all the more jealous of the Pândavas becoming more powerful as a result of their marriage. Again it was decided that the Pândavas should be destroyed anyhow and at any cost. But, how to effect the destruction? Duryodhana wanted to attract the Pândavas to destruction through women and to create divisions and divisions among them. But, Karna attacked the plan as impracticable, and instead he wanted to defeat Deupada and render the Pândavas impotent. At this stage Bháma and Droña argued that it was most preferable to give half the Kingdom to the Pândavas and receive them with grace. Dhrútarástra supported the proposal as a result of which the Kauravas went to Páñcali and escorted the Pândavas back to Hastinápurá. Dhrútarástra partitioned the country between the Kauravas and the Pândavas and the latter shifted their residence to part of the country with Kámpánaprastha (Indraprastha) as its capital. When the Pândavas went to Indraprastha Maya built for them an exceptionally beautiful palace where King Dhrámmpatra performed rajasuya. Duryodhana and others ear-marked the palace for him. After the rajasuya the Kámpánaprastha wanted to have a look at the palace and in the course of surveying it they placed themselves in ridiculous situations due to visual illusions. Taking the bright floors of glass for watery tanks, they pulled up their clothing and measured with caution every foot of their. Then they mistook actual pools for floor and fell into them and got wet. At the consequent discouragement of the Kámpánaprastha, came his hands and hands with laughter. Dhráupádi had his face with hands and smiled. Alongside the Kauravas cut a very ridiculous figure, and they returned to Hastinápurá. (M.B. Aidi Parva, Chapter 202, Sahá Parva, Chapters 35, 83.)

6) Dhrámmpatra’s first defeat in the game of dice. The sight of the great wealth including costly stones and gems presented by various kings to Dhrámmpatra at the rajasuya and the humiliation experienced while surveying the palace made Duryodhana all the more mad with anger and hatred towards the Pândavas. He now came to the decision either to defeat the Pândavas once for all or to commit suicide by taking poison. He held secret consultations on the topic with Sakuni whose efforts at first to pacify him (Duryodhana) failed. Ultimately Sakuni, an expert in the game of dice, advised Duryodhana to invite Dhrámmpatra to a game, assuring him that the rest he would take care of. Dhrútarástra and Vidura advised Duryodhana against the move, but he did not yield. Finally Dhrútarástra, saying to himself that nobody would change fate, agreed to Duryodhana’s proposal, and deputed Vidura to Dhrámmpatra to invite him for the game. Dhrámmpatra, in fact, did not like the game, but he succumbed to the eloquence and persuasive powers of Sakuni and at last agreed to play. Kings lined up the royal hall to witness the game. First game was staked, and Duryodhana won the game. Then 1000 golden nákṣatras and treasures were offered to the winner. Duryodhana won that game also. Next chariot with horses and next to that 1000 maid-servants were staked and Duryodhana won those games too. 1000 horses, 1000 golden chariots with their horses, the horse decorated with gold presented by Citarástra to Arjuna, 6000 soldiers with their arms and armaments—three formed the next successive bets, and each game Dhrámmpatra lost. The next bet was 400 copper vessels each filled with pure gold, and Duryodhana won that game also. And, now Vidura tried to dissuade Yudhishthira from playing the game; but neither he nor Duryodhana heeded the advice. And, Duryodhana by foul play snatched from Dhrámmpatra all his wealth, his kingdom and his brothers. Now Páñcali alone remained, and Dhrámmpatra bit her too and played the last game and lost.

Duryodhana deputed his Súta, Prátiikámi, to Indraprastha, to fetch Dhráupádi but the sent him back. Next Dúsáana was deputed and he brought Páncali to the Sabhá dragging her by the hair. She was proclaimed to be the maid-servant of the Kauravas. At last Dhrútarástra intervened and sent back the Pândavas along with Dhráupádi to Indraprastha.

7) Second game and exile in the forest. Duryodhana and others did not appreciate the intervention of their father. He again conspired with Sakuni and it was decided to challenge Dhrámmpatra to one more game. The conditions to be stipulated were that the vanquished in the game should stay in exile for twelve years in the forest and live ignominiously during the thirteenth year, and if found out and recognised during this period the whole process of exile and life ignominiously would have to be repeated. Duryodhana and Sakuni approached Dhrútarástra and said to him thus: “Dear father, the desire for revenge at their defeat in the game of dice gnaws at the Páñcána’s heart like poison. Also, they will never forget our having dragged Dhráupádi by her hair. When a suitable occasion arises they will take revenge on the whole lot of us. Therefore, we want to challenge Dhrámmpatra to a final game of dice, the condition being that he who gets defeated should go in exile into the forest for twelve years and then to live ignominiously for one year. If we get defeated we will simply carry out the condition on our part.

This request of Duryodhana appealed to his father, who invited Dhrámmpatra once again for a game of dice. Dhrámmpatra accepted the invitation, in fact, in spite of himself. This time too Duryodhana won the stake and the Pándavas set out to the forest. Even at the time of parting Dúsáana invited Bháma who returned thus: “You, mean fellow, you cheated my brother by foul play. If I fail to tear your heart open in fight and drink blood, I do not want heaven. Moreover, I will kill Duryodhana, and Arjuna will kill Karná. Sakuni, the expert in foul play in dice will be killed by Sahadeva. We will meet in the 14th year from today at the battlefield, Adien.”

Thus did the Pándavas depart for the forest. Kuntí being old Vidura took her to his house, and he consolled her, lamenting over the separation from her children. (M.B. Sahá Parva).
8) Curse of Maitreya. The Pándavas entered the Kámyaka forest where they were welcomed by the sages. Among them Maitreya whom the misfortune of the Pándavas affected much started for Hastinápurá for peace parleys. Vidura advised Dhártarástra that Maitreya’s proposals should be respected lest he should curse the King. Dhártarástra and Duryodhána received the sage with respect. And, the sage asked them to recall the Pándavas from the forest and live on friendly terms with them. Duryodhána did not in any manner respond to the advice of the sage, but stood there absolutely mum tapping his thigh with his fingers and making drawings with the fingers of his feet on the ground. This the sage interpreted as an insult to him. He stood up ablaze with anger and cursed Duryodhána thus: “You will, sooner than later reap the consequences of your false pride; your cruelty will invite terrible war, and in the fight Biháma will rend asunder your thigh, which you struck with your fingers just now.”

Greatly agitated over the curse Dhártarástra prayed the sage for redemption and the sage said: “if only your son resorts to forbearance and peace the curse will not take effect, otherwise it will come true.” And after making this announcement the sage returned to the forest. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 10).

9) The procession. While the Pándavas were staying in the Kámyaka forest Duryodhána and others went there on the pretext of looking after the cows. The Gandháervas took them captive; but the Pándavas intervened and set them free. Feeling humiliated at the mishap Duryodhána decided to end his life after crowning Dušásana as King. But Dušásana did not agree to the proposal. (For details see Ghosávatára).

10) Duryodhána’s attempt at death and his trip to Pátiála. Humiliated at the procession thus and turning down the advice of friends to return to the palace, Duryodhána spread grass on the ground and lay down there to die. As his death would spell disaster to the Dánavas they decided to send him back to his palace for which purpose they performed the Váuána sacrifice in Pátiála. While offering milk in the sacrificial fire a Rákshasa woman, Krátá, arose therefrom, and at the instance of the Dánavas she carried Duryodhána over to Pátiála. there they told him thus: “Oh Duryodhána, a part of your body has been earned by us from Siva by our penance. That part of your body above the waist is made of diamond. Therefore, arrows will not pierce your body. Grieve not. Bhagadatta and other heroes have been born to help you. Your great supporter Karna is possessed of the soul of Narakáshura.” These words of the Dánavas instilled fresh hope in Duryodhána, and he was taken back to his kingdom by Krátá. This incident appeared as a dream to Duryodhána. Bucking up confidence and courage again he returned to Hastinápurá and continued to rule. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 232).

11) Duryodhána’s Váyu yajña. At this juncture Duryodhána thought of performing a Rákshasa for which he invited Brahmins to the palace. After bestowing much thought on the subject the Brahmins pointed out that there was no sanction for Duryodhána to conduct a Rákshasa as his elders, Dhártarástra and Dhrámaputra were still alive. At the same time they pointed out that there was another Váyu called Visvá Váyuja as efficacious as Rákshasa which Duryodhána was competent to perform. Accordingly Duryodhána performed the Visvá yajña and earned reputation among evil monarchs. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 256, 257).

12) boon from Dürvášas. Once Dürváśas accompanied by his disciples, came to Duryodhána’s palace, and Duryodhána decided somehow or other to befriend and use the maháraṣi as a weapon against the Pándavas. He housed the maháraṣi and his disciples in the palace for a few days and pleased them by careful service at which the maháraṣi asked Duryodhána to request for any boon he desired. And, Duryodhána asked the maháraṣi to visit the Pándavas one day in the forest with his disciples when they had finished taking their meals. The maháraṣi agreed. And, this was the period of time when Páncáli had received the akáyapatra from Súrya. Everyday the pátra would produce enough food for the Pándavas and the other people with them, but it would become empty for the day after Páncáli had eaten her food. This was the nature of the akáyapatra.

Páncáli had finished her meal one day when Durváśas and his disciples came to the Pándavas. Not knowing that Páncáli had already finished her food Dharmaputra welcomed the maháraṣi and his disciples and requested them to take back in the Gaṅgá and return for the meals. Páncáli was in a fix. The akáyapatra would not produce any more food for the day, and if not duly fed the maháraṣi would get angry and curse them. In this painful dilemma she prayed to Sír Krása for succour, and lo! he appeared and ascert Páncáli for some food. She replied that the akáyapatra was quite empty. But, Krása got from her the pátra and ate one particle of Kíra (a leafy-vegetable) which had stuck on its side. That leafy substance fully satisfied his hunger and thirst whereupon the hunger and thirst of Durváśas and his disciples were also quenched. Then Krása asked Sádhevà to bring back the maháraṣi and his disciples from the bank of the Gaṅgá and accordingly he went there and invited them. Only a few minutes had passed since the maháraṣi and his disciples had felt the satisfaction of a sumptuous meal. They were also astonished to think how in such a short time food for so many people could be cooked by Páncáli. They felt rather anxious about the reaction which Dharmaputra would evince in case they returned to him to say that they required no food. Durváśas realised only too well that to quarrel with the Pándavas, who enjoyed the friendship and support of Krása was like playing with fire. Therefore, the maháraṣi with his disciples ran away from the place secretly. Pándavas waited long for the maháraṣi and his disciples to return fearing that the object of Durváśas might be to return at the untimely hour and curse them. But, Sír Krása told them the details about the maháraṣi’s departure and assured Dharmaputra that he and his disciples would not return. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 253).

13) War against Virítha. After twelve years’ exile in the forest the Pándavas began their life incognito to at Virítha nagara. Kicaka, brother-in-law of Mátýasa, the Virítha King, was killed secretly by Bhíma, and news was spread that Kicaka was killed by a Gandháerva.

None of the spies deputed by Duryodhána to spot out the Pándavas during their life incognito could gather any information about them. One of those days, Sushrata, King of Kingtra, told Duryodhana that the Virata King had lost his power and spirit due to the death of Kicaka and it was, therefore, the proper time to attack the Virata country and subjugate it thoroughly. The idea appealed to Karna, who prompted Duryodhana to war against Virata. The army was fully mobilised. As an excuse for the war, at the instance of Duryodhana, Sri Arjuna, Kingtra, lifted innumerable cows of the Virata King. This happened on the day on which the life incognito of the Pāṇḍavas was to have ended. And war started thus. The Virata prince Uttara who spent his time in the zenana in the palace appeared in the field of war. Arjuna, under the assumed name of Bhāmanna took up the chariotry of Uttara. But, at the sight of the vast Kaurava army Uttara fainted, and Arjuna hurriedly drove the chariot over to where his bow Gandiva was kept hidden, and with the bow in his hands Arjuna jumped into the thick of the war. A fierce war ensued in which the Kaurava army was completely routed. The life incognito of the Pāṇḍavas was also over, and Duryodhana became naturally anxious about the future of Duryodhana. (M.B. Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 63).

14) Preparation for War. Duryodhana refused to give the Pāṇḍavas, even after their return from twelve years' exile in forest and one year's life incognito, even 'as much land as would hold a pin', and war became inevitable. The Pāṇḍavas and Kauravas fought the great war which lasted for eighteen days on the field of Kurukṣetra.

(1) No doubt it was Duryodhana who came first. But it was Arjuna whom I met first. Since Duryodhana came first and I saw Arjuna first I shall help both of you in war. There is the adage that youngsters should be given priority of consideration. So, Arjuna may indicate his preference first. I shall give you one of my army of 10,000 warriors as strong as myself, and I shall supply the other without arms and without fighting. Arjuna may make his choice first. And, he chose Kṛṣṇa for his side in the war while Duryodhana was happy to get Kṛṣṇa's mighty army. (M.B. Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 7).

(2) Duryodhana sought Balabhadra's help but Balabhadra told him frankly that since he could not forsake Kṛṣṇa he would remain neutral in the war. (M.B. Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 25).

(3) Duryodhana got an ēkāśūnā (a specific division of army) from Kṛṣṇa. (Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 92).

(4) Śalya promised to captain the Kaurava army. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 18).

(5) Duryodhana could collect a total of eleven akṣaṭāhāna. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 27).

(6) He assured Dhrītarāṣṭra that the Kaurava army would easily defeat the Pāṇḍava army. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 57).

(7) He declared that war was a yajña. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 58).

(8) At the instance of Dhrītarāṣṭra, a rest house was built for Śri Kṛṣṇa on his way to the Kauravas for compromise talks on behalf of the Pāṇḍavas. (Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 85).

(9) Duryodhana opined that Kṛṣṇa be taken captive when he came to plead for compromise and peace, but the others did not support him. (Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 13).

(10) Duryodhana worshipped Kṛṣṇa with rare and excellent things and invited him for meals, but Kṛṣṇa did not accept any. (Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 13).

(11) Duryodhana rejected the advice of Śri Kaurva to come to terms with the Pāṇḍavas. (Udhyoga Parva, Chapters 97-105).

(12) He emphatically announced in the Kaurava assembly that even as much land as may be required to hold a pin would not be given to the Pāṇḍavas. (Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 127, Verse 26).

(13) Kṛṣṇa's pleadings in the Kaurava assembly for peace and amity on behalf of the Pāṇḍavas failed to have any effect. On the occasion Duryodhana, Śakuni, Drona and Bhīṣma conspired to kidnap Kṛṣṇa captive. Sāvyaki informed Kṛṣṇa secretly about the conspiracy and Kṛṣṇa informed Dhrītarāṣṭra about it and he warned the conspirators against their wicked plan. (Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 13, Verse 4).

(14) Duryodhana appointed Kṛṣṇa, Drona, Śalya, Jayadratha, Hardika, Aśvatthāma, Kṛṣṇa, Śakuni, Bhīṣma and Kāṇḍa as commanders of the army. (Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 155).

(15) Duryodhana appointed Bhīṣma as the Commander-in-Chief of the army. (Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 156 Verse 26).

(16) He appointed Ulaka as a messenger and warned Śri Kṛṣṇa, the Pāṇḍavas, Durgāpada, Virata, Śiṅhada, Dṛṣṭāyuṇa and others. (Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 190).

(17) He ordered the army to the Kurukṣetra field. (Udhyoga Parva, Chapter 195).

(18) He appointed Duṣśāna as Bhīṣma's body-guard. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 15).

(19) On the flag staff of Duryodhana studded with gems his flag with the serpent's emblem flew high in the air. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 25).

(20) He learnt from Droga the names of heroes on both sides before the fighting started. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 25).

15) Duryodhana in battlefield. The following incidents relating to Duryodhana in actual war have been noted.

(1) In the first day's fighting he functioned, hit by the arrows of Bhīṣma. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 17).

(2) He attacked Bhīṣma with the support of the elephant division (Gaṅgasena) and the latter fainted. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 64, Verse 14).

(3) Bhīmasena again confronted him, and again he fell down fainted. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 80, Verse 4).
(4) Duryodhana defeated him. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 53).
(5) Bhima killed eight brothers of Duryodhana at one stretch, and Duryodhana cried before Bhima. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 57).
(6) He fought against Ghatotkaca and killed four Rākṣasa attendants of the latter. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 20).
(7) He fell down at the blows delivered by Ghatotkaca. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 14).
(8) He thrashed Bhima to unconsciousness. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 5).
(9) Overpowered by Ghatotkaca, he gave expression to his sorrows before Bhima. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 8).
(10) He directed Sālyu to fight against Yudhishthira. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 105, Verse 26).
(11) Grieved at the death of the warriors in his army he went to Bhima in great anguish. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 16).
(12) Duryodhana and Sāttvaka fought against each other. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 111, Verse 14).
(13) He fought with Abhimanyu. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 1).
(14) He appointed Droga as chief of the army. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 2).
(15) He prayed for Droga’s blessings to capture Yudhishthira alive. (Droga Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 6).
(16) He returned Droga at the sight of the latter disintegrating the fighting forces of the Pāṇḍavas. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 7).
(17) He ascended sanctuary to his warriors to kill Abhimanyu. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 16).
(18) He prompted Karuṇa to fight Abhimanyu. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 40, Verse 23).
(19) He ran off at the blows of Abhimanyu. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 30).
(20) He consoled Jayadratha who ran away in fear of Arjuna. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 74, Verse 14).
(21) When he admitted that he was not efficient to fight Arjuna, Droga tied a divine talisman on his body. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 73).
(22) Defeated by Arjuna he ran away with the talisman on him. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 103, Verse 32).
(23) Sāttvaka defeated Duryodhana. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 40).
(24) He defeated Abhimanyu and Uttamaus. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 102, Verse 30).
(25) He incited Karuṇa to kill Arjuna. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 145, Verse 12).
(26) He lost his enthusiasm with the death of Jayadratha. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 150).
(27) He made allegations against Droga. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 132, Verse 2).
(28) He fought with Yudhishthira and got defeated. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 153, Verse 23).
(29) Aṣvattihām got ready to kill Karuṇa, but Duryodhana pacified him. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 150, Verse 13).
(30) He fought with Bhima and got defeated. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 30).
(31) He departed Sāttvaka to the Pāṇḍavas. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 170, Verse 60).
(32) He defeated in fight with Sāttvaka. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 171, Verse 23).
(33) He prompted Abhimanyu, son of Jāṭāṣura to fight with Ghatotkaca. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 174, Verse 9).
(34) He fought with Nakula and got defeated. (Bhāsma Parva, Chapter 187, Verse 50).
(35) On the death of Droga he ran away from the battlefield. (Droga Parva, Chapter 193, Verse 17).
(36) After the death of Droga he appointed Karuṇa chief of the army. (Karuṇa Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 43).
(37) He fought against Yudhishthira and got defeated (Karuṇa Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 32).
(38) He requested Sālyu to act as Karuṇa’s charioteer. The request so enraged Sālyu that he rose from his seat at once. But, Duryodhana brought him round with praises. (Karuṇa Parva, Chapter 92).
(39) He created so much trouble and difficulties for Nakula and Sahadeva in fight with them. (Karuṇa Parva, Chapter 56).
(40) In further fighting he got defeated by Bhima. (Karuṇa Parva, Chapter 61, Verse 51).
(41) He killed the Kulinda prince. (Karuṇa Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 19).
(42) When Aṣvattihānā put forward certain compromising proposals he rejected them. (Karuṇa Parva, Chapter 88, Verse 30).
(43) Karuṇa was killed and Duryodhana was immersed in grief. (Karuṇa Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 15).
(44) He rejected peace proposals made by Krpa, and reaffirmed the decision to fight. (Sālyu Parva, Chapter 22).
(45) He appointed Sālyu as chief of the army. (Sālyu Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 6).
(46) He was again defeated by Bhima. (Sālyu Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 42).
(47) He was defeated by Duryodhumma. (Sālyu Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 23).

14) He fought with Bhīma. (Karna Parva, Chapter 82).
DUŚŞĀSANA II. Another Duśśāsana, servant of the son of King Khadgabhāhu of Saurashtra is also mentioned in the Purāṇas.

Khadgabhāhu had a famous elephant, which one night broke its chains and escaped, and all the mahouts could not chain it again. People in terror of the elephant ran heed-skelter. Now, a brahmin was going that way chanting verses of the 16th chapter of the Gītā, and even though the mahouts warned him he did not change his path. Instead he saluted the elephant by touching its cheeks and proceeded on his way unhurt by the animal. The King felt great respect for the brahmin when he was told that he owed his miraculous powers to the 16th chapter of the Gītā, and he took the brahmin with him to his palace. The King gave him 100,000 golden coins and received from him the Gītā mantra. He began reciting daily certain verses in the 16th chapter of the Bhagavadgītā.

Some time afterwards the King one day went to an open ground near his palace accompanied by soldiers and set the elephant free from its chain. Then, unheeding the entreaties of the frightened people he approached the elephant, saluted it by touching its cheeks and came away unhurt. He could act in this fashion because of his firm faith in the efficacy of the Bhagavadgītā. And afterwards he placed his son, on the throne and himself led a life of recluse repeating the Bhagavadgītā.

Some Purāṇas have another version of this episode. Duśśāsana was a servant of Khadgabhāhu’s son and he attempted to catch the elephant but was killed by it. He attained salvation by hearing the 17th chapter of the Bhagavadgītā.

Duśśāsana, an idiot, betting a huge sum of money with the junior mahouts of the elephant and unheeding the warnings of several people once mounted the elephant. Children agitated the animal and Duśśāsana fell down from its back. The angry animal stamped the fool to death, and its rage having not yet subsided it threw around his bones. Duśśāsana, who ended his life thus was reborn as an elephant and was owned by King Jayadeva of Ceylon for a long time. A great friend of King Khadgabhāhu, Jayadeva presented the elephant to him. At the sight of its brothers and other relations memory about its previous birth dawned on the elephant. And, it lived in great grief. After some days the King presented the animal to a poet pleased at his names, filling the three lines of a stanza in tune with the fourth line given). The poet sold the elephant to the King of Mālava as it got ill with fever. In spite of the best treatment administered to it the elephant seemed to be nearing its end. Without either eating or drinking or sleeping the animal stood motionless shedding tears day and night. One day, the Mālava King visited the elephant when, to the surprise of all assembled there, the elephant spoke to the King thus: “Oh, King: if a brahmin recites the 17th Chapter of the Bhagavadgītā I will be completely cured of my illness.” Accordingly a brahmin was brought. As soon as he chanted the Gītā and sprinkled water on its head it got rid of its animalhood, ascended the divine aeroplane and was forth like Indra. The Mālava King also began daily reciting the Bhagavadgītā and within a short time afterwards attained salvation. (Padma Purāṇa, Chapter 8).

DUŚŚIĻA. A harlot who lived in Pratisthāna. One Devadāsa was her husband. When Devadāsa had once gone to the palace on some business Duśśila hid her paramour, with the object of doing away with her husband, on top of the ceiling of her room. He killed Devadāsa while the latter was sleeping in the night. Next day when people gathered at her house she gave out the story that her husband was murdered by thieves. But the people got the true story about the death of Devadāsa from his four-year-old son and beat Duśśila to death. (Kathāvarītisāgara, Saktiyālaṇabaka, Taruṅga 2).

DUŚṬABUDDHI. See Mitraḥbheda.

DUŠYAṬA I. A reputed King of the Lunar dynasty.

Matirnā had two sons: Santurodha and Pratiratha, and Santurodha had three sons: Duśyaṭa1 Pravīra and Sunumata. Pratiratha begot Kaṇva and he, Medhāthīthi.

His reign. Within a short period of time Duśyaṭa became the emperor of India. (Adi Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 3). His empire extended up to the sea, and he became an object of envy for other rulers. Under his rule the four castes flourished in afluence. None was threatened with illness or by thieves. The seasons marched in due order, the clouds raining at the proper time etc. “Like the ocean not getting agitated, and putting up with everything with unique patience like the earth, Duśyaṭa ruled the country” (Adi Parva, Chapter 68).
3) Marriage and birth of son. Once Dusyanta set out to a forest to hunt. Seated in his chariot, which moved with the speed of Garuda, he came to a beautiful forest. Weary with hunger and thirst, the King, leaving the attendants behind walked into the hermitage of the sage Kasyapa. Proceeding along the sand on the banks of Malini river, drinking with his eyes the beauties of the hermitage he reached Kasyapa’s hermitage. Who is there in this forest, quoth the kingly speech of Sakuntalā, the foster daughter of Kasyapa came out, and in the absence of her father welcomed the guest. Enchanted by the beauty of Sakuntalā, the King questioned her about her lineage and she told him the story about Vāivatsāra’s love for Menakā, and Kasyapa bringing up their daughter. Dusyanta felt deep love for her, and in accordance with rules prescribed in Dharma śāstras married her in the Gāndhārīvavaya way. He also accepted her stipulation that the son born to her should become the next monarch. Sakuntalā got pregnant, and after promising that she would duly be conducted to the palace Dusyanta returned.

No sooner had Dusyanta left the āramāna than Kasyapa, who had been desirous of having a son, realized that the further stay of Sakuntalā and her son at the āramāna would stand in the way of the child’s welfare and progress sent the mother and the child to Hastinapura, the capital of Dusyanta, attended by his disciples. When they reached Dusyanta’s palace and sent word to him about their arrival he, pleading ignorance about his marriage with Sakuntalā, refused to receive her and the child. Dusyanta and Sakuntalā hotly argued the question. At last, when Sakuntalā, with swelling emotions was about to leave the palace, a celestial voice announced that Dusyanta had, in fact, married Sakuntalā, that Sarvadamanā was his son and that he (Sarvadamanā) would become a great ruler under the name Brāha. (Adi Parva, Chapters 69-74).

Dusyanta... did not eat flesh. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 54).

Dusyanta...in Yāma’s assembly worshipping him. (Subhāna Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 15).

Dusyanta II. A son born to King Ajañjita of the Pura dynasty by his wife called Nīlī. He had a brother called Paramesīḥ. (Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 33).

Dvaitākṣaṇa (M). The word ‘dāta’ has a special meaning in Viśāvakṛṣṇa. If a man is bitten by a snake, the man who goes to the Viśāvakṛṣṇa to speak to him about it and bring him if necessary is called ‘dāta’. From the external signs and symbols of the dāta and from words spoken by him the viṣāvakṛṣṇa understands whether the person bitten by the snake would die or survive. These signs and words of the ‘dāta’ are called laksāṇas. The following are some of the important laksāṇas.

(1) The cast of the person bitten by the snake and the cast of the dāta.
(2) The first word uttered by the dāta. If it is the name of the patient, it has a special significance.
(3) If the dāta makes an incomplete sentence, it is a significant laksāṇa.
(4) The things carried by the dāta such as stick, rope, knife.
(5) The colour of the clothes worn by the dāta.
(6) The tone in which the dāta speaks. These are the laksāṇas from which the doctor knows whether the patient can be cured. (Bhāgavata Purāṇa, Brahma Parva, Chapter 35, Verses 19, 20).

Dvaitākṣaṇa. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Sānta 57).

Dvaitākṣaṇa (S). The twelve sons born to Kāśyapa by his wife Aditi are called Dvaitākṣaṇa (Twelve Aditiṣas). The word Aditi means ‘born of Aditi’. As it occurs in Agni Purāṇa (Ct. 51) a tabule showing the names of the twelve Aditiṣas and the sign of the Zodiack over which each Aditiṣa predominates and the colour of it, is given below.

Dvaitākṣaṇa. Sign of the Zodiac. Colour
1 Varuṇa. Mēsa (Aqu.) Black
2 Śaṅkara (Sun) Sāma (Taurus) Blue
3 Bṛhadāraṇa Mēṣha (Gemini) Slightly red colour.
4 Dvāra Kārtikā (Cancer) Yellow.
5 Tapana Simha (Leo) White.
6 Savitṛ Kanya (Virgo) Pure white.
7 Gaṅgāhi Tula (Libra) Tawny colour.
8 Ravi Vēṣcika (Scorpio) Yellow.
9 Parjanya Dhanu (Sagittarius) Pearl-white.
10 Tvaṣṭar Makara (Capricorn) Snow-white.
11 Mitra Kumbha (Aquarius) Smoky hue.
12 Vivasvān Mēna (Pisces) Blue.

Dvaitākṣaṇa. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Sānta 80).

Dvaitākṣaṇa. A fast ordained in accordance with the Hindu religion to make an end of the sorrow and misery in life. There is a history behind this fast or vow which is performed in the bright lunar fortnight in the month of Pāgūna (Mina). It is given below.

Once King Mahābali, with a vast army of Asuras, went to the realm of the gods and drove them out of heaven. Aditi was much grieved at the misfortune that befell her sons. Kāśyapa her husband asked her the cause of her grief. She told him about the fall of gods, and asked him for a remedy. Kāśyapa told her to observe Dvaitākṣaṇa. Aditi took Dvaitākṣaṇa and Mahābali was pushed down to Pātāla by Mahāvīṇṇa who incarnated as Vāmana. From that day onwards Dvaitākṣaṇa is considered to be holy fast. (Bhāgavata, Skandha 8).

Dvaidhībhava. One of the six qualities, others being Sandhi, Vighraha, Vāsa, Asana, and Samvāyā Sandhi is to make peace with the enemy. Vighraha is war. The journey to battle is Yama. Asana is not going for war. Dvaidhībhava is dividing his army into two, i.e. if the poet Kālidāsa has made variations, suitable to his work, the Abhjama-sākuntalā. Some deviations from the Mahābhārata story may be noticed in the works of some other poets also.

DVĀPAṆA YUGA See under Yuga.

DVĀRĀKĀ (DVĀRAVATI; DVĀRAVATI). The place where the capital of Śrī Krṣṇa stood.

1) General information. The King Jarāsandha was the enemy of the Yādavas. To save themselves from the attack of Jarāsandha, the Yādavas united themselves under Śrī Krṣṇa, and built a strong city in the western islands. That beautiful city was called Dvārākā. Kusumā, another name of this city. The beautiful mountain Raivatsthāna stood as a fortress round the city which was so strongly built that it was not possible even for the gods to enter it. Even women could fight sitting inside the fort. The fortress Raivasthāna was three yojanas long. In each yojana three divisions of the army were camped. In each yojana there were hundred doors, with a strong army to guard each of them. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 14).

2) Śrī Krṣṇa in Dvārākā. Dvārākā was the abode of Śrī Krṣṇa. It excelled even Amaravati in beauty. There was an efficient council of the leaders of the Yādavas. Dāśārhi was the name of that council. Many Yādava leaders, Krṣṇa, Bābhūdra and other luminaries attended the council. The royal palace was as luminous as the Sun and the Moon. Dvārākā was built by Vīvākarmi. There were fountains on the streets of Dvārākā. There were four beautiful parks called Nanda, Mṛurā, Citraṇātha and Vaibhāra. The mountain Raivatstha acted as the eastern rampart of the city. Three other mountains, Venumanda on the North, Sukksa on the west and Lādveṣṭa on the south acted as natural forts. On the east of the city there was a beautiful lake. The city had fifty main gates to which sharp machine rocket, big iron wheels etc. were fitted for protection. It had an area of 96 yojanas (leagues). (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 38, Dāśānāṭya purāṇa).

3) Other details. (1) Arjuna visited Dvārākā in the course of his pilgrimage. It was then and there that he married Sābhādra. (M.B. Adv Parva, Chapters from 217.)

(2) The King of Siva attacked Dvārākā. The Yādavas drove him back. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 13.)

(3) Dvārākā is a city, procuring beatitude. There is a bath known as Pindāraka which is pure and divine. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 82, Stanza 651.)

(4) It was at Pindāraka that Nṛga, a chameleon attained beatitude. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 74, Stanza 7.)

(5) It was here that the pedestal of iron, which proved the cause of destruction of the Yādavas, came out of the stomach of Śaṁba. (M.B. Mauṣala Parva, Chapter 1.)

(6) After the death of Śrī Krṣṇa this city was swept over by the sea. (M.B. Mauṣala Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 21.)

(7) Modern research according to the modern researchers Dvārākā was situated in the sea to the west of Gujarat. There is a small locality near the sea, still called Dvārākā, and the principal occupation of the people of this place still is cattle-rearing, and trading in milk. They claim to be the descendents of the family of Śrī Krṣṇa.

DVĀRĀKĀPĀLAṆA. An ancient city of Bhārata. Nakula subdued this city. (Mahābhārata, Sāya Parva, Chapter 32, Stanza 11.)

DYUTIMĀṆ I. A King of the Madra country. Vyjaṇā, the daughter of this King was the wife of Saṁhaṇa, one of the Pāṇḍavas. (M.B. Adv Parva, Chapter 95, Stanza 80.)

DYUTIMĀṆ II. A King of the Sīva country. He gave his country to Reīka and attained heaven. (M.B.
EKADASHATATTVAM (S). Five Jaanendriyas, five Karundriyas and mind constitute the Ekadashaatattvas (eleven tattvas).

EKADASATEJOGUNA (S). Sparag, Samikhya, Purinam, Prabhakta, Samyoga, Vibhagha, Paratva, Aparatva, Vega, Rupa and Dravatva. (Tarkadipika) are the eleven tejogunas.

EKADASI. The eleventh day after a new moon or full moon day. The vrata observed on this day is called the Ekadasi vrata. King Ambareesam observed very strictly and continuously the Ekadasi vrata to obtain the status of Indra. (See under Ambareesam). (Navama Skandha, Bhagavata). This vrata would fetch food for the hungry and salvation for those who are in search of it. (Agni Puranya). The method of observing this vrata is detailed below:

Those who observe the Ekadasi vrata should be on a regulated diet excluding meat and avoid sexual acts on the Dasami day, the day preceding Ekadasi. On both the Ekadasi days in a month one should not take any food at all. The period which combines Ekadasi with Dwadasi (the twelfth day) is called Harivisartha because of the presence of Visnu at that time. That is a good time for doing sacred yajyas. That day when there is only a small portion of Ekadasi and the rest Dwadasi is the best day for yajnas. Trayodashi (the thirteenth day) is good for breaking the fast. The day which merges Dwadasi into Trayodashi is the best day for breaking the fast. Do not observe the Vrata on a day which combines Dasami with Ekadasi. Half is the reward if one does so.

Completely abstaining from food on the Ekadasi day you should take food on the Dwadasi day. As you take your food you should pray thus: “Bhutatyanabhih Pundarikaksha sarasam me bhavaye yatu” (Oh, Pundarikaksha, I am going to break my fast. Oh, Bhagavan, let you be my haueven). If an Ekadasi comes on a Purna-Pusa day in the bright half of the month that day should be on any account be observed. That day would give the observer unlimited good result and that Ekadasi is qualified as Paapamitrini (destroyer of evils). When Ekadasi and Dwadasi happen to combine on a Purna day (Sravanama) the day the Ekadasi is qualified as Visha. That day gives prosperity to devotees. It is also called Visha. If an Ekadasi comes in the month of Pashqun (March) on a Pusa day. The wise extol this day as one promising crops of good effects. On the Ekadasi day you should do Visnu Puja which is productive of universal happiness. He who does so will acquire children and wealth in this world and attain Visnu lokam on death.
(Chapter 178, Agni Puranya).

EKADASENDRIYA(S). Srotas, Trak, Caksus, JihvAs, Ghrana, Vak, Pani, Pada, Pava (anus) Upastma and mind are the eleven sense-organs.

India. If a man bathes in a sacred pond he will get the benefit of giving away as charity a thousand ows.

(Chapter 29, Chapter 83, Vana Puranya).

EKAJATA. A demoness of the castle of Ravans. This demoness talked very enticingly to coax Sita to surrender herself to Ravan. (Sarga 23, Valmiki Rimes-ya, Sundara Kanda).

1. The names of Ekadashaadras are found differently in different Puranams.
EKAJATA. A warrior of Skandadeva. (Śloka 53, Chapter 45, Sālīya Parva).

EKAKSA II. A son of Skandadeva. (Śloka 58, Chapter 45, Sālīya Parva, M.B.).

EKAKSARAKOSA. Each and every letter has got a separate meaning. The dictionary describing this meaning is known as Ekaksarakota. (Chapter 348, Agni Purāṇa).

EKALAVYA I. Son of Hiranyakadhana, a King of the forest. He went to Dronārāya to learn archery. Dronārāya refused to accept him as a disciple because he was a Śūdra. Undaunted he went to the forest, made a replica of the precursor on clay and standing before it started practising archery. Soon he became a matchless archer.

Some time later the Pāndavas went to the forests for hunting. One of the hunting dogs alerting saw Ekbalava and started barking. Ekbalava sent seven arrows to its mouth and kept it open. When the dog returned to Arjuna he was dumbfounded at the skill of the archer and when he came to know the archer was an unknown disciple of Drona his disappointment knew no bounds. Draupadi once declared that Arjuna was the best and topmost of his disciples. Arjuna went and complained to Dronārāya. Dronārāya called Ekbalava to his side and asked him to give him as "Gurukulakīti" (see to the precursor) his right-hand thumb. Without the least hesitance, Ekbalava offered his thumb to the guru and from that day onwards his skill faded and he became inferior to Arjuna. (Chapter 132, Adi Parva). Ekbalava was killed by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Śloka 77, Chapter 48, Udyoga Parva, M.B.).

A son of Ekbalava seized the sacrificial horse of Arjuna and was killed by Arjuna (Chapter 83, Avamānedhika Parva, M.B.).

FĀNAKGĀ. A daughter of Yavāñi and hence a sister of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. It was because of her that Kṛṣṇa could slay Kaiśika. (Chapter 38, Sahā Parva, M.B.).

EKAPADA. A country of ancient Bhārata. The King and the people of this country came to the Rājasūya of Yudhishthira but were prevented from entering inside because of the uncontrollable crowd inside. (Śloka 17, Chapter 51, Sahā Parva, M.B.).

EKAPARNA. Sister of Durgā. Ekaparna, Ekapātala and Aparna were the three daughters of Himavān born of his wife Menā. Ekaparna ate only one leaf and Ekapātala ate a bunch of leaves. Aparna did not eat even a leaf. Ekaparna was married to a sage called Devala and Ekapātala to a sage called Jagisvāla. (Chapter 18, Hāri Vana-). (See under Hāmatana).

EKAPĀTALĀ. See under Ekaparna.

EKAPAT I. See under Ekaśakara.

EKAPAT I. A synonym of Bhagavān Viṣṇu. (Śloka 95, Chapter 149, AnuŚrīsana Parva, M.B.).

EKAPINGA (EKAPINGALAYA) Another name of Vaiśravaṇa. Once Vaiśravaṇa looked jealously at Parvati seated on the left side of Parameśvara and instantly his one eye burst. When Pīrvati regained her peace of mind that one eye of Vaiśravaṇa was changed into pitāga colour. (See under Kārīra).

EKĀRATRATIRTHA. A sacred place. If one stays at this place righteously for one day one would attain Brahma-loka. (Śloka 182, Chapter 83, Vaiśa Parva, M.B.).

EKASRNGA. One of the Saptapiths, Vaiśravaṇa, Agnisvāta, Gārhaṉapati, Somapāra, Ekaśinga, Gauraveda and Kāla are the seven pits. All these seven stayed in Brahma-saḥbhā worshipping him. (Ślokas 47 and 48, Chapter 11, Sahā Parva).

EKASRTA. See under Vararuci.

EKAYA. 1) General information. An ancient sage. He was the son of the Mahārī Gautama. He had two brothers, Dvīta and Trika.

2) How Ekata became a wolf by a curse. There is a story of how Ekata and Dvīta duped Trika in the Mahībhārata. When Gautama died Trika became the chief of the three. Dvīta and Ekata did not like this. Once all the three were passing by a forest with a herd of cows for a yāga. Trika was walking ahead and the other two were following him with the cows. At a strategic point on the way the brothers carried away the cows by a separate route without the knowledge of Trika. When Trika came to know of the loss he was greatly distressed. On reaching the shores of the river Sarasvatī, he was frightened by a wolf and running to escape from the animal fell into a dilapidated well. He performed a yāga from where he lay. Assuming a creeper inside the well to be Somalati, Trika recited the Rks and the devas responded to his prayer. Devas like Bhraṣpati graciously appeared before him and asked him to demand a boon from them. Trika replied that his desire was to worship the gods standing on the waves of the river Sarasvatī. Accordingly the river was made to flow in such a way and standing on the waves. Trika worshipped the gods after that he went home and cursed his brothers and made Ekata and Dvīta into wolves.

3) Other details.

i) Ekata was a sage much banked on by the people of western Bhārata. (Śloka 31, Chapter 208, Sānti Parva).

ii) Ekata attended a yajña conducted by Upārīcaraśvāna (Chapter 336, Sānti Parva).

iii) Ekata accompanied by Dvīta and Trika went to Śveta-dvīpā to visit Nārāyaṇa. (Śloka 12, Chapter 39, Sānti Parva).

iv) Ekata and his two brothers were among the sages who visited Bhūṣana while he was lying on his bed of arrows. (Śloka 7, Chapter 26, AnuŚrīsana Parva, M.B.).

v) All these three sages lived on the west coast as Rūkṣas of Varuṇa. (Chapter 15, AnuŚrīsana Parva, M.B.).

vi) Śloka 150 in Maṇḍala I of Iṣvādena contains the eulogistic songs of Trika, one among the trio. (See under Trika).

EKATVAČA. A follower of Skandadeva. (Śloka 24, Chapter 46, Sālīya Parva).

EKĀVALI. Wife of Ekaśakra, founder of the Hēchaya dynasty. (For details see under Ekaśakra).
EKAVIRA

2) Birth of Ekavira. Once there was a King called Revanta who was an intimate friend of India. One day riding on Ucchaisravas, India's horse, he went to Vaikuntha. Fascinated by the arresting beauty of Revanta, Mahāšravas sat gaping for a while and did not hear what Visvū called to her. Visvū was offended and lost her temper. Lakṣman begged for relief. Visvū decreed that she would return to Vaikuntha after giving birth to a son who would be equal in glory to Visvū herself. Mahāšravas came to Earth taking the shape of a mare and lived in a forest situated at a point where the rivers Kalindi and Tamasa meet and where once Sīyapāni stayed and did penance. Meditating on Siva she lived there for a thousand divine years and then one day Siva and Parvati appeared before her and asked her what she wanted. She then said: "Oh, Bhagavan, Mahāvisvū cursed me and made me into a mare. I have decreed that I would go back after bringing forth a son as glorious as Visvū. From whom am I to bear a son like this?" Siva promised to find a solution and going to Vaikuntha sent Visvū to Earth in the form of a horse. Visvū came to Lakṣman and they lived together for some time and soon a son was born to Lakṣman. Leaving the child in the forest both of them went back to Vaikuntha. It is this child who later on became the famous King Ekavira. It was born in a forest that he got the names, Hehaya and Hāhaya. (Skandha 6, Devī Bhāgavata).

3) How Ekavira came to the palace. It was at this time that Satajī, son of the grandson of Yayati was doing penance to obtain a son. He was also doing penance in the forest situated at a point where the rivers Kalindi and Tamasa meet. One night a Vidyādhara named Canka came with a Vidyādhari named Madhukar and seeing the infant lying helpless in the forest took it to Devaloka. Indra recognized it as the child born to Visvū and Lakṣman on Earth while they were living as horse and mare and so the Vidyādhara put it back on earth in the same place as before. Immediately Lakṣman-Nārāyanas appeared before Satajī doing penance there and asked him to take care of a child lying helpless in another side of the forest disappeared. Immensely pleased at this Satajī took the child to his palace and brought him forth as his own son giving the child the name Ekavira. When the boy became a prince, Satajī crowned Ekavira King and went to the forest with his queen and after doing penance there for sometime attained Visvūlokā. (Skandha 6, Devī Bhāgavata).

4) Ekavira marries Ekāvati. Once Prince Ekavira accompanied by the son of the minister went for a pleasure trip to the banks of the river Gaṅgā. It was spring and the prince wandering about enjoying the sight of a flowery forest was soon arrested by the sight of a sweet-smelling lotus with a hundred petals blooming in the river. By the side of the lotus was standing a beautiful damsel weeping. The prince went to her and asked her the reason for her weeping. After great persuasion she replied thus: "Oh, prince, there is a country not far from yours which is now being ruled over by a very righteous King called Raikhyā. His queen is called Rukmakhā. They had no children for a very long time and so Raikhyā conducted a Pratirakṣāṃi yāga. When ghee was poured profusely into the sacrificial fire the flames rose up to great heights and from inside the flames came out a lovely maiden. The King named her Ekāvati and bought her forth as his daughter. I am Yovovati the daughter of the minister there. We were of the same age and so I was asked to live with her as her companion. She was very fond of lotuses and the King constructed big ponds with lotuses in them for her recreation. Yet she used to go to other ponds also in search of lotuses.

One day we came to this side of the river Gaṅgā to play. Then a demon of name Kalakettu came and kidnapped her. I followed her. She never surrendered to the enticements and persuasions of Kalakettu. Her father wanted her to be married to Ekavira. King of Hehaya. Kalakettu sent her to prison. Without knowing what to do next I am standing here weeping.

Hearing this Ekavira went to Pāṭalā and defeating Kalakettu released Ekāvati and brought back both Ekāvati and Yovovati to the palace of Raikhyā. Pleased at this Raikhyā gave his daughter in marriage to Ekavira. Kārtaṇyayunjuna was born in the family of Ekavira. (Skandha 6, Devī Bhāgavata).

ELĀPUTRA. A serpent born to Kaśyapa of his wife Kadā. This serpent was very intelligent. Once there arose a dispute between Vinatā and Kadā over the colour of the tail of the horse of Indra, Ucchaisravas. Kadā argued that there were black hairs in the tail while Vinatā held there were none. Really there were no black hairs and Kadā to win the argument wanted her sons to go and hang on the horns to create a black colour. The serpents like Vāsuki and others refused to do so and Kadā then cursed them saying that they would all be burnt to death at the Sarpastra of Janamejaya. To take measures to get free from this curse a meeting of the serpents under the leadership of Sesa and Vāsuki was held and in that assembly Elāputra made a stirring speech. (Chapter 35, Adi Parva, M.B.).

ELI AND PŪCCA

The story of the cat and the rat described by the poet Kuṭjā Naṁbhā is from Kathāsaritsāgara. The story in original is the following:

Once there lived on a big banyan tree near the city of Vidhā a mongoose, an owl, a cat and a rat. The mongoose and the rat lived in two separate hollows at the foot of the tree, the cat in a cavity in the centre of the tree and the owl on the branches at the top. Of these the rat could be eaten by all the other three and the cat could kill all the rest. The rat and the mongoose afraid of the cat did stir out only during night-time and the cat moved about day and night afraid of none wishing to catch, hold of the rat and eat it. Their common place of activity was a rice-field nearby.
Once a forester laid a net to catch the cat and the cat fell into the trap and lay there hugging inside the net.
The rat coming that way saw the plight of the cat and jumped with joy. But soon the owl and the mongoose came to the spot and seeing their enemy, the cat, imprisoned rushed to catch hold of the rat. The rat then did a very clever thing. It went and tore open the net imprisoning the cat and when the cat jumped out of the net the owl and the mongoose ran away and disappeared.
The rat went to its hole. This is a story to demonstrate the fact that with a change in the situation an enemy may turn out to be a friend. (Tatagya 7, Kathasatitthagata).

ELLU. An oil seed. (Sesame). Ellu originated from the body of Kaśyapa. Because Ellu is born of the body of Kaśyapa, King of Reis, it is considered as divine to offer Ellu to any body. (Śloka 10, Chapter 66, Anuśa-sana Parva).

yama, Pāṭcama, Dhaivata and Niśāda.
ERAKA. A serpent born in the family of the Kauravas.
This serpent was burnt to death at the Sarpasata of Jamnejaya. (Śloka 16, Chapter 57, Adi Parva).
ETASA. A sage who is greatly extolled in the Rgveda.
The son of King Svaśa fought with this sage and it was Indra who saved Eusahaan then. (Śloka 62, Anuśa-sana 11, Maṇḍala 1, Rgveda).
ETASA. One of the horses of the Sun. (Śloka 122, Aṣṭavīpa 18, Maṇḍala 1, Rgveda).

F
There are no words beginning with F. The letter corresponding to P in Indian languages is Ph (f). So all words beginning with this sound come under the letter F.

G
G (n) The letter G means both Gandharva and Viśṇu (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 34).
GABHASTIMĀṆ. An island. Once the valiant Sahasrabahu conquer and subjugated it. (M. B. Sābhya Parva, Chapter 38).
GADA. A weapon. An asura called Gada was born to Kubera-prajapati by his wife Diti. Visvakarma made Gada, and Visvakarma made a weapon with his bone.
Since the weapon made from Gada’s bone it came to be known as Gada. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 114).
GADA I. A brother (Yadava) of Balabhadramā.
1) General. Vasudeva had, besides Devaki, seven wives called Rohini, Bhadrā, Māлini, Madirā, Ilā, Rancā and Paurāvi, and out of the seven Rohini had six sons called Balabhadramā, Gada, Śārana, Durdama, Vikāla and Kṛṣṇa. (Bhāgavata, Navama Skandha).
2) Other details.
(1) Gada was present at the svayamvara of Draupadi.
(Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Verse 32).
(2) On the marriage of Ārjuna with Subhadra, it was Gada who brought the dowry of Subhadra from Dvārakā to Indraprastha. (Adi Parva, Chapter 229, Verse 32).
(3) When Śī Kṛṣṇa came to Dvārakā Gada received him with embraces. (M. B. Sābhya Parva, Chapter 2, Verse 35).
(4) Gada also was present on the occasion when the Pāṇḍavas first stepped into the beautiful palace built for them by Maya at Indraprastha. (M. B. Sābhya Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 99).
(5) Along with the other Yādavas Gada too was present at the rajāśuya yajña of Yudhiṣthira. (M. B.
Sābhya Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 16).
(6) Gada held a prominent position among the Yādāvas, who were forbidden to guard Dvārakā against the onslaught of King Śāśiva. (M. B. Vana Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 9).

(7) Gada also accompanied Śrī Kṛṣṇa to the Ayavmedha yajña performed by Yudhiṣṭhira. (Ayavmedha Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 9).

(6) Śrī Kṛṣṇa felt uncontrollably angry when Gada was attacked during the mutual conflict with iron rods by the Yādāvas which climaxed in their total annihilation. (Mausala Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 45).

GADA II. See Gada.

GADĀDHARA. A synonym of Mahāvīnuśu. There is a place called Gayā to the north of Mount Kailaṃjara, to the south of Himalaya, to the east of Kuśasthali, and to the west of Vamaṇa. Once a king called Gaya conducted at Gayā an Ayavmedha, a Nara-medha (yajña at which man is offered as sacrifice) and a Mahamadhna and Mahāvīnuśu acted as gate-keepers of Gayā. As Gaya stood guard there holding the gada (club) in his hand he came to be known as Gadaḍharana also thenceforth. (Vāmanā Purāṇa, Chapter 76).

GADĀPAṆA. A sub-parva of Śālya Parva in Mahābhārata. (See Mahābhārata).

GADĀVĀSANA. A particular centre in Mahārāṣṭra. The name owes its origin to the following reason. When Kṛṣṇa killed Kansa, his father-in-law, Jarāsandha got so angry that he hurled his gada (club) nine times at Mahārāṣṭra from his capital, Girivraja. The spot where the gada finally fell came to be called Gada-Vāsana in course of time. (M. B. Sahāba Parva, Chapter 18, Verses 22-25).

2) Birth. Kuṇa had by his wife Vairāvāni four sons called Kuṇāmbha, Kuṇānabha, Āśtarājāja and Vasu. Of the four sons Kuṇāmbha built a city called Kauṇāmbhi, Kuṇānabha built the city of Mahodavapura, Āśtarājāja the city of Dharmānaya and Vasu the city of Girivraja, and they administered their respective cities. Kuṇānabha had hundred daughters by his wife Gṛiṣṭā, an Aparā woman. He felt very sad that he had no sons. At last he performed the Pitra-kāmēṣṭha yajña, and Gādhi was born to him.

3) Gādhi's children. A son named Viśvāmitra and a daughter called Satyavati were born to Gādhi. Satyavati was married to sage Rṣika. After the wedding of his daughter, Gādhi crowned Viśvāmitra as the king and left for the forest for tapas. During his stay in the forest Gādhi was put up in the āśrama of Rṣika for a long time and he also went on many pilgrimages. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 49). (See also Satyavati and Viśvāmitra).

4) Death. Gādhi entered mahāmārādhī and went to heaven. (Śāla Parva, Chapter 16).

GADHI II. A brahmin who showed Viṣṇu's power of māyā. (See under Māyā).

GAGANAMŪRDHA. A reputed asura, son of Kaśyapa-prajāpati by Danu. Later on, he was born as one of the five Kekeya kings. Ayāśīrāja, Ayāvārāja, Ayālaṅkha, Gaganamūrdha and Vegevān were the five kings. (Adi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 11).

GAJA I. A powerful monkey King who fought on the side of Śrī Rāma against Rāvana. (Vana Parva, Chapter 203, Verse 3).

GAJA II. Younger brother of Śakuni, the son of Subala. He, along with his brother fought in the great war against the Pāndavas and got killed by Trāvan. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90).

GAJAKARAŚA. A yakṣa in Kubera's assembly. (Śāmhi Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 15).

GAJĀŚRAS. A warrior of Skanda. (Śālya Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 60).

GAJENDRAMOKSAM. The story about Indryudyuma, the Pāndya's king being transformed into an elephant due to the curse of Agastya and his attaining heaven. (See under Indryudyuma).

GALAVA. A celebrated sage.

1) Birth. He was a son of Viśvāmitra. He was a brahmaṇvāt. (Śloka 52, Chapter 4, Anuśānas Parva).

2) Huss he got his name. There is no trace of his original name in any of the Purāṇas. He got his name Galavasa later. There is a story about this both in Devibhāgavata and Harivamsa. It is as follows:

There was once a King called Aruna in the family of Māṇḍhātā. Aruna got a son and he was named Satyavatara. (It was this Satyavatara who later became the well known Triśanku). When Satyavatara was a young boy he once went inside the marriage hall of a brahmin and kidnapped the bride. Furious at this evil deed of his son the king sent him out from his palace and Satyavatara roam about aimlessly.

Nature protested against this deed of the King abandoning his heir and there was no rain in the country for twelve years. The people were all put to great trouble. Among those who suffered were the wife and children of Viśvāmitra. Viśvāmitra then at that time took the shrine of the river Kuṣṭhī, for doing penance. The family of Viśvāmitra was in great distress living without any means for food. The sight of the children crying for food to appease their hunger pained their mother much. So she decided to sell one child and feed the others by what she got from the sale. It was better to be without one child than all the children dying out of hunger.

She made a rope out of darbha leaves and tying it round the neck of one child took it to the market for sale. Both the mother and child were weeping profusely on their way. Satyavatara saw them and took pity on them. When Satyavatara heard their sad story and knew that the woman was the wife of Viśvāmitra he told her thus: "Oh, Venerable Lady, you need not sell this boy. Until the rope round his neck and throw it away. I will look after your family till the return of your husband. I will daily bring food for you all and hang it on a tree near your āśrama." The mother was extremely happy to hear this and she and her family untied the rope round the neck of the boy and the boy from hence became known as Galava. (For details see under Triśanku).

3) Gaudatāja of Galava. Galava continued his education under his father. At that time Dharmadeva to test Vīṣṇumitra came to him disguised as Vasiṣṭha. Vīṣṇumitra came out with rice to receive the guest but by that time the guest had disappeared. But Vīṣṇumitra remained there with the rice for hundred years till Dharmadeva returned. All these years Gālava looked after Vīṣṇumitra’s comforts. Vīṣṇumitra was immensely pleased with Gālava and allowed him to go away free without any gurudakṣaṇā when his education was over. Gālava wanted to give some dakṣaṇā but Vīṣṇumitra refused to accept it. Gālava insisted on giving and then Vīṣṇumitra asked him to give whatever he liked but Gālava wanted the Dakṣaṇā to be named. Disguised with this stubbornness Vīṣṇumitra said ‘Go and get me eight hundred horses each with one of its ears black’. Gālava was shocked to hear the demand and greatly worried rounded about in search of horses of the type specified. Garuda being partial for sadhik put a spell on the palace of Yāyāñi. Hearing the story of Gālava Yāyāñi sent his daughter Mādhavi with Gālava saying that if she was given in marriage to any king he would give him the eight hundred horses of the type he required.

Gālava took Mādhavi to Harayarā, a King of the Ikṣvāku line of Kings. Harayarā was dimly persuaded at that time to obtain a child. Gālava said that Harayarā would get a son of Mādhavi and he should, therefore, accept Mādhavi and give him in return eight hundred horses each with one ear black. Harayarā was amenable to the terms but the only difficulty was that he had only two hundred horses of the type specified. Finding this difficulty Mādhavi said “Oh, Gālava please do not worry on that account. I have a boon from a brahmadevi sage that I would remain a maiden even after delivery. So give me in marriage to this King and get two hundred horses. After giving birth to a son to this King take me to another King and get two hundred horses from him and then to another and thus by giving me to four Kings you can get the eight hundred horses you require.”

Gālava liked this plan and so when Mādhavi gave birth to a son he took her to Divagāla, Rāja of Kāśi. When a son was born to him Gālava took her to Uttarā, King of Rājagṛha. Gālava thus got six hundred horses but there was nobody else to give him the remaining two hundred. When Gālava was contemplating as to what he should do next Garuda came to his rescue. He advised Gālava to give six hundred horses and Mādhavi in lieu of the remaining two hundred horses to Vīṣṇumitra. Gālava gave Vīṣṇumitra the horses and Mādhavi pleased with the gurudakṣaṇā Vīṣṇumitra got for Mādhavi got a son named Anuška of Mādhavi. (See under Anuṣka.)

4) Gālava and Citrasena Gālava was once having his evening prayers in the river when the sputtering from the mouth of Citrasena who was travelling by air above fell on the pājā materials of Gālava. Gālava went and complained to Śrī Kṛṣṇa of that and Kṛṣṇa in haste promised to bring before Gālava the head of Citrasena before the sun set. Nārada who heard this went and informed Citrasena of Kṛṣṇa’s vow. Citrasena was frightened to death. But Nārada asked him not to lose hope and assured Sandhyā and Vālī, waves of Citrasena, to approach Subhadrā, sister of Kṛṣṇa, for protection. Both of them went to Subhadrā and made a grand fire-pit in front of her palace. Citrasena decided to end his life by jumping into the fire and as he was circling the pit his wife wept loudly. Since her husband Arjuna was away from the palace Subhadrā herself ran to the place from where she heard the cries. When they saw Subhadrā they begged for ‘Maṅgalahīkā’ (a boon to live with one’s husband). Subhadrā agreed to give them that. Then she heard their story in full and only then did she realize that she had undertaken to do the impossible. Yet, to help Subhadrā, Arjuna agreed to protect Citrasena. When Śrī Kṛṣṇa attacked Citrasena Arjuna defended. The fight then ensued between Arjuna and Kṛṣṇa. Both had very powerful and divine weapons and the world stood on the verge of a collapse by their fight. Then Subhadrā did a brave thing. She stood between the two and requested for a cease fire. Then Śrī Kṛṣṇa asked Citrasena to bow down and touch the feet of Gālava. Gālava pardoned him. (Padma Purāṇa.)

5) Tapodāna. Gālava once gave Yāyāñi one eighth portion of the goodness accrued to him by his long penance. (See Yāyāñi for details).

6) Gālava gets a horse. Pāṇalakṣetra, a demon, used to give trouble to Gālava daily while he used to do penance. Once this demon sent a deep hot breath to the sky and then a horse fell from the sky. Soon an unknown voice from air said, “This is a very strong horse and it would travel many a yojana in an hour.” Gālava took that horse and gave it to Rudra. (Vāmanā Purāṇa, Chapter 59).

7) Other details regarding Gālava.

(i) He was an intimate friend of King Pratipa. (Śloka 15, Chapter 20, Harivarṇa.)

(ii) He was a shining member of the court of Yudhiṣṭhira. (Śloka 13, Chapter 4, Śabhā Parva.)

(iii) He shone in the court of Indra. (Śloka 10, Chapter 7, Śabhā Parva.)

(iv) He conducted a discussion with Nārada on the true nature of real prosperity. (Śloka 5, Chapter 287, Śānti Parva.)

(v) On another occasion he spoke to Dharmaputra on the glory of the universe. (Śloka 32, Chapter 18, Anuśāsana Parva.)

(vi) He swore before God to prove his innocence in the lotta-theft involving Agastya. (Śloka 37, Chapter 49, Anuśāsana Parva.)

(vii) Sṛngava who married Vṛddhakānyā was a son of Gālava. (Śloka 14, Chapter 52, Sālaya Parva). For details see under Vīvakarmā, GāM. Music. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

GANAPATI. A female attendant of Skanda. (Sālaya Parva, p. 309, Verse 3).

GANĀM. An army division. Three Guṇas form one Gānam. (See Aksahini.)
and Pārvatī that of a she-elephant. Pārvatī delivered a son in the form of an elephant. That son was named Gaṇapati. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

3) His task broken. Once Pārūṣārāma arrived at Kailāśa to meet Śiva. At that time Śiva was asleep. So Gaṇapati did not allow him to get in. A duel broke out between them. In that duel one of Gaṇapati’s tusks was broken. (Padma Purāṇa).

4) Gaṇapati turned into cow. An exceptionally hot summer set in once in South India. The whole land became parched. So Agastyā went to Śiva and requested for some holy water, and the Lord put Kāverī who was worshiping him just then, in the Kamandalu (something like a washtub which sannyāsins carry with them) of Agastyā and sent him back. Indra, who did not relish this action of Śiva, asked Gaṇapati to some how or other appear in the Kamandalu of holy water, and Gaṇapati, in the guise of a cow, went and sat on the brink of the Kamandalu and thus upset it. Agastyā and the cow quarreled with each other. Then did the cow assume its original form as Gaṇapati and blessed Agastyā. Moreover, Gaṇapati filled Agastyā’s Kamandalu with holy water, which the latter distributed among devotees in South India, and that is the present Kāverī river.

5) Other stories about Gaṇapati’s head. The Purāṇas contain two different stories as to how Gaṇapati happened to have the elephant’s head. Once Pārvatī pointed out to Gaṇapati the planet Saturn, and his head got burned down due to the solar power of Saturn, and according to one story Gaṇapati’s head thus lost was replaced with that of an elephant. The other story is more interesting. When once Śiva tried to enter the room where Pārvatī had gone to take her bath clad in a single cloth, Gaṇapati prevented Śiva from doing so. Śiva, enraged at the obstruction made by Gaṇapati, cut off his head, and when his anger was cooled down he replaced Gaṇapati’s lost head with that of an elephant. (Padma Purāṇa).

6) Wedding of Gaṇapati. Gaṇapati has two wives called Sūdhī and Buddhi. When Gaṇapati and Subrahmanya attained the age of marriage they were in a hurry to get married. Śiva conducted a test. Śiva and Pārvatī told them that he who returned first after going round the world would be married first. Accordingly Subrahmanya mounted his vehicle (peacock) and set out for a tour round the world. Gaṇapati did nothing of the sort. But after a little time he went round his parents, viz., Śiva and Pārvatī. Asked for an explanation about his action Gaṇapati replied that since the whole universe existed in Śiva and Pārvatī, going around them was equivalent to touring round the world. Pleased at this reply his parents got Gaṇapati married first.

7) Vijñāna-vāratāma. (Power to remove all obstacles). Gaṇapati is called Vijñāna-vāra because he is the god who removes all obstacles from the paths of men or creates them. Gaṇapati has the power to get anything done without any obstructions as also the power to put obstacles in the path of anything being got done. Therefore, the custom came into vogue of worshipping Gaṇapati at the very commencement of any action for its completion without any hitch or hindrance. Actions begun with such worship would be duly completed. Indians believe, in support of that belief, the following story from the 6th tārāgaṇa of Lāvāṇakalpam, Kāthāsirītigāra may be quoted.

The Devas decided to appoint Subrahmanya as chief of the army to kill Tārakāśura. When Indra took up the pot of water purified by mantras to anoint Subrahmanya’s head with it, his hands became blemished, and he stood aghast. Then Śiva said that any action begun without Gaṇapati’s puja would meet with such obstacles. At one instance Indra worshipped Gaṇapati and his hands recovered from the polluted condition. And, Subrahmanya was duly anointed with the holy water.

8) Gaṇapati wrote the Mahābhārata. After the death of the Kauravas and the Pandavas sage Vyāsa entered again into meditation. But, the whole story of the Bharata reflected in the mirror of his mind. He wanted to translate the story into a great poem and requested Bhīma to suggest a suitable person to write the story on his dictation, and Bhīma suggested Gaṇapati’s name. Then Vyāsa thought about Gaṇapati and he appeared before the sage. But, Gaṇapati did not appreciate the idea of serving as Vyāsa’s scribe. So he stipulated a condition that he would write down the poem provided Vyāsa dictated it in such a manner that he had not to lay down his pen even once before the poem was completed. To this Vyāsa stipulated the counter condition that when he dictated without the least interruption or pause Gaṇapati should not write down the matter without understanding the meaning of it. And, under such conditions the composition of the Mahābhārata was completed within three years. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 1, Verses 74-80).

9) Gaṇapati bīja. Gaṇapati occupies the most prominent place among the Devas connected with Śiva. In South India, Gaṇapati wasvija came into vogue in the 6th century A.D., and idols of Gaṇapati now extant might have been made at that period. In South India, temples dedicated to Gaṇapati are in no way less in number than those to Subrahmanya. The idol of Gaṇapati is installed at the gateways of villages and forts, under the fig tree, at the entrance of temples and at the southwestern corner of Śiva temples. Two types of idols are important: the Itampirī (the proboscis turned to the left side) and the Valampirī (the proboscis turned to the right side). It is stated that the enormously big belly of Gaṇapati contains in it the whole universe.

10) Synonym of Gaṇapati. Vināyaka vighna-rāja dvīmatāra-ganādhīpah apyekadantro harmbo lombodragajānaanah. (Amarakosa).

(Vināyaka, Vighna-rāja, Dwīmatāra, Gaṇādhīpah, Ekadanta, Harmbo, Lombodra, Gajāna).

GANDA. A dāśi, who served the saptarṣis. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 93).

GANDAKAM. A particular locality on the banks of river Gandāk. Bhīma once conquered this place. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 13).

GANDAKANDU. A Yakṣa of the assembly of Kubera. (M.B. Sabhā Parva, Chapter 10).

GANDAKI (GANDAKA). A river in northern India which falls into the Gaṅgā.

2) Origin. There arose an argument between the Devas and the asuras about the Arûrāṇa (nectar) got from the churning of the Kûrûbhâ (the milk ocean) and Mahâyâna (the form of Mahôôô) and enticed the asuras away from the subject and the nectar to the Devas. Attracted by the great beauty of Môôôni, Śiva made love to her, and the sweet produced at the time of their embrace flowed as river Gandâkî through the earth. (Skanda Purâna, Āsura Khaṇḍa).

3) It became a holy river. While the worms on the banks of Gandâkî were once collecting soil they fell into the river, and all at once they attained salvation, the reason being that the water in the river had been formed by the sweet of Visuv and Śiva. And, from that day onwards people began worshipping Gandâkî as a holy river. (Skanda Purâna, Āsura Khaṇḍa).

4) Other information:
   (i) He who drinks the water of the river is freed from sin. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 169, Verse 20).
   (ii) The river is also known as Nârâyâna, Śâlagrâmî, Hîrâyavatî and Hîranyavatî. (Bhûma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 25).
   (iii) Śrî Kûśa Arjuna and Śîlomasa were once on their way from Indraprastha to Gîvrâja, crossed this river. (Śaûka Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 27).
   (iv) The water in Gandâkî is a mixture of the waters of all holy rivers. Therefore, a bath in Gandâkî is of equal value as an Avalmêdha yajña and he who bathes in it will attain Sûryaloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 115).
   (v) Gandâkî is one of the rivers which were responsible for the origin of Agni (fire). (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 118).

GANDHAKALI. Another name of Satyavatî. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 95, Verse 44).

GANDHAMADANA I. A monkey, who had been helpful to Śrî Râma, was the son of Kubera. (Vâlimiki Râmâyâna, Bâla Kûsha, Canto 17, Verse 11). This monkey usually stayed on Mount Gandhamadana. During the Râma-Râvana war he led a contingent of monkeys. (Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Verse 5).

GANDHAMADANA II. A Rûkṣâsa King, who stays in Kubera's assembly. (Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 10).

GANDHAMADANA (M). A mountain famed in the Pûras and lying to the east of the Himalayas, (Bhûma Parva, Pañcama Skanda). The puranic importance of the mountain may be summarised as follows:—

1. Kâtyâparâjâtâ had tapas at this mountain. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 10).
2. Ananta (Aṣiṣe) had once done tapas here. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 36, Verse 3).
3. Once Pûṇḍu went to the Satasrîga mountain along with his kamini Kûndî and Mûrdh for doing tapas, and on that occasion they visited Gandhamadana also. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 48).
4. This mountain assumes the form of a divine person, attends Kubera's assembly and worships him. (Sabhâ Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 32).
5. Śrî Kûśa in the company of Nârâyâna-sirî spent 10,000 years on this mountain as an anchorite. (Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 11).
6. Arjuna on his way to Mount Kailâsa to do tapas crossed the Gandhamadana mountain. (Vana Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 41).
7. Only those who possess power got by tapas will be able to climb this mountain. (Vana Parva, Chapter 160, Verse 22).
8. There is the Budâri tree and under it there is an âsâma of Nârâyâna-sirî on the heights of this mountain, and Yaksas stay there always. (Vana Parva, Chapter 141, Verse 22).
9. Once the Pândavas, with the aid of Ghatotkaca mounted this mountain. (Vana Parva, Chapter 145).
10. It was here, at this mountain that Bûma killed Mûrdhâ, a friend of Kubera. (Vana Parva, Chapter 160, Verse 76).
11. Kubera, who was driven out of Lâkkâ stayed at this mountain during the initial periods. (Vana Parva, Chapter 275, Verse 33).

GANDHARA. A stretch of land of ancient Bhûrata. It is believed that this land stretched from the shores of river Sindu to Kûlib. Subala was a mighty ruler of this country. His daughter Gândhâri was the wife of Dhrtârastra. (Sêka 11, Chapter 111, Ādi Parva).

Agui Purâna points out a relationship between the Gândhâras and the Drâvidas. Descending in order from Vîgusa were Cûndra—Budhâ—Pûruravas—Agius—Nâhuša—Pîvayâk—Tûrvasu. In order from Tûrvasu were Varga—Golchu—Trîsâkî—Tûrvûsâ—Vîgusa—Pañcama—Varûsha—Gândhâra—Gândhâra. From Gândhâra arose the five different provincialists: Gândhâras, Keraulas, Golus, Pândyas and Kolas. (Chapter 277, Agui Purâna).

GANDHÂRI. Wife of Dhrdrâstra.

1) Birth. There was a King called Subala in the family of Cûndras, brother of Varga. (For genealogy see under Subala). Subala became the King of the land of Gândhâra. This land extended from the river Sindhu to Kûlib. Gândhâri was the daughter of Subala. (Chapter 111, Ādi Parva).
2) Marriage. Gândhâri became a devotee of Śiva even from her childhood. Śiva became pleased with her and blessed her saying that she would bear a hundred sons. Bûma came to know of this and planned to marry her to Dhrtârastra. One day he sent a messenger to Subala making a proposal. Subala knew that Dhrtârastra was born blind but considering his lineage and the powerful alliance it would make, consented to the proposal of Bûma. Šakuni, brother of Gândhâra, then by the order of his father took Gândhâra to Hastimûrâ and Dhrtârala accepted her as his wife. Gândhâra obeying her father's instructions without a demur accepted her blind husband with such devotion that she made herself blind by tightly covering her eyes with a silk shawl. (Chapter 110, Ādi Parva).
3) Birth of Sûva. Once Vîyâs came to her exhausted with hunger and thirst. Gândhâra appeased his hunger and thirst with tasty things to eat and drink. Vîyâs was immensely pleased and he also blessed her and said she would get a hundred sons. Very soon she became pregnant. But even after two years she did not deliver, while Kûndî, wife of Pûṇḍu, gave birth to a son. Grief-stricken, she hit hardly on her womb secretly and then a great mass of flesh came out. Then Vîyâs appeared before her and advised her to cut the lump of flesh into a hundred pieces and deposit one each in a jar of ghee. Vîyâs himself cut it into pieces. Gândhâra expressed a desire to have a girl also. Vîyâs cut it into hundred and one pieces and put them in hundred and one jar of ghee. In due time the jars broke and a hundred sons and a daughter came out of the jars. The daughter was named Devasala; their name see Kauravas. Dhrītarāṣṭra got another son named Yuyutu. (Chapters 115 and 116, Aḍī Parvau).

4) Gāndhārī faints. When Sañjaya reported about the death of Karna at the battle both Dhrītarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī fainted. (Sloka 95, Chapter 96, Karna Parvau).

5) Gāndhārī starts to curse the Pāṇḍavas. When the battle was over the sons of Gāndhārī and their followers were killed. Dhrītarāṣṭra suggested that the Pāṇḍavas should visit Gāndhārī and pay homage to her. The Pāṇḍavas, therefore, went and stood before Gāndhārī very respectfully. Vengeance boiled in her heart and her body shivered. Gāndhārī was about to curse the Pāṇḍavas when Vīṣṇu intervened saying “Gāndhārī! Don’t you remember the aid that the victor would lie on the side of the righteous in this war? Your words are not wasted. The Pāṇḍavas won the battle because right was on their side. So why should you get agitated?” Gāndhārī became calm on hearing these words and she admitted that the end of the Kuru dynasty came because of the mistakes of Duryodhana, Sākuni, Karna and Duṣśāda. Later, when Dhrītarāṣṭra treated the Pāṇḍavas as her own sons. (Chapter 14, Sṛṅg Parvau, M.B.).

6) Dharmaputra’s foot-nails become blue. Following the instructions of Dhrītarāṣṭra, the Pāṇḍavas, approached and bowed before Gāndhārī. She covered her face with a cloth and wept, tears rolling down her cheeks. When Dharmaputra bent to touch her feet the latter sank through the veil on her face the foot-nails of Dharmaputra. A few drops of the lachrymal water fell on the foot-nails of Dharmaputra making them turn blue instantly. (Chapter 13, Sṛṅg Parvau).

7) Gāndhārī cursing Kṛṣṇa. At the end of the battle the aggrieved Gāndhārī went to Kurukṣetra together with Kṛṣṇa and other relatives. Seeing mighty Kings on the Kurava side lying dead like huge trees lying truncated (Gāndhārī burst into tears. She knew that Sṛṅg was at the root of all this. Embittered she looked at Kṛṣṇa and cursed him. “Ho, Kṛṣṇa, thirty years from this day you will lose your sons, ministers, friends and relatives. You will become a lone walker in the forests and be killed by trickery. It was because of this curse that the Yadava tribe perished and Kṛṣṇa was struck by the arrow of a hunter which made him end his life on earth.

8) The end of Gāndhārī. After the great Kurukṣetra battle heart-broken Dhrītarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī accompanied by Kuntī, Vidura and Sañjaya went to the forests to spend the rest of their life there. Many people and the Pāṇḍavas accompanied them up to the river Gaṅgā and the latter gave a donation which Gāndhārī made a hut and lived with Gāndhārī and Kuntī. The Pāṇḍavas felt the separation of their relatives unbearable and lived in grief. After six years one day Dharmaputra saw his mother, Kuntī, in a dream. He told his brothers about this and they all felt a desire to go to the forest and see their mother. The next day they reached the shores of Gaṅgā. Vīṣṇu also joined them. Gāndhārī and Kuntī expressed a desire to Vīṣṇu that they would like to see the dead sons and relatives once again. Vīṣṇu then asked them to go and take a dip in the river. When they rose up after a dip they saw standing on the shores of the river the great warriors Karna and Duryodhana and others. By the yogic power of Vīṣṇu even the blind Dhrītarāṣṭra could get the vision. Very soon the vision faded and the Pāṇḍavas returned to Hastinapura. Two days after, fire broke out in the forest where Dhrītarāṣṭra was staying. Dhrītarāṣṭra, Kuntī and Gāndhārī were burnt to death in that fire. (Chapter 32, Śrīmad Bhāgavata Purāṇa).

9) After the death, Dharmaputra performed the obsequies of those who died in the wild fire (Śrīmad Bhāgavata Purāṇa, Chapter 30). Leaving the mortal bodies the souls of Dhrītarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī entered Kuṭalalo. (Sloka 14, Chapter 5, Śrīmad Bhāgavata Purāṇa).

10) Synonyms of Gāndhārī. The following words have been used in the Mahābhārata to denote Gāndhārī: Gāndhārāradhūkā, Saubaleye, Saubali, Subalejā, Subhāplejā and Subhāplejā. GĀNDHĀRĪ II. Another Gāndhārī, wife of Ajámīdhra, one of the great Kings of the Pāṇḍu dynasty. (Sloka 37, Chapter 95, Aḍī Parvau).

GANDHARVA I. Gandharvas are sons born to the famous Kaikeyiprajapati of his wife, Ayījāhā (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 19). Both belonged to the race of the Pāṇḍus.

GANDHARVA II. A King born in the dynasty of Janamejaya. (Bhāgavata, Navavāna Skandha).

GANDHARVA. A marriage settled by the boy and the girl of their own accord. A love marriage. There are six different kinds of marriage: Gandharva, Arṣa, Pañjapātha, Rākṣasa, Asūr and Pūruṣa. (See under Gandharva).

GANDHARVANAGARA. Vīṣṇu has compared munis disappearing from sight to the fading out of Gandharvanagara.

“After having thus spoken to the Kurus, and while they were looking on, the band of sages disappeared in a trance like the fading out of Gandharvanagara.” (Aḍī Parvau, Chapter 126, Verses 33 and 36).

What is this Gandharvanagara? The following description occurs in Hindi Śabdasarāgara. “Owing to different optical illusions (sight) of man, villages and cities may appear to exist in the sky and also on seas, rivers, etc. When during summer the air on the upper strata of deserts, seas etc. gets heated, expanded, and rises up, the light passing through it becomes multi-coloured and gives reflections in the sky in the form of village parts or cities. Also can be seen therein reflections of trees, boats etc. One such reflection may be cast on earth also. This is a mere optical illusion. This reflection immediately fades out also. This unreal city which is an optical illusion is Gandharvanagara.

GANDHARVASENA. Daughter of Dhanavāhāna (a gandharva) who lived in Svayampaṭhānagāra on Mount Kailasa. She was cured of leprosy by observing somavāravātā. (Skandha Purāṇa).

GANDHARVATIRTHA. An ancient place of pilgrimage on the banks of Sarasvati in North India. The gandharva called vibhāvāsa usually dances at this place with his companions, Bālakṛṣṇa Rāma once visited this holy place. (Sāliya Parvau, Chapter 37, Verse 3).

GANDHARVILA. The first mother of horses. Kaikeyiprajapati had by his wife Krodhavāsī ten daughters: Mrgī, Mrgamandā, Harī, Bhadrāma, Mātāgī, Sārdūli, Śvetā, Surabhi, Surasā, and Kadru. Of the ten girls, Surabhi in due course of time became another of two envoys of Arjuna. From Rohini was born the cattlebreed and horses were born from Gandharvi. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranya Kāṇḍa, Canto 14).

GANDHAVATI I. The name Sāyavatī (Kāli) was assumed when sage Vārasana had swept away her matsyagandha (fish smell). She got also another name Vījanagandha. (Adi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 80).

GANDHAVATI II. The city of Vāyu (the wind God). There are said to be nine cities on top of Mount Mahāmeru: (1) Manavarī of Brahamā at the centre, (2) Jāja on the eastern side of it Amanuvatī of Indra, (3) Agni's Tejovatī in the south-eastern corner, (4) Māyā's Sanāyamantī in the south, (5) Nīrttī's Kramjānā in the south-western corner, (6) Sradhāvatī of Varuna on the west, (7) Gandharvatī of Vāyu in the north-western corner, (8) Mahādevī of Kubera on the north, and (9) Varatī of Nāsā in the north-eastern corner. (Devībhāgavata, Arjuna Skandha).

GANDHATRI I. A very beautiful princess of Kāli, Śvapakṣī made her ascent Gandhimā (Daśarna Skandha, Bhāgavata).

GANDHAVA. The famous bow of Arjuna:

1) Mark. It was Brahmā who made the bow. This terrible bow which can punish the unjust and the wicked has been made by Brahmā. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 98, Verse 21).

2) Specialities of Gandhiva. This bow is enough to fight one lakh of people at once and the same. Both Devas and demons could be defeated with it. Coloured very smooth and shining with many colours it was a very long bow. It was worshipped by Devas, Dānava and Gandharvas (Vīra Parva, Chapter 45). It gained and also increased in power as the situation called for. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 98, Verse 20).

3) History of Gandhavatī. Brahmā, who made this bow kept it with him during the first 1000 years. For the next 1000 years, Brahmā kept it with him. Next, Indra got it from Brahmā and kept it for another 3000 years. After that Gandhāra kept it for 500 years with him, and then Varuna took possession of it. After using it for 100 years Varuna gave it to Arjuna, who used it for 65 years.

4) Gandhiva and Arjuna. Arjuna agreed to protect the Khadgavatī forest from rain, if Indra sent rain when Agni began eating the forest. But, realising that Arjuna possessed no weapons to effectively oppose Indra, Agni requested Varuna to give the following to Arjuna, viz., the Gandhiva bow and a quiver wherein the arrows will never be exhausted, and the chariot marked with the symbol of monkey and drawn by four white horses—all given by Gandhāra. Varuna at once made a present of the above to Arjuna. And, it was with the aid of this Gandhiva that Arjuna defeated Indra at the time of Khadgavatī (śīla, Khandavatīāsya). Arjuna had taken a secret vow to cut off the head of anyone who asked him to give the bow to some one else. (Karma Parva, Chapter 68).

5) Arjuna gives up Gandhiva. The great Kurukṣetra war, which shook Bhārata, to its very foundation came to an end. Dharmarāja was crowned a king. It was at this juncture that the Yādava dynasty got itself annihiltated and Śī Kṛṣṇa entered mahāsāmānī. Now the Pāndavas lost all interest in mundane life, and they set out for the forest on their great journey after crowning Pārlakṣit, the grandson of Arjuna as King. Their great travel took them to the shores of the Red Sea. The Gandhiva was still in Arjuna's hands. On the shores of the Red Sea Agni Deva appeared before the Pāndavas and spoke to them, "Well, Pāndavas, I am Agni Deva. Arjuna requires the Gandhiva no more. I got it from Varuna for Arjuna. Return it, therefore, to Varuna."

No sooner did he hear Agni Deva speak thus than did Arjuna throw it into the depths of the sea and also the quiver which never got exhausted of arrows with it. Agni Deva disappeared, and the Pāndavas continued their journey. (Mahāpravahika Parva, Chapter 1).

GANGA. The famous and holy river of India:

1) Origin and general information. Gaṅga had its origin during the incarnation of Viṣṇu as Vāmanā. When Vāmanā measured the three worlds in three steps the nails on his left feet were raised high. They caused a pore on the upper side of the universe. Gaṅga, starting from the finger of Viṣṇu's feet fell in heaven (Bhāgavata).
The famous Viṣṇupadī, the flowing river (tirtha) of which washes away the sins of the people in the universe is the very same Gaṅga under discussion. For many yugas (eras) this river confined itself to the heights of the sky, otherwise called Viśvapada. This particular spot is known as Dhruvanandā at it is here that Dhruva, son of King Uttanapāda, does, his penance. The seven sages who constantly go round and round the Dhruvanandā take their bath in this holy river. The course of the river is thus: starting from Viṣṇupadī it falls on devāyana glittering with crores of vīraṇās and therefrom it descends on Gandravandāla which it submerges. It follows its course again from there dividing itself into four tributaries called Siḍt, Caksus, Alakandrā and Bhadrā and then falls in Brahmāloka wherefrom it flows in all directions. Of the four tributaries, Siḍt falls on the head of Mount Meru, flows down to Gandhamadāna, then circling through Bhadravārā falls into the eastern sea. Caksus falls on the peaks of moontār Mālayāva, flows through Kēramala and falls into the western sea. Alakandrā falls on mount Hemakīka, flows through Bhārata Vārṣa and falls into the southern sea. And Bhadrā falls on the head of Mount Śrīgāv, flows through Uttarakuru and falls into the northern sea. Alakandrā flows through Bhārata Vārṣa and is regarded as the most sacred of the four tributaries. Gaṅga which flowed through heaven fell on the earth after thousands of years of its origin. (Bhāgavata, Paśurman, Skandha, Chapter 1).

2) Why Gaṅga became Siḍt's consort. Mahāviṣṇu was once engaged at Vaikuṇṭha in a pleasant talk with his wife, Lakṣmī, Sarasvatī and Gaṅga when Gaṅga cast lustful eyes on Viṣṇu, who, behind the backs of the other two wives returned the lustful glances. Sarasvatī could not put up with that situation for a long time. Therefore, she got up from her seat and beat Gaṅga. Lakṣmī tried to restrain Sarasvatī lest the quarrel should become fiercer. Angered at this intervention, Sarasvatī curved that Lakṣmī be born on earth. Gaṅga got angry that innocent Lakṣmī was thus cursed, and she in her turn cursed that Sarasvati be born as a river on earth. Sarasvati did not take the curse lying down, but cursed that Ganga also be born as a river on earth and take upon herself the sins of the whole world. When all the three wives of Visnu got themselves thus into trouble, they told them as follows: “Everything has happened as it should have happened. Laksmi may go to the earth and be born in the home of Dharmadhvaja and grow up as his daughter, and from the womb of his women. There you will purify the three worlds after which you will be born as the plant called tulasi, and be married by an asura called Kanika, who will be born as a part of me. And, after that you will be turned into a sacred river called Padmapati, and leaving the river on earth your divine form will return to Valkunttha.” And, to Ganga Visnu said as follows: “You will go to earth as a holy river to wash off the sins of people there. A king called Bhagiratha will be leading you to earth, and you will, therefore, be known as Bhagirathai also. And, you remain there on earth as the wife of the king of King Santu. Your divine form will return to mount Kailasa as the consort of Siva.”

As for Sarasvati, Visnu asked her to be born as a river on earth, her divine form ultimately returning to Satyaloka and then becoming the consort of Brahman. And, thus it was that Lakshmi became the consort of Mahavishnu, Ganga of Siva and Sarasvati of Brahman.

Devi Bhagavati, Navama Skandha.

5) Ganga born on earth due to the curse of Brahman Mahabhisak. an emperor of the Ikshvaku dynasty, went to Satyaloka after he had not found heaven, to the city of Brahman. Ganga too happened to be there. In the devotional atmosphere at Satyaloka a casual breeze removed Ganga’s clothes slightly from position, and Mahabhisak then cast a lustful glance at her which she also returned. Brahman, who was observing this exchange of love got angry and cursed that Mahabhisak be born as a King on earth and Ganga as his wife. Ganga proved for redemption from the curse, and Brahman told her that she would regain her old status after she had delivered the Asvatan. As the consequence of Brahman’s curse Mahabhisak was born as King Santu in the solar dynasty on earth and he married Ganga.

(Adi Parva, Chapters 96 and 97).

4) Bhagiratha brought down Ganga on earth. King Sagara of the Yadava dynasty had two wives called Sumati (Vardarhi) and Kesini (Seibya). A son called Anmatsaya was born to Kesini, and 80,000 princes were born to Sumati. Sagara drove out of the country Anmatsayas, who turned out to be an enemy of the people. The 60,000 sons of Sagara also proved to be a menace to the world, and the Devas approached Brahman for protection from the menace. He assured the Devas that a sage called Kapila would destroy the 60,000 evil sons.

During the above period of time, Sagara performed an Asvamedha Yajna, and his sons went round the earth with the sacrificial horse. But, when they reached the sea-shore the horse disappeared. When the sons complained about it to their father, Sagara, he asked them to look out for the horse in every part of the world and bring it back. Not finding it anywhere on earth they dug a hole and entered Patala, where they saw Sage Kapila absorbed in meditation and the missing horse tied to a pole near the sage. (It was Indra who had carried away the horse and tied it there). The sons of Sagara, believing that it was Kapila who had stolen the horse were about to attack the sage when he opened his eyes, and they were reduced to ashes in the fire of Kapila’s eyes.

His sons having not returned even after a long time Sagara asked his grandson Anumam to seek them out, and after an extensive search he saw Kapila at Patila. Anumam pleased Kapila with laudatory phrases and the latter returned to him the sacrificial horse. Kapila also pronounced the blessing that the grandson of Anumam would perform the purificatory rites of Saga’s sons by bringing down Ganga to earth from heaven. Anumam returned to the palace with the horse and the avamadha was duly concluded.

From Anumam was born Dilipa and from him Bhagiratha. On becoming King, Bhagiratha handed over the reins of government to his ministers and began efforts to bring down Ganga to earth. He did tapas for thousand years on the slopes of the Himayas when he asked him to please Siva first as he alone could face her (Ganga) fall on the earth. Accordingly he pleaded Siva by his penance and Siva agreed to receive Ganga on his head. With a terrific noise Ganga came down on Siva’s head. The haughty Ganga wanted to carry down Siva also to Patila. Realising this ambition of his Siva blocked her passage with the result that she wandered about in Siva’s matted hair for many years without finding an outlet. Bhagiratha again did tapas and pleased Siva who shocked his matted head and made fall some water therefrom on earth. The water fell into Budusaras, and flowed in seven tributaries, the first three, Hidumati, Pavan and Naagini towards the east, the next three, Suchak, Sita and Siddhumb towards the west and the seventh tributary followed Bhagiratha. In this manner they progressed a great distance till they reached the astara of the sage Jaimin, and the haughty Ganga flooded the astara. The sage got enraged at this and drank up Ganga. But Bhagiratha pleaded the sage who then let out Ganga through his ears. Thereafter Ganga came to be called Jaimin also. Ganga again followed Bhagiratha, made her way to Patila and realised of Saga’s attain salvation by purifying them with her waters.

(Valmiki Ramayana, Bila Kaucha, Cantos 43 and 44; Brahmanda Puraṇa, Chapter 97; Devi Puraṇa, Deviya Skandha; Droha Parva, Chapter 60; Anumana Parva, Chapter 4 and Yana Parva, Chapter 109).

5) Ganga flowed into the sea. After the purificatory rites of the sons of Saga were over, Bhagiratha conducted Ganga to the sea and with its waters the sea became full. (Yana Parva, Chapter 109, Verses 18-21).

6) Ganga set on the thrones of Pratip. Ganga once fell in love with Pratip, father of Santantu, and set on his right thigh when he (Pratip) was doing penance on the banks of the Gaṅga for a son. Pratip did not agree to Ganga’s proposal that he should marry her and told her thus: “the right thigh is for the children and daughters-in-law to sit on and the left thigh for the wife; therefore, you be my son’s wife.”

Then Pratip called his son Santantu and told him: “Sometimes back a divine woman came to me and I proceeded to wed her to you. Therefore, if any divine woman approaches you for a son you must accept her, and whatever she may do you must not object to that...” Not long after this Pratip crowned Santantu.
King and left for the forest. (Adi Parva, Chapter 57).

7) Aṣṭavakṣu and Gāṅgā. While the wife of Dyau, one of the Aṣṭavakṣus (eight Vasus) was grazing cows in the forest, she saw Nandini (the divine cow) grazing with her calf near the Śrīramā of Vasiṣṭha, and she desired to have the cow presented to her intimate friend Jīvāvati, the daughter of King Uśīnara. She informed her husband, Dyau about this desire of hers, and Dyau told her relations about it. Next day the Aṣṭavakṣu, in the form of the cow, went to Vasiṣṭha, and sat at Nandini and her calf. When Vasiṣṭha returned to the Śrīramā the cow and calf were missing, and he divined the reason for it with his divine eyes. He cursed that the Aṣṭavakṣus be born as men on earth, and when they prayed for redemption from the curse Vasiṣṭha told them that they would be born as men within one year from that day, die at once and return to heaven at the time he said that Dyau alone, who took the leading part in stealing the cow, would live on earth for a longer period before he returned to heaven. (The reputed Bhīma was this Dyau).

8) Gāṅgā became the wife of Santanu and the Aṣṭavakṣus were born. Once while hunting on the banks of the Gāṅgā Santanu saw a beautiful maiden and they fell in love with each other. She agreed to become his wife on the condition that he would not oppose whatever she said. Santanu agreed, and Vasiṣṭha told him about his daughter. Santanu, child was born to them. In the very presence of Santanu, she threw the child into the Gāṅgā. As per previous condition Santanu kept mum at it. She threw into the river the seven Aṣṭavakṣus, who were born to her in succession. When she was about to throw the last eighth of the Aṣṭavakṣus (Dyau) into the river Santanu prevented her. She got angry at this and disappeared with the child. (Adi Parva, Chapter 98).

9) Santanu got back the son. Thirty-two years after, Santanu went hunting again on the banks of the Gāṅgā where he saw the river obstructed in its course with arrows by a handborne boar. Santanu did not recognize it: the boy was his son, who had been named Devavara by Gāṅgā. Devavara disappeared after throwing Santanu into an illusion by his magic power. All of a sudden a doubt dawned in his mind whether the boy was his own son, and he called out to Gāṅgā to show him the boy. Gāṅgā appeared with her son with beautiful ornaments on him and spoke to Santanu thus: “This is Devavara, the eighth son whom you entrusted to me. I mastered everything in archery from Vasiṣṭha, and he is Dyau (the usual) son of Santanu reborn. You may please take charge of him.” After saying this she returned to heaven. (Adi Parva, Chapter 100).

10) Gāṅgā and Subrahmanya. (See under Subrahmanya).

11) Gāṅgā and Bhīma. (See under Bhīma).

12) Gneanīs (divine nature) of Gāṅgā. Mahābhārata has (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25), the following on the greatness of Gāṅgā,—

If after death, the bones of the dead are deposed in Gāṅgā, the departed will attain heaven. Even if one had sinned throughout his life he would attain Viśvapada (heaven) if he worshipped Gāṅgā. Bathing in the Gāṅgā is as beneficial as performing hundred yajñas. As long as the bores of one remain in the waters of the Gāṅgā so long will he occupy an honourable seat in heaven. He who has come in contact with its water will shine forth as the sun devoid of all darkness. Places which are not favoured by its waters will become barren like night without the moon and trees without flowers. Gāṅgā water is more than enough to satisfy living things in all the three worlds. He who does penance standing on one leg for thousand years, and he who gives up his body in the waters of the Gāṅgā are on a par with each other. God attaches more importance to him who has fallen into the Gāṅgā than to him, who has performed tapas hanging by his head for a thousand years. He who smells the sand on the banks of the Gāṅgā on his body will get the lustre and glow of the devas, and he, who smears the sand on his head will shine forth like the Sun. All the sins of those on whom has blown the air which had come in contact with Gāṅgā water will be swept away. It should be known that Gāṅgā water can wash off all sins and purify mortals. The Agni Purāṇa (Chapter 116) has the following on this subject.

Through whatever places the Gāṅgā flows those places become sublime and sacred. Gāṅgā is the refuge of all created beings who aspire for the final good. If Gāṅgā is worshipped daily it will save families born on the mother’s and the father’s side from evil fate. To drink Gāṅgā water is better than the observance of a thou- sand lunar months. If one worships Gāṅgā for a month one will derive all the benefits of having performed all the yajñas. Even the blind (the ignorant) who worship Gāṅgā, will attain equal status with the devas. The sight of Gāṅgā, contact with its waters and drinking Gāṅgā water will purify people in thousands and lakhs.

13) Gāṅgā and Kṛṣṇa. Gāṅgā is Kṛṣṇa li- quidified into water. Once in Vrindavan Radha attempted to drink Gāṅgā dry, who, terror-stricken, hid herself at the feet of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, and the whole world experienced difficulties due to non-availability of water. Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to know of the situation and made Gāṅgā appear again on earth. (Devībhāgavata, Navarna Skandha).

14) Symbols and vehicle of Gāṅgā. Gāṅgā, white in colour rests on makaramatysa (a variety of fish) holding in her hands a pot and lotus flowers. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 50).

16) Synonyms of Gāṅgā.

(1) It was here that King Pratipa did tapas. (Adi Parva, Chapter 97, Verse 1).

(2) Sage Bharadvaśa had stayed on the banks of the Gaṅgā, at Haridvāra. (Adi Parva, Chapter 129, Verse 33).

(3) Arjuna visited Haridvāra during his tour or Pilgrimage. (Adi Parva, Chapter 213).

(4) This is the entrance to heaven. A bath here in the Kūṭārthika is as beneficial as the Pundarika Yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 27).

(5) Sage Agastya and his wife Lomapāda once did tapas here. (Vana Parva, Chapter 97, Verse 11).

(6) It was here that Śiva appeared to Jayaśrītma, who did tapas. [Vana Parva 72, Verse 24].

(7) Daksāpatāpi had once performed tapas at Kanakhalā in Haridvāra. (Salva Parva, Chapter 38, Verse 27).

(8) Those who bathe at Kuśāvara, Viśaka, Nila-parvata and Kanakhalā in Haridvāra will attain heaven. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 13).

(9) Bihāra did the funeral rites of his father at the mouth of the Gaṅgā. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 34, Verse 11).

(10) Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Gāndhārī and others died in wild fire in the forest at Gaṅgādvara, and Yuddhishthira conducted their funeral rites there itself. (Āraṇavindiba Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 14).

GANGĀHRĀDA (M). A sacred place on the limits of Kurukṣetra. There is a terribly deep whirlpool of the river Gaṅgā here and that depth of the river is considered to be equivalent to three crests of sacred places. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, and Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 25).

GANGAMAHĀDVĀRA (M). The particular spot on the Himalayan peak whence Gaṅgā starts. Those who go there die in ice-falls. Only Nara and Nīrāyana have crossed this place. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 111, Verse 16).

GANGĀSĀGARASAMĀGAMA. A sacred tirtha, a bath in which is as beneficial as the performing of ten Āvamadha yajñas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 4).

GANGASĀGATISAMĀGAMA (M). A sacred tirtha at Prayāga. Those who bathe in this tirtha will attain heaven. (Vana Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 38).

GANGAYAMUNAŚAMĀGAMA (M). A sacred tirtha in Prayāga. Bathing in the tirtha is as beneficial as performing ten Āvamadha yajñas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 4).

GANGEYA I. See under Bihāra.

GANGEYA II. Subrahmanya. (See under Subrahmanya).

GANGODHEDA (M). A sacred place where fasting for three nights will give the results of a Vājapeya yajña, and he who fasts here will become one with the universal soul. (Vana Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 5).

GANITA A. Viśvadeva, who used to calculate the course of times and ages. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 36).

GARBHA. A son of Bhārata, the son of Dusyanta. Suhor, Suhonā, Gayā, Garbhā and Suketu were the five sons of Bhārata. (Agni Parāṇa, Chapter 278).

GARBHA (M). The Purāṇas have described the views of sages about the origin of Āśrama in woman’s womb. Asitamābhīmūni stated the following about the birth of a child to King Janaka. (Brahmaprāṇa. Chapter 48). Of the seven elements in the human body, viz., Rasa, Rakta (blood), Māṃsa (flesh), Meda (fat), Asthi (bone), Majjā (marrow), and Sūkla (seminal fluid) the last one, Sūkla, is the most valuable. Brahmaprāṇa (the seed for production) is contained in Sūkla. From the food we consume, blood and the seminal fluid take their nutrition. The Sūkla emitted during coitus enters the womb of the woman propelled as it were by Kṛṣṇa. It takes only one night for the Sūkla to get inextricably mixed with blood in the womb. In that mixing if the proportion of blood is higher, the child born will be girl, and if the proportion of Sūkla is higher, the offspring will be boy. If blood and Sūkla are mixed exactly in equal proportions the child will be “neutral”, neither girl nor boy. During the first month of pregnancy the child will be in liquid form. In the second, it solidifies due to the mixing and interplay of heat, cold, air, etc. During the third, foetus for eye, ear, etc. become ready and the child begins to form. In the fourth, head, hands and legs of the child are formed, and it is during this period that the prospective mother develops certain desires. If those desires are not satisfied the child may be born with physical deformities. During the fifth month the hips and bones develop. The various organs get formed and fingers appear during the sixth month. It is during the sixth month that hair on the head and body appear and feelings and emotions originate in the mind. During the seventh month the ten vāyu (winds) on the basis of the nervous system are released, and the child experiences glimpses of its previous existence, and ability to feel pain also is there. During the ninth month due to the force of the wind which effects actual delivery the child gets head down in the womb, and during the tenth month it emerges out of the womb. The child loses its memory about the past because of its contact with the female organ and external wind.

According to the Agni Parāṇa the process is a little different:

When Jīva (the soul) has entered the womb for re-birth it remains in fluid form during the first month. During the second month it solidifies; in the third month the organs begin to develop, in the fourth month skin, flesh and bones appear; in the fifth month hair appears, in the sixth month mouth and mouth is produced, in the seventh month the child begins to feel pain. The body is covered by a skin (Garbhacarṇa) and both hands are held above the head in saluting position. If the child is a female it lies in the left side of the mother’s womb, if a male on the right and if “neutral” in the middle of it. From the seventh month the child begins to experience the taste of foods consumed by the mother. During the eighth and ninth month these would be great emotional excitement and upsurges. If the mother suffered from chronic diseases the child also would inherit it. When pregnancy is matured thus, certain winds lead the child down the womb and it gets out through the female organ.

The child inherits its skin, flesh and heart from the mother. The sex organ, marrow, excretion, sweet and belly are inherited from the father. Head, the nervous system and ākāśa are the contributions of the ātman. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 369).

GĀRDAYA. A son of Viśvāmitra who was a brahmāvādī. (Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

2. Bṛḥ. Bhraspati once approached, on the crest of a wave of heat, Mānatī, his brother’s wife who was pregnant then. The child from the mother’s womb said ‘tum to the move. But, Bṛhaspati cursed the child and had his own way with Mānatī. Thus two children developed in her womb. Just after delivering the children the mother went away leaving the child by Bṛhaspati behind. Thence Deva took charge of the unborn child and named him Bhrāndavāja. Ultimately they fanned over the child (Bhrāndavāja) to king Bhūrata, the famous son of Duryodhan. Children had already been born to Bhūrata by his three wives, but as all of them were found to be mortal the mothers themselves killed them. It was at such a juncture that Bhūrata got Bhūravāja as adopted son. (Bhrāndavāja is known by another name also, Viṣṇaḥ). From Viṣṇa was born Māyā, from many Bhārata, from Bhārata Jaya and from Jaya Garga. The famous Rāṇīdeva was the grandson of Nara, the brother of Garga and son of Sāmbuk. A son called Sun was born to Garga after which he took to Sāmbuṣa. (Bhāgavata, Daśamā Sandhī, Chapters 20 and 21).

3. Yādavagīra. In course of time Garga becomes preceptor of the Yadavas. Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Kulasūbhadrā, who had returned to Mahābhārata after the Mahābhārata, were sent to sage Sandipī to obtain the advice of Garga. (Bhāgavata, Yādavā Sandhī).

4. Garga and Mucukunda Garga once visited Mucukunda, son of Mandhata, at his palace, and very much pleased with the devoted reception accorded to him blessed Mucukunda that one day he would see Śrī Kṛṣṇa in person. It was according to this blessing that Mucukunda, while asleep once in a cave had a sight of Kṛṣṇa. (See under Mucukunda).

5. Importance of Garga. A number of reputed sage visited Śrī Kṛṣṇa on his return to Ayodhya from the forest. Amongst them were present Kaśyapa, Yaśavatī, Raibhya, Kamaṇḍu and Garga with their numerous disciples. (Uttara Raṇāmāyana).

6. Garga, a scholar in astronomy. There is a place called Gargavatśa on the banks of river Saravati. Garga did tapas here and discovered some principles of astronomy such as the path of planets, stars etc. He was also the chief astronomer in the assembly of emperor Prthu. (Śanī Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 111).

7. Other information. (1) While the great war was raging Garga invited Kaśyapa and advised Droṇa to end the dispute. (2) He advised King Viśvākarma about eternity. (Śanī Parva, Chapter 316, Verse 49).

8. He spoke about the greatness of the world (Viśvābhāmā) to Viśvākarma (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 18).

GĀRGAŚROTA. See under Garga, Parva 5.

GARGAYAN. See under Gargaparāparā.

GARG. A celebrated brahmāvādī born in the family of Garga.

GARHYA. 1. (TRIJIṬA) GARGA. A famous sage.

1) Bṛḥ. He was one of the sons of Viśvāmitra. (Śloka 55, Chapter 4, Anuśāsana Parva). (For genealogy see under Viśvāmitra). He became gradually the priest of Gudran. He has written a famous book called Garga-smṛti. Viṃśi Rāmāyaṇa mentions that Garga is known as Trijiṭa also.

2) How he became prosperous. Sage Garga had many children. It was while he was staying in the forest with his wife and children that Śrī Kṛṣṇa came to that forest for Vyāsā. The news of the exile of Śrī Kṛṣṇa spread like wild fire and many brahmans flocked to the place and Śrī Kṛṣṇa gave them immense riches. Wife of Garga heard the news only late and as soon as she heard the same she called her husband from the fields where he was working and taking away from him the implements sent him post-haste to the place of Śrī Kṛṣṇa. Trijiṭa as soon as he came to the presence of Rāma told him the purpose of his visit. Huge hordes of cows were then grazing on the banks of the Yamuna river. Śrī Kṛṣṇa told Garga to take a stump and throw it with all his strength. He did so and Śrī Kṛṣṇa gave him all the cows grazing up to the place where the stump fell. It was a big lot and Garga became prosperous from that day onwards. (Saṅga 32, Ayodhyā Kanda, Viṃśi Rāmāyaṇa).

3) Garga’s precepts on Dharma. The following are the precepts laid down by Garga on Dharma. (1) Be interested always on entertaining your guests. (2) Do not eat meat. (3) Do not give injury to cows and brahmans. (4) Perform yajña with a pure mind and pure body. (M B, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 127).

4) Garga’s place in the line of preceptors. Vyāsa expounded the Vedas to Vedānta, Saṁhitā and Śāktya. Śāktya taught what he learnt to Vyāsāyana, Mucukunda, Śīlī, Ādītīra, Gokhali and Vaiṭukara. Vaiṭukara taught Niukta to Bākala, Kramita, Vaiśākha, and Vaiṛjya. Bākala combined with all the other branches together and made Śāktya’s Śāktya’s and taught it to Bālīyaṁ, Garga and Sāṃsāra. The Rūṣvedaśātras are those from Vyāsa to Saṁsāra. (Bhāgavata, Daśamā Sandhī).

5) Indrasabha and Garga. Garga was a shining member of the Indrasabha. (Śloka 18, Chapter 7, Saṃhā Parva, M.B.).

GARHYA. II. See under Bālīkī.

GARGY(M). A place of habitation of ancient Bhārata. This place was captured by Śrī Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 11, Droṇa Parva).

GARHAPATI. I. An agri (fire). (Śloka 6, Chapter 74 Ādī Parva).

GARHAPATI. II. One of the seven fathers. The seven fathers are: Vairāja, Agniyāttva, Gārhapati, Somapās, Ekaśāya, Caturvedas and Kalas. (Chapter 11, Gṛhasthā Parva, M.B.).

GARHASTYA. The Gṛhasthārauma a stage in life when you live with your family as a house-holder. The true dharma of a house-holder is to live with what he gets by doing the duty allotted to him. He should feed pilgrims and should not appropriate to himself what belongs to others unless and until it is given to him. (Sloka 3, Chapter 31, Aśī Parva).

GARĪṢṬHA. A sage worshipping Indra in his assembly. (Sabbhā Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 13).

GARUḍA. King of birds.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viśu thus:—Brahmā—Marici—Kaśyapa—Garuḍa.

2) Bhumī. Kaśyapa, grandson of Brahmi and son of Marici, arrived at the eight emigrants of Dakṣa called Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kāliki, Māmā, Krodhaṇa, Manu and Anālī. And to Tamā five daughters were born, viz., Krautyā, Bhāṣi, Śyenī, Dhpārāṇī and Śūki. Out of the five women Krautyā became mother of the ox, Bhāṣi delivered the bāhās (types of birds) and from Śyenī were born cultures and kītams. Hanuma, Kaikosam, Koca etc. are children of Dhpārāṇī. From Śūki was born Nālī and from Nālī, Aruna; Aruna and Garuḍa were the two sons born to Viṇata. (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakāṇḍa, Cantō 15).

There is a story in the Mahābhārata about the birth of Aruna and Garuḍa. Kaśyapa who was much pleased with the service of Viṇata and Kādār asked them to select any boon they desired. Garuḍa chose to have two sons more powerful and heroic than the thousand sons of Kādār. After granting them the boon, Kaśyapa ascended back into the forest.

After some time Kādār laid thousand eggs and Viṇata two eggs. Both of them kept their eggs in hot pots. In the 500th year the eggs of Kādār hatched and thousand magas emerged out of them. But Viṇata’s eggs did not hatch yet, and the sight of Kādār playing with his children painted Viṇata much. She therefore broke open one of her eggs in secret, and a half-grown child stepped out of it. That child was Aruna. Aruna got angry that Viṇata forced open the egg prematurely. He told her that as punishment there would be a slave of Kādār. But Aruna was granted the boon of the curse: that Aruna would become a slave of Garuḍa. After 500 years the remaining egg of yours will hatch and a son endowed with exceptional power and prowess will be born to you. He will liberate you from slavery. After telling his mother so much Aruna rose to the sky where he became the charioteer of the Sun. (Aḍī Parva, Chapter 16. See also Parā 6 infra).

After 500 years Viṇata bore two children, Garuḍa with blazing effulgence, and he rose up in the sky. His body glowed like the sun. The Devas who got themselves dimmed by his effulgence asked Agnideva the reason therefor. Agnideva told them about the birth of Garuḍa and also that he was equally effulgent as himself (Agni). Then all of them went to Garuḍa and lavished on his head all possible blessings, and Garuḍa, as requested by them, controlled his effulgence and returned to his mother. (Aḍī Parva, Chapter 23).

3) Slavery of Viṇata. The churning of the Milk-ocean was done before Garuḍa was born. Indra got a horse named Ucchārvās from the Ocean of Milk. Between Kādār and Viṇata a dispute arose as regards the colour of the horse’s tail. Kādār said that it was black while Viṇata asserted that it was white. They further agreed to test the colour: the next day, letting that she who proved to be wrong would become the slave of the victor. As the naga sons of Kādār hung on to the tail of the horse the tail appeared to be black and Viṇata lost the bet and became Kādār’s slave. It was at this juncture that Garuḍa was born, and he felt highly mortified to find his mother working as a slave of Kādār.

Kādār and his nagas sons once ordered Viṇata to carry them to the naga residence in the middle of the ocean, called Rāmāṇya (Ramman). Accordingly Viṇata carrying Kādār on his shoulders and Garuḍa carrying Kādār’s sons on his shoulders rose up in the sky. But, Garuḍa did not relish the事关 work, and he, carrying with him the nagas, flew up to the sun’s orbit. The naga children fainted due to the excessive heat. But, on the request of Kādār Indra sent heavy rain and the naga’s regained consciousness. By then they had reached Rāmāṇya island.

4) Attempt at freeing Viṇata from bondage. Garuḍa, extremely pained at the pitiful plight of his mother, one day asked Kādār what price she and his children demanded for freeing Viṇata from slavery, and Kādār demanded Arma from Devakā as the price. Garuḍa decided to get it and informed his mother about his decision to fly to Devakā. But, what about food till he reached Devakā? Viṇata solved the problem by advising Garuḍa to eat the nāgās he will meet on his way to Devakā at the island called Rādālaya at the same time specially forbidding him from eating on any animal, brahmins who might be there, at Rādālaya. How to distinguish brahmins from others, queried Garuḍa, and his mother replied by pointing out that the brahmin will burst the throat of him who tries to eat him, like the Then Viṇata blessed her son that his wings would be protected by Vidu, the lower half of his body by sun and moon, the rest of the body by the Vāsum and the head by Agni. She also promised to wait there till her son returned.

5) Garuḍa to Devakā. After saluting his mother Garuḍa set out on his quest for Arma. All the fourteen worlds shone at the landing of his wings. He reached Rādālaya, where while consuming whole lots of Nīsāda’s brahmins and his wife also happened to get into his throat. Garuḍa felt them present immediately in his throat and requested them to get out of his mouth. Accordingly they got out and blessed Garuḍa, who continued in his journey.

Next Garuḍa reached the forest where his father Kaśyapa was engaged in tapas. He told him about his mission and requested him for something to eat. Kaśyapa replied thus:— “You are a poor man wherein an elephant’s and a tortoise are living for long as enemies. Long ago two brothers Viḍhāvan and Supratikā quarreled over their paternal wealth and at the sight of it Viḍhāvan cursed Supratikā to become an elephant when Supratikā pronounced the counter curse that Viḍhāvan should turn out to be a tortoise. Yes, my son Garuḍa may that elephant and tortoise may your journey for Arma be crowned with success.” Now, Garuḍa after saluting his father, flew up in the sky carrying in his back the elephant and the tortoise from the ground. As the trees were falling upturned due to the terrific vibrations caused by the lashing of his wings Garuḍa did not find a convenient place to sit down to eat his food. While continuing the journey Garuḍa saw a big tree, its branches spread out in a circumference... of a hundred yajunas. But, as soon as Garuda set foot on a branch of the tree it (branch) crumbled down. On that broken branch were the sages called Bhālakhyas doing tapas hanging their heads down. Fearing that the sages might fall down Garuda continued his flight holding to his back the torn branch of the tree. But he could not find a safe place to deposit the branch with the sages. So he came again to Mount Gandhāramadana and saw Kasyapa, who was engaged in the Bhālakhyas on behalf of his son and also explained to them about his mission. The Bhālakhyas were pleased and they left the place for the Hamalayas. As advised by Kasyapa Garuda deposited the branch of the tree on an uninhabited mountain peak. Garuda ate the elephant and the turtle there, and therefore flew to Deva-loka (Adi Parva, Chapter 34).

6) Bhālakhyas cursed Indra. Even before the arrival of Garuda all omens began appearing in Deva-loka. Indra asked Bhārasyati for explanation about the ill omens. Bhārasyati with his divine eyes saw Garuda approaching Deva-loka for Amrta, and he told Indra about Garuda born out of the powers of the tapas of Kasyapa and the Bhālakhyas. He also told that with the present one he need Indra due to a curse of the Bhālakhyas. Indra and the other Devas stood guard over the pot of Amrta ready to repel all possible attacks.

There was a reason for Garuda's birth from the powers of the tapas of the Bhālakhyas, and also for Indra to be put into the present predicament due to the curse of the Bhālakhyas, Kasyapa-paraśati, a long time ago began a veritable yajna for a son, and Indra and the Bhālakhyas who numbered more than 60,000 were deputed by Kasyapa to collect firewood for the yajna. The Bhālakhyas were only of the size of a thumb, and Indra who very easily collected all the firewood needed for the yajna laughed at the tiny Bhālakhyas who were carrying small twigs, etc., for firewood. Angered at the insult the Bhālakhyas removed themselves to another place nearby and began a yajna directed against Indra who alarmed at it sought the help of Kasyapa who then held peace talks with the Bhālakhyas. They transferred their yajnaskī (yajna powers) also to Kasyapa and agreed to be satisfied with the condition that as the result of the yajna Indra would not be born to him, who (the son) would defeat Indra. Thus, for the time being Indra escaped from the wrath of the Bhālakhyas. After the yajna was over Viṣṇu came to Kasyapa and he blessed him with a son wishing that he should become exceptionally strong and powerful, and that was Garuda. (Adi Parva, Chapter 34).

7) Amrta-kalpita, samabhavar. (The pot of nectar carried away). Garuda approached the pot of nectar, and Viśvakarmā who attacked him first was felled to the ground. The dust-storm raised by the waving of Garuda's wings blinded everybody. The Devas and Indra, nay, even the sun and the Moon lined up against Garuda, but he defeated them all, and entered the particular place where the pot of nectar was kept. Two terrific wheels were rolling round the pot and they would cut into micro-metre anybody who tried to lay hands on the pot, and a machine circled the wheels. Below the wheels were two monstrous serpents with glowing eyes and protruding tongues like flashes of fire, and the serpents never closed their eyes. The very look with those eyes was enough to poison anyone to death. Garuda blinded those eyes by raising a torrent of dust, pierced them in the middle with his beak and through the hole, his body reduced to such a tiny shape, went nearer to the pot. He destroyed the wheels and the machine, and carrying the pot of nectar in his beaks rose to the sky shielding the light of the sun by his outspread wings. Mahāvīra, who became so much pleased with the tremendous achievements of Garuda asked him to choose any boon. Garuda requested Viṣṇu that he should be made ins (Viṣṇu's) vehicle and rendered immortal without his tasting amṛta. Both the boons were granted.

8) Garuda and Indra become friends. Indra hit with the Vajra (his special weapon) the wings of Garuda who was returning from Viṣṇu. It did not wound his body, but a feather of his fell in the atmosphere. Everybody who saw the feather acclaimed Garuda as Suparpa (he with the good wings). Indra was wonder-struck, and he approached Garuda and requested that they should be friends in future and the pot of nectar be returned. Garuda replied that the nectar would be returned if he granted the power to make nāga his food, and Indra blessed him that he would live by consuming nāgas. And then Garuda told Indra thus: "I took this pot of amṛta not for my own use. The nāgas cheated my mother and made her a slave, and she will be freed if only this pot of nectar is given to them (nāgas). You may snatch off the pot from the nāgas, I shall not object to it."

Indra and Garuda thus became friends, and the former followed Garuda on his way back home.

9) Garuda handed over the pot of amṛta to the nāgas and Indra cheated them of it. Garuda handed over the pot of nectar to the nāgas, who on the suggestion of the former placed the pot on darbha grass spread on the ground. Also, in accordance with Garuda's advice that they should take a purificatory bath before tasting the amṛta the nāgas went out to have the bath, and in their absence Indra carried off the pot of nectar back to Deva-loka. Failing to find the pot of nectar on their return from bath the aggrieved nāgas lifted the darbha on which the pot was placed with the result that their tongues were clenched into two. It was from that day onwards that the nāgas became double-tongued (dvīpyāsas). And thus Garuda redeemed his mother from slavery. (Adi Parva, Chapter 34).

10) The fig tree which Garuda broke with his beak and Lāṅka. It has been noted above that Garuda on his way to Deva-loka rested on a fig tree. That fig is called Subhadra in Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa. Rāvana saw the fig tree around which sages were sitting and which bore marks made by Garuda sitting thereon. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyakand, Canto 35, Verse 26).

There is some connection between this tree and Lāṅka. Garuda had, as directed by Kasyapa, deposited in the sea the branch of the tree on which the Bhālakhyas hung in tapas and with which Garuda flew hither and thither fearing about the safety of the Bhālakhyas. At the spot in the sea where the branch was deposited sprang up an island like the peak of a mountain. It was this island which in after years became reputed as Lāṅka. (Kathāsaritsagara, Kathāmukhārāhmbaka, Taranga 4).
11) Garuda, Subhāra and Kāliya. Garuda had always entertained great hatred against the nāgas, and now Indra's permission having been obtained by him to eat the nāgas for food, Garuda decided to launch a regular nāga-hunting expedition. He began eating the nāgas one by one. Alarmed at this the nāgas planned for their security in a conclave, and approached Garuda with the proposal that one nāga would go to him daily to eat food instead of his indiscriminate killing of them. Garuda accepted their proposal. After some time the nāgas proposed to Garuda that they would conduct a sarpa-bali (sacrifice of serpent) and submit the food got out of the bull to him so that his nāga-hunting might be stopped for ever. Garuda agreed to this also. According to the new agreement daily one nāga began going to Garuda with the food got out of the bull.

But Kāliya alone did not agree to the programme as he did not recognize Garuda to be superior to him in power. And, Garuda, who wanted to teach the haughty Kāliya a lesson challenged him to fight, and the fight took place in river Kālnī, Kāliya's abode. During the fight the dazzling Garuda's wings raised the water in Kālnī channel. The sage Subhāra, who was watching the battle, cursed the body of Garuda to be shattered into a thousand pieces if ever he entered that area in future, and thenceforth the place became a prohibited area for Garuda. During after years Kāliya was put up at this place.

There was once a king called Subhāra in the solar dynasty. He married one Yādavi, but for many years they had no issue. Yādavi had become old by the time she conceived a child as the result of many yajnas etc. But, Subhāra's other wives, viz. co-wives of Yādavi, did not like the prospects of Yādavi becoming a mother. They administered poison to her with the result that Yādavi did not deliver in time, but continued as a pregnant woman for seven years. The sad couple, for their mental relief went into the forest and lived as disciples of a sage called Auruva. But Subhāra died soon and Yādavi prepared herself to follow him in the funeral pyre. But, the sage Auruva prevented her from self-immolation speaking to her thus: "You shall not act rashly. The child in your womb will become a famous emperor and rule over the whole world." Yādavi yielded to the sage's advice and did not court death, and soon afterwards she delivered a son, and he was named Satgara, which meant "he who was affected by poison even while he was in the mother's womb. It was this child who, in later years, became reputed as emperor Sagara.

Sagara married the elder sister of Garuda when he was living as a boy in Auruva's aśrama, and there is a story behind the marriage, a story which related to the time when Garuda was not born.

Viniati, mother of Garuda, while she was working as the slave of Kadra, one day went into the woods to collect firewood for her mistress. In the terrible rain and storm that ensued, Viniati lost her track and wandered in the forest for many days before she could take shelter in the aśrama of a Sannāyaśīnī. The pious man felt sorry for poor Viniati and blessed her that a son, who would be able to win freedom for her would be born to her. Garuda was the son thus born to her.

Before the birth of Garuda when Kāliya and Viniati were living together with their daughter Sumati the boy Sage Upamanyu, son of Suta, came to Kāliya and told Kāliya thus: "While touring round the earth I worshipped the pits at Gaya and I have been told that they (Pits) would get redemption only in case I married and became a father. I, therefore, request you to please give your daughter Sumati to me as my wife. Take care to see that my father Upamanyu also gets redemption."

It was during this period when Viniati was in a fix about the marriage of Sumati that Garuda was born to her. He also thought over the problem and argued like this: the curse is only against a brahmin boy marrying my sister Sumati; why not Sumati be given in marriage to a Kṣatriya; but where to find an eligible Kṣatriya boy? At this stage Viniati asked him to go and meet the Sannāyaśīnī, who had promised her an illustrious son, in the forest and then, Kṣatriya born Garuda said his father Upamanyu did not relish this proposal. Upamanyu got angry at the rejection of his offer and cursed Viniati saying that if Sumati was given in marriage to any other brahmin boy she (Viniati) would die with her head broken into pieces.

assembly and insulted both Indra and Vana at which Visvāku extended his right hand to Garuda asking him whether he could hold the hand. And, when Garuda placed Visvāku’s hand on his head he felt as if the whole weight of the three worlds was put on the head. Garuda admitted his defeat. Mahāvīra thus laid low the cunning of Garuda. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 165).

14) Garuda helped Gałava. Gałava was a disciple of Visvāmitra. Once Dhranmadeva, to test Visvāmitra, went to his āśrama disguised as Vana and asked for food. As there was no ready-made food at the āśrama just then, Visvāmitra naturally took some time to cook new food, and he went with it, steaming hot, in a plate to the guest. Saying that he would return within minutes and receive the food, the guest (Dhranmadeva) left the place, and Visvāmitra stood there with the plate in hand awaiting the return of the guest. He had to remain standing thus for one hundred years, and during this whole period it was Gałava who stood there looking after his guest. When hundred years were completed Dhranmadeva returned to Visvāmitra and accepted his hospitality, and then only could the latter take some rest.

Visvāmitra blessed Gałava, and now it was time for him to leave the āśrama. Though Visvāmitra told that no gurudakṣiṇa (token fee) was required Gałava persisted in asking him what fee or present he wanted. Visvāmitra lost his temper and told Gałava that if he was so particular about gurudakṣiṇa, eight hundred horses all having the colour of moon, and one ear black in colour might be given as daksinā. Gałava stood there against the above pronouncement of his preceptor, as no such horses happened to be over there and no Gałava about his sad plight. Money was required to purchase horses, but Gałava was penniless. At any rate Garuda with Gałava on his back flew eastwards and reached Kāśībhraparvata and they rested on a peak of it. There the Brahmin woman, Śandili, was engaged in tapas and she served them with food. After food Gałava spoke disparagingly about Śandili. Garuda and Gałava slept that night on the floor, but when they woke up in the morning Gałava was completely shed of his feathers. Garuda stood before Śandili, his head bent in anguish. Śandili blessed Garuda, who then got back his old feathers.

Continuing their journey Garuda and Gałava reached the palace of the very rich King, Yagyā. Garuda introduced Gałava to Yagyā, who found it difficult to get 800 horses for Gałava. But Yagyā gave his daughter Mādhavī to Gałava saying that he might give her to any King and get money enough to purchase 800 horses. After thus showing the means to get money to Gałava, Garuda returned home.

Gałava gave Mādhavī first to King Harivamsa of Ayodya, then to King Divodasa of Kāśi and next to King Udayana of Bhoja and got from them two hundred horses each, and he submitted the horses and also Mādhavī in lieu of the balance of two hundred horses to Visvāmitra as daksinā. A son called Ayaka was born to Visvāmitra by Mādhavī, who had been granted a boon that she would not lose her youth and beauty even though she lived with any number of people. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 166).

15) Fight between Gałava and Arasura. Śri Krṣṇa once went to Devaloka and plucked the Parijāta flower from the garden Naḍana, and this led to a fight between Ātri and Krṣṇa in which Garuda also joined. Garuda directed his main attention on Airāvata which, at his blows, tumbled and fell down. (Harivamsa, Chapter 73).

16) Defeated by Viśvāku. To thank the Milk-Ocean the Devas and Asuras decided to use Mount Mandara as the shaft and Vana as the rope to rotate the shaft. The attempts of the Devas, the Asuras and the Bṛhaspati of Śiva failed to uproot and bring with them the mountain, when Garuda, at the instance of Viśvāku brought the mountain as easily as a kite carries a frog. Again, when others failed to bring Viśvāku from Naḍaloka Garuda went and asked the nāga chief to follow him to the ocean of Milk. Viśvāku replied that if his presence was so indispensable he must be carried over there. Then Garuda caught the middle part of Viśvāku in his beak and rose in the air. But, even though Garuda rose beyond the horizon, when he looked down half of Viśvāku still remained on the ground. Garuda then tried to fold Viśvāku into two and carry it, but, again to no purpose. Disappointed and humiliated Garuda returned without Viśvāku. Afterwards Viśvāku was brought to the ocean of Milk by Śiva’s hand stretched down into Pātāla. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, Yuḍhā Kāṇḍa).

17) Bhīma went in search of the Sūngandhikā flower on account of Garuda. While, in the course of their exile in the forest, the Pāṇḍavas were put up at the āśrama of mahārāja Aśvapati, Garuda picked up from the depths of the sea one day a nāga called Kṛṣṇamān, and due to the libation caused by the lashing of Garuda’s wings Kalhāra flowers from the garden of Kalhāra were blown to the feet of Pāṇḍava. She wore the fragrant flowers in her hair saying that if she were to have good flowers, wind had to bring them. Since there was a mild and veiled insinuation in that statement that Bhīma was inferior to the wind the former did not appreciate that comment by Pāṇḍava. And so he rushed to Mount Gaṅgāśapādana to collect Kalhāra flowers. (Vana Parva, Chapter 166).

18) Garuda, saved Uparicaravasu. Once a controversy started between the Devas and the brahmans, the former advocating the use of goat’s flesh in performing yajñas while the brahmans contended that grains were sufficient for the purpose. Uparicaravasu, who arbitrated in the debate spoke in favour of the Devas, which the brahmans did not like, and they cursed Visu to fall from the sky into the pits of the earth. This curse was countered by the Devas blessing him that as long as Uparicaravasu remained on earth he would not feel hungry and that he would regain his old form due to the blessings of Mahāvīra. Visu prayed to Visu, who sent Garuda to the former, and Garuda carried Visu to the sky on his wings. Thus Visu became again Uparicaravasu. (Śimha Parva, Chapter 39).

19) Other information about Garuda. (1) A dānava once stole away the crown of Śri Krṣṇa who was on a visit to Mount Gomanta. Garuda retrieved it from the dānava and returned it to Krṣṇa. (Dhāgavat, Daśāma Skandha).

(2) The monkeys who searched for Śītā visited the house of Garuda also. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Kiśkindhā Kāṇḍa, Canto 40, Verse 39).
(3) Garuda had married the four daughters of Daksasrajapati. (Bhagavata, 6th Skandha).
(4) He had a son named Kapota. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101).
(5) During the Rama-Ravana war Lakshmana, Sugriva and all the monkeys swooned hit by the nágástras of Indrají. Sri Kama then thought of Garuda, who at once came down on earth and bit away the nágástras. (Kamba Ramáyana Yuddhakanda). (6) Garuda was present at the birth-day celebrations of Arjuna. (Adi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 50).
(7) At the birth of Subrahmanya Garuda submitted his own son, Mayúra, as a present. (Anuśása Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 21).
20) Synonym for Garuda.
Garutman Garudi Garuvas Tákrya Vainatayva Khaśeṣvaraya/
21) Names used in the Mahábhárata to represent Garuda. Arunamuya, Bhujagári, Garutman, Kañapeya, Khagarat, Paksiraja, Patyagára, Pathagára, Sáparnaka, Tákyra, Vainateya, Vainámadandavargaka, Vinaśáman, Vinaśátsama, Vinaśátmaka. (For story regarding how Garuda stopped eating nágas see under Jímísvahan). (GARUDAPURĀNA. One of the eighteen Mahápuránas. This is believed to be a narration to Garuda by Maháviśu. There are eight thousand ślokas in it. There is an opinion that only the Táksakalpa is of Visnu. The theme of the Puráṇa is the birth of Garuda from Brahmaná. If this Puráṇa is given as a gift it should be given along with the image of a swan in gold. (Chapter 272, Agni Puráṇa). (GARUDAVYÚHÁ. A system of arranging soldiers on the battlefield in the shape of Garuda. (GATITÁLI. A warrior of Skandadeva. (Śaila Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 67).
GÁTRA. A mahátri, the son of Vasistha, who had by Crijá seven Rjas called Rajas, Gátra, Udhyavábhu, Savana, Aghu, Sukra and Súrapas. (Agni Puráṇa, Chapter 20).
GAURA (M). A mountain in the Kúra island. (Bhitama Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 4).
GAURAMUKHA A son of sage Súmika. It was Súmika’s son Śrídhi, who cursed Parikśit to death by snake-bite. (See Parikśit). Śrídhi cursed that Parikśit, who had thrown a dead snake on the neck of his father while in meditation, would be bitten to death by snake within seven days. Śrídhi sent word about the curse through his disciple Garumukha to Parikśit. (Adi Parva, Chapter 42, Verses 14-22).
GAURAPRABHÁ. Son born to Śuká (Vyúha’s son) by his wife Pivári. Śuká had four sons called Krúna, Garurápbhá, Bhúri and Devasútra and a daughter Kirti. (Devabihagavata, Prathama Skandha).
GAURAPRÁJÀHA. A royal sage who worships Yama at his sáha (assembly). (Sabhá Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 21).
GAURÁŚIRAS. A sage of ancient days, who worshipped Indra in his assembly. (Sabhá Parva, Chapter 7, Verse 11).
GAURÁVĀHANA. A King, who was present at the nájasiya sacrifice of Yudhíshthira. (Sabhá Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 12). (GAURTÍ. See Parívaśi).
GAURTÍ II. A female attendant (Devī) of Parívaśi. (Vana Parva, Chapter 231, Verse 48).
GAURTÍ III. Wife of Varaṇa. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 117, Verse 9).
GAURTÍ IV. An Indian river. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 25).
GAURTÍSA. A royal sage and a member of Yama’s assembly. (Sabhá Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 18).
GAUTÍSÁKHARA (M). A sacred place on the Himálayas. A bath in Shíkantaka here brings the same benefits as are derived from the performance of Vájapeya and Asvamedha sacrifices. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 151).
GUTAMA I. 1) General Information. The Puráñas record about a sage called Gautama though nothing is known about his genealogy. Yet the genealogy of his wife Ahalyá is available. See under Ahalyá. 2) Sons of Gautama. The eldest son of Gautama was Sáthánanda. (Śloka 2, Sarga 51, Súla Kañá, Vámíki Ráma). Gautama had two sons. Sáradvi and Círakári. Sáradvi was born with arrows in his hand (Śloka 2, Chapter 130, Adi Parva). Círakári used to ponder over everything before he acted and so all his actions were delayed. He got his name Círakári. (Chapter 266, Sabhá Parva). Sáradvi was known as Gautama also. That was why Krúpá and Krúpí, children of Sáradvi were known as Gautami and Gauátami. (Śloka 2, Chapter 129, Adi Parva). Besides these, Gautama had a daughter of unknown name. There is a reference to this girl in Śloka 11 of Chapter 56 of Áśvamedha Parva. It is reported that this daughter wept when Utánga a disciple of Gautama came to the árama with a huge load of firewood on his head. In Chapter 4 of Vana Parva there is a reference to a few other daughters of Gautama, namely, Jayá, Jayanti and Aparájá.
3) An attempt to kill Ahalyá. Once when Gautama was away from the árama Indra came there as a guest. Considering it as her duty to treat a guest of her husband properly during his absence Ahalyá received him well and gave him fruit to ease his tiredness. Indra went back. Gautama on knowing this on his return suspected the chastity of his wife and calling his son Círakári to his side asked him to cut off her head. After giving the order Gautama went to the forests. Círakári had a peculiar nature. He would ponder over things deeply before taking any action. He knew he must obey the orders of his father but killing one’s own mother was a greater sin than disobeying a father. Weighing the merits and demerits of the act Círakári sat thinking without doing anything.
Gautama when he reached the forest thought again about Ahalyá and her crime. After all what has she done? A guest came to the árama and as duty bound she welcomed him. It was indeed a great sin to have killed her by her own son. Immersed in thoughts of this kind, sad and repentant, Gautama returned to the árama to find Círakári sitting silently deeply engrossed in thoughts. On seeing his father Círakári was perplexed and he explained to his father about the good and bad effects of his order. Gautama was pleased at this and he blessed him, with long life.
4) How the disciple Utanga was treated. Utanga was the best of the disciples of Gautama. So even when all the other disciples were sent away, Gautama asked Utanga to continue as a disciple which Utanga did most willingly. The disciple became old with grey hair. Then taking pity on him, Gautama received garuda-kšaṇa from Utanga and sent him away with blessings. (For details see under Utanga).
5) Case of Abhāyā. Indra became a lover of Abhāyā and slept with her. Gautama coming to know of that cursed both Indra and Abhāyā. (For details see under Abhāyā).

b) Other details regarding Gautama.
1) Kalmitapāda, King of Ayodhya, lived for twelve years a demon following a curse of Vatsa. At last he took refuge in Gautama and following his advice went to Gokarna and remained there to propitiate Śiva attained moksa. (Svātarkālīkī Mahāmya).
2) It was said: Nīlās, alias Gautama, who composed Śloka 50, Mahāyuddha one of Vṛṣṇi.
3) Laksman, brother of Śrī Rāma, constructed a palace called Vediya near the Gārīna of Gautama. (Uttara Kānāyanā).
4) Gautama is one of the seven sages (śaptarni) (Śloka 50, Chapter 18, Anūrādana Parva).
5) Gautama sat in the court of Brahmā and worshipped Brahmā. (M. B. Sābhā Parva).
6) Gautama once blessed Dyumatesa, father of Satevān, and said that he would regain his eyesight. (Śloka 11, Chapter 298, Vana Parva).
7) When the war between the Pāṇḍavas and Kau-ravas broke out Gautama went to the Kurukṣetra battlefield and advised Drauṇa to stop the battle. (Śloka 36, Chapter 190, Droha Parva).
8) Gautama was also one of the many sages who visited Bhishma while he was lying on his bed of arrows.
9) Once Gautama built a hermitage on the top of the mountain Pīyāṭā and did penance there for sixty thousand years. Kāla, the God of time, then appeared before him and Gautama received him well and sent him away. (Śloka 10, Chapter 47, Santī Parva).
10) Once Gautama turned the moustache of Indra green by a curse for showing disrespect to him. (Śloka 25, Chapter 352, Santī Parva).
11) When Gautama was born, there was such brilliance that the surrounding darkness was removed and so the boy was named Gautama (Gauta—light rays, Tamas—darkness) to mean the remover of darkness. (Śloka 94, Chapter 93, Anūrādana Parva).
12) Once Gautama instructed the King Vṛśādārbi on the evil of accepting rewards for good deeds. (Śloka 42, Chapter 93, Anūrādana Parva).
13) Gautama was also one among the rishis who swore that they were not involved in the theft of the lotuses of the sage Agniva. (Śloka 19, Chapter 94, Anūrādana Parva, M.B.).

GAUTAMA II. A brahmin who was a member of the court of Yudhishṭhira. He was a member of Indravāsāṭhī. Also, this Gautama while he was living in Girivraja had sexual relations with a Śudra woman from the country of Ujñara and a son was born to them named Kakisivān. (Ślokas 17, 18 and 3 of Chapters 4, 7 and 21 respectively of Sābhā Parva, M.B.).

GAUTAMA III. An ascetic of great erudition. He had three sons named Ekaṭa, Dvīta and Trita. (See under 'Ekaṭa'). (Śloka 79, Chapter 36, Sāliya Parva).

GAUTAMA IV. Another ascetic of great virtue. Once when this Gautama was going through the forest he saw an elephant lying wearied. He took it to his āśrama and brought it up. When it became a full grown elephant Indra disguised as the emperor Bhūtarāma came to take it away secretly. Gautama found it out and then he was offered thousand cows and much wealth in lieu of the elephant. But Gautama refused to part with the elephant. Pleased with his extreme affection for his dependant, Indra took both Gautama and the elephant to heaven. (Chapter 102, Anūrādana Parva).

GAUTAMA V. An ungrateful brahmin. He was born in Madhyadesa. He left his parents and after travelling in many lands came to a country of foresters. The foresters received him with respect and he lived in a hut of the foresters and married a lady from among them.

Gautama abandoned his brahminhood and accepted the duties of foresters. He was living like this when another brahmin boy came to that village. He searched in vain for a brahmin house to stay for the night and then knowing that a man born a brahmin but made a forester by his duties was living there he went to his house. Gautama also came there carrying the animals and birds he had hunted down that day. His body was bathed in the river and after that he felt compassion for Gautama and advised him to leave his trade and go to his house in his country.

In the morning the brahmin guest went away without taking any food. The advice of his guest kept him thinking. He decided to abandon his life as a hunter and so leaving everything behind he went to the seashore. He met some merchants on the way and while they were travelling together a wild elephant attacked them. Many were killed and Gautama, escaping ran swiftly and came to the base of a big banyan tree. He was tired and slept there for a while.

A big vulture named Naradjaṅgha lived on the top of that banyan tree. He used to go out to worship Brahmā at dusk and when he returned to his abode that day he saw a man lying wearied down below. Gautama attempted to catch the vulture and eat it but the vulture playing a benign host placed before Gautama food for him and made enquiries about him and asked him the purpose of his travels. Gautama told him that he was very poor and that he wanted to acquire some wealth somehow.

Nādjaṅgha then said that he would get for him enough wealth from the demon-king Virudpāksa who was an intimate friend of his. Gautama was pleased. The vulture furnished him and sent him to sleep. Next morning Nādjaṅgha sent Gautama to Virudpāksa and the demon gave Gautama as much gold as he could carry on his shoulders.

Gautama took the gold as a head load and came back to the base of the banyan tree. Nādjaṅgha came to him and they talked to each other for some time. Gautama who had become a glutonous flesh eater looked with greed at the fat body of the vulture and in an instant killed it and packed the flesh along with the load of gold and went his way.

Virihipaka did not see Nādiṣaṅgha for two days and he was worried. He, therefore, sent his son to the banyan tree to look for Nādiṣaṅgha. When he reached the base of the tree he found to his grief only the bones and feathers of his father's friend. He knew what had happened and he immediately followed the ungrateful brahmin and capturing him brought him to his father's house and foot. Virihipaka without any mercy cut him into pieces and threw them for the crows to eat. But even the crows would not eat the flesh of such an ungrateful man.

Virihipaka burnt the remains of Nādiṣaṅgha in a funeral pyre. Devas assembled in the skies to watch the funeral. Then Surabhi sprinkled milk on the funeral pyre and brought back Nādiṣaṅgha to life.

The reborn vulture felt sorry for Gautama and requested Surabhi to restore to life the wretched Gautama also. Gautama also was brought back to life and he embraced Nādiṣaṅgha. Gautama then went away with his load of gold.

Gautama returned to Śabariśaya and there married a Śudra lady and begot seven sons. The Devas were offended at this and cursed him condemning him to hell. (Chapters 168 to 173; Śūnta Parva).

GAUTAMI I. Another name of Kṛṣṇa, wife of Drona. (See under Kṛṣṇa).

GAUTAMI II. The woman called Jāśila belonging to the family of Gautama is known as Gautami also. (See under Jāśila).

GAUTAMI III. A brahman whose son succumbed to snake-bite. (See Arjuna).

GAUTAMI IV. A river referred to in verse 71, Chapter 165 of Anuśāsana Parva.

GAṆṆAKA I. A monkey king. A terrific warrior, he helped Śrī Rāma with 60,000 monkeys. (Vana Parva, Chapter 283, Verse 4).

GAṆṆAKA II. Younger brother of Śakuni, the son of Subala. In the great war he broke into the military set up of the Pandyas. (Bhūma Parva, Chapter 90). He was killed by Irāvīn, son of Arjuna. (Bhisma Parva, Chapter 90).

GAVALĀNA. Father of Satiyā of Mahābhārata fame. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 97).

GAṆAVA. A very powerful monkey king. As captain of a regiment he fought on the side of Śrī Rāma in the Rāma-Rāvana war. (Vana Parva, Chapter 2.3, Verse 3).

GAṆAVAṆA. (GAṆAVAṆAYANAM). A yajña. (Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 10).

GAṆṆAJA. (SṚṆGGA). Son of a sage named Nāgabhūṣana. GaṆṆajā ended that King Pariksit should die of snake-bite. The curse was made under the following circumstances.

King Pariksit went hunting one day in the forest and he who had chased a deer in hot haste for some distance felt naturally very weak and tired, and requested a sage he saw there in the forest for some water. Immersed in meditation the sage did not hear the King, and mistaking him to be a haughty fellow, the King with his stick, lifted a dead snake and placed it round the neck of the sage. Yet he did not stir. The King returned to his palace.

Gavijata, son of the sage and a devotee of Devi heard of the insult heaped on his father's head while he was not even asking for something. His companions derided him by saying that though his father was Nāgabhūṣana (having snakes as ornaments) the nāga was fleshy. Enraged at this and not waiting to study details about the incident he pronounced the following curse: "Whoever might be the person who threw a dead snake about my father's neck, he will be liable to death by Ṭakṣaka within seven days from today." Only after the curse was pronounced did he understand that it was King Pariksit who had become the object of the curse. And, he dispatched his disciple immediately to Pariksit to inform him about the curse.

The King's reaction was, "When the time for death comes let me die." (Devi Bhāgavata, Divyābhāṣya).

GAṆVISTHA. A famous asura. It was he who descended on earth as king Drumasaṇa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67).

GAṆYĀ. A particular locality in North India (Nepal). Here there is Gayas mountain, a holy centre also. There is legend to the effect that Buddha did tapas here. People of this locality gave many presents to Yuddhiṣṭhira. (Śāhāṇa Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 15).

GAṆVISTHA I. See Gavavistha.

1) General. A king of ancient India Gayas was a Rājarṣi and son of Amūraṇa. The Rājarṣi had conducted many yajñas. A very well-known yajña of his is described in verse 18, Chapter 75 of Vana Parva.

2) Particular Information. (1) Gayas was a member in Yamarāja's assembly. (Śāhāṇa Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 18).

(2) He had earned reputation and wealth by visiting the sacred temples in India. (Vana Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 18).

(3) The Rājarṣi had come in his vimāna (aeroplane) to witness the fighting between Arjuna and Kṛpaṅkṣya in the war, which broke out as a result of the Kauravas lifting the crown of the Vīraha King. (Vīraha Parva, Chapter 56, Verse 9).

(4) Śrī Krṣṇa met Gayas on his (Krṣṇa's) way to Hastināpura from Īḍavāla. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 27).

(5) Once King Māndhātā subjugated Gayas. (Drona Parva, Chapter 62, Verse 10).

(6) Baravati devī once attended a yajña conducted by Gayas, assuming for herself the name Vistāla.

(7) He once gifted away land to Brahmā. (Śaṅkṣī Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 25).

(8) Gayas did not eat flesh. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 59).

GAYA I. A king born to Ayuś, the son of King Purāvasa by his (Ayuś's) wife Sitābhāṣā. (Sitābhāṣā, This Gayas was the brother of Nahuṣa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 25).

GAYA III. An asura. (See Gayātīrtha).

GAYA IV. A king born in the dynasty of the famous emperor Pṛthu. Pṛthu had two sons called Ardhanārīśa and Vādī. A son called HAvidhānā was born to Antardhāna by Śikṣipati; he (Havindhānā) married Dīnānā born in the family of Anuṭi and they had two sons named Pratunabhastra, Śukra, Gayas, Kṛṣṇa, Vraja and Ajna. (Harivansha, Chapter 2, Verse 31).

GAYA V. A king, a descendant of Dhrūva. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 18).
GAYAKA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Sloka 67, Chapter 25, Sathyavatam).

GAYAPARVATAM. A sacred mountain. Yamantika honored it on a particular occasion. Brahmanas cursed by the Devas is on this mountain. To perform the Śuddha rites of the dead at Brahmanas is considered to be excellent. (See Gayātrī) GAYASIRAS. A peak of Gaya Mountain; it is also known as Gayātrī (Vana Parva, Chapter 15).

GAYĀTRI. An avatāra of the Devi known as Gayātrī. (Vana Parva, Chapter 17).

GAYĀTRITVA. The following story is told in the Agni Purāṇa about the origin of this very reputed sacred place at Gayā

An avatāra called Gaya was once performing tapas. As the interior of his tapas went on increasing, the Devas got nervous and they approached Vīru, who with the request that he should save them from Gayāvīra. Vīru agreed to oblige them. Meanwhile, the intensity of Gayā's tapas increased daily. Ultimately Vīru appeared to Gaya and as requested by him granted him the boon that he might become twice as holy and sanctified than all the tithis in the world.

Brahma then advised Gayā to become afraid of Gayā's power and prowess, and they complained about him to Vīru, who advised Brahma to request Gayā for his body in order to perform a yajña. Brahma did so and Gayā lay down on earth so that the Yajña might be performed on his body. Brahma began the yajña on his head, and made an offering when the body of Gayā was not stationary or quiet. When told about this fact, Vīru called upon Brahma (See Marīci, Para 3) and told him thus: "You please hold devaśā (a divine stone) on the body of Gayā, and let all the Devas sit upon it, and I shall be seated on the stone along with the Devas, holding the gada (club) in my hands."

Dharmadeva did as he was hidden by Vīru. The body of Gayā stopped shaking as soon as Vīru sat upon the stone and the body of Gayā began to perform the Eka offerings. This place became a holy tithi under the name Gayā. After the yajña was over, Brahma gave the Gayā temple 20,000 yanas (5 kilo) in extent with 55 villages attached to it as dakshina (fee) to the masters of the ceremony. Brahma presented the villages to them after offering them hills of gold, rivers flowing with milk and honey, houses built of Gold and silver. But the Brahmins who got these gifts stayed on there, thus availing also of the increase perhaps. Angry at this Brahma cursed the people of Gayā, and according to it the Brahmins became illustrious and civilized, rivers flowed with water instead of milk and honey. The Brahmins basking over their homes and without fear gaze below Brahma, who complained them thus: "Well, Brahmins of Gayā, as long as there exist the sun and the moon you will continue to be dependent upon the Gayā tithi for your sustenance. Whenever comes to Gayā and gives offerings to you and performs the duties for the souls of the departed, the souls of hundred generations of his ancestors will be transferred from hell to heaven where they will attain final beatitude.

This Gayātṛitva became famous. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 61).

GAYĀTRI. One of the seven houses of Śiva. The other houses are Bhūta, Uṣṇik, Jagati, Tatyāthā, Anuvanī, and Pañkī. (Chapter 8, Amāraṇ 2, Vāgu Purāṇa).

GAYĀTRI II.

1) General Information. A glorious Vedic mantra. This mantra has twenty-four letters. There are nineteen categories of movable and immovable things in this world and to this if the five elements are added the number twenty-one is obtained. That is why the Gayātṛi has got twenty-four letters. (Chapter 4, Bhrīma Purāṇa). At the time of the Uśas day of Śiva, being Gayātṛi mantra as a string on top of his chariot (Chapter 34, Kaṇha Purāṇa).

2) The story of Gayātṛi. If one recites Gayātṛi once, one will be freed from all sins done at that time; if one recites it ten times all the sins done on one day will be washed away. Thus, if one recites it a hundred times the sins of one month, thousand times, the sins of a year, ten lakkha times, the sins of his life time: ten lakh times, the sins of his previous birth, hundred lakh times, the sins of all his births, will be washed away. If a man recites it ten crore times he becomes a realised soul and attains mokṣa. (Navamaka Svādharma, Devī Bhāgavata).

3) How to recite Gayātṛi. It should be recited sitting still with your head slightly drawn downwards with your right palm open upwards, with the fingers raised and bent to give the shape of the hood of a snake. Starting from the centre of the ring-finger and counting down and going up through the centre of the small finger and touching the top lines on the ring, middle and forefingers, count down to the base of the forefinger, you get number three. This is how the number of mantras is counted. This method is called the Karamālī (hand rosary) method. This is the only method that could be used. You can use a rosary made of lotus seeds or glass beads. If you are using lotus seeds you should select white seeds for the rosav. (Navamaka Svādharma, Devī Bhāgavata).

GAYĀTRITVATTHA. A sacred place of northern Bhrīma. If one spends one night here one will get the benefit of giving away as gifts a thousand cows. (Sloka 28, Chapter 85, Vana Purāṇa).

GERU. A mineral obtained from mountains. (Sloka 55, Chapter 108, Vana Purāṇa).

GH (q). This letter has two meanings: (1) Bell (2) a blow or assault; striking or killing. (Agni Parāṣa, Chapter 549).

GHANAPĀTHA. A particular system of Vedic studies. There are four such systems. The system of separating each word from conjunctions and combinations and combining with the word just before and after it is called Jaṭāpāṭha. Jaṭāpāṭha means joined or combined Patha. Ghanapāṭha is there to avoid errors in Jaṭāpāṭha. Ghanapāṭha consists of padapāṭha and Kramapāṭha. In Padapāṭha the split words are once more combined and Pratitsākhyā lays down the rules to combine words. It is because of this scientific system of reciting that the Emented is to be placed in this text without different readings.

GHANASTHA. A brahmin born in Vaśiṣṭha's family. He spent hundred years worshipping Śiva. Once Ghanastha asked sage Devala to give his daughter in marriage to him. But Ghanastha's ugliness stood in the way. So he abducted the daughter of the sage and married her. Enraged at this Devala cursed and turned him into an owl. He was also given redemption from the curse that he would regain his form the day he helped Indra

dyanusa. (Skanda Purana)

GHANTA II. See under Ghanatarka.

GHANATARKA I.

1) General. Ghatja and Karna were two Raksasa brothers who attained salvation by worshiping Visnu. (Bhagavata, Dasama Skandha). But the elder brother, Ghatja, alone is sometimes called by the name Ghanatarka in the Puranas.

2) Birth. There is a reference in Durakavadiha (killing of Durakavadiha) about the birth of Ghanatarka. Drona, after having secured a boon from Brahma, used to harass the world too much and when his depridation became unbearable Siva created Bhadrakali from his third eye and she killed the asura. Mandodari, wife of Drona and daughter of Maya was sunk in grief at the death of her husband. She began to do tapas. Siva appeared and gave her a few drops of sweat from his body saying that the person on whom she sprinkled the sweat drops would suffer from small-pox and that such patients would worship her (Mandodari) and supply her necessary food. From that day onwards Mandodari became the presiding deity over small-pox. On her way back to the earth with the sweat drops Mandodari met Bhadrakali at whom she threw the sweat drops to take revenge for her husband’s death. Immediately Bhadrakali fell down with an attack of small-pox. Hearing about the misfortune Siva created a terrible Rakṣasa called Ghanatarka. According to Siva’s directions Ghanatarka licked off the small-pox from Bhadrakali’s body. But, when he tried to lick it off from her face he prevented him saying that she and Ghanatarka were sister and brother and that it was improper for the brother to lick the face of the sister. And, even to this day the small-pox on Bhadrakali’s face remains as an ornament to her.

3) The name Ghanatarka. This Rakṣasa, at first, was an enemy of Visnu, and did not tolerate even the mention of Visnu’s name. Therefore, he went about always wearing a bell so that the tinkling of it warned off the name of Visnu from entering his ears. Because he wore a ghanḍa (bell) in his Karna (ears) he came to be known as Ghanatarka. (M.B. Bhavishya Parva, Chapter 80).

4) Turned out to be a devotee of Visnu. Ghanatarka became a servant of Kubera. Once he did tapas for salvation. Siva appeared and asked him to do tapas to please Visnu as Visnu was greater than himself (Siva). From that day onwards he removed the bells from his ears and became a devotee of Visnu. (Bhavishya Parva, Chapter 80).

5) Attained salvation. Handling over charge of government to Satyaki Sri Kriṣṇa once went to Kalidesa mounted on Garuda to see Siva. On his way he dismounted at the Badaryalama, and while sitting deep in meditation there he heard the thuddening voice of Piśaca (souls of dead people roaming about without attaining salvation). He also heard the barking of dogs, and thus he understood that Piśacas were hunting animals. The hunters came to Kriṣṇa’s presence. They were led by Ghanatarka who was reciting the name of Visnu. Sri Kriṣṇa felt pity for him. Ghanatarka told Kriṣṇa that his aim and ambition were to see Visnu and that Siva had blessed that he would realize his ambition at Badaryalama. Pleased at this, Sri Kriṣṇa revealed his Vavārupa (representing in his person the whole universe), and at once Ghanatarka brought half of the corpse of a brahmin and submitted it as a present before the Lord. He explained to Kriṣṇa that according to the custom of the Raksasas that was the best present which could be made. Without accepting the present Kriṣṇa patted Ghanatarka on his back with the result that he cast off his body and rose up to Vaikuntha. (Bhavishya Purana, Chapters 80-82 and also Bhagavata, Dasama Skandha).

6) Ghanatarka Prasuthi (Installation of his idol in temple). Though Ghanatarka was a Rakṣasa, as he attained Vaikuntha due to the blessings of God Almighty his idol is still installed in temples and worshiped. The installation ceremony is described in Chapter 59 of the Agni Purana thus: ‘Ghanatarka should have 18 hands. He cure diseases born as a result of sins. He holds in his right hand Vajra, sword, Cala, arrow etc. And in his left hand broom, sword, cord, bell, pickaxe etc. He also holds the tripod (trident). Ghanatarka who turned out to be a Deva is believed to cure small-pox.

GHANATARKA II. One of the four attendants presented by Brahma to Subrahmanya. Nandishena, Lochi-taka, Ghanatarka and Kumudanath are the four attendants. (Salaya Parva, Chapter 45, Verses 23-24).

GHANTODARA. An asura, who was a member of Varuna’s assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 134).

GHARMA. A King of the Anga royal dynasty.

GHATA. An urban area in ancient India. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 83).

GHATA. A notorious thief. He had a friend called Karpura. They were jointly known as Ghatakarpuras. Once both the friends went to commit theft. Leaving Ghata at the door-steps Karpura entered the chamber of the princess who after enjoying sexual pleasures with him gave him some money asking him to repeat such visits in future. Karpura told Ghata all that had happened and handed over to him the money which the princess had given him. Karpura went again to the princess. But, owing to the weakness caused by the night’s enjoyment both the princess and he slept till late in the morning. Meanwhile the palace guards found out the secret and took the lovers into custody. Karpura was sentenced to death and let out to be hanged. Ghata was present on the spot and Karpura asked him secretly to save the princess. Accordingly Ghata, without anybody knowing about it, took the princess over to his house.

The King ordered inquiries about the absence of the princess. Under the natural presumption that some relation or other of Karpara alone might have carried away his daughter the King ordered the guards of Karpara’s corpse to arrest anybody who approached the corpse and expressed grief. Ghata came to know of this secret order of the King. Next day evening Ghata posing himself as a drunkard and with a servant disguised as a woman walking in front and with another servant carrying rice mixed with chātāra (a poisonous fruit) following him came to the guards keeping watch over Karna’s body. Gātha gave the poisoned rice to the guards who after eating it swooned under the effect. Gātha used the opportunity to burn the corpse of Karna there itself. After that Gātha disappeared.

The King then deputed new guards to watch over the funeral pyre of Karna as he anticipated some one come to pick his charred bones from the pyre. But, Gātha put the guards into a swoon by a mantra he had learnt from a sanyāsin and went away with the charred bones of Gātha to death.

GHAṬAJĀNUKA. A sage who was a prominent member in Yudhishṭhira’s assembly. (Śalīkā Parva, Chapter 4).

Once, Śrī Kṛṣṇa, on his way to Hastināpura met this sage. (Udyogā Parva, Chapter 38).

GHAṬAKARPA. One of the nine great poets in Sanskrit reputed as the nine gems in Vikramādiśya’s court.

“Dhanvantari—Kṣapana Āmarasimha—Śaktu—Vṛttikāla-bhāṭa—Ghaṭakarpāra—Kālidāsa”. A poem of twenty-two verses in Sanskrit called Ghaṭakarpāra kavya is attributed to him. The theme of the poem is a message despached by the hero to his wife who has only recently been married. All the stanzas are in yamaka (repeating a word or set of words as a refrain) and each ending with the same meanings at the end of each line. By composing a poem called ‘Naldava’, Kālidāsa answered the challenge posed by Ghaṭakarpāra in the use of Yamaka. Ghaṭakarpāra answered Kālidāsa in the following stanza.

Eho hi doso gānasamipāte nimajjatinderni yā bahhare/śāman innān dṛṣṭam kavindir ātena yamaka yodhvare gānasamipāte.

(Kālidāsa, in verse 3, Gaitto I of Kumāranṭhāmbha had written: ‘Eho hi doso gānasamipāte nimitajatinderni yā bahhare/ śāman innān dṛṣṭam kavindir ātena yamaka yodhvare gānasamipāte.’)

“HAIṬKĀ. A measure of time equal to 24 minutes. Sixty vināṭikās make one Gaiṭkā. (See Kālamāna)."

GHAṬOTKACA

1) General. Ghaṭotkaca, son of Bhimasena played a very important part in the story of Mahābhārata. He was, from his very birth, a staunch friend and ally of the Pāṇḍavas. He coursed a hero’s death in the great war.

2) Birth. On the burning of the ‘sacred Palace’ the Pāṇḍavas escaped through a tunnel and reached a forest. While they were sleeping on the ground, Hīḍimba the Rākṣasa chief in the forest saw the Pāṇḍavas from the top of a tree, and he deputed his sister Hīḍimbī to bring over the Pāṇḍavas to him for food.

Hīḍimbī the Pāṇḍava fell in love with Bhima and she prayed for the return of his love, which Bhima, refused. Impatient at the delay Hīḍimba rushed towards the Pāṇḍavas, and in the duel that ensued between him and Bhima, he was killed by Bhima.

Then Hīḍimbī approached Kunti and requested her to ask Bhima to marry her. The Pāṇḍavas agreed to the proposal on condition that Bhima and Hīḍimbī should enjoy their honeymoon in the forest and on mountains, but Bhima should return to them at dusk everyday. Ghaṭotkaca was the son born to Bhima and Hīḍimbī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 155).

Indra bestowed on Ghaṭotkaca power sufficient to be a suitable opponent to Karna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 155, Verse 47).

Ghaṭotkaca grew up to become a good friend of the Pāṇḍavas. When Hīḍimbī and Ghaṭotkaca took leave of them Kunti said to Ghaṭotkaca: “You are the eldest son to the Pāṇḍavas. You should be ever a support to them.” To this Ghaṭotkaca answered that he would return to them whenever any need arose for it.

3) Carried the Pāṇḍavas on shoulders. During their exile in the forest the Pāṇḍavas became too tired to walk any further when Bhima remembered Ghaṭotkaca, who promptly appeared before the Pāṇḍavas, and at the instance of Bhima got down a number of Rākṣasas also. Ghaṭotkaca carrying Pāṇḍavas on his shoulders, and the Rākṣasas carrying the Pāṇḍava brothers on their shoulders went by air to Bādarikāśrama where Nārāyanaṇas were doing tapas, landed them there, and then they (Ghaṭotkaca and his companions) took leave of the Pāṇḍavas. (Vana Parva, Chapter 143).

4) Ghaṭotkaca in the great war. (1) In the first day’s fighting he fought against Alambusa, Duryodhana and Bhagadatta. Frightened at the terrible course of the fight the Kauravas purposely postponed that day’s fighting. (Bhīma Parva, Chapters 45, 57, 58).

(2) He defeated the King of Vaiṣṇa and killed his elephant. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 92, Verse 36).

(3) Defeated Vikarna (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 29, Verse 36).

(4) On receiving blows from the great Kaurava heroes, Ghaṭotkaca rose up to the sky. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 93, Verse 5).

(5) Ghaṭotkaca made the Kaurava army take to their heels by the exercise of his magic powers. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 41-47).

(6) Fought a duel with Durmukha. (Bhīma Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 13).

(7) Dhrishtāraja praised the prowess of Ghaṭotkaca. (Drona Parva, Chapter 19, Verse 62).

(8) He fought with Alāyudha. (Drona Parva, Chapter 96, Verse 27).

(9) Killed Alambusa. (Drona Parva, Chapter 109, Verse 28).

(10) Aśvatthāmā, son of Drona killed Aḥjana Parvī, son of Ghaṭotkaca, (Drona Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 96).

(11) Ghaṭotkaca fought with Karna. (Drona Parva, Chapter 175).

(12) He fought with Jātāsura. (Drona Parva, Chapter 174).

(13) He killed Alāyudha. (Drona Parva, Chapter 178, Verse 31).

(14) Karna clashed with Ghaṭotkaca and failing to kill him by any means Karna used Vaijayantī Sakti as the last resort. This Sakti had been given to him by Indra in exchange for his head-gar or earrings, and Karna had been keeping the Sakti in reserve to kill Arjuna. At any rate Karna used it against Ghaṭottakac and he was killed. After killing Ghaṭottakac, the Sārīt entered the sphere of the stars. (Drona Parva, Chapter 189).

5) Other Information

1) Ghaṭottakac hated the brahmans and their yajñas. (Drona Parva, Chapter 181, Verse 27).

2) When the souls of the heroes killed in the great war were called upon the banks of Ganga by Vyāsa, Ghaṭottakac's soul too had appeared. (Āraṇyaka Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 8).

3) After death he lived with Yaksadevas. (Svārgarohaṇa Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 27).

6) Synonyms of Ghaṭottakac and in Mahabhārata. Bhaiṣajya, Bhayana, Bhīmahāsūsā, Bhīmahāsūtaya, Bhīmahāsinī, Bhīmasūtaya, Bhīmasūtā, Bhīmishunu, Bhīmimilī, Rākṣasa, Rākṣasāsī, Rākṣasapūjī, Rākṣasapuṣṭa, Rākṣasapuṣṭa, Rākṣasapuṣṭa.

GHAṬOTKACAVADHAPARVA A sub Parva of Drona Parva. (Drona Parva, Chapter 153-156).

GHORA. A son of sage Aśvī. (Aṃśūkana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 161).

GHORAKA (M). Name of an urban region in the southwest of ancient India. The people of this region supplied money to Yudhiṣṭhira. (Sahā Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 14).

GHOSHĀ. A tapasvin famed in Rgyeda. She was the grand-daughter of Dṛgata mahārṣi and daughter of sage Kāśīvān. As she contracted leprosy in her very childhood nobody came forward to marry her. Ultimately she composed a mantra in praise of Śrīvīraides. They cured Ghoṣā of leprosy and she got married. (Rgyeda, Manḍala 1, Amiṣesṭika 7, Sākta 117).

GHOSAVATI. The famous Viṇa of emperor Udayana. (Kathāparīṣiṣṭa).

GHOSAYATRAPARVA. A sub-Parva, Chapters 236-251 of the Vana Parva. The procession made by Duryodhana and others to the Pāṇḍavas who lived in the forest forms the theme of this sub-Parva.

GHRĀKASVĀN. An attendant of Skanda. Always immersed in yoga he worked for the welfare of brahmans. (Sahā Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 57).

GHRṬĀ. A King of the Anga dynasty. He was the son of Gharman and father of Vīduṣa. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 277).

GHRṬĀC. A general. She was an exceptionally beautiful aparā woman, and she revolts in disturbing the peace of the sages and becoming mother of children by them. Ghrṭāč, who succeeded in breaking the penance of the sages like Kusuma, Vyāsa and Bharadvaja occupied a very prominent position among aparā women.

Rāja, the son of Vyāsa. Vyāsa longed very much to have a son. Ultimately, after receiving instruction and advice from Naraḍa, he reached the peaks of Mahāmeru and worshipped Mahādeva and Mahādevī for one year with the one-syllabled mantra OM which is the very seed of word. By now the great tejas (effulgence) of Vyāsa lighted up the whole world and Indra got nervous and upset. The great Lord Siva appeared on the scene and blessed Vyāsa that he will have a son who would become a very wise man, very much interested in helping others, and very famous also. Vyāsa returned gratified to his āśrama. One day, while in the process of preparing the sticks for producing fire, thoughts about a son passed through his mind. Fire is produced by the rubbing of two sticks. But, he thought, how could he who had no wife, become the father of a son? While immersed in such thoughts he saw Ghrṭāc standing near him, herself having come along the sky. Vyāsa did not like the presence of Ghrṭāc. Fearing the curse of Vyāsa she assumed the form of a parrot and flew away.

The beauty of Ghrṭāc as also the flight of the parrot kindled erotic feelings in Vyāsa and seminal emission occurred. The semen fell on the stick used for producing fire, and without knowing the fact he went on using the sticks for producing fire. And, then died appear from it a son of divine lustre. That son became reputed in later years as sage Nuka. (Devī Bhāgavata, Prathama Skandha).

5) Two children by Bharadvaja. Once sage Bharadvaja was taking his bath in the Ganga, Ghrṭāc also came to bathe. On the banks of the river her clothes caught something and were removed from their position. The sight of it caused seminal emission to the Sage. The semen thus emitted was kept in a Drona (bamboo cup) and when it was due the Drona broke and out a name a child. It was Vyāsa kid which, in later years, became so very famous as the great Dronaarya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 149). On another occasion also, the sight of Ghrṭāc caused emission in Bharadvaja, and Sruṭiavati or Sruṇavati was the noble daughter born out of it. (Sahā Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 63).

6) Other Information. (1) Once Ghrṭāc pleased Sage Aśāvakra, who introduced her into Kubera's assembly. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 15, Verse 44).

(2) Ghrṭāc danced at the birthday celebrations of Aśvī. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 52).

(3) A daughter called Ghrṭāgāda was born to Viśvakarmā by Ghrṭāc. (See under Viśvakarmā).

(4) A daughter called Devavati was born to Ghrṭāc. (See under Devavatī).

GHRṬAPASA A great sage who lived on ghee. A disciple of Brāhma he was an instructor of Sanskara Dharma. (Śaṇi Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 24).

GHRṬAPṚŚṬHA. A son of Priyavrata, brother of Uśānapāḍa. Svaṃbhuvamanu had two famous sons called Priyavrata and Uśānapāḍa. Priyavrata, the elder son, married two daughters of Viśvacakraprajapati called Surīpā and Barhismati, and of Surūpi were born ten sons called Aṅgirās, Iḍumāyā, Yaśohasti, Mahāvīra, Rukmaśukra, Ghrṭapṛśṭha, Savaṇa, Medhāthiti and Vibhṛota, and also one daughter called Uṛļaṇī. (Deviḥaṅgava, 8th Skandha).

GHRṬAVATI. An important river in India. (Bhīṣṇa Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 23).
GHRTEYU: A king born in the Agra dynasty. (Agni Parva, Chapter 277)

GHRYVAKA. Foster mother of Dwayavani, daughter of Sakrateya. (Ahi Parva, Chapter 78, Verse 25)

GILAM: It is the most ancient book of the Babylonians. It is as old as Egypt. Another book so old as this one is the "Book of the Dead" of the Egyptians. (See under Jalapraya)

GIRGAHVARA. A place of habitation on the northeastern side of Bharata. (Sloka 12, Chapter 9, Bhishma Parva)

GIRIKA Wife of Uparkaravasa. This gem of a lady was the daughter of the river Sukmati. There is a story behind her marrying Uparkarva.

Sukmati was a river flowing through the capital city of the kingdom of Uparkarva. Gautama, the sage, had a desire to seduce Sukmati. One morning when he was on his way to the city, a woman was feeding her son a banana. The Sage of the river, Sukmati, saw this and was captured by the divine longing of a mother's love. Gautama came to her and asked her to join him in his home. Sukmati agreed, and they lived together happily ever after.

When one Girikka was having her monthly period, the king was forced to go to the forests for hunting. While in the forest, he saw the animals having sexual acts and as he thought of Girikka at home, he had emission. He never wanted to waste the seminal fluid. He wrapped it in a leaf and sent it to his wife through a kite. Another kite was sent to the temple of the Sun and it fell into a river down below. A fish swallowed it and later when a fisherman caught it and opened its belly, a boy and a girl came out of it. The girl was Satyavati, mother of Lord Rama. (16th Skanda, Devi Bhagavata)

GIRNATHADIKOSITA. See under Gunadinshi.

GIRIRASTHNA. A mountain of the country of Nasadha.

1) A king once hid himself on this mountain. (Sloka 13, Chapter 315, Vana Parva)

GIRIVRACA. A city which has gained great importance in all the Puranas of India.

1) Origin: There was once a king named Kusa in the Pura dynasty. (For genealogy see under Gadhri). The Kusa begot of his wife, Vaides, four sons named Kishandhika, Kishandhika, Asvarajasa and Vasu. Each of them built a city of his own and ruled there. Thus Girivraca is the magnificient city built by Vasu (Sarga 32, Bala Kanda, Valmiki Ramayana).

2) Jarasandha's rule. Vasu had a son named Bhadradrika and Jarasandha was the son of Bhadradrika. During the rule of Jarasandha Girivraca became glorious like Nandavratva. This city lay in the midst of five mountains and was the seat of prosperity then. (Chapter 21, Sabha Parva) Jarasandha kept many mighty kings of his time, as prisoners in this city. Unable to control his wrath against Kausa, once he hurled his mace a hundred times and threw it from Girivraca to Mathur. Sri Kausa, Bhimaasena and Arjuna entered Girivraca in disguise and engaging Jarasandha in a duel killed him, and crowned his son as king. (Chapter 24, Sabha Parva). Once King Durnhimaru abandoned the gifts offered by the devas came and slept in Girivraca. (Sloka 39, Chapter 5, Anushasana Parva).

GIRTA. See under Bhagavat Git.

GITAPRIYA. A follower of Skandadeva. (Sloka 7, Chapter 46, Vana Parva)

GITAVIDIYADHARA. A great musician among the Gandharvas. When he found that sage Pulastya had no liking for music he teased the sage by making the sounds of a boat. The enraged sage cursed him and turned him into a boar. He got relief from the curse when Ikswaku killed him and Gitavidhyadhara became his old self again. (Chapter 46, Srshti Khand, Padma Purana)

GITYA. A king of the Bharata dynasty. (5th Skanda, Bhagavata)

GO. (GAU). A wife of sage Pulastya. Vaishnavana was born of her. The son left his father and went to Brahma. (Sloka 12, Chapter 274, Vana Parva)

GOBHAHANU. A king who was the grandson of Turvasu of the Pura dynasty and son of King Varga. Gobhanu had a son named Traikini. (Chapter 277, Agni Parva)

GODA. A follower of Skandadeva. (Sloka 29, Chapter 40, Vana Parva)

GODANA. In ancient India it was believed to be a very great deed of moral merit to give cows as gifts. If one buys cows with the hereditary wealth and gives them as gifts one would reach an ever prosperous world and even one who buys cows with the money received by gambling and gives them as gifts would live for several years enjoying prosperity. (Chapter 73, Anushasana Parva).

GODAVARI. A river of South India. This river has been glorified much in the Puranas.

1) Godavari is a member of the court of Varuna. (Sloka 20, Chapter 9, Sabha Parva)

2) This river originates from Brahmagiri, situated near Tryambakeshwar, in the district of Nashik, in central India. The river is very deep and is a giver of prosperity to those who worship her. Many sages worshipped this river. (Sloka 2, Chapter 88, Vana Parva).

3) It is said that if one bathes in this river one will get the benefit of conducting a Gandham yajna. Not only that, after his death he will go to the land of Vashiki. (Sloka 33, Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

4) The origin of Agni is from Godavari. (Sloka 24, Chapter 222, Vana Parva).

5) Sri Ram, Lakshmana and Sitdeva stayed for a long time during their exile in Parashuram on the shores of this river Godavari. (Valmiki Ramayana, Anaraya Kanda, Sarga 16).

6) Godavari is one of the most important rivers of India. (Sloka 14, Chapter 9, Bhima Parva).

7) He who bathes in Godavari will be prosperous. (Sloka 29, Chapter 25, Anushasana Parva).

GODHA. A village in the north-east part of ancient India. (Sloka 42, Chapter 5, Bhima Parva)

GODILA I. A Samavedantri. By his curse Utadhya became a dune and later became famous as Satyatapas. (For details see under Satyatapas)

GODILA II. A servant of Vaishnavana. Once when Godala was travelling by air he saw Padmavati, wife of Ugrasena, King of Vedarth, bathing in a pond along with her companions. The very sight of the enchanting Padmavati roused carnal passions in him and the Yakṣa took the form of Ugrasena and started singing from the top of a hill near by. Padmavati went to him because she mistook him for her husband. Embracing her passionately the Yakṣa outraged her modesty. Sudden differences in the act created doubts in Padmavati's mind and on being questioned, the Yakṣa told the truth and left the place. (Chapter 49, Padma Purāṇa).

GOHARANAPARVA. A sub-divisional Parva of Mahabhārata. See under 'Mahabhārata'.

GOHAIYA. In ancient India killing of cows was considered to be a great sin. It is interesting to note the punishment prescribed for this crime in the Agni Purāṇa. For one month he should drink barley water only. He should live in a cow-shed wearing the hide of the cow he had killed. He can have some supper and that too without salt. He must bathe for two months in cow's urine. During dark time he should follow the cows looking after their comfort. He should drink the menstrual discharge with his face lifted upwards. Fasting, he should give away as charity ten cows and a bull. If not, he should give as charity all his wealth to god-fearing brahmans. If a man only stops the cow for others to kill he should bear a fourth of the punishment, if he stops and ties it for killing he should bear half of the punishment and if he stops it, ties it and gives the weapon for killing he should bear three-fourths of the punishment.

GOKHALI. One of the disciples in the tradition of Vyāsa. He was the direct disciple of Śākaśya. Śākaśya divided the branch of Veda he received into six and gave one to each of the following six disciples: Vāgāvata, Maudgalya, Sūrya, Āditya, Gokhali, and Yakṣaka. (Skanda 12, Bhāgavata).

GOHARANAPARVA. See under Gokarna.

GOKARNA. An incarnation of Śiva. In the seventh Varāha-kalpa Śiva was born as Gokarna and he then got four sons named, Kaśyapa, Utkala, Cakravata and Belapati. (Sataruṣaśrambhā, Siva Purāṇa).

GOKARNA. In the great battle Karna sent a serpent-missile against Arjuna. The serpent named Asvaseṇa was the power behind the missile and Gokarṇa was the minder of that serpent. (Śloka 42, Chapter 39, Karna Parva).

GOKARNA. A sacred place of Purānic importance situated on the extreme north of Keral. (1) Orīr. There was once on the banks of the river, Tuśigādhra, a village made sacred and prosperous by the brahmans who lived there. In that village lived a noble brahmin named Ātmadeva. His wife was a quarrelsome woman named Dhumahuli. Even after many years of married life they got no children and Ātmadeva, greatly grieved, stricken, left his home and went to the forests. He was sitting on the shore of a lake after quenching his thirst from it when a Sannyāsin came that way Ātmadeva told him about his domestic life and pleaded that he should suggest a way to get a son for him. The Sannyāsin sat in meditation for some time and contemplated on the horoscope of Ātmadeva and regrettfully informed him that according to his horoscope he was to have no children for seven successive births. He, therefore, advised Ātmadeva to abandon all his worldly pleasures and accept sannyāsa for the rest of his life. But Ātmadeva was not to be discouraged by this prophecy and he urged the Sannyāsin to help him somehow to get a child. The Sannyāsin then gave him a fruit and asked him to give it to his wife and asked her to observe a life of fasting for a period of one year. Greatly pleased with this boon, Ātmadeva returned to his house and to his wife all that had happened and gave her the fruit. She liked to eat the fruit but a year's fasting seemed too onerous to her. She was thinking of how to get over this difficulty when her younger sister came to her and suggested a plan. She said, 'Sister, I am pregnant. I shall give you the child I deliver. You can declare it as your child and make your husband believe so. You can announce in public that you have eaten the fruit and have consequently become pregnant. We can, to test its merit, give the fruit to a cow.' Dhumahuli liked the plan very much and so did everything like that.

The news that Dhumahuli was pregnant spread in the city. Very soon her sister gave birth to a child and that child was proclaimed as the child of Dhumahuli. On the priest that Dhumahuli was short of breast-milk her sister started doing the breast-fasting. The child was named Dhumahuli. After three months the cow that ate the fruit delivered a child. The ear of the child was like that of a cow and so he was called Gokarna. Dhumahuli and Gokarna grew together. Dhumahuli became a very cute boy and while Gokarna grew into a scholarly one. Dhumahuli who was the very seat of everything had made the life of their parents wretched and the disappointed Ātmadeva renounced all and went to the forests and did penance and attained moksa. Unable to bear the torture by her son, Dhumahuli committed suicide by jumping into a well. Gokarna started on a pilgrimage.

Dhumahuli lived in his own house surrounded by prostitutes. Thieving was his only means of livelihood. Knowing this the servants of the king started to capture Dhumahuli and the prostitutes who lived with him, for their safety, bound Dhumahuli with ropes and put him into fire and killed him. The soul of Dhumahuli became a great phantom. Hearing the news of the death of his brother, Gokarna returned home. He conducted a śraddha at Gayā to give peace to the soul of his departed brother. But the phantom of Dhumahuli was not pacified. This phantom troubled him always. Gokarna was not afraid of it and asked him what he wanted and the phantom pleaded that in some way Gokarna should get him absolved of all his sins. Gokarna then consulted Pandits to know what method should be adopted to save a soul which could not be saved even by a Gayā-Śraddha. The Pandits advised him to do penance to propitiate the Sun. The Sun who appeared before Gokarna as a result of his penance declared that if he did read the entire Bhāgavata in seven days Dhumahuli would get moksa. So Gokarna performed a Saptaha and among those who assembled to hear it was the phantom of Dhumahuli who also the phantom finding no place to sit crept into a seven-flavored bamboo and sat there listening to Gokarna. When the first day was over the first layer broke and it went on like that every day and on the seventh day the seventh layer broke and when Gokarna finished the twelfth Skandha the phantom rose from the bhoobhi to heaven. When it was going to heaven it looked at Gokarna and told him that his moksa was due to the result of his hearing the sappha reading. When Gokarna asked him why none of the others who heard it got it he said that it was because none had heard it with such rapt attention as he had done.

Gokarna then conducted another reading of Saptah and the people present heard the same with rapt attention. When the reading was over, a chariot of Vigna from Vaikuntha descended and carried away all those who heard the reading. The place where Gokarna sat and read the Saptah became known later as the famous Gokarna. (Chapters 1 to 3, Bīgavatī Mahātmya).

2) Mitrasa and Gokarna. A King of Ayodhīya named Mitrasa who became famous by the name of Valmikapāda, became a demon by a curse of Vastīya. He attained moksa by living and worshipping God in the temple at Gokarna. (See under Sivamāra for details).

3) Gokarna and the origin of Keralas. Brahmānand Purāṇa gives a story associating Gokarna with the origin of Keralas. By the request of Bhairava the river Gaṅgā fell on earth and flowing as different brooks emptied its waters in the ocean. The level of the water in the ocean went up and the temple of Gokarna and the land of Keralas were submerged in waters. The sages who were in the temple somehow escaped and took refuge on the mountain Saliya. Parasurāma was doing penance there then and the sages went to him and told him of their plight. Parasurāma went and stood in Gokarna and threw an axe to the south. All the land from Gokarna up to the place where the axe fell rose up from the ocean to form a piece of land which was named Kerala. (Chapter 97 of Brahmānanda Purāṇa).

4) Other Purāṇa details regarding Gokarna. i) Bhāgavatī did penance to bring Gaṅgadevi to Earth at Gokarna. (Sarga 12, Chapter 42, Bāla Kānda, Valmikī Ramayana).

ii) The serpent named Śeṣa spent much time living here. (Chapter 36, Sloka 3, Ardī Parva).

iii) Arjuna visited Gokarna while he was on his pilgrimage. (Śloka 34, Chapter 26, Ardī Parva).

iv) Gokarna was one of the abodes of Siva. Brahmā, Mahārīsa, Bhūtas and Yakṣas used to stay at Gokarna to worship Śiva. (Śloka 24, Chapter 85, Vana Parva).

v) The holy place of Gokarna is renowned in all the three worlds. (Śloka 15, Chapter 88, Vana Parva).

vi) Gokarna is a tapovana also. (Śloka 51, Chapter 6, Bhīma Parva).

vii) Śrī Kṛṣṇa, Arjuna and Pradyumna together killed Nīkumbha, who had kidnapped Bhānumati, at Gokarna. (Chapter 90, Vigna Purāṇa).

GOKARN. A follower of Skandadeva. (M.B. Śāliya Parva, Chapter 90; Śloka 42).

GOLAKI. The mother of an Asura named Madhupa. This woman was born from the face of Brahmā in Kṛitayoga. (Uttara Ramāvāna).

GOLOKA. A divine world. Mostly cows live in this world which is above all the other worlds. Surabhi, daughter of Dakṣa, acquired great powers by doing rigorous penance in this world. Pandits say that Goloka is the upper lip, Brahmāloka, the lower lip of Mahāvīra. (M.B. Śāliya Parva, Chapter 347, Śloka 52).

GOMANTA I. A famous mountain near Dvārakā. This mountain is known as Goma and Raivata also. Once Śrī Kṛṣṇa went to see Gomanta and on the way met Parashurāma. (Skandha 10, Bhīgavatī). Parāśurāma and Śrī Kṛṣṇa went together and saw this beautiful mountain. Vaiṣṇava has devoted Chapter 40 of Vigna Parva entirely for the description of this mountain of Gomanta. Once Balabhaṭṭarāma caught hold of Jārāsandha on this mountain but let him off.

GOMANTA II. A place of habitation lying to the north-east of ancient India. (Śloka 43, Chapter 9, Bhīma Parva).

GOMANTA III. A mountain of the island of Kuśa. (Śloka 8, Chapter 12, Bhīma Parva).

GOMATI. (KAUŚIKI). A celebrated river of Purāṇic fame. This is worshipped as a goddess.

1) The curse. Kampa Rāmāyaṇa states that this river was Kauśikī, sister of Viśvāmitra. She became a river by a curse.

Kauśikī was married to a sage called Reka. Once Reka went to devolaka to see Brahmā. Kauśikī unable to bear the separation followed her husband by her power of chastity. On the way Reka saw her and cursed her and made her into a river. From that day onwards she started running as a river named Kauśikī. (Bāla Kānda, Valmikī Rāmāvāna).

2) Other details from the Purāṇas regarding Gomati. i) Śrī Rāma conducted the Āsvamedha yogā at Naima-darśana on the banks of this river. (Uttara Rāmāvāna).

ii) The sins of those who drink the water of this river are washed away. (Śloka 20, Chapter 169, Ardī Parva).

iii) The devi of Gomati river lives in the court of Varuna worshipping him. (Śloka 23, Chapter 9, Sābhā Parva).

iv) Dharmaputra came to this river during his pilgrimage. (Śloka 2, Chapter 93, Vana Parva).

v) Gomati is the wife of Agnideva called Vīva-bhūk. (Śloka 19, Chapter 219, Vana Parva).

vi) This is one of the most important rivers of Bhārata-varsa. (Śloka 18, Chapter 9, Bhīma Parva).

vii) The land of Divodāsa, King of Ayodhyā, extended from the shores of Gaṅgā to the base of Gomati. (Brahmānanda Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

GOMATIMANTRA. A mantra for obtaining blessings from cows. If one recites this mantra standing in the midst of cows one would get many children and great wealth and if it is recited by a woman she would get the affection and love of her husband. (Śloka 42, Chapter 81, Anuśāsana Parva, M.B.).

GOMEDA. See under Navaratna.

GOUKHA I. A notorious King. He was born of the family of Krodhavāsā. (Śloka 63, Chapter 67, Ardī Parva).

GOMUKHA II. An asura who war a follower of an asura called Śrāpadana. (Asura Kanda, Skandha Parva).

GOMUKHA III. Son of Mātali, charioteer of Indra. (Śloka 8, Chapter 100, Udyoga Parva).

GONANDA. A soldier of Skandadeva. (Śloka 65, Chapter 43, Śāliya Parva).
GOPALAKA. A son born to Gandamahāsena of his wife Angaravati. Besides Gopalaka he had another son named Pilaka. (Kathāśaritāgāra; Kathāmukha-lambaka, Taranā 3).

GOPALI. I. A nymph. Once when Arjuna went to devakāla this celestial maiden gave a performance in dancing in his honour. (Chapter 43, Vana Parva).

GOPALI II. A follower of Skandadeva. (Sloka 4, Chapter 46, Śalva Parva).

GOPARĀŚṬRA. A place of habitation in the north-east part of ancient India. (Sloka 44, Chapter 9, Bhīśma Parva).

GOPATI I. A demon. He was a co-worker of another demon named Kālaketu. Śrī Kṛṣṇa killed Gopati on the banks of the river śrīvarā on the mountain Mahendra. (Chapter 39, Śabha Parva).

GOPATI II. A deva gandharva. He was born to Kāśyapa of his wife Muni. (Sloka 42, Chapter 65, Vana Parva). This gandharva participated in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Sloka 35, Chapter 122, Adi Parva).

GOPATI III. A son of the celebrated emperor, Śibi. When Parasurāma killed and made extinct all Kṣatriya kings it was a herd of cows that brought up this child. (Sloka 78, Chapter 49, Śānti Parva).

GOPATI IV. A synonym of Śiva used in Sloka 151, Chapter 17 of Anuśāsa Parva.

GOPATI V. A synonym of Viṣṇu used in Sloka 66, Chapter 149, of Anuśāsa Parva.

GOPAYANA. The army of Gopas. (Sloka 13, Chapter 71, Bhīśma Parva).

GOPIKKURI. See under Īrdāvābunda.

GOPTĀTARA. A place on the northern bank of the river, Sārayu. Śrī Kṛṣṇa with his two armies and vehicles ascended to heaven from this place. (Sloka 10, Chapter 83, Mahābhārata).

GORĀṬHA. The palace of Magadha. This palace was situated on a mountain near Giriḍīvaraja. (Sloka 30, Chapter 20, Śabha Parva).

GOSAYA. A mahāyajna. (Sloka 17, Chapter 30, Vana Parva).

GOSIKA. An important mountain of South India. Sahadeva captured this mountain. (Sloka 3, Chapter 31, Śabha Parva).

GOSTANI. A follower of Skandadeva. (Sloka 3, Chapter 46, Śalva Parva).

GOTA. A sage named Gota, son of Raṇagana, is found everywhere in Rgveda. The seventh-fourth sūkta in the thirteenth anuvāka of the first manadala of Rgveda is composed by this sage. There are many other sūktas also in his name. This sage is not the Gautama, husband of Ṭhārya, who made Sūkta 18, Anuvāka 11, and Mandala 1 of Rgveda. Once this Gota tired of thirst asked the Maruts for some water. The Maruts took a huge well to his side and poured water into a big pot. (Sūktas 86, 87, Anuvāka 14, Mandala 1, Rgveda). It was Alvindevas who took the well to Gota. (Sūkta 116, Anuvāka 17, Mandala 1, Rgveda).

GOTIRTHA. A holy place. The Pandavas visited this place during their pilgrimage. (Sloka 3, Chapter 95, Vana Parva).

GOTRA. A son of Vasiṣṭha. Vasiṣṭha had of his wife Uṣṣā seven sons named Rajas, Gotra, Utḍhvābā, Savana, Anagha, Śrutapās and Śrakas. These holy men were saptarṣis in the third Manvantara. (Chapter 1, Viṣṇu Purāṇa).

GOVARDHANA. A mountain of Amābibī (Gokula). This is believed to be a form of Kṛṣṇa. This is called Giriṣṭāla also. The residents of Amābibī from time immemorial used to worship Indra for getting rains. But after the advent of Kṛṣṇa there came a change in that belief. Kṛṣṇa told them that rains depended on Govardhana and it was enough if they worshipped that mountain and so the residents of Amābibī started worshipping the mountain. Indra got enraged at this and sent heavy rains to Amābibī intending to submerge it in water. But Śrī Kṛṣṇa lifted the mountain over Amābibī like an umbrella and saved the city from the wrath of Indra. See under ‘Kṛṣṇa’ for more details. (Daśāna Skandha, Bhāgavata).

GOVĀSANA. A King of the country called Śivī. The daughter of this King, Devīkā, married Yudhisṭhira in a swayamvara. Once Govāsana met in a duel the son of Abhībha, King of Kāśi. (Sloka 38, Chapter 95, Droṇa Parva).

GOVĀSANA (M). A country of ancient India. The people of this place presented Yudhisṭhira with much wealth. (Sloka 5, Chapter 51, Śabha Parva).

GOVIRKARTA. The man who puts nose-rings on bullocks. (Sūkt 9, Chapter 2, Viṣṇu Parva).

GOVINDA. A synonym of Kṛṣṇa (Mahāvyūha). He got this name because he saved the people and cows of Amābibī by lifting the Govardhana mountain and using it as an umbrella. (Dukṣṇāyī pātha Chapter 38, Śabha Parva).

GOVINDADATTAA. A brahmin of great fame who resided in Bāhuvarjanaka, a city on the banks of the river Gaṅgā. His wife was a very pious woman. They had five children. Once when both the parents were away from the house a sage called Vaśāvarana came there but the children did not receive him and treat him properly. Knowing this Govindadatta abandoned all his children. (Kathāśaritāgāra, Kathāpithālambaka).

GOVINDAGIRI. A mountain of Kuṇacandvipa. (Sloka 19, Chapter 12, Bhīśma Parva).

GOVINDASARMAN. A brahmin who lived in olden times in the city of Kāśī. (See under Sivaśālāvaya).

GOVITATA. A peculiar kind of horse sacrifice. Sage Kauna once made his grand-offering, Bharata, conduct a sacrifice of this kind. (Sloka 130, Chapter 74, Adi Parva).

GOVRAJA. A soldier of Skandadeva. (Sloka 66, Chapter 45, Śalva Parva).

GRAHAS (PLANETS). Indians from very ancient days have maintained certain definite ideas and inferences about the planets. Though these ideas differ somewhat from modern researches, the influence of the ancient ideas is discernible in all the Purānic texts in India. The main ideas are summarised below.

Śūrya (Sun), Candra (Moon), Śrīka (Venus), Budha (Mercury), Kuja (Mars), Bhārapatī (Jupiter), Sani (Saturn), Rāhu and Ketu are the navagrahas (the nine planets).

Śūrya, candra bhārapatī /
Śrīka, sani, sāruvar rāhu /
Ketu, sace ṣevatā navagrahas /
Besides the above nine planets, Indian astronomers take into account a starry sphere in the sky called Sapta or the sun called Dhvani.

1) Surya: The sun gives light to all the other planets. It has an area of 90 crore yojanas and its distance from the earth is 22 crore yojanas. Surya exists within the universe, and is called also Manuanda as it originated from dead (pitta) egg (anda). Surya divides the sky, heaven, hell, the earth, east, west, north, south etc. from one another. Also Surya is the source of life. Surya traverses three periods of time or 'seasons' like uttarayana, daksinayana and dusvatv are caused. Five months from May is the uttarayana period, five months from November the daksinayana period, and the months of April and October are the dusvatv. Since during the uttarayana the sun rises up comparatively slowly (mandagati), during this period the day is longer than night. As in daksinayana the course of the sun is quicker in pace (aghnavati), night is longer than day, and during dusvatv (samagati) day and night are of equal duration.

The other planets have three positions called Janadgava, Anivata and Vastavanara; the first locating the central position of the northern hemisphere, and the third the southern position. Nine stars, Avilin, Vahu, Kurika, Rohni, M-Agenta, Antara, Parvasus and Pusha occupies the Anivata Avilin (northern position or segment). Another nine stars, Magha, Pusha Pratap, Uttara Pratap, Antara Pratap, Anti Pratap, Vriledhi and Jyestha occupy the central position, and the last nine stars, Maha, Purvadhi and Pravamalaya, Vriledhi and Jyestha, Uttara Pratap and Revati occupy the southern position.

In the east, west, north and south of Mount Mahabhera exist Devadhanik (Indrapuri) Samayana (Yamapuri) Kumbhakar (Varunapuri) and Vihabhar (Kuberapuri) respectively. When Surya appears in Devadhanik it will be day, when travelled to Samayana it will be noon, when it is in Kumbhakar it will be sunset and when it is in Vihabhar it will be midnight. This is how Surya circles the Mahabhera. Within 15 nadhika (6 hours) the sun travels 2 1/4 crores plus 2 1/4 lakhs of yojanas. Surya's chariot has one wheel and twelve spokes. The wheel represents a year and the twelve spokes stand for the twelve months of the year. The chariot has also three nakshatras representing the three quadrants, and six bands representing the six seasons. The height of the chariot is 36 lakhs yojanas and it has a width of 8 yojanas made. Arunadeva is the charioteer, and the seven chandras are the horses. The seven chandras are Gaiyari, Belati, Usuk, Jaljali, Tavishali, Antadev and Pushaki.

Night is called Ush, and day Vatra and the time in between is called Samudra. When Samudra begins the terrible Rakshas called Madhushas attempts to consume Surya. They have been granted the boon that everyday they will be d Swimming though they may not be losing their bodies. So everyday they raise a fierce fight between them and Surya. When the fight is on, while brahmians throw the hot water salute by Gaiyari mantra with the 'Oum'. The water turns into Vriledhi and burns the Rakshas to ashes. The first offering in Agnisthara is made with the invocation of the mantra beginning 'Surya jyoti' because of which the sun is able to shine with thousands of rays with the result that the Rakshas are burned to death. The Rakshas who number more than 60,000 form Surya's body-guard. (See under Surya for Puranic stories about him.)

2) Candra (The Moon). Candra exists at one lakh yojanas away from Surya, and it revolves round the earth. A candra month of twenty-two days is divided into twelve rashi (houses) viz. Simha (Leo), Kanya (Virgo), Tula (Libra), Kumbha (Scorpio), Makara (Capricorn), Mina (Pisces) Mula (Aries), Vrischika (Sagittarius), Dhanu (Aries), Karkatuka (Cancer). Every month Candra stays in each of the above houses only for 2 1/4 days.

The full moon makes Pitru happy, divides the month into two halves, Kanya Paksasa (the dark fortnight) and Sukla Paksha (the bright fortnight), and furnishes as the very life and soul of cattle. The twenty-seven stars from Advin to Revati are the wives of Candra. There is another view that Candra has twenty-eight wives including another star called Abhijit. Candra has another name, Saraswati. Candra with his pleasuring rays, as sweet as Amrita (Nectar) bestows happiness on darkness, Pitrus and all other living beings. So he is called Sarveswari.

Candra's chariot has three wheels. Ten beautiful horses white as jasmine flowers draw the chariot. These horses also like those of Surya live for aKalpa era. Because the Devas drink its nectar, Candra enters into one of the Kalas. Then Surya makes him wax again with his own nectar. Candra's horses are Pitru, Surya and when only two of his mounts Candra enters the orbit of Surya and stays there in the ray called 'amal', and that day, therefore is called amavasya. And on that day Candra enters waters for the first time, and after that dwells in trees, creepers etc. While Candra is thus in trees, etc. those who cut them will be committing the sin of brahmahatya (slaughter of a brahmin). When only a little of the 15th Kala remains on new moon day, the horses of Pitru gather round the enchanted Candra to drink him, and they drink the amrita kala, one of the two Kalas still remaining with him. Thus the three classes of Pitru, Barhisadat, Saumya and Apati Vaya get absolutely satisfied for one month. Thus Candra nurtures Devas in the Sukla Paksa and pitra in Kresna Paksa, and grows trees, creepers etc with life-giving water. (For details see under Gandra.)

3) Sukra (Venus). Sukra is an auspicious Deva very much interested in doing good to the world and making people happy. His course is also, like that of Surya, of three types, intense (quick), slow and of equal pace. Two-and-a-half yojanas above Surya, Sukra follows a course alternating in front of and behind Surya. Sukra never goes very far away from Surya, and he possesses a big chariot drawn by horses from earth. (For details see under Sukra.)

4) Budha (Mercury). Though inherently auspicious Budha, in contact with inauspicious planets takes their character and becomes weak. Budha also has the three pieces, quick, slow and medium. Budha moves close to Surya and if he moves from Surya storms, failure of rain, etc. will be the result. He is considered to be the son of Candra. His chariot is made of wind and fire, golden in colour and is drawn by eight horses having the speed of wind. (See under Budha for more details.)
5) Kuja (Mars). Kuja is two lakhs of yojanas above Budha, and remains in every rasi (house) more or less for 45 days. When the position is affected it causes inauspicious experiences to living beings. The chariot of Kuja is made of gold, glittering and of huge size. Eight horses born from Agni draw the chariot.

6) Bhraspati (Jupiter). Jupiter travels 2 lakhs of yojanas away from Kuja’s sphere. Though it is an auspicious planet its reverse course is productive of evil results. Jupiter travels for twelve months in every rasi (house). His golden chariot is drawn by eight white horses.

7) Sani (Saturn). Sani is 2 lakhs of yojanas away from Jupiter’s sphere, and it stays in every house for twenty months. As it moves only slowly it is called Samvatsara also. Sani is considered to be the son of Surya. It is an inauspicious planet. His chariot is drawn by multi-coloured horses born in the sky.

8) Rahu. His ash-coloured chariot is drawn by eight horses as dark as beetles. Once the horses are harrowed to the chariot it will always be running. On full moon days Rahu starts from Surya and reaches Candra and returns to Surya on new moon days. It is an inauspicious planet. (For details see under Rahu).

9) Ketu. His chariot is drawn by eight horses, which have the speed of wind. It is also an inauspicious planet.

10) Saptarishi. Thirteen crores of yojanas away from the zone of Sani exists the Saptarishi zone. Seven maharasis are incessantly on the move in that sphere, wishing all that is well for the whole world. (See Saptarishi).

11) Dhruva. Thirteen crores of yojanas away from the saptarishimandala there is a place called Vinaapada. Dhruva, son of Utanasipada lives there in the company of Incira, Agni, Kaiyapa, Dharna and others. The Dhruvavanapada remains there stationary like the supporting pillar of all the planets ever on the move. (See Dhruva; Devibhagavata 8th Skandha; Visnu Purana, Part II).

Astrologers aver that living beings pass through the periods and positions of the following planets, viz. Ketu, Budha (Mira), Candra (Moon), Kuja (Mars), Rahu, Bhraspati (Jupiter), Sani (Saturn) and Budha (Mercury). The following table shows how people born under different stars pass through the different daśās. The order of succession of the daśās and the period of each daśā can also be seen from this table.

1. To find out your daśā at the time of birth, please see the above table. Any one born under any of the stars is considered born in the daśā shown in the right hand side against that star. e.g. People born under (Aīvuk) Atvind, Mārgaṅgā and Māla are born into the Ketu daśā. So with the other stars also as shown in the above table. To calculate how long the daśā into which a particular person is born will last requires some astrological skill; also the exact time of birth should be known. A star remains dominant for about 14 years. But the man will get only the last quarter of it, namely about 3.5 years. After that he will pass into the next daśā Sutramandāla.
fish etc. should be offered to this planet, and the child smeared with a paste of goat-horn, roots of the vitāyala plant, back of pinchott (Tāva) manayola and haritaśa. Pīgala (female planet) attacks the child on the sixth night. Starling, fainting, falling, frequently from sleep and crying until loss of appetite and turning the body round and round are the chief symptoms of the attack. In the case with fish etc. is called for. The child is also to be exposed to the fumes produced by the burning of dried tamarind, gugulū, Kottam and elephant’s foot.

Mukēkuti (female planet) attacks the child on the seventh night. Bad odour, yawning, weakening of body and cough from the main symptoms of the attack. Exposure to fumes produced by burning leopards’ teeth and the smearing of the body with a paste made of jackfruit and cow’s dung and urine should also be done.

Sādāga (female planet) attacks the child on the eighth night. Wandering of the eyes, crying and also making a backing pace and quick movements of the tongue are the main symptoms. Bali with fish etc. and smearing the body with a paste of arita root, mustard seed and garlic are the treatment for the attack.

The terrible female planet, Urdhivāgagā attacks the child on the ninth night. Starling, breathing out alone and hitting the face of both hands on the head are the chief symptoms of the attack. Smearing the body with a paste of red sandalwood, Cactus species etc. and exposure to fumes produced by burning the hairs and nail of the monkey are remedies for the illness.

Redani attacks the child on the tenth night. Incessant crying and bodily fragrance and blue colour are the main symptoms of the attack. Exposure to fumes produced by burning marjoram leaves and application of a paste made of arita root, tamarind are good remedies. Bali should be offered with dried parfley, flesh and barley rice. For the tenth day from its birth the child should be treated in the above manner.

A terrible female planet called Patañja attacks the child when it is one month old. Crying like the crow, frequent breathing, smell of urine on the body and reddening of the eyes are the chief symptoms of the attack. Remedies thereof are as follows: bathing in cow’s urine and exposure to the fumes got by burning cow’s teeth, bali to be offered with yellow clothes, red flower, red sandalwood, lamps lighted, three varieties of pāvava (pudging), liquor, gingerly seeds and flesh. Bali with the above materials should be offered for seven days under an ‘Ung’ tree on the southern side.

Mukūna (female planet) attacks the child two months old. Coldness of the body, vomiting, parching of mouth etc. are the chief symptoms. Remedy for the attack is offering of bali with flower, Sandalwood, clothes and bread (all black in colour) and lighting of lamps and burning.

Gomukhi attacks the child, in the third month. Abnormal sleep, excessive urination etc. are the main symptoms of the attack. Bali in the morning with barley, flesh, milk, rice etc. and exposure to the fumes of ghee at noon are the treatment for the illness. To bathe the child in water boiled with the leaves of five trees is also good.

Pūgala attacks the child, when it is four months old. Excessive coldness of body, bad odour and emanation of body are the main signs of the attack. Pūgala’s attack often proves fatal. During the fifth month the planet Lañāṇa attacks the child. Weakness, blood coming out of the mouth, and excretion yellow in colour are the main symptoms of the attack. Bali with fish etc. on the southern side of the house is the treatment for it.

Pankāja attacks the child during the sixth month. Various kinds of awkward movements, crying in awkward and peculiar voice are the main symptoms of the attack. Offerings of liquor, fish, flesh, rice, flowers etc. will cure the illness.

During the seventh month Nirākāra attacks the child. Bad odour, toothache etc. are the main symptoms. Bali with fish, flesh etc. is the cure.

Yamāṇa attacks the child during the eighth month. Skin eruptions etc. are the chief symptoms. No special treatment is required for this.

During the ninth month Kumbhakarni attacks the child. Fever, vomiting and abnormal crying form the chief symptoms. Bali with flesh and liquor is the cure for it.

Tapaśa attacks the child during the tenth month. Refusing to eat food and rolling of the eyes-balls form the main symptoms. Bali on level ground with flesh etc. is the remedy for it.

During the eleventh month Rākṣasi attacks the child. No treatment is called for.

Caṅkāra attacks the child during the twelfth month. Breathing problems, palpitation etc. are the main symptoms. Bali during the first half of the day with Kalmāṣa etc. is the remedy.

During the second year of its life the child is attacked by Rodani. Shivering of the body, crying and emission of blood and urine form the main symptoms. In such cases bali should be offered with puding of molasses and gingerly seeds made into small balls. Also an idol should be made of gingerly seeds and it should be bathed in gingerly water. The child should further be exposed to the fumes got by burning the leaves of five trees.

Caṅkā (female planet) attacks the child during the fourth year. Fever, swellings, and weakness of limbs are the main symptoms. Bali with fish, flesh, gingerly seeds and also fuming form the treatment.

Pañcāra attacks the child when it is five years old. Fever, weakness of limbs are the symptoms. Bali with flesh, rice, etc. and fuming with the excretion of sheep form the treatment. Bathing in water boiled with leaves of jack fruit tree, peepal tree etc. is also good.

Dhāvāra attacks the child when it is six years old. Thinning of face, tastelessness of mouth and weakness of limbs are the main symptoms in such cases. Bali for seven days with the above-mentioned things and bathing in kanjumon (Bhrigurāga creeper) water are the treatment.

Yavanā attacks the child in the seventh year. Speechlessness, vomiting, laughing and crying for no apparent reason form the symptoms. Bali with liquor, flesh, pudding etc. and fuming and bathing form the treatment.

Jātaveda attacks the child in the eighth year. The child refuses food and cries. Bali with cooked gingelly, gingelly bread and curds, and bathing and fuming form the treatment.

Kālla (Kālī) attacks the child during the ninth year. Feelings of fear, roaring etc. are the symptoms. Bali with gingelly rice, gingelly bread, gingelly powder, Kalmāsa and pudding form the treatment.

Kalahanati attacks the child during the tenth year. Fever, burning sensation and emaciation are the symptoms. Bali for five days with breal called Paudik and rice mixed with ghee, exposure to fumes of morgan leaf and smoking the body with a paste of Kolanum form the treatment.

Devabbātu attacks the child when it is eleven years old. Then he will utter harsh and cruel words. Bali and smearing as above form the treatment.

Valika attacks the child in the 12th year. Frequent hiccoughs is the symptom. Treatment is the same as above.

Vāyasi attacks the child when it is 13 years old. All the limbs except the face get emaciated. Treatment is as follows: Bali with red rice, red sandal-wood and red flowers; bath in water boiled with the leaves of five trees; and exposure to the fumes of morgan and mustard.

Vāskā attacks the child when it is fourteen years old. Awkward physical expressions, stomach-ache, fever and thirst are the symptoms. Bali with flesh, rice etc. and bathing etc. as above form the treatment.

Mundikā attacks the child when it is fifteen years old. Various kinds of pains, bleeding etc. are the symptoms. The mothers of the child are to be treated for this.

Vānasī attacks the child during the 16th year. Falling down, continuous sleep and fever are the symptoms. Bali during three nights with pudding etc. and bathing and fuming as above form the treatment.

Gandhavatī attacks the child during the seventeenth year. Agitation of limbs and crying are the symptoms. Bali with Kalmāsa etc. and bathing and fuming as above form the treatment.

The following mantra should be repeated in all baishagīs.

Om namah sarva-pâtānasamyojan khalaja bhañja cūta suṣṭha phoṣṭha phoṣṭha sūrē phoṣṭha svābhāma khalaja ākajñya ákṣājya kāśyapā jāyapā hari hari nirdOSE kuru kuru bākālakā bālā-sūtram purusām vedagānayam-puram. Saumya-devas devāya bruṁ bruṁ hrīn āpānār durgābhirām tadyathā gacchantu gṛhaya- tām anyatra panthānum rudra jāyapatī. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 299).

GRĀMĀDEVAṬĀ. India is predominantly a rural country with a number of villages, and the rural folk depend mainly upon agriculture for living. Agricultural land, rain and epidemics which affect them as well as their cattle—these are the main concern of the villagers. Indians, from very ancient days, used to believe that each of the above has its own presiding devatas. Such devatas are the grāmādevatās.

Devī is the chief grāmādevatā of South India. Devī is called Durgā and Kālī also. But, Devī is worshipped in sixty-four different forms or aspects. The gentle Devī, viz. in her gentle aspect or attitude has three forms, Kālī, Kāṇakā, and Mukkāmbikā. In Kerala Devī is called Bhagavati also. Valiyanādi Bhagavati of Calicut is Lakṣmīdevi. Kālī temples in Karnāṭaka are called ‘Koṭīpurāṇa Lakṣmī Koṭītras’. There are such temples in Andhra also. Most of them are Jukabāłḥikā temples. In Tamil Nādu there are grāmādevatās called Māyārām, Kāḷyānām, and Duraṇḍyām. Not the Draupadi mentioned in the Mahābhārata; but the Kanakā or Ciappadiṅāra is the Devi worshipped in Tamil Nādu.

There are two kinds of Devis called Saptakāmā and Saptakāmās. Saptakāmās have purusas (husbands) and saptakāmās have seven brothers for help and support. Devī-pāḷi is very much prevalent in South India. The custom is supposed to be as old as 5000 B.C. Idols of Devī have been unearthed from Mōlantu-daro and Harappa. Even the Buddhists worship the Devi called Yakṣī and Hārī. When in later years Hinduism was revitalised these grāmādevatās got promoted as the great Devatās of the epochs and the Purāṇas. The Kāṇaṭṭīya mentions the incident of the Devī called Lāṅkākāṃṭi driving away Hanumān. There are famous Kālī temples in Ujjainī and Cānṭāṇa. It is believed that in the temple at Cidambaram also Kālī occupied a prominent place. But, according to legends, Śiva defeated Kālī in a dance competition and united her to her present temple at the outskirts of the city. Cānṭāṇa is depicted as a typical westerly mound by Manyās‧

The Kānāṭṭīya temple of Kāhēl, Minaṭṭī temple of Madura and Mūkanṭīkā temple of North Kānāṭṭaka may be cited as examples for the worship of the gentle form of Devī. Alarnē Manīkattāyī temple at Tirucōndē is a very important Devī temple. The ‘Adītī’ in the Vedas and Kōṭīraavī of Tāmil Sangha texts point to the very long past of the Devī in India. Kālīdevī and Kālīmā (a Tāmil poet of the fifteenth century have worshipped Kālī. Sri Rāmakrma Paramānāma and the great modern Tāmil poet Bhaiṇā were devotees of Kālī.

There are also grāmādevatā worshipped like the grāmādevatās. Manyās‧ and Kāpāṟi are two prominent grāmādevatās. In certain villages Bhaiṇā is worshipped as Bhagavatī. In South Kānāṭṭaka a set of Devas called Bhūtas are worshipped, Pāruruli being one of them. Sāmī or Ayappa is another grāmādevatā. Sāmī is most popular in Kerala and in Tamil Nādu. Buddha also is called Sāmī. In certain places Idols of Sāmī with two wives, called Pāṭī and Pāṣāṭī are also found. Sāmīṇa Sāmī is yagūmi (in yogyi pose).

In most of the grāmādevatā temples idols of the Devas are not found. A pilha (stool-like seat) is supposed as the seat of the Deva and it represents the Deva also. But, in some temples weapons like the sword, the club etc. are found. Offerings to the deity in grāmākṣetras and annual festivals are common in such temples. (Nām vanāngam daivāṇ-g-Tamī).
GREEK LITERATURE. Greek is one of the most important Indo-European languages. As an independent branch of the original Indo-European language, Greek established itself by about 2000 B.C. Even during its earliest period Greek had four local dialects as a result of the arrival of the Greek-speaking people at different periods of time. Ionic, Ionic-A, Arcado-Cyprian, and western Greek are the four dialects. Ionia was prevalent in the Aegean region, and this is the dialect mainly used in the poetry of Homer. The Ion and Attic dialects were prevalent in Ionia and Attica, respectively. After Homer, the major portion of Greek literature was written in this dialect. The Arcado-Cyprian dialect was used in Arcadia and Cyprus. The fourth dialect was also called Doric. Naval traditions, commerce, and political power contributed to the growth and development of Greek language and literature. In each dialect, even from the very beginning, literary efforts were made. Each of the four spoken languages very soon developed into a written language. But, in the very initial periods each of the spoken dialects continued its existence in the form of ballads and songs transferred from one man to another. It was Homer who gave these popular ballads an epic form and status and sowed the seeds of the great literature of Greece.

The golden period of Greek literature was when the city of Athens enjoyed supreme political power. Literature during the period set the model for future generations. It was during this period that Greek achieved the best in different literary forms like tragedy, comedy, lyric, elegy, history, philosophy, oratory, etc. Pindar, Aeschylus, Herodotus, Sophocles-Euripides, Aristophanes, Thucydides, Plato, and Demosthenes—these are distinguished names who were responsible for the great development of the literary forms referred to above.

Greek literature passed the Alexandrian, Roman, and Byzantine periods before it arrived at the modern period. It was Sallust and Valerius and others who gave impetus and inspiration to modern Greek literature.

GRHADAVI. Another name of the demoness Jara. (See under Jara.)

GRHAVOTI. A sage. There is a story in Siva Purana about this sage.

Vishvanata father of Grhapatra was living with his wife Suruvatati in a hermitage on the banks of the river Narmada. They had no children and Suruvatati was grieved much on this account. She requested her husband find out ways and means to get a child. Vishvanata, went to Kasi and did penance to propitiate Vishvaratra and the God appeared before him and blessed him and said, "You will soon get a son." Very soon the wife of Vishvanata delivered a child and the son was named Grhapatra. When the child was nine years old Narenda came there once and warned them against fire. Vishvanata immediately went and did penance to propitiate Siva and obtained from him for his son the qualities of fire also so that fire would be unable to act on him. It was on account of this that Grhapatra when he installed an idol of Siva at Kasi gave it the name of Agnivara.

GRHASTHA. In ancient India the life of a male person was divided into four stages, namely, Brahmacarya Grhasthaya, Vanaprastha and Sauntarya. He who is in the second stage of life is called a Grhasta. When a person marries, he becomes a Grhasta. The bride should have certain qualities to be an ideal wife. The girl should be only a third of the age of the male. She should not have hair either too much or too little. She should not be black or of a pig tail hue. She should not have any of her organs extra at the time of birth. The following types of girls are to be avoided for marriage. (1) Girls bred by low-caste people (2) girls with hair over the body (3) not born of a good family (4) sick ones (5) ill-natured ones (6) girls who use abusive language (7) with hereditary diseases (8) with small hair on the face (9) girls with muscular features (10) with the sound of males (11) lean ones (12) with the voice of a crow (13) with thick eyelashes (14) round eyes. Again avoid girls having hair on their legs, raised lumps and those with small depressions on their cheeks when they laugh. Girls whose bodies are too bright, with white nails, red eyes and fat hands and legs are not good for marriage. Girls too tall or too short, with eyelashes touching each other, with broad and raised teeth are to be avoided. A true Grhasta is one who marries a girl who is separated from him by five generations on the maternal side and seven generations on the paternal side.

A true Grhasta should daily worship devas, cows, brahmans, scholars, old men and preceptors. He should worship sandhya (dawn and dusk) daily and also fire. He should wear on his body leaves of Visvakaranti, Karuka (tough grass), Tulas (holy basil plant). He should appear neat and smart wearing good dress, with white flowers on his well combed head. He should never steal, speak unpleasant words to anybody nor speak an untruth even if it be pleasant. He should not openly speak about the sins of others. He should not cover another man's wife. He should not travel in a damaged vehicle nor should he sit under the shade of a tree on the banks of a river. A Grhasta should not mingle with such persons as (1) men hated by the people (2) outcasts from society (3) image men (4) those having a great number of enemies (5) those who torment others (6) prostitutes (7) husbands of prostitutes (8) those who use abusive language (9) those who tell lies (10) spendthrifts (11) scoundrels and (12) rogues. Never travel alone. He should not bathe against the flow in a river. Never enter a house on fire nor climb to the extreme top of trees. He should not grind his teeth, squeeze out his nose, yawn without covering the mouth, breathe or spit, with the face covered, laugh noisily, breathe out with a sound, bite the teeth, pinch grasses or write or draw on the ground. (Agni 3, Visnu Purāṇa).

GRIVA. A daughter in bird form born to Kṣaya-praprajapati by his wife Tāmra. Griva had the following sisters, Kāki, Syenī, Bhāti, Gṛddhikā and Suci, all birds. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 1).

GRTSAMADA I. A celebrated sage. He was the son of a sage called Vitasava. Gṛtsamada was equal to Bhṛpati and a great friend of India. Once this sage lectured to Yudhishtīra on the glory of Śiva. Many have mistaken Gṛtsamada for India. Once the asuras bound him, thinking him to be India. He had a son named Kucetā. (For more details see under Varṣitīha) (Chapters 18 and 30, Amāśāna Parva).

GRTSAMADA II. A King of the Bhārgava dynasty. He was the son of King Suhotra. Gṛtsamada had two brothers, Kāśya and Kuta, and a son, Sunaka. (9th Skandha, Bhāgavata).

GRTSAMADA IIII. The son born to India of Mukundā. There is the following story about him in Gancita Purāṇa.

Once when Rukmīnī had just been out from the palace, India, in the guise of Rukmīnī, went to Mukundā, wife of Rukmīnī, and slept with her. She gave birth at that time sexually hungry. She delivered a child in due course. This boy was Gṛtsamada. India grew into a great scholar. Nobody was able to defeat him in any verbal duel. Once Gṛtsamada went to the palace of the king of Magadha to attend a festival (an offering to the manes) along with Vasistha and others. Ari Maharsi who was present there then spoke slightly of Gṛtsamada’s parentage and Gṛtsamada coming home questioned his mother. The mother then told him what had happened and Gṛtsamada getting angry at the immoral act committed by his mother cursed her and said “May you be a Kājaka tree”. Mukundā also did not leave her son free. She cursed him thus “You will have a demon as your son”. But Gṛtsamada went and did penance to propitiate Gana-pati and got Brāhmaṇya.

GRTSAMADAPATI. He was the son of Kapila, a King of the Puru dynasty. He had a brother called Kautīka. Gṛtsamadapati had sons in all the four castes, namely, Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra. (Chapter 277, Agni Purāṇa).

GUḌAKESA. Another name of Ārjuna. He got the name because he conquered sleep. (Śloka 8, Chapter 198, Adi Parva).

GUḌHASENA. A King of the country of Puśkarāvata.

GUHA. King of the country of Niṣraphat, alias Śrīgīverapuruṣa, on the banks of the river Gaṅga. Śrī Rāma when he went on exile to the forests went to the residence of Guha accompanied by Lakṣmaṇa and Sītā. Guha, a devotee of Rāma, received them with respect offering them many kinds of fruits and roots to eat. But Śrī Rāma said that it was not proper to accept fruits and roots and so he drank only pure water from him. But Guha was asked to feed his horse. At night when Lakṣmaṇa stood watch over Rāma and Sītā, Guha volunteered to stand guard but Lakṣmaṇa refused to allow him to do that. So Guha kept company with Lakṣmaṇa and both of them spent the night talking to each other. In the morning as per Rāma’s request Guha brought a canoe and Guha himself took Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa and Shī to the other side of the river. (Sarga 50, Viṣṇu Ramāyaṇa, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa).

Guha is seen next when Bharata comes to the forest in search of Rāma. When Bharata returned from Keśa he went in search of Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa and came to Guha in Śrīgīverapuruṣa. Guha then gave Bharata all available information regarding Śrī Rāma. Guha then sent the Daśa army along with Bharata. (Sarga 83, Ayodhyā Kāṇḍa, Viṣṇu Ramāyaṇa).

Guha, chief of Śrīgīverapuruṣa, spent the night with Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa under an Oke tree. (Chapter 6, Agni Purāṇa).

GUHA (2). A tribe of people of ancient India. Āndhras, Pulindas, Cucukas, Guhas, Sābaras and Bhādras are some of the tribes of the south. (Śloka 42, Chapter 207, Santi Parva).

GUHASENA. See under Devasmitā.

GUHYAKA. A Yakṣa. A race of Yakṣas who were prominent members of the court of Kubera. They were present at the marriage of Draupadi. (Śloka 7, Chapter 186, Adi Parva).

GUHYAKA. A Yakṣa. A race of Yakṣas. (Śloka 7, Chapter 186, Adi Parva).

GUNĀDH. He is the author of the celebrated Brhata-kathā which is a precious mine of Sanskrit Literature. Gunādhya had written this in satric (paśaṇika) language difficult for ordinary people to read or understand. This was translated into Sanskrit by the poet Ksmēndra in a book called Brhata-kāthā. This was the first translation and it was in an abridged form. Somadeva made a more elaborate translation and it is this translation that is now known as the Kathārīrītīga. Gunādhya is believed to be an incarnation of the Śiva-pārśu, Māyavān. There is a story behind Māyavān being cursed and made to be born as man by Pārvati. Once Pārvati worried Śiva to tell her a story original and interesting and not heard of by anybody before. Placing Nandīka on the door and instructing him not to allow anybody inside Śiva started narrating the story of the Vidyādhara to Pārvati. At that time Puspapanta, chief of the guards of Śiva was at liberty to go to the presence of Śiva at any time, came there and heedless of the protests of Nandīka entered the room. There he found Śiva telling a story to Pārvati and she was hearing the same with rapt attention. The story was so interesting that Puspapanta also heard it standing concealed in a place in the room. After having heard the whole story Puspapanta went back unnoticed.
and told the story to his wife, Jayā. Jayā on another occasion told the story to Pārvatī and the latter was taken aback and she went to Śiva and complained: "You Lord! Tell me that the story was unique, not heard of before by anybody. But even Jayā knows it." And she went with disappointment. Then Śiva stood in meditation for sometime, and knew how Puṣṇadatā had entered the room unnoticed and how he had told the story he had heard to Jayā. Śiva explained this to Pārvatī and she immediately sent word for Puṣṇadatā who came trembling and confessed everything. Pārvatī then cursed Puṣṇadatā and also Mālāvayā who came to speak on behalf of Puṣṇadatā and made them men. They begged for relief from the curse and then she said, "Long ago Vaśiṣṭha cursed a Yājñika named Supratiṣṭha and converted him into a devil named Kānābhūti. This devil is now living in the deep forests on the Vindhyā mountains. When you talk with him you will become your old selves again. Puṣṇadatā should first tell the story he has heard from Śiva to Kānābhūti and then he will be relieved from the curse. Kānābhūti will then tell Mālāvayā many stories. Then Kānābhūti will get release from the curse. Mālāvayā should make Puṣṇadatā tell all the stories he had heard from Kānābhūti and then he will also get release from the curse." Accordingly Puṣṇadatā was born as Varaṇa in the city of Kaśinātha and Mālāvayā as Gunḍāvya in the city of Supratiṣṭha. [For details see under Varaṇa].

The story of how Supratiṣṭha became Kānābhūti is this: The Yājñika, Supratiṣṭha, got friendly with a demon named Saivatā and they moved about freely as chums. Vaśiṣṭha did not like this and he cursed Supratiṣṭha and converted him into a satān. At once Dīrgha-ānga, elder brother of Supratiṣṭha, came and begged for relief. Vaśiṣṭha then said: "Puṣṇadatā will be born on the earth by a curse as man and he will one day come and tell Supratiṣṭha many great stories. After hearing them he should narrate them to Mālāvayā who will then be born on the earth as man. Supratiṣṭha will then give release from the curse and become his old self again". Supratiṣṭha was born in the forests of Vindhyā as Kānābhūti.

This is the story of the birth of Gunḍāvya. There is a city in the forest of Saivatā named Pratīṣṭha and there lived a brahmā named Somaśāma. He had two sons, Vasa and Gułma, and a daughter named Saivatā. Before long the parents died and Śruti-āṅgā grew up under the protection of her brothers. Kṛṣṭiṣena, brother of Vasa, married her by gandharva rites and Gunḍāvya was the child born to them. Even while he was a boy he went to the south for his education and there from a brahmā he studied all arts and sciences. When he completed his studies he started on a tour and at that time became the minister of a king named Saivatā. He married there. One day his (Saivatā's) wife rebuked the king when the latter made some linguistic errors and Saivatā became dejected and moody from that day onwards. Then there came to the court of the King a brahmā named Saivatarmā who promised to make the King proficient in languages within six months. But Gunḍāvya said that it was not possible to do within six months. They made a bet. Gunḍāvya swore that if Saivatarmā would teach the King the Śabdāstra (science of language-sounds) within six months he (Gunḍāvya) would abandon his knowledge of Sanskrit, Prakrit and local language. On the other hand if Saivatarmā failed to accomplish the feat the latter should wear on his head for twelve years the chappals of Gunḍāvya. Saivatarmā agreed and went to do penance to please Subrahmānya. Subrahmānya granted him a boon by the power of which Saivatarmā made Saivatā a scholar in Sanskrit. Defeated, Gunḍāvya abandoned his knowledge of all languages and biding adieu to the King by gestures left for the Vindhyā forests.

When Gunḍāvya went to the forests Kānābhūti, King of the Satans was not in his place. He heard the satans speaking in their peculiar language and intelligent that he was he picked up the language and when Kānābhūti was told of it Kānābhūti told in the satanic language the great stories of seven Vidyādharas. Gunḍāvya took seven years to write the stories in the satanic language and compile them into seven lakhs of granthas to form a Mahakavya. There were no writing materials available for him and Gunḍāvya wrote them all on leaves using blood and toenails. When he was done he took on the King's book all the devas assembled in the sky to hear it. On hearing it Kānābhūti got release from the curse. It is this book containing seven lakhs of granthas that is called the Bhārakāthā.

Gunḍāvya then thought of how to keep alive such an interesting and gigantic book and then two of his companions Gunadeva and Naradeva suggested to him to dedicate the book to the King. Saivatā. Gunḍāvya agreed to that and the two disciples took the book to the King. The King read the whole story. But did not like it. It was very elaborate. The language was satanic. It was written with blood. The King looked at the book with contempt.

When the disciples found that the King was not in favour of the work, they took it back to Gunḍāvya. Gunḍāvya felt a great dejection. He went to a hillock nearby with his disciples and made a big fire-pit. He set aside the story of the Vidyāadhara named Naravāhana-data composed of a lakh of granthas for the use of his disciples and then started putting into the fire-pit the rest, reading aloud each leaf before he put it into the fire-pit. The said disciply, when it was done, washed away the winged wild animals of the forest flocked to the place and stood there listening to Gunḍāvya. At that time Saivatā became a sick man. The physicians of the palace said that the illness was caused by the dry flesh he was taking. The cook was called in and he accused the hunters who supplied them with flesh daily. The hunters were questioned and they blamed the King that only such flesh was available since all the beasts and birds were standing without food listening to a man who was reading something from a leaf and then burning it in a fire-pit before him. Saivatāhana immediately went to the place guided by the hunters. There to his astonishment he found Gunḍāvya sitting before a fire-pit surrounded by weeping beasts and birds and throwing leaves of his book one by one into the fire after reading each before it was put into the fire. Saivatāhān ran to him and prostrated before him. Gunḍāvya then told Saivatāhāna his story in satanic language beginning from the curse on Puṣṇadatā down to his destroying his own work in the fire.
His disciples translated his talk to the King. The King was awed, and he asked for the granthas. But by that time he had already burnt six lakhs of granthas containing six stories. He gave to the King the remaining one lakh of granthas. After that, bidding farewell to the King, Guru Gabhāda jumped into the fire and abandoned his life on earth and went to the presence of Śiva.

King Satavāhana accompanied by the disciples of Gūṇaḍhāya came to his palace carrying the ‘Prabhāvatama’ containing the story of Naravahanadatta. He gave presents to Gūṇadeva and Nandideva who explained to him the book in Sanskrit. King Satavāhana added a preface to the book to explain to the public how the book came to be written in satanic language. The book very soon got world fame. (Pitāmunabamba Kathāsarasāgara)

GUNAKESĪ. Daughter of Mātāi, charioter of Indra. She was more beautiful and well-behaved than many other girls. Mātāi went about in search of a suitable husband for her in all the three worlds. At last he met Nārada going to the presence of Kauera. He told Nārada about this and Nārada took Mātāi to Pātālaloka to search for a suitable bridge groom. Then they found out a serpent boy named Sumukha (good looking) worthy of his name who was the grandson of Artyaka and son of Cikura born of the family of Arāvata. But Sumukha was in danger at that time. Gaurūda had taken a vow that he would eat Sumukha the next month. Artyaka told Nārada about this. Nārada took Sumukha to the court of Indra. Mahāviṣṇu was also present there. When Nārada told the story there Indra blessed Sumukha and granted him long life. This made Gaurūda angry and he went to the court of Indra and rebuked Indra, Mahāviṣṇu who was present there then did not like this act of Gaurūda and he called the latter to his side and asked him whether he could bear the weight of one of his arms. With arrogance Gaurūda said ‘yes’ and Vīṣṇu then placed one of his arms on the shoulder of Gaurūda. But Gaurūda found the weight unbearable and begged pardon of Vīṣṇu, bereft of all his arrogance. The marriage of Sumukha with Gunaḍhāya was then conducted. (Chapters 97 to 105. Udīya Parva.)

GUṆĀṆUKHIṆA. A celestial maiden who took part in the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. She gave a dance there then. (Sloka 61, Chapter 122, Adi Parva.)

GUṆĀṆIDHI. A Purāṇic character who lived a sinful life and yet attained Svarga. In the country of Kousala there was once a noble brahmin named Gīrṇātha who was rich, erudite and well-versed in the Vedas. Considering his greatness people called him Gīrṇāhadikṣita. Gunaṇidhi was his son.

When Gunaṇidhi grew up he started his education under a preceptor called Sudhiṣna. Sudhiṣna had a wife named Muktiyāli. After some time Gunaṇidhi started having clandestine relations with Muktiyāli. This, developed so much that Gunaṇidhi gave poison to his guru and killed him. His parents came to know of this and they came and reprimanded him. Evil-natured Gunaṇidhi thought that the presence of his parents would be an annoyance to him. In future, So Gunaṇidhi and Muktiyāli planned together to kill his parents and one day they poisoned them.

After some time Gunaṇidhi and his wife lost all they had and gradually Gunaṇidhi turned himself into a thief and drunkard. Nobody in the village liked the couple, and all the villagers combined together and sent the couple away from the place. Gunaṇidhi and Muktiyāli went to the forest and there they started a life of hunting the travellers. After some years of a sinful life Gunaṇidhi one day died lying beneath a Rudrāksha tree. Servants of both Yama and Śiva came to claim the soul of Gunaṇidhi. The servants of Yama said that the right place of Gunaṇidhi the sinner, was in hell but the servants of Śiva said that even if he was a great sinner his place was in heaven because he died lying beneath a Rudrāksha tree. In the end the Śivādātās won and took Gunaṇidhi to heaven.

This story was once told by Śiva himself to demonstrate the glory of Rudrāksha. (Skandha 11, Devī Bhāgavata.)

GUṆĀṆARMAṆ. A character of the Purāṇas well versed in all arts and sciences. He was the son of the brahmin Adityārman of Ujjayini. The birth of Gunaṇarman bears a story. Once Adityārman went to the forest and by his spiritual powers made Sudarśana, a celestial nymph, to merge with him. A son was born to them and he was named Gunaṇarman Adityārman became a deva. Even from boyhood he became very erudite. Once Indra came to see Adityārman. Adityārman who was in deep thoughts did not see Indra and so did not rise up when Indra came. Indra felt insulted and cursed him to be born again on Earth. Adityārman prostrated before Indra and asked for pardon. Indra then said that it would be enough if his son was born on Earth in his stead. So Gunaṇarman was born on Earth to bear the curse of his father.

At that time Ujjayini was being ruled over by a King called Mahāśena. He had a very beautiful wife named Arokaṇa. Gunaṇarman became gradually an intimate friend of the King. Knowing that Gunaṇarman was well versed in all arts the King asked him to give him a performance in dancing. The dance was so excellent that the King engaged Gunaṇarman to teach dancing to Arokaṇa.

Once a royal attendant tried to give poisoned food to the King and Gunaṇarman finding it out saved the King. From that day onwards the King loved him more. When once Mahāśena was surprised by his enemies Gunaṇarman by his magic powers released him. In return for this help the King gave Gunaṇarman a thousand villages.

Then to the misfortune of all Arokaṇa fell in love with Gunaṇarman. Gunaṇarman bluntly refused her love. Embittered at this Arokaṇa started talking ill of Gunaṇarman and the King at last sent Gunaṇarman out from the palace. The servants of the King tried to capture him and put him into prison but Gunaṇarman escaped from the royal servants by his magic powers. He then went and stayed in the house of a brahmin named Agniddatta and married his daughter, Sundari. Then on the advice of the brahmin Gunaṇarman did penance to propitiate Sudarśana and got many more powers from Gunaṇarman. And out of these additional powers conquered Mahāśena and his country and became King there. He then sent Mahāśena and his wife Arokaṇa out from the country. (Śīrṣya-prabhālambaka, Tarāṅga 6, Kathāsarasāgara.)
GUNAVARĀ. A heroine, devoted to her husband, in the ancient literature of India. There is a story in Kathāsaritāgāra describing the depth of her devotion to her husband.

Gunavārā was the queen of Virabhuja, King of the country of Vatālāmāna. He had besides Gunavārā many other wives. But none had any children. So, the King asked the chief physician of the state to suggest a way to remedy this. The physician asked for a white and horned goat to be brought and he then made with its flesh a preparation. Then sprinkling over it a special medicinal dust, he gave it to the wives to eat. But Gunavārā who never left her husband for a moment came late to take the preparation and by the time she came the others had already consumed the whole lot. Then by an order of the King the horns of the goat were made into a similar preparation and Gunavārā took it with the dust sprinkled over it. All the wives got a child each. Gunavārā’s son was named Śrīgabhaṇjya.

All the other wives of Virabhuja became jealous of Gunavārā. They told her that Gunavārā was in love with a servant of the palace. The King did not believe it. But he thought he would test her. The King called the servant in question and accusing him of having committed the murder of a brahman sent him away from the state on a pilgrimage. Sorcery-striken the servant set out for the pilgrimage. The King then approached Gunavārā and said that a sanyāsin had declared that the King would lose his crown if one of his wives was not put in a cell underground. Gunavārā who adored her husband readily agreed to live underground.

The other wives were satisfied and yet they wanted to send away her son, Śrīgabhaṇjya also from the palace. One day when all the children were playing in the court-yard a stork came and sat perched on the top of the palace. The princes attempted to catch hold of it. A sanyāsin who came there then informed the children that the stork was none other than Agniśikha, a demon, who had come there to capture and take away the children. All the children then tried to drop it down by arrows. But none succeeded. Then Śrīgabhaṇjya took a golden arrow from the palace and sent it against the bird. The arrow struck the demon but the bird flew away carrying the golden arrow.

The other princes found it as an opportunity to rebuke Śrīgabhaṇjya and they, led by Nirvānabhuja, reproached him for losing the golden arrow. Unable to bear their insult Śrīgabhaṇjya went after the stork following the path of the blood drops which fell on the ground from the wound. At last he reached Dhānapat, the land of Agniśikha. There he fell in love with Rūpākikī, the daughter of Agniśikha. They were soon married and yet Agniśikha gave Śrīgabhaṇjya great trouble. At last Śrīgabhaṇjya and Rūpākikī took the golden arrow and eloped from the place one night and reached the city of Vatālāmāna. Agniśikha followed them but the magic powers of Rūpākikī made him turn back. When King Virabhuja saw his son Śrīgabhaṇjya he was extremely happy. The King then released Gunavārā from the dungeon and praised her for her devotion to her husband. He loved her more and treated her with greater affection than before. At that time the servant who had been sent away also returned. (Tarāgā 5, Ramaprabhābhāmākha, Kathā saritāgāra).

GUNAVARĀ. A celestial lady. This lady was present at the birthday celebration of Arjuna and gave there then a performance in dancing. (Śloka 61, Chapter 12, Adi Parva).

GUṆAVARMAN. Ādiyāsaṇa, King of Ujjayinī, had a wife named Tejasvī. Gunavārman was the father of Tejasvī. (Tarāgā 4, Lādavākarnabha, Kathāsaritāgāra).

GUṆAVATI I. Mother of Māndodari (See under Māndodari).

GUṆAVATI II. Daughter born to Śunābha, younger brother of Vajranābha. She had an elder sister named Candramati. Prabhāvati, daughter of Vajranābha, was married to Pradyumna, son of Śrīkṛṣṇa. One day when Prabhāvati and Pradyumna were engaged in amorous conversation Gunavatī and Candramati came to them and they expressed a desire to get husbands for themselves from among the Yādavas. Prabhāvati advised Candramati to marry Gada, brother of Kṛṣṇa and Gunavatī to marry Śamba, son of Kṛṣṇa. (Chapter 19, Harivaṃśa).

GUṆAVATI. A river. Once Parāshrūma slew some Kṣatriyās on the northern banks of this river. (Śloka 8, Chapter 70, Droṇa Parva).

GUṬṬA. A caste appellation. In ancient India appellations to the names were put to distinguish one caste from another. So ‘Sūrma’ was added to a brahmin name, ‘Varmā’ to a Kṣatriya name ‘Gupta’ to a Vaisya name and ‘Dāsa’ to a Śūdra name. Such appellations were considered to be a mark of nobility in those olden days. (Chapter 153, Agni Purāṇa).

GUṬṬAKA. A prince of the country of Sāvira. He was a friend of the famous Jayadrātha. In the great battle he was killed by Arjuna. (Śloka 27, Chapter 271, Vana Parva).

GUṆṆIKĀ. A companion of Devayānī. (Chapter 78, Ash Parva).

GUṆṆU. The following five persons are to be considered as gurus: Father, mother, Preceptor, Agni (Fire) and Atman (soul). (Śloka 27, Chapter 214, Vana Parva).

GUṆṆUDĀRA. A son of Garuḍa. (Śloka 13, Chapter 101, Udyoga Parva).

GUṆṆUPARAMPĀṆA. The origin of the Vedas and the lineage of Gurus is given below:

1) Origin of the Vedas. At the time of creation the Veda was born from the face of God. It contained a lākh of granthas with four pīdas like Rākṣa. From the Veda were born the ten yajñas. The Veda was originally one. It was Vyāsa who divided it into four divisions resulting in the four Vedas.

Vyāsa divided the Vedas thus: When Brahmac command-ed Vyāsa to divide the Vedas into divisions he first selected four disciples who could see the end of the Vedas. He accepted Pāīsī to study Rgveda, Vāsanāyaṇa to study Yajurveda, Jaimini to study Sāṃskāra and Sumantu to study Atharvaveda. Besides these he selected the highly intelligent Romaharṣana alias Śūta to study the Iīthāsas and Purāṇas.

At first, the Veda was one. Vyāsa divided it into four. He based the division on the caturhotra, performance of four hours. He arranged the performance of Adhvaryu as Yajus, that of Hoti as Riks, that of Udāgīr as Sāman and that of Brahmacā as Atharvavas. Then he separated the Riks to form Rgyeda, Yajus to form Jāyurveda and Sāman to form Sāmadeva. He devoted Atharvaveda to specify the rites and duties of Kings and the deeds of Brahmacā. Vedavyāsa thus split the single Veda tree into four and from there arose later a forest of Veda trees.

2) The saints of Rgyeda. Paśa divided Rgyeda into two saṁhitās and gave one each to Indrapramatī and Bāṣakā. Sage Bāṣakā divided his Sanhāta again into four and taught it to four of his disciples, Bodhi, Ādīmahā, Yājñavalkya and Parāśara. Indrapramati without splitting his sanhāta taught it to his renowned son, Māṇḍūka. The branch of Indrapramati thus went down into circulation through the discourses of Māṇḍūka and the discourses of the disciples and so on. Vedāmītra of Sākalya gotra, one sage in the line of the disciples of Māṇḍūka, split the sanhāta into five, and taught it to Mūdgalā, Gomukha, Vāṣya, Śāliya and Sārīra. Śākapūruṇa a colleague of Vedāmītra divided it into three and added a division to it by composing a Nirukta of his own. He taught them to Vaitālīka, Bakāka and Kraucīka. This was how the Indrapramati Sanhāta produced branches and sub-branches. Bāṣakā divided his sanhāta into another set of three and taught it to Kālāyana, Gārgya and Kāṭākha. The sages mentioned above are the ones who spread Rgyeda in the world.

3) Saints of Jāyurveda. Vaitāmāpyana, disciple of Veda Vyāsa, made twenty-seven divisions of Jāyurveda and taught them to his disciples. Among those disciples was Yājñavalkya, son of Brahmacā. The branch Taittirīya originated from Yājñavalkya.

4) The Taittirīya branch. Once all the sages learned in the Vedas made a decision. He who does not attend the Brahmasamāja meeting held at the mountain of Mahāmeru will be tainted with the sin of Brahamahāya (murder of a brahmin). At one time Vaitāmāpyana was not able to attend and so was charged with the sin of Brahamahāya. He called his disciples to his side and told them that they should observe a Vrata; to observe the Vedāsaṁsāra of his sin. Then one of his disciples, Yājñavalkya, stood up and said that he would observe the vrata alone and that there was no need of anybody else in that matter. When asked why he said so he replied that none of the colleagues of his was so brilliant and majestic as he was. Vaitāmāpyana did not like this arrogance of Yājñavalkya and so angrily commanded Yājñavalkya to give back all that had been taught to him by Vaitāmāpyana. Obeying orders Yājñavalkya vomited all the yajus and went away from the place. The other sages taking the form of the bird, Tittiri, accepted the vomited yajus. Therefore that branch of the Veda got the name of Taittirīya and those sages were known as the Taittirīyas.

5) Aṣṭādhyāya (v.). On his leaving Vaitāmāpyana Yājñavalkya put into operation a new set of Yajus called Aṣṭādhyāya unknown even to Vaitāmāpyana. That was how Aṣṭādhyāya came into being. Yājñavalkya after leaving the Brahmasamāja went and did penance to propitiate the Sun-god. The Sun appeared before him in the form of a horse. Yājñavalkya then requested him to grant him new yajus unknown even to Vaitāmāpyana.

The Sun then remaining in the shape of the horse (Vājira) itself imparted to him instructions on a new set of Yajus called Aṣṭādhyāya which were not known to anybody else, even to Vaitāmāpyana. Those who studied it were called Vājirā. There are fifteen branches of the Vājira, Kāṇṇu being one of them. All were put into operation by Yājñavalkya.

6) The Sanātana of Sāmadeva. Vedavyāsa taught Sāmadeva to Jāminī. Jāminī had a son, Sumantu, and he in turn had a son named Sūtra. Sumantu and Sūtra were very intelligent and they studied one branch each of the Vedas. Sūtra had a son, Sūkrama, and he divided Sāmadeva sanhāta into a thousand branches. Sūkrama had two disciples: Hiranyanābha and Pauṣpīti, and both of them studied all the thousand divisions of the Sāmadeva. The five hundred disciples of Hiranyanābha who came from the north and studied Sāmadeva were called Uḍīrya Sāmakaras (those come from the north). Another five hundred came from the east and studied Sāmadeva sanhāta from Hiranyanābha and they were called Prācya Sāmakaras (Hiranyanābha is known as Kaustubha also). Pauṣpīti had four disciples: Lōṛākṣi, Kauṭhumī, Kaksūvān and Lāṅgāli. These four and their disciples split sanhātas and increased them. Kru, one of the disciples of Hiranyanābha, taught his disciples twenty-four sanhātas. They also split them into many more and made the Sāmadeva bigger.

7) The saints of Atharvaveda. Vyāsa taught Atharvaveda to Sumantu. Sage Sumantu taught it to his disciple Kabandha first. Kabandha split it to two and gave one each to his disciples: Devadāśa and Pathya. Deva had four disciples: Medha Brahmadeba, Sāntakāyana and Pippalāda. Pathya had three: Jāblī, Kumuda and Sānanka. All these made sanhātas. Sānanka split his sanhāta into two and taught one to Badru and another to Sāndhava. Mut⃣jiketa learnt it from Sāndhava. He split it into two and then again into three. The five sanhāatas of Mut⃣jiketa namely, Naksatrakalpa, Veda kalpa, Samhitakalpa, Anjirasakalpa and Sanatkalpa are the most important divisions of the Atharvaveda. The Naksatrakalpa contains methods of worshipping Nakṣatra; the Vedakalpa contains the rites of the Rikva Brahmacā and the Samhitakalpa contains the science of the care of horses and elephants.

8) Purṣa. Vyāsa compiled a Purṣa sanhāta using speeches, appendices, poems and Kalpaśanāyasyas and taught it to Romaharsana alias Sūtra. Sūtra had six disciples named Sumatra, Agnivarvas, Mīrṇyus, Sāmāṇapāṇa, Akṣaquṛṣi, and Sāvṛṣi. Akṣaquṛṣi, Sāvṛṣi and Sāṁgipāṇa born of Kaśyapagotra have themselves made Purṣa sanhātas. There is another sanhāta composed by Romaharsana based on the sanhātas made by the above three.

Viṣṇu Purāṇa is based on the latter four sanhātas. There are sixteen Purṣaṇas, namely, Agneya, Brahma, Brahmā, Brahmadeva, Brahmanavarta, Brahmā, Bhrashtā, Gomukha, Kṛṣṇa, Liṅga, Mārkaṇḍeya, Māyā, Nārāyaṇa, Skanda, Vāmana, Vaiṣṇava and Viṣṇu. There are eighteen sub Purṣaṇas also. In all there are described the creation, the deluge, the dynasties of the devas, history of kingly dynasties, changes of generations etc. (Artha 3, Viṣṇu Purāṇa; 12th Skanda, Bhāgavata).
GULMA. See under Aksaubhī.

GULMAKA. The uncle of Gunaḍhya. Gunaḍhya is the author of the famous book "Bhāskārīṭā." In the city of Supatīṣṭhāna there was a brahmin named Somakumāra who had three children, namely, Vata, Gulmaka and Śrūtārtha. Gunaḍhya was the son of Śrūtārtha (Taranga 6, Kāthāpīṭhālambhaka, Kāthāśārisigāra).

HALAYUDHA. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 10th century A.D. A mahākāvya called Kāvarahaya is his most important work. The hero in the great poem is Kṛṣṇa III. A King of the Kṛṣṇa dynasty, and poet Halayudha was a courtier of his.

HALIK. A prominent nāga born in the Kṛṣṇa dynasty. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 15).

HALIMĀ. One of the Supatāmātā (seven mothers). (Vana Parva, Chapter 22, Verse 10).

HALIMAKA. A naga born in the family of Vānsi. He was burnt to death in the serpent yajña of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 5).

HAMSĀ. A Parvata. (Nyayopanishad 2).

HAMSĀ. A Parvata. (Nyayopanishad 2).

HAMSĀ. A Parvata. (Nyayopanishad 2).

HAIHAYA. A king of the Hārām dynasty. (Samudra Purāṇa, Chapter 30). He was a prince of the Hārām dynasty. (Samudra Purāṇa, Chapter 30).

HAIMAVATI. A synonym of Hārām dynasty. (Samudra Purāṇa, Chapter 30).

HAIMAVATI. An asura who lived in the time of Brahmā. (Samudra Purāṇa, Chapter 30).

HALADHAR. A synonym of Balarāma. (See under Balarāma).

HALAHALA. A sect of sūras, who were the first creation of the Trimūrti, when they also possessed the power of creation. The Hālahalas, who became very powerful within a short period of time earned from Brahmā all the boons they wanted, and they then conquered the three worlds. At last they barricaded Kalāsa and Vaiṣṇavī also, and Hanumāns (Vinsu and Śiva) defeated them after a fierce fight lasting for a thousand years. The Hālahalas returned to their abodes and spoke about their achievements. Their wives laughed at the bravado of their husbands. At this Mahāvīṇa got angry with Lakṣūni and Śiva with Pārvati, and in protest the Devis left their husbands. From that day onwards Vinsu and Śiva began losing their power. Brahmā, who divined the reason for the growing weakness of Vinsu and Śiva, persuaded Lakṣūni and Pārvati to return to their husbands so that they might regain their former power. Yet, Brahmā told them that in future he alone would handle the work of creation. Thus was Vinsu and Śiva divested of their right to creation (Devī Bhāgavata, 7th Skandha).

HALAYUDHA. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 10th century A.D. A mahākāvya called Kāvarahaya is his most important work. The hero in the great poem is Kṛṣṇa III. A King of the Kṛṣṇa dynasty, and poet Halayudha was a courtier of his.

HALIK. A prominent nāga born in the Kṛṣṇa dynasty. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 15).

HALIMAKA. A naga born in the family of Vānsi. He was burnt to death in the serpent yajña of Janamejaya. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 57, Verse 5).

HAMSĀ. An incarnation of Mahā Vīṇa in Kṛṣṇa yuga. He instructed great sages like Sanaka on yoga in the presence of Brahmā. He is also called yajña. (Bhāgavata 11th Skandha). Hamsa, who was a prajāpati as well advised the Śādhyadevas about the means to attain salvation and the advice is known as Hāmāgīthā. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 286).

HAMSĀ. II. A son born to Kṛṣṇa of his wife, Arjita. He was a Gandharva and it is believed that Dīṭārātra was an amāvatāra of this Gandharva. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 6, Sec also under Amāvatāra).

HAMSĀ. III. 1) General. A minister of Jarāsandha. Hamsa and Dimbhaba were the sons of Brahmādatta, the chief of Vṛṣṇi, and they were adepts in archery. Parāsitā was their preceptor (Harivamśa 3, 103). The Mahābhārata calls Hamsa's brother Dībhaka.

2) Education. Vicakra and Janardana were intimate friends of Hamsa from their very infancy, of whom Janardana was the son of Miraṣha, a friend of Brahmādatta. Hansa, Dimbhaba and Janardana had their education together and their marriages also were conducted at the same time. After some time Śiva presented them many weapons like Rudrarātra, Mahāvarātra and Brahmāvarātra, and also two attendants for self-protection. (Harivamśa 3, 105).

3) Curse of Durvāśī. Swollen-headed and haggard on account of Śiva's boon, Hansa and Dimbhaba turned out to be a nightmare to the world, and they once tried to give trouble to Durvāśī, who cursed them to be killed by Mahāvīṇa. Sometime later the sage himself informed Śiva Kṛṣṇa about his curse of his.

4) Death. The Hamsa brothers began an avarmeda (Horse Sacrifice) and deputed Janārdana to collect the tax thereof. Śiva Kṛṣṇa alone refused to pay the tax with the result that Hamsa clashed with Kṛṣṇa who killed Dimbhaba and kicked Hansa down to Pātaīla. He died there, in Pātaīla of snake-bite. (Harivamśa 3, 126).

5) Grief of Jarāsandha. Hamsa's death caused much grief to Jarāsandha, and for many years after it, he shed tears over the death of his friend. Even at the time when Bhimānasa, during his triumphal tour of the east, attacked Jarāsandha he remembered the dead Hamsa and Dimbhaba. (Śāhā Parva, 13, 37).

HAMSĀ. (M.) Sāman. For story about the origin of hamsa on earth see under Śrīmālī, P. 112.

HAMSACOCA. A Vāksa, who worships Kubera in his assembly. (Śāhā Parva, Chapter 10, Verse 17).

HAMSADHVAVA. A King of Cāmpānāgarī, who was a great devotee of Vīṇa. During his reign monogamy prevailed in the country. He took the yājñik horse of Yudhishthira captive, and in the fight to release the horse Arjuna killed Subhadra and Suratha, sons of Hamsadhvaja. Grieved and enraged at their death Hamsadhvaja took the field against Arjuna, and Śri Krṣṇa finding that Arjuna’s life was in danger pacified them both. Also Krṣṇa requested Hamsadhvaja to be a supporter of Arjuna in future. Hamsadhvaja had five sons called Suratha, Sudhanva, Svādau, Subala and Sama. (Jaimini, Atnamedha Parva, 17, 21).

HAMSĀJA. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 43, Verse 60).

HAMSĀKAYA. A Katriya by caste, Hamsākayā was present at the raśaṇya of Yudhishthira. (Śabha Parva, Chapter 52, Verse 14).

HAMSĀKUTA (M). A mountain lying between Hmaripura and the Satagirīya mountains. On his way to Satagirīya Pindu crossed Hamsākutam. (Adi Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 50). Śri Krṣṇa once tore off a peak of the mountain and established it in Dwārakā. (Bhārata, Southern text, Chapter 36).

HAMSĀPATHA (M). A region famous in the Purāṇas. The armies from this place fought in the great war. They fought taking their position at the purvasthāna (neck position) of the Garuda vṛkṣa. (A particular array of soldiers) set up by Droṇa. (Drōṇa Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 7).

HAMSĀPRAPATANA TIRTHA. A sacred place at Prayaga on the banks of the Ganges. (Vana Parva, Chapter 85, Verse 87).

HAMSĀVAKTRA. A warrior who fought on the side of Subrahmanya and defeated the Asuras. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 75).

HAMŚ. A daughter of Bhagiratha whom sage Kautsa married. (Anuśasanam Parva, Chapter 137, Verse 26).

HAMSĪKĀ. A daughter of Surabhi. This cow is said to be supporting the southern region. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 102, Verse 7).

HANUMĀN. A monkey born of the elements and aspects of Devas. In the epic of no other country could be found a character that belongs to the animal kingdom who is as powerful, erudite and philosophic as Hanumān.

1) Birth. Many and different are the stories about the birth of Hanumān told in Purāṇic literature, and they are briefly noted below.

2) The semen discharged by Śiva, whose erotic feelings were excited by the sight of Veṣu disguised as Mohini was received by the Saptarśis and deposited in the womb of Afjanā, and Hanumān was born out of it. (Śiva Parāsā, Satvarudrasamhita).

2) Dasaraṇa divided among his wives the divine payasa (pudding) got from the putrakāmesī yajña which was performed so that he might be blessed with children. Somehow or other a kīte snatched some pudding and flew off with it. On its way the pudding fell down from the beaks of the kite on the fingers of Afjanā doing tapas in the forest. She ate that pudding and Hanumān was born as the son of Afjanā due to the extraordinary powers of the pudding. (Ananda Rāmāyaṇa).

3) Śiva, once in his fierce and effulgent form (aspect) entered Kesi, the husband of Afjanā and had coitus with her. After that Vāyu (Wind-god) also had coitus with her. Thus as a result of the sexual act by both the Devas Afjanā got pregnant. Later, Afjanā was about to throw into the valley of the mountain her new-born child as it was an ugly one when Vāyu (Wind god) intervened and saved the child. Hanumān was the child thus born of Śiva and Vāyu. (Bhāvisya Purāṇa, Pratisarga Parva).

4) Hanumān’s actual father was Śiva. Gaṇapati was born to Śiva and Pārvatī as they played in the forest disguised as elephants. After that Śiva and Pārvatī played about in the forest disguised as monkeys as a result of which Pārvatī got pregnant. Since Pārvatī did not like the idea of being the mother of a monkey, Śiva, by his yogic power entrusted the child, (in embryo) that was in the womb of Pārvatī to Vāyu (Wind god), who carried it with him hither and thither till it became mature, when it was deposited in Afjanā, the monkey woman. The monkey called Kesi was her husband. Thus Hanumān was born as the son of Afjanā.

Afjanā also has a story of her own. Once upon a time she was the maid-servant called Puṣṭikāśālā of Bhṛṣpati. One day she went out to gather flowers when the love-making of other young women attracted her so much that, without gathering flowers, and her erotic sentiments being aroused much, she returned home and covered Bhṛṣpati with kisses. Bhṛṣpati got really angry with the misbehaviour of his maid-servant and cursed her into a female monkey. She was told that, after she had lived for sometime with a monkey-husband she would get a child from the virility of Śiva, after which she would return to him as maid-servant as of old. And, accordingly, Puṣṭikāśālā became a female monkey under the name Afjanā and lived at Afjanā forest with a handsome monkey called Kesi as her husband.

1: It was while Afjanā was doing tapas so that she might become pregnant by Śiva that Śiva and Pārvatī played in that forest disguised as monkeys, and Pārvatī conceived and the child ultimately came out as the son of Afjanā.

Even while Afjanā was pregnant the child in her womb had much to suffer at the hands of Bālī. Hearing from Nārada that Śiva’s son had been born in Afjanā’s womb Bālī feared that the actual birth of such a son would jeopardise his lordship over the monkeys. To ward off the threatened contingency, Bālī, as advised by Nārada, let in the five metals (gold, copper, iron, tin and zinc) in watery form into the stomach of Afjanā. (This is a means of causing abortion). But, the attempt miscarried. Instead of the five metals killing the child in Afjanā’s womb, they became ear-ornaments for it, and Hanumān was thus born with ornaments in his ears. (Kamba Rāmāyaṇa Purvakanda).

2) Naming and boon. As soon as Hanumān was born Afjanā was released from the curse, and she wanted to return to heaven. The monkey child asked its mother what its future would be and how it was to earn its living. She assured him that he would neither be destroyed nor burnt and that fruits as ripe as the rising sun (the pointed the sun out to him) would form its food. And, Afjanā returned to heaven.
HĀRA (M)

Thinking that the glowing and glittering Sun was food for him to be eaten, the monkey-child made just one jump at it (Sun) and quite seized it. But seeing Rāhu, bigger than the Sun he jumped at. Then it was that it saw Arvāta and it tried to eat it. And, seeing this attempt of the monkey-child, Indra used his vajrāyudha (Thunderbolt) against it. The weapon hit its chin and wounded it, and in precarious condition it fell down on earth. Gayu (Wind god) saw his child falling down wounded carried it off to Pātāla.

When Gayu [air] quelled the earth everything thence came to a dead-stop. Living things were on the verge of death due to suffocation. And, then Brahmā and others went to Pātāla, comforted Gayu and congratulated the monkey-child. On the basis of Indra's vajra having made a scar on its hanu (jaw-bone or chin) the monkey-child was named Hanumān by the Devas, who, one by one, blessed him as follows:—

Brahmadeva; May you live long, so long as Brahmā exists.

Mahāvīnu; May you live all your life: the greatest devotee of God.

Indra; No weapon of any kind will wound or hit your body.

Agni; Fire will never affect you.

Kāla; May not death ever count you.

All the Devas; None will ever equal you in strength and speed: Brahmā blessed Hanumān again giving him more physical power than Garuda and Gayu blessed him to have more speed than himself. (air) [Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākānda, Canto 5; Uttarārāmāyaṇa; Kamālakāṇḍa, Pūrvākāṇḍa; Adhyātmitrāyamāyaṇa].

3) Education. Being born of Sīva and on account of the Sivātaki in him, Hanumān reached boyhood immediately. To learn the four Vedas and the six sāstras he chose Sūrya mentally as his preceptor, and approached him with the request to be taught the Vedas etc. Sūrya agreed to have Hanumān as his disciple. Soon he learned all the Vedas thoroughly well. Though Sūrya said that he would consider the great interest Hanumān took in his studies as daksinā (tuition fee) Hanumān wanted Sūrya to accept something more by way of daksinā, and Sūrya said as follows:— "If you are so very particular about offering me something more as daksinā I shall tell you. My son Sugriva is living on earth with Bālī, and Bālī is not as strong and powerful as Bālī. You be of help to Sugriva as his minister and constant companion." Happy at Sūrya's words Hanumān returned to the forest and lived as Sugrīva's minister for the rest of his life.

4) Sīrī Rāma's servant. From the day he met Sīrī Rāma after the abduction of Sītā by Rāvaṇa till Rāma's death his story is inextricably connected with that of Rāma. (See under Rāma)

5) His music. Once in a musical competition Hanumān defeated Nārada. (Athbhutarāmāyaṇa; also see Para 8 under Nārada).

6) Sūvalīga at Rāmāvatāram. There is a story in the Yuddhākānda of Rāmāyaṇa connecting Hanumān with the Sūvalīga installed in the temple at Rāmāvatāram. (See under Rāmāvatāram).

7) Lost his divine power. Once due to a curse of sage Trāpābhī Hanumān lost his great strength and vitality. But, he would regain the lost power when one reminded him of it. During the search for Sītā Hanumān felt it difficult to jump across the southern sea to Lanka due to the above curse. But, when Jāmbavān described to him about his noble origin and powers Hanumān regained his lost power and vitality, and successfully jumped across the sea to Lanka. (See Trāpābhī, Para 2).

8) A fort made of tail. He made a fort of his tail and saved Rāma and Lākṣmāṇa within it. (See Pātāla-rāmāyaṇa).

9) Hanumān and Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa. (See Sahasramukha Rāvaṇa).

10) Hanumān and Sarughnā. Sarughnā, who conducted the horse in connection with the Atvamedha performed by Śrī Rāma after his return from exile in the forest, fell down unconscious in his flight with King Vīramaṇa and then Hanumān brought a hermit medicine called 'Drona' from the Himalayas and with its aid brought back Sarughnā to consciousness. (Padma Parāja, Pātāla Khandha, Chapter 44).

11) Taken captive by Kuśa and Lava. The Yajur-Veda (sacrificial horse) of the Atvamedha yaṣa of Śrī Rāma fell by a contingent of Rāma's army was resting in a tent put up near the hermitage of Gauṭama when Kuśa and Lava captured the horse. Hanumān, who rushed over to the spot on receiving intimation of the news was bound hand and foot with creepers by Kuśa and Lava and dragged to the hermitage. Sītā, was then in the hermitage brooding over the past, and the repetition of the word 'Rāma' by the humiliated Hanumān awoke her from her reverie. She was taken back to see Hanumān there in that plight and got him released from captivity by her sons. (Kambha Rāmāyaṇa, Uttarākānda).

12) Old age. Having witnessed Rāmāvatāra (incarnation of Rāma) to its very end, Hanumān, who had by now become quite old, spent his days guarding the Kadali forest. Bhūma, who happened to go there to collect Saugandhika flowers got defeated in fight by Hanumān. (See Bhūma, Para 7).

13) Arjuna's flag-Symbol. (See under Arjuna 17 B).

14) Idols of Hanumān. When an idol of Hanumān is installed in a temple, he must be represented as holding Vajra in one hand and his feet must seem to tear the ground under them. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

HANYAMĀNA. A famous place in south India mentioned in the Purāṇas. (Bhūma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 69).

HARA I. A famous Dānava, born to Kaśyapa of his wife Dandī. He was reborn as King Subhāhu. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 87, Verse 23)

HARA II. One of the eleven Rudras. (Śaṁti Parva, Chapter 208, Verse 19).

HARA III. A synonym of Śiva.

HARA (M). A region of Purānic fame. Nakula subjugated the King of Hara by a simple command without any resort to arms, and the King attended Yudhi-HARAKALPA. One of the sons born to Vipracitis by Simhī. Parāśurāma killed him. (Vāyu Purāṇa, 66, 19).

HARAKYÜRAKA. See under Lavaṇa. II

HARA. An asura born from the tear drops of Brahmā. He was burnt to death in the flames emerging from Sivalinga. (Skanda Purāna, 5, 2, 48).

HARDIA II. A Kṣatriya King born from an asura of the asura called Arvapati. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 67, Verse 15).

HARDIRA. He was called Hardika because he was the son of Hariśka of the Yadu dynasty. (See under Kṛtoyana).

HAKO. A synonym of Vīṣṇu. (See under Vīṣṇu).

HARI II. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (Salya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 61).

HARI III. A warrior who fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas and was killed by Karna.

HARI IV. An usura, the son of Tārakākṣa, who got from Brahmā a boon enabling him to prepare Mṛtaśānti-vatika. (a medicine to revive dead people). (Karna Parva, Chapter 39, Verse 27).

HARIV. Son of King Aśvapati. Though he was as powerful and proficient in archery as Mahāvīnu, and equal in prowess to Indra in war he got into the hands of his enemies and was killed. (Drona Parva, Chapter 32, Verse 27).

HARI VI. A particular sect of the attendants of Rāvaṇa. They attacked the army of monkeys. (Vana Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 35).

HARI VII. A very powerful bird born in Garuda’s dynasty. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 101, Verse 13).

HARI VIII. A particular species of horses. They possess long hairs on the neck and are golden in colour. (Drona Parva, Chapter 23, Verse 13).

HARI IX. A daughter born to Kaśyapa parājapati by his wife Krodhavati. Lions and monkeys originated from this Hari. (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Ayodhya, Canto 14).

HARI XI. A sect of Devas. During the Tāmasanvantara there were four such sects, viz. Hari, Kṛṣṇa, Sūrya, and Sūdha. (See Manvantara).

HARIBHĀKRUA. A great sage, who was a member of Yudhisthira’s assembly. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

HARIBHADRĀ. Daughter of Kaśyapa by Krodhā. She was given in marriage to sage Pulaha and from them were born the monkeys, Kinnaras, Kimpurusas etc. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

HARIDĀSA. A monkey King, son of Pulaha by Svetā. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa).

HARIDHĀMA. A great sage who was born in his next birth as Raśgavī, a gopi in Golūla (Cowherds’ colony) as he had chanted the Kṛṣṇa mantra of twenty letters during his life as sage. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khandā, Chapter 72).

HARILĀKA. A vēga born in Kaśyapa’s dynasty. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 35, Verse 12).

HARIJATA. One of the Rākṣasa women who kept guard over Śītā in the Auśka grove. (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Sundara Kānda, 23, 5).

HARIMEDHAS. A saintly King of ancient days. He once conducted a yajña and a daughter called Dharmāvatī was born to him. She lived in the western region. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 110, Verse 13).

HARIMITRA. A brahmin, who had hisārana on the banks of the Yamunā. Owing to his association with Harinītra a smaller called Vikṣudala took his bath in the sacred waters of the Kānīṇḍi during two Maṇḍha moons. The truth he gifted away from all his sons and the second bath made him eligible to go to heaven. Thus Harinītra was responsible for the attainment of heaven by the smaller Vikṣudala. (Padma Purāṇa, Ādi Khandā, Chapter 31).

HARIPA. A nīga which belonged to the Airavata family. It was burnt to death at the Sarpaśatru of Jamavarṇa. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 37, Verse 11).

HARINASVA. A King in ancient times. He once got from King Raghu a sword with divine powers which he presented to King Sūnakas. (Sāhit Parva, Chapter 156).

HARINI. A daughter of Hīranyakṣiputra, also called Rākṣasa. She was married to Visvapati, an Aśura, Vana Parva, 211, 18).

HARIPINDA. A female attendant of Subrahmanya. (Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 24).

HARISCANDRA I. A King of the solar dynasty very much reputed for his unique truthfulness and integrity. He was the son of the famous Triśanku.

1) Genealogy. See under Triśanku.
2) A brief life-sketch. To keep his pledged word and honor the sacred seat of the whole of his kingdom to Visvāmitra. When that was not sufficient he cleared his debts to Visvāmitra with the money got by selling his wife, Candramati, his son, Lohitāva and finally himself. And, he earned his livelihood with the wages he got for cremating corpses, himself doing duties as guard at a burning ghat and as the slave to a Candāla. Ultimately the Trumāṇa (Brahmā, Vishnu and Śiva) appeared and handed him all the luxuries he desired and rewarded him with high honours. (See for details para 4 under Visvāmitra).

HARISCANDRA II. An emperor of ancient times, to whom Brahmā gave as a gift a palace which automatically produced everything desired by its owner. He was lord over the seven islands. About his former birth and the plenitude of his riches the Purāṇa Ādiśved (Uttara kāndha, Chapter 32) has the following story to say:-

Harcandra ‘himself’ was surprised that he became so very rich in the matter of children and of wealth. Wondering what actions of his entitled him to so much wealth and to his position which was equal to Indra’s the emperor went to Sunera by vimāna where he questioned Sanatkumāra, a brahmanical sage seated in meditation on a golden stone as to who he was in his past life and to which actions of his past life he owed all the present wealth and prosperity. The great sage replied as follows:-

“In the past birth you were a truthful and pure-hearted vēga, you gave up your own profession and so you were ousted from home by your own people. At that time a famine and other scarcity conditions occurred there. One day you got into a pond along with your wife, collected lotus flowers from it and went to Kāti to sell the flowers. But, no one purchased the flowers. At last, Candramati, daughter of Indradyumna purchased the flowers for a yajña she was performing. When you saw Visnu installed along with Adiyabhasvat (San-God) and worshipped with flowers, feelings of devotion swept your mind and you too worshipped the idols with lotus flowers. You enjoy today the fruits of that action in the past life.

(Harivamsa 2.31) A Sanukrit poet who lived in the 5th century A.D. The main stories of Buddha's life from Harivamsa 2.31 to 2.36 were composed by him. This main work, this mahakavya, comprises of 21 cantos. He has composed another work called “Jivanibharitam”.

HARITVA 1. A King who was the grandson of Har-ivansh and son of Kohita (Bhāgavata, 10th Skanda).

HARIVARA 1. A King, who was the son of Vapumman and grandson of Seiyumvavumavan. He was King of Harivarasa in the island of Sambha (Mārakandeya Purāṇa 50, 26; Brahmāṇa Purāṇa 2, 2).

HARIVARA 2. A son born to Yada of the Naga woman called Dāmabhāraya. He founded an independent kingdom in the Naga island and became a prominent leader of the Maduru tribe. (Harivāra 2, 30; 29, 34).

HARIVASA 1. A great sage who visited Bhismas in his bed of arrows (Sarasvati). (Sanu Parva, Chapter 68, Verse 7). Once he attended Yuddhakshama’s assembly and spoke on eternal truths conducive to mental peace. That talk of his became famous as Hritagati. (Sanu Parva, Chapter 68).

HARIVASA 2. An author on Smritis (codes of conduct). He has written two texts on the subject called Laṅghaṛaṇa smṛiti and Viśvāṅgavatīsṃṛiti.

HARIVASA 1. A mineral (yellow orpiment) got from mountains, which veiled like the clouds at dusk. (Vana Parva, Chapter 150, 94).

HARIVAṢA 1. General. A King born in the solar dynasty. In the art of music, he defeated Narada and shared Sarasvatī (Goddess of language), pleased Brahma and by the melody of his music sent Visnu to sleep. The mounting achievements of the King in the art of music evoked jealousy in Śiva-akṣara, the Lord of music. When Śiva-akṣara in a competitive spirit played the rāga Saṣādharana, the King (Harivaṣa) pointed out that Saṣādharana (the calmness and peace) which was suited to that rāga had given place toraudā rasa which was a serious mistake. Enraged at this Śiva opened his eye at the King who retorted boldly thus, ‘even if the eyes of fire was opened a mistake was a mistake’. This stand of the King pleased Śiva so much that he bestowed on the King horses and good wishes as presents for his (King’s) victory over all.

2. Killed Andhaka. Andhakāśura conquered Svarga and took Indra prisoner during the period when Harivāsa was King. The combined efforts of Brahma, Visnu and Śiva could not kill Andhaka. At last at the instance of Brahaspati a representative of the Devas visited Harivaṣa at Ayodhya and sought his help to kill Andhaka and accordingly the King set out for war against the demon. Asvāya told the King in secret that Andhaka treasured an image of Śiva and Pārvati in his stomach, and after removing, with his arrows the idol from his stomach, Vṛtadvāra killed him and restored the Deva-loka to Indra. (Kambā Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kanda).

HARIVAMSĀ (M). An appendix to the Mahābhārata in 10,000 verses. The main object of it is to sing the praises of Mahāviṣṇu. It contains three parts called respectively Harivamba Parva, Visnu Parva, and Bhaviṣya Parva. Creation of the world, kings of the solar dynasty and of the lunar dynasty, Yadu dynasty and the birth of Śri Kṛṣṇa form the theme of Harivamba Parva. Parva Parva deals mainly with the ponks and games of Śri Kṛṣṇa in his childhood. Though there occur certain hints about the future at the beginning of the Bhavampsya Parva, the creation of the world, the incarnation of Visnu as Vamanas (Dwarf) and as Naraśimha (half man and half lion), Śiva and Visnu constitute its main theme.

The following verses prove that this Harivamsa also was composed by Vyāsa.

Harivamsa 2.31 pārvatī mahaśaṅkhaṁ / Viśnu-pārvatī sūkṣmaṁ / Viśnu-pārvatī scintilla / Bhavampsya pārvam- pārvam / Kṛte-pārvam rāmadvī ṇaṁ / Lo mu-pārvatīdāpaitama / Viśvasnoktaṁ maṁ tātāṁ / (Adi Parva, Chapter 2, Verses 83-84).

HARIVARA (M). The northern part of Mount Hemaparvata, Arjuna, during his triumphal tour of the northern regions conquered this region and took away a lot of costly gems. (Hāraka, southern text, sanu Parva, Chapter 26).

HARIVIRA. See Dhanaśatravī.

HARSHA 1. One of the three sons of Dharmadeva, the other two being Śama and Kama. Harsha married Nandā. (Adi Parva, Chapter 66, Verse 32).

HARSHA 2. A great poet in Sanukrit, who flourished in the 12th century A.D., his most reputed work being the Mahākavya called Nandāvīrā, one of the five Mahākavyas (Epic Poems) in Sanskrit language. Another well-known work of his is Khandanakhandakādhyaya. He was a member of the literary assembly of King Jayacandra of Kanaḍa. Hira was his father and Māmalladevi, his mother.

HARSHA 3. King Harṣavarman who ruled over North India between A.D., 600 and 688. He is remembered and respected more as a poet in Sanskrit than anything else.

Hāvyaghna was born from the smoke which rose from the fire of a yajña which sage Bharadvāja along with his wife Pāññhīna conducted on the banks of river Gauaṁ. and he began eating the āvās. Queenword about it by Bharadvāja Hāvyaghna answered as follows: "I am an unfortunate fellow called Kṛma cursed by Brahma. If you would kindly sprinkle on me the Ganga water, Suvarṇa, ghee and soma I will be redeemed from the curse. Bharadvāja complied with the request of Hāvyaghna and he got redemption from the curse.

HĀYAGRIVA I. An Asura, the son of Kaśyapaprajāpati by his wife Dāru. (Vaishñavi Kīrtiṇāyana, Aranyakānda, 1. 14).

As a child the Asura began tapas on the banks of river Sarasvatī, and after a thousand years Devī appeared and asked him to choose any boon he wanted, and he wanted to become invincible by Devas and Asuras, and also deathless. When Devī told him that such a boon was out of question, he wanted the boon that he (Hāyagrīva) should not be killed by anyone but by a Hāyagrīva (one with the horse's neck). Devī granted him the boon.

Hāyagrīva, who became haughty and overconfident on receiving such a boon, went about the three worlds troubling good people, and at last he clashed with the Devas. As he could be killed only by one with the head of a horse he combined the attack of Mahāviṣṇu and the Devas did not succeed in defeating him and Mahāviṣṇu decided to rest for some time to recoup himself from weariness. During his rest his head was hit by the end of his own bow and the head was severed from the trunk. Mahāviṣṇu replaced the head thus lost with that of a horse and killed Hāyagrīva in flight. (For details see Gitā).

HĀYAGRIVA III. A King born in the Vīma dyna.

HĀYAGRIVA IV. A saintly king. Though he defeated his enemies, yet, as he had no backing and support, he was finally killed. The story of Hāyagrīva was told by Vyāsa to teach Dharmaputra the lesson that even the greatest of heroes requires the support of others. Though killed, Hāyagrīva secured a place in heaven. (Śatrī Parva, Chapter 24, Verse 23).

HĀYAGRIVA V. An incarnation of Viṣṇu. (In Vedic literature.—In Vedic literature incarnation as Hāyagrīva is attributed not to Viṣṇu, but to Yājñika. But the Taittirīyas āraṇyaka depicts yajña as a prototype of Viṣṇu. The inference that may be drawn from the above is that the root of the Hāyagrīva story detailed in Vedic and Purānic literature is one and the same.

About the Hāyagrīva incarnation the Pañcavimsa-brāhmaṇa contains the following story. Agni, Indra, Vāyu and Yājñika (Viṣṇu) once began a yajña on the understanding that the haviṁbīha obtained from it should be divided among all the Devas. But, in violation of the agreement, yajña left the place carrying away the whole Yayābhīṣaga with him, and he drove back the Devas who followed him with the help of the bow presented to him by Devī. Finally the Devas got the string of the bow bitten off by a raven and the bow which got straightened up cut off yajña’s head. Yajña then apologized for his offence and then the devas got the Āśvinidevas to fix the head of a horse to the trunk of Yajña. (Pāndava-viṃśātāsana 7, 5, 4; Tattvārthā śarīrakalya 3, 1; Tattvārthā Śrīnathī 4, 3, 1).

2) In Purāṇic literature. The above story is told in Skanda Purāṇa with slight modifications as follows:

Once Brahmā and other Devatas conducted a test as to which one amongst them was the greatest, and when it became evident that Mahāvīra was, in every respect, superior to all, the others Brahmā cursed that Viṣṇu should lose his head. Viṣṇu, who got thus benefited of his head attended a yajña conducted by the Devas with the head of a horse attached to his trunk. After the yajña was over he went to dharmārāṇya and did tapas there and by the blessings of Śiva got back his former head instead of that of the horse.

(24) The River Gāṇgā deposited Śiva's semen on a high peak of Himāvāna and Subrahmanya was born there. (Karna Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 9).
(25) Himāvāna, the Devatā of the mountain, also was present at the installation of Subrahmanya as chief of the army. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 14).
(26) Himāvāna presented to Subrahmanya two attendants called Suvarcana and Ativarac. (Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 46).
(27) Śrī Kṛṣṇa once performed tapas on Himāvāna, and as a result of it was born his son Pradhyunna from Ruknī. (Saupākika Parva, Chapter 12, Verse 30).
(28) Himāvāna presented inexhaustible wealth to emperor Prthu. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 59, Verse 113).
(29) The peaks of Himāvāna have an area of 100 yojanas; Brahmā once conducted a yajña there. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 166, Verse 32).
(30) Daksānarajputi conducted a yajña at the place called Gaṅgādīśvara on the slopes of Himāvāna (Śanti Parva, Chapter 284, Verse 3).
(31) In Chapter 327 of the Śanti Parva the following statement occurs about Himāvāna. According to the advice of King Janaka Suka brahma馈a mounted the Himālayas. Siddhas-cīrṇas lived on the mountain, celestial women walked all over the place. The mountain always reverberated with the noise of different varieties of living beings. The mountain produced by Kinnaras, peacocks and many other birds could always be heard there. Himāvāna was the permanent abode of Garuda. The Astadhyālakas also lived there.
(32) When Śuka moved up to the world above it appeared as though the Himāvāna was being cut open. He saw two divine peaks of mountains on the two sides of the path, one of them was the peak of the Mahāmeru and the other that of Himāvāna. Both the peaks gave way to Śuka. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 333).
(33) Śiva desired to see Urmī, the daughter of Himāvāna as his wife. Manumātana's sage Hirupa demanded that Urmī be wedded to him. When Himāvāna told the sage that it had already been decided to give Urmī in marriage to Śiva, the sage cursed that they would not be, in future, gods in the Himāvāna. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 62).
(34) Visnu and Śiva once fought with each other on the Himāvāna, and then it seemed as though the mountain was being cleaved into pieces. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 129).
(35) Nārada had his aśrama there, on the Himāvāna. (Śanti Parva, Chapter 346, Verse 5).
(36) Śrī Kṛṣṇa once visited the aśrama of Upamanyu on the Himāvāna. (Arvāsa Parva, Chapter 17, Verse 53).

HIPPOCRATICUS. A Greek scientist and thinker. Father of the Allopathic system of medicine. He has written a book on medicine consisting of nearly seventy parts. His theory is that the heart is the centre of origin of life and the heat of the body is the manifestation of life. Out of the five elements of the Indian system of medicine he accepts four, viz. Prithvi (earth), Ap (Water), Agni (fire) and Vāyu (air). Till the 18th century A.D. his theories were very popular.

HIRANMAYA (M). A particular region in Jambū island, to the south of Nila mountain and to the north of mount Nisadhā. (Bhāgavata, vi. Skandha).

HIRANYA. (Hiranyakāśipu, Hiranyakṣiṣa)
1) General. Owing to a curse Jaya and Vijaya who were gate-keepers at Vaikuṇṭha were born as two sons, Hiranyakṣa (elder brother) and Hiranyakāśipu (younger brother). These brothers are known also as the Hiranyas. (See Jayavijaya).

2) Birth. Three sons called Hiranyakṣa, Hiranyakāśipu and Vajrāśva and a daughter, Sinhikā were born to Kaśyapaprajāpatī by his wife Diti. To Hiranyakāśipu were born four sons called Anupāla, Hāla, Nāla and Saṅhila. (Vāyu Purāṇa, Part I, Chapter 15).

There is yet another story relating to the birth of these asuras. Though the other wives of Kaśyapa became mothers Diti alone was not blessed with a child for a long time. One day at dusk while Kaśyapa was immersed in meditation Diti rushed into his room and began lamenting and complaining about her husband not having even seen a mother. And urgently asked Kaśyapa to make her one. But, Kaśyapa pointed out that it was not the proper time for such things. It was dusk when Śiva with his attendants would be out seeing nightmares covered with ashes from burning gārhapūrṇa all around by storms. So Kaśyapa wanted to wait for some time more. But, she was not in a mood to pay heed to his advice and then asked him to give her a propitiation. After obliging her, once again he took his bath and began meditation.

Diti became pregnant. She also got alarmed about the indiscretion committed at dusk time that day and, Kaśyapa told her: "Your mind became impure, you did not obey me, you insulted the Devas also. There are two kinds of drinking. There is the one which is worse. They will oppress the three worlds and kill innocent people. Mahāvīra will never tolerate such things. He will incarnate himself to kill them. But since you feel pertinent now, a grandson of yours will become liked by all good people, and he will be a very great devotee of Mahāvīra. (This was Prahlāda).

At any rate, one hundred years after her getting pregnant Diti delivered two sons. The first born was named Hiranyakṣa and the next one Hiranyakāśipu. (According to certain Purāṇas Hiranyakāśipu was the first born).

3) Hiranyakṣa. The boys grew up to become a growing menace to the whole world. Hiranyakṣa toured all the three worlds with a club. He beheaded svarga. Devas ran away in fear. Hiranyakṣa, shaking his club, jumped from the sky into the sea and engaged himself in the sport of thrashing the waves with his club. Years passed by like this, and at last he went to Viśhūvarī, the capital of Varuṇa and challenged him to fight. Varuṇa came out of the palace, admitted his incapacity to fight Hiranyakṣa, and suggested to him to challenge Mahāvīra. Accordingly Hiranyakṣa went to Mahāvīra. It was during this period of time that the earth got engulfed in water. Svaṃdhūvamanuṣṇa requested his father, Brahmā to raise up the earth from water. But nowhere could be seen the earth, everywhere it was only a vast expanse of water. Brahmā then meditated upon Mahāvīra, who came out from Brahmā's nose in the form of a tiny boat. It grew up into a very big boat within no time, and jumped from the sky into the ocean. Within a few minutes it picked up from under the ocean the earth on its tasks and appeared on the surface of the water. Hiranyakṣa understood that the boat, which without the least fear picked up the earth from the ocean was none other than Mahāvīra and he challenged Viṣṇu to fight. After placing the earth in its old position Viṣṇu fought with Hiranyakṣa and killed him.

4) Hiranyakāśipu. With the killing of his brother, Hiranyakāśipu's hatred and enmity towards Viṣṇu increased very much. He, by doing tapas for very long years, secured booms from Brahmā and conquered the three worlds and ruled them as Triloka Cakravarti (emperor of the three worlds). He prohibited throughout the empire not only the chanting of Viṣṇu's name, but even thinking about him (Viṣṇu) by his subjects. "Hiranyakṣa namah" (salutations to Hiranyakṣa) replaced the old custom of chanting 'Nārāyana namah' (salutations to Nārāyaṇa). Meanwhile, a son called Prahlāda, a great devotee of Mahāvīra was born to Hiranyakāśipu. (For the story of Hiranyakāśipu's death see Prahlāda). (Kathā Ramāyaṇa, Yuddha Kāṇḍa; Padma Purāṇa, Bhūmikhaṇḍa, Chapter 20).

5) Story about the name Hiranyakṣa. Sage Kaśyapa once conducted an Āśvamedha yajña. A golden seat was put up there for the great sages who came to participate in the yajña. Diti was pregnant during the time of the yajña, and while it was duly progressed she came and sat on the above-mentioned golden seat, and very shortly she delivered a child. As the child was delivered on the golden seat the child was called Hiranyakāśipu. (Brahmāṇa Purāṇa, 9, 5, 7 12; Vāyu Purāṇa 67, 69).

HIRANYABHū. A pāga born in Vatsaki's dynasty. He was born to death at the son's sacrifice of Janamejaya. (Arjuna, Chapter 5, Verse 6).

HIRANYABINDU. A sacred place near the Himālayas. During his pilgrimage Arjuna visited this place also. A bath in this tirtha will wash off one's sins. Hiranyakbindu is situated on the top of Mount Kālaśāra.

HIRANYAHASTA. A son born to princess Vadhramat thanks to the blessing of the Āśvīndevas. She was married by a eunuch. Surrounded at such a marriage the princess requested the Āśvīndevas for children and they gave her a son, (Ṛṣyveda, Maṇḍūkā 1, Anuvāka 17, Śāktī 116) who was called Hiranyahasta. He became a sage and married the beautiful daughter of King Madiraśva. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 234, Verse 33).

HIRANYAKAŚIPU. I. (See Hiranya).

HIRANYAKAŚIPU II. A dānava. He once shook Mount Meru and Siva granted him welfare and prosperity. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 14, Verse 73).

HIRANYAKAŚA I. A brother of Hiranyakāśipu. (See Hiranya).

HIRANYAKAŚA II. One of the sons of Viśvavātra, who was a Brahmacādi. (Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 52).

HIRANYANĀBHA I. A King born in the solar dynasty. He was the son of Tivrī and the father of Puyā. (Bhāgavata, 9th Skanda).

HIRANYANĀBHA II. A son of Śrījaya. A child named Suvarṇapāthilu was born to Śrījaya, but it died before long, and then it was Nārada who brought it. back to life again. After its rebirth the child came to be called Hiranyanābha also. Hiranyanābha lived for 1000 years. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 149).

HIRANYAPURAM. A city of the Daiyais. The Daiya woman, Pulomā got the city for her children by tapas. Pulomā is known as Kālaka also. (Certain Purāṇas aver that Kālaka was the sister of Pulomā). The children of Pulomā are known as Kālakayas for whose safety and security she did tapas for 1000 years. And, when Brahmā asked her to choose any boon she desired, Pulomā said as follows:- “There should arise no reason or cause for my sons to feel sorrow in their life; Devas, snakes or Rākṣasas should not kill them and they must have a beautiful city to live in. Brahmā granted her all the boons. Hiranyapura was built by Brahmā for the Kālakayas to live in. It was full of gems and it could easily travel in the sky.

When life became impossible for the Devas due to the deprivations of the Kālakayas, Indra brought Arjuna to Devaloka. As the Kālakayas were granted the boon that they would not be killed by the Devas, Arjuna’s help had thus to be sought by Indra. Arjuna killed the Kālakayas and destroyed Hiranyapura. (Vana Parva, Chapter 22). On one occasion the sage Nārada gave a correct description of Hiranyapura to Māṇiśī, the charioteer of Indra. (Udyoga Parva, Chapter 100).

HIRANYARETAS. One of the sons of Priyavrata. Hiranyaretas was king of the Kuśa island and had seven sons called Vana, Vamdana, Dṛgharuci, Nābhigupa, Satyavrata, Vīkṣita and Vīraṇadeva. (Bhagavata 5th Skandha).

HIRANYAROMAN. A king of Vidarbha who excelled in suzerainty over the southern regions. He was also known as Bhūmaśa. (See Bhūmaśa).

HIRAYASARAS. An ancient chhita of the western regions. Gandā washed off his sins by bathing here. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 342, Verse 57).

HIRANYAŚRIGAM. An extensive mountain to the north of Mahācatwa, which is to the north of Mount Kailāsa. This mountain is said to be a mine of gems. (Sabha Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 10; Bhīma Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 12).

HIRANYASTUPA. A great sage, the son of Āṅgiras. (Rāgveda, Maydāla 1, Antvāka 7, Sūkta 31).

HIRANYAVARMAN. A king of Daśāṛa. His daughter was married by Sīkhaṇḍi. (See Sīkhaṇḍa).

HITOPADESA. A book written in Sanskrit on the basis of the Pāñcatantra. It is a collection of forty-three stories, and twenty-five of the stories are found in the Pāñcatantra. There is also not much difference in the stories, about the origin of the two books. The author of Hitopadeśa is considered to be one Nārāyaṇa Pundita, a dependant of King Dvālakandra. Of the manuscripts available of the book, the oldest one is dated 1373 A.D. It has been surmised that the book was written somewhere between the 10th and 12th centuries A.D.

There are four parts to the book called Mitralabhā (gaining friends), Subhedha (creating dissension between friends) Vighraha (separation) and Sandhi (union).

HLĀDA (HLĀDA). A synonym for Hrāda, son of Hiranyakāśipu. (See Hrāda).

HLADINI. A tributary of the Gaṅgā. Gaṅgā brought down by Bhagrattha to the earth first fell on Siva's head and thence on Bhu-dhara, and therefrom flowed in seven tributaries. Three tributaries, Hīdānī, Pāvant and Nalini flowed eastwards, Sneakṣas, Sītā and Sindhu westwards, and the seventh tributary followed Bhagrattha. The mortal remains of the sons of Sagarā were flooded with its waters, and their souls attained heaven.

HOMA. A king belonging to the dynasty of Bharata. He was the son of Kṛishnaṇa and father of Śūtapas. (Bhagavata, 9th Skandha).

HOMADHENU. The cow, which offers milk needed for yajña.

HOMAKUNDA (M). The pit for making offerings during yajñas. Rules about making the pit are described in chapter 24 of the Agni Purāṇa as follows:—

First, demarcate a piece of ground one yard square with thread and digit one yard deep. After leaving two angulas (inches) space on all the four sides of the pit make three divisions in it. The three divisions should be 12" × 8" and 4" deep; the inner division 12" deep, the middle one 8" and the one outside of it 4" deep. All the three divisions should be four feet in width. The above three divisions are called Sāvamakhalā, RaJKomakha and Tīrthamakhalā, and this is the pit, viz. Homakunḍa. On the western side of it a yoni (receptacle) 10 × 15 angulas should be made. Its depth should gradually decrease in the descending order 6, 4, 2 angulas. In shape the yoni will be of the shape of the peepal leaf. (Yoni is that of Śakti; the Kundā is her stomach. The conception about Śakti is that of a woman lying on her back, head towards the east.). The priest performs the rites, himself seated to the west of the yoni and his head turned to the east.

HOTRAVHANA. A saintly king, who was the grand-father of Aunbā. (See under Aunbā).

HĪRĀDA I. Also called Hīrāda, a son of Hiranyakāśipu. (See under Anirudda).

HĪRĀDA II. A nāga. Hīrāda was also present in the company of nāgas, which carried the soul of Balabhadracarya to Patāla. (Mausūla Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

HRAIDOVARA. A Rākṣasa, who was killed by Subrahmanyas in the war between the Devas and the Aūtras. (Salya Parva, Chapter 46, 75).

HṚDIKA. A Yādava. He was the father of Kṛṣvarma. (Adi Parva, Chapter 63, Verse 105).

HṚDĪYA. A great sage. He lives in the assembly of Indra. (Sā pada Parva, Chapter 7, 13).

Hṛ. 1) Birth. One of the 16 daughters born to Śvāyambhuvarmanu by his wife called Śatārūpā. (Bhagavata, 4th Skandha).

2) Other information. (1) Hṛdevī worships Brahmā in his assembly.

(2) When Arjuna started for Indraloka Draupadi meditated upon Hṛ to that no dangers might overtake him. (Vana Parva, Chapters 37, 38).

(3) Hṛ too was present at the installation ceremony of Subrahmanyas. (Salya Parva, Chapter 45, 13).

Hṛiman. A Śānatanavādeva, (eternal Deva of the universe). (Anuśaman Parva, Chapter 91, 31).

Hṛinīṣeva. A saintly king born in the Auras dynasty. He was one of the ancient kings whom fate had made to relinquish their kingdoms. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 227, 31).
HCHU. A Gandharva, son of Kaśyapa-prajāpati by Prahlāda.
(1) He was present at the birthday celebrations of Arjuna. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 122, Verse 59).
(2) Hūhū was among the Gandharvas who welcomed Arjuna in Devaloka. (Vana Parva, Chapter 48, Verse 14).
(3) Hūhū lives in Indrasabhā.
(4) Once he turned into an alligator on account of the curse of Devala. (See under Indradhumma).

HCNA. A tribe. There are a number of references in the Purāṇas to the Hānas, who were created from the foth in the mouth of Nandī, the cow which was in Vaśiṇī's asūma (Ādi Parva, Chapter 174, Verse 10). Nakula conquered the Hānas in the western regions. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 32). The Hāna kings took part in the Rājāyāya of Yuddhishthira and made costly presents. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 51, Verse 24).

HCNDY. An asura, the son of Vipracitī. (He abjured Asokaṃvarī, sister of Subhadraṇya. (Padmini Purāṇa). (See under Asokaṃvarī).

HUNGA(M). An urban region in anc. in India. The people of this area were known as Huna. In the great war they fought on the side of the Pāṇḍavas. They took their positions in the Kraunārūna vyuḥa formed by Pukula and Subhadraṇa. (Bhishma Parva, Chapter 50, Verse 51).

HUTA(M). One of the five great vajīas. (See Prathuan).

HUTAHIYAVĀHA. One of the two sons of Dhara, the Vasu, the other son being Dravina. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 21).

IKSVĀKU. A tribe. A synonym for Kāśyapa. (See under Kāśyapa).
ILA 1. Daughter of Vaivaisvata Manu.
1) Genealogy. Descended from Visvó in this order:
Brahma—Marico—Kausíyapu—Vaivaisvata Manu—Ilā.
Vaivaisvata Manu was the son of Kausíyapu by his wife Ardhī, and Ilā the daughter of Vaivaisvata Manu by his wife, Sradhā. Iksvák, the ancestral father of the solar dynasty of kings was brother of Ilā.
2) Vaivaisvata Manu and Sradhā had, for a long time no children. Manu got performed once by Agastya a yajña to propitiate the Mitra-Varuṇas so that a son might be born to him (Manu). Soon a daughter was born to him and she was called Ilā. Then Manu asked Visistha why a daughter was born to him instead of a son for whom the yajña was performed by Agastya. At once, Visistha by his will-power turned the girl Ilā into a boy, and the boy was named Sudyymuna. (Bhágavata).
3) Sudyumna again turned into woman. Once Sunaka and some other sages went to the great forest Kumāra Vana near Kálāśa to salute Śrī Paramajiva ignorant of the fact that just then Pārvatī and Parmesvāra were enjoying themselves. The sudden appearance of Sunaka and others was not relished by the divine couple, who were then naked. They therefore, pronounced the curse that anybody who entered the forest in future would be turned into a woman. (Bhágavata).
Sudyumna, now a young man, went for hunting one day.
Sudyumna who was ignorant of this curse entered the forest with his friends while hunting. At once all of them were transformed into women. Grief-stricken, they stayed in the forest for some days, and then started for the palace. Sudyumna bearing the name Ilā walked at the head of the party as a beautiful woman. On the way Buddha met Ilā, they fell in love with each other and got married. A son, Purūravas was born to Buddha by Ilā. (Bhágavata).

‘4) Transformation again; Ilā expressed to Vasiṣṭha, her grief at having been turned into a woman, the sage requested Śrī Paramajiva to restore her to her former form as a man. Śiva said that Ilā would be a man and a woman every alternate month, throughout life.
During the month when she was a man, he would engage himself in matters of Government, and the next month, when a woman, she would stay in the inner apartments in the palace. Brahmapāta Puruṣottama, Chapter 32 says that Kṣaya, brother of Purūravas ruled the state till the latter became a major. As soon as Purūravas attained majority Sudyumna handed over to him the reins of Government and retired to the forest for tapas, and during this period he was taught the Navākṣara mantra by sage Nārada. Sudyumna adored Devi with this Mantra. She appeared to him and blessed him with the state of salvation. Purūravas married Urvākula, and ruled the country. (Bhágavata, 5th Skandha; Devi Bhágavata, First Skandha; M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 75 and Anuśāsana
Parva, Chapter 147, Verse 26).

ILA 31. A river. At the birth of Surākumārya this river paid homage to him with fruits and roots. (M.B. Anu-śāsana Parva, Chapter 86, Verse 24). Dharmapura along with the brahmans bathed in this river. (M.B.
Vana Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 8).

ILAŚPADA. An ancient holy bathing ghat. A dip in the holy waters wards off ill-fate and confers the benefits of the Vaiśāpeya yajña. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Verse 77, 78).

ILAŚVARTA (ILAŚVARTA). A King in the line of Priyāv son of Śrīyamśika Manu. (See Genealogy).
ILĀŚVARTA (ILAŚVARTA). A locality. (See Bhágunāta).
ILĀŚVARTA VARŚA. That part of the country in the centre of Jamādibīpa. (M.B. Saśā Parva, Chapter 28).

ILAVU. See Vāyu, Para 6.

ILIBILÁ. The wife of Viśravas and mother of Kubera.
Viśravas was born as the son of Palaśya, one of the Prajāpatis by Mānī. Viśravas had two wives, Kuśāri and Pīlāli aikus Devāvarṇini and Viśravāna (Kubera) was born of Ilisī. Hemu Kulāner, is called Aśvālī also; Viśravas was born by Kuśāri, Kāvāna, Viśi-ghaṇa, Kumbhakarna and Śārpunakha.

ILILA. A King of Pūravas, father of King Dasyuṭa.
(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 71). Rathantari was Ilīla’s wife. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 74). Some Purūras call Ilīla by the name Ilīna and Rathantari as Rathandari
also.

Maināra, the most righteous of Kings had four sons edowed with great prowess named Tā延u, Mahān, Anrathā and Drūṣu. Tā延u was responsible for the growth of the Pūrā dynasty. He conquered the whole of the earth and won fame. Ilīla was Tā延u’s son. He also conquered the whole world, and he had five sons.
(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Verses 14-18).

ILINA. Son of king Tā延u of the Pūrā dynasty. His wife was Rathantari. Ilīna had five sons by her. They were; Dasyuṭa, Sūru, Bhūma, Pravasu and Vasu.
(M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapters 16-18. See also under the word Ilīla).
ILLAKA. A person who led a very ideal family life. Son of a Vaisya in the city of Mathura, Illaka had a very beautiful wife. Illaka had one day to go to another place and his wife wanted to accompany him. But, Illaka did not allow that and went alone. Then she waited at the gates looking towards the husband moving fast away. And, when he completely disappeared from sight she, who could not bear the separation, fell down on the spot and expired. Illaka heard about the death and without delay, he hurried back home. He placed the dead body of his wife on his lap and wept. Weeping thus he also expired. (Kathāsāristāgāra, Lāvānakalambaka, Tārānga 1)

ILVĀLA An Asura, who lived in the Manimati city. Ilvaka and his brother Viṣṇu ate up a number of brahmins and Agastya cursed them to death. (Sri Agastya).

INDIA. 'North Sarakhi', a newspaper published from the United Arab Republic with the assistance of the Indian Embassy gives the following account of how the land originally known as 'Bhārata' came to be called India. The name 'India' was given to 'Bhārata' by the Arabs. Even from very early times, the Arabs used to give the name 'Hind' to their girls. In ancient Arabic love poems, this name could be seen very frequently. There were commercial and cultural contacts between Bhārata and Arab lands, from very old times. The words 'Kharān Fīl' (spices) 'Pulēl' (Pepper) etc. may be seen in Arabic poems of the pre Islam period. These contacts became more intimate in later years and the Arabs began to take very great interest in the products and the people of this country. They began to come to the country in large numbers and these contacts continued right up to the middle of the 19th century. The word 'Hind' means 'person' which they used for their own people. They began to use the term 'Al Hind' when referring to Bhārata in their poems, records and trade agreements. In course of time this was shortened to 'Hind' and finally became INDIA.

INDIVARĀKṢĀ. A Gaurīharva. He was the son of Nārāyana, the chief of the Vidyāharas. There is a story about this Gaurīharva in Mārākandeyā Purāṇa, Chapter 60.

Indivārākṣa went to the sage Brahmanitra to learn Ayurveda. For some unknown reason, from the sage did not teach him. Indivārākṣa decided to learn by overhearing the guru taught the other pupils from a hiding place. In six months' time he learned Ayurveda. Overjoyed at the thought that he was able to acquire as much learning in this science as the other pupils, within such a short time, and oblivious of his surroundings, he laughed loudly. The guru who understood the secret, uttered a curse that he would become a Rakṣasa within seven days. The repentant Indivārākṣa begged for his pardon. In the sage told him that he would be restored to his own form and give up the Rakṣasa shape when he was shot with arrows by his own children.

Once when he approached his daughter Manorāma to devour her, her son-in-law, Svarocīs, who had learnt the science of archery from that girl, defeated him. In this way, Indivārākṣa got his own former form. After that he taught Svarocīs, the science of archery which he had learnt from his own daughter and also from Brahmanitra.

INDIVARASENA. Son of Parītyagāsena a King who ruled the city of Iravati. Parītyagāsena had two queens—Adhikāsamangā and Kavyālakā. As they had no children, the distressed King with his queens worshipped the goddess Durgā. Durgā gave the King two fruits. She blessed that the queens would bear children when they ate the fruits. Adhikāsamangā ate both the fruits without showing them to the other wife. Two sons were born to her. Divvarasena was the elder son. (Kathāsāristāgāra, Ratnaprabhā Lāmabaka, 8th Tārānga).

INDRA.

2) Birth. Kāyapa was born to Marici, the eldest of the spiritual sons of Brahmā. Indra was the son of Kāyapa and Aditi, the eldest daughter of Dakṣa. The twelve sons who were born to Kāyapa and Aditi are called Adityas. The twelve Adityas are—Dhātā, Aryanā, Mitra, Rudra, Varuna, Sūrya, Bhāgā, Vivasvat, Śāśi, Vivaś, and Viṣṇu. In addition to them, Aditi had twentyone sons more. Indra is the eldest of the 33 sons. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 65, Verses 9-15).

Indra became the ruler of the Devas. Airāvata is Indra's elephant, Ucchāśravasa, his horse, and Vajra his weapon. (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 31, M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 18).

3) Indra and Garuda. Kāyapa had two sons, Garuda and Aruna by Vinatā and a large number of Nāgas by his other wife, Kādrī. Kādrī and her children kept Vinatā and her son Garuda as their servants. Kādrī agreed to let them free if they brought Amṛta from Devaloka.

Once Kādrī and her children asked Garuda to carry them to the beautiful Nāgālaya in the middle of the ocean. Garuda carried them on his shoulders and flew very high near the sky. The excessive heat of the sun made the Nāgas unconscious. Kādrī, in her distress, prayed to Indra. Indra showered rain and cooled the atmosphere. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 25, Verses 7-17). They reached the lovely island in the middle of the ocean.

Garuda decided to earn his freedom by bringing Amṛta from Devaloka. With determination, he flew up into heaven and secured Amṛta. The enraged Indra attacked him with his weapon, Vajra. But Garuda spread his feathers in such a way that he was not wounded. Indra was struck with wonder, and pleased with the beautiful feathers (Parpa) of Garuda, named him 'Supamra'. At last Indra allowed Garuda to take Amṛta with him. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 32, Verses 18-25).

4) How Indra came to have 1000 eyes. (See Tilottamā, 2nd Para).

5) Indra and Arjuna. (1) Kuntī, Pāṇḍu's wife had received five mantras from Durvīśas for begetting sons. One of those Mantras was chanted meditating on the sun even before she was married and Kārṇa was born. After marriage she used three more of the Mantras and three sons were born to her from Yama, Vīyu and Indra respectively. The fifth Mantra was presented to Mādri the other wife of Pāṇḍu. Thus Arjuna was the son of Kuntī by Indra. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 123).

(2) There is a story of a rivalry between Indra and Arjuna in the Mahābhārata. (See under 'Kṣṇḍa-vadāhā').
(3) During their life in the forest, once Arjuna started to Kailasa to worship Siva. On the way Indra appeared before him and answered his blessings on him. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 41, Verses 15, 16).

(4) During his life in the forest, Indra presented to Arjuna who visited him in Indra's residence, a Gauda Parva named Citrasena as his companion. Citrasena taught him music, dance, etc. (M.B. Aranya Parva, Chapter 44, Verse 9).

(5) At the palace of Indra, as secretly instructed by Indra, Urvashi approached Arjuna with advances of love. Arjuna who refused to yield to her temptations was turned into a cunuch by her curse. But Indra lifted the curse by saying that this curse would be an advantage to him during the incognito life of the Pandavas. It was Citrasena who was used as a tool by Indra to test Arjuna's self-control. (M.B. Aranya Parva, Chapters 44, 45).

(6) In order to ensure Arjuna's victory in battle, Indra, disguised as a Brahmin, obtained by begging Karna's ear-rings. (M.B. Aranya Parva, Chapter 310).

5) Indra and Vrtra'sa. A famous exploit of Indra was the killing of Vrtra'sa. Under the leadership of Vrtra'sa, the Kasisvayans and many other Aryan races perished. The battle raged furiously. Vrtra fell down unconscious owing to the shower of arrows from Vrtra. At once Vrsi put his divine power restored Indra to consciousness. Finding it impossible to kill Vrtra, the omnipious Devas under the leadership of Indra approached Mahavishnu. Vishnu told them that Vrtra could be killed only with the bone of the sage Dandaka. So all of them approached Dandhaka. Realizing the situation, Dandhaka let Indra have his bone for the purpose. Indra made his weapon Vajra with that bone and receiving a fatal stroke from it, Vrtra fell down dead. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 101, Verses 14, 15; Santi Parva, Chapter 281. Verses 13-21).

By killing Vrtra Indra incurred the sin of Brahmahaty. To expiate for this sin the Devas and Rishis took Indra to the Sasvay river and performed his holy bath there. (Vimalak Rama, Bala Kanda, 24th Sarga). (For further details about Vrtra'sa see under Vrtra'sa).

7) Indra and Cyavana. Indra did not allow the Asvindevas to drink soma juice. The sad Asvindevas left Indraloka and while passing through a forest, they met Sukanyu, wife of the sage Cyavana. She was extremely beautiful. The Asvindevas advised her to become their wife instead of being the wife of the blind Cyavana. But Sukanyu rejected their advice. Pleased by her conjugal fidelity, they restored Cyavana's eyesight and made him a youth with beautiful eyes. In his gratitude, Cyavana promised to get permission for them to drink soma juice. He performed a yaga. Indra, Asvin devas and other gods attended it. Indra insisted that the Asvins should not be allowed to drink Soma juice. Cyavana disputed with him and in the dispute Indra was defeated. From that time the Asvins were allowed Soma drinking. See also 'Cyavana'. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 124, Verse 14; Anuvasa Parva, Chapter 154).

8) Indra and Trisirah. Indra's brother TVastra did not like some of Indra's activities. With the object of rebuking Indra, Tvastra begot a son named Vivasuvra. Vivasuvra had three faces and so he was also called Trisirah. With one face he used to recite Vedas, with the second he drank alcohol and he used the third face for observing the world. He performed a rigorous tapas. Indra, who was alarmed at it, sent goddesses to allure him, but in vain. At last Indra himself went to the forest riding on his elephant Airavata and killed Trisira with his Vajradyudha. In his violent fury he had the three heads of Trisira cut by a carpenter. From that day, it was ordained that the head of the cow sacrificed at yaga should be given to a carpenter. Tvastra who was enraged by Indra's killing of his son Trisira, begot another son Vrtra'sa. (Devil Bhangavata, 6th Skanda).

9) Indra and Nahuva. See the word Agastya.

10) Indra and Balī. When Indra defeated and drove away the Asuras, Mahabali, the Asura emperor assumed the form of an ass and hid himself in an empty house. Brahman informed Indra of this. Indra found him out there, but set him free without killing at the behest of Brahman. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 223).

11) Indra and Yasya. Yasya was the son of Nahuva. In his old age, he handed over the kingly duties to his younger son Puru and went to the forest for performing penance. After penance, he reached Indraloka in the end. Indra did not like Yasya's boast that there was none who had greater power of tapas than himself. Indra pushed him down to the world. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 88).

12) Indra and Saradbohum. Saradbohum was born as the son of Sage Gautama. Saradbohum started a penance for acquiring divine arrows. Indra sent the Asvins woman, Jānapati to obstruct his tapas. Indra, affected by her irresistible charm and fascinated by her temptations, he had an involuntary emission of semen, which fell on the Saradambika and split itself into two parts. Two children a boy and a girl, were born from it. The King's servants brought them to Hastinapura. The boy was named Krapa and the girl was named Kralp. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 130).

13) Indra and King Kurū. The King named Kurū was once ploughing the field at the place known as Kurukṣetra. (This was long before Kurukṣetra became famous as the battlefield of Bhārata Yuddha). Indra who happened to come that way at the time, seeing the King tilling the land, asked him why he was doing so. The King replied that he was performing a yaga to enable the men whofell dead there, to attain Heaven. Indra returned to Heaven, smiling. Other devas came to know of this from Indra. They said that if all men came to Devaloka, the share of yajña which was too be received by the gods, would be diminished and so they advised Indra to go and give some boon to King Kurū, he returned to earth and gave his blessing to Kurū as follows: The following classes of people will attain heaven if they die there (at Kurukṣetra).

1) Those who die of starvation.
2) Those who die fighting heroically.
3) Those who were men in their previous life, but who have been born as women.

From that time Kurukṣetra became an important place. (M.B. Sāliya Parva, Chapter 53).

14) Indra and Takṣaka. Indra's friend, a Naga named Takṣaka lived in Khaḍgava forest. When Agni burned Khaḍgava forest, Indra caused the rain to fall in order to save Taksaka. See under ‘Khandavāḍa’.” (M.B. Aranyā Parva, Chapter 235).

For the story of how Indra saved Taksaka from the Sarpasena see under ‘Āstikā’.

15) Indra and Khandavāḍa. At the time of Khandavāḍa, Śri Kṛṣṇa and Arjuna fought against Devendra.

16) Indra Subhā. Maya undertook to build a subhā (water hall) for the Pāṇḍavas at Indraprastha. When it was being discussed, the sage Nārada described to them Indra’s subhā as given below:

Indra has a subhā which dazzles with divine effulgence. It is 150 yojanas in length and 100 yojanas in breadth. It has a height of five yojanas. Beautiful storied buildings and divine trees add to the grandeur of the subhā. Indra is seated within the holy light in it. Śatdevi takes her seat near him. Indra is as handsome. He wears a crown, he is dressed in spotlessly pure clothes, and wears a garland round his neck. Maruts, Siddhas, Devas, Rsis and a host of others stand around attending on them. They are all bright with the halo of fire. Parāśara, Parvata, Sāvānta, Gaiāva, Śundhūr, Lohitā, Gaurikā, Devi-vas, Akramā, Śikrīkā, Dirghālamas, Paticrāpaṇī, Bāhuvi, Yaśāvallikya, Uddālaka, Śvetaketu, Pādycya and other famous sages are members of Indra’s assembly. In this way, Indra’s Subhā is the most magnificent. (M.B. Subhā Parva, Chapter 7).

17) Indra and Kāmadhenu. Once Indra saw Surabhi, the Kāmadhenu, crying in the Indraloka. He asked her what was the matter. Surabhi answered, “My Lord, the cow, who are my children, are grazing in the world under the yoke of the farmer. I was overwhelmed with grief at the sight of their sufferings.” Indra’s heart melted due to Kāmadhenu’s tears. He caused very heavy showers in the world when ploughing the fields became impossible. In this way at a result of Surabhi’s tears Indra caused the great hill, which gave rest to the cattle in the world. (M.B. Aranyā Parva, Chapter 3).

18) Indra and Nala. Nala proceeded to Vidarbhā to attend Damayantī’s Svayamvara. On the way, the four gods, Indra, Agni, Varuṇa and Yama met him. (For further details see the word ‘Nala’). Nala married Damayantī with the blessings of these gods. When the devas returned, they met Kali and Devapāra to whom they described Nala’s marriage. Kali and Devapāra who wished to marry Damayantī, naturally felt disappointed and angry. Kali was about to pronounce a curse on Nala. But on the advice of Devendra he did not do so. Still he decided to gain secret entrance into Nala’s body and to bring about the loss of his Kingdom. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 36).

19) Indra and Mānduyā. King named Yuvanāśva was born in the Ikavaka dynasty. He earned great reputation by performing many Ātavamāda yāgas. But he was very much distressed because he had no children. So he entrusted his kingly duties to his ministers and proceeded to the forest. One day during his wandering he arrived at the Āśrama of the sage Bhrgu. He was tired. Bhrgu gave him thirty Bhrigu dhan. Bhrgu filled a pot with water by reciting a mantra and placing it on a low stool. He had gone to sleep. Not knowing that it was a pot of water intended to cause pregnancy, and in his intense thirst, Yuvanāśva drank water from it. He became pregnant and in due course Yuvanāśva brought forth a son. Indra, accompanied by other gods came to see the child. When the Devas asked how the child was going to drink milk, Indra put his index finger into the child’s mouth and the child began to suck it. Indra said ‘The child will drink me’. The Sanskrit words; ‘Mahā dhatu’ mean “one who drinks me”. Thus the child was named “Manduyā” by Indra and the other gods. (M.B. Aranyā Parva Chapter 256).

20) Indra and Sibi. Once two deities tested the strength of Emperor Sibi’s ‘dharma’. Indra took the form of an eagle and Agni that of a dove. The dove flew down into the lap of Sibi. The eagle pursued it. The dove entreated Sibi to save it from the eagle. Sibi promised to do so. The eagle argued that the dove was its prey and should be returned to it. But Sibi offered to give the eagle its own flesh, equal in weight to that of the dove. Accordingly, the dove was placed in one pan, but even when all the flesh from its body was cut and placed in the other pan, it did not weigh equal to the dove. At this stage, Indra and Agni appeared to Sibi in their own forms and blessed him to be more happy and prosperous than before. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 114).

21) Indra and Yavakrit. Long ago there was a sage named Yavakrit. He started a tapas with the ambition of acquiring all knowledge by himself, without the help of a Guru. Indra was alarmed at the sternness and rigour of the tapas. He induced Yavakrit to stop tapas, but it was in vain. At last Indra disguised himself as an old Brahmin and went to the bank of the Godavari, where Yavakrit was doing the tapas. He began to build a dam across the river with sand. Seeing this Yavakrit ridiculed him. The old Brahmin retorted that Yavakrit’s tapas was also equally ridiculous. But Yavakrit was not shaken even by his taunt. He resumed his tapas with renewed strength. At last finding no other alternative, Indra appeared to Yavakrit and granted his wish. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 135).

22) Lost of Indra’s umbrella. Once Narakāsura went to heaven, fought with the gods and robbed Indra of his umbrella and the earrings of Aditi, Indra’s mother. Grief-stricken Indra complained to Śri Kṛṣṇa. Accompanied by Śatyabhāmā and riding on the back of Garuda, Śri Kṛṣṇa went to the city of Prāgyottasa, the residence of Narakāsura and razed it to the ground. He recovered the umbrella and ear-rings and returned to heaven with Śatyabhāmā. Indra and Aditi were overjoyed on getting back the lost articles. On their return journey, Śri Kṛṣṇa at the request of Śatyabhāmā cut for her a twig of the Pārijāta tree. This made Indra angry and he fought against Śri Kṛṣṇa. After defeating Indra and other gods, Śri Kṛṣṇa accompanied by Śatyabhāmā returned to Devakā with the Pārijāta. (Bhagavata, 10th Skandha).

23) Indra and Narakāsura. The Āśura called Narakāsura once performed a very severe penance on the Gandhamadana mountain with the object of usurping Indra’s place. Indra was alarmed and rushed to Mahāvīśu for help. Viṣṇu went to Gandhamadana mountain and killed Narakāsura. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 142). sation about the happiness of longevity took place between Indra and sage Baka who was hundred thousand years old. After that, Indra returned to Devlokā. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 193).

25) Indra and Kesī. Long ago a terrible war took place between Devas and Asuras. At that time an Asura called Kesī attempted to abduct Devasenā, daughter of a Prajñāpati. Hearing her shrieks, Indra rushed to the spot. In the clash between Kesī and Indra, Kesī’s club was broken into two. Kesī then went to Indra. Suddenly Kesī lifted a mountain and threw it at Indra. Indra broke that mountain also into two. One part of it fell on Kesī himself, who fled frightened. After that, Indra asked Devasenā how she happened to fall in Kesī’s hands. Devasenā answered thus: “I am the daughter of Prajñāpati. My name is Devasenā. Kesī had abducted my elder sister, Dāityasenā. My sister and I used to come to take our bath in this Mānasā lake. Kesī had expressed his wish to abduct both of us. My father has given me his blessing that a person who is worshipped by gods and asuras will become my husband. Having heard these facts, Indra held consultations with Brahma and arranged the marriage between Subrahmanya and Devasenā. See also the word “Subrahmanya” (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 223).

26) Indra and Anīgarī. After killing Vṛtrājīva, Indra hid himself in a lotus flower in the Mānasā lake, to expiate for the sin of Bhrahmatāta (killing a Brahma). It was at that time that Nāhusa became Indra. After Nāhusa had been forced to go back to the earth as a serpent by the curse of Agniya, the Devas brought back his body and Indra named it in Vājī’s name. mantras from Athavaveda. From that day Anīgarī got the name of ‘Athavāṅgirās’. Indra was pleased and blessed Anīgarī that his name would become famous throughout the world. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 18).

27) Indra and the Bow called Vijaya. Kannā had a bow called Vijaya. It was made by Vīvakarmā according to Indra’s liking. (M.B. Kannā Parva, Chapter 31, Verse 42).

28) Indra and the Tripuras. The Tripurās performed penance and received boons from Brahma. After that they clashed with Indra. Indra was not able to kill them. The vanquished Indra had the Tripuras killed by Siva. See the word “Tripura”. (M.B. Kannā Parva, Chapter 33).

29) Indra and Sīrūya (the sun-god). When Kannā and Arjuna came into conflict at the Bhārata battle, a controversy raged in heaven between Indra and Sīrūya. Indra argued that Arjuna would win, while Sīrūya asserted that Kannā would gain victory. The Devas joined the side of Arjuna and Asuras joined Kannā’s side. In the end, Arjuna came out victorious and thus Sīrūya was defeated by Indra. (M.B. Kannā Parva, Chapter 87).

30) Indra and Namucī. The Rikṣas Namucī once evaded capture by Indra by remaining hidden in the rays of the Sun. Indra went to him and pretending friendship, promised not to kill him either with wet thing or dry things or at night or in day time. Trusting his words, Namucī came out. Then Indra cut off Namucī’s head with the froth scraped from the waves of the sea at the time of dusk. The head pursued him shouting, “You murderer of a friend, by breaking your promise!” Indra sought refuge under Brahmā. Brahmā advised him to bathe in Soapunyā tirthā to expiate for the sin. Accordingly Indra bathed in the river Sarasvatī and washed off his sin.

River Sarasvatī. There is a story about how Sarasvatī river became Soapunyā tirthā. There were frequent quarrels between Vasiṣṭha and Vīvāmūtra. Once Vīvāmūtra got angry when he came to know that Vasiṣṭha was performing a penance on the banks of the river Sarasvatī. He then sent a curse to her to produce Vasīṣṭha before him immediately. Sarasvatī was in a dilemma. If she brought Vasiṣṭha to Vīvāmūtra, Vasiṣṭha would curse her; if on the other hand, she did not bring him Vīvāmūtra would curse her. At last she decided to produce Vasiṣṭha before Vīvāmūtra. By eroding the earth on her bank little by little near the place where Vasiṣṭha was performing his penance, Sarasvatī managed to bring him down into her own current. Then she carried him floating down to the place where Vīvāmūtra was waiting. When Vasiṣṭha reached his present, Vīvāmūtra was pleased. But without allowing Vīvāmūtra to capture Vasiṣṭha she took him away in her current, eastwards. Enraged at this, Vīvāmūtra performed a curse that blood should flow through the river Sarasvatī. Thus the water in the river became blood-red. The great sages who came there afterwards sympathised with Vasiṣṭha in her ill-luck and as a result of their prayers Śiva made her Soapunyātirthā.

It was in this river that Indra took his bath and washed off his sin. (M.B. Śaiva Parva, Chapter 43).

31) Indra and Śrutāvāti. Indra and Śrutāvāti (Śrutāvāti) performed a very severe penance to get Indra as her husband. To test her character, Indra assumed the shape of Vasiṣṭha and went to Śrutāvāti. She received the guest with due reverence. Indra, pleased with her treatment, the guest handed her five raw fruits and asked her to cook them for him. Śrutāvāti gladly undertook that service. She proceeded to cook the fruits but even after burning all the fuel she had, the fruits were not properly cooked. So she began to use her limbs one by one as fuel and burned them up. Indra was deeply impressed by her self-sacrifice and appearing to her in his own form married Śrutāvāti. (M.B. Śaiva Parva, Chapter 49).

32) Indra became Sātakratu. Indra performed one hundred sacrifices at the place called Indraśrī. Thus he became Sātakratu. It was there that he gave much wealth to Bṛhaspati (M.B. Śaiva Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 2).

33) Indra became a bird. Once Indra took the form of a bird and went to the forest and preached moral and spiritual duties to the sages who had gathered there. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 11).

34) Indra and Damda. Once Damda received a boon from Indra that he should have plenty of food and enough travellers to eat it. (M.B. Śanti Parva, Chapter 29, Verses 120, 121).

35) Indra and Bḥāspati. Once Bṛhaspati told Indra that everything in the world could be achieved with soothing speech. (M.B. Śaiva Parva, Chapter 84, Verse 2). Bṛhaspati’s wife Tārā once fell in love with Candra (the Moon god). She deserted Bṛhaspati and went to live in Candra’s residence. Bṛhaspati complained about it to Indra. Indra promised to bring her back and to restore her to Bhṛṣpati by whatever means possible. Accordingly he sent a messenger to Candra. Compromising talks with Candra ended in failure. So preparations were started for a dreadful war between Indra and Candra. Sukra, the preceptor of Asuras also joined the side of Indra. Brahmā who came to know of all this, came riding on his swan and reconciled Indra and Candra. As directed by Brahmā, Candra agreed to restore Tārā to her lawful husband, Bhṛṣpati, (Devī Bhāgavata, First Skanda).

36) Indra and Prahlāda. The great King Prahlāda once conquered Heaven. Indra, who lost his kingdom and glory, accepted Bhṛṣpati’s advice and went to meet Sukrācārya. Sukra told Indra that Prahlāda was the noblest person and that he had earned that nobility by his good qualities. Indra decided to acquire those good qualities from Prahlāda.

Indra disguised himself as a Brahmin boy and approached Prahlāda with a request for moral and spiritual advice. Prahlāda accepted him as his pupil and gave him moral and spiritual advice. Please with the pupil’s advice, Prahlāda agreed to give him whatever he wanted. The pupil said that he wanted only the good qualities of the Guru. Prahlāda agreed to it. Then a shadow-like figure appeared to emerge from Prahlāda’s body. Prahlāda who was puzzled asked the figure: “Who are you?” “The figure answered: “I am your virtuous character. Now I am leaving you and entering this boy’s body.” Saying thus it left Prahlāda’s body and entered Indra’s body. Following it, all the good qualities of Prahlāda, like charity, truth, glory etc. entered Indra’s body one after another. It was only in the end that Prahlāda came to know that the cunning pupil was Indra. Thus from that day, Prahlāda began to decline in his good qualities and Indra began to prosper. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 124).

37) Indra and Gautama. There is a story in the Mahābhārata, of how Indra restored life to a dead Brahmin. Gautama was a Brahmin who had left his own home and settled down to live in the village of Daśyus (an aboriginal tribe). He married from a low caste and allowed the deceitful Daśyus to conquer him. At that time another Brahmin happened to come across him. He ridiculed Gautama who had lost his caste. Next morning Gautama left his residence and went to another place. Tired after his long journey, he fell asleep under a banyan tree. A King of birds named Nāḍījaṅgha lived on that tree. Nāḍījaṅgha who was the son of Kaśyapa, became very friendly with Gautama. He brought fish from the river Ganges to feed Gautama and fanned him with his wings. Gautama told the bird that he was a poor Brahmin and that he was anxious to get some wealth. There was a wealthy Rākṣasa King named Virūpākṣa in that country, who was a close friend of Nāḍījaṅgha. Nāḍījaṅgha sent Virūpākṣa to Gautama with a request to give Gautama some wealth. Virūpākṣa gave plenty of gold to Gautama. He returned to the foot of the banyan tree carrying the gold on his head. Gautama who was quite tired after his long walk, was hospitably received by Nāḍījaṅgha. That king bird lay asleep close by Gautama. An evil desire to eat the flesh of Nāḍījaṅgha dawned upon the mind of Gautama. He killed that King of birds in his sleep. Virūpākṣa who came to know of this, killed Gautama and gave his flesh as food for Daśyus. Virūpākṣa, with tears in his eyes, made a funeral pyre and cremated Nāḍījaṅgha’s body. At that time, as directed by Brahmā, Surabhi caused milk to flow from heaven and revived Nāḍījaṅgha. Virūpākṣa told the whole story to Indra who came there at that time. Indra said that Nāḍījaṅgha died as the result of Brahmā’s curse. He had offended Brahmā on a former occasion by refusing to attend Brahmā’s assembly, although he was invited. Nāḍījaṅgha who was restored to life, was noble enough to request Indra to bring back Gautama also to life. Accordingly Indra revived Gautama. Nāḍījaṅgha returned the gold to Gautama and sent him away with his good wishes. Indra returned to heaven. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 173).

38) Indra and Ahālyā. Indra, once fell in love with Ahālyā, the wife of Gautama. Sage Gautama who came to know of it, cursed Indra. For further details, see under Ahālyā.

39) Indra turned into a Fox. Once a haughty Vaiśrava knocked down a young sage named Kāśyapa, with his chariot. The disgraced sage decided to commit suicide. Knowing this Indra went to the sage in the form of a fox and spoke to him, dwelling upon the evil aspects of suicide. At last the young sage gave up the idea of committing suicide and returned to his hermitage. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 130).

40) Indra and Sūraba. A long ago the Asuras led by Tārākāśa, persecuted the gods in many ways. Tārākāśa had received a boon from Brahmā that only the son born to Śiva could slay him. So, to distract Paramēśvara from his pence, in order to make it possible for him to beget a son, Indra sent Kāmadeva (god of love) to him. But Kāmadeva was burnt up in the fire from the third eye of Śiva. After that Parvati won Śiva as her husband as a result of her austere penance. She prayed to Śiva that Kāmadeva should be brought back to life and that a son should be born to her. Śiva replied to her:—

“Kāma was born from Brahmā’s mind. As soon as he was born, he asked Brahmā “Rāma, Parpura?”, which means—whom shall I love and whom shall I not love. So Brahmā called him “Kandarpum”. Brahmā had advised him even at that time that he should never tempt me. Disregarding that advice he came to attack me and I burned him up. Now it is not possible for him to be born in a physical form I shall beget of you a son with my spiritual power. I do not need the urge of Kāmadeva for this, as in the case of ordinary mortals.”

As they were discussing this problem, Indra and Brahmā arrived there. At their request Śiva agreed to beget a son by Pārvati. Since it is not desirable that all living beings should perish, Śiva allowed Kāmadeva to be born in the minds of all creatures. Brahmā and Indra returned quite happy and contented. So Śiva and Pārvati began their amorous dalliance. They did not stop it even after a hundred years. The whole world began to shake to its very foundations. Fearing that the world might perish, the devas, as ordered by Brahmā prayed to Agni, to interrupt the amorous play of Śiva and Pārvati. Agni, who understood that it was not possible to achieve their object, tried to conceal himself under water. The Devas went out in search of Agni. By that time, the creatures in the water who could not bear the heat of Agni, told them the secret. Then Agni deprived them of the power of speech by a curse. After that he went and hid himself on the Mandara mountain. Elephants and parrots disclosed the secrets of Agni, who was hiding within the hollow of the trunk of a tree. Agni deprived them of their tongues by a curse. At last the gods discovered Agni. They sent him at once to Śiva to stop him in his amorous dalliance born of his intense heat. Śiva transferred his semen to Agni who became pregnant. Being unable to bear its weight, Agni deposited it in the river Ganges, who, at the behest of Śiva himself, left it in the woods on the Mahāmeru mountain. Śiva's attendant bhūtas (spirits) offered Pūjā to it there. After a thousand years a boy with six faces (Subrahmanya) was born out of it. He was suckled by the Kṛtikās employed for that purpose by Pārvatī and the boy grew up with astonishing rapidity within a few days. Having been suckled by the Kṛtikās, the boy got the name “Kārttikeya”. In those days, Devendra who was defeated by Tārakāsura, decided to give up war and was living in Mahāmeru. The Devas and the sages used to go to Subrahmanya for protection. When Devendra knew of it, he became angry and went to war with Subrahmanya. Subrahmanya was wounded on the face with Indra's weapon. From the wound two sons named Śākha and Viṣākha were born to Subrahmanya. With their help Subrahmanya encountered Indra again. At this stage Śiva appeared there and informed Indra that Subrahmanya was still ascended in his Tātakāsura and to restore Indra's kingdom to him. It was then that Indra recognized Subrahmanya. He begged pardon of Subrahmanya and expressed his desire to install him as his military commander. When he tried to perform the ceremony of installation by sprinkling the holy water on Subrahmanya's head, the water refused to come out of the pot. Śiva told Indra that it was because he had tried to perform the installation before propitiating Ganapati. Indra then offered worship to Vighnēśvara (Ganapati) and the ceremony went off without any hitch. Subrahmanya who thus became Indra's commander, killed Tārakāsura shortly afterwards. (Kāthāśrītikeśa, Lāvākapalānabaka, 6th Tarādgā). 44] Indra and Mahābali. The vanquished Mahābali who had left his home and country was in gloom and despair when once Indra paid him a visit. At that time Mahālakṣmi emerged from Mahābali's body and entered Indra's body. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 224).

45] Indra and Godāna (gift of cow). Once Indra asked Brahmā about the efficacy of the cow and giving a cow as a gift. Brahmā told him that there is a world free from the infirmities of old age and diseases and it is called “Goloka”. He added that those who perform Godāna would get a place in Goloka.

46] Indra and a bird. A hunter in Kāśī once went to shoot birds with poisoned arrows. One of his arrows hit a big tree accidentally and the powerful poison dried up the whole tree. In the hollow of the trunk of that tree there lived a bird with mystic powers. It did not like to leave that tree which had been its refuge ever since its birth. One day Devendra, in the guise of a Brahmin came to the bird, who recognized him by its mystic power. In the conversation between them Devendra advised the bird to leave the tree and find some other suitable place for its residence. The bird did not accept his advice. Indra was pleased at the bird's loyalty and gratitude towards that tree which had been its shelter all along. So he took the bird along with him to Devakāloka. (M.B. Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 3).

47] How Indra turned Bhairagvā into a woman. There was a King named Bhairagvā. Once he performed a sacrifice called “Indrāvāśī” which was believed to have the power of blessing him with children. Indra being not invited was displeased with him and was waiting for an opportunity to wreak vengeance on him. One hundred sons were born to Bhairagvā. Once he went to the forest after entrusting the affairs of the kingdom to his sons. Indra cunningly misguided him and made him lose his way in the forest. Wandering alone with his horse in the forest, he reached the bank of a river. Weary and thirsty, he stepped down into the river. To his amazement, he was instantly transformed into a woman! The bewildered “woman” somehow reached Bhairagvā's palace. All the members of his family were deeply grieved over his change of sex. To avoid embarrassment to himself and others, Bhairagvā returned as a woman to the forest and there lived as the wife of a sage and became the mother of a hundred sons. After some years “she” went back to the palace with the sons and leaving them there returned again to the forest.

48] Indra went to the palace at this time and made the two sets of hundred sons quarrel with one another until all of them perished in fighting. Hearing about this the mother who was in the forest, wept bitterly. Indra visited her (Bhairagvā) there and told him the whole story of her misfortunes and begged his pardon for performing Indrāvāśī sacrifice without inviting Indra. Pleased with her repentance Indra promised to restore her by the end of the year to her original form. She wanted all the hundred sons who were born when she was a woman, to be restored to life. Indra was ready to restore her manhood too, but she preferred to continue as a woman. Indra restored to life all the 200 sons of Bhairagvā and leaving Bhairagvā as a woman, returned to Devakāloka. (M.B. Anuśāsa Parva, Chapter 12).

49] Indra and Matagā. A story is found in the Mahā- Bhārata under the title of “Indra-Matagā-Sanvāda” which illustrates that a Kṣatriya, Vaiśya or Śūdra can never become a Brāhmaṇa by any means. It was told by Bhīma to Arjuna as follows:—

"Long ago a Brāhmaṇa's wife gave birth to a boy. The boy was given the name Matagā. His father sent him in a chariot drawn by a donkey, in connection with a yāga which he wanted to perform. Matagā whipped the donkey mercilessly. Seeing this, the donkey's mother said to Matagā—"You are not a Brāhmaṇa, Brāhmaṇas cannot be so cruel. You are a Cāndāla (a man of the lowest caste) born to your mother by a harber." Matagā sadly returned to his father and after telling him what he had heard from the mother-donkey set out to perform an austere penance with the object of becoming a Brāhmaṇa. Devendra appeared to him and asked him what he wanted. Matagā asked for born whereby he could become a Brähmana; Indra vanished after saying that it was impossible. After that Matangī performed penance for hundred years, standing on one foot. Indra appeared again and repeated that it was impossible for Matangī to become a Brähmana. Then Matangī continued his penance for a thousand years, standing on his toe. Indra appeared again and transformed Matangī into a Deva named ‘Rakṣottara’. Indra told him that though he could become a Deva, he could never achieve Brahminhood. In his extreme grief Matangī renounced his life and entered Heaven. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapters 27, 28 and 29).

46) Indra and Sanibara. There is a story in the Mahābhārata in which an Asura named Sanibara explained the greatness of Brahminhood to Indra. Once Indra approached the Asura, Sanibara and asked him what was the source of his glory and prosperity. Sanibara replied that it was all due to his whole-hearted worship of Brähmanas. From that time Indra began to offer worship to Brähmanas and thus he won the place of Indra. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 36).

47) Indra and Ruci. There is a story in the Mahābhārata in which a sage named Vipula, who was born in the family of Bhrigu, once saved Ruci, his Guru’s wife from Indra. Long ago, a great sage named Devaserma lived in a forest. His wife Ruci being enchantingly beautiful, many ministers were attracted to her. Chief among them was Indra. Devaserma was aware of this. Once he had to leave his āstama in connection with a yajna and his disciple Vipula to guard his wife Ruci during his absence. He had given a hint to Vipula that Indra was an expert in disguises, might appear in the āstama in any form. Vipula, by means of his mystic power entered into his guru’s wife and guarded her.

After some time, Indra reached the āstama in the guise of a handsome youth. He disclosed his real identity to Ruci and told her that he had come there to spend a night with her. Ruci fell in love with him. But since she was under the mystic control of Vipula, Indra was unable to fulfill his desire. At last Vipula sent him away in disgrace. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, 44).

48) Indra’s theft of Lotus. Indra once stole Agastya’s lotus. (See under Agastya).

50) Indra’s theft of an Elephant. Indra once stole an elephant belonging to the great sage Gautama. The sage complained to Dhritarāshtra, who advised him to offer prayers to Indra. Accordingly Gautama pleased Indra by his prayers. Indra appeared and after returning the elephant took both the elephant and Gautama along with him to Devaloka. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 10).

50) Indra and Marut. Long ago there was a famous king named Marutta. Indra was closely associated with him in many of his activities. (For more details see Marutta).

51) Indra and Dharmaputra. Another anecdote about Indra which deals with the last part of Dharmaputra’s life is given in the Mahābhārata. The Pandavas, towards the end of their lives enacted the forest and were travelling to the north. Dharmaputra who was walking in front, was followed by a dog. On the way the four brothers and Pāndāśtri fell down dead. Dharmaputra continued his journey accompanied by the dog without turning back or looking behind. At the end of the journey, Indra was waiting for him with his chariot. He told Dharmaputra that his brothers and wife had already taken their places in Heaven and that he should leave behind the dog and get into the chariot to go to Devaloka. Dharmaputra pleaded that it was not right for him to enter Devaloka after deserting the dog which had followed him so far. Even though Indra pressed him very much to enter the chariot without the dog, Dharmaputra did not yield. At last the dog assumed the form of Yama who appeared and explained to them that he had taken the form of a dog and followed his son Dharmaputra to test his noble nature. They were all happy and all the three of them proceeded in the chariot to Devaloka. (M.B. Mahāprāšāntika Parva, Chapter 3).

52) Indra and Bali. In Utrata Rāmayaṇa there is a story as given below, about the birth of Bali, a son of Indra.:

Arūṇa, the charioteer of Sūrya (the sun-god) went one night to Indra-loka to see the goddesses dancing. Men were not allowed to enter the dancing hall. So, Arūṇa managed to enter the hall by disguising himself as a beautiful lady. There he met Indra with whom he fell in love with her. The name she assumed at that time was Arūṇi. Indra secretly took her outside and they had a sexual union. Bali was the son born from their union.

53) Indra’s theft of a Horse. A King named Sagara once performed a sacrifice. Devendra stole the sacrificial horse. Sagara sent all his 60,000 sons in search of the horse. They dug up the earth and went to the worlds where they saw the horse tied in front of the sage Kapila. The enraged sons of Sagara tried to capture and bind the horse. But Kapila reduced all the 60,000 princes to ashes by his curse. (Vālmīki Rāmāyaṇa, Bālākānta, Chapter 39).

54) Indra cut an embryo to pieces. Diti and Aditi were the daughters of Dakṣa. Kaśyapa married them. Indra was born as the son of Aditi. At this birth of a son to Aditi, Diti became jealous of her sister. One day she told her husband Kaśyapa that she too wanted to have a virtuous, heroic and brave son who would be equal to Indra in every respect. Kaśyapa promised to grant her wish.

In due course, Diti became pregnant. Now it was Aditi’s turn to become jealous of Diti. She could not bear the thought of Diti having a son equal to her own son Indra, in glory and splendour. So she called Indra and secretly instructed him to destroy Diti’s child in the womb, by whatever means.

In obedience to his mother, Indra approached Diti pretending friendship and spent a lot of time in her company. He soon won her confidence and love by his affectionate attentions. On one occasion, when she was in sound sleep, Indra, by his mystic power, entered into Diti’s womb with his weapon Vajra and cut the child in the womb into seven pieces. The child began to cry loudly, but Indra said “Mā ruda” which means “do not cry” and cut each of the pieces again into seven parts. Thus the embryo (child) was finally cut into forty-nine pieces, which later became the forty-nine ‘Mārusas’ or ‘Maruts’. When she woke up, Diti realized Indra’s treachery and in her fury she cursed Indra and Aditi. She cursed that Indra would lose his kingdom of Devaloka and that Aditi would be im-prized and her sons would be killed. As a result of this curse Devendra lost his kingdom on one occasion. Aditi, in her next birth, was born as Devaki, wife of Vasudeva and was imprisoned by Kansa who killed her children. (Devi Bhagavata, Fourth Skandha).

55) Indra and Ambartha.
(1) King Ambartha had a minister named Sudeva. Sudeva fell fighting in the battle-field. After some years, Ambartha died. When Ambartha arrived in Heaven, he was surprised to find that Sudeva had already secured a place there long ago. Ambartha had performed many more acts of holiness than Sudeva. Yet Sudeva attained Heaven earlier than Ambartha. Ambartha asked Indra why it was so. Indra answered that just as Ambartha had performed many sacrifices, Sudeva had performed many war-sacrifices. He added that war-sacrifices were as efficacious for attaining Heaven as other kinds of sacrifices (M.B. Santi Parva, Chapter 98).

(2) Ambartha, King of Ayodhya was performing a sacrifice. At that time, Indra had stolen the sacrificial animal. To continue the sacrifice without interruption, the King decided to substitute Śuma-apāha, the son of Rēka, for the cow. But Śuma-apāha prayed to Indra who came and rescued him from the jaws of death. (This story is given in other Purāṇas with slight variations. Vālmiki Rāmāyanya, Bāla Kānda, 61st Sarga).

56) Indra and Tretāśvam. There is a story that Indra once pushed down from Heaven, Tretāśvam a King of the Śārya vamsa (Solar dynasty). See under TIRUṆKU. 57) Indra and Vibhāṣītra. Once Vibhāṣītra observed a sacred cow, a great herdsman & many herds. At the end of that period, when he was about to take his food, Vibhāṣītra appeared in the form of a Brahmin and asked for that food. Vibhāṣītra gave that food to the Brahmin and resumed his austerities. (Vālmiki Rāmāyanya, Bāla Kānda, 5th Sarga).

58) Indra, Śrī Rāma and Sarabhaṅga. (1) At the time when Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmanma were living in the forest, one day Indra paid a visit to the Aśrama of the sage Sarabhaṅga. Devendra wished to take the sage with him to Devaloka. As they were talking, they saw Śrī Rāma coming to the Aśrama. Indra advised Sarabhaṅga to speak to Śrī Rāma and left the place. As suggested by Indra, the sage had a conversation with Śrī Rāma. After it Sarabhaṅga offered his body to the fire and went to Devaloka. (Vālmiki Rāmāyanya, Aranyaka Kānda, 5th Sarga).

(2) When the battle between Śrī Rāma and Rāvana was in progress, Indra presented to Śrī Rāma, an excellent chariot along with the horses. The chariot and horses were handed over to Śrī Rāma on the battlefield by Māttal, Indra's charioteer. Śrī Rāma fought against Rāvana from that chariot and slew him. (Vālmiki Rāmāyanya, Yudhā Kānda, Sarga 103).

(3) After the war with Rāvana, Indra appeared before Śrī Rāma and asked him what boon he wanted. Śrī Rāma replied that all those monkeys who died in the war should come back to life and the forests in which they lived should abound in fruits and flowers in all the seasons of the year. Indra restored all those monkeys to life and made all the forests in which they lived, green and rich with luxuriant vegetation (Vālmiki Rāmāyanya, Yudhā Kānda, Sarga 129).

59) Indra gives his sword for safe-custody. During their life in the forest Śrī Rāma and Lakṣmanma, accompanied by Śrī entered Daṇḍakārya. Śrī Rāma's chief object in going there was to give protection to the sages and their hermitages in the forest. But seeing that he had made the killing of Rākṣasas his main purpose, Śrī told him that this change in the objective would spoil other important matters. To illustrate this she told him the following story:—

Once upon a time, a great sage was observing holy rites with great austerity. When Indra was alarmed at it, he went to the sage's hermitage in the form of a warrior armed with a sword. Indra handed over his sword to the sage for safe custody. The sage accepted it and from that time all his attention was concentrated on the sword. All his time was spent in guarding the sword and he began to neglect his devotional duties as a sage. As a result of it his mystic power declined and ultimately he fell into Hells. (Vālmiki Rāmāyanya, Aranyaka Kānda, 9th Sarga).

60) Indra and Kāranḍa. See under Kāranḍa.

61) The Post or Office of Indra. Indra was anointed as King of Devas on Meghavāna mountain. In the 42nd Sarga of Kīśkindha Kānda of Vālmiki Rāmāyanya we find that Sugriva had ordered the monkeys to search for Śrī on that mountain also.

62) Indra and Maya. Maya, the carpenter of the Asuras, performed penance to Brahmā and acquired complete mastery in the science of carpentry and architecture. After that he constructed a forest mansion of golden coloum and took up his residence in it. Once Maya set his eyes on a goddess named Hemā. When she knew the love of Maya, Maya angrily and killed Maya with his weapon—Vajra. From that time Hemā got Maya's golden mansion. This was told by Hemā's maid, Svayamprabhā to Hanumān. (Vālmiki Rāmāyanya, Kīśkindha Kānda, 51st Sarga).

63) Indra cut off the wings of Mountaint. In Kṛtya-vyaya all the Mountains in the world had wings. They used to fly about here and there like Gandā with the speed of wind. The sages and the Devas feared that they might fall on their heads. The Devas held a conference and elected Indra to find a remedy for this. Indra cut off the wings of the mountains with his Vajra. The Maināka mountain was a friend of wind. When Indra was about to cut off the wings of that mountain, Wind suddenly removed it and deposited it in the ocean. It is out of his gratitude for this that the Maināka mountain rose up from the ocean and provided a resting place for Hanumān, the son of Wind god, when he jumped to Lanka. This story was told by Maināka mountain to Hanumān. (Vālmiki Rāmāyanya, Sundara Kānda, 1st Sarga).

64) Indra cut off his preceptor's head. Once Devendra accepted a sage named Viśvarūpā as his preceptor for a sacrifice. Viśvarūpā's mother was a Dānava paruṣin. So this priest, as directed by his mother, performed the sacrifice with the prayer—"May the gods and the Asuras prosper." As a result of the prayer, both the gods who performed the sacrifice and the Asuras who did not perform it, prospered. At this Devendra became furious and he cut off the head of the Guru. (Devi Bhagavata, 3rd Skandha).

65) Indra and Mahāśūtra. See under Mahāśūtra.

66) Indra became a bull. Long ago there was a King called Kāshaṭhva in the Ikṣvāku dynasty. When he was ruling over the kingdom of Ayodhya, a war broke out between Devas and Asuras. In that war, the Devas were not able to defeat the Asuras. Indra, in distress, approached Visnu for refuge. Visnu advised him to seek the help of Kakutthasa, King of Ayodhya. So Indra with the other gods went to Ayodhya. When Kakutthasa heard about their appeal for help, he gladly offered his help but only on condition that Indra became his vehicle. Seeing no other way, Indra assumed the form of a bull and Kakutthasa, riding on the back of the bull fought against the Asuras and defeated them. It is from that day that the King came to be called "Kakutthasa", "Indra-vihāra" and "Paranjaya". (His original name is unknown). "Kakutthasa" means the "hump of a bull" because he was seated on the "Kakut" he got the name "Kakutthasa". Because he made Indra "vihara" (vehicle) he got the name of "Indravihara". As he defeated the Asuras and captured their city (pura) he was called "Paranjaya". Kakutthasa was the son of Savīda and the father of Pṛthu. Sī Rāma is called "Kakutthasa" because he was born in the family of Kakutthasa. (Devī Bhāgavatī, 7th Skandha).

67) Indra's Tale. Devī Bhāgavatī, 8th Skandha says that Indra is one of the "Aṣṭādikāpoolikas" (the eight protectors of the quarters) and the name of his city is "Amaravati".

68) Indra’s term of Life. The Devī Bhāgavatī 5th Skandha says that two life-spans of Brahmā make Visnu's life-span Śiva has double the life-span of Visnu, that during the life of Brahmā, fourteen Indras will drop down from Heaven and perish, and one day of Brahmā is made up of one thousand "Gatavyugas".

There are fourteen Manvantaras during the life of the present Brahmā. (See under Manvantara). This means that fourteen Manus will be born and will die one after another during this period. Each Manvantara will have its own Indra and the Devas. The first Manus was Svayamūkhava. After him five more Manus, Śvaścicā, Uśuma, Tāmaśa, Kuśā and Cīkaṇa, have passed away. The present Manus is Visvāvasa, the son of Śārya. The current Visvāvasa Manvantara is the seventh. At the end of seven more Manvantaras, the present Brahmā will perish and a new Brahmā will be born. For the names of the Indras of different Manvantaras, see under Manvantara. (Visnu Purāṇa, Part 2, Chapter 1).

69) Indra became a Cūṭa. (See under Prthu).

70) The Name Purandara. Sārjā K. M. Panikkar in his preface to Rgveda Sanhītā says that Indra got the name Purandara because he destroyed the cities (Puras) of the Dasyus. But in Chapter 71, of Yajurveda Purāṇa, "we got this name because he killed "Pura", the son of Mahāśāli".

71) Indra in the land of Kosākta. Once an Asura named Sūrapadma obtained from Brahmā, a boon to enable him to conquer the whole world. He persecuted the inhabitants of all the three worlds. He sent his followers to bring Indrīḍi (Indra’s wife) to him as a captive. Indra, who came to know of this, secretly went away with Indrīḍi to the Kosākta land and lived in a temple there. After some days, entrusting Indrīḍi to the protection of Śaṅkara, he went to Kailāsa. Just at this time, Sūrapadma’s sister Ajāmukhi came there and tempted Indrīḍi. Śaṅkara cut off the hands of Ajāmukhi and took Indrīḍi to Kailāsa. (Skanda Purāṇa, Asura Kviḍa).

72) Indra and Mucukunda. Mucukunda, a King of the Ikṣvāku dynasty, once went to Devaloka at the invitation of Indra. In the war between the Devas and Asuras, Mucukunda helped Indra and the Asuras were defeated. Indra was pleased and asked Mucukunda what boon he wanted. Mucukunda asked for a boon which would give him long and sound sleep. Indra granted it and an addition to that anyone of Mucukunda’s sleep would be reduced to ashes. After that Mucukunda went to sleep in a cave in the middle of a dense forest. A King of the tribe Yavana performed penance to Brahmā and obtained his boon which would enable him to defeat the Yādavas (Śrī Kaḍa’s clan) and he began to fight with Śrī Kaḍa. Because of Brahmā’s boon, Śrī Kaḍa was not able to kill him. He drove Yavana into the cave in which Mucukunda was sleeping. Mucukunda suddenly woke up from his sleep and looked at him with great anger. Yavana was at once reduced to ashes. (Bhāgavatī, 10th Skandha).

73) Indra’s favourite Drink. The juice of the Soma Plant is the favourite drink of Indra. (Rgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 1st Anuvāka, 1st Sūktam).

74) Indra became a Goat. Sage Angiras began worshipping the Devas, hoping to have a son who will be equal in glory to Indra. Indra who did not like another person to be his equal, took birth himself as the son of Angiras. Savīya is the name of that son. Once Savīya asumed that anyone who eats the soma plant of a sage called Madhārīthi. The sage then called him Meṣa (goat). Indra is still known by the name, Meṣa. (Rgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 1st Anuvāka, 31st Sūktam).

75) Indra turns woman. Once Indra took birth as the daughter of a king named Vrṣṭalīva and assumed the name Mena. (Rgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 1st Anuvāka, 22nd Sūktam).

76) Indra and Rṣiṣiṇa. Once Indra helped a King named Rṣiṣiṇa to defeat the Asuras, Karṇīṣa, Pāravya and Vaniṇḍa. (Rgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 1st Anuvāka, 33rd Sūktam).

77) Indra and Sūrya. A King named Svaśa offered prayers to Sūrya to bless him with children. Sūrya himself took birth as his son. Once a great sage Bṛhaspati got involved in a fight with this son (Sūrya). When the sage was about to collapse, Indra came to his rescue. (Rgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 11th Anuvāka, 62nd Sūktam).

78) Indra and Sāramā. Once an asura called Papi stole some cows and hid them in some unknown place. Indra asked Sāramā, the bitch of the Devas to find out and inform him where the cows were hidden and reported it to Indra. (Rgveda, 1st Maṇḍala, 11th Anuvāka, 62nd Sūktam).

79) Indra and Dādhiha. Dādhiha (Dādhisva) was the son of Abhāva. He used to scare away the Asuras by his eerie look. Once when he had gone to Heaven, the earth became infested with Asuras. Indra set out to fight them. He tried to find out whether Dadhiya had left anything behind to be used as a weapon. “Dadhiya had with him a horse-head”, he was told. Indra went in search of it and last found it in a lake at a place called Saranyā. It is with its bone that he killed the Asuras. (Rgveda, 1st Manđala, 13th Anuvāka, 84th Sūkta.)

80) \textit{Indra and Dadhiya.} Indra taught Madhuvidyā (the science of concocting drinks) to Dadhiya. He was warned by Indra that if he communicated that lore to anyone else, his head would be cut off. Once the Átvīni wanted to learn it. Since Indra had denied soma drinking to Átvīni, they were not on good terms with Indra. So they approached Dadhiya to acquire that knowledge. But he refused to teach them due to his fear that Indra would cut off his head. So the Átvīni cut off Dadhiya’s head and fixed a horse’s head in its place. With that horse-head Dadhiya taught the Átvīni Madhuvidyā. After they had learnt the knowledge, they replaced his own head after removing the horse-head. (Rgveda, 1st Manđala, 17th Anuvāka, 116th Sūkta.)

81) It is said that once, in a light mood, Indra made a mare give birth to a foal. (Rgveda, 1st Manđala, 18th Anuvāka, 21st Sūkta.)

82) \textit{Indra and Satāñika.} Satāñika was a King of the Lunar dynasty who ruled over the city of Kautāmśī. Indra who was highly impressed by his heroic exploits once invited him to Devavāka to suppress the Asuras. In the war with Asuras, Satāñika was killed. He gave birth to a son who was later named Devakola and killed the Asura. Indra who was pleased declared that Satāñika would marry the beautiful Mrgavatī and they were married. See under Mrgavatī. (Kathāsārisāgara, Kathāmukha lamāka, 1st Tarāngī.)

83) \textit{Indra and Vāsavadattā.} Vāsavadattā who was the wife of Udayana was born in the world by Indra’s blessing. See under “Vāsavadatā”. (Kathāsārisāgara, Kathāmukha lamāka, 1st Tarāngī.)

84) \textit{Indra and Meghānandā.} Rāvana conquered the world with the help of Brahmap’s blessing. In his pride he came into conflict with Indra. After a fierce battle, Rāvana’s son, Meghānandā defeated Indra. He took Indra to Lākṣāṇa as a prisoner. Rāvana chained Indra’s hands and feet and tied him to his flagstaff. The Devas in distress approached Brahmap for help. Brahmap went to Lākṣāṇa and secured the release of Indra. After giving the title of Indrajit to Meghānandā, Brahmap returned to Brahmaloka.

Sometime before this Devendra had committed adultery with Ahalāyā, Sage Gautama’s wife. At that time Gautama had uttered a curse on him, that he would have to spend a year in prison, chained by an enemy. His life in Rāvana’s prison in Lākṣāṇa was in fulfillment of that curse. (Uttara Rāmāyana.)

85) \textit{Indra and Hanumān.} Hanumān, the son of Vāyu (wind) sprang up into the sky as soon as he was born, seeing the brilliant rising sun, and mistaking it to be some delicious food. He saw Rāhu who was standing near the sun and made a leap towards him. When he came near, he saw Airāvata, Indra’s elephant, standing in Devakola. At once he turned towards that elephant to swallow him. Seeing the struggle between Hanumān and Airāvata Indra used his weapon Vajra which cut the monkey’s “hanu” (jaw bone) and he fell down dead on the earth. Vāyu, in deep sorrow, took the dead body of his son and went to Pātalā. When Vāyu (wind) left the world, the creatures of the world underwent great suffering. Then the Devas led by Brahmā went to Pātalā, consoled Vāyu and revived Hanumān. Since his “Hanu” was cut with Vajra, the monkey was named “Hanumān” by Indra. Besides, Indra gave him a blessing that Hanumān would die only when he wished. (Uttara Rāmāyana, Vāniki Rāmāyana; Kālikā’s Kandā, 5th Sarga.)

86) \textit{Indra and Garvaḍa.} For the story of how the people of Gokula (cowherds’ colony) stopped the worship of Indra, how Indra caused a heavy shower of rain, and how Śri Kṛṣṇa used the Gavardhana mountain as an umbrella, see under “Kṛṣṇa.”

87) \textit{Indra becomes king of old age.} Once the sage Durvūsā went to Devavāka. The goddesses gave him a grand reception at which Menākā presented him with a garland made of fragrant flowers. The sage gave it to Devendra. Indra placed it on Airāvata’s neck. The fragrance of the garland attracted a large number of bees to it. They swarmed round the head of the elephant and annoyed it. Airāvata picked up the garland and trampled it under his feet, but the bees would not go away. Durvūsā took this as an insult to himself and pronounced a curse that all the gods would be subject to wrinkles and grey hair of old age. Indra and the other gods fell victims to old age. Indra requested Durvūsā to release him from his curse. The sage relented and told him that if the Devas drank Amṛta to obtain immortality then the gods would recover their youth. Accordingly, the ocean of nīlīn was churned by the joint effort of the Devas and Asuras and in the end the Deva snatched it away. When the Devas drank Amṛta, the symptoms of old age disappeared and they recovered their youth. (Uttara Rāmāyana.)

88) \textit{Indra and Dandākārya.} Danda, the son of Ikṣvāku, a King of the Solar dynasty, ruled over the territory between the Vindhya and the Himalayas. Once when he was out hunting in the neighbourhood of the mountains, he saw a charming woman. She was “Ārā”, the daughter of the sage Šukra. The King was fascinated by her beauty and fell desperately in love with her at the very first sight. He sought her by force and committed rape on her. When Šukra knew about it, he was furious and uttered a curse that Indra should shower a rain of fire on Danda’s kingdom. Thus the whole country of Danda was destroyed by Indra’s rain of fire. In course of time that region was turned into a dense forest and came to be called “Dandākārāyana.” (Uttara Rāmāyana.)

89) \textit{Other names of Indra.} Indra; Maruvān, Mr-thāvān, Bīlaṇjaṇa, Pākaṇāṇa, Vṛddhasravaṇa, Sunāṭha, Purudāra, Purudāra, Purudāra, Lekhassarha, Saka, Sata-manyu, Divaspatai, Sutrāmā, Gotrabhit, Vājrī, Vāṣava, Vṛtra, Vṛṣa, Vāstospatai, Sūrapatai Vālakāti, Sālpati, Jambhabhedā, Harīṣaya, Svarat, Namucisudāna, Sahamadāna, Duṣṭeyavana, Turāṣṭ Mēghahavāna, Akhaṇḍa, Sahārańska, Rīvīḥa.

90) \textit{Indra’s Domains.} In the earliest stage of Hinduism, Indra had occupied one of the most eminent places among gods. Mahāvīśuṣ had only the place of younger brother of Indra at that time. In Amara Kūṭa we find “Upeṇḍra Indrāraja” as the synonym of Vigna. In Rgveda Indra has a more important place. Although Kadru is a divinity of dusk and although there are references to Kapardin, there is not even a single stuti (praise) about Siva in the Rgveda. Rgveda does not recognize Devipuja and idol worship. But in the Puranic age, Indra was transformed into a slavoirious “Deva Prahuti” (Lord among the gods). Sastar K.M. Panikkar, in his preface to “Rgveda Somayajam” has given the reasons why “The deity Indra is the king of the dinosaurs.” In the war against the Dasyus the Aryans seek the help chieftains of Indra. Indra is represented as very handsome and of a golden complexion. His weapon is Vajra, a thunderbolt, which was made by Varaha. Vajr (wind) is his chariot. He is constantly travelling about in the sky driving his golden chariot. Indra is also sometimes described as the twin brother of Agni. Sages have sung unendingly about the exploits of Indra. Hiranyakshika, a sage, has composed a work entitled “Indra stuti” which celebrates many of the heroic deeds of Indra. Indra was Vrajapati who had slain the Asuras like Ahir, Yama, Sambhala, Vatra, Vrtra and others. There are several stories of the Vedas about the birth of this hero. At the time of Indra’s birth, somehow, his mother felt that he was incapable of being killed. So she decided to abandon him. Fearing trouble for herself, she asked the child to leave her and go to some other place. Indra refused to do so and followed her to the house of Vasistha. There he drank the juice of the neem tree which was used to kill all the enemies. But unaware of this, his mother, tried to keep him concealed. Indra, however, came out of the place in his dazzling attire and encountered the enemies. Vrtra who met Indra got ready for a fight. In the fight Vyasus struck down Indra. The devas fled in fear. Indra who was left alone called upon Vyasus and sought his aid.

Although Indra needed help in his fight, the chief support to the Aryans their fight against the Dasyus. It was Indra’s Vajra which broke up the fortress of many Dasyu kings. That was why he got the name “Parandara”. Once Indra dried up the whole river to enable his army to cross it for the sake of Sudasa. When Suvrata became helpless, Indra destroyed twenty kings and 6000 soldiers with his chariot wheel. That we see Indra in the Rgveda as the destroyer of the Dasyus and the protector of Aryans.”

Indra, Saci and Polamaj are the names of Indra’s wife. Indra’s son, Jayanta is also known by the name of Pashupathi. Indra’s city is Anandavati; his chariot is Vizhaka, his charioteer Matai, and his garden Nananda. “Nanada” is the name of his mansion. Indra’s weapon has several other names, such as, Hrudini, Kuhlona, Bhuta, Vrati, Sivaiko, Svaro, Simbha, Damboh, Ani etc. Indra’s assembly is called “Sudharma”. Indra’s bow is the rainbow; his sword is Paraliyaya and his residence is Heaven. The trees in Heaven are, Mandala, Pipala, Santala, Kadapaka and Haranema. The festival celebrated in honour of Indra is called “Sakradvajothana” or “Indra vratvaha”.

1) Indra and Utanka. See under Utanka.
2) Indra and Kabandha. See the second part under the name Kabandha.
3) Indra was born as Gadh. See under Gadh.

94) Siva ended Indra’s pride. See under Pashupati.
95) Indra stole the cows. For the story of how Indra stole the cows from Gokula see under Krsna.
96) Indra and Mahasani. Once Mahasani, the son of Hiranya defeated the gods in a battle and took Indra and Indrani to Patala as captives. The Devas who knew that Mahasani was a relative of Varuna, sought the help of Varuna. At the instance of Varuna, Indra and Indrani were released. The devout Indra prayed to Siva. Siva appeared and asked Indra to submit his complaint to Vigna. Indra offered his prayers to Vigna. As a result of it, a man who had the elements of Siva and Vigna, in him, took his birth from the water of the Ganga. He killed Mahasani. (Brahmanda Purana)

INDRADIVATVA. A yajna (sacrifice) performed in order to get children. King Yuvanmata got the yajna conducted. After it was over the King drank water from pots filled by brahmans, and became pregnant. (See Mandukya) (Dev Bhagavata, 7th Skanda).

INDRADAMANA. A King who gifted a lot of money to Brahmins. (M.B. Samsi, Parva, Chapter 254, Verse 16).

INDRADATTA. See Varurmi.

INDRADHVAYA. A flag staff. It is erected in order to get rain. If anybody dreams that it has broken and fallen, it is a bad omen. It means that some disaster will befall the country. (Agni Purana, Chapter 229).

INDRAVIPA (INDRAl ISLAND). Mahabharata, Sabha Parva refers to the island as having once been ruled by King Mahabharata.

INDRAGUNMA I. A King born in the dynasty of Svayambhula Manu, and a king of the Pandya country.

2) Indradyumna turned into elephant. Indradyumna, a devotee of Visnu handed over governance of the country to his children when he became old, and performed penance in the Malay mountain. One day, when he was immersed in meditation Agasty came there. Naturally, Indradyumna did not notice Agastya’s arrival. Enraged at this the latter cursed Indradyumna and turned him into an elephant. Being told immediately about the curse by his servants Indradyumna sought redemption from the curse from Agastya himself. Redemption was granted thus: Indradyumna would roam in the forest for years as an elephant, a devotee of Vigna and he would attain salvation when Lord Vigna came down to the earth and patted the elephant on its back. Accordingly Indradyumna who was turned into an elephant roamed about in the forest for many years in the company of herd of wild elephants. At last it arrived at Mount Trikuta. There was a lake there on the banks of which was sage Devala engaged in penance. Huhu, the Gandharva had once come to this lake with a number of Apsara women and they indulged in amorous sports, which Devala did not like. He cursed Huhu and turned him into a crocodile, and the crocodile lived in the same lake. Indradyumna who was turned into an elephant, stepped into the lake to drink water when the crocodile caught hold of its hind leg. Neither did the elephant yield nor the crocodile leave the former free. Their tug of war continued for 1200 years when Mahāviṇī appeared on the scene, killed the crocodile and saved the elephant. At once the elephant was re-transformed into Indradyumna and he attained Vaiśravaṇa (the abode of Viṣṇu). (Bhāgavata, Bīk Sandhān.)

A Malayalam verse summarizes the above story as follows:—Impelled by Agastya’s curse the elephant went to the lake at Mount Trikūṭa, and suffered for 1600 years as the crocodile which caught hold of its hind leg did not loosen its grip. Then appeared on the scene the killer of Mūruça (Lord Viṣṇu) on his vehicle, Garuda, killed the crocodile with his discus and granted salvation to the elephant.

3) Indradyumna’s fall from heaven when the merits of his good deeds were exhausted. The merits or the result of his good and noble deeds having been exhausted, Indradyumna, the saintly king once descended from heaven to earth, and the said King approached sage Māraṇādeya. But, the sage did not recognize him. The King and the sage went to Prāśrakarna, an owl living on the top of the Himālayas. It also did not recognize the King. Then they went to Nāḍjaṅgha, a stork very much older than the owl and living in the lake known as Indradyumna. Nāḍjaṅgha also could not recognize the King. In another part of the lake was a tortoise called Akūpāra, who was older than Nāḍjaṅgha. At last the King, the sage, Prāśrakarna and Nāḍjaṅgha approached Akūpāra. At his very sight Akūpāra recognized the King. Akūpāra told sage Māraṇādeya that Indradyumna was a very famous King and quite liberal and munificent in distributing gifts, and that the lake Indradyumna was formed by the passage of the cows gifted by the King. Having heard these details regarding the King the sage sent him back to heaven. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter III).

INDRASYUMNA III. A sage Indradyumna is mentioned in the list of Saints who paid their homage to Dharmapura during his forest life. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 30).

INDRASYUMNA IV. Name of King Janaka’s father.

INDRASYUMNA V. A king of the Ikṣvāku dynasty. (See Para 2, under Vāvakarmān).

INDRASYUMNA VI. A king who lived in the Kṛṣṇa yuga, and a devotee of Viṣṇu. He visited the Jagannātha temple in Odhrā Deśa once to worship Lord Jagannātha. The Lord was then hidden in the sand. When the King, a disciple of Viṣṇu, Chāndaka, was about to return, determined to fast unto death at Mount Nilā, when a celestial voice cried, “Thou shalt see Him”. Afterwards the King performed a horse sacrifice and built a magnificent Viṣṇu temple. Nārapāmaṁi brought by Nārada was installed in the temple. During sleep the King had a darśana (sight) of Lord Jagannātha. Also an astral voice directed him to cut down the fragrant tree on the seashore and make idols with it. Accordingly the king got idols of Viṣṇu, Balarāma, Śūḍraśana and Subhadra made and installed them in the temple. (Śkaṇḍa Purāṇa).

INDRASYUMNA VII. A lake. A stork called Nāḍjaṅgha and the Adivarman called Akūpāra lived in this lake. It came into existence when the cows given in gift by King Indradyumna passed along that way. (M.B. Aranya Parva, Chapter 193). The pool lay near Mount Gangaḍhāraṇa, and the Pandavas once visited it. (M.B. Aśi Parva, Chapter 118, Verse 18).

INDRASYUMNA. Rāvana’s son, Meghanāda.

To Pulastya, one of the Prajāpatis was born by Mālīni, Vīraṇi, Vīraṇi had two wives, Devavatāni, also called Libilī and Kākṣi, Kākṣi or Kubera was his son by Libilī and Rāvaṇa, Kumbhakarṇa, Libilī and Sūrpanakhā (daughter) being the offspring of Kākṣi, Rāvana murdered Mandodari and three sons, Meghanāda, Ākīyā and Ākaśakumāra were born to them. Meghanāda came to be known as Indrājīt also, because he had defeated Indra once.

2) Sin of Siva. Though it was Mandodari, Rāvana’s wife, who gave birth to Meghanāda (Indrājīt) the Uttarārāmāyana refers to him as the son of Siva in a story as follows:

Once, after religious fasting and other rites on a Monday (to propitiate the Sun-God) Madhūrā, an Apsara woman, adorned with all kinds of ornaments went to Mount Kailāsa to offer salutations to Lord Siva. Parvati, Siva’s consort was not present then, and Madhūrā used the opportunity to please the Lord, and she got pregnant by him. All on a sudden Parvati appeared on the scene, and knowing what had happened in her absence she cursed Madhūrā to fall into an abandoned well as a frog. Madhūrā prayed for redemption from the curse, and Siva pitying her sad plight blessed her that after 12 years she would get herself transformed into a frog and become the daughter of Maya and would, then, be married by a great King. According to Parvati’s curse Madhūrā fell into a well in the forest as a frog. Mayaṣura was performing penance near the well to get a daughter. On the expiry of 12 years after Madhūrā fell into the well as a frog, Mayaṣura looked into it and beheld a beautiful girl. He took her to his palace named her Mahendari and brought her up as his own daughter. Rāvaṇa married her. It was at this stage that Siva’s vital fluid which had, twelve years before, entered her womb made its appearance in the form of a son. Rāvana named him Meghanāda. Being Siva’s son he grew up with great prowess. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

3) Meghanāda’s yajñas. When once Rāvana was away from Lanka on a conquest of the world, Meghanāda went to Nikumbhī, the central place for conducting yajñas, and performed several yajñas with sage Sukra as the chief priest. By the time all the seven yajñas, viz. Agristoma, Aṣvamedha, Bahuṣvāma, Vaiśāpa, Māheṣvāma, Rājaṣṭhāna and Gosāva were over, Rāvana returned to Lanka and sage Sukra gave him details about the yajñas conducted by his son Meghanāda. Rāvaṇa did not like the Vaiśāma yajña performed by his son, and Sukra, who got angry at this cursed, Rāvana that he would meet with his death at the hands of Viṣṇu. (Uttara Rāmāyana).

By performing a Saiva yajña, Meghanāda got the blessings of Siva, who taught him (Meghanāda) the great art of Sūndhikī, which helped one to move amongst others invisible to them.
4) The war. Indrajit. Once Rāvana encircled Indra-loka with a big army, and Indra, very much alarmed, ran up to Viṣṇu for protection. Viṣṇu told Indra that it was not yet time for Rāvana’s death and when it was time Viṣṇu himself would slay him. Disappointed at this Indra returned, and a fierce war ensued between him and Kāyapa. Indra fought with Rāvana, and Jayanta, his son fought with Meghamāda. When fighting reached its climax Meghamāda resorts to the art of Satāmbi taught by Śiva, and became invisible to others. Then he showered his arrows. Jayanta fainted on the battlefield. Pōlōma, father of Indraṇī, carried away Jayanta without others knowing and concealed him in the ocean. Everyone thought that Jayanta was dead. Burning with grief and revenge Indra confronted Rāvana again. Rāvana fell down at the blow with Indra’s vajra (thunderbolt). Then once more making himself invisible to others, Meghamāda jumped onto Indra’s chariot and bound him prisoner. By that time Kāyapa got up on his feet, and he and Meghamāda carried away Indra to Lakṣa and chained him to the foot of the flagstaff.

The Devas, grief-stricken at this sad fate of Indra went to Brahmā and submitted their grievance. Brahmā reached Lāṅka, and named Meghamāda Indraṇī. (14) who gained victory over Indra. Indraṇī prayed to Brahmā for the boon, which would ward off death for ever. When Brahmā told him that the boon of eternal deathlessness was out of the question he sought the following boon: that when he had performed the yajña, out of the sacrificial fire should emerge a chariot and necessary horses and that he should not be killed by any one while fighting from that chariot, and that he did not mind being killed by enemies if he got away without completing the yajña. Brahmā granted him the boon. And, as directed by Brahmā Rāvana released Indra from imprisonment after one year. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

5) Indrajit and Ṣaṭāmbi. A clash occurred between Indrajit and Hannumān, who landed in Lāṅka in search of Sītā, and the former got Hannumān bound by Brahmā’s arrow. (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa).

6) Death of Indrajit. At the height of the fierce war between Rāma and Rāvana, Indrajit and Lakṣmaṇa clashed with each other. Finding victory impossible Indrajit created a fake Sītā and killed her. Thinking that Sītā was dead, grief-stricken Hannumān, Lakṣmaṇa and the regiment of monkeys withdrew from the fight. Informed of Sītā’s death Rāma fainted. Indrajit began the yajña for victory over Rāma at the place called Nukumānil. Viṣṇuṣapta told Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa about the warning of Brahmā that Indrajit would be killed if the yajña was obstructed. Happy at the information Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa immediately went to Nukumānil to fight with Indrajit who was engaged in performing the yajña, and without completing the yajña he came out and begun fighting, and Lakṣmaṇa killed him. (Valmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha Kānda, Chapters 82-91).

INDRAKILA. A mountain in front of the Himālaya and Gaṅgāmahādāna mountains. The presiding deity of this mountain is a devotee of Kuṭera. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 37).

INDRALOKĀBHIGAMANA PARVA. A sub Parva in Mahābhārata.

INDRAMĀRGĀ. An ancient sacred place (bathing ghāṭ) Those who take a dip in the holy waters there will attain heaven. (M.B. Anūsāsana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 9).

INDRA. Wife of Indra. (Ṣaṭāmbi).

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu thus: Viṣṇu—Brahmā—Kāyapa—Pōlōma—Ṣaṭāmbi (Indrajit). Pōlōma was an asura born to Kāyapa by his wife Daru. Indra married Ṣaṭāmbi, the daughter of Pōlōma, and hence Ṣaṭāmbi is called Indrajit also. She is called Pāṇumā also as she was the daughter of Pōlōma.

2) Indrajit and Ṣaṭāmbi. An asura called Ṣaṭāmba once coveted Indrajit. He deputed his men to fetch Ṣaṭāmba somehow or other to him. Hearing about this, Indra, keeping Indrajit with him, went to and stayed in the Chitrāya temple in Kojiśwarda, and afterwards Indra went to Mount Kailāsa after asking Ṣatāmba to guard Indrajit. During Indra’s absence Ajāmukhi, sister of Ṣaṭāmba met Indrajit and induced her to become Śaṭāmba’s wife. Indrajit refused. Ultimately Indra returned and took Indrajit back to Devaloka.

5) Indrajit and Ṣaṭāmba. See under Agastya.

4) Indrajit and Pāṇumā. Mahābhārata says that Pāṇumā was a partial incarnation of Indrajit (See under Pāṇumā). A part of Ṣaṭāmba was born in the family of Drupada as Drupadū, viz. Pāṇumā. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 67).

1) Indrajit once went to the assembly of Brahmā and worshipped him. (M.B. Sāhī Parva, Chapter 11, Verse 42).

2) When once Satāmbā came to Devaloka with Śri Kṛṣṇa, Indrajit conducted her to Aditi, mother of the Devas. (M.B. Śaī Parva, Chapter 36).

3) Ṣaṭāmba was also present at the birth of Subrahmaṇya. (M.B. Śāya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 13).

4) Indrajit and Arjuna. (See under Arjuna).

INDRAPRASTHA. A mountain in Videha. (M.B. Śāya Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 13).

INDRAPRĀMATA. A disciple of Pāla. He belonged to the line of Vyāsa’s disciples. For other details see under Vyāsa.

INDRAPRĀSTHA. Capital city of the Pāḍavas. It is the same as Delhi, the capital of modern India.

1) Construction. As ordained by Dhruvarṣaṇa, Dharmapura, claimant to half of the kingdom, went to the forest Khaṇḍavapraśṭha with his brothers. Śri Kṛṣṇa stood by them; great sages like Vyāsa helped them. There, in the forest, they built a city called Inpraprastha as beautiful as Indraloka. (M.B. Sāhī Parva, Chapter 211).

2) Reconstruction. Once Kṛṣṇa burst down the Khaṇḍava forest. (See under Khaṇḍavādāsha). Arjuna saved Maya and five others from the fire. Maya asked Arjuna what he should do in return for saving his life. Arjuna replied that it was not proper to expect any reward for saving one’s life and that, if Maya was very keen about doing something in return, it might be done for Kṛṣṇa. Then Kṛṣṇa asked Maya to build for the Pāṇḍavas a palace, the most beautiful one in the world at Indraprastha. And, accordingly, after getting the Brahmins duly pleased, Maya marked the ground ten thousand
INDRAPUJA

Kisku: in extent. Then Maya went to the mountain Mount Kailas, where in the pool called Bindu he had stored a large quantity of gold and gems. Maya brought those materials as also a conch called Devadatta from there and built the most beautiful palace in the world at Indraprastha. Within the palace were made many a beautiful pool and various patterns with glistening in glass. It was built so beautifully and in such a manner as to create, at the very sight, the illusion that there was water where there was really no water and vice versa. It took fourteen months to complete the construction of that most beautiful model of architecture. (M.B. Bavri Parva, Chapters 1-3).

Vajra, son of Anuruddha of the Yadava dynasty was made master of Indraprastha after the time of the Pandavas. (M.B. Mahabharata Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 1). INDRAPOJA. This puja (Indra-worship) is also called Indrovara. It was during the reign of Vasi, a king of the lunar dynasty that Indrovara began being celebrated in an organized manner. Please at the long penance of Vasi, Indra appeared to him and presented a Vejulanda. Vasi planted the landa on earth and conducted Indrapuja. Thereupon raising the Vejulanda became the first item in celebrating Indrovara. The staff is decorated with flowers, sandal, garlands etc. To the top of the staff is attached the form of a Hanumana Indra appeared to Vasi. Please by the Indrapuja of Vasi, Indra announced as follows:—If men, and especially kings worship me in the manner done by Vasi, prosperity and welfare will accrue to them and to their kingdoms. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 1).

INDRASENAA I. A son of King Nala. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 60, Verse 23). Nala had also a daughter called Indrasena.

INDRASENAA II. Son of King Parikriti. (M.B. Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Verse 55).

INDRASENAA III. Mahabharata, Sabha Parva, Chapter 33. Verse 30 refers to one Indrasena, charioteer of the Pandavas. He accompanied the Pandavas in their forest life. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 1, Verse 11). When the Pandavas arrived at Mount Gandhamadana they left Indrasena with Subhadra, the Pulina King. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 140, Verse 27). After some time the Pandavas sent him to Dwarsak. (M.B. Vira Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 58). Indrasena was present at the wedding of Abhimanyu which was celebrated in the city of Upaplava. (M.B. Vira Parva, Chapter 72, Verse 23).

INDRASENAA IV. A King who fought on the side of the Kauravas. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 156, Verse 122).

INDRASENAA I. Name of Pana in her former birth. (See under Pana).

INDRASENAA II Daughter of King Nala.

INDRASENAA III. Nalayati, a princess of Arjuna. She was married by the sage Ravisringsa. (See under Ravisringsa). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 111). Indrasena served her husband for 100 years. (M.B. Virata Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 11).

INDRATPA. An Anr, who was a devotee of Varuna. (M.B. Sivita Parva, Chapter 6, Verse 15).

INDRATIRTHA. A sacred place on the banks of the river Saranvati. It was here that Indra performed 100 yajnas. (M.B. Sivita Parva, Chapter 49, Verse 49).

INDRAJYOTI. A river near Mount Gandhamadana. Bathing in the river and staying there for three nights is tantamount to performing the horse sacrifice. (M.B. Anusasana Parva, Chapter 25, Verse 11).

INDRAVANA. King Kukutikkata of the Bhuwaya dynasty made Indra his vehicle in the form of an ox and fought the Anaras thus. Hence the name Indravana. (See under Kukutikata).

INDRAVARMA. A King of Malavata, he fought on the side of the Pandavas, and got killed by an elephant called Upavatthuk. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 190, Verse 13).

INDROTA (INDRODA). A sage, son of Suka, the great sage, and also called Saunaka, janamejaya, son of King Parikriti once killed a brallmin, and at once brahmahata (sin of having killed a brahmin) seized the King. The King lost all moral peace at this and sought the advice of many sages for redemption from the sin, and Indrota (Saunaka) advised him to go on a pilgrimage and perform righteous duties (dharma). The King acted accordingly and got rid of the sin of killing the brahmin. This story occurs under the title Indropankshayam in Santi Parva in three chapters. (Chapters 105-106).

INDROTSAVA. See under Indrapuja.

INDRUPAKHA. See under Malayapakha.

INDUMATI I. Daughter of Gandrasena, King of Simhala and his queen, Guvapatti. (See under Gandrasena).

INDUMATI II. Mother of Nahuja. (See under Nahuja).

INDUMATI III. Wife of Raghu.

IRA I. One of the wives of Kaatyapa. Aditi, Diti, Danu, Asita, Suras, Kast, Surabhi, Vinita, Tamni, Krodhavat, Ira, Kaatri and Muni were the wives of Kaatyapa. Grast on earth originated from Ira. (Agni Purana, Chapter 19).

IRA II. There was a devil called Ira among the attendants of Kubera. (M.B. Sivita Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 11).

IRAM. A river. Sage Markandeya is reported to have once seen this river in the stomach of child Kaatyapa. (Vana Parva, Chapter 128, Verse 104. Also see under Markandeya).

IRAVAN. A son born to Arjuna of the serpent damsel (Nagakanya) named Ulagi. (For genealogy see under Arjuna).

1) Birth. According to the practice laid down Pana in her former birth was married by the sage Ravisringsa. (See under Ravisringsa). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 111). Indrasena served her husband for 100 years. (M.B. Virata Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 11).

2) Birth. Indra is born to the sage Ravisringsa. (See under Ravisringsa). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 111). Indrasena served her husband for 100 years. (M.B. Virata Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 11).

3) Birth. Indrasena is born to the sage Ravisringsa. (See under Ravisringsa). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 111). Indrasena served her husband for 100 years. (M.B. Virata Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 11).

4) Birth. Indrasena is born to the sage Ravisringsa. (See under Ravisringsa). (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 113, Verse 111). Indrasena served her husband for 100 years. (M.B. Virata Parva, Chapter 21, Verse 11).
IRĀVATI  go on a pilgrimage for one year. Numerous brahmans accompanied Arjuna and while spending the night on the banks of the Ganges, Arjuna entered its waters for bathing. There he saw the Nāga damsel, Ulūpi. They fell in love with each other and got married. And, a son named Irāvān was born to them. Ulūpi granted Arjuna the boon that all water-animals would obey him and that in water he would be invincible. Leaving Ulūpi and Irāvān behind, Arjuna continued his stay in the forest.

2) Further Information. (1) In the great war Irāvān fought on the side of the Pandavas. During the first day’s fighting Irāvān and Sruṭayu fought a duel. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 49, Verses 69-71).
(2) Irāvān defeated Vinda and Anuviṣa in fight. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 63, Verses 18-22).
(3) Irāvān killed five brothers of Sakuni. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 98, Verses 27-46).
(4) Irāvān fought against Alambuṣa and was killed by the latter. (Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 90 Verses 56-76).

IRĀVATI I. Grand daughter of Katyāpa. Ten daughters were born to Katyāpa by his wife Krodhavāsī, viz. Māri, Mrdhadvīpi, Hrī, Bhadravatī, Mātāni, Śrāvasti, Śruti, Śruti and Kadārī, and Irāvātī was Kadārī’s daughter. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Aranyā Kāṇḍa).

IRĀVATI II. A sacred river. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 148, Verse 13).

IRIKA. A locality. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Verse 92).

IRI. There are hundreds of Kings in the palace of Yama worshipping him, and they are called the Iri. (M.B. Subhā Parva, Chapter 8, Verse 23).

IRIMPUL. A Malayalam word meaning ‘iron’. The metal iron originated in the following way. The Devas sought Brahma’s protection against the onslaughts of Parakṣāra, who had obtained a boon to the effect that he could control the waters of the streams and the seas. Brahma, exasperated, entered into the seas and transformed himself into a lion. The impact shook the universe. Agni separated them from the process and the immense streams of water dropped on Agni. Agni deposited it in the Gaṅgā. The Gaṅgā could not bear it and it coursed through her (Gaṅgā’s) arteries and out of it was born Subrahmānīya. The particles of the semen gold and silver were produced. From the intensity of the heat were produced iron and copper. See under Subrahmānīya. (Vālmiki Rāmāyaṇa, Bāla Kāṇḍa, Canto 37).

ISĀ. A Vivasvāna. (Universal deva). (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 91, Verse 31).

ISĀNA (SIVA). A nāma, with matted hair rides on the ox Sevāya. (Siva Purāṇa, Chapter 51).

ISANĀDHUṢṬA PIRTHI. An ancient urda. Tasting the water of this urda will give all the benefits of the horse sacrifice. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 64, Verses 8, 9).

ĪŚTARĀŚMI. A King mentioned in the Rgveda. He performed many yajnas. (Rgveda, Manḍala 1, Anuṣāsana 19, Sūkta 12).

ĪŚTĀŚVĀ. A King mentioned in the Rgveda. He performed many yajnas. (Rgveda, Manḍala 1, Anuṣāsana 19, Sūkta 124).

ĪŚUPĀDA. An Asura born to Katyāpa and his wife, Danu. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 65, Verse 25). This Isupāda was reborn in his next life as the very heroic and powerful King Nagnajit. (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 47, Verses 20, 21).

ĪŚVARA. Once Devi told, Himavān who, according to the Hindu religion, God is, and how creation takes place from Īśvara (Goi). The famous discussion about Godhood, called Devīgītā is quoted hereunder.

(1) Aham evam purvaṁ tu
nāyād kīṁcit nāgāḥpiya
Tadāmārūpam eśā samavat
Parabrahmamāṇakam ∥

(Before the creation of the universe commenced, I alone was; there was nothing else. Then I was called Para-brähman, Citvarūpī, Sūktivarūpī and Ātmārūpī).

(2) Apratarkyamanidēsa- manuṣyaparṇanāmāṇa
Tasya kacit svatāḥ siddha saktirnāyati vaśāt ∥

(That form is beyond discussion (Apratarkya); beyond description (Ānīdesya); incapable of being compared (Aanaupamyam); beyond birth, death, old age etc. (Aanāmaya). In this form of mine resides māyāśakti).

(3) Na satā tā nāsaṁ sā tobhyayānī vīrodhaṁ ∥
Etadvikalpam kacit vastubhdātā sarvā dā ∥

(That māyāśakti cannot be said to be existing or not existing. Thus it is neither existing nor not existing. The statement existing and not existing is subject to the error, paradox. That great force exists always in me with the pair of aspects).

(4) Pāvakaṣyogataveca-muṣāmāmoriva dīdhīṁ ∥
Candrasya candrikaveyam
Mameṣaṁ saхаja dhruvaṁ ∥

(Fire does not exist without heat, nor Sun without light nor Moon without its rays. Just like this, that māyāśakti is cognized with sense as permanent).

(5) Tasyaṁ karmāṇi jīvāṁ
Jīvāṁ Kamāca saṁcara
Abhedena vīmāṁ syuḥ
Suḥṣuptau vyayāharāvat ∥

(Just as all actions, feelings and even the sense of time remain latent in deep sleep, even so all the actions and emotions of all living beings lie absorbed in Māya).

(6) Svadāsaṁca samayogā
dahām bijāmātin gatā ci vādāravasā-tasena dūtaṁ ca samagnām ∥

(I am myself the source of this Māya, but it has a strange power called āväraṇa which hides my real nature).

(7) Caitanyaṁ samayogam mahātvaṁ ca kathaye
Prapañcaparājānāca
Samayāvamucyate ∥

(Being joined to Caitanya, Brahma, Māya becomes the material as well as the immediate cause of the universe (Prapañca):)

(8) Kṛcitān taṁ ityāhstanāṁ keśijajātāṁ pare Jānam māyaṁ pradhanam ca prakṛtiṁ saktirnāyaṁ ∥
(This maya is referred to differently by different people as tapas, lamás, jāda, jñāna, maya, pradhāna, prakṛti and so forth.

(9) Vimarsha iti Lim prāhu Śaivaśāstraśāraśāraśa avidyāmitaḥ prāhu vedatāvārāchārinātah (Exports in Śaiva philosophical thought refer to this maya as vimāra and Vedas sees it avidyā).

(10) Evam nāv vidhāni yuḥ namāni niṣumāṇi tasyāḥ jñātārthis tasyāt jñānaṁāśātatoṣau (Thus Vedas refer to maya by various names. Because of visibility maya is called jāta, and because it is de-stuctive of true knowledge it is called asat).

(11) Caitanyakā na dṛṣṭvāvam dṛṣṭvāpāj jāta rūṣa tāt svāprakāṣaḥ ca ca iti nara püramaṇaṃ (Caitanya (Effulgence) is not visible. What is seen is jāta (mental expression). Caitanya is self-illuminating; it is not illuminated by something else).

(12) Anavasthitasya
   nāv svacca prakāśa Karmakāryarūḍhāḥ svātāsmānādādhipavat svayam (If caitya is not self-illuminating, then it is subject to the drawback of Anavasthita (Absence of finitude).
   If Caitanya does not possess the quality of light and illumination there should necessarily be something else, which illuminates it, and there should again be something to illuminate that which illuminates Caitanya. And, it continues ad infinitum. This state of no conclusion is called anavasthā doya. Also one thing cannot be, at the same time, the subject (actor) and the object of action, and that invites the draw-back of paradox. Therefore,
   O King of mountains! understand that Caitanya is self-illuminating and it illuminates others by its own illumination. And this, therefore, proves that my Caitanya is eternal).

(13) Jāgratvam pratyāhārāya dṛṣṭvāva vyabhicāraṁ nāvavo vyabhicāraśa nāṁbhūtvā karīti
   (All visible things go on changing in the three states of waking, dream and deep sleep. But, like visible things Caitanya is not subject to change, and does not experience the three states).

(14) Tasyām pratyāhārasya sthārayaḥ yena sākṣipta ambhūtvā ca eva īśānaś ca eva (If it is argued that it (Caitanya) experiences the three states then there must be something else as ‘witness’ for the experience. But, since it is established as self-illuminating that cannot possibly be something else as ‘witness’).

(15) Ātma eva ca nityavād prakāśaḥ sa cakṣāradiṣaḥ ānandārūpāḥ caivyāḥ parapremāspatibhavataḥ (Because of the above reasons experts in the science of philosophy hold that this Caitanya is eternal, and that, since it is the basis of bhakti which assumes the form of absolute love, it is ānandārūpa).

(16) Mā na bhūtah bhūyāsamiti premāmānī sthitam

   dasaṃstuktamaṁ saḥāti
   (No living soul think ‘I am not’. Every body cherishes always its self-importance, the ‘I’. It is present there in every living soul in the form of love. This fact itself proves that I am different from all material objects).

(17) Āparicchhānātapanva-tascā jñānaṁ nāmādharma diharatva jñātārtham (That I am indivisible is quite definite. Knowledge is not an attribute of the soul (Ātmā) but is the very form of the soul itself. If knowledge were only an attribute of the soul it (soul) should have been material (jāta) and it is quite a certainty that the soul is not material, because knowledge is the very nature of the soul).

(18) Jñānaṁ jñātārtham

   (The soul is pure knowledge without any touch of the jāta. It is also pure existence. It is one and indivisible).

(19) Tasmadātmā jñānārūpaḥ

   (The ātmā (soul) is therefore jñānārūpa (of the nature of pure knowledge), Sukharūpa (of the nature of pure joy) and satyārūpa (of the nature of absolute truth). It is unattached to anything and free from duality).

   fested is praised by all śāstras to be the cause of all causes and the basis of all tattvas. It is also the basis of all knowledge, action and volition and realizable only through the brhindā mantra).
Virajdeha (Cosmic body) is the sum total of these individual material bodies. The inner conscience and bodily organs like ear etc. originate from the gentle and pure aspects of the five elements.

(Anantaśvara, due to differences in state, assumes four forms. When once conception and doubt arise in a subject, then it is called mind. When there is no doubt, but there is assuredness it is called understanding (buddhi). The function of examining a subject again and over again belongs to cittas. To think of ‘I’ is egoism or ahaṅkāra.

Praṇa is located in the heart, apāna in the anus, samāna in the nābhi (navel), udāna in the throat and vyāna all over the body).

(From this primordial principle the five elements (pañca-bhūtas) were born. The first of these is either which is the element of sound because sound travels through ether (śāda-bhāṣa-vāpa). Then air (vāyu) gave rise to the sense of touch and so air is called saṁbhūta. This vāyu again gave rise to Agni (vāyu-rāgini). Then came water which corresponds to the sense of taste (rasārūpa). From water came earth which is gandharūpa (the source of smell) (udākādāhūnī). Ākāśa (ether) has only one ātra, namely sound. Vāyu (air) has two ātraḥ—śāda and spaṛśa (Sound and touch). Agni has three ātraḥ—rūpa, śāda and spaṛśa. Jāla (water) has four ātraḥ—śāda, spaṛśa, rūpa, and rasa. The last element—earth—has five ātraḥ—śāda, spaṛśa, rūpa, rasa and gandharūpa. From these five tāmātras is born the biha (sāra or sākṣma-sārā).)

(The jagat (universe) remained in embryo form (biha-rūpa) in these paṇḍakarnāma. Then by the process of Paṇḍakarnāma all the gross material objects were created. These paṇḍakarnāma were first divided into two (each was divided into two). Then by a process of the combination of these two parts different substances were born as detailed in the following stanzas.

IVAM. Jyāṁ in Malayalam means the metal lead. A metal formed out of the dirt in river Gaṅgā. (See Irīmpu.)

J (a). This letter means jyā (victory). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 348).

JĀBĀLA. The mother of the hermit Satyakāma. (For details see under Satyakāma.)

JĀBĀLĪ I. A famous hermit. In Mahābhārata, Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 4, stanza 55, it is stated that Jābālī was one of the sons of Viśvāmitra. They were the sons of the Moon from the Vedas. Though he was the son of Viśvāmitra his life was marred by connection with Vaśiṣṭha. The Purāṇas do not make it clear how this son of Viśvāmitra happened to fall into the circle of Vaśiṣṭha who was a foe of Viśvāmitra. He was one of the seven spiritual advisors of King Daśaratha. It is mentioned in Viśvāmitra Rāmāyana, Bālaśāstra, Sarga 48 that eight hermits such as Suyuṣṭha, Vāmadeva, Jābālī, Kaśyap Vaśiṣṭha and others lived in Ayodhya in the palace of the King Daśaratha. When Bharata went to the forest, to bring Śrī Rāma back to Ayodhya, Jābālī also followed him. Jābālī argued with Śrī Rāma, using several arguments, to make him return to Ayodhya. These arguments made Śrī Rāma angry. But he was pacified by the consoling words of Vaśiṣṭha. (Viśvāmitra Rāmāyana, Ayodhyā Kāpita.)

Jābālī comes in the line of disciples of Viśa Vyaśa. Vyaśa divided the Vedas and taught Sumanthan Atharvaveda. The hermit Sumanthan first taught Atharvaveda to his disciple Kabandha who divided it into two parts and taught two disciples Devadarśa, and Pathya. The disciples of Devadarśa were Magadhya, Brahmapali, Sautkayana and Pippalā. Pathya had three disciples. They were Jābālī, Kunuda and Saunaka. Of these Jābālī was a famous expounder of Atharvaveda. (Viśvā Purāṇa, Amāśa 3).

JĀBĀLĪ II. Son of Raśīvājya, a hermit. (See under Viśvākarmā, Pura 2).

JĀBĀLĪ III. A hermit. The descendants of this hermit also are known by this name. Jābālī who performed penance on the mountain of Mandara had several disciples.

While Jābālī was going along the forest he saw a young man of handsome appearance engaged in penance on the shore of a lake. Jābālī wanted to know about him and his penance. But as the young man was in deep meditation Jābālī had to wait there for several years. At last the young man awoke from his meditation and told Jābālī the secret of devotional meditation and contemplation of Kṛṣṇa. The remaining life of Jābālī was spent in the worship of Kṛṣṇa, in consequence of which in the next birth he was born as a cowherd, named Citragandha in the house of the cowherd Praśuḍa. (Padma Purāṇa, Pātāla Khaṇḍa, Chapters 39, 72 and 106).

JĀBĀLĪ IV. A hermit. The intensive penance of this hermit compelled Indra to depute the celestial maid Rambhā to hinder it. Jābālī became a prey to the entrance of this heavenly beauty and a daughter was born to them. This damsel was carried away by the King Citrāṅgada. The hermit Jābālī cursed Citrāṅgada to become a leper. (Śkanda Purāṇa, Chapters 3, 143, and 149).

JĀĐA. An immoral brahmīn. Jāda, who set out to do commercial business once was killed by thieves. As a result of sins committed in previous births he was turned into a Piśāca. After his death his son, who led quite a moral life went to Kālī (Banares) to perform his father's obsequies, and at the particular spot where his father was lying as Piśāca the legend of Chapter 3 of the Gita, on hearing which Jāda got released from his stage as Piśāca. (Padma Purāṇa, Uttarakhaṇḍa and Māraṇacāya Purāṇa).

JAGANNĀTHA PĀTDITA. A very powerful and ruthless literary critic in Sanskrit. He lived between 1550 and 1665. He is also known as Pānditārjuna (King of scholars). His most important and well-known work is Rasagmahādha. To this day it remains as an invaluable treatise in rhetorics. (Ānukāra Śāstra).

His poetic theory is "Ramanāyāṭhapratipadadakab Sabdaś Kāvyam". (Words which convey beautiful meanings constitute poetry). He vehemently opposed the dhvanī vāda (sugestive words and phrases conveying more meanings produce more rasa than they literally and apparently appear to carry). Citranāma-khaṇḍha is another work of the Panditārjuna. In this work another rhetorician named Appayadkṣita is strongly critcised. The allegoric poem, "Bhāvinīvāgam", is supposed to have been written by this great rhetorician based on the untimely death of his wife, Bhāvinī. He has also written five other works, the five Labhās (Gaṅgālāhari etc).

JAGATI. One of the seven horses which draw the chariot of Śūrya. Gāyatrī, Brhati, Umāk, Jagati, Tustubh, Anustubh and Pankti are the seven horses. (Viśu Purāṇa, Part II, Chapter 8).
JAGRAT. According to the vision of Rāta or sages, every living being has four states. They are Jāgrat (waking state), Svapna (dream), Susūpta (profound sleep), and Turjum (anahata, or dreamless sleep, i.e., content with Brahmān in different degrees). The hermits and sages have said about the four states of soul as given below:—

1) Jāgrat. In this state the individual soul is awake. The five organs of senses, the five organs of activity, and the four inner organs of the living being will be active, when the soul is awake. In this state he enjoys the outer world through the senses. Jāgrat, he sets with the eyes, hears with the ears, tastes with the tongue, smells with the nose and feels with the skin. Every man thinks that his understanding through the senses is real. It is the individual soul which is responsible for this understanding. But it is difficult to say whether these perceptions through the senses are real or unreal. A hermit says as follows:—“An individual soul travels from Jāgrat to Svapna and from Svapna to Jāgrat as a fish which goes from one shore to the other without touching anything. For an individual soul the state of Jāgrat is only one of the four states. So we cannot give the verdict that the state of Jāgrat alone is real and all the rest are unreal.” The individual soul which is in the state of Jāgrat enjoys the ordinary world and it is individualistic and by this he is called Jātrī (external—knowing). In this state the individual soul enjoys the external world with the seven organs and the nineteen feet. The seven organs are, the two eyes, head, soul, body, mind, thadder and the legs. The nineteen feet are the five senses, the five organs of activity, the five life breaths and the four inner organs of mind, intellect, egoism and will. The individual soul in the state of Jāgrat, he enjoys the external world with these organs and the feet. The soul in this state is called Vaiśvāna.' This state is experienced by all the human beings of the world and so it is called Vaiśvānas (Bṛhadāraṇyaka, Māndūkyaopanisad).

2) Svapna (dream). The second state of the individual soul is Svapna (dream). He who indulges in dream, dreams even though he had experienced in the sleep and Jāgrat and creating new worlds he enjoys them. While the five organs of senses and the five organs of activity of the dreamer take rest, the four inner organs of the soul are active and the mind is working. See what the author of Upanishads says about the dreamer. He creates his own self from the whole universe and creates his own body by his own body. The light of the self is the light for the dreamer. That man creates a character or an assembly of characters or roads where there is no character or an assembly of characters or roads; joy, delight or extreme delight where there is no joy or delight or extreme delight.

3) Susūpta (profound sleep). The third state of the individual soul is Susūpta (profound sleep). The soul alone is active in this state. In Susūpta the individual soul desires for nothing and does not indulge in dream. In this state the individual soul does not think that the soul and the body are two. So it is unitary. The sleeper is called Prāṇī (living being). In this state the individual soul which is in the state of sleep, completely severs its connection with the organs of senses, the organs of action, mind, the Prāṇamayakāsa (chest of the life-breaths), the manomaya kośa (the chest of mind) and Viṣṇumayamaya kośa (chest of knowledge). The mind, the sense organs, Sākṣamātā (the subject body) and the vocal organs are all absorbed in one consciousness. In sleep the jīvātmā separating all its connections, for the time being, with these items absorbs itself in the Brahmān. See what the author of the Upanishads says about the state of Susūpta (Sleep). As an eagle folds its wings and falls down weary and tired, after flying round in the air for a long time, the individual soul, avoiding all desires and having no dreams, rests in the self in the state of sleep in the nādī, with seventy-two thousand branches called Śūna, like a child or a King or Brahmān. During sleep the mind, senses etc. are not destroyed. They only keep away. They reappear when the man wakes up from sleep.

4) Turjum. In the state of Turjum the Jīvātmā alone is active. The individual soul which abides in creatures are another aspect of Brahmān. Everything said about Brahmān can be said about the Jīvātmā in the state of profound sleep. But the bliss that we enjoy in sleep is not remembered in the state of activity. The same bliss that we enjoy in profound sleep could be enjoyed... in the state of samādhi (contemplation) of yoga or union with the universal soul. When it came to be known that this supernatural bliss could be enjoyed even after one had awakened from contemplation, a fourth state of the jīvātmā (individual soul) was recognised. But in the Bhādāraṇyak Upanishad only three states of the jīvātmā are mentioned.

Immersion of the individual soul by the yogin in the universal soul Brahmā in the state of jñāna or activity is called Turīya. The individual soul which is in the state of Turīya, is described as follows in the Chāndogya Upanishad: “The jīvātmā which is in the state of Turīya is not conscious internally. He whose inner consciousness is active is Taïjasa. He is not bahishpraṇāya (conscious of the outer world). Bahishpraṇāya is Vāvkānara. He is not a combination of Taïjasa and Turīya. He is not conscious of the objects as a conscious man not a conscious man, nor is he an unconscious man. He, who could be explained only by negations, cannot be seen. He is unmanifestable, indiscernible, unhinkable, indescribable and without any characteristic mark. Only by unswerving faith he could be known. It creates the universe and at the same time negates it. It is in the supreme reality, the one without a second (dvaya). This is the state of Turīya.”

Vaiśānvara is the soul with annamayakoṭa (the material body), Taïjasa, the soul with Prāṇamayakoṭa (the sheath of the life breaths), Prāja, the soul with Viṣṇumayakoṭa (the sheath of understanding) and Turīya, the soul with ānandamayakoṭa (the chest of bliss).

JĀGUDA. A country in ancient India. In Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 51, Stanza 25, it is mentioned that the King of this country took part in the Rajasūya (royal consecration) performed by Yuddhīgāra.

JĀHNAVI. The river Gaṅga. (See under Jahu).

JAHNU. A hermit King born in the family of Pāru. 1) Jahu. Descendant of the Matsyās in the following order — Brahmā — Ayu — Nahu — Pāru — Janmejaya — Pracīva — Pravāra — Naśīyā — Viśvāsya — Aśrūbhīva — Viśvāsya. 2) Jahu. His son Jahu becameредел the hermitage of Jahu became angry at this haughtiness of Gaṅga and drank up the river, but at the entreaty of Bhūrīnātha pushed Gaṅgādevī out through his ear. (See under Gaṅga). From that day onwards Gaṅga got the name Jahu.

JAHU. A King of the period of Rgyeda. It is stated in Rgyoṛa, Marjana 1, Anuṅka 17, Sākti 16, that when this King was surrounded by enemies once, the Atvindesavas got them into their chariot and through easily passable ways took them to the top of a mountain.

JAIṢIṢAṅG. A hermit who attained salvation by the strength of his penance.

It is stated in Harivamśa Chapter 18, that three daughters, Aparā, Gopā and Gopālha were born to Himalaya by Menā and the hermit Devala married Gopā and the hermit Jaiṣiṣaṅg married Gopālha. In Mahābhārata, Śatā Parva, Chapter 229, mention is made that this hermit gave much advice to the hermit Devala, son of Asita, about the need for equanimity. On another occasion this hermit talked to Yuddhīgāra about the glory of Śiva. (M.B. Anuṅka Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 37).

There is a story about how this hermit Jaiṣiṣaṅg attained the world of Brahmā. Once he reached the hermitage of Devala, who showed the necessary hospitalities. After a few days the hermit disappeared. After that he used to be seen only at the time of meals. Once Devala took his waters and went by air to the sea, to fetch water. When he reached the sea he saw Jaiṣiṣaṅg bathing there. Devala had gone when Jaiṣiṣaṅg was in the hermitage. How did he reach the sea before Devala? Devala liked the pot and returned thoughtful. When he reached the hermitage Jaiṣiṣaṅg was there. After this Devala travelled through the world of the inspired sages. Wherever he went, he saw Jaiṣiṣaṅg. He asked the inspired sage how it was possible. They praised the attainments, Jaiṣiṣaṅg had obtained, by his 'tapas' (penance). Finally, in the sight of everybody, Jaiṣiṣaṅg flew to the world of Brahmā. (M.B. Śatā Parva, Chapter 50).

It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Saubha Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 24, that this hermit Jaiṣiṣaṅg sits in the palace of Brahmā and carries on meditation and contemplation on Brahmā.

JAIMINĪ 1.

1) General Information. A hermit of the highest degree of learning. In the "History of Classical Sanskrit Literature" it is mentioned that Sumanta, Jaimini, Paula, Vaishampayana and Suka were the five important disciples of Vyāsa. Of these Suka was the son of Vyāsa. In Devi Bhāgavata, it is mentioned that Vyāsa had other disciples also in his hermitage, such as Asita, Devala and others. The five disciples mentioned first gave publication to the work of Vyāsa called 'Jaya', which was the original of the Mahābhārata, Vaishampayana, and Jaimini made some additions to the work 'Jaya'. In Sanskrit there is another book called Jaimini Bhārata, which contains only Asvamedha Parva. (See under Guruparāparā).

2) Other details. (1) It is mentioned in Brahmanda Purāṇa, Chapter 1 that Brahmanda Purāṇa is the story told by Jaimini to Hiranyakāshā at Naimiṣārṇya.

(2) Jaimini was present at the sarpaṇaṭi (sacrifice to kill serpents) of Janamejaya. (M.B. Adiv Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 6).

(3) Jaimini had been a member of the council of JAIMINI II

Yudhisthir. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 11).

4. The hermit visited Bhiṣma in his bed of arrows during the Bhārata Battle. (M.B. Śantā Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 7).

JAIMINI II. The priest of Subāhu, the King of the Cholas (Cola). In accordance with the advice of this priest the King performed many good deeds and conquered heaven. (Pādana Purāṇa, Chapter 19).

JAITRA. A son of Dhrūvarṣa. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 26, Stanza 14, that he was killed by Bhīmachura in the battle of Bhārata.

JAITRAM I. The chariots of King Harīśandra. It was by this means that the King carried out the conquest of countries. (M.B. Śabhā Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 12).

JAITRAM II. The coach of Dhrātrāstrya. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 61).

JĀJALI. A hermit who reared birds on a s head by the power of penance. This hermit who had practised continence from his childhood lived in a forest. Jājali never thought rain, heat of the sun, snow, and such other natural things as unbearable. Once this hermit stood like a pillar in the forest, immersed in meditation. Two birds built their nests in his matted hair. Non-violence being his policy, he did not move. The birds came to their nests every evening and stayed there the whole night. After a few days the eggs hatched in the nests. Still the hermit did not move. The eggs were hatched. The hermit understood that also. Still, he did not move. The young ones got wings. They grew up and began to go out with the parent birds. They went out in the morning and returned in the evening. The hermit stood like a pillar. One morning they went out and did not return in the evening. The hermit stood there for six days waiting for the return of the birds. On the sixth day evening they returned. Next time the hermit waited for a month for the return of the birds. They did not return. So he started from there and went to the sea and dipped in the water and said, “there is no man more virtuous than I either in water or on land” with haughtiness. But the water demons said in an otherworld voice that Tūlādāra, the merchant of Kāśī was more virtuous than he.

Hearing this Jājali went to Kāśī and saw Tūlādāra. Tūlādāra greeted him gladly and they talked for a long time. Jājali understood that Tūlādāra was far more virtuous than he. So he sought advice from Tūlādāra and thus Jājali obtained heaven. (M.B. Śantā Parva, 3 Chapters from 261).

JALA. A deity of water. In Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 29 it is mentioned that this deity was a luminous in the durbars of Brahmā.

JAL. A tributary of river Jumna. King Uśīnara performed a yajña (sacrifice) on the bank of this river and he obtained the position higher than Indra. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 13, Stanza 21).

JALADA. A mountain in Śaka island. The famous country known as Kumudottaravarsa is near this mountain. (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 25).

JALADHĀRA. A mountain in Śakadvipa (The island of Śaka). (M.B. Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 16).

JALADHĀ. The crocodile which is the conveyance of Varuṇa. It is mentioned in Vāmana Purāṇa, Chapter 9, about conveyances of Gods as follows:—

The conveyance of Indra is the white elephant, which came into being from the palm of Dānu, and is of extraordinary strength and very swift, a black buffalo called Paundraka, which was born from the thigh of Rudra, and is as quick as the mind and very fierce, is the conveyance of Vāma (the god of death). The conveyance of Varuṇa is the black crocodile called Jadadhi, born from the ear-wax of Rudra, and having divine power of movement. The conveyance of Vaiśravana (the god of wealth) is a ferocious man with eyes like two cart-wheels and body as big as a mountain, who was born from the leg of Ambikā. The eleven Rudras have speedy horses, terrible serpents and white oxen of high speed. Candra has a chariot as his vehicle yoked with five hundred swans. The vehicles of the Ādityas are chariots yoked with horses and camels. The conveyances of the Vasus are elephants, men for Yaksas, serpents for Kiniṣas, and deer for the Maruts. The fear of fearful appearance have deer as conveyances. The Vidyādāras have parrots for conveyances. An asura called Andhaka has a chariot with thousand post as his vehicle. Prahlāda had, as conveyance a divine chariot of gold and silver yoked with eight white horses and elephant for Vrīcana, horse for Kujambha, deer for chariot yoked for Parīkṣa, and an elephant for Hayagriva, chariot for Māya, Great serpent for Dunda, Aeroplane for Śambhara and lion for Ayaśīkā.

JALANDHAMA. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. (M.B. Śalya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 57).

JALANDHARA. A mighty and valiant Asura, Khadgornā was his charioteer and Vrīḍa was his wife. Jalandhara was the grandson of the sea of Milk. Once he met with the headless Rūṣu, who said to Jalandhara, the whole story beginning from the churning of the sea of Milk. Jalandhara, became furious at the gods who had churned his grandfather. So he collected a big army of Asuras and went to war with the devas. Though a large number of Asuras were killed in the battle, Indra and Viṣṇu were defeated and Viṣṇu was taken captive and hidden under the sea. Finally Paramāvata went to fight with the Asura. In the fight Jalandhara was killed and Viṣṇu was rescued. (Pādana Purāṇa, Chapters 3 to 5). For further details see under Māyāśīvā.

JALAPADA. See under Devadatta 3.

JALAPRADĀNIKA. PARVAM. A sub section of Sri Parva, of the Mahābhārata. This sub section comprises of Chapters 1 to 15 of Sri Parva.

JALAPRALAYA. In all the Asiatic Purāṇas, reference to an ancient great flood, with slight changes occur. According to Hindu Purāṇas this great flood took place before Mahāviṣṇu took the incarnation of Māyā. In the Holy Bible which is the scripture of the Christians, the story of the great flood is alluded to the story of the Noah. (See under Avāśīr). This story occurs in the Babylonian literature also. The book 'Gilgamish,' which is as old as the Rigveda, is considered to be the oldest in the world. The theme of the Gilgamish is the travel.
of a man named Gilgamish. This story is written in twelve clay-tablets. After 1853, the scientists of England who carried on the research, found in the library of Ancient Nineveh, the famous in the ancient world, these twelve tablets along with twenty-thousand other tablets, all of which were in good condition. This library was built by the King Ashurbanipal in 7th century B.C., on a very high place on the bank of the river Tiglis, in the ancient Nineveh. All these clay tablets were discovered there was not a single man who could read and understand them, in the world. In spite of hard work, several years passed by without getting even a single tablet deciphered. They were written in 'Academia', which was the language of the court of Ashurbanipal and the national and the international language of the time. Another copy of this great work was discovered on the bank of the Euphrates, where the capital of the famous King Hammu- Ribiti of Ancient Babylon stood. Later discoverers disclosed that this great work Gilgamish was part and parcel of the famous ancient civilization of the Oriental countries. The Hittites and the Egyptians tried to translate this book Gilgamish into their own language. In the tablets with letters in the form of arrow heads, found on the bank of the Nile, the portions which were difficult for them to translate, are given red marks. It was from a small piece of broken clay tablet that clues to the origin of this famous work were obtained. The world is indebted to the Sumerians, who had their capital in the city Ur stands, for the original work of Gilgamish. Mention is made about a great flood in Gilgamish, as follows: Gilgamish set out on an adventurous journey to see his ancestor Utnipitsim to learn from him the means of obtaining eternal life. The gods had told this man about the secret of eternal life. At last Gilgamish reached an island and found out his ancestor and asked him about the secret of eternal life. Utnipitsim said that he had lived in 'Shoorappak' and that he had been an ardent devotee of 'Iya' God. When the gods decided to destroy mankind by a great flood the God Iya called his devotee Utnipitsim and said to him 'You man of shoorappak, the son of Urubartiti: Demolish your house and build a ship. Leave off your wealth and search for your life. Cast away your property and save your life. Bring the seeds of every living thing into the ship. The ship you build should be according to measurements.' The rest of the story is like the story of the 'Ark of Noah'. The scientists are of opinion that in pre-historic times the three continents of Asia, Europe and Africa were one continent and that by earthquake or some other reason the much part of Europe had sunk down and water flowed in and thus the Mediterranean sea came into existence. At a time when the far off regions of the earth were unknown, the people who escaped the flood imagined that the entire world had been submerged by the flood. It could be imagined that this story of the great flood passed on to posterity verbally and after so many generations it appeared in different regions in different languages in different forms. In writing about Jalaprelaya, I have dealt with Gilgamish a little elaborately. Details on Gilgamish were obtained from the English translation of a famous German work by Vereker Keller. This book had not been received when I wrote about the work 'Gilgamish', so these details are included under the word 'Jalaprelaya'.

JALASANDHI I. One of the hundred sons of Dhrtarastra. Bhimsena killed him. (M.B. Bhishma Parva, Chapter 64, Stanza 33).

JALASANDHI II. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas against the Pandavas. He was present at the svayamvara of Panchali (marriage of Panchali). It is mentioned in Mahabharata, Drona Parva, Chapter 115, Stanza 52, that he was killed by Satyaki in the battle of Bharata.

JALADHA. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 16).

JALESVARI. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Salya Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 16).

JALEYU. A son born to Raudra, the son of Puru, by a celestial woman named Mirakali. Mention is made about Jaleyu in Mahabharata, Adi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 10.

JAM. It means gīrṇa (music). (Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 248).

JAMADAGNI. A hermit of majestic power. He was the father of Paśurāṇa.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Visun in the following order are: Brahmā — Bhrigu — Īśavaya — Avruna — Keśa — Jamadagni.

2) Birth. There is an interesting story about the birth of Jamadagni. Gaḍhiva was the son of king Kauśitaka. A daughter named Satyavati was born to Gaḍhiva. The hermit Keśa gave a cowry of one thousand horses, each with one black ear, married Satyavati. Once Satyavati told her husband that herself and her mother wanted to get a child each. After the succession of obligations to Agni (fire), Keśa took two parts filled with boiled rice and gave them to Satyavati, with mantras (spells). The radiance of Brahmā was invoked into one pot and the radiance of Kāśita was invoked into the other. The hermit had asked Satyavati to eat the rice into which the radiance of Brahmā had been invoked and to give the other pot to her mother. But the daughter and mother changed the pots secretly and Satyavati ate the rice in the pot into which Kāśita radiance was invoked and gave the pot of rice filled with Brahmā-radiance to her mother. Both the women conceived. As the child grew in the womb the radiance of Brahmā shone on the face of the mother and Kāśita lustre was seen on the face of Satyavati. Keśa asked Satyavati for the reason. She admitted the secret interchange of the pot. Satyavati and her mother both delivered at the same time. Satyavati got the son Jamadagni, who was the embodiment of Kāśita tejas and the child with Brahma tejas born to the mother was Vivasvat. Therefore, in some Purāṇas Vivasvat is described as the uncle of Jamadagni whereas in some others they are said to be brothers. (Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 57).

3) A house-holder. When Jamadagni grew up he made a tour and visited the holy places one by one and reached the palace of King Praśnaṅjīr of the family of Ṛṣikau. He saw Reṇukā the beautiful daughter of King Praśnaṅjīr and fell in love with her. He requested Praśnaṅjīr for the hand of Reṇukā. The King, without raising any objection gave his daughter Reṇukā in marriage to Jamadagni. The couple came to the bank.
of the river Narmada and creating a hermitage began.

4) The birth of Pravara. Because of the wickedness of the King of the Kṣatriyas, the goddess Earth became miserable. She made a representation to Brahmā that her son, Pravara, was causing her trouble. Brahmā granted her request and asked Vishnu to take the form of a handsome young man and promise to be her son. The child was born on the banks of the river Narmada. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 39).

5) Jamadagni getting the bow of Viṣṇu. Once the devas (gods) desired to know who, of Siva and Viṣṇu, was the more powerful. They informed Brahmā of their desire. Brahmā asked Viṣṇu to make two tremendous bows. He gave one to Siva and the other to Viṣṇu. The bow which Viṣṇu got was known as Vaishnavacapā. That which Siva got was known as Sivarājā. After this Brahmā caused enmity between Siva and Viṣṇu. A terrible battle ensued between Siva and Viṣṇu. After a while the Vaishnavacapā became less effective. At the request of the devas, the fight was stopped. The devas decided that Viṣṇu was superior to Siva, in power. Viṣṇu got angry at this decision and gave his bow to Devarāja Janaka, the King of Videha. It was this bow that Śri Rāma broke at the marriage of Sītā.

6) Reṇukā was killed. Parāśurāma became fourteen years old. Jamadagni went to the forest to gather fruits, roots, etc. After completing the cleansing work of the hermitage, leaving Parāśurāma in the forest, Reṇukā went to the bank of the river Narmada (Revā) to fetch water. When she reached the river, Kārttikeyājuna and his wives were playing in the water. She wanted them to go. When they were gone she got into the river. But as the water was muddy because of the play, she walked a little to the east where there was pure water. She saw there Cittaratha the King of Śaiva playing with his wife in the water. How beautiful they were! She had never seen so beautiful a woman or so handsome a man. She stood there looking at them for a while. When she reached the hermitage with water, Jamadagni had already returned a long while ago. He had returned weary and tired of the heat of the midday sun. He did not see his wife in the hermitage. He had been sitting very angry when Reṇukā returned with water. She put the pot down and bowed before her husband and told him the reason for her being late. When he heard the reason his anger blazed. He called his sons one by one and ordered them to kill her. But the four elder sons did not dare to execute his order saying that slaying a woman was a great sin. But Parāśurāma came forward and by a cutting-arrow cut off the head of his mother. The father called the four sons who disobeyed him and cursed them thus:

"Since you have disobeyed the order of your father, because of your ignorance, you shall become foresters and live in forest." Being overwhelmed with sorrow at the death of his mother, Parāśurāma swooned and fell down. When his anger subsided, discretion dawned on Jamadagni. He aroused his son and took him on his lap and asked him what boon he wanted for having accomplished the unaccomplishable task. Parāśurāma's request was that his mother should be brought to life again. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 60).

7) The sun gates Jamadagni as an umbrella and sandals. See under the word Gerippu (Sandals).

8) The temptation of Dharma. See under the word "Dharma" Para 6.

9) Jamadagni was killed. Once Kārttikeyājuna, with his minister Candragupta and some attendants had been hunting in the forests on the banks of the river Narmada. It was noon. The hunters grew tired of hunger and thirst. They came to the hermitage of Jamadagni. The hermit called his divine cow Susila and ordered her to give food to the King and his party. Within a few seconds meals were got ready for thousands of people. The King and his attendants had a feast. On their return journey the wonderful cow Susila was the subject of their talk. The King wanted to get the cow which possessed divine power. So he sent his minister Candragupta to the hermitage of Jamadagni with instructions to get the cow Susila in exchange for a crown of cows or even half of the kingdom. But the hermit was not prepared to give the cow. The minister and his men caught the cow by force and went away. The hermit, filled with grief, followed the party a long way through the forest, and requested Candragupta to return the cow. Candragupta got angry and struck him to death, and took the cow to the palace, in the capital city of Mahīṣmati. After waiting for a long time, Reṇukā started in search of her husband. She saw Jamadagni lying almost dead, in a pool of blood. She fell down and beating her breast cried aloud. Parāśurāma with Akṭavraṇa and other disciples came there. When she saw her son Parāśurāma, she beat her breast twenty times and cried. Parāśurāma, took an oath that since his mother beat her breast twenty times and cried, he would travel around twenty times and put an end to the Kṣatriya Kings. After that they took the dead body of Jamadagni and placed it on fire, and began to sing the song of Viṣṇu. Then the hermit Sukra came by that way and with the help of Mṛtasañjīvanī brought Jamadagni to life again. The lost cow Susila also returned without her calf. (Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa, Chapter 69; M.B. Śaṅki Parva, Chapter 49).

10) Death of Jamadagni. Parāśurāma and Akṭavraṇa went to the city of Mahīṣmati with the intention of bringing the calf of Susila back. They stood at the gate of the city and challenged Kārttikeyājuna for a

1 Seeing his mother beating her breast twenty times, Bhrigu caught hold of her hands and said, "Mother, stop abusing your body. Don't be sorry. I am here to end your sorrow. Since you have beaten your breast twenty times, I will annihilate the Kṣatriya Kings twenty times," Bhrigu Rāma took an oath thus, to his mother.
fight. Kārtaviryārjuna came out with his army. In the battle which ensued, Kārtaviriya and his sons and most of his warriors fell dead. Parāsurāma and Akṛtavāna returned with the calf. Jamadagni asked Parāsurāma to go to Mahendragiri and do penance in order to mitigate the sin of killing a large number of people. When Parāsurāma had gone for penance, Surāsenā a son of Kārtaviryārjuna came with his men to the hermitage, cut off the head of Jamadagni and took it away. Parāsurāma and the disciples of Jamadagni placed the dead body of Jamadagni on the pyre and burnt it. Repukā jumped into that fire and died. After this Parāsurāma began his twenty-one tours for the extermination of the Kṣatriya Kings. (Bṛhadāraṇyaka Purāṇa, Chapter 86).

11. Other information. (1) Udayana grew up in the hermitage of Jamadagni. (See under Udayana.)

(2) Jamadagni was one of the hundred sons of Rākcā. (M.B. A. Dīrṇava, Chapter 66, Stanza 45.)

(3) Jamadagni was one of the hermits, who visited Śrī Rāma on his return from forest life. The hermits who came to Ayodhyā from the North were, Kaśyapa, Bharadvāja, the Sanakas, Sarabhāgava, Durvavas, Mātaṅga, Viśākhā, Tumburu and the Saptarṣis (the seven hermits). Uttarā Rāmāyana.

(4) Jamadagni was present at the Jāmnoṣava (birth celebration) of Arjuna. (M.B. A. Dīrṇava, Chapter 122, Stanza 51.)

(5) This hermit is a luminary in the assembly of Bṛhadāraṇyaka. (M.B. Śāhī Parva, Chapter 11, Stanza 22.)

(6) During the time of the battle of Mahāvāraṭa, Jamadagni entered Kurukṛṣṭa and advised Drona to stop the battle. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 190, Stanza 35.)

(7) Jamadagni once delivered a speech on the bad sides of accepting rewards, to the King Vṛṣādārbi. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 93, Stanza 44.)

(8) Jamadagni vowed that he was innocent in the affair of the stealing of Agastya’s lotus. (M.B. Anuśāsana Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 25.)

12. The Name of Jamadagni. Ācāra, Bhāravga, Bhārgavānandana, Bhūrgvāra, Bhūrgvāra, Bhūrgvārana, Kṛikaputra are the names used by Vyūṣa to denote Jamadagni, in Bhārata.

JĀMAGHA. A King of the family of Yāśā. (Bṛhāṣṭha, Stanza 9.)

JAMBĀVAN. A monkey of extraordinary might. He was the minister of Sugriva.1

1. Birth. When the troubles and hardships caused by the wickedness of Rāvaṇa became unbearable the goddess Earth and the Devas approached Bṛhadāraṇyaka for redress. Bṛhadāraṇyaka took them to the sea of Milk. Mahāvīra heard everything and said that he would incarnate as the son of Daśaratha and would kill Rāvaṇa. Bṛhadāraṇyaka was directed to create monkeys to help him on that occasion. Accordingly Bṛhadāraṇyaka created Jambāvan and several other monkeys.

2. For the cause of his forgetting his own powers see under Treśṇidhū II.

There are two stories about the birth of Jambāvan in the Purāṇas.

(1) Bṛhadāraṇyaka sat for a long time thinking about the creation of monkeys. Then he wanted to go to the sea so for which he opened the mouth and instantly Jambāvan came out from inside Bṛhadāraṇyaka through the open mouth.

“I have already created Jambāvan the noble bear, who jumped out of my mouth when I yawned.” (Valmiki Rāmāyana, Bālākāanda, Sarga 17, Stanza 6.)

(2) One day time of Bṛhadāraṇyaka ended and the night had advanced two yāmas (six hours). The Madhukataśus born of the ear-wax of Mahāvīra began to create trouble and commotion in the waters of the great flood. They saw a lotus on the surface of water surrounding Bṛhadāraṇyaka in it they challenged him for fight. Hearing their shouting and the challenge Bṛhadāraṇyaka became afraid of the asuras. His middle face began to sweat. The sweat flowed through his cheeks and reached the joints. Jambāvan came into being from that sweat. So he got the name Amabujita, (born from the water of sweat). As he was the first person who entered the country of Jambināda he was called Jambāvan. As he was born when there was no universe or time his age or date of birth could not be ascertained. At the time of Śrī Rāma, Jambāvan was six Manyatras (age of a Manu) and for hundred and sixty-four Catuyogas (a period of four yugas) old. (The present age is the twenty-eighth Catuyoga of the seventh Manu.) Jambāvan had witnessed all the incarnations from Matsya to Śrī Rāma. (Kambā Rāmāyana, Parva Kāndas.)

2. Jambāvan and the incarnation of Śrī Rāma. During the time of Śrī Rāma Jambāvan was the minister of Sugriva. It is stated in Valmiki Rāmāyana, Kishkindha Kāndā, Sarga 41, that Nila, the son of Agni, Hanumān, Jambūvan, Suhutra, Sārī, Saragutama, Gaja, Gavaksi, Gavaya, Suraṇa, Rasbha, Mandu, Dviveda, Vijaya, Gandhamidana, Ulkāmukha, Asanga, Atagada and others were the ministers of Sugriva.

The monkeys who went to the south in search of Śrītā, reached the sea shore. The question was how to jump over the sea to Lanka. Each of them came forward to show his ability and admired failure. Finally Jambūvan called Hanumān to him and advised him to jump over to Lanka. Hanumān who was not aware of his own powers refused. Jambūvan told him about his birth, self-power, attainment of boon etc. Hanumān became convinced of his powers at the words of Jambūvan and jumped over the sea to Lanka. (Rāmāyana, Kīśkindha Kāndā.)

3. Jambūvan and the incarnation of Vāmana. Jambūvan walked round Mahāvīra, who incarnated as Vāmana to curb the powers of Mahāvīra. At that time Jambūvan was immensely strong. But by the time of the incarnation of Śrī Rāma his strength had decreased much. Hear what he said to the monkeys who assembled on the sea shore to go in search of Śrītā.

"My abilities in olden times were not what you see now. In the far old days, I had walked round that bear. In some of the Indian languages they are denoted as a bear. In Mahāvīra he was thought of as a monkey from ancient period. In Valmiki Rāmāyana, which is the original work, Jambūvan is called Rākṣaputāvan as Valmiki Rāmāyana Bālākānda. In the same chapter it occurs that, it was the aim of Bṛhadāraṇyaka in the incarnation of Śrī Rāma to set the powers of Mahāvīra to wrong to consider Jambūvan either as a bear or as a monkey."
JAMBAVATTI

Daughter of the famous Jambavānti. Śrī Kraṇa went in search of the famous precious stone Syamantaka which was lost when Prasena wore it and went to the forest. In the search for his wife, Jambavānti fought with him and was defeated. Finally he gave his daughter Jambavantī to Śrī Kraṇa as his wife, and she immediately gave birth to a son named Pārashurāma. Jambavānti provided for this baby and Jambavantī became wealthy. (Devī Bhāgavata, Saṁhīda 8).

JAMBHA

A Daitya (Asura). He was the chief among those who snatched away Aśura from the hands of Disvanavattī. (Agna Purāṇa, Chapter 2).

The Purāṇas several Asuras (demons) bearing the name Jambha are mentioned. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Saṁbha Parva, Dāsakīṣṭhayapatī, Chapter 38, that Śrī Kraṇa killed an Asura named Jambha. Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Saṁbha Parva, Chapter 98, Saṁhīda 49 that the teacher Sūkra refused to help a Jambha whom Indra killed later. It occurs in Mahābhārata, Vaiṣṇava Parva, Chapter 192, Saṁhīda 24, that Mahāvīra had killed an Asura called Jambha. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Vaiṣṇava Parva, Chapter 285, Saṁhīda 2, that a group of Jambha were among the Asuras who have undergone training under Ārāma, once attacked Hanumān. Another Jambhi Asura had been killed by Arjuna, as stated in Mahābhārata, Udvāga Parva, Chapter 49. All these Dānava (Asuras) were sons of Kṣiṇapa, born of his wife Dama.

JAMBHAKA

A Kṣatriya King. This King was killed in battle by Śrī Kraṇa. He had a son who, later became King but was killed by Śahdeva in his conquest of the countries. (M.B. Saṁbha Parva, Chapter 32, Saṁhīda 7).

JAMBODVPĪPA

One of the Purāṇic Dvīpas (seven continents). These seven continents are embankments separating the seven seas. Jambodvīpa, Krauṇa Dvīpa, Śāka Dvīpa and Puṣkara Dvīpa are included in the seven islands.

Jambodvīpa has an area of one laka of yojanas. The island is round like a lotus flower. There are eight long mountain ranges which divide the island into nine countries, which look like nine petals of the lotus flower. Each of these nine countries has an area of nine thousand yojanas. The two countries of the north and south extremities are bow-shaped. Four of the remaining seven are longer than the rest. The central country is square. This country is known as Śālavītta, at the centre of which there is the mountain Śumeru with the height of one laka of yojanas. This is called Śvarnarpavara. The mountain is the source of gold. The top of this mountain is a great flat place with an area of thirty-thousand yojanas. This great plain is ten thousand yojanas above the ground level. On the northern part of Śālavītta lie the three mountain ranges of Nilagiri, Svetagiri and Śrīgāvān, and midway between them the three countries called Ramyaka, Hiramaya and Markand. One of the peaks of Mount Svetagiri is three mountains called Nisadhā, Hemakūṭa and Himālaya and three countries Harivarṣa, Kimpura and Bhdrāṭa. The mountain Mālāvān lies to the west and Gandhāmādana to the east of Ellāvīṭa. There are two countries Ketumālā and Bhadrāṣṭa having an area of two thousand yojanas each with the two mountains Mān and Nisadhā as boundaries. At the foot of the mount Mahāmūlu there are the mountains of Mandāra, Mṛu, Supārśvaka, Kumuda and many others. On these mountains big trees like niṅgelif (syzygium jambolanum), Mākanda (Mango tree) Kāṭamū (Naucika Candambā) bāntāt etc. grow in plenty. On the top of these mountains there are four lakes, full of milk, honey, juice of sugarcane and sweet water. The dew drops become garlands by the touch of the water of these lakes. Besides these parks there are four heavenly parks known as Nandana, Cauvīrath, Vaiḥṛāja and Sarvadhara. The women folk of the devas (gods) and Gandharvas (semi-gods) play in these parks, which are convenient for couples to carry on love play. The gods are formed there, by the juice of nectar from the five nectarous fruits. The river is purple coloured and is called Arunānadi (river Aruna). The goddess named Arunā lives here. The Jambū tree is in this Jambudvīpa. (Devī Bhāgavata, 5.12.8).

JAMBOKA. A warrior of Subrahmanyā. (M.B., Śaṅkhyā Parva, Chapter 53, Stanza 76).

JAMBUKA. (JAMBULALIKA). A Śūdrā Sage. The child of a brahmin died when Śri Rāma, after his twelve years’ exile in forest had returned to Ayodhyā and was ruling the country in an ideal manner. The brahmin and his wife carried the dead body of their child to the palace with loud lamentations. Everybody felt surprise as to how could a child be/sheathless in the land where the king was ruling it in the most dharāma (righteous) manner. Then did Nārada, who was present in the assembly, point out that in a corner of Rāmāraṇya a Śūdrā Sage was doing tapas and that it was the reason for the untimely death of the brahmin child. At once Śri Rāma set out in search of the Śūdrā Sage after directing Sāturghata to see that no enemy entered the country, and asking Laksman to take care of the dead body of the brahmin child. After a rather detailed search Śri Rāma found Jambuṇa at the mountain called Sālīm doing tapas hanging from the branch of a tree on his legs with head down. He told Śri Rāma that he was the Śūdrā Sage called Jambuka and was performing tapas thus so that he might ascend to heaven in his very body. Śri Rāma at once cut off the head of the Śūdrā Sage and walked with his sword in his hand and with a look of salvation, and the dead child of the brahmin returned to life again. (Uttara Rāmāyaṇa).

JAMBUKESVARA. Name of an idol of Śiva (Līṅga) installed in Mysore. The Śivalṅga installed in the Jam- bukesvara temple in Mysore. Jambhū is a fruit tree. There is a story about how Śiva happened to come under this tree. Once upon a time this place was full of Jambhū trees, and a recluse performing a penance under a Jambhū tree got a fruit of it. Attracted, so to say, by the sanctity of the fruit the recluse submitted it first as an offering to Lord Śiva, and only after that he ate it. As a result of that the fruit germinated in the stomach of the sage, grew up into a tree and emerged in to lighting and in bursting his head open. Elated at this the sage danced before God, who asked him to return to the place from where he got the fruit. Accordingly he returned to Tiruvānakkavīl and continued his penance. Please so much with the sage Śiva followed him and sat under the tree. From that day onwards Śiva came to be called Jambhūndha. To this day Jamboṇadha sits under the Jambhū tree.

Later, a temple came to be built there under the following circumstances. A controversy arose between Mālāvān and Puspadanta, two of the Bhūta-śāmanas of Śiva, as to who cherished more devotion to the Lord. The controversy developed into a quarrel and Puspadanta cursed Mālāvān into spiders and Mālāvān entered Puspadanta into an elephant. Now, when the mutual curse took effect wisdom dawned on both Mālāvān and Puspadanta, and they took refuge in the Lord for redemption from the curse. The Lord sent both of them to the Cula country, and after wandering about in different parts of the country both of them came to Jambuvēṣvara, and lived there worshipping God. The elephant used to battle daily in sacred shrims, bring holy water in its trunk and make an offering of it to the Lord. As for the spider it waved a net above the head of the Lord. So that dried leaves did not fall on it. The elephant used to daily sweep off the net above the head of the Lord and make its offering of the water thereto. But, the spider would again weave the net. Thus their quarrel continued. One day the spider, in great anger, got into the trunk of the elephant and bit it hard. Due to unbearable pain it smashed its trunk on a granite stone and fell down dead. At this God appeared and blessed both of them. The Lord also said that the sacred spot would come to be known as Tiruvānakkavīl (aśeṣa- elephant ; Kavī—temple) in memory of Puspadanta who had taken the form of the elephant. The spider was told that he would be born in the Cula dynasty and carry on for long years many good acts. Accordingly Mālāvān was born as the son of Subhadiva, the Cula king and Kamalāvati, his queen, and ruled the land for many years under the name King Cēkānna. He it was who built the Jambuvesvara temple. (Tiruvānakkavīl Purāṇa).

JAMBOKHANDAVINIRMAṆA PARVA. A sub section of Bhāma Parva, in the Mahābhārata. See under Mahābhārata.

JAMBUMALI. A Rāksasa (giant) who was the son of Prabata. Hanumān killed this Rāksasa in a fight, when he went to Lakṣaṇa in search of Śīva. (Viṣṇu Purāṇa Sundardhāra, Sarga 44).

JAMBUMALIKA. See under Jambuka.

JAMBOMARGS. An ancient holy place. If one visits this place one will attain the fruits of performing the sacrifice of Aśvamedha (horse sacrifice). (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 62).

JAMBÕCNADA I. A mountain. The river Gauges flows through the valley of this mountain which is connected with Mahāmē出资 (M.B., Vana Parva, Chapter 139, Stanz 16).

JAMBÕCNADA II. A golden mountain which stands in the place called Uśrābja. A King named Marutta performed sacrifice on this mountain. (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 23.)

JAMBUṆADA III. Gold is formed from the river Jambū which flows through Jambūdīvta (the island Jambū). The gold is called Jambūnāda, according to Mahābhārata, Bhīṣma Parva, Chapter 7, Stanza 26.

JAMBUṆADA IV. A son of Janamejaya, a King of the dynasty of Pāru (M.B. Ādi Parva, Chapter 94, Stanza 41).

JAMBUṆADA. A famous river. (See under Jambūdīvta.)

JANADEVA. A Janaka King who ruled over Mithilā (Śānti Parva, Chapter 218, Verse 3).

1) Mahāvīra, once in the grave of a brahmin, tested the King and praised him with great charity, (Śānti Parva, Chapter 218).

2) Not long afterwards the King in his court could answer his questions about salvation satisfactorily. But, Pāṇḍu, the son of Pushan, advised the King about the means to attain salvation. (Śānti Parva, Chapter 218).

JANAKA.

1) Genealogy. Janaka was descended from Visuva in the following order: visuva, —Sabhu, —Marici, —Kāya, —Vivasva, —Vasumatī, —Kāśikā, —Nimi, —Mitha, —U似vasu, —Nandivardhana, —Vasumatī, —Vivasva, —Vasumatī, —Kāshikā, —Nimi, —Mitha, —Uṣirasu. (See under Jambūdīvta.)

2) Janaka dynasty. Janaka, Vivasva and Nimi were the three prominent sons of Vasumatī. The dynasty of Vivasva earned reputation as the chieftain of powerful Kings as Vivasva, Ashvatthama, Māndhu, Tīrvanakur, Harete, Kuśānas, Sūrya and Bhringrath. The Rāma also was born in Vivasva's dynasty. It was Nimi, the younger brother of Vivasva who founded the Videha dynasty. There is a story about that dynasty getting the name, Videha. Nimi decided to conduct a yajña and requested Vasishtha to act as high priest at the yajña. Vasishtha, who then was busy with the affairs of another yajña asked Nimi to postpone his proposed yajña to a later date. To this Nimi made no answer and, Vasishtha went away under the impression that his suggestion had been accepted by Nimi. Accordingly, as soon as he got free from other preoccupations Vasishtha went to Nimi to conduct his yajña. But, Nimi had already performed the Yajña with Garutama as high priest. Enraged at this, Vasishtha cursed Nimi that he should lose his body and become Videha (without body). As the result of the curse Nimi fell down dead. As Nimi had no sons living the Rāsi churning out of his body a child. As the child was born the churning and was named Mithi Janaka. After that all kings born in Mithi's dynasty began using the common name Janaka.

The actual name of Janaka, father of Siṣṭa, was Siṣṭhivāja. Mithilā or Mithilāpur was the city founded by Mithi. From the time of the curse pronounced on Nimi the kings of that dynasty also came to be known as Videha and the country, they ruled Videha. (See Num). (Devi Bhāgavata, 5th Skanda).

3) Brother of Siṣṭhivāja. Siṣṭhivāja, the father of Siṣṭa had a brother called Kusāladvaja. While Siṣṭhivava was the king of Mithilā the king of Sāṃkṣāya called Sudhavan attacked Mithilā. Siṣṭhivāja killed Sudhavan in the war and crowned his brother Kusāladvaja as the King of Sāṃkṣāya. Lakṣmana's wife Urmilā was Kusāladvaja's daughter. Kusāladvaja had three daughters called Māndāvī, Urmilā and Srubākāri. Bharata married Māndāvī and Satrughna married Srubākāri. (Kamba Rāmāyana, Bālākāya; Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Bālākāndā, Canto 71).

4) Birth of Siṣṭa. At a time when Siṣṭhivāja had no issue, a girl emerged from the arrows of the ploughed earth, and Siṣṭhivāja felt the desire to bring up the child as his own daughter. And, a celestial voice, "Oh! Siṣṭhivāja! it is your own daughter" clinic the issue for the King. That daughter was Siṣṭa. Siṣṭhivāja —Janaka—accordingly brought up Siṣṭa as his own daughter. (Vālmiki Rāmāyana, Ayodhyā Kanda, Canto 18).

5) Janaka put Siṣṭhivāja. See under Janadagni.

6) Janaka and Kārmādaka. See under Astavakra.

7) Janaka and Astavakra. See under Astavakra.

8) Janaka in Tamakot. King Janaka once, by his yogic powers cast off his physical body. A vimāna (aerial chariot) from Devakāla arrived to carry Janaka's soul there. On his way to Devakāla Janaka approached Kālāpur where innumerable sinners were being tortured in the various hells. When they learnt that he had come in contact with Janaka, their bodies of torture and the fire of hell now became cool and pleasing to them. When Janaka went to go away the inmates of hell begged him not to leave them in that condition. He thought to himself thus: ‘If these beings get some comfort or happiness in my presence the pain of the soul will be relieved. Which will be my svarga (heaven)’. Thinking thus, Janaka the most righteous of souls stopped there. And then Kālā arrived there to determine suitable punishments to the various kinds of sinners, and seeing Janaka there, asked why he, the most virtuous and purest of souls, waited there, Janaka explained his reason for standing there and added that he would quit the place only if Kālā released all the people from hell. On hearing Janaka's answer Kālā pointed out to him one by one the sinners who were being tortured in hell and explained things as follows: — "Look here, that fellow there had seduced the wife of his most intimate friend, and that is why he is tied to a red hot iron bar for 10,000 years. After those 10,000 years he would be born in a pig's womb, and when he is born among human beings it would be as a eunuch. The other fellow there forcibly killed another man's wife, and so he has to be roasted in Kaurava hell for hundred years. That other fellow is put into this vessel filled with blood and pus with both his hands cut off as he had stolen other people's property. This fellow did not speak even a word of welcome to a tired and hungry man who sought his hospitality at night. That is why he has been thrown into thick darkness, and there, for a hundred years, he must undergo the additional suffering of wasp-bite. As for this man he had in a loud voice found fault with another man, and this other fellow is his friend who listened to those vilifications attentively. And, that is the reason why both of them have been pushed into the hell and are being treated very badly. So, all these people have to suffer for their sins. You, King Janaka, who did only righteous acts will please go away from this accursed place.” Janaka asked Kālā how those sinners could be released from hell, and Kālā answered that if any good act of the King was transferred to them they could be set free. One early morning Janaka had, with a pure heart, chanted "Rama, Rama" and that good act was exchanged for the freedom of the sinners. After their release had been effected, Janaka asked Kala: "You say that only sinners come here. What sin have I committed that I should come here?" Kala's reply to the question was as follows: --"Oh! King, no one else in the whole world has so much punya as you have got. But, a small sin you have committed. Once you prevented a cow from eating grass, and therefore, you had to come up to the gates of hell. Now, that sin has been atoned for. So you may go to svarga." Janaka saluted Kala and in the divine vimana went to Heaven. (Padma Purana, Chapters 30 and 31).

9) Artifical Janaka. While Sitā was a captive in Lákša Kāvana, to bring her round, deputed a very clever magician called Marutti to her, disguised as Janaka, her father. And Marutti, in the capacity of her father consorted her and advised her to yield to the wishes of Kāvana. But Sitā did not yield, and the artificial Janaka assumed his original form of Marutti and went away. (Kamba Ramayana, Sundara Kandha).

10) Other information about Janaka. (1) Bhumisastra debated one Janaka, who was King of Mithilā during the time of the Pândavas. (Sabhā Parva, Chapter 30, Verse 13).
(2) King Janaka was a personification or incarnation of all good qualities. (Vana Parva, Chapter 207, Verse 37).
(3) Janaka, the father of Sitā, in his old age renounced all worldliness and became a recluse. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 16, Verse 4).
(4) Once the sage called Aśana imparted some pieces of advice to Janaka. (See under Aśmaka-pākhyaṇa).
(5) Once in a war between Janaka and a king called Pratardana, the army of Janaka, in the presence of the army of Pratardana stood aghast, and Janaka invited them to fight by showing heaven and hell to them. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 99, Verse 4).
(6) Once in a war with a King called Kesaradari when victory for Janaka was found to be an impossibility he, as advised by Sage Kālavarcasaka gave his daughter to Kesaradari in marriage. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 106, Verse 2).
(7) Once Māndavya a great sage put many questions about Trivā (agreed) to Janaka and he, the great philosopher answered the questions quite satisfactorily. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 276).
(8) On another occasion Janaka had a talk with Sage Pārākara about the attainment of prosperity and welfare. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 296).
(9) There was a King called Karīla Janaka among the Janaka Kings. Once Vashishta gave some good advice to Karīla Janaka. (Sānti Parva, Chapters 302-308).
(10) Once a Sage advised a Janaka King called Vaman on subjects relating to Dharma. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 309).
(11) Vasamān Janaka, son of Devarāja put many questions to Yājnavalkya and they were answered to the full satisfaction of the King. (Sānti Parva, Chapters 310-318).
(12) The Janaka King called Janadeva had once a discussion with Sage Puṇḍatīkha about the means to avoid death. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 319).
(13) There was once a Janaka King called Dharmacīvraja, and Sulabha, an erudite woman in Mithilā wanted to test the King. By her yoge powers she assumed the form of a very beautiful woman and visited Janaka's palace. She was offered a seat by the King, and seated on the stool she took her soul into the body of Janaka, and the soul entered into a discussion on philosophers subjects with Janaka. Sulabha was thus convinced about the unique scholarship of the King and left the palace convinced about her attempt to test the King. (Sānti Parva, Chapter 320).
(14) Suka, the son of Vīsṇu not being fully satisfied by the study of Bhāgavata once visited Janaka at the instance of his (Suka's) father, and Janaka did so easily clear the doubts of Suka, which even Vīsṇu had not been able to successfully handle. (Dev Bhāgavata, 1st Sandhā). (15) King Janaka did not eat flesh. (Avamāndhama Parva, Chapter 115, Verse 65).
(16) Dharmā, once in the guise of a brahmin imparted many pieces of advice to Janaka. (Avamāndhama Parva, Chapter 32).

The above facts prove that the Janaka kings, as a rule, were great scholars and philosophers.

11) Synonyms of Janaka. Andāravī, Dharmantha, Karīla, Karīljanaka, Maitilā, Mithilādhāpa, Mithilēvāra, Vaiḍēka etc.

JANAKI I. A Kārtikeya king who was the rebirth of an asura named Candraśāmana. It is stated in Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 20, that the Pāndavas had sent to him a letter of invitation to take part in the battle of Bhārata.

JANAKI II. See under Sītā.

JANALOKA. One of the fourteen worlds. This world is situated three crores of yojanas (leagues) away from Dvīpa-pada (the region of Dharma—Pole star; according to Vīra Purana, Aśokan).

JANAMEJAYA I. A famous King of the Solar dynasty
2) Birth, marriage and ascension to throne. Janamejaya was the son of Pārśuṣi by his wife Madravati. Vāpuṣṭa, daughter of Sūryavān, King of Kāśi was Janamejaya's wife. Two sons, Sāntīkara and Sāntīkara were born to them. Janamejaya had three brothers called Śrutasena, Ugraśena and Bhīmoseṇa. (Dev Bhāgavata, 2nd Sandhā, Adi Parva, Chapters 3 and 93).
3) Death of his father. Janamejaya's father, Pārśuṣi ruled the country in a very distinguished manner for six years. While once hunting in the forest Pārśuṣi became very tired and thirsty. While searching for water he came across a Sage named Sanīka and asked him for some water. Sanīka being engaged in meditation did not heat the King's request. But, the King mistaking the sage’s silence for haughtiness threw in anger a draft snake round his neck and went away. But, within seven days of the incident Parkit was taken to death by Takaska, king of the Nagas according to the curse pronounced on him by Gavijat, son of sage Samika.

Janamejaya was only a infant at the time of his father’s death. So the obsequies of the late king were performed by his ministers. After that at an auspicious time Janamejaya was crowned king. Within a short time he married statecraft. Dhanurvidya was taught by Karta. Very soon he earned reputation as an efficient administrator. He got married in due course. (Devi Bhagavata, 2nd Skandha).

4) His hatred towards snakes. In the course of a talk one day with Janamejaya Uttanka the sage detailed to him the circumstances of his father’s death. Only then did he understand the actual cause of Parkit’s death, and the information kindled in him intense feelings of revenge not only against serpents but also against the whole serpent dynasty. (Devi Bhagavata, 2nd Skandha).

5) Sarpasatra. (Serpent yajña). Janamejaya sought the ancient priest days of the incident Parkit could be taken against the serpents, and they advised him to perform the great Yajña called Sarpa-Satra. And, accordingly all necessary arrangements for the Satra were made, and the King began diksa (Initiation) for it (to live for a few days under severe routine to prepare the author of the yajña for it). But the priest who made the arrangements looked into signs about the successful conclusion of the yajña and opined that it would be obstructed by a brahmin, and, the King, therefore, ordered strict steps to be taken against the entry of strangers into the Yagustral. And, the Sarpa-Satra began. High priests wore black clothes, and chanting mantras they made offerings in the sacred fire, and this created a burning sensation in the sacrificial serpents. They began, one after another to come and fall into the fire. All varieties of serpents got consumed by the fire thus. Sages like Uttanka, Candhabhargava, Sargargava, Vaśa, Uddiśaka, Atreyu, Pramata, Śvetaketu, Narada, svayal, Kalagadja, Śrutasthava, Kohala, Devasauman, Maugdalya and Samasatrahaka acted as RViks at the Sarpa-Satra. Almost all the serpents counted death in the fire, Takaska alone did not come. Fear-stricken he had taken refuge with Indra. As the chanting of mantras increased in intensity and volume Vaśa began to feel the burning sensation. He requested his sister Jaraṭkūru to find out some means of escape from the Satra, and at the instance of Jaraṭkūru her son Parkit set out for the palace of Janamejaya to obstruct the Yajña. Though the RViks invoked for a long time Takaska did not appear. Enraged at his absence Uttanka searched for Takaska with his divine eyes and found him seated on the throne of Indra along with him, who had given him (Takaska) an asylum. This challenge of Indra kindled the wrath of Uttanka, all the more, and he invoked Indra, Takaska and Indra’s three mothers so that all of them might come together and fall into the fire. And, lot there came the whole lot of them. Only two minutes more and all of them would be reduced to ashes. By now Astika, the son of Jaraṭkūru had arrived at the Yajñaśāla. Janamejaya received the young Sage with all respect and promised to grant his desire whatever that be. Astika’s demand was that the Sarpa Satra should be stopped. Though Janamejaya was not for stopping the yajña, he was reminded of his promise to grant any desire of Astika and the latter insisted on the stopping of the Satra. Janamejaya stopped it. Astika blessed that the serpents which had died at the Satra would attain salvation. (Adi Parva, Chapters 52-56; Devi Bhagavata, 2nd Skandha).

6) Listen to the Bhārata story. While the Sarpa Satra was being conducted Vyasa came over there and related the whole story of the Mahābhārata at the request of Janamejaya. (Adi Parva, Chapter 60).

7) Sarama’s curse. Janamejaya along with his brother once performed a yajña of long duration at Kurukṣetra. While the yajña was going on, a dog (son of Sarasvati the bitch of the Devas) came there. The three brothers of Janamejaya beat the dog which returned to its mother, Sarasm, crying. The mother asked him whether he had done anything to deserve the beating, and he answered thus: “No, mother, I had done nothing wrong, I did not lick the havis, nor did I even look at it.” Hearing her son’s reply Sarasm in deep anguish went to Kurukṣetra and questioned Janamejaya as to why her innocent son was beaten by his brothers. Neither he nor his brothers replied to Sarasm, and she cursed Janamejaya that he would be subjected to asāyasthapa (unforeseen results). This curse upset Janamejaya so much that after the Sarpa Satra was over and on his return to Hastinapura he made a search for a Purohita (priest) competent enough to redeem him from his sins, and at last he invited Somatrabhava, son of the great sage Śrutasravas to be his Purohita, and thus did Somatrabhava become the priest of Janamejaya (Adi Parva, Chapter 3).

8) Successors of Janamejaya. Janamejaya had two sons, Candrapāda and Suryāpāda by his wife Kāśyapa. Hundred sons, experts in archery, were born to Candrapāda. The eldest of them, Sanyakarna, ruled the country after Janamejaya. Sanyakarna had a son called Śvetaksama to whom was born a son called Ajarpāra by his wife Vyāsi, the daughter of Sūcarī. (Bhavisya Parva, Chapter 1).

9) Other information

(1) Janamejaya defeated the King of Takasālī and subjugated the country. (Adi Parva, Chapter 5, Verse 20).

(2) The Sage called Veda was the preceptor of Janamejaya. (Adi Parva, Chapter 3, Verse 82).

(3) After the Sarpa Satra, Janamejaya performed an Atvamedha yajña at which Vyāsi delivered a lengthy discourse on life and salvation. As Janamejaya said that if he were to believe the words of Vyāsi his dead father Parkit should be shown to him. Vyāsi brought Parkit down from Svarga and showed him to his son. On the occasion were also present sage Sāmika and his son Śrīṅg. (Aṣṭamahāvīka Parva, Chapter 35).

(4) Life time of Janamejaya. The great war at Kurukṣetra was fought in 3158 B.C. (See under Mahābhārata) After the war was over the Pāṇḍavas ruled the country for 36 years. Vyāsi took three years to compose the Mahābhārata. According to the Mahāpratihārīka Parva the Pāṇḍavas set out for the forest after handing over the government to Parkit, who ruled the country for sixty years. From the above facts it becomes evident that Janamejaya became king in 3042 B.C.

11. Māriṇa allured Śrīta and Rāvana to capture her in this place. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 147). Sūmpanakā tried to attract Śrī Rāma and Laksmana, and her nose etc. were cut off. In this forest. It was in this place that Śrī Rāma cut off the head of a Rākṣasa (demon) and threw it away. That head fell into the lap of a hermit called Mahodara. (M.B. Sāya Parva, Chapter 59). Janashāna is regarded as a holy place. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 29, that those who stay in this place and take bath in the Godāvari will acquire imperial prosperity.

JANADAKĀRA. One of the eighteen Vīra-vyākṣas, who stay near the Sun. In Chapter 16 of the Saṃbhava Purāṇa it is mentioned that this Jandakara is engaged in carrying out the orders of Yama (the god of death).

JANGALA. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Bīṣma Parva, Chapter 9, Stanza 56).

JANGĀRI. A brahmāvādi son (interested in theories about Brahman) of Vīśvāmitra. (Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 57).

JANGHABANDHU. A sage who was a member of Yudhishthira's assembly. (Saṣkha Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 16).

JANTU. 1) General information. A King of the Puru dynasty. It is mentioned in Agni Purāṇa, Chapter 278, that he was the son of the King Sumaka and father of the King Vṛṣatana.

2) Jantu born again. Somaka had hundred wolves. But none of them gave birth to a child. That child was Jantu. He was a pet of all the hundred wolves. Once Jantu was bitten by an ant. All the hundred queens began crying and shouting and all ran to him. Hearing the tumult in the women's apartment of the palace, the King and the minister ran to that place. When they reached there, Jantu began to think, "It is better to have no sons at all, than to have only one son. There are hundred queens. But none of them has a child. Is there a solution for this?"

At last the King summoned all his family-priests and consulted them. The decision of the priests was that if the King should sacrifice his only son, then all his wolves would become pregnant and all would give birth to children, and that among the sons thus born, Jantu also would be reborn. The mother of Jantu did not look at this project with favor. "How can we be sure that Jantu also will be there among the sons to be born, after his death?"

She was worried by this thought. The priests consoled her and said that there will be a golden mole on the left flank of Jantu. Finally the mother agreed to their plan. Sacrificial dais was arranged. Sacrificial fire for holy offerings was prepared. The priests tore the child into pieces and offered them as oblation in the fire. When the sacrifice was finished, all the hundred queens became pregnant. Each of them gave birth to a child. As the priests had predicted, there was a golden mole on the left flank of the child delivered by the mother of Jantu. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 9).

JANUJANGHA. A King who is fit to be remembered every morning and evening. Mention is made about this King in Mahābhārata, Anuṣāsana Parva, Chapter 165, Stanza 69.
JAPAKA. A Brahmāna who was constantly engaged in uttering Gayatri—Japaka was ordered to go to hell because certain wrongdoers were detected in the uttering of Gayatri—but Devi Sūtāri intervened. She appeared before him and gave him heaven. This Japaka was a contemporary of Jayākū. (M.B. Śānti Parva, 3 Chapters from 197).

JĀRAKA. A hermit (Rakusū). Though she was a harpy, she loved human beings. It is believed that if the picture of jāra and her children is placed in the house and venerated, there will be no harming of any kind of demons.

The figure of Jāra was sculptured on the wall of the Parśvanath temple at Sadulī and on the wall of the Temple of Mahadvīpa, and was worshipped. Because the King worshipped her, she had been looking forward to an opportunity to reward the King. Bhīshadātha had married two daughters of the King of Kasi. They were twin sisters. For a long time they remained childless. The King was very sorry, and went to the forest with his wives. He saw the hermit Kaksiśāna or Kankāśāna, the son of Gautama and requested that a son should be born to him. The hermit was sitting in meditation under a mango tree and a mango fell on his lap. The hermit took it and by prayer and meditation he invoked divine power into it and gave it to the King. The King divided it into two and gave one to his wife. The queen became pregnant and the two returned joyously.

In due course, both delivered and each of them gave birth to only half of a child. The hermit queens took the two halves of the child and placed them on the lap of the parents. Instantly it became a child of proper form. Hearing the cry of the child, the parents came out. Jāra appeared in front of them and placed the child between two halves of her daughter. As declared by Jāra, the child was named Jāraśāna. Thus, the child grew up and became the famous King Jāraśāna of Magadhā. (M.B. Śāhā Parva, 3 Chapters from 17).

It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Drona Parva, Chapter 182, Stanza 12. That when Arjuna fought with Jāraśāna, he had been standing in the weapon of Jāraśāna and was killed in that fight.

JARATKĀRUTI. A hermit who was Purandāra famous.

1) It is said that this hermit was born in a Brahmana dynasty, known as Vayāvarha. He was the only son of Vayāvarha. (M.B. Devi Parva, Chapter 13).

2) The name Jaratkāruti. The meaning of the name Jaratkāruti is given in Bhāgavatārpaṇa, Adi Parva, Chapter 49, as follows—

"Jāra is consumption, Kāru is daruma (awful). By and by his body became hard and awful and by penance he made his body to wear out, and so he got the name Jaratkāruti."

By means of penance he made his body lean and worn out and so got the name Jaratkāruti.

3) Marriage. The calm and McCartney Jaratkāruti remained unmarried for a long time. One day he happened to meet with his Manes. They were holding on to grass and were about to fall into hell, and a rat was cutting the roots of the grass which was their only hold. The moment that root was severed all the Manes would fall into the deep ravine of hell. It was at this juncture that Jaratkāruti met his Manes. The moment they saw him they said, "See Jaratkāruti, we are your Manes. We have to obtain, heaven, life, contentment and happiness by the good deeds of your son. So go and get married quickly."

At first he did not like the talk about marriage. Still, in order to procure heaven for his ancestors, he agreed to get married. But he made a condition that the name of the bride also should be Jaratkāruti and she should be given to him as aims. Saying these words, he walked away along the forest.

News reached the ears of Vāsuki, the King of the Nagas (serpents) that the hermit Jaratkāruti was wandering through the forests calling out that somebody and give him as aims. So he decided to give her to the hermit Jaratkāruti. She was adorned with costly garments and ornaments and was taken to the hermit Jaratkāruti. Jaratkāruti said:

"Hear my condition. I will not cherish her if she causes displeasure to me. If she does so I will send her away instantly."

On condition that she did anything displeasing to him he would leave her at once, the hermit Jārakāruti married Jārakāruti the sister of Vāsuki. (Devi Bhāgavata, Skandha 2; Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapters 13 and 47). } had been meditating upon Śrī Kraṇa Paramātmanā for three yugas (world-ages). She is known by twelve names.

1. Jāratkāru. Manasādevī had been performing penance, and meditating upon Śrī Kraṇa Paramātmanā for three complete yugas and her garments and body were worn out. So Kraṇa gave her the name Jāratkāru.

2. Jogadgauri. Because she was comely and beautiful and of fair complexion and was worshipped all over the world, she got the name Jogadgauri.

3. Manasi. Because the word arose from the mind of Kāśyapa, the name “Manasi” was given to her.

4. Siddhiyogini. As the fruits of her Tapas (penance), she got the attainment of Yoga (meditation, devotion, contemplation and other ways of union with the Universal Soul) and so she was given the name Siddhiyogini.

5. Faṃgauri. Because she had constant devotion to Mahāvīra she was called Vaitānavi.

6. Nāgabhāgini. Because she was the sister of Vāmita the King of the Nagas, she got the name Nāgabhāgini. (Sister of Nāga.)

7. Sūrī. As she was a disciple of Śiva she got the name Sūrī. (Sūrya, the Sun.)

8. Nāgēśvarī. Because she saved the Nagas (serpents) from the Sarpas (snakes) for killing the serpents of Janamejaya, the son of the King Parīkṣit, she got the name Nāgēśvarī.

9. Jāratkāruprīya. Because she became the wife of the hermit Jāratkāru she was called Jāratkāruprīya.

10. Anitkāmbī. Because she was the mother of the hermit Āstika she got the name Āstikāmātī.

11. Viśāhī. Because she was the goddess who destroyed poison, she was known by the name Viśāhī.

12. Mahābhāratī. Since she had the attainments of vast knowledge, yoga and the power of bringing the dead to life, she was given the name Mahābhāratī.

2. Birth. Once the serpents became a plague to the people of the world and they went to Prajāpati Kāśyapa and made their complaints, Kāśyapa and Brahmā consulted each other and at the instruction of Brahmā Kāśyapa created several Mantras (spells and incantations) and Manasādevī from his mind as the deity of these spells.

3. Peace of her yugas (penance). When she was very young, she went to Kālī and performed penance to Paramātma for a thousand yugas. At last Śiva appeared before her and gave her the divine knowledge, and taught her the Śanaveda. He gave her the divine Śrī Kraṇa mantra (a spell) called “Aṣṭākṣari” and the Śrī Kraṇa Kavaca (the armour of Kraṇa) called “Trilokāyamargalī” and taught her how to use them in worship. Wearing this armour and using the spell she performed penance in Paśurā, meditating upon Śrī Kraṇa Paramātmanā, for three yugas (world-ages). At the end of this period Śrī Kraṇa Paramātmanā appeared before her and gave her all the boons she wanted. Śrī Kraṇa said that all over the world she would be worshipped and that she had power to give boons to her worshippers.

4. Marriage and reparation. Kāśyapa gave his daughter Manasādevī in marriage to Jāratkāru, a hermit. As they were living in the hermitage, once the hermit slept with his head on the lap of his wife. Seeing the setting sun she aroused her husband. The hermit became angry and decided to reject her. She thought of the Devas, who instantly arrived. Brahmā argued that it was not meet and right to reject his wife before a child was born to her. The hermit touched the grom of his wife and prayed and with the power of yoga (meditation, contemplation etc.) she became pregnant. The son born to her is the famous hermit Āstika. After giving birth to Āstika she went to Kaśi, where Paramārtha and Pārvati received her.

5. The mantra (incantation) of worship. To get the attainment of Manasādevī one has to utter the spell (mantra) “Om Hrīm Śrīm-Kīm-Aīm-Manasādevayai svāhā” five lakh times. He who has got the attainment of this mantra as given above will be equal to Dhanvantari (the physician of the Gods) and to him poison will be Amṛta (ambrosia). This goddess could be invoked into a secluded room on the day of Sāktarātrī (Trasag of the Sun). If offerings of oblations and worship are carried out, he would be blessed with children, wealth and fame.

JĀRĀŚANDHA I. A terrible King of Magadha.

2. Birth. Jārāśandha was created by joining together two halves of a child, by a giantess called Jāra, and so that child got the name Jārāśandha. (For detailed story see under Jāra.)

3. The first battle with Śrī Kraṇa. Asī and Pṛōppi, two youths of Kansa, were daughters of Jārāśandha. When Śrī Kraṇa killed Kansa, the two daughters went to their father and shed tears before him. Jārāśandha became angry and with a mighty army surrounded the city of Mahāva in a fierce battle was fought between Jārāśandha and Kraṇa. At last Bala-bhadra-rāma caught hold of Jārāśandha and was about to kill him, when an etheral voice said that Balabhadrarāma was not the person to kill Jārāśandha. Accordingly Rama and Kraṇa set Jārāśandha free.

Bhāgavata, Skanda 10.)

4. Other information.

(a) It is mentioned in Bhāgavata, Skanda 10, that Jārāśandha was the teacher too, of Kraṇa.

(b) Jārāśandha had four sons, Soma, Sahadeva, Tūrya and Sruṭāśrī of whom Sahadeva became King of Magadha, after the death of Jārāśandha.

(c) Mention is made in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 165, that Jārāśandha had been present at the Svaṇamvara (marriage) of Pāṇḍū.

(1) Once there arose a battle between Jārāśandha and Karna, in which Jārāśandha was defeated and so he made a treaty with Karna. (M.B. Sānti Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 6).

(2) The death of Jārāśandha. The enmity between Śrī Kraṇa and Jārāśandha was life-long. These two mighty powers confronted each other eighteen times. Śrī Kraṇa decided to kill Jārāśandha, the King of Magadha, in a duel. Once Śrī Kraṇa with Arjuna and Bhima, reached the city of Magadha in the guise of Brahmā. They started from the kingdom of Kuru.
travelled through Kurujangala and passed by Padmasatras and Kalkutja, visited the holy places of Gandaki, Mahākāla, Sacchānirā, and such others, crossed the river Sarayū and reached the opposite bank. Then they travelled through the countries of East Kosala and Madhī. Touring through the countries they crossed the rivers Câmaravatī, Gângâ and Sûga. Wearing matted hair and banks of trees they reached Giri-srjaya, the capital city of Magadha. There were three big drums, which were used only on special occasions. The hide of elephant was used for making them. Seeing all these they reached the presence of Jârâsândha, who welcomed them with necessary formalities and talked with them. But they kept silence. At last Sri Kâṛa told him that his two friends were having the vow of silence, which would terminate only at midnight. So the King left them in the sacrificial hall and went to the palace. He came to them at midnight and asked them who they were. Sri Kâṛa revealed to him that they were Kruṣṇa, Bhima and Arjuna, who had come to fight a duel with Jârâsândha, who had unreasonably put many innocent kings in dungeon, and challenged him to select any one of them for duel. Jârâsândha, trembling with fear, selected Bhima. In that duel Jârâsândha was killed. (M.B. Sâla Parva, Chapter 20, Verse 60).

Names given to Jârâsândha. Bhrâhadratha, Magadha, Magadhâdhipa and Jârâputra are some of the names used in the Mahâbhârata by Vyâsa as synonyms of Jârâsândha.

Jârâsândha II. (Sūrâsâha). One of the hundred sons of Dhvârastra. It is mentioned in Mahâbhârata, Drona Parva, Chapter 137, Stanza 30 that this Jârâsândha was killed by Bhîmasena.

Jârâsândha III. In Karna Parva of the Mahâbhârata, Chapter 5, Stanza 30, we see a Kâng. Jyâetsena who fought on the side of the Kauravas and had been killed by Bhishma. The father of this King Jyâetsena was Sri Jârâsândha, a Kshatriya of Magadha.

Jârâsândhayâdhaparâvâ. A sub-section of Sâla Parva, of the Mahâbhârata. This sub-section comprises of Chapters 20 to 24 of Sâla Parva.

Jârâyu. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Sâla Parva, Chapter 43, Stanza 19).

Jâitā. A mother bird with four young ones, which suffered a lot in the burning of the forest Khârjâvâ. (For detailed story see under Khârjâvâdâhâ, Para 8).

Jâitâri. A son of the mother bird Jâitâ. (See under Khârjâvâdâhâ, Para 8).

Jâkarânâ. An attendant of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Sâla Parva, Chapter 46, Stanza 19).

Jârtika. A tribe of Vahikas. They are considered to be the lowest of the tribes. (M.B. Karna Parva, Chapter 44, Stanza 10).

Jârudha. A country in ancient India. (M.B. Sâla Parva, Chapter 34).

Jârchi. An ancient city. It is mentioned in Mahâbhârata, Vana Parva, Chapter 12, Stanza 30, that Sri Kruṣṇa, with his friends Ântu and Kârtu defeated Shûpala, Jârâsândha, Sâla and Sâsadhanâvan in this city.

Jâtâdhâra. A warrior of Subrahmanya. (M.B. Sâla Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 61).
reach up to the top of the head, for Kasatriyas up to the forehead, and for Vāsas up to the nose. Before going for alms, the celibate should take his stick, bow before the sun, go round the fire and only then set out. The alms received should be offered to the teacher as oblation, then he should turn to the east and wash hands and mouth and eat it. Brāhmaṇas should wear the upper garment or their sacred thread (Yajña-sūtra) on the left shoulder and under the right arm and then it is called “Prācina-vāha” and if it is round the neck it is called “Nivita”.

These Jātākamānas may be done for the female child also at the stipulated times by tantrās, without reciting mantras, for the purification of the body. The rituals performed without reciting Vedamānas (śpūla) are called tantra. For women marriage is to be considered as Upayāyana, looking after the needs of husband to be considered as learning at the house of the teacher, and housekeeping as samādāhāna (gathering fuel of Butea frondosa). (Manusmṛti, Chapter 2).

JĀṬĀLIKA. A female attendant of Śrīkumāra. (Sālīya Parva, Chapter 46, Verse 23).

JĀṬÁPĀTILA. See under Ghanapāta.

JĀṬĀRČASĪLA. A mountain. This mountain stands in a place having an area of thirteen yojanās, on the opposite shore of the sea where the water-creatures fall with tremendous cry at the mouth of the submarine fire (Baṣjavāgni). The monkeys sent by Sugriva to search for Śita, made a search in this mountain also. (Vālmīki Rāmāyana, Ksāṇidhī Kāṃṣa, Sarga 49, Stanza 50).

JĀṬĀŚA. 1) Šālaka Parva, Chapter 4, Verse 24.

JĀṬĀŚURA II. A Rakṣasa, Jāṭāśura, disguised as a brahmin lived with the Pāṇḍavas in the forest. His aim was to carry off Pātācālī and the arrows of the Pāṇḍavas as and when he got an opportunity for it. One day taking advantage of Arjuna’s absence Bhima was out abstaining Jāṭāśura caught hold of the stick as also the arrows and ran away with them. Sahadeva alone managed to slip away from his clutches. Dharma-pūtra pledged his word that Jāṭāśura would be killed before the sunset. Hearing all the hubbub (Bhima hurried to the scene, killed the Āsura and saved his brothers and Pātācālī from difficulties and danger. (Drona Parva, Chapter 172).

JĀṬĀŚURA PARVA. A sub-Parva of Mahābhārata. (See under Mahābhārata).

JĀṬĀVEDA (8). Three sons of Purūravas, born from Agni (fire). They are called the Jāṭāvedas. (Bṛhadāraṇyaka, Skanda 9).

JĀṬAYU. A bird famous in the Purāṇas.

1) Genealogy. Descended from Viṣṇu as follows, Brahmā-Varaṇi-Maṇḍara-Śiṣya-Varuṇa-Jāṭayu.

2) Birth. Two sons called Sampāti and Jāṭayu were born to Aruṇa. Their mother, a bird, was Śyeni. Śyeni, wife of Aruṇa, delivered two children, Sampāti and the great Jāṭayu. Śyeni, seeing her son dead, cried out in grief, "Know that I am the son of Aruṇa and Sampāti is my elder brother. My name is Jāṭayu, and I am the son of Śyeni." (Vālmīki Rāmāyana, Canto 14, Verse 32).

But, according to Kamba Rāmāyaṇa, the name of the mother of Sampāti and Jāṭayu was Mahāśveti. (Ksāṇidhī Kāṃṣa). Perhaps, Śyeni was also known as Mahāśveti.

3) Jāṭayu flies towards Śīrṣa. Sampāti and Jāṭayu, once under a bet flew up towards the sun. Jāṭayu outdrew Sampāti, and in the exuberance of youth entered Śīrṣa’s orbit at noon time with the result that, due to the excessive heat his wings were scorched. At this Sampāti, to save his brother, flew up higher than Jāṭayu and spread out his wings like an umbrella over Jāṭayu with the result that Sampāti’s wings were burnt, and he fell down somewhere on the Vindhyā mountains. He spent the rest of his life under the protection of a sage called Nītikara who was performing penance on the mountain. After their tragic meeting in Śīrṣa-ṛṣa Sampāti and Jāṭayu never again met in their life. (Vālmīki Rāmāyana, Ksāṇidhī Kāṃṣa, Chapter 58, Kamba Rāmāyana, Ksāṇidhī Kāṃṣa).

4) Fought with Rāvana. Jāṭayu clashed with Rāvana, who was carrying away Śītakā in his vimana, and in the fierce fight that they fought in the air, Rāvana cut off Jāṭayu’s wings and thus fell him on the earth, almost dead. (Vālmīki Rāmāyana, Aranyā Kāṃṣa, Chapter 51).

5) Death. Rāma and Lākṣman during their search in the forest for Sītā came upon Jāṭayu lying without wings almost dead and reciting Rāma’s name. Jāṭayu described to Rāma how Rāvana had carried away Sītā and how he had tried to stop him and fought with him. After giving this account he died. Rāma and Lākṣman cremated Jāṭayu. The great bird’s soul attained salvation. (Kamba Rāmāyana).

JĀṬI. A warrior of Subrahmaṇya. (Sālīya Parva, Chapter 45, Verse 61).

JĀṬI. See under Caturvarṇa.

JĀṬILA. The name assumed by Śiva when he played the part of a Brahmācārin. Pārvatī began rigorous penance to obtain Śiva as her husband, and Śiva visited her disguised as Jāṭila, a brahmācārin to test her. (Śiva Purāṇa, Satarudraśāmhitā).

JĀṬILA. A righteous and generous woman who was born in the Gautama dynasty. She once sought the help of the saptarṣis. (Ādi Parva, Chapter 195; also See under Gautami I).

JĀṬİŚMARA. A holy bath. It is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 84, Stanza 128 that the body and mind of the person who bathes in this bath (bath) will become pure.

JĀṬİŚMARAHRADA. A holy place. In the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, Chapter 83, Stanza 3, mention is made that if a man gives alms at this holy place, he will be able to remember his previous birth and life.

JĀṬİŚMARAKÌṬA. A worm which got emancipation through the advice of Vyās. Once while Vyās was roaming about in the country, by chance he saw this worm. It was running through the road, seeing a cart coming very fast. Vyās stopped it and asked, "What are you running from?" The worm replied that he was running in front of the wheel of the cart coming from behind might crush him. In the previous birth this worm was a Śūdrā. Jealousy, resentment, arrogance, selfishness etc. were the traits of his character in his previous life. Only twice in his life had he done good deeds. Once he honoured his mother and on another occasion he rejected a Brahmana. Because of these two good deeds in his present life as worm he had the remembrance of his previous life. Vyása gave the worm necessary advice. Instantly the worm was crushed under the wheel of the cart.

In the next rebirth this Jatára became a king. As he was leading the life of a powerful King he met Vyása at the hermitage of the hermit. In his next life he became a Brahmana and finally he attained heaven. (M.B. Andháśa Parva, 3 Chapters 117.)

JÁTHARA I. A very erudite brahmin scholar in Vedic lore Játára was a prominent figure at the serpent yajña held by Janamejaya. (Adi Parva, Chapter 53.)

JÁTHARA II. A mountain within the ranges of Mahánechan. On the eastern side of Mahánechan there exist two mountains called Jatára and Devakáta. 18,000 yojanas in extent and 2000 yojanas high. On the western side of Meru are the mountains called Pávana and Paríyátra, on the southern side Kánsá and Karákśita, and on the northern side Trirasajá and Makáragiri. (Deví Bhágavata, 5th Skandha.)

JÁTHARA III. An urban region in ancient India.

JÁTHARA. A warrior of Subhrabhámya. (M.B. Jáylá Parva Chapter 46, Stanza 128.)

JATUGRÁHAM. See under Arakillam (lale palace).

JATUGRÁHPARÁVA. A particular section of Ádi Parva.

JÁTUAKíN. An ancient hermit with control over his senses. He was a friend of Vyása and had a house of 1200 duhkshóhíra. (M.B. Sabha Parva, Chapter 4, Stanza 14.)

JÁVA. A warrior of Subhrabhámya. (M.B. Šálya Parva Chapter 45, Stanza 71.)

JÁVA I. A son of Dhritárajñá. (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapter 63, Stanza 119.) He fought with Arjuna at the time of the asáyáta (asáyáta) and was killed in the battle of Bhuráta. (Dráona Parva, Chapters 25 and 135.)

JÁVA II. A deva (god). At the time of the burning of the forest of Káhíyája, this deva came with an iron pole to fight with Káma and Arjuna. (M.B. Ádi Parva, Chapter 236, Stanza 34.)

JÁVA III. A king in ancient India. He sits in the Durbar of Yama (God of death) and worships him (Sáballha Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 15.)

JÁVA IV. A synonym of the Sun. (M.B. Parva, Chapter 3, Stanza 24.)

JÁVA V. The pseudo name taken by Yudhisthíra at the time of the panjávás of the Pandávas in the country of Vritárta. This name was known as Jáyanta, Arjuna by the name Víyája, Nakula by the name Jayantaka and Sahadeva by the name Jayadásaka at that time. (Víyátaka Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 35.) At that time Páncéla addressed all her five husbands by the name Jaya. (M.B. Víyántaka Parva, Chapter 23, Stanza 12.)

JÁVA VI. A nagga (serpent) born as the family of Kájáyana. (M.B. Udyogo Parva, Chapter 103, Stanza 16.)

JÁVA VII. A warrior who fought on the side of the Kauravas. It is mentioned in the Mahábhárata, Dráona Parva, Chapter 156, that both Sákum and this warrior fought with Arjuna.

JÁVA VIII. A warrior of the country of Páncéla. Mention is made in Mahábhárata, Káma Parva, Chapter 36, Stanza 44 that this warrior fought on the side of the Pandávas and that Káma wounded him in the battle.

JÁVA IX. One of the attendants given to Subhrabhámya by Vyása, the King of the Nágas (serpent). Vyása gave Subhrabhámya two attendants named Jáyá and Mahájáyá. (M.B. Śálya Parva, Chapter 45, Stanza 22.)

JÁVA X. A synonym of Mahávásu. (M.B. Anúśa Parva, Chapter 18, Stanza 67.)

JÁVA XI. [JÁYÁVIJAYÁS]. They were gate-keepers of Vaikuntha. As these two sons of devas were engaged in the service of Mahávásu guarding the gate, the hermits Sánaka and others came to see Mahávásu to pay him homage. Jáyá and Víyája stopped them at the gate. Sánaka got angry and cursed them to take three births on the earth as Asuras (demons). The sorrowful Jáyá and Víyája requested for abolution of the curse. The hermit said that they had to take three births as Asuras and that they would be redeemed by the weapon of Mahávásu. Accordingly Jáyá and Víyája were born in the earth as Hiranyakáśapa and Hiranyakásipú. They were killed by Mahávásu, in the second birth they were Rávana and Kumbhákarña. Mahávásu reincarnated as Ráma. In the third birth they were Sítúpála and Dantaváktra. They were killed by Srie Ráma. (M.B. Bhágavata, Sandhá 7.)

JÁVA XII. Father of the Rádana (giant) Vírácáha, who was killed by Srie Ráma at the forest Dandaka. Vírácáha was born to the giant Jáyá by his wife Sátabhradá. (Válmika Ráma, Aranya Kánda, Sarga 3.)

JÁVA XIII. The original name of the Mahábhrástra written by Vyása. Many of the scholars are of opinion that Vyása was not the author of the whole of the Mahábhrástra that we see in its present form now. They say that the Bhárata was written by Vyása from eight thousand and eight hundred stanzas. That work was named Jaya. To those eight thousand and eight hundred stanzas Vaikámapánya added fifteen thousand, two hundred stanzas and this great book was given the name Bhárata or Bhárata samhita (Bhárata collection). When Súta recited this book to other hermits in Naimírnya the book had a lakh of stanzas. Henceforth the book was called Mahábhrástra, (History of classical Sanskrit Literature, Mahábhrástra, Ádi Parva, Chapter 62, Stanza 20.)

JÁVA I. A daughter of the hermit Gáutama. Gáutama had two daughters by his wife Aháyá named Jáyánti and Aparajítá besides Jáyá. While Daksá was performing a yágna (sacrifice), this Jáyá informed him of it. Daksá fell down when he heard that Daksá had not invited Siva to the sacrifice. Siva got angry at Daksá’s negligence and from his wrath the Bhútánuga such as Virabhadrá and others (attendants of Siva) arose. (Vámaná Puráñá, Chapter 4.)

JÁVA II. Wife of Puspadanta, a gaña (attendant of Siva). See under Puspadánta a.

JÁVA III. Another name of Párvatí. (M.B. Víyán Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 16.)

JÁVA IV. A daughter of Daksá. Two daughters named Jáyá and Suprabhá were born to Daksá. To Suprabhá and Jáyá fifty sons each were born. These hundred sons were various kinds of arrows and such other weapons. (Vīla—Gāhā, Bhāsāngā, Sarga 21).

JAYĀ V. A. The incident in Śrīdēva Darśana Pratikā that this Jayā was the daughter of Pratikā Kaśāvalī.

JAYĀ. Wife. The husband enters the wife in the form of semen and takes birth as the foetus and then is born from her as son and so the wife is called Jayā.

"Pattriṇāraśī sampravāti
Garbha bhūtre jāyate
Jayāvāsadi jayāvau
Jayākṣiṃ jayāvau pumabh." (Manusmṛti, Chapter 9, Stanza 8).

JAYĀ (M.J). The name of an auspicious moment. This has the name Vijayān also (M.B. Udyoga Parva, Chapter 6, Stanza 17).

JAYĀ (M.JI). The name given to the story of Vidulā.

JAYĀDHALA. The false name assumed by Shabadeva at the time of the ignominious life of the Pândavas in the city of Virāta. (M.B. Virāta Parva, Chapter 5, Stanza 25).

JAYĀDEVA I. A Sanskrit poet who lived in the 13th century A.D. He is the author of the play 'PrasannaragHAVAN'. As far as the story of Śrī Rāma is concerned, some changes have been made in this play from that given by Bhavādīti in his 'Mahābhāaratā'. According to this play Śrī Rāma and Bāṣākara both were lovers of Stī. The famous work 'Candrālāka', a treatise on rhetorical figures, was written by this poet Jayādeva. His most important work is 'CītGovinda', the theme of which is the early life of Śrī Kṛṣṇa, especially the love between Śrī Kṛṣṇa and Rādā, which is very touchingly described. This book consists of 12 sargas and each sarga contains 24 octaves. This poet was a devotee of Kṛṣṇa. He used to sing lyrics before the image of Kṛṣṇa while his wife danced according to the beat.

JAYĀDEVA II. See under Dūḍaśana II.

JAYĀDHVAJA. The fifth of the hundred sons of Kṛtavrīyājuna. It is stated in Bhrāmajāna Purāṇa, Chapter 46 that, of the hundred sons of Kṛtavrīyājuna, Śūra, Śurasa, Hīmavat, Madhu and Jayādhvaja were the mightiest warriors. This Jayādhvaja was the father of Tālaṅgaṅga.

JAYĀDRATHA I. A mighty warrior King who ruled over the kingdom of Sindhu.

2) Birth and attainment of boon. Jayādṛathā was born as a result of severe fasts and vows taken by his father. There was an ethereal voice at the birth of Jayādṛathā, "This child would become a very famous King. The head of him, who puts down the head of this child on the earth would break into a hundred pieces within a moment." His father was filled with joy when he heard this ethereal voice, and so he made Jayādṛathā King at a very young age and went to Samantapāshaka to perform penance. (M.B. Drona Parva, Chapter 149).

3) Architecture. It is mentioned in Mahābhārata, Adi Parva, Chapter 116, Stanza 17, that Jayādṛathā married the princess Duskālā.

4) Jayādṛatha and Pācālī. From the very beginning Jayādṛathā was a bitter enemy of the Pāṇḍavas. It is not difficult to find out the root of this enmity. It is stated in Adi Parva, Chapter 185, Stanza 21 that Jayādṛathā was present at the Swayamvar of Pācālī. The fact that he did not get Pācālī might have laid the foundation of this enmity.

From this moment Jayādṛathā was looking forward to a chance to carry off Pācālī. The forest life of the Pāṇḍavas began. They wandered through many forests and finally reached the forest, Kānuka. Once the Pāṇḍavas left Pācālī alone in the hut and went to the forest for hunting, Jayādṛathā came to know of this. He came with his men to the place where the hut was. At the very first sight of Pācālī, he fell in love with her. He sent Kṛṣṇa, the King of Trigarta, who was the son of Suratha as a messenger to Pācālī. Kṛṣṇa told Pācālī about the superior qualities of Jayādṛathā and requested her to accept Jayādṛathā, leaving the Pāṇḍavas. But she rejected his request. The messenger returned to Jayādṛathā and told him what had happened. Jayādṛathā himself came in a chariot and tried to entice her. Pācālī did not yield, Jayādṛathā caught her by force and took her away in his chariot. Bhāumaka the priest of the Pāṇḍavas followed them with tears. Shortly afterwards, the Pāṇḍavas returned to the hut. They searched for Pācālī here and there. They heard everything from a maid, and instantly followed Jayādṛathā, whose army confronted the Pāṇḍavas. The heads of almost all the warriors of Jayādṛathā fell on the ground. Jayādṛathā fled from the battlefield. The Pāṇḍavas followed him and caught him and scourged him. Bīhma shaved his head letting only five hairs to stand on the head, they took him as a prisoner before Dhṛtarāṣṭra. Finally at the instruction of Yudhiṣṭhira and Pācālī, he was released. (M.B. Vana Parva, Chapters 264 to 272).

5) Other details.

1) In the sacrifice of Rājasūya (imperial consecration) performed by Yudhiṣṭhira, Jayādṛathā took part as a tributary King. (M.B. Subhā Parva, Chapter 34, Stanza 8).

2) Jayādṛathā was present at the game of dice between Duryodhana and Yudhiṣṭhira. (Subhā Parva, Chapter 58, Stanza 28).
